QUESTIONS FOR THE OFFICE OF THE STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR

JUD 1: Why have county court filings declined? Have recent statutory changes increased the jurisdiction of county courts? If so, shouldn't this increase their caseload?

Changes to laws and policies at the local, state and federal levels and changes to other criminal justice agencies can directly impact the volume of cases filed with the courts. For example, federal banking regulation changes related to debt collection practices have resulted in decreases to county court collection cases. Also, when broader economic shifts occur there may be different engagement with existing practices, such as municipalities retaining more traffic and lower level misdemeanor cases under the model traffic code to supplement lean revenues. While overall volume of cases may be down, there are still some class classes experiencing growth more recently. For example, misdemeanor case filings are showing a 2% increase compared to FY16. When considering workload impact of caseloads, the composition of the caseload is far more important than the overall volume of filings. The time it takes to process a traffic infraction is significantly less than the resource demands of a domestic violence case.

The General Assembly recently passed two pieces of legislation that are expected to increase the volume of filings in county courts. Senate Bill 18-56 increased the jurisdictional limit from $15,000 to $25,000 for civil cases in county court. While there is still concurrent jurisdiction with district court, allowing litigants to recover a greater amount of money in a simplified court process is expected to attract more individuals to pursue claims of $25,000 or less in county court. Although the Governor signed the Act in May of 2019, the changes did not go into effect until January 1, 2019. A year-to-date comparison with preliminary data shows a nearly 4% increase in money cases filed in county court.

In the 2019 Legislative Session, the General Assembly changed the classification of drug possession offenses (House Bill 19-1263). This legislation reclassifies a number of felony drug possession offenses to misdemeanors. As a result, an unknown number of cases that the District Attorney would formerly charge as felonies and file in the district court will now be charged as misdemeanor offenses and filed in the county courts. This legislation does not go into effect until March of 2020, but the Department anticipates misdemeanor caseloads will increase as a result and will be monitoring the impact closely.

JUD 2: What is driving the felony caseload increase?

Felony drug cases, specifically drug possession cases, drive a large part of the increases to felony filings. In comparison to FY 2019, felony drug case filings, i.e. cases where a felony drug offense was the most serious charge, have increased approximately 88% since FY 2013 statewide. Additional cases types contributing to the increase include: violent offenses; property offenses (e.g. forgery/fraud, motor vehicle theft); and custody violations (e.g. bond violations, escapes, and contraband-related violations).

Felony Filings by Case Type FY14 v. FY19
Felony Case Type	FY14	FY19	Percent Change
Drugs	9,395	17,708	88.5%
Theft	5,120	6,462	26.2%
Assault	2,924	5,469	87.0%
Burglary	3,167	3,694	16.6%
Other	2,889	2,352	-18.6%
Menacing	1,839	2,255	22.6%
Sex Offense	1,738	2,032	16.9%
Trespass	1,493	1,924	28.9%
Fugitive	1,274	1,855	45.6%
Escape	1,354	1,757	29.8%

JUD 3: How long has the State been using private probation services?

The General Assembly authorized the Department to contract with private probation in 1996 through House Bill 96-1120, which took effect on July 1, 1996. The table below provides a summary of the number of probationers supervised by private probation by district. Less than half of the judicial districts in Colorado currently utilize private probation.

Private Probation
District	1st	4th	5th	8th	10th	11th	17th	18th	19th	20th	Total
Active Count 6/30/19	1,278	1,967	246	1,047	593	219	1,115	2,712	666	1,404	11,247

JUD 4: What kinds of cases are being referred to private probation?

Probation supervises individuals based on their individual and actuarial risks and needs rather than the type of crime they commit. In this case, risk refers to a person’s probability of committing a crime again via the results of an actuarial risk assessment. An abundance of research showing no relationship between the type of crime and a individual’s probability of re-offending.

Chief Justice Directive 16-01 states, “Given limited resources, lower (low medium and low) risk offenders, either felony or misdemeanor, and certain alcohol/drug/driving related offenders may be supervised by use of contract probation services...” As such, clients transferred to private probation have been assessed as lower risk to reoffend, based on the results of the Level of Supervision Inventory (LSI), a validated risk assessment. The LSI categorizes individuals into low, medium, and high risk to re-offend. Cases that are transferred to private are low risk or they are on the low end of the medium risk range. These individuals tend to have little to no criminal history and have few issues that are disrupting their life, such as substance abuse or employment problems. About nine out of ten clients transferred to private probation are lower risk and on supervision for a misdemeanor or petty offense.

JUD 5: What data does the Department collect concerning probation outcomes? Does the Department have any data comparing outcomes for public versus private probation services?

In the Department’s Annual Statistical Report, the probation section provides outcome data for probation, including private probation. Additionally, probation publishes and submits an annual report to the legislature titled, Pre-Release Termination and Post-Release Recidivism Rates of Colorado Probationers. Both state and private outcomes are included in the annual report and the recidivism report; however, the recidivism report combines state and private probation data together, while the annual report provides the data in separate sections.

Since lower risk probationers are supervised by private probation, it is expected that most probationers will complete their probation successfully and remain crime-free upon completion of probation. Historically, private probation’s success rates have been in the 81%-86% range, meaning more than 80% of probationers supervised by private probation successfully complete their sentence. Additionally, lower-risk probationers are the least likely to recidivate. Historically, approximately 96% of low risk probationers remain crime-free at least one year after they complete their probation sentence.

Higher risk probationers are supervised by state probation. Due to the risk factors high risk probationers are less likely to be successful during supervision and post-supervision even with interventions and treatment. State probation also provides intensive supervision for those probationers that present with the highest risks and needs. Historically, state probation's success rates have been in the 59%-61% range, meaning approximately 60% of probationers supervised by state probation successfully complete their sentence. Additionally, higher-risk probationers are more likely to recidivate. Approximately 83% of high and 90% of medium risk probationers, who complete their probation sentence remain crime-free after successfully completing probation.

Beyond the data above, the Department has not compared state probation to private probation in greater depth. Private probation is a cost-saving measure more so than an efficacy-based concept. As the two programs are designed to interact with two different types of probationers, a specific in-depth comparison study has not been prioritized. However, the Department is contemplating an independent external process and outcome study of probation next year.

JUD 6: Last summer, troubling events were reported at the Judicial Department. Provide a detailed accounting of what occurred and the actions the Department has taken to ensure that these problems do not reoccur.

Background

This question refers to media reports in July of this year about a contract awarded to The Leadership Practice, LLC, a company owned by Mindy Masias, the former Chief of Staff for the State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO). Ms. Masias was employed by the Judicial Department for 23 years and reported directly to the State Court Administrator. She voluntarily resigned from the Judicial Department for personal reasons on March 19, and The Leadership Practice entered a contract to provide training to the Judicial Department on June 3. The July media reports brought to the Chief Justice's direct attention for the first-time certain material information that, for legal reasons, the Department is unable to go into detail about in answering this question. Within days afterward, the Department terminated the contract with Ms. Masias's company, and former State Court Administrator Chris Ryan and former SCAO Chief Administrative Officer Eric Brown resigned their positions.

This question also refers to media reports about an anonymous complaint received by the State Auditor's Fraud Hotline alleging occupational fraud on the part of former SCAO leaders and high-level SCAO employees. In May of this year, the State Auditor referred the complaint to the Chief Justice, who elected to have the Auditor conduct an independent investigation of the allegations, which is still ongoing.

The information below provides context regarding the Department's leadership development training initiatives, the process that resulted in a contract with The Leadership Practice, the fraud hotline investigation being conducted by the State Auditor, and actions taken by the Department in response to the reported events.

Leadership Development Contracting

Over the past 10 years, the Judicial Department—which totals approximately 4,000 employees and judicial officers—has placed an increasingly heavy emphasis on education and leadership training. Employees and judges have had the ability to receive intensive and comprehensive leadership development training through a centralized training program administered by SCAO. Around 2009, the Department began contracting with outside vendors to provide leadership development training to judges and employees. For FY 2014, the Department submitted a decision item request to the JBC to implement a leadership development and education program at a cost of $517,500.

The Department paid vendors an increasing amount of money annually, peaking at $689,000 in 2013. In 2015, the Department issued an RFP for leadership development training. The Department received three responses to the RFP and selected the previous vendors, who submitted a bid to provide the training at a cost of $633,500 per year. To help reduce this cost, the Judicial Department committed additional internal resources and staffing to assist in the development and delivery of the training programs. Between 2013 and 2018, the average annual cost for the vendors to provide training was $530,000. The leadership development and training opportunities have been valuable in creating a common culture within the department, and participants in the trainings have overwhelmingly provided positive feedback. The program has trained hundreds of Department judges and employees.

The Department's contract with the previous vendors was set to expire on September 30, 2019. In 2018, SCAO began work on a new RFP for leadership and training services. The previous State Court Administrator, after consulting with the Chief Justice, determined that the program needed to be restructured to provide more direct and targeted training to employees and focus on the unique work of the branch, as opposed to high-level theoretical leadership. In January of 2019, SCAO issued an RFP for a revised development and training program that placed a heavy emphasis on knowledge of judicial functions and operations. The RFP was posted for 22 days. The RFP was sent to 401 businesses, and the materials were downloaded by 24 of them. The Department received no questions about or responses to the RFP.

On March 20, Mr. Brown, who at the time was SCAO Chief Human Resources Officer, signed a sole source determination letter concluding that Ms. Masias's company, The Leadership Practice, was the only vendor capable of developing and delivering the training program described in the RFP. On June 3, Mr. Ryan executed a contract with The Leadership Practice on the Department's behalf in the amount of $532,000 per year. The contract with The Leadership Practice required a more robust and tailored development and training program specific to the work of the Department and was an expansion of the leadership development training offered by the Department's previous vendors.

While the Department still firmly believes that leadership training is important to achieving its mission of serving the State of Colorado, the July media reports surfaced certain information about the vendor selected to provide such training. On July 17, former State Court Administrator Ryan, at the direction of the Chief Justice, notified Ms. Masias that the Department was terminating the contract with The Leadership Practice because it had ceased to further the public policy of the Colorado Judicial Branch, which the contract refers to as termination in the public interest, and because the vendor had defaulted by failing to comply with certain contractual duties and obligations. That same day, Mr. Ryan resigned his position, and two days later Mr. Brown resigned his position as Chief Administrative Officer.

The Office of the State Auditor Fraud Hotline Investigation

On May 16 of this year, the Office of the State Auditor (OSA) notified the Chief Justice that it had received an anonymous letter with allegations that could amount to occupational fraud. Consistent with the fraud hotline statute, Section 2-3-110.5, C.R.S., OSA gave the Judicial Department the option to investigate the allegations itself, investigate the allegations in conjunction with OSA, or request that OSA conduct the investigation itself. The Chief Justice elected to have OSA conduct the investigation independently. The investigation is in process, and it is not clear when it will be complete. The scope of the investigation includes the procurement process for and contract award to The Leadership Practice, allegations of misuse of paid time off by former SCAO directors, allegations of Family Medical Leave Act fraud, and improper use of administrative leave for certain SCAO employees. The Department is working closely with OSA to provide access to information and documents directly related to the scope of OSA's investigation.

Actions Taken in Response

In response to these events, the Judicial Department has taken a number of steps to reflect on past actions, review existing fiscal controls, and make enhancements to the selection process for future contracts awards. More fundamentally, the Department learned that the amount of money spent on services provided to the Department, even if initially determined through an RFP process, is not a default benchmark for future similar services.

As explained above, the Department terminated the contract with The Leadership Practice. The Department is reviewing whether its policies were followed in the procurement and contracting process. At this point, it appears that some requirements in the Department's fiscal rules were not strictly followed. The Department has also undertaken a review of its existing contracts to determine whether they have complied with the Department's contracting and procurement rules. Additionally, the Department is reviewing its fiscal rules for consistency with Executive Branch fiscal rules and for ways to further tighten fiscal controls and enhance transparency in our contracting process. The Department has reviewed its capacity for procurement and contracting review and has asked the Joint Budget Committee for additional resources to procure and manage contracts around the state. The Department is currently working with a vendor to develop and implement a statewide ERP system to manage the overall contract process, vendor management and procurement functions.

The Supreme Court has taken a more active role in the work of SCAO. Historically, the Chief Justice has worked closely with the executive team at SCAO, in keeping with his or her constitutional role as the executive head of the judicial system, and the rest of the court has assisted with administration indirectly through various committees. Still, day-to-day operations have been largely the work of SCAO, given the court's other responsibilities to the public and the size of the organization. In light of recent events, however, Supreme Court Justices are serving as liaisons to work directly with the different Divisions at SCAO to provide support and strategic direction. The Supreme Court has discussed the situation with SCAO and employees and judges around the state and has encouraged them to report anything concerning in the course of their work. This is not a short-term measure. The Court is committed to long-term, active involvement in administrative operations of the Department.

There have been major changes in leadership at SCAO, including the appointment of current State Court Administrator Steven Vasconcellos through a robust, transparent, and competitive selection process. The Supreme Court has heightened expectations for SCAO leadership positions and has communicated these expectations clearly. SCAO is currently in the process of hiring three different division directors, who will serve as part of Mr. Vasconcellos's senior leadership team.

This summer and fall have largely been a reset period for the work of SCAO. This has presented the Supreme Court and SCAO leadership with an opportunity to take a deep look at its existing practices and explore opportunities to improve accountability to the public and service to the rest of the Department.

At the direction of the Chief Justice, the Department has asked the Attorney General's Office to be much more involved in providing advice to the Department on issues of contracting and personnel. The Attorney General's office has been integral in advising the Department over the past seven months.

The Department is working diligently with OSA to facilitate its completion of the fraud hotline investigation and will closely review and digest OSA's independent findings to identify areas for continued improvement.

JUD 7: Provide a brief history of the court reporter page rate.

The transcript preparer's rate per page has been increased two times since 1993. The transcript rate began at $2.00 per page in 1993 increased to $2.35 and finally increased to $3.00 where it has remained since Fiscal Year 2016.

JUD 8: What would be the cost to the Judicial Department if the court reporter page rate increased by 50¢ per page?

About $14,000/year

QUESTIONS ABOUT REQUESTS

JUD R1 ($500,000 Judicial budget reduction): Is this a one-time reduction or is it ongoing?

This is an on-going reduction. OSPB instructed Executive Agencies to submit budgets with a 2% budget increase (including all fund sources). The Judicial Department took the opportunity to review its programs and identified an opportunity to reduce General Fund expenditures by $500,000. The Department terminated its leadership and training contract in July of this year and does not intend to resume a similar education and training program this fiscal year. However, the Department sees value in some level of education and training that is specific to the work of the Department. The Department anticipates that it may submit a decision item in a future fiscal year detailing its education and training needs.

JUD R2(a) (Magistrates): Who conducts judicial officer workload studies for the Department? How do these studies inform the Department's budget requests?

The Judicial Department utilizes an independent vendor, selected through a competitive procurement process, to conduct all workload studies for judicial officers and trial court staff. The National Center for State Courts has conducted the most recent weighted caseload studies for the trial courts. Weighted caseload studies are the preferred method of measuring workload in courts and probation nationally. Using a weighted caseload approach to workload modeling offers an advantage over other approaches by assessing staff need based on the complexity of each case type. The utilization of a workload model allows the Department to closely monitor resource needs and deployment and helps objectively identify areas where additional resources are necessary to support the work and mission of the courts. The information regarding staffing levels is a critical component to the Department's evaluation of needs and is utilized to demonstrate and support budget requests for additional resources when appropriate.

JUD R2(b) (Magistrates) and JUD R3 (Additional Probation Officers): Provide a detailed explanation about how the requested judicial officers and probation officers will be deployed.

The Judicial Department's magistrate and probation officer request is based on workload needs identified in Class B County Courts and the Probation Staffing Model. The tables below outline the Class B County Court locations and the probation departments with the greatest resources needs. Final allocations will depend on the amount of funding received from the General Assembly and an analysis just prior to FY 2021 allocations to determine if there were any dramatic changes in the distribution of resource needs since the budget request.

JUD R2(c) (Magistrates): Senate Bill 19-191 required each judicial district to develop a plan for setting bond for all in-custody defendants within forty-eight hours of arrest. In November, the Judicial Department issued a report on the cost of these plans. What were the findings? Would the Department use video links to conduct bail hearings remotely? Would the Department use the magistrates requested in R2 to address this requirement if it became law?

The Judicial Department submitted a report regarding the potential costs associated with the implementation of mandatory 48-hour bond hearings. While many variables remain unknown, according to the reports from the districts, statewide trial courts will require 4.6 FTE judicial officers and 10.10 FTE support staff (trial court and probation) to comply with a 48-hour bond setting requirement. Although we anticipate additional need for interpreter FTE as well as contractor needs for interpreter services, we are not currently able to create an estimate. We also anticipate technological and A/V needs to fulfill these plans. Costs come from both the equipment needed to make weekend bond hearings accessible to parties and the public, as well as the IT staff needed to support the equipment and technology in the districts. Obtaining the equipment alone, without any support staff, would require approximately $4.1 million. On demand Information Technology support options exist on a scale, though the risk of not holding hearings due to technological issues increases with the fewer in-person support positions. Additional FTE are necessary to ensure the continued type of technical support the courts receive. Hands-on, statewide weekday-level technical support on the weekends will cost up to $1.9 million, with lower-end vendor provided virtual services costing approximately $260,000. These estimates are subject to changes once more details regarding the exact process and requirements of any proposed legislation are available.

While the legislation requesting this report required each individual judicial district to submit a plan, several alternative strategies emerged in discussions and stakeholder meetings that are worth noting. These alternatives focus on ways judicial districts can coordinate to accomplish 48-hour bond settings including regionalization and/or the creation of a statewide bond commission. These alternatives will require additional research and discussion.

The magistrate request (R2) is not related to the resource needs identified in the SB19-191 report because the Judicial Department has not experienced a workload impact from the bill. SB19-191 did not implement changes to the timing of bond hearings but required an analysis of the broad concept of weekend bond hearings. While it is possible that magistrates received from R2 may share the burden of a 48-hour bond hearing requirement should it become law, the current magistrate request is separate.

JUD R3 (Additional Probation Officers): Last year there was discussion about using probation strategically. There was a conversation about using probation as an alternative to incarceration to save money and prevent unnecessary justice-system involvement. Are we still pursuing this strategy? Is this request related to this proactive strategy?

The discussion last year pertained to HB 19-1226 and the possibility of using Judicial Department resources for monitoring defendants on pre-trial supervision as an alternative to pretrial detention. The concept centered around using Judicial Department staff to perform pretrial supervision, specifically in rural areas where local-level capacity limitations might prevent counties from implementing pretrial service programs. In those conversations, some stakeholders expressed concerns about using Judicial Department staff to perform pretrial supervision rather than local-level employees of county governments. Despite these concerns, the Department remains open to discussions about probation as an alternative to pretrial detention in local jails.

With respect to pre-plea or post-plea diversion programs, C.R.S. 18-1.3-101 (8)(9)(a)(b) authorizes probation to supervise individuals who have been sentenced to diversion and given suspended prosecution either before or after charges are filed, for a period not to exceed 2 years. Currently, this is an option that is rarely utilized. For the last five years, less than 1% of all new probation clients were diversion clients supervised by probation. Currently, probation has approximately 22 people in probation-based diversion programs in five judicial districts and counties (Gilpin, Arapahoe, Jefferson, Larimer, Prowers). Diversion programs are typically operated at the local level by District Attorney offices or local law enforcement.

As an alternative to post-sentence jail or prison incarceration, Colorado probation is, by far, the largest single sentencing option in Colorado. The active population in probation is more than 80,000 people in various levels of supervision and specialized programs. Our average daily population is about four times the number of inmates in DOC custody, nearly nine times the size the parole population and over 20 times the size of community corrections. Colorado probation is also the most economical per-person sentencing option. For adults, the annual cost per person is just over $1,500 compared to $6,000 on parole, nearly $9,000 in community corrections, and over $38,000 in DOC prison institutions. Overall, our adult population makes up 61% of the state funded corrections population yet only consumes 9% of state appropriations for that same corrections population. On the juvenile side, our population represents 82% of the juvenile corrections population yet only consumes about 9% of state appropriations for that same population. From this perspective, probation already exists as a large, economical, and strategic alternative to incarceration. Our budget request is intended to further advance this strategy and to maintain minimal staffing levels to meet the needs of the state and local communities.

JUD R9(a) (Courthouse Capital): What is the process for identifying requests for courthouse capital funding? How does the Department prioritize projects and calculate a reasonable amount of funding for each project?

Counties planning courthouse remodel/construction projects contact the State Court Administrator's office to notify the Department of their intent to proceed with a project. Department staff then work with the counties on courtroom design, requirements, and needs. The counties are initiating these projects, and the Department is merely reacting to their initiative and has no say in prioritization. The state funds courtroom furnishings, IT and

IT infrastructure, and A/V within the courtroom. Each project component is costed individually by Department staff and is identified in the budget submission annually.

JUD R9(b) (Courthouse Capital): What happens if a very large number of counties decide to build or refurbish courthouses at the same time? Are state Courthouse Capital expenditures required? Must the state fund them all when they are completed? Explain the statutory requirements and how the Department prepares its annual budget request for Courthouse Capital.

13-3-108 C.R.S. requires the board of county commissioners in each county to provide and maintain adequate courtrooms and other facilities. It is silent on what the state is to provide however, since unification of the court system in the late 1960's the state has assumed financial responsibility for the furnishings within the courtroom. What furnishing this includes has evolved over the years to include furniture, IT infrastructure (computers, networks including phone, wireless, recordings and other connected devices) and AV equipment for evidence presentation. If multiple counties decided to build/remodel their courthouses at the same time it could be potentially impactful financially to the State or if a front range county were to build a new courthouse, the cost to the State of furnishings could run into the millions. In the last few years, the number of county projects has been between six and fifteen each year and the appropriations have been:

FY18	$2,639,800
FY19	$1,963,781
FY20	$4,135,390
FY21 Req:	$2,273,235

JUD R10 (IT Data Center Equipment Replacement): The request asks for funding to purchase servers. What are the alternatives? Leasing? Cloud-based services? What solution would be most cost-effective and reliable?

The Department is evaluating alternatives to purchasing servers, including leasing and cloud-based options and will provide the results to the Committee early in January.

Unnumbered Salary Survey Request (b): Compare the results of the Judicial Department's salary survey with the results of the Department of Personnel and Administration's salary survey. How do the salary ranges compare for similar job classifications?

The Judicial Department uses a separate compensation system structure for salary ranges and different methodologies for how it determines salaries compared to how DPA uses its compensation study. The Judicial Department has individual salary ranges for every job classification while the Executive Branch has a matrix system that slots job classifications into predetermined ranges. The Executive Branch analysis within its compensation survey focuses on job families and overall wage medians of its employees rather than analysis on all individual job classes that the Judicial Department uses.

The Judicial Department does use salary data from the Executive Branch for similarly situated job classifications within its salary survey performed by an outside vendor, Segal Waters. Using this information within the Department's custom survey ensures that it are treating comparable job classification salary ranges in a similar manner while still allowing for appropriate market salary ranges for judicial personnel. However, the Department examines different factors than the Executive Branch for salary surveys.

The Department evaluates job ranges at the median of the market, and if our salary range is below the median of the market at a variable greater than 3%, we request additional dollars to move the salaries for those employees. If the additional dollars are not requested and we are forced to move the salary range to be competitive for hiring salary rates (recruitment), the current employees are not able to move along the salary range and are then being paid at the same rate as a new employee. This is called compensation compression and is a large factor in the retention of employees. For example, if a five-year employee is paid the same as a newly hired employee, the five-year employee will look elsewhere for employment. Given the low unemployment rate and the demands of higher wages for living on the front range, the Department sees substantial value in retaining knowledgeable and experienced employees.

I2 – JUD 1: For SB 18-251, what has been the experience in other judicial districts (other than the Western Slope) in contracting for the liaisons required by the bill? Has the Department been able to find appropriate people who are familiar with local behavioral health services to fill this role?

The Bridges Program was able in its first year to contract successfully with community partners to employ Court Liaisons in all 22 judicial districts as follows:

- Ten mental health centers covering 15 districts
- Three private non-profit behavioral health organizations, covering four districts
- Two pre-trial services providers, covering two districts
- One public health department, cover one district

While there is no shortage of appropriate individuals to fill the role of Court Liaison, contracting has presented significant challenges as follows:

- Allocation of Funds: Contractors have been unable to pay Court Liaisons the salaries initially anticipated in the creation of the legislation, which was an annual average of $64,000 plus benefits. Instead, Court Liaisons are paid an average of $43,000 plus benefits annually across all contracts, with the difference going toward the contractors' administrative expenses. This significantly lower salary presents challenges with both recruitment and retention. In contrast, contractors have indicated they feel the contract amount (average $85K) is not significant for the cost of the program.

- Disruption of Services: As a direct result of the lower salaries, six of the 29 liaisons have left the position for higher paid positions in the past year. Recruiting and training replacements is a slow process, and those districts have experienced 2-4 months of disruption in Court Liaison services.
- Appropriate Supervision: The majority of contracts reflect a 1:1 supervisor-to-liaison ratio, presenting a challenge for contractors. While contracted partners provide employment supervision to liaisons, many have not been able to provide the necessary guidance in navigating the criminal justice system nor implementing a program that is different than the rest of their services.
- Secure File Storage Solutions and Case Management Systems: For various reasons, all but two contractors have indicated they cannot provide secure file storage solutions and/or case management systems for the use of Court Liaisons.

I2 – JUD 2: Are we achieving the legislative intent of S.B. 18-251? Is it promoting collaboration and consultation among behavioral health providers, district attorneys, and defense attorneys about available community-based behavioral health services and supports, competency evaluations, restoration to competency services, and other relevant decisions and issues facing individuals with behavioral health conditions who are involved with the criminal justice system, including appropriateness for community treatment and resource availability? Please provide numbers to support your response.

The Bridges Program has been well-received by participants and stakeholders, including behavioral health providers, attorneys, judges, and the Office of Behavioral Health. As of December 1, 580 participants representing 724 cases have entered the Bridges Program. The program is expected to grow exponentially as more judges across districts begin utilizing Court Liaisons.

The impact of Court Liaison involvement on a defendant’s well-being is often immediate and significant. In one month alone, Court Liaisons facilitated cross-agency responses that resulted in three successful suicide interventions. The Bridges Program is working to develop a program evaluation that will provide quantitative data to allow us to measure program effectiveness both quantitatively and qualitatively toward specific program goals and objectives. In the meantime, the below testimonials illustrate the positive impact Bridges is having on courts, defendants, and OBH competency programs:

- A Court Liaison was assigned to work with a female participant who had been incarcerated in the County Jail for seven months. The Court Liaison coordinated services and family support to the point that all parties agreed there was enough stability for the participant to be released from jail and receive outpatient restoration services, rather than remain in jail awaiting inpatient restoration. The Judge’s decision rested primarily on the fact that the participant would have the continued support of the Bridges Program. The participant has also joined the Bridges Program Statewide Steering Committee to help provide insight on the client experience.

- A Court Liaison was assigned to work with a participant who has had an open case since 2016. The participant's frustration with the system over the years had escalated to the point that necessitated court security during his hearings. He was ordered to outpatient restoration but never engaged. The Court Liaison was able to contact this participant at court and connect him to outpatient restoration services for a same day intake. The participant now attends all of his restoration classes. He reports that he feels like, "God brought Bridges and outpatient restoration into his life for a reason," and that he feels supported and is making progress in a system that before seemed never-ending.
- A public defender in a rural community shared, "I'm so happy about [my client's] turnaround. He looked so good. I can't thank you enough for all of your help throughout this case. You did amazing work while remaining impartial and neutral. That's a very hard task." A family member in this same case stated to the Court Liaison, "Thanks to... your efforts as far as I am concerned the outcome for [defendant] couldn't have been better."
- A public defender in another community reported that not only were her clients appreciative of the program, but that a client not in the program requested to participate because he had heard positive things from other defendants where he was in custody.
- A director at the Colorado Mental Health Institute (CMHIP) reports, "Wonderful! I can already see/feel improvements. The Court Liaison is down here just feeding us contact info and such on cases - this is going to be such a wonderful program addition!"
- A district court judge shared, "Thank you for all your time and dedication to this. This is an invaluable tool in our extremely heavy caseload and addressing a very serious issue."
- Special masters overseeing the consent decree in the lawsuit with the Colorado Department of Human Services have encouraged coordination with the Bridges Program, calling the system in place to date "impressive" and "innovative." In an August 13, 2019, memo to Colorado Department of Human Services, special masters stated, "Although Bridges is not under our supervision, we certainly appreciate their work and view it as quite complementary to the goals of the Consent Decree and the work of CDHS that we do oversee."

- In an August 29, 2019, program review call with the Council of State Governments, the National Governors Association, the National Center for State Courts, and the National Criminal Justice Association, this group of consultants to the Governor's Office were highly encouraged by the efforts of the Bridges Program and stated, "It's calls like this that make our work worthwhile."

ISSUE 3: JUDICIAL OFFICER STAFFING

I3 – JUD 1: The Department's 2018 workload study for county court judges shows that the work required for many types of cases has gone up. What types of cases have been affected? What are the reasons for the increase?

The 2018 county court judicial officer workload study indicated significant increases in the time required by judicial officers to process DUI/DWAI, domestic violence, and misdemeanor cases. Time associated with felony criminal work by county court judicial officers also increased. The study identified several factors influencing the increase in time required to handle these types of cases specifically. The Department believes that the expansion of technology and changes in policy and legal practices are key contributors to the change in workload. Some specific examples of how these factors contributed to an increase in the time associated with such cases are as follows:

- The county court has experienced an increase of court time required due to body camera footage and other related technologies. Judicial officers are reviewing lengthy camera footage submitted into evidence, and when these cases proceed to trial, the parties and juries are also spending increased time reviewing footage. This increases the number of multi-day jury trials. DUI cases, in particular, are impacted by these developments as there is often body camera or dashboard camera footage of these incidents.
- With legalization of recreational marijuana, the number of drug related Driving Under the Influence cases has increased. These cases involve blood tests rather than breath tests. At trial, the prosecution must call a toxicologist expert to testify to the blood test results and effects of the drugs. Often the defense may call a toxicology expert to give a contrary opinion. This means that most of these cases take at least two days instead of the normal one to one-and-a-half-day county court jury trial.
- The Rothgery v. Gillespie County decision in 2008 clarified the defendant's right to counsel at all initial proceedings, the county court has experienced an increase in cases where defendants are represented by court-appointed counsel. This has increased the number of appearances on cases and increased the length of time required to handle each appearance. More cases are set for jury trial, requiring evidentiary motions hearings and other pre-trial matters, even if the case is ultimately resolved before it proceeds to trial. For example, misdemeanor jury trials have increased approximately 93 percent in Jefferson County and approximately 14 percent in Adams County since FY14. County court has also seen more cases where mental competency to proceed is an issue. When a defendant is ordered to undergo a competency, sanity, or mental condition evaluation, a mental health stay is ordered in the case until the evaluation is completed and considered by the court. The court continues to set reviews and monitor progress during this time. Compared to FY18, mental health stays ordered in county court cases increased 18 percent statewide in FY19. Certain districts are experiencing more pronounced increases to competency work. For example, the number of mental health stays ordered in a misdemeanor or traffic cases increased by 114 percent in Mesa County and 80 percent in Arapahoe County between FY18 and FY19.

- With the passage of House Bill 15-1043, a person faces a felony charge for a fourth or subsequent drinking and driving offense. The increased penalties and collateral consequences due to DUI/DWAI convictions has contributed to an increase in litigation and trials in these cases.
- Senate Bill 16-116 created a new process for sealing certain criminal justice records. County court judicial officers are now required to review and process these motions that were previously handled via a separate district court filing. If the case in question involves a victim, the judge must review the motion, set the matter for hearing and call the case on record to ensure victim notification requirements are satisfied before ultimately ruling on the motion to seal. This process takes time and requires additional county court judge review of the case beyond what was previously required. There were 3,315 motions to seal in county court cases received in FY19; an increase of 20 percent in comparison to FY18.
- The increase of the county court civil jurisdictional limit as of January 1, 2019 (Senate Bill 18-056), has expanded the number of civil matters cases that may be heard in county courts. While the full scope of impact is not yet known, this change may result in both increases to the number of cases as well as the work required to process the cases involving disputes over greater dollar amounts. A year-to-date comparison with preliminary data shows a nearly 4% increase in money cases filed in county court.

I3 – JUD 2: Page 41: Since magistrates are not retained by voters, what is the process for holding magistrates accountable? When is it appropriate to utilize a magistrate rather than a judge? What would be the cost difference if county court judges rather than magistrates were requested in R2?

Magistrates report to the Chief Judge of the judicial district, are at-will employees and are subject to the Department's Personnel Rules and Policies. For instance, magistrates undergo the same performance appraisals received by other Judicial Department employees. Magistrates are evaluated on the essential functions and any additional functions assigned by their supervisor. Upon completion of the annual evaluation, the magistrate and supervisor meet to discuss performance and actions can be taken for below standard or unacceptable performance.

Chapter 35 of the Supreme Court Rules outlines the Rules for Magistrates. While the matters that magistrates may preside over are limited, they can perform many of the same duties as a constitutionally elected or appointed judge. Work assignments are designated by the Chief Judge of the judicial district and can require performing judicial duties in any or all the following areas: criminal, civil, juvenile, domestic relations, probate, and traffic. Such duties may include deciding the merits of cases, hearing and evaluating evidence and witness credibility, analyzing laws and rules, making findings of facts and conclusions of law, and issuing oral or written decisions and orders to resolve cases. Magistrates cannot preside over jury trials, cannot rule on constitutionality of laws, and, in some cases, can only preside with the consent of the parties. Unlike statutorily created judgeships, magistrate positions can be utilized in various locations over time as workload and staffing needs change.

A request for 8.0 County Court Judges would cost approximately $692,115 more in FY21 than for 8.0 magistrates of which the salary differential (including PERA and Medicare) is $192,964; capital outlay is $335,920 and operating is $163,231.

OSPB's FY 2020-21 budget instructions asked executive-branch agencies to search for the following budget saving opportunities:

Unspent Funds

- Positions vacant > six months –is it really needed?
- Reversions of prior year spending –is there a pattern or a one-time occurrence?

Actuals vs Estimates

- Fiscal Notes–did enacted programs really cost what was estimated?
- Decision Items –are there pilot programs still on-going? Did the Department receive permanent FTE for functions no longer needed?
- End of year spending–review purchases for the final 8 weeks of each fiscal year – were the purchases budgeted for in advance or end of year “spend-up”?
- Travel, meals, official functions –review for least cost vs maximum allowable.

Unrequested Funds

- Sunset recommendations—were any sunset recommendations not adopted by the legislature?

- Appropriations—was the Department appropriated more than was requested?
- Supplemental Requests—why did the Department not include these requests in regular budget cycle?

Underutilized assets

- Goods or services that could be purchased less expensively in private sector.

In preparing the FY21 budget request, the Department was aware of the OSPB budget guidelines and consequently submitted a budget that is 3.1% (in total) greater than the FY20 appropriations. As part of the budget review process, the Department was initially able to identify $500,000 in General Fund savings.

Factors driving the Department’s General Fund increase include the annualization of legislation (nearly $1 million), increased payments to OIT (FY19 - $4,527,616; FY20 - $7,401,966; FY21 request - $8,112,286), the state PERA increase of .5% and the decision item requests.

Subsequent to the November 1 budget submission, the Department has identified budget efficiencies that will be submitted in January as a budget amendment. The amendment identifies $6.0 million in reductions in the FY21 request, lowering Department’s overall budget increase to 1.51% (compared to a statewide average of 2.6%) from the FY20 appropriation.

PUBLIC ACCESS TO COURT RECORDS

PA – JUD 1: Does the Judicial Department have a policy in place to ensure that the public may have access to its records showing how the courts perform their official duties, such as a uniform standard for sealing criminal court records? If not, why?

The Judicial Department, and judges throughout Colorado, share the General Assembly’s commitment to transparency. Of course, some cases necessitate restricted public access for various reasons, such as safeguarding ongoing criminal investigations and protecting highly personal information in domestic relations cases. In the interest of promoting transparency while recognizing the need for restricted access in such cases, the Judicial Department has crafted the rules outlined below.

Access to records of the Judicial Department is governed by the provisions of the Public Access to Information and Records Rules (PAIRR), which are promulgated by the supreme court, as well as the determinations of judicial officers in individual cases. PAIRR Rule 1 incorporates Chief Justice Directive 05-01 and governs access to court records, such as filings in particular cases. PAIRR Rule 2 governs access to administrative records of the branch and largely mirrors the provisions of CORA. For both civil and criminal cases, judicial officers may restrict public access to court records in a particular case in accordance with the law.

The question references uniform standards for sealing criminal court records. Sealing of criminal court records typically involves an individual convicted of a crime attempting to have that conviction sealed so that there is no longer a public record of the conviction. Sealing is governed entirely by statute, and most criminal record sealing statutes are contained in Title 24. Judges are required to follow those statutory provisions in sealing criminal cases.

The question appears to be directed at something other than sealing of criminal records. Judges have the authority to “suppress” court records in certain situations, meaning that they can restrict public access to certain filings within a case or the entire case. Rule of Civil Procedure 121, section 1-5, and case law govern the restriction of public access to court records in civil cases. For criminal cases, restriction of public access to court records is governed by the Constitution and case law related to public access. The Department does not have a separate court rule governing restriction of public access to records in criminal cases, but the Criminal Rules Committee of the supreme court is in the process of drafting a proposal for the supreme court. The committee is expected to vote on a proposal in January 2020. In the vast majority of cases where the judge restricts public access, one of the parties to the case files a motion asking the judge to restrict access, and the opposing party has an opportunity to respond to that motion. In very few cases does a judge decide to restrict access without a request from the parties.

PA – JUD 2: How many other states have adopted a uniform standard to ensure reasonable accountability to the public?

The Department is not aware of how many other states have a uniform standard for restricting public access to records in criminal cases. Every state has open records statutes or court rules that address public access. In addition to general open records rules, some states specify the process for a court to follow in restricting public access, and other states have varying specificity of standards the court applies in restricting access.

PA – JUD 3: Will the Judicial Department use any of the increased appropriations that it is requesting for FY 2020-21 to provide better accountability to the public?

Undoubtedly, the requested appropriations will allow the Department to better serve the citizens of the state. The Department continually strives to be open and accountable, while at the same time recognizing that it is the repository for extremely sensitive information in both civil and criminal cases. The Department has a history and reputation of working with concerned citizens and legislators regarding its level of transparency and accountability.

PA – JUD 4: Has the Judicial Department complied with public accountability measures that the Colorado General Assembly has passed, such as H.B. 18-1152, which dealt with CORA and sexual harassment complaints?

Yes. On May 31, 2018, the supreme court amended the provisions of PAIRR 2 to mirror the provisions of CORA related to sexual harassment complaints. On January 24, 2019, the supreme court amended the Rules of Procedure regarding Attorney Discipline to add a provision that the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel's investigation records regarding allegations of sexual harassment shall be available to the complainant and the respondent. On September 19, 2019, the supreme court amended the Rules of Professional Conduct governing attorneys in the state to clarify that sexual harassment in connection with an attorney's professional activities constitutes a violation of the Rules and is grounds for discipline by the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel.

PA – JUD 5: Describe how the Judicial Department currently handles CORA requests for sexual harassment complaints. Describe how the Department handles other types of CORA requests.

For sexual harassment complaints regarding Department employees, the Department handles PAIRR requests the same way that other branches handle CORA requests for that information. PAIRR is identical to CORA with respect to sexual harassment complaints against Department employees.

Complaints against judges are handled by the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. Confidentiality of those proceedings is governed by the Constitution (Article VI, § 23(3)(g)), statutes (§§ 24-72-401 and 402, C.R.S.), and court rule (C.R.J.D. 6.5).

Requests for sexual harassment complaints regarding attorneys who are licensed by the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel are treated the same as other complaints filed with OARC. The information in the complaints is confidential until there is a determination that there is reasonable cause to believe that grounds for discipline exist and OARC files and serves a complaint against an attorney. It is important to remember that OARC regulates attorneys, the vast majority of whom are not Department employees. These records are maintained by OARC in its capacity as the licensing and regulating authority for attorneys throughout the state.

When a court receives a filing that may contain confidential personal information, a court clerk may temporarily restrict public access to the document until the clerk has reviewed the document and redacted the confidential information. But in general, the Department does not decide whether to suppress records. It is up to each individual judicial officer to decide, based on the law and facts before him or her, whether to restrict public access to some or all of the records in a case.

PA – JUD 7: In 2018, the Denver Post published a series of articles on suppression of court records. According to one of these articles:

More than 6,700 civil and criminal cases have been restricted from public access since 2013, usually by judges who agreed to a request from prosecutors or defense lawyers to shield them, The Post found. Of those, 3,076 are still under suppression orders that keep the details away from the public....

The Post found one criminal case — that of a board member and part-owner of the Broomfield Academy charged and convicted of felony sexual assault of a child and misdemeanor child abuse — in which prosecutors requested and received a suppression order to avoid publicity. The case remains suppressed.

It found another — of a member of the Adams County 14 school board eventually convicted with attempting to lure a child for sex — in which the judge ordered the suppression at the outset, without anyone even asking for it, because the judge “had concerns about releasing information,” records obtained by The Post show. The case remains suppressed.

The case of Clifford Galley, 28, convicted of attempted first-degree murder, was one of a number The Post found that remained suppressed long after the defendant went to prison. Galley was sentenced to 169 years in prison and won’t see freedom in his lifetime. Documents related to the case were suppressed after his arrest in 2013 and no one except for his lawyer, prosecutors or a judge could see them. Last month, a judge lifted the suppression order after The Post asked prosecutors’ questions about it. His appeal, however, remains suppressed.

Does the Judicial Department think this type of suppression is appropriate? What has the Department done to address this issue?

The Judicial Department cannot comment on whether actions taken by judges in specific cases are appropriate. However, in response to the concerns raised in the Post articles, the Department scheduled and held multiple conferences with chief judges throughout the state. Those discussions were fruitful and revealed, among other things, that many of the suppression concerns involved requests by the prosecution at the beginning of a case either because the investigation was still ongoing or to avoid alerting the defendant that a warrant for his arrest had issued; after the investigation was completed and the defendant was arrested in those cases, there was no follow-up motion filed to notify the court that suppression was no longer necessary. That meant that the cases inadvertently remained suppressed. As mentioned, the Criminal Rules Committee of the Supreme Court is currently working on a new rule to avoid these and other issues the Department learned about through its review and the discussions it had with the chief judges. The goal of the rule the committee is working on is precisely to ensure transparency and public access. It is also worth mentioning that the Department understands that the number of cases restricted from public access has been greatly reduced since the discussions held with the chief judges.

ADDENDUM: OTHER QUESTIONS FOR WHICH SOLELY WRITTEN RESPONSES ARE REQUESTED. PLEASE RETAIN THE NUMBERING IN ORDER TO MAINTAIN CONSISTENT LABELING FOR COMMON QUESTIONS ACROSS DEPARTMENTS.

- 1 Provide a list of any legislation that the Department has: (a) not implemented, or (b) partially implemented. Explain why the Department has not implemented or has only partially implemented the legislation on this list. Please explain any problems the Department is having implementing any legislation and any suggestions you have to modify legislation.

The Department is on track to implement all legislation in the time prescribed in the legislation.

- 2 Does the Department have any HIGH PRIORITY OUTSTANDING recommendations as identified in the "Annual Report: Status of Outstanding Audit Recommendations" that was published by the State Auditor's Office and dated June 30, 2019 (link below)? Please indicate where in the Department's budget request actions taken towards resolving HIGH PRIORITY OUTSTANDING recommendations can be found.

- 3 If the Department receives federal funds of any type, please respond to the following:
 - a. Are you expecting any changes in federal funding with the passage of the FFY 2020-21 federal budget? If yes, in which programs, and what is the match requirement for each program?

None

- b. Does the Department have a contingency plan if federal funds are eliminated?

N/A

- c. Please provide a detailed description of any federal sanctions or potential sanctions for state activities of which the Department is already aware. In addition, please provide a detailed description of any sanctions that MAY be issued against the Department by the federal government during FFY 2019-20 or 2020-21.

N/A

- d. Compared to other states, Colorado ranks low in receipt of federal dollars. How can the Department increase the amount of federal money received?

The Department pursues federal grants when it makes sense programmatically particularly in the Probation and the Problem-Solving Court programs. However, federal grants aren't necessary free and often require a state match or state paid management of grant or awards and the Department may not have the capacity to manage a grant within existing resources.

- e. What state funds are currently utilized to draw down (or match) federal dollars? What state funding would be required to increase the amount of federal funding received?

None

- 4 Is the Department spending money on public awareness campaigns? If so, please describe these campaigns, the goal of the messaging, the cost of the campaign, and distinguish between paid media and earned media. Further, please describe any metrics regarding effectiveness and whether the Department is working with other state or federal departments to coordinate the campaign?

- 5 Based on the Department's most recent available record, what is the FTE vacancy and turnover rate: (1) by department; (2) by division; (3) by program for programs with at least 20 FTE; and (4) by occupational class for classes that are located within a larger occupational group containing at least 20 FTE. To what does the Department attribute this turnover/vacancy experience? Do the statewide compensation policies or practices administered by the Department of Personnel help or hinder the department in addressing vacancy or turnover issues?

Our current turnover can be linked back to the inability to move employee's through salary ranges. The statewide common policy decision of only giving across the board increases or no increase has completely negated the pay for performance program set into place that was to help move employees through the ranges. Without the two-tiered system of increases (Across the Board and Pay for Performance) coupled with the need to move salary ranges for market competitive starting wages, longer term employee salaries have not been able to progress through the range and are now compressed to be equal with employees who have started working with the state.

- 7 What are the major cost drivers impacting the Department? Is there a difference between the price inflation the Department is experiencing compared to the general CPI? Please describe any specific cost escalations.

Caseload is the main cost driver for the Judicial Department. Variations in caseload are mainly driven by policy decisions of the District Attorneys, such as charging practices. Legislative, social, and technological changes may influence not only the volume of cases, but trial court processes as well. For example, the expanded use of technology and body cameras in law enforcement has increased the amount of time spent reviewing evidence. Conversely, introducing E-Filing and other court technologies reduces material and data entry costs while also increasing accessibility of the trial courts. To the best of our knowledge, the Judicial Department is not experiencing significant price inflation compared to the general CPI.

- 8 How is the Department's caseload changing and how does it impact the Department's budget? Are there specific population changes, demographic changes, or service needs (e.g. aging population) that are different from general population growth?

The Department's probation population has changed considerably over the last several years. The regular adult population has increased by more than 9,000 probationers from FY13-FY19, and the juvenile population has decreased by nearly 1,000 in that same timeframe. Adults sentenced to probation for felony convictions have increased by 33% over the last seven years (from 10,360 in FY13 to 13,773 in FY19). Additionally, the risk profile of probation's population has changed. Colorado probation has measured increases in the number of high-risk adults being sentenced to probation and a corresponding increase in severity of need. Probation has seen an 80% increase in high risk probationers from FY13 to FY19. Comparatively, probation's low risk population has only grown by 11% in that same timeframe. High risk probationers present with greater needs and have more complex and disrupted stability factors (e.g. homelessness), behavioral problems, acute mental illness, longer histories of failure on community supervision and higher probability of failure on probation. These cases require great strategic and time-intensive supervision increases workload demands of state probation officers. Despite legislative efforts to reduce penalties and decriminalize various offenses, felony filings continue to increase, and probation's higher-risk population continues to grow.

While total trial court filings have declined slightly in the last year, the decrease has not been uniform. Some significant case types have increased over the past several years. For example, felony criminal filings have experienced robust growth, increasing 58 percent since FY 2012. During this same time, mental health filings have increased 28 percent and probate filings have increased 15 percent.

The complexity of cases has also changed over time, contributing to increased time constraints on judicial officers. For instance, additional time is required to process DUI/DWAI, domestic violence, and misdemeanor cases. In many jurisdictions, county court judicial officers handle preliminary proceedings in felony criminal cases or in some locations oversee lower level felony cases for the duration of the case. The time associated with felony criminal work by county court judicial officers is another area that has experienced an increase.

The increased number of self-represented parties has changed the workload demands on the trial courts as well. Over the past ten to fifteen years, more citizens are now participating in a court case without the services of an attorney. Self-represented parties present unique challenges to the court system in several ways. For example, self-represented litigants can increase the amount of time necessary for clerks to handle the day-to-day business of the courts as individuals require one-on-one procedural assistance. Pro se litigants may be unable to print necessary documents and forms and often lack access to and/or struggle to understand state statutes, court rules, and policies and procedures necessary to properly handle their cases. The provision of assistance to parties without attorney representation continues to be a significant demand on the trial courts and needs related to this issue continue to be monitored closely.

Colorado Courts are experiencing the impact of two specific demographic trends in the state of Colorado. The rapid increase in population over the age of 65 and increased diversity of Colorado's population both have implications for the courts.

As the population ages, the courts expect to see increases in probate, protective proceedings cases, guardianship and conservatorship proceedings. Unlike some types of court cases, which can be resolved in a year or less, many protective proceedings cases require long-term oversight by the courts. More than 3,000 new protective proceedings cases were filed in FY 2019, and roughly 15,000 probate matters are subject to ongoing court monitoring at any given time.

Language and cultural barriers can create obstacles such as misconceptions about the role of the court system and law enforcement. These challenges can keep litigants with limited English proficiency (LEP) from participating fully in their own court proceedings. Court interpretation and translation require increased management and scheduling as the trial courts as they are increasingly compelled to use language interpreters in court proceedings and translators for written documents. Additional time is required to determine the need for interpreter services, to schedule the appearance of interpreters, to conduct proceedings using interpreter services, and to process payments for interpreter services. Further, if an interpreter is not available or does not show up to a hearing, proceedings must be delayed. These factors can add significantly to the time required to resolve cases.

- 9 Please provide an overview of the Department's current and future strategies for the use of outward facing technology (e.g. websites, apps), the role of these technologies in the Department's interactions with the public and other state agencies, the Department's total spending on these efforts in FY 2018-19 and expected spending in FYs 2019-20 and 2020-21.

The Judicial Department (“Department”) currently provides several external facing applications/websites to support an important Department goal of providing Access to Justice. The applications include an external facing website with a variety of self-service functionality such as the ability to pay fees and fines online, information regarding public records, and several online court reports. Additionally, the Department provides a statewide e-filing system (Colorado Courts E-Filing), which was developed inhouse, for all civil, criminal, probate, water, and domestic relations cases. In April 2019 (FY19), the Department also launched pro se e-filing for domestic relations cases in the 8th and 18th judicial districts. The Department will continue its rollout of pro se e-filing across the state in FY20 and FY21.

In FY20 and FY21, the Department’s strategy to increase Access to Justice includes planning, and possibly the implementation of, a new external website. The vision for the Department’s new website will be to create Unity in Justice by integrating several new applications that will benefit the citizens of Colorado such as the Colorado Legal Help Center (CLHC) website and Online Dispute Resolution (ODR). The goal for CLHC and ODR is to seamlessly integrate these applications with the Department’s Colorado Courts E-Filing (CCE) system for easier Access to Justice and increased efficiencies throughout the court filing process. The Department is working with the State Internet Portal Authority (SIPA) on options to replace the Department’s external website at a minimal cost. The Department estimates the CLHC system will cost approximately $130,000 but does not include the automation of all court forms. The total cost for the ODR system is currently unknown.

Additionally, in FY20 and FY21, the Department will be implementing a court reminder text messaging program to remind criminal defendants and juvenile participants to appear at each of their scheduled court appearances. The Department’s court reminder program will also be used to notify these same participants of court closures due to inclement weather. The development of court reminder program will cost approximately $203,000 in FY20 with ongoing costs of approximately $99,186 per year.

Lastly, in FY20 and FY21, the Department will be putting together a strategy to add juvenile e-filing as part of the CCE application for attorneys and other state agencies to file juvenile cases with the Department. This added functionality will be developed with internal Department resources.

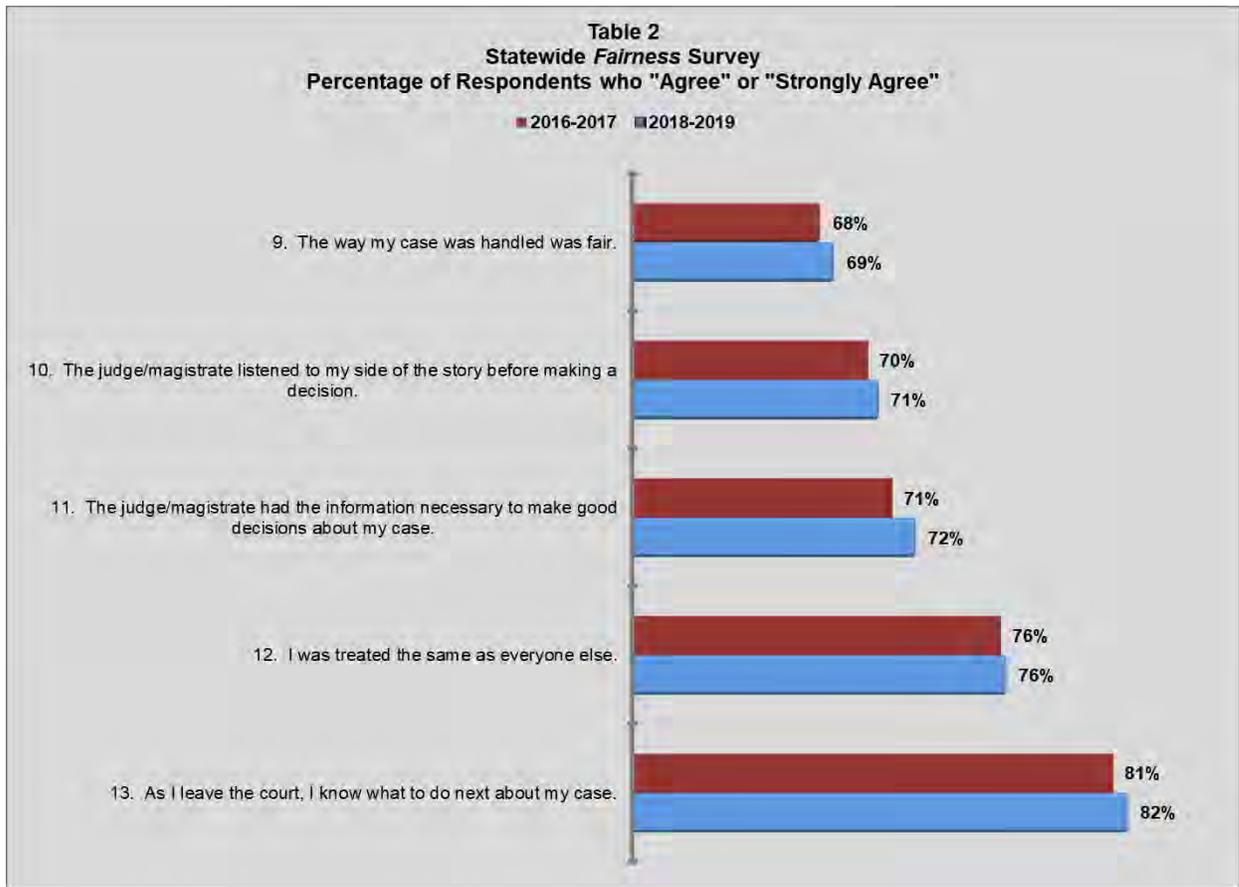

- 10 There are many ways in which the Department may interact with internal or external customers, including the public and other departments. How is the Department gathering feedback and evaluating customer experience? Please address all interactions, e.g. technology, in-person, call centers, as well as total spending on these efforts in FY 2018-19 and expected spending in FYs 2019-20 and 2020-21.

One of the primary ways the Department gathers customer feedback on trial courts is through Access and Fairness surveys. In order to gauge the level of perceived trust and confidence within the courts, the Judicial Department conducts an Access and Fairness survey in every judicial district in the state every two years. The purpose of the survey is to:

- (1) Rate the court user’s perceptions of the courts accessibility and its treatment of court users in terms of fairness, equality, and respect;
- (2) Provide a general snapshot on how the public perceives access and fairness in the courts;
- (3) Establish a baseline of information so that the courts can evaluate current practices and create plans for more improved and efficient court practices.

- 11 Please highlight the long-term financial challenges of fulfilling the mission of the Department with particular attention to any scenarios identified in the Department's Long-Range Financial Plan involving an economic downturn, department-specific contingencies, emerging trends, or major anticipated expenses (Subsections 3-6 of Section 4 of the Long Range Financial Plan submitted pursuant to H.B. 18-1430).

State Policy changes enacted by the General Assembly (Criminal Justice reform etc.) present the biggest financial challenge to the Department. Legislation such as SB19-191 requiring a bond hearing within 48 hours of arrest will impact courts operations and there will be a financial cost for implementation.

- 12 In some cases, the roles and duties of existing FTE may have changed over time. For all FY 2020-21 budget requests that include an increase in FTE:
- a. Specify whether existing staff will be trained to assume these roles or these duties, and if not, why;

The new FTE positions will be posted and filled competitively. A qualified candidate will be required to meet the minimum qualifications to perform the job. All new positions will require some degree of training.

b. Specify why additional FTE are necessary; and

The FY21 requested FTE are required to meet caseload/workload growth, improve operating practices or implement new statutory requirements.

c. Describe the evaluation process you used to determine the number of FTE requested.

Each Decision Item with FTE requested includes a detailed justification of the FTE need.

13 Please describe the impact of Colorado's low unemployment rate on the Department's efforts to recruit and retain employees.

Response: The unemployment rate in Colorado continues to have a specific impact on our recruitment and retention efforts for our specialized/niche positions. The unemployment rate sits around 2.7% (Sept 2019).

A study just completed by Bloomberg and Workday finds that college graduates are not bringing enough technical or soft skills to the job market requiring employers to build soft skills training programs and mentorships in order to remedy the lack of skill. While there are a lot of jobs open, we are seeing an increasingly wide gap between the jobs being created and the skills and experiences in the workforce to fill them. For Colorado Judicial this means that while we may be receiving enough applications for some roles, we are not seeing the quality we require for our professional standards. Specifically, for our IT positions we are seeing record lows in terms of applicants. For several positions we have only had 4 individuals apply even after posting the position multiple times and casting a wider net. These individuals are not adequately meeting the minimum qualifications for the position or who do not exhibit the qualifications needed to be successful in our organization. We are having to post position multiple times in order for find any viable applicants which then creates strain and production issues for our current employees who then begin to consider other opportunities where the work load may be more manageable. This cycle continues to throughout our recruitment/retention efforts.

Ex. Network Security Engineer was posted in September for 2 weeks and only received 7 applications of which no individuals were selected. The position was posted again for two weeks at the end of October with only 5 applicants of which once again none have been selected due to the lack of qualified applicants. We will now post a third time for the position.

We are also seeing many individuals leave our organization due to being offered higher salaries at other companies in the private sector. This has had an impact on our financial services, human resources, and information technology positions. The high cost of living in Colorado also makes it difficult to recruit as individuals are not making enough to cover the high cost of housing and living. Our state salaries and wages are barely increasing while the cost of living is now going up by 2-2.5% per year. Inflation is here (we just don't notice it) and the gap between wages and costs is not closing. This fact makes it more difficult for our current employees to refuse a job in the private sector that is willing to offer a higher salary.

Candidates are also able to be more selective on the opportunities they are seeking, and we have seen an increase in “ghosting” where applicants are applying and/or accepting interviews/offers and never reporting for duty or responding to correspondence to move forward in the process.

14 NOTE: An example template for providing data for this question will be provided by the JBC Staff.

State revenues are projected to exceed the TABOR limit in each of the next two fiscal years. Thus, increases in cash fund revenues that are subject to TABOR will require an equivalent amount of General Fund for taxpayer refunds. Please:

- a. List each source of non-tax revenue (e.g., fees, fines, parking revenue, etc.) collected by your department that is subject to TABOR and that exceeds $100,000 annually. Describe the nature of the revenue, what drives the amount collected each year, and the associated fund where these revenues are deposited.

Most of the cash revenues collected by the Judicial Department are court fines, fees and costs. The attachment at the end of this document provides a 3-year history of collections of these various sources. The notable exception to court fines and fee revenue for the Judicial Department is e-filing fees and probation supervision fees. E-filing fees are charged for electronic filings, network access, searches of court databases, etc. while the probationers pay a $50/month supervision fee. The revenues of the two funds are listed below:

Revenues
	FY18	FY19	Projected FY20
Judicial IT CF	16,047,415	17,149,752	17,749,993
Offender Treatment and Services CF	18,635,772	19,062,533	18,586,601

- b. For each source, list actual revenues collected in FY 2018-19, and projected revenue collections for FY 2019-20 and FY 2020-21.

It is difficult to predict revenue growth as they are fines and fees associated with court proceedings. In the last three fiscal years growth has averaged approximately 2%. Using a 2% growth factor would result in an aggregate revenue increase of $4.3 million in FY21.

- c. List each decision item that your department has submitted that, if approved, would increase revenues subject to TABOR collected in FY 2020-21.

None

- 15 Please describe the Department's current practice regarding employee parking and other transportation options (i.e. EcoPass). Please address the following:

- a. Does the Department have adequate parking for all employees at all locations?

No

- b. If parking is limited, how are available spaces allocated?

Most the Judicial Department employees work in county provided facilities and the individual counties determine parking policy. At the Ralph L Carr Judicial Center, parking is provided in a dedicated garage (for a monthly fee) with a wait list for those seeking a space.

- c. If free parking is not available, how is parking paid for, and who pays (employee or Department)? (e.g. stipends, subsidized parking, eco passes)

The Department does not pay for or subsidize parking. The Department does provide for Eco pass for employees of the Ralph L. Carr Judicial Center for a $15/month fee to the employees. Two Judicial Districts, Jeffco and Denver also provide Eco passes for their employees.

- d. If employees pay fees for parking, where is the revenue credited and how is it spent, and is it subject to TABOR?

The revenue from parking fees is deposited in the Judicial Center Cash Fund and is counted as Tabor revenue.

- e. Do parking and/or transportation benefits factor into Department compensation and/or retention efforts?

Yes, transportation assistance is part of the Department's compensation package.

- 16 Please identify all continuously appropriated funds within the Department's purview with a fund balance or annual revenue of $5.0 million or more. Please indicate if these funds are reflected in the FY 2019-20 Long Bill.

Attorney Regulation Cash Fund which is identified in the Long Bill as the cash fund source for the Office of Attorney Regulation.

Comm.*, Colo. Leg., December 7, 2020;

Legislative Audit Committee—December 7, 2020 Hearing:
The Colorado Office of the State Auditor and The Colorado Judicial Department’s Presentations as to 2020 OSA Performance Audit of the State Court Administrator’s Office

1 Rep. Saine

2 All right, we will start with the Judicial Department, State Court Administrator's Office performance 3 audit, November, 2020. Do I hear a motion to release? So moved. Do I hear a second? Thank you. Any 4 opposed? All right, seeing none. I believe we have the Honorable Nathan B. Coats, Chief Justice of the 5 Colorado Supreme Court, with us. Sir, would you like to introduce yourself and your staff? Want to 6 push the green button?

7
8 Chief Justice Coats

9 I see a green light come on. That's probably a good sign. Thank you, Madam Chair, I'm Ben Coats. I am 10 the Chief Justice of the Colorado Supreme Court, right now. With me is Steven Vasconcellos, who is the 11 State Court Administrator. I wonder if this would be an appropriate time for me to just make a few 12 remarks with regard to perspective.

13

15 For you, Chief Justice. Please go ahead.

17 Chief Justice Coats

18 Thank you, Madam Chair. I've been the Chief Justice for just about two and a half years now. I'm going 19 to leave my glasses off so I can have some idea that you all are up there for the moment. About two and 20 a half years. I don't think anybody would suggest that those two and a half years have been uneventful. I 21 just thought I'd mention I've come up, I bump up against the magic constitutional age of 72 right at the 22 beginning of the year. So, I'll also be retiring at the end of this month.

23
24 But let me just say a quick word or two to give some perspective, I think, to this performance report and 25 evaluation. Let me say, virtually from the moment that I became Chief Justice two and a half years ago, 26 it's been apparent that there were things that probably needed to change in terms of the structure of the 27 Department. And this is, this was nothing really new. But, over my time as Chief Justice, this became 28 more and more apparent. We'll answer your questions as best we can with regard to specifics. So, I won't 29 try to get into any lengthy explanation there. But let me just point out that with the former Court 30 Administrator's rather abrupt departure a year ago, last summer, the Department, really the complexion 31 of the Department has completely changed. And I will just say, so that you understand, for purposes of 32 Mr. Vasconcellos being here. Since I've been Chief, the Court Administrator is gone. The number two in 33 the Department that we called Chief of Staff is gone. The Director of the Financial Services Division,

1 which is one of the six major Divisions, is gone. The Controller for the Department is gone. The 2 Director for the Human Resources Department is gone. The Deputy Director for the Human Resources 3 Department, who took his place, is gone. I'll stop there. But enough to give you an idea that the 4 organization has completely changed. When things change that abruptly. And it started in the summer, a 5 year back, the Court appointed Mr. Vasconcellos to be the acting Court Administrator. And, I have to 6 say, for some time period he and I, I think, acted largely as co-Court Administrators trying to keep 7 things on track for the Department. I think he's done an excellent job at that. And as a matter of fact, 8 such a good job that, after a lengthy process and national search, the Court appointed him to be the 9 permanent Court Administrator. The one last thing I would say, just to give you some idea about the 10 Court. This model, out of necessity of me acting as Chief Justice in such close coordination with the 11 Court Administrator, I think is not only undesirable, but it's unsustainable. In this crisis situation, like 12 maybe I shouldn't use the word crisis. But in this kind of situation, we felt it was very important. I think 13 it's been important to keep things on track and to make changes in the Department, I would say, though, 14 with regard to the Court as well. I think the philosophy of the Court in having a more immediate 15 oversight of the operations of the Court Administrator's Office has changed over this time period. Now, 16 each of my colleagues on the Court has a liaison or partially supervisory role over different aspects of 17 the Court Administrator's Office. That, unlike my current role. That I don't expect to change. And I think 18 will continue with that closer supervision. But, thank you very much. I appreciate the time to make a 19 few remarks.

20

21 Rep. Saine

22 Thank you, Your Honor. All right. Ms. Colin, if you would introduce yourself and staff.

23

24 Michelle Colin

25 Thank you, Madam Chair. Michelle Colin, Deputy State Auditor. And I would just make a couple of 26 comments, and then I'll introduce my team, as well. So, just to recognize. So, we'll be presenting the 27 results of this audit of the State Court Administrator's Office. Although we have conducted several 28 audits at the Judicial Department in recent years, we had not ever focused specifically on the State Court
29 Administrator's Office. And, so, that's what this one did. We specifically looked at the SCAO's 30 operations and specifically its controls over its Human Resources and Financial Services functions. And, 31 so, this morning, we'll be discussing our findings and recommendations in the report. And we have 32 issues and findings related to both of these areas. They are six total. And, so, the audit team next to me.
33 To my right, is Vicki Heller, she was the audit manager. And then next to Vicki is Carrie Ann Ryan, 34 who's one of our staff auditors. Sitting behind us is Derrick Johnson, the team leader. And then we also 35 had Tessa Mauer and Lily Wellborn, who also worked on the audit. And then finally, I would just like to 36 thank the Chief Justice and the State Court Administrator and all of their staff for their assistance 37 throughout the audit. Thank you.

38

39 Rep. Saine

40 Thank you, Mr. Vasconcellos, would you like to introduce yourself and any other presenters?

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. My name is Stephen Vasconcellos. I am the State Court Administrator for the 3 State of Colorado. I'm the only other presenter this morning.

4

5 Rep. Saine

6 Thank you. All right. I think we're going to move back to staff presentations, and we're going to start 7 with Ms. Heller with the chapter one overview.

8

9 Vickie Heller

10 Thank you, Madam Chair. Our overview chapter starts on page 3 just after the report highlights page.
11 The SCAO provides centralized administrative support to all of the judges and the staff who work for 12 the Colorado courts within the Judicial Department. The office is overseen by the State Court 13 Administrator who is appointed by the Colorado Supreme Court. The current State Court Administrator 14 here with us today was appointed just over a year ago, in October, 2019. Under his oversight, about 260 15 employees provide the types of services that we lay out in the report, starting on page 4. For example, 16 the SCAO provides financial management services for the Department, including developing budgets, 17 overseeing procurement, and dispersing funds appropriated by the General Assembly. They also manage 18 the Department's personnel system. And this includes overseeing employee time keeping and leave, and 19 facilitating any disciplinary actions, employee settlements, and FMLA requests. They also provide IT 20 support and security for the Department and other administrative and logistical tasks for the day-to-day 21 operations of the courts. Additionally, they help the Colorado Supreme Court implement rules in all of 22 these areas, and they're responsible for providing guidance and direction on the rules. For example, by 23 developing written policies and procedures. On page 6, the table there shows the SCAO's administrative 24 expenditures over the last few years. And these have been about $45 million annually for its own 25 Office's operations, as well as roughly $100 million for Department-wide administration. The rest of this 26 Chapter 1 gives a summary of the audit work that we did. The team will go into this when they talk 27 about each finding. And so, Madam Chair, I can pause for questions or move to Ms Ryan for Chapter 2.

28

29 Rep. Saine

30 Any questions from the committee for Ms. Heller? Senator Fields.

31

32 Sen. Fields

33 Thank you. Madam Chair. I was just wondering if all the presenters, if they could make sure the mic is 34 closer. From over here and this end, it was just hard to kind of understand what you just said. So, if you 35 guys could help me out a little bit, that would be very helpful.

36

37 Rep. Saine

38 All right. Any further questions or requests? Right, seeing none. We will move on to Ms. Ryan with 39 Recommendation number 1.

1 Carrie Ann Ryan

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to present the first three findings in Chapter 2, which begins on 3 page 11. As mentioned by Ms. Heller, the State Court Administrator's Office, or SCAO, provides all 4 human resources, financial, and information technology services the Judicial Department staff need.
5 This is overseen by the State Court Administrator. Our audit looked at SCAO's oversight and 6 accountability of human resources and financial services functions.

8 Our first finding on voluntary separation incentives begins on page 13. A voluntary separation incentive, 9 or VSI for short, is generally a lump sum payment offered to staff to incentivize leaving in times of 10 budget shortfalls and reorganizations. We found that one of the ways that employees left SCAO during a 11 review period was through these voluntary separation incentives. These were initiated by the former 12 State Court Administrator as a part of a Department reorganization. Instead of lump sum payments, the 13 former State Court Administrator offered incentives in the form of paid administrative leave to all staff 14 in fiscal year 2019. Turning to page 14, a lump sum payment provides an employee with a one-time total 15 payment upon leaving employment. However, using administrative leave, the employees continue to 16 occupy their position and receive compensation, benefits, and accrue paid time off, but do not work.
17 Turning to exhibit 2.1 on page 14, you can see that the months of paid administrative leave were 18 awarded based on years of employment with SCAO, as shown in the left most column. Where they were 19 awarded 1 to 4 months of paid administrative leave, shown in the middle column. And the right most 20 column shows the number of participating employees in each category. So, for example, if an employee 21 were with SCAO for 10 years, their VSI contract would provide three months of paid administrative 22 leave. Meaning, that if they agreed to start leaving July, they would continue to be paid, receive benefits, 23 including accruing paid time off. But, again, would not be working. Their official termination date 24 would not be until October. At which point, they would no longer be employed and any leave accrued, 25 including that while on paid administrative leave, would be paid out. At the bottom of page 14 and on to 26 page 15, the State Court Administrator, the employee's Division Director, the Director of Human 27 Resources, and the Chief Financial Officer, had to approve the VSI contracts. Otherwise, SCAO had no 28 rules, policies, or procedures for the VSIs. Because of this, turning to the bottom of page 15 and onto the 29 top of page 16, we looked at State Personnel Rules for VSIs for Executive Branch employees as a point 30 of comparison.

32 Towards the middle of page 16. Overall, we found that the VSI contracts did not receive the required 33 approvals. And the positions approved for the incentives were not consistent with the reorganization 34 plan. First, none of the nine VSI contracts executed by the former State Court Administrator received the 35 required approvals. Instead, only the former State Court Administrator approved the contracts. The 36 contracts were also finalized prior to the Chief Justice's approval of the incentives.

38 Next, turning to page 17, the positions that were supposed to be eliminated by the VSIs and the 39 reorganization plan were not the positions targeted to participate. The former State Court Administrator 40 allowed all classified, certified employees to apply. 10 employees applied for the incentives, and all 10

1 applicants were approved for participation. Even if the positions did not fit into the plan. The 2 reorganization didn't end up happening, but all 10 VSI contracts were already executed prior to that 3 decision. Then, the contracts did not provide any dollar amount for what would be paid to separating 4 staff. Instead, only stating the months of administrative leave. SCAO confirmed that they did not 5 calculate the total cost of the incentives prior to execution of the VSI contracts.

6
7 Turning to page 18, Judicial Personnel Rules do not limit the payout amount that staff can be offered.
8 The Colorado statute requires all employees are treated in a generally similar manner. And Judicial is 9 supposed to take into account compensation and leave plans of the Executive Branch. Because of this, 10 we compared judicial VSIs to the Executive Branch rules. The State Personnel Rules for the Executive 11 Branch prohibit incentives in any form in excess of 18-weeks worth of an employee's salary. As 12 mentioned earlier, by using paid administrative leave for incentives, instead of a lump sum payment, 13 SCAO was still responsible for contributing to benefits such as retirement and health insurance. In 14 Exhibit 2.2 at the top of page 19, we showed the benefits available to employees and their associated 15 costs to the State. SCAO also allowed paid time off to be accrued during each employee's period of paid 16 administrative leave. And employees were paid out for any paid time off accrued during this time. So, 17 turning to page 20, we compared how much SCAO paid out through administrative leave versus the 18 maximum amount that would have been allowed by the Executive Branch. In Exhibit 2.3, for each of the 19 10 employees participating in the VSIs, we compared the salary based incentives, leave accrual, and 20 benefits paid with the SCAO VSIs versus the maximum that the Executive Branch would have allowed.
21 At the bottom of the right most columns, we showed that SCAO paid out over $518,000 where the 22 Executive Branch maximum possible payout would have been just over $340,000.

23
24 Turning to page 21 we discussed why these problems happened. Ultimately, SCAO has not established 25 rules, policies, or procedures for the voluntary separation incentives. Because of this, they entered into 26 the separation agreements without the required approvals, or even the SCAO legal team reviewing the 27 contracts before they were executed.

28
29 Then, turning to page 22, they also did not consider rules established for the Executive Branch's VSIs.
30 As a result, in the middle of page 22, the SCAO VSI costs were over 50% higher than the maximum that 31 would have been offered by the Executive Branch. Also, only 3 of the 10 staff positions that received 32 VSIs were eliminated. Because the employees who took the incentives were not targeted with the SCAO 33 reorg in mind, it is unclear whether any of the $518,000 were spent appropriately or in the best interests 34 of the State.

36 And, turning to page 23, while one of SCAO's goals is to cultivate public trust and confidence through 37 thoughtful stewardship of public resources. It appears that the interest of the State may not have been 38 protected and sets a tone in culture that has disregard for ensuring State funds are spent transparently 39 and with integrity.

1 So, on page 24 we recommend that SCAO specifies who approves voluntary separation incentives prior 2 to offering them and who must sign the agreements prior to execution. That they ensure that separation 3 incentives are only executed with employees whose separation furthers the goals of reorganization, 4 consider the types of incentives offered in the Executive Branch, and specifies the maximum amount 5 that can be paid out. Thank you, Madam Chair.

6
7 Rep. Saine

8 Ms. Ryan, I'm gonna move on to the response from the State Court Administrator's Office before we 9 take questions from the committee. So, Mr. Vasconcellos, if you would please proceed.

10
11 Steven Vasconcellos

12 Thank you, Madam Chair. We agree with all three components, A, B and C, of the recommendations 13 from the Office of the State Auditor. And you'll note throughout our responses, there's a significant 14 amount of work that has either already been done in changing our rules and additional work to come 15 between now and the summer and fall of 21 to improve our internal control structure through updating 16 our Personnel and Fiscal Rules. But specific to this Recommendation 1, we do agree with all three sub 17 parts. Specifically, we will be updating, working with the Supreme Court to update our Personnel Rules 18 about Voluntary Separation Incentives. I should note parenthetically that, when we change these rules, 19 these are not rules that only apply to the State Court Administrator's Office. These rules apply to the 20 entire Judicial Department. Which is to say the trial courts, the appellate courts, probation and the State 21 Court Administrator's Office. But we will be updating our Personnel Rules with regard to VSIs to 22 specifically identify what the required approvals are for offering incentives, as well as the necessary 23 approvals for individual separation agreements. Additionally, rule changes to ensure that separation 24 incentives are executed in a manner that could be tied to the goals of the Department. That they're not 25 just unclear or opaque why someone was offered a separation incentive. And, finally, we will, the Chief 26 Justice and I both believe that we, over time, have not looked to our peer branches of government as we 27 should. And as statute guides us to look to the Executive Branch, to look to the Legislative Branch for 28 guidance when forming our own Personnel Rules, when forming our Fiscal Rules. And all this work is 29 done through that lens as we move forward. And rule changes will also detail the types of incentives that 30 can be offered, and will require that agreements include total or maximum amounts that are associated 31 with individual incentives.

32
33 Rep. Saine

34 Thank you. Now, questions from the committee. Senator Lundeen.

35
36 Sen. Lundeen

37 Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the audit, as always. Appreciate the professionalism 38 of the Auditor's Department and the response of the State Court Administrator's Office, as well. Thank 39 you for the agreement. My question is this. There's been a time in between the production of the audit 40 which identified an overpayment, essentially, just to put it in very blunt terms. Since the audit was 1 performed and today, there's been a time. And there's a time from today until new rules will be in place.

2 My question is, what happens with regard to severances in the evaluation of those severances in the 3 interim?

4

5 Rep. Saine

6 Mr. Vasconcellos.

7

8 Steven Vasconcellos

9 Thank you, Madam Chair. Senator Lundeen, I would note that the use of voluntary separation 10 incentives, historically, has been extraordinarily rare. Through our research. The last time they were 11 offered out of our Office was about 12 years ago. And prior to that, we cannot find an instance when 12 they're used. So, I don't see. My crystal ball is probably no better than anybody else's. However, they're 13 so rare in our history that I don't foresee the likelihood of separation incentives coming up again 14 between now and when the rules are fully updated is very low.

15

17 Senator Lundeen.

18

19 Sen. Lundeen

20 The follow up question is simply, Should one occur, what would be the process for managing it?

21

22 Rep. Saine

23 Mr. Vasconcellos.

24

25 Steven Vasconcellos

26 Well, I'm sorry, thank you, Madam Chair. Senator Lundeen, I think at the barest minimum, we need to 27 follow the rules that are already in place. Which you will note, in the report, did not happen. And I think 28 there's some easy logical steps to go beyond that, even in advance. And it's the items we already 29 discussed through the findings in the audit and where we foresee the rules heading. That's having legal 30 review, financial review, proper checks and balances along the way. So that, as a decision maker, you're 31 loaded with the complete and proper information. How are these incentives tied to the goals and needs 32 of the organization. All of those things, I think, can be attended to, even in advance of rule changes.

34 Sen. Lundeen

35 Thank you

36

38 Senator Fields.

39

40

1 Sen. Fields

2 Thank you Madam Chair. And thank you all for your presentation today. So, when I'm looking at the 3 report, I'm looking at page 20 and 21 all the way through 23. I'm just trying to understand the culture 4 within the organization. What were the guiding principles that you used as it relates to determining who 5 gets what? Because when I look at the numbers here, it looks like it varied a lot. So, I'm wondering how 6 some of these decisions were made. What were the inequities or disparities that exist? I don't know if the 7 10 employees that you have listed there. How many were men, women, people of color? And I'm not 8 quite sure how these decisions were made, because some people got more, some people got less, and 9 looks like most of them got more than what they should have received. Is what I'm kind of picking up.
10 So, if you could highlight for me. What were the guiding principles for them to award this benefit?
11 Because it's like unclear here. Seems like there wasn't much standards involved.

12

14 Mr. Vasconcellos.

15

16 Steven Vasconcellos

17 Thank you, Madam Chair. Senator Fields, thank you for your question. I think the biggest driver in 18 differences in the amounts are linked to the salary levels that the employees were at at the time of the 19 incentive. So, if you look at, for example, the salary component. Which is the largest component of the 20 incentive. That's keyed to the amount that the employee was making, and that probably drives the 21 biggest driver. And that also sort of spins out across leave accrual, as well. I think that's probably the 22 single biggest driver, in terms of differences between the amounts that individual employees received. In 23 terms of what the guiding principles were for the previous State Court Administrator in their decision 24 making, I can't really speak to that. I do not know what they were.

25

26 Rep. Saine

27 Representative Bockenfeld.

28

29 Rep. Bockenfeld

30 Thank you, Madam Chair. Am I to assume that, if you received a voluntary separation incentive, you 31 also signed a waiver of any claims that you may have against the State? Or, is that an accurate 32 statement?

33

34 Rep. Saine

35 Mr. Vasconcellos.

36

37 Steven Vasconcellos

38 Madam Chair. Representative Bockenfeld, that's correct.

39

1 Rep. Bockenfeld

2 Thank you.

3

5 All right. Any further questions from the committee on this recommendation? Mr. Vasconcellos, I have 6 a quick one. I thought I heard the number 3 earlier from Ms. Ryan, and there is a list of 6 from this Chief 7 Justice that have left employ with the State Court Administrator. Just a question as to why the number 3.
8 Which would make me ask a question. The other folks that received the VSI, are they still employed 9 with State Court? And what was the rationale there?

10

11 Steven Vasconcellos

12 Thank you, Madam Chair. None of the employees who received a voluntary separation incentive are 13 employed any longer with the State Judicial Department. In terms of why we eliminated number 3. This 14 happened in the backdrop of a number of other things, including the rather unprecedented budgetary 15 downturn in the State of Colorado, and budget cuts. And positions that were eliminated were in line with 16 what I felt strategically we needed to eliminate moving forward to help meet our cut.

17

18 Rep. Saine

19 Thank you very much. Representative Bockenfeld.

20

21 Rep. Bockenfeld

22 Thank you, Madam Chair. My last question was about the waiver of any claims. Do these waivers also 23 include any non-disclosure agreements?

24

25 Rep. Saine

26 Mr. Vasconcellos.

27

28 Steven Vasconcellos

29 Thank you, Madam Chair. Not that I'm aware of, Representative Bockenfeld.

30

31 Rep. Saine

32 Any further questions on Recommendation 1 to the Department. All right, seeing none.

33

34 Chief Justice Coats

35 Madam Chair, could I? Could I make one remark?

36

38 Yes, your Honor.

39

1 Chief Justice Coats

2 Representative Bockenfeld, just to make clear. And I would agree, I think, from what I understand with 3 Mr. Vasconcellos. But to the extent that a VSI, and I think one that had been identified here was made in 4 conjunction with a separate separation agreement. That one, I'm sure, given the practice at the time, did 5 involve non-disclosure. And it involved other things, involving the separation. It was not a typical VSI.
6 But I think one of the ones they talk about may have fallen into that category.

7

8 Rep. Saine

9 Mr. Vasconcellos.

10

11 Steven Vasconcellos

12 Thank you, Madam Chair, that's correct. I apologize. One of them, one of the VSIs, was associated with 13 a separate separation agreement. And that one does have non-disclosure provisions.

14

15 Rep. Saine

16 Further questions from the committee? Seeing none. Ms. Ryan, would you please proceed?

17

18 Carrie Ann Ryan

19 Thank you, Madam Chair. Our next finding on paid administrative leave begins on page 26. As a bit of 20 background, there are different types of leave available to Judicial employees, such as paid time off, 21 which can be used for personal reasons, and as accrued monthly. Extended sick leave, which can be used 22 for certified medical events, also accrued monthly. And paid administrative leave, or admin leave, for 23 short, which can be granted on an ad hoc basis. With Judicial Personnel Rules, admin leave can be 24 granted for reasons determined to be for the good of the State by administrative authorities. At SCAO, 25 administrative authorities can be the State Court Administrator, Division Directors, Human Resources 26 Staff, or other supervisors. Admin leave can also be granted when an employee is being investigated for 27 wrongdoing or poor job performance, and it is in the SCAOs best interest not to have the employee in 28 the office while the investigation takes place.

30 Turning to page 27, during fiscal years 2017 through 2020, SCAO's staff recorded over 25,000 hours of 31 admin leave. This included nearly 14,000 hours of discretionary or ad hoc leave. Over 3,000 hours were 32 approved for disciplinary investigations. Over 2,600 hours were approved for settlement agreements.
33 And the remaining 6,000 hours were approved for voluntary separations discussed in the first finding.
34 Towards the middle of page 27, we looked at all records related to the over 19,000 hours of admin leave 35 granted through discretion, disciplinary investigations, and settlement agreements.

37 We compared SCAO's use of leave with Judicial Personnel Rules. And, also, similarly to Finding 38 number 1, we compared SCAO's practices to State Personnel Rules for the Executive Branch. First, we 39 discussed the discretionary uses of admin leave, starting at the bottom of page 27. Of the nearly 14,000 40 hours of discretionary admin leave, we found that 3,600 hours did not have any reason or documentation

1 for the leave granted. However, SCAO said that they were allowed because of the broad discretion given 2 to administrative authorities to grant leave for reasons they determined to be for the good of the State.
3 On page 28, for the remaining 10,100 hours of admin leave that did have a reason noted, we found 4 instances where it was unclear why the leave was for the good of the State. A couple of examples were 5 pre-operative appointment or family reunion, which employees could have used PTO for. Then towards 6 the bottom of page 28, we also found that hours of admin leave were approved disproportionately for 7 some employees.

8 9 Because SCAO does not have limits on the amount of admin leave that can be granted to employees, we 10 did a statistical analysis to calculate the normal range of the hours awarded each year, instead, to 11 identify any uses above the norm. We found, depending on the year, between 8 and 48 hours of admin 12 leave would be considered normal for all staff for things like weather closures and extra holidays.
13 Turning to page 29, we found 102 instances where staff were granted over 1,000 hours above the norm 14 during our review period. In Exhibit 2.4, we show fiscal year, 2017 in the left most section, 2018 and 15 2019 in the middle and 2020 in the right-most section. Each of the dots represents employees and their 16 hours of leave about the norm. As you can see, in fiscal year 2017 and 2018 two employees got over 150 17 hours above the norm, each. And SCAO could not provide information for why these employees were 18 granted this amount of leave. Turning to the second paragraph on page 30, it would be reasonable for 19 some employees to receive more hours than others due to performance awards or volunteer work.
20 However, it is not apparent that the hours granted and all of the situations we identified would be for the 21 good of the State. Also, regarding discretionary leave, we identified instances where employees were 22 granted 9 or 10 hours of leave for one day, as opposed to the standard eight hours. And turning to page 23 31, instances where employees were allowed to use admin leave in conjunction with work time to accrue 24 compensatory time off, also known as comp time or time and a half.

26 For the next section, we discuss admin leave used for disciplinary investigations. Towards the middle of 27 page 31, we identified 9 cases where over 3,000 hours of admin leave was granted for employee 28 disciplinary investigations. While judicial personnel rules allow for employees to be put on admin leave 29 for investigations, SCAO could not provide documentation showing the investigations for two staff 30 members actually took place. Additionally, as with discretionary leave, Judicial Personnel Rules do not 31 provide any limitations or require monitoring of the time it takes to complete an investigation. As shown 32 in Exhibit 2.5 on page 32, admin leave for investigations lasted for as many as 60 days, shown in the top 33 right row. In our final section, we discussed admin leave use for settlement agreements. At the end of 34 page 32 and on to page 33, we found that SCAO also granted two staff over 2,600 hours, or 331 days, of 35 admin lead for settlement agreements. Settlement agreements can result from staff appealing 36 disciplinary action. Here, similarly to the employees with the voluntary separation incentives discussed 37 in the first finding, employees continued to occupy their positions and received all benefits, but did not 38 work in the months leading up to their separation from employment. According to staff, it is common 39 practice for SCAO to use leave for this purpose. Then, towards the middle of page 33, we discussed why 40 these problems happened. Overall, we found it was because Judicial Personnel Rules provide limited

1 guidance on the appropriate uses of admin leave, summarized in four areas. First, according to SCAO, 2 the Rules provide broad discretion to administrative authorities to grant leave for reasons, any reason 3 they determined to be for the good of the State. Second, the rules also do not require staff to provide a 4 reason for admin leave in the Judicial time reporting system. This is why, for example, the two 5 employees were granted 152 hours each, and the reason for why is unknown. Turning to page 34. The 6 third reason these problems happened is because the SCAO does not have policies or procedures for 7 monitoring admin leave. Reports are not run to determine if employees are being granted leave 8 appropriately, and supervisors are not required to review admin leave. If employees request admin leave 9 through the Judicial time reporting system and it is not approved before payroll posting, the leave will 10 still be paid out, even though it has not been approved. We found 119 individuals during our testing 11 period were paid more than 6,500 hours of admin leave this way. Finally, at the bottom of page 34 and 12 on to page 35 there are no limits established on how much leave can be granted for any reason. Because 13 of this, as with the last finding, we compared SCAO's uses of admin leave to the Executive Branch 14 Rules. The State Personnel Rules for the Executive Branch include specific requirements on the use of 15 admin leave. In Exhibit 2.7 on page 36, we show comparison of the Rules for admin leave for the 16 Executive Branch versus SCAO. There's a lot of information here, so I won't go into a lot of detail. But 17 contrary to SCAO, the Executive Branch, whose rules are summarized in the right most column, 18 requires agencies track detailed reasons for their admin leave. [The Executive Branch Rule] only allows 19 eight hours for holidays and does not allow admin leave to be used to earn comp time. On page 37 and 20 38, overall, we found that SCAO does not demonstrate good stewardship of State funds when granting 21 admin leave. SCAO's uses of admin leave cost the State more than $476,000 during our review period.
22 The discretionary leave, without any stated reason, accounted for over $156,000. Disciplinary 23 investigations accounted for nearly $159,000. And settlements cost over $160,000 in salaries, alone, not 24 counting the benefits and PTO accrued during this time. Which were not shown in the total cost of the 25 settlements. Because of this, turning to page 39, we recommend that the SCAO should define the 26 appropriate uses of admin leave, including whether or not leave should be used in settlements. Also, 27 require that employees record the reason for their admin leave, have oversight of the use of admin leave, 28 and establish limits on the amount of leave that can be used for certain purposes. Thank you, Madam 29 Chair.

30
31 Rep. Saine
32 Thank you. Ms, Ryan. Response from the SCAO, Mr. Vasconcellos.

33
34 Steven Vasconcellos
35 Thank you, Madam Chair. As with the previous set of recommendations, we are in agreement with the 36 recommendations of the Office of the State Auditor on all of the components in recommendation 2.
37 Specifically, we will be working, our Office will be working with the Colorado Supreme Court to 38 develop and implement rules within our personnel system identifying the proper uses of administrative 39 leave. Including their use in settlement agreements. As you can tell from the chart identified on page 36, 40 we have a dramatically different structure, currently, than the Executive Branch. And it is my intent to 1 look toward the Executive Branch structure in forming our updated rules in this area. Next, under 2(b), 2 we currently use a leave tracking system that was homegrown and developed over 20 years ago. We are 3 in the process actively of stepping away from that and moving to the Kronos system, which is in wide 4 use in the Executive Branch of government by many state agencies. And that will also include features 5 that will require reasons given for the use of different types of leave, including administrative leave. To 6 Part C, the new time tracking system will also allow us to run reports and do monitoring, oversight, look 7 at patterns of usage. Try to identify problems before they happen, rather than after the fact. And, finally, 8 in Section D, we will work with the Supreme Court to develop rules, including limits on the amount of 9 administrative leave that can be used for certain purposes. As I mentioned previously, we'll be looking 10 to the Executive Branch structure as our jumping off point.

11

12 Rep. Saine

13 Thank you, Mr. Vasconcellos. Any questions from the committee on this recommendation? Senator 14 Fields.

16 Sen. Fields

17 There was a ballot measure that was just passed by the people of the State of Colorado, as relates to 18 granting family medical leave. But Bill Clinton did it in 1993. And there's already federal criteria that's 19 already been established in reference to how to manage it, who's eligible, and the requirements for 20 tracking it. And, when I think about these recommendations. When we have mothers and fathers and 21 people who are trying to take care of whatever they need for family leave. We have, what I see is really 22 troubling to me, a sense of neglect as it relates to oversight and management of this program. Which is 23 not new. So, I just need to kind of understand why we didn't have processes in place already. And, then, 24 when I look at the recommendation that says July 2021. That's 7 months from now. Why is it going to 25 take so long to implement some of these procedures when these procedures should already be in place? I 26 mean, you could probably pull something off of a shelf. Managing leave is something that private 27 sectors and government have been doing for a very long time. Explain to me why it's going to take July 28 2021 to implement these procedures. And why can't we accelerate it earlier to ensure that we're in full 29 compliance with the Family Medical Leave Act and making sure that we're being good stewards of our 30 funds. As relates, for people, you know, maybe. I don't know. Someone's not watching. Someone's not 31 being mindful of what needs to be done to have the right administrative oversight on some of these 32 areas. So, I know we've been fighting really hard for family leave. And here we have a government that.
33 I don't know. I'm just not. I'm concerned about the leadership.

35 Rep. Saine

36 Senator Fields, you're ahead of the curve, as always. We're getting to that presentation, next. Do you 37 want to hold your question, or would you like Mr. Vasconcellos to answer it now? Senator Fields, would 38 you like Mr. Vasconcellos to answer the question now?

1 Sen. Fields

2 However you want, I'm having hard time hearing, so.

3

4 Rep. Saine

5 I understand. Mr. Vasconcellos, would you like to answer Senator Fields's question?

6

7 Steven Vasconcellos

8 Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd be happy to. Thank you for your question, Senator Fields. And your 9 concerns. I think, first, by way of background, our system historically has demonstrated a level of 10 informality and lack of structure in its rules. That really isn't acceptable for a branch of government that 11 employs over 4,000 people and has a $600 million annual budget. So, I certainly am sympathetic and 12 appreciate your concerns. In terms of the timelines, there are a couple of factors. I would like this done, 13 excuse me, as soon as humanly possible. When we're looking at implementing a new IT system, like 14 Kronos, statewide for a large and complex branch of government. Unfortunately, it can't be done in a 15 month or two months. And we believe the timeline we've laid out is the soonest we can possibly get it 16 done and do it well without causing damage to Judicial Branch operations. And in terms of rule changes 17 and why the timing here? This may not be an entirely satisfactory answer. But I think the challenge has 18 been. I wish that I had the opportunity to focus solely on this. But we have other intervening events 19 outside of our control. Our office support for the trial courts and probation, Covid management 20 operations, and unprecedented budget cuts. I feel like we have three once in a career activities happening 21 all at once. And that's not boo hoo for me. That's just the way things happened. But it does complicate 22 and make timelines a little challenging, on occasion.

23

24 Rep. Saine

25 Further questions from the committee on Recommendation 2? All right, seeing none, we're going to 26 move on again to Ms. Ryan for Recommendation 3.

28 Carrie Ann Ryan

29 Thank you, Madam Chair. Our third finding on human resources records retention begins on page 41. At 30 SCAO, the Human Resources Division is responsible for retaining and securing personnel records. At 31 any organization, retaining and securing HR documents is done to protect an organization and its 32 employees. Particularly, in cases that could result in claims of wrongful termination, disgruntled 33 employees, or other litigation threats. Some of the most important records are those related to FMLA 34 and disciplinary investigations.

36 First, FMLA allows eligible employees to take up to 12 weeks of unpaid job protected leave for family 37 and medical reasons. To qualify, the employer must collect certain information, such as a medical 38 certificate, notice of eligibility, and report of injury forms for FMLA involving workers compensation.
39 Between fiscal years 2017 through 2020, the SCAO approved 135 out of roughly 170 FMLA requests 40 from employees.

1 Next, disciplinary investigations are for employees suspected of violating rules or failing to perform job 2 duties. If a disciplinary investigation results in action or termination, SCAO's HR is responsible for 3 maintaining records in the employee's personnel files, in case the employee decides to appeal.
4

5 Turning to page 42 and at the top of page 43, both federal law and the Judicial Department requires the 6 retention of personnel and employment records, such as FMLA files and termination and separation 7 documents. Towards the middle of page 43, we first discuss issues identified with FMLA cases. In our 8 review of FMLA cases, we found that 10 of the 135 approved cases were missing at least one of the 9 required forms, and SCAO could not demonstrate that employees were eligible for the amount of FMLA 10 approved. As shown in Exhibit 2.8 on page 44, the left most column lists required FMLA documents.
11 The largest middle column explains the purpose of the documents. And the right most column shows 12 how many cases were missing each one. So, for example, 4 cases were missing medical certificates and 13 6 cases were missing notices of eligibility, in addition to other required documents. Turning to page 45.
14 These employees received more than 1,800 hours of leave, 935 of which were paid through extended 15 sick leave at a cost of over $40,000 to the State. Extended sick leave, unlike paid time off, can only be 16 used for FMLA or medically certified events. If these employees were not actually eligible for FMLA, 17 then paid time off, also referred to as PTO, should have been used. Unlike extended sick leave, unused 18 accrued PTO gets paid out if an employee leaves employment. So, SCAO may be providing an incentive 19 for employees to request FMLA more frequently to avoid using PTO.

21 Next, towards the middle of page 45, we discuss issues identified with disciplinary investigations. Of the 22 11 disciplinary investigations during our review period, two cases did not have documentation showing 23 that an investigation actually took place. Such as allegations, complaints, outcomes, or actions taken.
24 SCAO stated that these two employees are placed on more than 800 hours of paid administrative leave 25 for investigations, but the Human Resources staff conducting the investigations are no longer employed 26 there, and the information was not stored on a shared file. And, so, any record of what happened is gone.
27 When employers take disciplinary action against an employee, the employer can be subject to claims of 28 discrimination and retaliation. If SCAO does not have documents for all disciplinary cases, they are at 29 risk of not being able to defend their actions. On page 46, employers are also responsible for securing 30 and retaining HR documents. Failing to do so can result in charges filed against employers. Because 31 SCAO does not know what happened to the FMLA and disciplinary investigation documents, it cannot 32 show that these documents were properly destroyed or secured, and could be at risk of these types of 33 claims. Towards the middle of page 46 and on to page 47, these issues happen because SCAO policies 34 and procedures do not require staff to maintain human resources information in a central, secure 35 location. They also don't have a contingency plan for retaining information and unexpected staffing 36 changes. Nor does internal audit review personnel files for complete information. For example, when 37 staff left SCAO during our audit, other staff realized that FMLA documents were missing from the 38 shared drive and they could not recover them. Then two employees [(Mindy Masias and Eric Brown)] 39 that left had been using personal Apple accounts rather than an SCAO account to store documents that 40 also could not be recovered.

1 So, on page 48, we recommend that SCAO ensure it properly secures and documents human resources 2 information by establishing policies and procedures that require all human resources documents are 3 stored in a secure shared file and train staff on these policies. Also, develop a contingency plan for when 4 staff leave and implement a review process for personnel files. Thank you, Madam Chair.
5

6 Rep. Saine

7 Thank you. Ms. Ryan. Response from SCAO, Mr. Vasconcellos.
8

9 Steven Vasconcellos

10 Thank you, Madam Chair, the Office of the State Court Administrator agrees with all of the 11 recommendations contained in the 3rd Recommendation. Specifically, under (a), we will implement 12 policies and procedures that require all documentation stored in a secured, shared location. And that 13 staff are trained on those policies. We will ensure that we build contingency plans to respond to 14 personnel changes so that personnel records and documentation are secure and accessible and not lost in 15 the shuffle during those changes in personnel. And, finally, that we will implement processes to ensure 16 that the required HR documentation is maintained and secured in accordance with Judicial Department 17 Policies. Additionally, we will be using our internal audit unit to conduct regular reviews of 18 documentation requirements.
19

20 Rep. Saine

21 Questions from the committee on Recommendation Number 3. Seeing none. We're going to move on 22 and change chairs with Mr. Johnson for Recommendation Number 4. Mr. Johnson, if could you 23 introduce yourself.

25 Derrick Johnson

26 Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm Derrick Johnson. I was the team lead on the audit. And our sole-source 27 finding begins on page 50. During our testing period, the SCAO entered into 10 contracts using the sole-28 source process. The sole-source process is used when an agency determines that only one vendor can 29 meet their needs and, therefore, going through the normal solicitation process isn't worthwhile. So, 30 because you're bypassing that system, safeguards are needed to make sure that the State is still receiving 31 valuable goods and that those goods or services are for the benefit of the State and the Department.
32 Some of those safeguards include drafting a sole-source justification letter for why you're entering into a 33 sole-source contract before moving forward with it. And documenting that there were negotiations of 34 prices and terms in the contracts. We compared those requirements with the documentation for all 10 35 sole-source procurements during our period. And starting on page 52, you can see the problems that we 36 identified. We did find issues with 6 of the contracts using this method worth nearly $4 million. And 37 that's about half of the total amount for all 10 contracts.
38

39 The first issue concerned the manner in which a contract [(the Masias Contract)] for a leadership 40 training program was awarded. This contract was given to a former employee who had started the

1 leadership training company while still employed with the SCAO. The employee resigned effective 2 March 19 of 2019 and on March 20 of 2019 the former Human Resources Director submitted a sole-3 source justification letter, which the former State Court Administrator signed just days later, on March 4 25. The contract was executed 11 weeks after that. Although it was subsequently canceled by the 5 direction of the Supreme Court six weeks after that point. The proximity of the dates between the 6 resignation the signing of the sole source justification letter gives the appearance of an impropriety 7 which would be a violation of the Judicial Code of Conduct that applies to all purchasing in the 8 Department.

9
10 Moving on to page 53, you'll see some of the other issues that we found. One was that the SCAO did not 11 have a copy of one of the executed contracts. There were four contracts that had deficient justifications.
12 One of those had no justification. Two of those had were lacking elements that were required by rule.
13 And, then, one of the justification letters was signed weeks after the contract was executed, even though 14 the justification is supposed to be signed before any commitments are made. Then, on the top of page 15 54, you will see that four contracts didn't have any proof that the SCAO negotiated the terms or the price
16 of the contracts. As some of these contracts had more than one issue, you'll see in the Exhibit on page 54
17 each of the contracts and the issues that we found with them. So, for instance, you can see with contract 18 E, it lacked documentation of negotiations. It was missing or had an inadequate justification, was also 19 the contract that had the appearance of impropriety.

21 On the bottom of this page and, then, moving over to 55, we report on why these problems occurred.
22 First, Judicial Fiscal Rules were insufficient and that they didn't have a requirement that there be a cool
23 down period before entering into contracts with former employees. Conversely, ethics laws that cover 24 the other Branches of government require that they don't contract with former employees for six months 25 after separation. Secondly, the SCAO lacks policies and procedures to ensure that the process is 26 followed for every sole-source. This would include reviewing the contracts by key staff, such as the 27 Legal Department or the Director of Financial Services. The Rules also don't indicate, specifically, what 28 elements are needed to justify using sole-source method or how to document the negotiation of the 29 terms. And, lastly, there was no requirement that the intent to pursue sole-source be posted on the 30 procurement web page, as another check for possible bidders. The statutes for the Executive Branch 31 require that this be done for three days. On to page 56, we note that these issues are important because 32 sole-source contracting is inherently high-risk for lessening public trust. The SCAO spent over $1 33 million on these contracts. And by not following the established rules, they are not demonstrating 34 thoughtful stewardship of public resources.

36 So, on page 57, we recommend that the SCAO establish rules, policies and procedures for the sole-37 source contracting process that prohibit former employees from contracting with the SCAO for a 38 specified period of time, establishing internal review and approval for all phases of the process, identify 39 specific information required for justification and negotiations, and publicly notifying of the intent to 40 use the sole-source process. Thank you, Madam Chair.

1 Rep. Saine

2 Response, Mr. Vasconcellos.

3

4 Steven Vasconcellos

5 Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to report that not only do we agree with the recommendations
6 noted in Section 4, but we have already implemented rule changes in every single one of the areas 7 identified in 4. Specifically, in November of this year, we updated our Fiscal Rules and procedures to 8 require a mandatory cooling off period of six months between an employee's date of separation and 9 when they can be eligible for employment with the Branch as an independent contractor. Additionally, 10 in May of this year, we revised rules that require all sole source procurements above the discretionary 11 purchasing thresholds to be coordinated by our Procurement Unit in Financial Services. That 12 Procurement Unit is required to provide an opinion on the sole-source request to me. The authority to 13 approve or deny the request rests with me. My position, the State Court Administrator, and the revised 14 rules also require that I report quarterly all sole-source procurements to the Chief Justice and the 15 Supreme Court. On Section C of the recommendations, rules were revised in May of this year that 16 outline the required information that are included in sole-source procurement requests. To support the 17 justification, the rules require that requests include a summary of information, detailing the costs of 18 using an alternate good or service or of not making the purchase at all. And a cost analysis, explaining 19 why the price offered from the vendor is fair and equitable. The rule requires the procurement unit to 20 negotiate the most favorable price terms and conditions for the sole-source procurement. I would also 21 note that the sole-source rules also now include a Code of Ethics associated with sole-source 22 procurement. And that finally, also, in May of this year, rules were updated to require the Procurement 23 Unit to publish sole-source procurements on the electronic bid system used in state government in 24 Colorado for review by the public for 14 calendar days. If there are more than one inquiry, it's no longer 25 a sole-source. It goes through a competitive bid process at that point. The rules further require, I'm sorry, 26 I actually just mentioned that. That's all, Ma'am.

27

28 Rep. Saine

29 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair,

30

31 Sen. Michaelson Jenet

32 Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for your answers, Mr. Vasconcellos. My question is, and the Chief 33 Justice alluded to this earlier, that you've had the change in staff. But what was the culture that allowed 34 for these discretions to happen? And how will you make certain that that culture does not thrive again?

35

36 Rep. Saine

37 Mr. Vasconcellos.

38

39

40

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. Representative Michaelson Jenet, thank you for your question. I think you've 3 seen pretty consistently throughout that we've had a relatively informal and, in many cases, lacking 4 internal control environment. And our rule structure has been fairly relaxed. So, there is just sort of the 5 objective work of tightening that up. But in terms of how we engage in long-term cultural change, that 6 has to start with me. I take my fiduciary responsibilities as the State Court Administrator extraordinarily 7 seriously. I've dedicated my entire adult professional career to the Colorado Judicial Department, both 8 starting in the trial courts and for the last 20 years at the State Court Administrator's Office. How I 9 behave, the things that I identify to my staff as priorities, have a tremendous impact on their behavior.
10 And, so, that has started right from the first day of, my even as an interim state court administrator, 11 talking. While there are clearly legal limits while the audit was going on about what I could talk about, 12 being as open and transparent with my staff and with key leadership constituencies around the State.
13 Chief Judges, Court Executives, Chief Probation Officers, about, This is where we're at. This is what's 14 happening. And sharing with them as much as I can appropriately along the way. You can imagine, the 15 remainder of this week, I'm going to be spending a lot of time in meetings with Chief Judges, with Court 16 Executives and with Chief Probation Officers and my own staff going through this audit in great detail 17 and answering questions and talking about the values that are important to me moving forward as State 18 Court Administrator.

19

21 Senator Rodriguez.

22

23 Sen. Rodriguez

24 Thank you, Madam Chair, I might have slipped over this, and I'm a little new to the committee. I just 25 had a question on the cooling off period. Is it a current rule? Is it the Department? Is it legislative? I'm 26 not even really sure if six months is enough of a cooling period with PTO. Somebody could leave and do 27 it quickly. And I don't know who can answer that question. I'm just curious as to where the six months 28 came from.

29

30 Rep. Saine

31 Mr. Vasconcellos.

32

33 Steven Vasconcellos

34 Thank you, Madam Chair. Senator Rodriguez, we mirrored the Executive Branch provisions with regard 35 to guidance on that. So, the Executive Branch already had a six-month cooling off period between the 36 time of separation and when somebody could be brought on as an independent contractor. And we used 37 that as our jumping off point in updating our rule.

40

1 Rep. Saine

2 All right. Further questions from the committee on this recommendation? Seeing none, Mr. Johnson, 3 would you please proceed?
4

5 Derrick Johnson

6 Thank you, Madam Chair. Our next finding is on Procurement Cards, and it starts on page 60.
7 Procurement Cards, or P-Cards, are used to make purchases that don't require a formal solicitation 8 procurement process. During our testing period, the thresholds for such purchases were $10,000 for 9 goods and $25,000 for services. The SCAO at the time had 90 cards, 67 of which were assigned to 10 individuals, 23 of which were assigned to units, such as the IT Division or the Human Resources 11 Division. The chart on page 61 shows that staff made about 10,000 purchases totaling over $3.5 million 12 using P-Cards. On page 62, you can see that we looked at the SCAO's rules for P-Card usage. But we 13 also looked at government standards for internal control, and compared those with a statistically valid 14 random sample of 100 purchases. Those purchases totaled $405,000 or 12% of the total amount spent in 15 our period using P-Cards. Looking at the bullets, you'll see we found problems with 30 purchases. This 16 included 23 purchases totaling $45,600 for which the person who made the purchase also later approved 17 it. Second, there were five purchases totaling $3,200 where there was no clear indication of the approval.
18 While the SCAO was able to direct us to where the approval was located, it was not clear that the person 19 who had signed or initialed the purchase was the budget authority, or that the signature was an indication 20 of approval. And then lastly, two purchases for $600 had no approval whatsoever. In total, using 21 statistical projections, we can say with 95% certainty that within the total population, over $1 million in 22 purchases would have this same issue, or these same issues. Continuing down page 63 and on to 64, we 23 discuss why these problems happen. Judicial Fiscal Rules state that the budget authority will approve all 24 purchases. However, there are no policies to define who should be designated as budget authorities.
25 And, therefore, you have variances across the Office of the State Court Administrator, so budget 26 authorities can be admin staff, or they can be Division Directors. And the rules also don't indicate how 27 the approval should be indicated. So then, you have initials on individual receipts, or you'll have a 28 signature on a complete P-Card statement. So, therefore, on page 65, we recommend that the SCAO 29 improve controls in this area by establishing written policies to indicate who can serve as budget 30 authorities and how approvals should be indicated. Thank you, Madam Chair.

31

32 Rep. Saine

33 Response, Mr. Vasconcellos.
34

35

36 Steven Vasconcellos

37 Thank you, Madam Chair. As with the other sections thus far, we agree with all of the recommendations 38 in Section 5 made by the Office of the State Auditor. And we have partially implemented some of our 39 improvements already. To wit, in November of this year, we updated our Fiscal Rules that require 40 administrative authorities, which is to say the Division Directors at the State Court Administrator's Office, to review, sign, and date the statement for each card holder and card custodian indicating the

1 approval of transactions. Our next step is to finish developing clear guidance regarding budget 2 management, guidance, and training, I should say, regarding budget management, including who can 3 actually serve as a budget authority.

4

6 Senator Smallwood.

7

8 Sen. Smallwood

9 Thank you, Madam Chair. My question's for the Auditor's Office. So, of the expenses that you actually 10 reviewed, were 100% of those retroactively deemed to be appropriate uses for the P-Card? Because I 11 don't see anything in here that mentions whether the expense theoretically would have been approved by 12 the budgeting authority or would not have been approved.

13

14 Rep. Saine

15 Everybody is looking at Mr. Johnson. So, Mr. Johnson.

17 Derrick Johnson

18 Thank you, Madam Chair. Senator Smallwood, if I'm understanding your question correctly. We did 19 look at whether these purchases would be appropriate, whether they would be for the benefit of the 20 SCAO or, possibly, for somebody's personal use. And we didn't conclude that any of them were outside 21 the bounds of what might be appropriate.

23 Sen. Smallwood

24 Great. Thank you very much.

25

26 Rep. Saine

27 Further questions on Recommendation Number 5 from the committee? Seeing none, we're going to 28 move on to number 6. Mr. Johnson.

30 Derrick Johnson

31 Thank you, Madam Chair. So, our final finding begins on page 66. And this finding is largely the result 32 of the findings presented previously, as well as other work conducted during the audit. The SCAO is the 33 administrative head of the judicial department within the Judicial Branch. As a separate branch of 34 government, the SCAO and the Department overall are not subject to rules that govern the Executive 35 and Legislative Branch[es], so it administers the Department through its own rules, policy, and Chief 36 Justice Directives. In conducting this audit, we considered the rules the SCAO has established, including 37 its Code of Conduct. But we also considered principles established in the standards for internal control 38 in the federal government or the Green Book. The Green Book has been adopted by the State's 39 Executive Branch. And while it hasn't been adopted at Judicial, it contains valuable principles that any 40 organization should consider. Such as a commitment to integrity, establishment of clear responsibilities

1 and authority, and the design and implementation of control activities. Starting on page 69, we discussed
2 the issues we identified. I will hit some of these at a very high level, because we've already discussed 3 them.

5 First, we mentioned the awarding of the sole-source contract to a former employee. Which raises 6 concerns about the commitment to integrity.

7 8 Second, on pages 70 and 71, we detail the SCAO's failure to establish structure, responsibility, and 9 authority. This includes the former Chief of Staff signing nearly half of the contracts that the SCAO 10 entered into during our audit period. While this is allowed in limited circumstances, the SCAO has not 11 identified what those circumstances are or why the State Court Administrator was not able to sign so 12 many of the contracts.

14 Additionally, Judicial Fiscal Rules do not specify who budget authorities are, leading to poor controls 15 over purchase approvals the voluntary separation incentives that Ms. Ryan talked about in our first 16 finding were not prepared or reviewed by the legal team or members of senior management, as required.
17 And money spent on them might not have been spent prudently, as the reorganization never happened.
18 And as Ms. Ryan stated in the second finding, the authorities designated to approve administrative leave 19 vary across the organization, leading to variances in the amount of leave granted to employees.

20 21 Further down 71, we begin detailing the issues we identified due to the SCAO's failure to implement 22 control activities.

24 The first of these as a lack of segregation of duties. As I just mentioned in the fifth finding, we reported 25 on the 23 purchases for over $45,000 which were approved by the same individual who made them. The 26 other control activity we found lacking relates to issues with document and information retention. As 27 seen in the bullets on page 71 and 72, for four employees, the SCAO changed the reason given to us for 28 the use of administrative leave after they were unable to locate documents to support the original reason.

29
30 Then, for 10 cases involving large amounts of leave, the SCAO could not categorize the reason for the 31 leave without more research. And as Ms. Ryan mentioned, for two disciplinary investigations, there was 32 no documentation, such as the allegations or actions taken as a result.

33
34 Further down page 72 and on to page 73, the bullets detail the issues we found with the lack of controls 35 over granting and documenting administrative leave. As Ms Ryan discussed in the second finding, this 36 included over 2,600 hours for settlement agreements, nearly 3,600 hours for discretionary reasons 37 without description, and over 3,000 hours for nine disciplinary investigations.

1 On the middle of page 73, we discussed document retention issues that occurred in part because at least 2 two employees used computers not connected to the SCAO network. When they left the organization, 3 the information from their MacBooks was lost.

4
5 And then, over on page 74, there were 12 FMLA cases. It took the SCAO 6 weeks to locate the 6 necessary information because it was not maintained in a central location, and the employees who knew 7 where it was no longer work at the SCAO.

8
9 Lastly, on the bottom of this page and on to page 75, we bring up an issue not discussed in the earlier 10 recommendations. But which points to a lack of controls and tone at the top. We identified $92,000 the 11 SCAO spent on leadership training without sufficient justification as to how the expenses benefited the 12 organization, or to show that there were an appropriate use of state funds. For example, there was 13 $55,000 spent for seven employees on the executive team to attend a leadership course at the University 14 of Virginia. And over $27,000 for two employees to attend leadership conferences in New York City for 15 three consecutive years. Not only is it unclear these expenses were appropriate, but further, only two of 16 the employees who we identified as having attended these trainings are still with the SCAO.

17
18 Starting in the middle of page 75, we report on why these problems occurred. The State Court 19 Administrator has broad decision-making authority, which includes the responsibility for setting the tone 20 of the organization. We identified multiple actions taken by the former State Court Administrator that 21 were problematic. These were made possible in part due to a lack of effective system of controls. First, 22 Judicial Fiscal and Personnel Rules are broad. And the SCAO has not developed policies or procedures 23 to detail how to implement them. So, for example, in the Executive Branch, we have statewide rules that 24 cover fiscal rules, personnel rules. But it's up to each agency to develop policies and procedures for how 25 to implement those rules. On page 77, the Green Book states that management should conduct activities 26 to monitor the internal control system and evaluate the results. The SCAO has not set clear expectations 27 for review of functions such as reviewing expenditures, tracking the use of administrative leave, or 28 reviewing personnel files to assure that documents are properly retained. Also, the SCAO has rarely 29 used its Internal Audit Unit to look at operations within itself. It's largely used to conduct audits out in 30 the Judicial Districts.

31 32 On the bottom of this page and over on 78, we discuss why these problems matter. The lack of an 33 effective system of internal controls resulted in a lack of transparency and lack of stewardship over 34 public funds. This is evident in the approval of justification for a sole-source contract for an employee 35 who resigned only days before. As well as in granting large amounts of administrative leave for 36 employees. Granting this leave is compounded because judicial employees accrue, on average, 25% 37 more paid time off and extended sick leave each month than leave accrued by employees of the 38 Executive Branch. Employees using administrative leave in place of their accrued leave results in larger 39 payouts for unused leave upon separation. And using administrative leave to compensate employees 40 through voluntary separations and settlements, lacks transparency in the total costs. And lastly, the 1 segregation of duties can result in people approving the purchases they made. And it poses a risk that the 2 purchases are inappropriate or even for personal use.

3
4 So, on page 80, we recommend that the SCAO implement an effective system of internal control that 5 fosters a culture of integrity, ethical values, and accountability by implementing policies and procedures 6 and updating rules to ensure that they provide direction to staff on how to implement the rules. And, 7 also, by implementing monitoring activities to ensure the controls are working properly, including 8 supervisory review and routinely using its internal audit to monitor the controls. Thank you, Madam 9 Chair.

10
11 Rep. Saine

12 Response, Mr. Vasconcellos.

13
14 Steven Vasconcellos

15 Thank you, Madam Chair. The Office of the State Court Administrator agrees with the 16 recommendations contained in Section 6. I acknowledge the issues identified in the audit regarding the 17 prior internal control environment, and I fully understand and accept my fiduciary responsibility as the 18 State Court Administrator. To this end, and with the support of the Supreme Court, our Office is 19 operating within a set of core values that we discussed earlier in response to Representative Michaelson 20 Jenet's question. To demonstrate integrity and ethical administration and use of public funds, our Office 21 has already implemented changes, as we've discussed. And we have more work to do. We're making 22 these changes to strengthen our internal control environment, to mitigate risks, and to ensure the 23 appropriate use of public funds. These actions include the ongoing effort to develop, update, and 24 improve policy and procedure guidance related to financial and personnel issues necessary for the 25 Department's operations. Additionally, we have a strong internal audit team. But, historically, that audit 26 team's efforts have been focused on the activities in the Judicial Districts. And there's no reason why my 27 Office should not be held to the same standard within the organization. And, so, to that end, I've already 28 directed our internal audit manager to do a couple of things. One, to add us to the normal rotation 29 schedule of audits in with the Judicial Districts so that happens on a regular basis. The two specific to 30 the findings in this audit. They'll be conducting an internal review of our implementation project 31 progress this spring and summer, using the findings and recommendations in this report as the 32 framework for the review.

33
34 Rep. Saine

35 Questions from the committee? Just a quick one. Mr. Vasconcellos. I read about the MacBooks that are 36 being wiped. It's kind of like a modern Enron-type shredding of evidence. But just out of curiosity, we 37 talked about a cooldown period of six months with previous employees. Any of the employees that were 38 mentioned in, you know, [they] are not mentioned by name, but involved in that kind of document 39 shredding. Or the employees that the Chief Justice had enumerated earlier. Are there any contracts 40 you're involved with those previous employees that were mentioned or positions?

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. We are not involved with any contracts that I'm aware of with any of those 3 previous employees. Specifically, document shredding. I think in this modern age, it's really about 4 control of electronic information. And the auditor's office has identified areas where we need to improve 5 our oversight and controls. Particularly with regard to HR documentation and how that's managed and 6 maintained. I think that's probably our biggest liability versus there's relatively few paper documents 7 anymore. Almost everything's electronic, and I think our liabilities and where we need to strengthen is in 8 that area of electronic information management.

9

10 Rep. Saine

11 All right, further questions from the committee? If not, we'll move on. Thank you, Mr. Vasconcellos.
12 And your Honor, thank you for coming down here today.

13

14 Steven Vasconcellos

15 Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, committee.

Transcript of Hearing before the J. Budget Comm., Colo. Leg., December 17, 2020;

Colorado Legislative Joint Budget Committee—
December 17, 2020 Hearing:
Presentation of the Colorado Judicial Department

1 Sen. Moreno

2 The Joint Budget Committee will come to order. We continue our proceedings this afternoon with a 3 hearing with the Department of the Judiciary as well as the independent agencies. We have here 4 presenting Chief Justice Nathan Coats, as well as Mr. Vasconcellos, the State Court Administrator. Mr.
5 Chief Justice, whenever you're ready.

6

7 Chief Justice Coats

8 Thank you. Thank you, Senator Moreno. Maybe if I could take just a few minutes at the beginning, I'll 9 give a little overview. Hopefully, it will bridge right into the first few questions that you all ask us. I did 10 kind of want to say early on that, although we are obviously a separate branch of government and not an 11 administrative agency, and we have our own constitutional obligations, I think it is fair to say and very 12 clear that when this budgetary situation arose in the Spring, there was no thought in our Department of 13 seeking some special dispensation or dragging our feet in any way. And I think we made every attempt 14 all the way along to cooperate and do our share, just as all the other agencies in the State. When we first 15 got wind that there was going to be a big problem, you know, we did a freeze, a hiring freeze, 16 immediately. Stopped all non-essential spending. Then, when we actually got the figures, and they were 17 so cataclysmic. Our folks, Mr. Vasconcellos's Department, got creative and did everything they could to 18 shift money away from General Fund dollars. Basically, we wound up in that process, having to figure 19 out to do something with about 35 or 40 million dollars, I think. Which was a really big deal for us, 20 especially as little programmatic stuff as we have. And I think I've seen figures that we submitted to you 21 of being about 90% people. Just by example, during part of that process, everybody, though, was very 22 wanting to participate. Judges, you know, because of salary, couldn't have salary cuts. The Chief Judges 23 with whom we, by then, because of the pandemic, we were meeting by WebEx twice a week for an hour 24 and a half. With all the Chief Judges in the state. They actually generated an idea of having judges give 25 up an extra 5% of their salary to PERA to offset expenses that would hurt other employees and help us 26 manage the budget. So, those are just the type of example things.

28 Then, of course, we came up with the final across the board cut for personnel like everybody else, 29 personal services. And had to manage about 10 million plus dollars with regard to personal service cuts.
30 For us, and I mentioned this, this was a very difficult decision, and we worked through it with the 31 Chiefs. But I ultimately made the decision this was going to involve such a burden in terms of furloughs 32 from what we calculated, we decided to actually make reductions in the FTE. And, so, in that process, 33 we gave up about 200 FTE. Because of the freeze on hiring, we were able to offset about 100-110 jobs 34 that had not been refilled. But that still meant letting a tremendous number of people go. It was a very

1 difficult choice. It is definitely having its effect. We can talk about all these things with regard to your 2 questions a little more. But I do want to emphasize that and the feeling of cooperation and our attempt to 3 comply and do our share. But at the same time, I don't want to give a false impression. It would be a 4 mistake to minimize just how devastating this has been to the Judiciary throughout the State. We, as I 5 said, we were meeting with the Chiefs, and we tried to work with the Chiefs to figure out how to allocate 6 these cuts. And we did them as evenly as we could throughout our four major budget lines, which are 7 the appellate courts, probation, the trial courts, and the SCAO, the Court Administrator's Office. Just, if I 8 could quickly, the way these things, and maybe later I can give some personal examples or specific 9 examples. But basically, we allowed the trial courts in each District, the Chief Judge to decide how to 10 satisfy their proportionate share of cuts. And, so, you'll see in our Department, vastly different solutions 11 because of the different problems we have throughout the State. In some Districts, they actually cut 12 magistrate spots. So, we lost judicial officers. In some, things like court reporters. So, no more court 13 reporters. We've given up what we call the Sherlocks and the Family Coordinators in many instances.
14 So, that was the kind of thing they did. The Court Administrator's Office actually took twice the amount 15 of cuts they would have proportional share. They cut about a million dollars over their proportional 16 share of the budget, which amounted to a substantial loss of FTE for the Court Administrator's Office.
17 Just giving you an idea, even in the appellate courts, the Supreme Court, there's not that much we can 18 do, But we gave up staff counsel, people in the Library. The discussion was about law clerks, even.
19 They are so integral to what we do, we didn't cut them right then. But depending on what happens with 20 further required reductions, Supreme Court law clerks are on the table for the next line of cuts for us. So, 21 we're kind of down to the bone on that. And I just wanted to give you that I that idea.

23 Further on, you ask about the effect of when we open up again, and that's what we're very worried about.
24 Because it's going to be bad enough if we were fully staffed, but actually being cut. We're really worried 25 about how we're going to do a lot of this. Just to give you an idea, though, because things are getting bad 26 again, now, we've sort of figured out how to handle this in terms of allowing individual Districts to 27 exercise discretion about when they will allow jury pools. When they believe they can be safely called 28 again in their District. Which means, until then, there can't be jury trials. That's where the real backup is.
29 Although so much is done, you know, remotely now that that slowed things down. But the real backup is 30 with jury trials. Just to give you an idea, today, just before I walked over, the Chiefs are emailing back 31 and forth to get online about where they're going, with closures. Everybody, I think there may be maybe 32 three of the rural counties of Districts that haven't formally stopped jury trials. But they do very little 33 anyway. Among the other Districts. Everybody, I think, is pretty much cut, at least till about the third 34 week in January before we'll start up again. And as of today, just when I walked over, the preference in 35 the bigger ones, bigger Districts now seems to be to stop all jury trials until March. I mention that 36 because, just to show the exacerbation of the problem, the figures I was getting right now. Is that we 37 have something like 13 or 1,400. 100,000? 13 or 14,000 cases set for trial that are backed up that far.
38 And we'll see what the situation is if we go another three months without even being able to do any 39 trials.

1 I probably used up enough time for an opening. Maybe I'll pitch it to Mr. Vasconcellos and kind of run 2 through your questions, and unless you had a question of me right now.

3
4 Sen. Moreno

5 Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice. I think some folks do you have questions. Representative Herod.

6
7 Rep. Herod

8 Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you so much for being here. I know it's a very tough time for everyone.
9 And I know there's a huge strain on our courts in our system. I'm just wondering if you guys are worried 10 about any lawsuits for lack of speedy trial issues or anything like that, that you've heard about in other 11 states or that you're worried about coming down in Colorado. And I guess really, just, what are these?
12 What are the impacts on access to justice?

13
14 Sen. Moreno

15 Mr. Chief Justice.

17 Chief Justice Coats

18 Thank you. Well, there are tremendous impacts, I think, on the Access to Justice problem, particularly, 19 usually we use that term with reference to difficulty getting lawyers. But right now, of course, it's even 20 the broader and I take it that's part of your question, getting into court. Our business, our obligations, 21 obviously, are to provide forums, to provide neutral arbiters, decision makers, for people to be able to.
22 Well, for us to enforce the law with regard to speedy trial, but for people, all of our constituents, your 23 constituents, to get in to court and be able to resolve their important financial and personal matters with 24 the force of law. This has taken a real hit. We're getting as much done as we can remotely. I issued an 25 order in. March, which is basically, although we varied it with regard to some things in jury trials and 26 more discretion for Chief Judges in the Districts. But, basically, it set out about 10 things that we 27 decided had to be done, no matter how bad the emergency. And we've continued to do those. But with 28 regard to many other things, they just have to fall in terms of priorities down the list of importance. So, 29 it is making a big effect.

31 With regard to suits. So, I take it when you say like speedy trial, the big problem there for us is that it's 32 not a question really, of somebody suing us, but simply that criminal defendants who are not provided 33 the speedy trial within the legislative limits will move for dismissal. And their cases will have to be 34 dismissed. And that's what we're trying so hard to avoid. But in other things that, you know your 35 question suggests, I have been a little surprised. But we've been pretty good in Colorado not having, let's 36 say, lawsuits in the nature of inverse condemnation that you might get from people who say, Well, 37 you've just deprived me of property without due process of law, and I want to make the government pay 38 for it. Those are kinds of things. And you might see class action type of things there that obviously 39 we've seen some places around the country with regard to landlord groups and dealing with eviction.
40 Again, in this question of are they being deprived of property without due process? So, these are

1 important things for us. If I could mention real quickly with regard to the evictions we haven't felt. Now, 2 the Governor's done things, and, you know, CDC has done things, nationally, and we'll see. We haven't 3 really had those come to us in terms of lawsuits or get up to the appellate level. But I think all the trial 4 courts are behaving very rationally in simply, without barring things, simply deciding that some things 5 fall further down the list of priorities. And if we just don't have time for them, they're just pushed back.
6 And that's kind of an example, would be evictions. Now, of course, with the Governor's issued orders 7 telling people they can't file evictions, we haven't had, up to the appellate level, a lawsuit on that yet. But 8 that staved off some of that problem, as well. Is that sort of along the lines of what you're asking?
9

11 Representative Herod.

12
13 Rep. Herod

14 Yes, thank you, and you anticipated my questions and answered them fully. I'm very concerned about 15 the access to justice, not just in, obviously obtaining counsel, but actually being able to work your way 16 through the system. I don't think people realize how much the courts are used and what they are used 17 for. But, you know, if I have a case in front of you right now, or something that I need to, you know, 18 work through the process, it's on hold. And, that could be hurting my financial situation. That could hurt 19 my household. And definitely my family, right? And, so, these are all things that outside of the criminal 20 courts that people think about are going through the process right now and are being gunked up. And, 21 so, I am concerned about the implications on the system as a whole. Once we get out of Covid and we 22 see how many, you know, if there are cases that are brought forward, class actions against the State of 23 Colorado or against the courts for inaction, or how many folks have not been able to seek justice in a 24 manner that is timely enough for their situation and timely enough in the in the framework that we've 25 even put on the courts. And, so, it's very concerning to me, and I think these cuts have a lasting impact 26 on the entire ecosystem of justice. So, thank you for the allowance for that diatribe.
27

28 Sen. Moreno

29 Committee. Any other questions? Understanding we're going to dive deep on some of the ones we 30 asked. Mr. Vasconcellos.

31
32 Steven Vasconcellos

33 Thank you, Mr. Chair, would you just prefer I start running through the answers in order?
34

35 Sen. Moreno

36 Yeah, let's go ahead and start going through the questions that we presented.
37

38 Steven Vasconcellos

39 Thank you, Mr. Chair, I like to tease the Chief Justice that he always steals all the good headline bullet 40 points. So, I apologize some of this may be a little repetitive. I'll try not to belabor any of these points

1 too much. Please feel free to move me along or slow me down as needed. With regard to the first 2 question, how are the health, life, and dental cuts apportioned across our budget? And to what degree 3 will be able to use measures such as vacancy savings, hiring freezes, operating cuts, and furloughs. As 4 the Chief mentioned earlier, our main programmatic lines are over 90% personal services. They're not 5 sort of traditional discretionary programs. And, so, even at that first dollar of reduction we're looking at 6 where. Thinking about implications for impact on staff and, by extension, most importantly, impacts on 7 services that Representative Herod refers to, to the people in the State of Colorado. This goes back to the 8 last quarter of Fiscal Year 20 with trying to take a very proactive approach, working closely with our 9 JBC analyst at the time, and instituting a hiring freeze. And stopping discretionary spending, basically 10 stopping all operating spending, unless it was of an emergency sort of nature. We were able to 11 contribute to an almost $7 million negative supplemental at the end of Fiscal Year 20. And, then, in 12 terms of terms of managing the reductions in 21, after all was said and done, we had just shy of $11
13 million in personal services cuts to manage. And, even in the programmatic cuts that were assessed to us 14 before that, those are essentially personnel cuts as well. Unless we find alternate measures. So, we were 15 fairly aggressive, as you might remember, in cash fund refinancing where possible. And, again, trying to 16 find a balance. We don't want to bankrupt cash funds that does us no good either, and puts people in just 17 as much jeopardy. But we took a lot of staff out of General Fund sources and put them into cash fund 18 sources to preserve continuity for their employment and to preserve services for the people in the State 19 of Colorado, as much as reasonably possible. At the end of the day, it was a calculation between about 20 12 days of furlough, both this fiscal year and next fiscal year, and ongoing until the General Assembly 21 would have enough money to basically buy us out of furlough or to make permanent cuts. It is an 22 unpalatable choice by any measure. In the end, the discussion around the State and the final decision 23 was. . . In an environment where the revenue picture is so volatile and still could turn I mean, we're all 24 hoping for the best, but I don't think any of our crystal balls work well enough to know where revenue is 25 going. In an environment where there's such volatility, it just didn't feel right to say to every staff person 26 in the entire Branch, you have to take a little over half of a month off over the course of the year, and I 27 can't guarantee that that's going to be it. It could be more. And that lack of predictability and that 28 amount, you start putting a lot of our staff into an untenable personal financial situation. This is not to 29 say, obviously, that layoffs don't have a profound impact on people, but what we wanted to do is take 30 them, sort of the most permanent measures we could, to promote predictability. Not only for our staff, 31 but for the services that we provide. So, we looked at everything. And certainly the hiring freeze and the 32 vacancies, vacancy savings that was generated from that, did allow us to meet about half of our burden 33 through vacant positions. But, ultimately, about half that burden had to be met through layoffs.

34

35 Sen. Moreno

36 Mr. Vasconcellos, I was wondering that a lot of the cash fund refinancing that you did. That did save 37 General Fund, which obviously this committee was very grateful for. Do you envision that being 38 temporary or cash fund revenues sufficient to support that of an ongoing nature? Mr. Vasconcellos.

40

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair, there are some areas where I am concerned. It's not in the next, not in the current 3 fiscal year, not in FY 22 but in more of a 3 to 5 year posture. I am concerned about relying on them as 4 heavily as we are. Particularly, what I consider our marquee cash funds, the Trial Court Stabilization 5 Fund and one of our main probation cash funds. Where we have a lot of staff currently sacked away.
6 That we moved out of General Fund sources. Again, we feel, we watch, we get very nervous around 7 revenue projection time. And, of course, we'll be watching closely this week. But assuming stable 8 revenue projections, we feel okay this year. We feel relatively optimistic next year, but it is a concern 9 long term.

10

11 Sen. Moreno

12 Please continue.

13

14 Steven Vasconcellos

15 Thank you. Moving on to the second question in terms of how Covid has changed the Department's 16 work, and what are the programmatic, budgetary and office space impacts? I think we've covered many 17 of the budgetary impacts, and I have to say right back to the themes that Representative Herod was 18 laying out at the beginning. Timely access to justice is the biggest impact in our and our biggest 19 collective concern. And we have a basic capacity throughput problem that isn't just Covid-related, but 20 we laid folks off at the beginning of the fiscal year. And, so, we've got the combination of the 21 inefficiencies that come with trying to maintain operations during Covid in a socially distant manner or 22 in a virtual sphere. And don't get me wrong, we are very grateful. We use WebEx, much like you guys, 23 as our virtual hearing platform, and it has been a boon in many ways. But it is, by surveying the bench in 24 Colorado, 2 to 3 times slower per individual hearing. Just because when you're in person, I mean, think 25 of your own work. How quickly you can transition between issues, how quickly you can transition 26 between agencies. It's just not as quick. Presentation of evidence looks different. It's not that it doesn't 27 work. It's just not as fast. And, so, we're grateful for these virtual tools. They help buy down some of the 28 backlog. But the backlog continues to grow because it's just not as quick, just not as efficient. So, we 29 have to consider our impacts, both from a Covid lens and the same time a budget reduction lens. And 30 you can imagine, we've done a lot of the standard things you see, either in your own operations or in 31 your life, moving around. And that's spacing things out tremendously, limiting the number of staff at 32 front counters. A lot of people-flow control, how many people can be led into the courthouse at a time, 33 and how we manage people through their experience in the court. And, again, we're all doing that sort of 34 through the lens of, Can we do this safely? Because we don't want to put our citizens unnecessarily at 35 risk while we do this. The Chief has hit some of the other high points here.

37 I'd like to talk a little bit, maybe about probation and some of the impacts there, because we haven't 38 talked much about that, at this point. As you can imagine, in-person probation appointments are 39 extraordinarily rare, at this point. As are home visits. And, so, most of the probation appointments are 40 done virtually because of space limitations and health considerations. Education and treatment

1 engagements for probationers have been impacted. And particularly, both of those. It's not that 2 telemedicine, for example, doesn't work. It's not that, you know, my kids have been going to middle 3 school and high school now online for a number of months. It's not that it doesn't work, but it is not the 4 same, either. In my estimation, at least. And, so, are we getting? Are the probationers getting that same 5 impact from the educational resources we're putting out? Are they getting the same impact from the 6 treatment resources we're putting out? It is a concern. It is better. We're certainly not going to abdicate 7 and say we're just going to stop because it's not working. We're going to do our best in this 8 circumstance. But, we're certainly hopeful that this is not a long-term situation.

9
10 Sen. Moreno

11 Mr. Chief Justice.

12
13 Chief Justice Coats

14 Can I interrupt one second. Let me just pick up on that again with regard to the trial back up. Just to give 15 you a sense. So, I see in the report we indicated in this 11-month period last year, we tried about 1,900
16 cases and probably 1,600 plus of those were criminal. That's most of that. We've show in here, that so 17 far this year, we've tried 742. But I want to just point out. So that's like, what do we say, 38%? But 18 remember, we had two and a half months of regular trials before we hit the pandemic. So, if you figure 19 about how much, with the percentages, probably between 350 and 400 of those were actually tried 20 before the pandemic. That means since the pandemic, we've been able to try, what, 300 and some odd 21 cases. That's all. Those trials, even those. I need to point out, the vast majority of which are 22 misdemeanor, very small cases with us trying to only bring in 6 jurors and space them out appropriately.
23 So, I just want to emphasize that, that we are facing a real flood of trying to deal with felony cases. And 24 we may talk about it later, but this is going to come up against this speedy trial problem, which we don't 25 have a great deal of control over. And, actually, just to point out. Because I don't know it was 26 emphasized in our response that much. There are constitutional speedy trial limitations, but they're not 27 our problem. They're balancing-type of tests. We can accommodate this. We are stuck on the 180-day 28 statute that basically says you got to try a guy within 180 days, unless he is responsible for the 29 continuance. And, unlike even the Feds, even the federal courts, where judges have some discretion for 30 things like this, we do not. And, so, that's the kind of crunch we're going to be looking at in terms of 31 speedy trial. Thank you very much.

32
33 Sen. Moreno

34 Representative Herod.

35
36 Rep. Herod

37 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And I think, contrary to what some might assume, for me, I don't believe that all 38 folks should be not going through the system and also not incarcerated at times. That's a joke for some 39 people who think, I think everyone should be let out. But, I am concerned. So, basically, what you're 40 telling me is, if I am, I guess, suspected of being an offender, a felony offender, and my attorney would

1 probably say, do a jury trial. Let's roll the dice and see if they actually can get it, make it happen within a 2 certain amount of time. And if not, then I don't ever have to stand trial. And this family over here, 3 whomever I may or may not have harmed, never gets access to justice. Is that right?

4

5 Chief Justice Coats

6 That's right.

7

8 Rep. Herod

9 Okay, huge problem. And I think the other question I have is about compliance with court orders. And,
10 so, if I'm in a program, say I'm in a drug court or some other court, and I'm being ordered to take a [UA]
11 or do whatever, and I don't. Am I coming back to court, or those being kind of pushed off, as well? If I 12 want to come back and give you my explanation or reason, or see my time again? Is that happening? Or 13 are they being kind of moved to the side?

14

15 Sen. Moreno

18 Chief Justice Coats

19 We're doing much better with those kinds of things, because we can do so much of that remotely. And as 20 Mr. Vasconcellos was saying, we've actually done an incredible job, I think, of transforming procedures 21 to be done remotely. So, with things, for instance, in reappearances and sentencing, probation. Much of 22 that can be done remotely, and we're continuing to do that. They're not just being ignored. There's some 23 things that we will even, you know, whether it's you're safe enough is a balance And depending on how 24 serious they are, we would even do. And it's what we talk about as doing the docket, doing the motions, 25 doing things that come up. That can be done in person, to some extent, if we can do it safely. But we're 26 doing most of that remotely. And I would point out, although we can't fool around with something. We 27 can't do something that would violate or be contrary to statute. And so, for instance, the speedy trial is a 28 problem for us. Nevertheless, we have done a tremendous amount by rule changes that we think we can 29 do. Apropos of this question, we have changed our rules dramatically to allow everything that we think 30 can constitutionally be done, not in person, but remotely. We've changed our rules to allow those to be 31 done remotely and we've arranged for the computer and phone arrangements and those kind of things to 32 deal with jails. So ,people don't have to leave the jail. Lots of things along that line. So, I feel like we've 33 been tremendously successful in that. Those kind of things, I wouldn't be surprised if many of them 34 continue.

35

36 Sen. Moreno

37 Mr. Vasconcellos.

38

39

40

1 Sen. Moreno

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And Representative Herod, we don't want to set up gotcha moments. If the 3 treatment providers closed or the UA facility is closed. I mean, it's very circumstantial. These are not 4 normal times. And, so, there are different considerations. It's not like my treatment provider was closed.
5 I couldn't go to treatment. I'm going to get revoked. It's just a different world today. All that's being 6 taken into consideration.

7

9 Senator Hansen.

10

11 Sen. Hansen

12 Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. And appreciate the very thorough response on the written side. And I 13 just want to continue on this same conversation. Because you mentioned some statutory constraints that 14 could really make life even more difficult than it already is. And I think, importantly, for this discussion, 15 have budget implications, if there were financial consequences or safety consequences that resulted.
16 And, so, I wonder today, or as we continue this conversation over the next few months, are there 17 statutory changes or flexibility that you would recommend that the GA take up in a timely manner? Or 18 perhaps, are there Executive Orders that should be considered to both address logistical challenges, but 19 then also potential future financial liability in some form for the State. So, that I wonder if we might 20 continue that piece of this. And love your initial thoughts, but obviously we can dig into that in more 21 detail over the coming months.

22

23 Sen. Moreno

24 Mr. Chief Justice.

25

26 Chief Justice Coats

27 In terms of the money, I'm not sure that's our expertise, and I'm not really prepared to talk about that 28 right at the minute. What may happen with things down the road? I suppose the obvious thing about 29 legislation that we, some folks, I don't know who, the district attorneys maybe, whoever tried to get 30 changed was this speedy trial problem. That would provide great relief. That would release a lot of 31 pressure on the timing of these things. But ultimately, they have to get done anyway. So, we're still 32 going to be faced with it. It's just we're not faced with kind of Jerry-rigging or coming up with reasons 33 why we can parcel these things out. It is a complicated problem, though, and in the Spring, when there 34 were attempts at that. From what got reported back to me, there were quite disparate views, particularly 35 between the defense and prosecution communities, about how one should go about solving those. That I 36 do have to say, though is one thing that is really, totally in control of the of the Legislature. We've tried 37 to do some things with rules on mistrials and things, but those are just nibbling around the edges. This is 38 really the elephant in the room for criminal cases, and they will have to get tried. Yeah, so, that's really 39 the only thing I have on my radar screen about legislation.

40

1 Sen. Moreno
2 Representative Herod.

3
4 Rep. Herod

5 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just to follow up. I think a lot of the conversation is around, are we keeping 6 people in jail for longer than they should be, in an unsafe environment. Because we know how 7 problematic that is, and so there is a lot of balancing, but I do think that shuffling the decks in a way that 8 is appropriate could be helpful. Because the way that I know Denver works is that the judges are able to 9 take on different dockets, and they rotate through different. So, they're not all family court or all one 10 kind. And I do think that there's some ability to move there. It might still need statute change. It sounds 11 like it does, because you guys have done everything you can. But I do think that the hard part is going to 12 be balancing the prosecution community and the defense community. But it's something that the General 13 Assembly needs to address, because I do think we're going to be paying for it down the line.

14
16 Senator Hansen.

17
18 Sen. Hansen

19 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And this is great discussion. I mean, I think what I'm seeing on page 10 of your 20 written response is that you have done your very best to reallocate resources, but we still have a building 21 backlog in these numbers. And I take your point, which is that we still had 10 weeks of the year that was 22 relatively normal. So, it might be even slightly worse than it would appear at first blush. And I think that 23 leads me to my question. Should this committee? Should the General Assembly, as we look forward, 24 think about some type of catch up resources? I see this as like a stock and flow problem, right? There's 25 only so much they can move through the system right now. You got this build up in the upstream tanks, 26 so to speak. And I think that's a conversation we're going to have to have here at the JBC. And then, of 27 course, with the rest of the General Assembly. Is how do we ever get caught back up in the bright day 28 ahead when we can go back to something that looks a little more normal? So, I think we're going to have 29 to get into the details of that, probably sooner than later.

30
31 Sen. Moreno
32 Mr. Vasconcellos.

33
34 Steven Vasconcellos

35 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Senator Hansen, I absolutely agree. Ultimately, we have a throughput problem, 36 considering the resource reductions that have taken place, even with statutory assistance, which would 37 be very, very helpful. You've just got the mountain of work to eat through. And we absolutely appreciate 38 the fiscal limitations that the State is struggling under. But, at the very first possible opportunity to try to 39 recover some resources, we would be interested in that conversation. Timely access to justice is why we

1 exist, period. And we currently don't have the adequate resources to address that, even when the 2 pressures of Covid are off of us, because of the budget impacts.

3
4 Sen. Moreno

5 Please proceed.

6
7 Steven Vasconcellos

8 All righty in the interest of time, just really quick. I think Senator Hansen, during the briefing had a 9 follow up question under number 2, in terms of which changes are permanent, which may be temporary.
10 We have learned a tremendous amount, Senator Hansen about virtual proceedings in the last several 11 months. And I think there's a consensus of court leaders around the State, that virtual proceedings are 12 here to stay. What we'd like to do is get to a place where we can use them in a more targeted method. In 13 support of our in-person proceedings to really realize the efficiency. Because right now, there's not an 14 efficiency to be realized. But, if we can use them in concert, in-person proceedings where appropriate, 15 virtual proceedings were appropriate. We can definitely see those hanging around. Additionally, on the 16 probation side. If you think of maybe a large, rural, multi-county jurisdiction, where someone who's on 17 probation might have to drive 100-150 miles for a probation appointment. That may not be a burden that 18 we're interested in putting people under and using those virtual tools to have a meaningful contact with 19 that person on probation, but not put them under so much personal distress. A lot of the folks that we 20 work with in the Judiciary are hourly employees. They're not making money when they are engaging 21 with us. And, so, what can we do to minimize those impacts? So, we see some of these, particularly the 22 virtual tools continuing on.

24 Mr. Chair, moving on to question number 3, given the workload and the case-loads, what impacts do we 25 foresee when we return to normal? I think we just talked about this. It's really the capacity issues. Yes, 26 we've tried to do as much as we can with rule change. There may be some statutory relief in certain 27 areas. Ultimately, when the time is right, we need additional resources to get back to normal. Unless 28 there's questions, Mr. Chair, I'm going to keep moving.

29 30 Moving on to question number 4, the identification of IT gaps. How these gaps impacted access to the 31 courts and other services? What technology investments would assist us during the pandemic and into 32 the future? We were not, really in any meaningful way, using virtual hearing platforms prior to the 33 pandemic, and it has been a crash course. We have learned a lot, including which virtual tools work well 34 for us and which ones do not. Which tools work well for the constituents we serve and which ones do 35 not. In our answer, we've drilled it down to really four areas that we are currently doing planning around 36 that ultimately could result in a supplemental request sometime in Fiscal Year 22. We believe we have 37 enough money in our Information Technology Cash Fund to pay for these. Just not enough spending 38 authority. But they really focus on Internet and broadband access. You can imagine the impact our 39 networks are taking with a lot of video based online hearings. And particularly in outlying areas, our 40 infrastructure is not as strong as we would love. And that leads to service outages and challenges to just

1 conduct normal business. Related to that, some court audio-visual needs, particularly focusing on 2 capturing the court record electronically. Arguably, right after making the decision in a case, the most 3 important thing we do in the Judiciary is have a record that that actually took place, and being able to do
4 that. And districts vary depending on their needs, whether they use a court reporter or whether they use 5 electronic recording tools. But using those tools in the virtual environment has, as we've noted in our 6 answer, provided some challenges. And, so, we want to do some upgrades to our audio-visual systems to 7 improve the quality of capturing the record in a virtual environment. Is it a big access to justice issue?
8 Court interpretation for folks who are limited English proficient. We are still providing that. We are very 9 proud of our system in Colorado. We have one of the, I would argue, premier engagements with court 10 interpretation in the country. Certainly among states that have a statewide, unified judiciary. But doing it 11 online has presented challenges. Because in a live courtroom environment. Sorry, Representative 12 Ransom. I should swivel around once in a while. But in a live courtroom environment, the interpreter 13 can interpret simultaneously. So, while the judge is talking, or while someone's testifying, while that's 14 happening, interpretation can happen discreetly and in real time. When you've got 10 people together in 15 WebEx on a hearing, not so much. Now, we're still providing those services at the same level, same 16 quality, that we always have. But it's a time sink, because we have to stop and so that the audio is not all 17 over each other and the record is being captured properly. We have to stop and it just adds time. Now, of 18 course, we're willing to do that right now. But long-term, if we want virtual proceedings to be an 19 efficient, effective tool, we're looking at some technology solutions to allow that simultaneous 20 interpretation to happen virtually, while not impeding the flow of the general proceedings.

21

22 Sen. Moreno

23 Mr. Vasconcellos, on that point, ha[ve] the courts looked into captioning at all? Is that a viable option 24 for some of those interpretation needs?

25

26 Steven Vasconcellos

27 Thank you. Mr. Chair. It is not. Ultimately, it is not a sufficient level of engagement and participation 28 for the part. And, ultimately, simultaneous interpretation is the gold standard. We've consulted with the 29 Department of Justice on this issue in the past. And captioning is just not the way to go. And that's an 30 area where we're really unwilling to cut into the quality.

31

32 Sen. Moreno

33 Please proceed.

34

35 Steven Vasconcellos

36 Thank you. Just briefly, the last area of technology we're looking at. We still have analog phone lines in 37 a lot of areas in the State, and that severely limits our capacity when we're looking at web-based 38 proceedings, virtual proceedings, etc. Sometimes, in some locations, just getting, handling the amount of 39 normal phone traffic. It's not okay with analog lines. So, some greater investment in digital lines. If it's 40 okay with the committee, Mr. Chair, I think we've addressed speedy trial in-depth.

1 And, so, I will move beyond question 5 into question 6. I believe, a question originally from 2 Representative Herod about our work to ensure equal access to problem solving courts. We are 3 committed to equal access to problem solving courts. And, so, there are three areas that we're currently 4 actively focusing on right now. One, although our budget line for problem solving courts was a victim of 5 the recent budget reductions, we were able to secure a federal grant from the Bureau of Justice 6 Assistance. And it's really got three prongs, one is education and providing statewide training and 7 technical support broadly on issues around diversity, equity, and inclusion in problem solving courts.
8 But the second prong is a deeper dive, with five pilot locations to really explore the issues in those 9 Districts, and they may not be the same challenges given the multiplicity of partners that come together 10 to have a problem solving court work. Understand what is the situation in those five pilot Districts. That 11 work will start at the beginning of the New Year, just after the holidays, with the five pilots. And, then, 12 the final area is data. And as pointed out, I believe the recent article in The Denver Gazette was 13 referenced during briefing. And as identified in that article, the data between whether it's the Judiciary, 14 Executive entities like District Attorney's offices, other Executive Branch agencies. The data can be 15 inconsistent, it can be incomprehensible, it can be nonexistent. Obviously, we can only take full 16 ownership of our own data. And our third prong of spending under that federal grant has been updating 17 our database that we use to support management decisions within problem solving courts. That is on tap 18 to be rolled out in February of 21. So that we have a higher quality of information about our participants, 19 to help inform better decision making

20

21 Sen. Moreno

22 Representative Herod.

23

24 Rep. Herod

25 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And thank you for that very thorough response in this packet. It was of much 26 dismay to me to see that in the article about, you know, how folks of color tended to not get access to the 27 same problem-solving court. And, so, while we're disproportionate in the system, we are 28 underrepresented in these amazing opportunities that we've just seen have such powerful outcomes.
29 And, so, I want to thank you for taking a look at this, for your continued work on this. And I just wanted 30 to, I don't know if it is appropriate or not, but to say that I'd like to have regular updates on your progress 31 in this area. And again, I just want to thank you for your work.

32

33 Sen. Moreno

34 Please continue.

35

36 Steven Vasconcellos

37 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And Representative Herod, we would be happy to provide regular updates and 38 engage in an ongoing conversation. Alrighty.

1 So, committee moving on to Question 7 regarding the Eviction Legal Defense Fund and how the 2 Department plans to use the additional $1 million appropriation that came about during the recent 3 Special Session. The quick answer is, get it out as fast as humanly possible. We are working with the six 4 original grantees, and are going to distribute the million dollars to those six original grantees in the same
5 proportion that they received the original grant. I'm pleased to say that we already have. So, an amended 6 contract, grant contract needs to be executed with those entities with 2 of the 6, the contract is already 7 fully executed. And we're just waiting for signatures and wrapping up a couple of small issues with the 8 remaining 4. We hope to have this wrapped up in the next couple of weeks, frankly, and have that 9 money all distributed where it can be used.

11 Moving on to question number 8, our progress on the recent performance audit of the State Court 12 Administrator's Office by the Office of the State Auditor. At the beginning of last week, Chief Justice 13 Coats and myself testified at the audit hearing in front of the Legislative Audit Committee. As you may 14 know, there were 6 main thematic areas of findings. We agreed with all of the recommendations made 15 by the Office of the State Auditor, and have implemented several of those already and are on track to 16 complete implementation of all the recommendations by July of 2021.

18 Moving on to Question 9, programmatic impact of budget reductions. Mr. Chair, I'm not sure if this is 19 entirely what the committee was looking for here. We've talked broadly about impacts in a number of 20 areas related to the budget reductions. And we have relatively few traditional programmatic areas. We 21 listed some of those out here in our answer to this question. Whether it was reductions to the adult 22 pretrial diversion program, the mental health diversion program, the behavioral health liaison program, 23 or the problem-solving court line. I mean, these are some of the more traditional programmatic areas that 24 we have a little flexibility. These were not easy cuts to make. Again, balancing programmatic cuts 25 versus reductions in staff, and, by extension, reductions to service to the citizens of Colorado. Not easy 26 or pleasant decisions. I would note that related to the diversion programming, you have a decision item 27 from us to, in essence, replenish some of that money, but not through either State General Fund or cash 28 fund resources. You may know that, because of the consent decree entered into in federal court with 29 CDHS and Disability Law Colorado, there is a fund that is built up. That is the source of which are fine 30 revenues, frankly. And there is a rather large amount of money available there. The federal special 31 masters who oversee that fund have encouraged us to apply to the fund for funding. So, we're asking for 32 cash fund spending authority in advance of an application to that fund to help replenish diversion monies 33 that were cut.

34
35 Sen. Moreno

36 Representative Herod.

37
38 Rep. Herod

39 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Do you have any type of calculation for the cost of these cuts? So, I see that 40 multiple jurisdictions had to completely end programs. Where are those people going? I mean, I know

1 it's hard, because not everyone has come through the system in a quick way. But, in general, where are 2 these people going? Are they coming into DOC or into jails. Do we have any cost estimates from these 3 cuts?
4

5 Sen. Moreno
6 Mr. Vasconcellos.
7

8 Steven Vasconcellos
9 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Representative Herod, we don't at this point. I think part of it is because it's 10 probably too soon to know those downstream costs, like you're referring to. Whether it's incarceration at 11 the county level, incarceration in State Department of Corrections. Are they on probation? Some of their 12 cases haven't been finished. You know, these are diversionary programs. So, their cases are generally 13 put on hold pending the outcome of engagement with treatment and education and other matters. And, 14 ultimately, their case could be dismissed rather than proceeding. In the case where, particularly in the 15 mental health diversion program, where 3 of the 4 programs had to shut down due to lack of funding, 16 you know. The district attorney has to make a charging decision as to whether they want to proceed or 17 not. That's going to look different across these jurisdictions, as you might imagine. And even if they 18 chose to proceed with the case, it's likely, given the timing, that some of these cases, many of these cases 19 where folks would have otherwise been in a mental health diversionary program, their case isn't 20 complete yet.
21

22 Sen. Moreno
23 Representative Herod.
24

25 Rep. Herod
26 Yeah, that's it. I think that's important. And, again, thank you for that discussion. I'm also wondering the 27 cost of folks not coming into the programs, as well. Because if we don't have the programs existing right 28 now, people are being sentenced if the DA chooses to charge them. And, so, where is that going? So 29 again, I think I just would love to see, and I don't need it today, obviously, but just a little bit more 30 discussion around the cost of these cuts and the longer-term impacts that, again, we're going to end up 31 paying for. If, in fact, they exist.
32

33 Sen. Moreno
34 Mr. Vasconcellos.
35

36 Steven Vasconcellos
37 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Representative Herod, as with other matters, we will be more than happy to have 38 an ongoing conversation and do the best we can. Some of these are. This is not an argument against 39 trying, but some of these costs are so complicated. I don't have the sort of statistical and economic 40 horsepower on our staff to really suss all this out. But I think, you know, certainly a multi-agency, multi

1 branch conversation is healthy on this matter, Mr. Chair, I think we've in terms of number 10 and budget 2 reductions, impact. I think we've covered that pretty robustly at this point.

3
4 If you don't mind, I'll move on to number 11. How would appropriation consult? Excuse me, pardon me, 5 how would the requested appropriation consolidations achieve programmatic efficiency, budget 6 flexibility, etc. There's really, we've identified 4 areas in our budget request for consolidation. Two, the 7 Child Support Enforcement area and our underfunded courthouse facilities program, are single FTE 8 appropriations that candidly require disproportionate amount of time to manage separately. Those FTE, 9 are part of my office at the State Court Administrator's Office. They're a normal part of the staff, and 10 there's really no reason in our mind why they shouldn't be moved to the general courts administration 11 budget and gives us just two fewer lines to have to manage, and a little more flexibility. In the instance 12 of the Law Library. The Supreme Court Law Library, not surprisingly, is overseen by the Supreme 13 Court and is managed as if it were, you know, from an operational, programmatic standpoint, no 14 different than any other part of the appellate court programs line. And so, again, there's an artificiality to 15 the separation of the lines. And, so, we would like to see those collapsed. It's fewer lines to manage, and 16 it's a little more programmatic flexibility and staffing flexibility for the managers on the ground. Finally, 17 with the collections program, our staff in this program are part of the larger on the ground court 18 operations. And this program is decades old at this point. And at this point, we don't believe there's a 19 strong argument for a separate long bill line or even a separate cash fund source. And that the FTE 20 should be collapsed into the general court's programmatic line. And that the specific cash funds related 21 to this program should be redirected out of their current source and into the Judicial Stabilization Fund.
22 Still maintaining the program. But there's an artificiality to the separation that just doesn't make sense at 23 this point. I'll take a pause to take a quick breath and see if you have any questions.

24
25 Sen. Moreno

26 Mr. Vasconcellos, I was wondering. And this is going back to something previously that we discussed.
27 I'm wondering if you could speak a little bit to the uniqueness of your Department. Not only are you a 28 separate branch of government, but federal resources are limited to nonexistent that you can draw upon.
29 I think with the budget reductions that we saw in other departments, they had ways to leverage other 30 sources, whether that was federal support through the many federal relief packages provided, or it was 31 vacancy savings or things like that. Can you just speak to how those options were limited? I think in 32 your case. Mr. Vasconcellos.

33
34 Steven Vasconcellos

35 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, you pretty well took the words right out of my mouth. We don't have the 36 same tools, options, flexibility that may be your run of the mill. No offense intended, the run of the mill 37 Executive Branch agency would. We've harped a little bit on sort of the biggest structural difference. We 38 don't have discretionary programs. Our work is driven by our statutory and constitutional obligations.
39 And unless statute changes, or unless the Constitution changes, the work keeps coming. And, so, in that 40 regard, our budget is the personnel, whether it's the judicial officers and the staff who are needed to

1 make that work happen, probation officers, etc. And, so, that first dollar of reduction, whether it was 2 intended to be personal services or not, what's on our mind is that's a personal services reduction when 3 we're this people intensive in our work and don't have discretion. We can use tools like vacancy savings, 4 and certainly the hiring freeze helped take some of the edges off of the pain of the cuts. But, not to come 5 to the same issue over and over again. But being 90% plus personal services doesn't allow us a lot of 6 wiggle room. And the few programs that the General Assembly has given to us, they're not really 7 discretionary, per se. But if we talk about the diversion programs that I was discussing earlier with 8 Representative Herod, these are these are not easy program cuts, either. These, these impact citizens, 9 directly, when we make those. And we were not eligible. We looked into, we spent a lot of time. Our 10 financial staff, looking into federal grant options. Were we eligible for certain Cares Act funding? And 11 we just were not very successful in finding those options.

12

13 Sen. Moreno

14 Thank you.

15

16 Steven Vasconcellos

17 Moving on to Question 12, committee. IT systems and their source of funding is that a state or county 18 responsibility? You know, Colorado has a unified state-funded court system for County and District 19 Courts. In the State, with the exception loan exception of the Denver County Court. And as a result, our 20 case management systems, the data systems we use on an operations front to drive the day to day work.
21 That's a statewide system. All of our state courts use it, and that's a state-funded obligation. From an 22 infrastructure standpoint, that has evolved as I understand it from over the decades, and where, maybe, 23 30 years ago plus. Those were maybe more county funded. Certainly, in my time at the State Court 24 Administrator's Office over the last 20 years, that has been, by and large, a state obligation. There's 25 statutory language that that's been discussed a lot in the General Assembly about the division of costs 26 between counties and the State as it relates to courthouse facilities. Generally, the way things have been 27 funded, the Counties are responsible for the building itself, and a certain part of the infrastructure. We're 28 responsible for filling that courthouse up, whether it's with staff, furnishings, and, really of late, the 29 network and IT infrastructure that go with it. I would not really find it advantageous for us to be in a 30 situation, although it would cost the State less for the Counties to have that obligation, the uneven 31 funding from county to county in that IT infrastructure and our engagement and the impact on 32 operations could be pretty substantial. We've got counties in vastly different financial postures across the 33 State, as you well know. And, in terms of continuity of service, we feel the current funding approach is 34 the best approach. Finally, I think Representative McCluskie for our last question, had a question about 35 our courthouse facilities programs, some history there. We put a fairly exhaustive history of funding.
36 Who's been funded over the years, for what purposes, etc. I could, we have easily blown through our 37 hour. But I'm happy to, if there are specific questions about our facilities. Funded programs, we have 38 three main sources of funding related to courthouse facilities, and I'm happy to speak at length if the 39 committee has any questions.

40

1 Sen. Moreno
2 Senator Hansen.

3
4 Sen. Hansen
5 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And just quickly on that, I really appreciate the back story or the back history. It's 6 fantastic to see how that's played out over the last few years. Anything for this committee to know about 7 kind of anticipated big project coming up, a new courthouse we know is going to have to come in a 8 certain jurisdiction that is likely going to need or will be applying for these resources?

9
10 Sen. Moreno
11 Mr. Vasconcellos.

12
13 Steven Vasconcellos
14 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Senator Hansen, forgive me as I fumble about in my binder here. We have, as 15 part of our request to the General Assembly this year. We have four projects identified. And, probably, 16 the marquee project on that list is in the 6th Judicial District in Archuleta County. Where they have 17 already broken ground on a new courthouse, and there will be furnishings and obligations for the new 18 courtrooms and the new probation office there. And, so, that's part of this year's request. There are some 19 other projects, a significant remodel of, or I shouldn't say remodel. It's a modernization, frankly, of the 20 facility in San Juan County, also in the 6th Judicial District. And, in a couple of instances, counties are 21 moving us around. Counties, ultimately being responsible for providing the physical space. On occasion, 22 approach us and say, you need to move. And, so, in Weld County, there is some remodeling happening 23 in the probation department to move them into some new space and create some new space for the 24 probation department. Additionally, the main probation office in the 17th Judicial District is being 25 relocated within the City of Westminster. So, we're going to a different building there, and that has costs 26 associated in this year's request.

27
28 Sen. Moreno
29 Colleagues, we have been joined by a number of our fellow colleagues. I just want to thank and 30 welcome Representatives Benevides, Woodrow, Weissman and Representative-elect Daugherty for 31 joining us. Thank you for being here. Representative Weissman, you had a question?

32
33 Rep. Weissman
34 Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. And I think this is by way of following up on Senator Hansen's question 35 about sort of upcoming major projects. Mr. Vasconcellos, apologize, I know this is generally a forum for 36 you to speak to questions previously put by the committee. I'll confess that Senator Hansen just sort of 37 put me in mind of this one. You were speaking of sort of physical projects. And I'm aware of the issue 38 that's been going on in Southwest Colorado with physical facilities. I wonder if you could speak to any 39 significant upcoming, essentially, software or system overhauls. Specifically, I think, you know, I have 40 an interest in record sealing policy. And I won't ask you to go into the policy aspects of that, but because

1 we are not a unified registry, State and Judicial has custody of the case records, and CBI has custody of 2 the arrest records. There are sometimes just operational problems in trying to effectuate policy. And it's 3 been suggested to me in another conversation that there might be some upgrades going on anyway that 4 might tend to facilitate that kind of thing. I wonder if you're in a position to say more about that and the 5 timelines. And, if I'm catching you off guard, I also be happy to follow up offline. Thank you.

6

7 Sen. Moreno

8 Mr. Vasconcellos.

9

10 Steven Vasconcellos

11 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Representative Weissman, you have successfully caught me off guard. I need to 12 check in with my IT director and see the status of the issue that you're referring to. I'd be more than 13 happy to follow up with you, both in writing and happy to discuss the issue at length with you. If you're 14 interested.

15

17 Great. Thank you.

18

19 Rep. Weissman

20 Thank you.

21

22 Sen. Moreno

23 That, committee, concludes the questions that were submitted for response from the Department. Are 24 there any final questions? Senator Hansen.

25

26 Sen. Hansen

27 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And, yeah, just, I guess, one other subject. And Mr. Chief Justice, that this will 28 be a bit of a rewind the clock by one year, because I think we had a great back and forth last year about 29 court sealing of documents. And I wonder, from what you described basically 12 months ago, which 30 seems like 10 years ago now, but that was something that was a kind of a discussion you were having 31 with your Chief Judges in each District about trying to understand how much it's being used, and what 32 potential bumpers and procedures might be put in place around that. And, I think I raised the concern 33 last year about the use and perhaps overuse. And I don't prejudge that, but that was essentially what I 34 was asking you last year. And your very thoughtful response was, Hey, we're going to take a hard look 35 at this. We're going to talk about this. And I wonder if I might ask you today, you know, what came of 36 that process? If there's any direction that you have with your colleagues. On, you know, are there need 37 for any change or reform and how court sealing are ordered around the State?

38

40 Mr. Chief Justice.

1 Chief Justice Coats

2 Yes, Senator Hansen. I remember our discussion. We got derailed a little bit in terms of timing. But we 3 were talking particularly about a change in the criminal rules. Was a big part of that discussion, I take it.
4 And we had a committee process going on. I think, at the time, I told you that we were expecting 5 something from the committee imminently. We did get it, and we scheduled that for a public hearing as 6 a result of the pandemic. That's all got bumped off until we wound up having a virtual hearing in 7 September. And it was quite lively, and there was a lot of discussion, and some members from the 8 representatives, lawyers from the press spoke. As a result of that, we actually took it back in hand in the 9 Court and worked a little bit back and forth with the committee. But, basically, didn't want to send it 10 back to them, lest it get back into a committee process forever. I can tell you, today, the Court took a 11 final vote on that, our criminal Rule 55.1. Which was substantially written even within the Court, as a 12 result of the public comments and the comments by, particularly Mr. Zansberg, on behalf of some of the 13 press. And, so, that probably, that Rule won't take effect for several months because it involves enough 14 changes we need to make some technological change to be able to accommodate the kinds of motions 15 and things that will be involved. But, probably no later than the beginning of April that rule will take 16 effect then. And it's not. You talked about the, I think, the ABA model rule a little bit last time. As I 17 explained, we probably were not going exactly in that direction and everything that it was doing. But it 18 is a substantial rule that lays out a process. One that expressly permits for motions to seal, requires 19 notice to the other side, requires, has various hearing and entertainment requirements and requirements 20 on the part of the courts to specify times, suspension dates, call backs when it has to be reviewed. All 21 intended to solve this problem of sealing without totally ex parte sealing. And, then, the problem we had 22 that led to all this of it just sort of disappearing into a black hole. So, that should take effect shortly.

23

24 Sen. Hansen

25 Thank you. I really appreciate that. I guess perfect timing on my question. This would be my chance to 26 do some light reading over the weekend. Go read 55.1. So, thank you.

27

28 Sen. Moreno

29 All right, Mr. Chief Justice, Mr. Vasconcellos, would you like any closing comments?

30

31 Chief Justice Coats

32 I don't believe I do, thank you.

33

34 Sen. Moreno

35 Very grateful for your presentation today and the comprehensive information you submitted. Thank you.

36

37 Steven Vasconcellos

38 Thank you, committee. We appreciate your time and wish you well on the difficult task ahead.

39

40

1 Sen. Moreno
2 Thank you, and thank you as well to Justice Boatright for being here as well. Senator Hansen.

3
4 Sen. Hansen
5 I don't want to lose this opportunity. This may be the last time we see you with your current title. And I 6 just want to express a very heartfelt thank you for your service to the State. I think all of us, in one form 7 or another, in public service, know the ups, the downs, the costs to the sacrifices you've made to help
8 lead this State. And I just really, I want to publicly express that as you wind up your tenure. And I really 9 appreciate your service to Colorado.

10
11 Chief Justice Coats
12 Thank you very much.

13
14 Sen. Moreno
15 Representative Herod.

16
17 Rep. Herod
18 Thank you. And I'll just echo that and just add that the State of Colorado is better because of your 19 service, and that we are forever grateful. So, thank you.

20
21 Chief Justice Coats
22 Very generous. Thank you.

23
24 Sen. Moreno
25 Thank you again, Mr. Chief Justice. I think a round of applause from the committee is in order, thank 26 you for your service. [Applause].

21

22 Sen. Lee

23 Thank you, Ms. Jenson. We do have a quorum. I hear an echo in the background. Well, anyway, I'd like 24 to welcome the members and staff and public to the opening round of the House-Senate, Judiciary 25 Committee hearings. I'd like, in particular, to welcome new members in the House, Representatives 26 Daugherty, Luck, Bacon, and Lynch. And we have some new members to the Judiciary Committee, so I 27 welcome you as well. Look forward to working with you over the course of the next year. Let me 28 encourage active participation in all Judiciary Committee hearings. The only inappropriate question is 29 the one that did not get asked. So, if you have questions, ask the questions.

30

31 Today, we are having the SMART Act hearings. The SMART Act was set up pursuant to House Bill 13-32 1299. It stands for State Measurement for Accountable, Responsive, and Transparent government. It 33 basically requires the executive committee and the Judicial Branch and other state government agencies 34 to publicly share their annual performance goals. They share at the beginning of each fiscal year, and the 35 Act requires the Executive Branch to implement performance plans and performance management 36 systems throughout each of the Departments, and to incorporate continuous policy improvements to 37 increase government efficiency and to ensure that state employees obtain training on such things. So, we 38 have, I think, 9 Departments and Independent Agencies that operate under the Judiciary Committees of 39 the House and Senate as the committees of reference, and we will also hear from the State Auditor and a 40 report from CCJJ on the work that they have been doing on criminal and juvenile justice reform.

1 As a matter of procedure, I'm going to ask members to hold questions until the end of the presentation, 2 excepting those questions which are brief and clarifying in nature. Both to let the presenters get through 3 their materials and reduce the chances of technological feedback. All documents are available online, 4 and the public has been invited to participate. They can either submit written testimony, or there will be 5 opportunities at the end of each presentation by departments and agencies for the public to testify, if they 6 so choose. So, with that in mind and seeing no questions, I welcome the State Auditor to present.

7
8 I see Vickie Heller is with us. I wanted to note at the outset, because we do have some new members, 9 both to the Legislature and on the Judiciary Committee, that the function of the State Auditor is 10 absolutely critical and important to good government. Here in Colorado, they will do performance 11 audits, financial audits. They will find the money left in the couch or inappropriate operations in any of 12 the Departments and you, as members, can request an audit. We would encourage you to contact the 13 State Auditor's Office, if you want additional information. And I would note also that Dianne Ray, the 14 State Auditor, was acknowledged and recognized this year by the National State Auditors Association as 15 the Auditor of the Year. So, she is recognized by her peers, which is a high honor. With that in mind, I 16 turn it over to Ms. Heller, if you will introduce yourself and whoever might be with you and provide us 17 with your report.

18
19 Vickie Heller

20 Thank you and, actually, Deputy Kerri Hunter was going to start briefly. And, then, I was going to go 21 into our audit reports, if that works.

22
23 Sen. Lee

24 That's fine. Thank you. Welcome, Ms. Hunter.

25
26 Kerri Hunter

27 Thank you, Mr. Chair. This is Kerri Hunter. I'm a Deputy State Auditor with the Office of the State 28 Auditor. And Ms. Heller and I are here this morning to provide you with an update related to the 29 SMART Government Act. For our part, the SMART Act requires our Office to update the various 30 committees of reference each year on the audits that we've conducted over the last year and the audit 31 recommendations that still need to be implemented by those agencies that each committee oversees. So, 32 we'll be providing a brief update on that this morning. As a reminder about our Office, the State Auditor 33 is part of the Legislative Branch, is established in the State's Constitution, and serves as the State's 34 independent external auditor. And our responsibility is to audit state programs. We perform three types 35 of audits, financial audits, performance audits, as well as information technology or IT audits. And one 36 of the results of our audits is to make recommendations to the State Departments and Agencies. Those 37 recommendations address such things as improvements in operations, compliance with laws and 38 regulations, as well as possible areas to increase efficiencies or to improve accountability. And each 39 year, we do issue about 50 audits. So, you should have received electronic copies of the reports that we'll 40 be providing in summary to you this morning, in case you want to have them for your reference during

1 our presentation. And, then, you should have also received a copy of our Office's Annual Report that 2 provides more general information about our Office. So, with that, Mr. Chair, I would like to turn it back 3 over to Ms. Heller to provide the update.

4
5 Sen. Lee

6 Thank you, Ms. Hunter. Ms. Heller, welcome to the joint Senate House-Judiciary Committee, virtual as 7 it may be.

8
9 Vickie Heller

10 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And, so, last year, our Office conducted performance audits under the SMART 11 Act at two of the Departments that this committee oversees. So, today I'm going to talk a little bit about 12 each of those two. And then after that, I'll also give you guys some information from the Annual Report 13 that our Office publishes about older audit recommendations.

15 So, first I'm going to talk about our audit at the Judicial Department. For this audit, we focused on the 16 State Court Administrator's Office, and our report was released by the Legislative Audit Committee last 17 month, in December. And, in that copy of the report that you should have received, there is a summary 18 page of the audit report highlights, and that's on page 3 of the report, just after the Table of Contents. In 19 general, the core function of the State Court Administrator's Office is to provide administrative support 20 to the entire Judicial Department. So, this includes financial services, such as handling procurement and 21 managing the Department's human resources function. In our audit, we looked at how this Office has 22 been managing these types of internal functions, and overall, we had findings and recommendations in a 23 variety of the HR and financial service areas. So, to give you just a very general, high-level sense, these 24 included problems with how the Office manages paid administrative leave for its staff, how it awards 25 separation incentives to staff who voluntarily leave their positions. We also saw that it lacked some key 26 HR documents related to FMLA cases and staff disciplinary investigations, and we saw issues in how it 27 awarded contracts without support for why it used sole-source contracting instead of going through a 28 vendor bidding process. And, last, we saw issues in how it managed and approved staff use of 29 Procurement Cards. So, altogether, the specific issues that we found were significant enough to lead us 30 to conclude that overall, this Office's culture and management, Tone at the Top, during the period that 31 we reviewed were not fostering accountability or integrity.

32
33 And, so, we made recommendations that the Judicial Department implement a number of different 34 policies and practices to address the specific problems that we saw. For example, one recommendation 35 is to set some limits on how many hours of administrative leave that staff can take. But, we also made 36 broader recommendations in an attempt to help address the Office's bigger cultural issues with 37 accountability. And, so, for example, by conducting monitoring activities and in particular involving 38 more than one member of management to review and approve sole-source contracting. The Judicial 39 Department reviewed our report, and they agreed with all of our recommendations, and the Chief Justice 40 of the Supreme Court and the State Court Administrator talked to the Legislative Audit Committee last

1 month about how they will implement all of our recommendations. They'll also be updating the 2 Legislative Audit Committee later this year, in the Summer, on their progress. Mr. Chair, that's all I have 3 on that audit. And, so, I can pause here for questions, or I can move to the second audit.

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 Well, let's hold on. Questions? I can't see all the members, so I don't know if members have questions.
7 In particular, I can't see Representative Weissman on my screen. Is Rep. Weissman with us?

8

9 Rep. Weissman

10 I am here, Mr. Chair, if it would help. You know, if I'm in a better position being in the room to observe 11 members here, you know I can handle the calling on folks here, if you'd like, when we get to questions.

12

13 Sen. Lee

14 Sure, let's say. I can see some of the members. I can see about 8 of them. But, yeah, that might be 15 helpful. Do you see questions that would be helpful? Does anyone have any questions? Representative 16 Benevides?

18 Rep. Benevides

19 Yeah, and I raised my hand on this function. So, I don't know if you can see those.

20

21 Sen. Lee

22 Just raise your hand on the screen, Representative. I can see that, there you go. I'm sort of a hands-on 23 guy.

25 Rep. Benevides

26 My question was to Ms. Heller. I did listen to the JBC presentation on this. I'm just wondering if, 27 because there were so many issues, especially contracting issues, were there any criminal referrals of 28 your audit?

29

30 Sen. Lee

31 Ms Heller.

33 Vickie Heller

34 Thank you, Mr. Chair. No, there were not. Not as a result of this audit. I might defer back to Deputy 35 Hunter for specifics, but I can tell you that, in addition to this audit, there were fraud allegations that, 36 under a separate function of our Office, separate staff are looking into the fraud allegations. And if 37 Deputy Hunter wants to elaborate on that, she may. But, I do know that because of media attention that 38 that led to this audit, there were also fraud allegations that are leading to a fraud investigation that's 39 ongoing at this point in time.

40

1 Sen. Lee
2 Ms. Hunter do you want to elaborate on any of that?

3
4 Kerri Hunter
5 Thank you, Mr. Chair, at this point I really cannot, because it's ongoing. But we are in the midst of 6 looking into that.

7
8 Sen. Lee
9 Okay, just as a general question, then, for either of you. Following the conduct of the audit and revealing 10 of the misfeasance and malfeasance, you met with the State Court Administrator's Office. Were they 11 receptive and responsive to the recommendations that you made? Were they acknowledging the issues 12 that you identified? Or were they in denial? And what was the outcome of those discussions? You made 13 recommendations. Did they acknowledge them and implement changes? Who wants that?

15 Vickie Heller
16 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I can take that.

17
18 Sen. Lee
19 Go ahead Ms. Heller.

20
21 Vickie Heller
22 For the audit, I was the Performance Audit Manager for this audit, and I would say, yes. They were very 23 receptive to our recommendations, and, I guess, I can elaborate just a little bit more. To help distinguish 24 the fraud investigation that's happening, I would imagine, would have to do with any criminal charges or 25 anything specific on instances of fraud. The audit was conducted to look at the State Court 26 Administrator's Office, more generally. To see if there are general weaknesses or deficiencies in their 27 systems and their processes. So that, you know, if there's a risk that something's happening or could 28 happen, that our recommendations help address that. And, so, I would say that the Chief Justice of the 29 Supreme Court, who is now retired, and there is a new gentleman. But the State Court Administrator 30 who is still in place, who was not in place during the period that our audit reviewed, both were very 31 receptive to our audit recommendations and talked to the Legislative Audit Committee last month quite 32 a bit about how they specifically plan to implement the recommendations that we have. We typically 33 give auditees anywhere from 6 months to a year to come back to the Legislative Audit Committee to, 34 then, talk about what they have implemented or have not. And that is the plan for this audit. That at 35 some point later this year, most likely at the end of the Summer, the current Chief Justice of the 36 Supreme Court and the current State Court Administrator will talk about what they put into place. But 37 they do plan to implement everything that we recommended, is what they reported to us.

38
39 Sen. Lee
40 Okay. Representative Benevides.

1 Rep. Benevides

2 And thank you, Ms. Heller. And, you know, fraud can result in administrative findings, not just criminal.
3 Particularly with regard to the separation incentives, where those can be clawed back if they were 4 improper. As well as the almost 50,000 in potentially problematic Procurement Card [use]. That, also, 5 can be clawed back from the employees, and there can be administrative matters taken up as far as 6 discipline. So, it's not just criminal. So, I'm just wondering, are you all looking at those aspects and 7 expecting something to be done or by the Judiciary?
8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Ms. Heller.

12 Vickie Heller

13 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would say, for the purposes of the audit and the types of recommendations we 14 make, our focus in the audit was to point out and conclude and make recommendations to change the 15 overall system and process. So, what you are talking about is a little bit different, more specific, and I 16 guess I would just recommend potentially asking the Judicial Department about those specific questions 17 when they're here to talk to you, which I believe is not today, but maybe about your Thursday meeting.
18 They'll be reporting to you about what they're doing.
19

20 Sen. Lee

21 Okay, very good. Seeing no further questions. Why don't we move on, Ms. Heller or Ms. Hunter, with 22 any further reporting.
23

24 Vickie Heller

25 Thank you, Mr. Chair. So, next, I'm going to turn to our audit at the Department of Public Safety. And 26 for this one, we focused our review on the Sex Offender Management Board. Our report for this audit 27 was released by the Legislative Audit Committee about 6 months ago. This was in July 2020, and for 28 this audit report two, that you should have received, there is a summary highlights page on page 3, right 29 after that Table of Contents. In the report, if you'd like to take a look at that. So, at the Department of 30 Public Safety, the Sex Offender Management Board has 25 members, and their primary function is to 31 develop and to keep updated a set of standards of conduct as well as processes that all of the state 32 agencies and the service providers who are involved with the treatment or management of sex offenders 33 must follow. The Board is statutorily responsible for making sure that any of the standards that it creates 34 are evidence based, and this is with the overarching intent to prioritize protecting victims and potential 35 victims and to promote factors that help keep offenders from re-offending. The Board's responsible for 36 approving applications from providers who wish to treat sex offenders, as well. And they're also 37 responsible for investigating any complaints that are made about those providers. And, so, in this audit, 38 our Office found that most of the published Board standards do not reference supporting evidence, as is 39 required by statute. And, so, we made recommendations that the Board implement some more policies 40 and some better procedures. Essentially, to better guide how its members establish and update the 1 standards, including that the standards themselves more clearly note which ones are evidence based, 2 which are not, and why not.

3

5 Ms. Heller, if you could elaborate on that a little bit. I read that report, spent a good deal of time reading 6 that report. And, as I recall, there was a significant number of standards that did not have evidence-based 7 research supporting them. And, as I recall, it was like 4 out of 19, but it's been 6 months or more since I 8 read that report. Can you elaborate a little bit on what you found with respect to the lack of evidence to 9 support the standards that were implemented?

10

11 Vickie Heller

12 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Sure thing. I can tell you. The Board standards comprise hundreds and hundreds 13 of pages of requirements and direction and guidance to providers and to state agencies. And, so, what we 14 report in our audit report, what we found, is that, I believe, it's just about 380 of the different sections of 15 the Board standards. We saw that only 18% of those 380 sections referenced the evidence, the research 16 that was used to support that this standard should be in place. Within the report, we talk about our 17 methodology for what else we looked at and how we talked to the Board members. The Board 18 establishes different subsets of Board members, committees to conduct research. It has staff at the 19 Department of Public Safety help it decide what standards to put in place based on research and 20 evidence. And what we found was, generally, there just wasn't really a process or a way to show what 21 work these committees of Board members were doing to get to a point where they decided, here is what 22 evidence is out there, and here is what we should use to establish a standard. And, so, we do talk about 23 all that in the report. We report as well, the reasons that the Board gave for why something might not be 24 evidence-based. One thing in particular, for example, is that there is quite a bit less research, they stated 25 for standards that have to do with juvenile offenders. And, so, in some cases, there just is not scientific 26 evidence at that point in time to support a standard. And, so, we ultimately recognized that there could 27 be good reasons for not having evidence to support a standard or to, if there is conflicting evidence, to 28 choose one set of research versus something else. We absolutely agree that that is the Board's charge, to 29 decide that. Our recommendation came down to transparency and accountability. And, essentially, just 30 putting something in the standards that it's clear to anybody reading them. Why? Whether there is 31 evidence, and if there's not, why there is not? So, a little bit more transparency in the work that the 32 Board is doing. Instead of just, you know, explaining to the auditors verbally, oh, this is what happened 33 in this case, or what happened in this case. We felt that that should be apparent within the standards and 34 within the Board's documented kind of decisions.

35

36 Sen. Lee

37 Okay, so what else did you find in your audit of SOMB, Ms. Heller?

38

40

1 Vickie Heller

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair. So, we also found some instances where the Board didn't follow the requirements 3 that it's set up for minimum qualifications for treatment providers. And we found instances where the 4 Board didn't investigate complaints as they're required to be by statute. And, so, we had 5 recommendations that it improve its processes in those two areas, as well. Finally, we found instances of 6 Board members who did have conflicts of interest that were not disclosed. For example, when the Board 7 voted on changes to its standards that affected the businesses that some Board members owned or 8 directed. And, so, we also made some recommendations for the Board to better demonstrate that it's 9 mitigating conflicts in line with the State Code of Ethics. The Department of Public Safety and the 10 Board agreed with all of our recommendations, here as well, and they'll be updating the Legislative 11 Audit Committee this Summer on their progress.

12

13 Sen. Lee

14 Okay. Thank you, Ms. Heller. I'd like to welcome and acknowledge Senator Cooke, who has joined our 15 hearings. Anything else on SOMB, Ms. Heller?

17 Vickie Heller

18 Not on SOMB. Mr. Chair, thank you.

19

20 Sen. Lee

21 Why don't you continue, then?

22

23 Vickie Heller

24 Thank you, Mr. Chair. So, under the SMART Act, our Office is also required to give you an update on 25 the older audit recommendations that we've made in prior years that still need to be implemented. And, 26 so, I'll shift gears a bit, and I'll provide you that update now. In addition to the two audit reports, you 27 should have received a copy of our informational report, and this one is titled audit report, a status of 28 audit recommendations that are not fully implemented as of June 30, 2020. This is a report that our 29 Office issues every December. And it compiles all of the audit recommendations that our Office has 30 made over the prior five-year period. And, so, this one covers fiscal years, 2015, through 2019, and it 31 gives you details about all of the performance, financial, and IT recommendations that still needed to be 32 implemented as of last June, 2020. If you look at this report, that very first section gives some overview 33 information and statistics on all of the state agencies. For example, if you look at the very first couple of 34 pages, if you start on page 2 in the section that's noted Summary Information. There, we note that our 35 Office made a grand total of about 1,500 audit recommendations. And on page 4 of the report, we note 36 that the state agencies agreed to implement 98% of these recommendations. If you turn to page 5, there 37 is a large table taking up that whole page called Exhibit 2. And, there, we give you a list of all of the 38 agencies that still need to implement audit recommendations. In this table, looking at the far right at the 39 bottom of that dark red column there, you can see that there are a total of 95 recommendations that still 40 needed to be implemented as of June 2020.

1 And I will point you to an example. This committee oversees the Department of Corrections, and you'll 2 see them listed here because they've reported to us that they still need to implement four 3 recommendations. In that table, the Department of Law is also listed and they still need to implement 4 one recommendation. The majority of the rest of this report is organized so that there's a section for each 5 agency that has recommendations to implement. So, now if you look for the section for the Department 6 of Corrections, this starts on page 23 electronically in the paper copy. It's listed as Roman numeral II-1.
7 It's the second tab. You'll see there that for the five-year period that this report covers for Department of 8 Corrections, we made a grand total of 87 recommendations. And, there, you'll see that 4 again that I 9 mentioned, which are the ones that still need to be implemented. Scrolling or turning to the next page, 10 which is page 24 or Roman numeral II-2. You can see more detail there about the four recommendations 11 that Department of Corrections still needs to implement. You can see that these are all from performance 12 audits, and they're highlighted in orange. Any recommendation in this report that's highlighted orange is 13 high priority, and that means that the recommendation either relates to a more severe problem or that it 14 hasn't been implemented for three years or longer. In the table here with the Department of Corrections, 15 four orange high priority recommendations, we give you information that includes the original audit 16 report title and the date that it was released, then each recommendation number and a brief description 17 of what the recommendation was and the implementation status. And, so, a status of partially 18 implemented, which is what these recommendations have, means that the Department has taken some 19 steps to implement. The table also shows the original implementation date that the Department gave us 20 when we made the recommendation, and then the current implementation date that they've most recently 21 provided. And you can see here for these 4, for our audit of the behavioral health programs at 22 corrections, they are now reporting an implementation date of June of this year. I can tell you these 4 23 recommendations are the only high priority recommendations that this committee has. But, if any of you 24 have other SMART hearings to attend, then you may hear about other departments those committees 25 that are also listed in this report.

26

27 Sen. Lee

28 Well, we can highlight the fact that both Public Safety and Judicial have no audit recommendations to 29 implement. So, in addition to pointing out where we have some deficiencies, we should point out the 30 ones who have done what they were asked to do and agreed to do. So, thank you, Ms. Heller. Are there 31 any questions on any of those issues? Seeing none, go right ahead.

33 Vickie Heller

34 Thank you. Mr. Chair, the only other thing I'd like to mention is just to remind everyone here to let you 35 know that at the very end of this large report on page 106, the very back page, we show you there how to 36 find any of the audit reports that we've released on our website. If anyone is interested. That concludes 37 my presentation today, Mr. Chair. Thank you.

38

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Okay, thank you. We also have a note in the chat from Mr. Lobanov-Rostovsky, who's the head of the 3 SOMB, indicating that there is a website dashboard, and he gives you the citation to it. And we will be 4 having a hearing with the SOMB. So, let's proceed on, at this point, and not have any further questioning 5 on this one. Anything else, Ms. Heller or Ms. Hunter that you want to talk to us about?

6

7 Vickie Heller

8 No, Mr. Chair. Thank you so much.

9

10 Sen. Lee

11 Okay, any questions committee? Seeing none, we thank you very much for your presentation this 12 morning, and thank you, as usual, for the good work that you did on behalf of the people the State of 13 Colorado. Thank you.

Appendix 27(f)

Transcript of Hearing before the J. Judiciary Comm., January 28, 2021 (Jud. Dep't SMART Act Presentation);

Joint Judiciary Committee—January 28, 2021 SMART Act Hearing: Colorado Judicial Department

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Okay, the Joint Judiciary SMART Act hearings will come back to order. Excuse me, for the afternoon
3 portion of our business. We are joined by the Chief Justice of the Colorado Supreme Court and State 4 Court Administrator, Mr. Vasconcellos. Gentlemen, thank you for being here in person. We know that 5 there's a lot bearing down on the Judicial Branch of the State, and we look forward to hearing updates 6 from you. So, please go ahead.
7

8 Steven Vasconcellos

9 Thank you, Mr. Chair. My name is Steven Vasconcellos. I'm the State Court Administrator for the 10 Colorado Judicial Department. With me today is Chief Justice Brian Boatright. I'm going to kick us off 11 and then hand it over to the Chief, if you don't mind. We've got a lot of information to cover today.
12 Obviously, we've got our statutory obligations under the SMART act, but there are several of the 13 moment issues that I think the general assembly and particularly our committees of reference, we 14 believe should hear about. And, so, if it's okay, Mr. Chair, we'd like to start there, if possible. First, 15 while many of you are probably already familiar with the business of the courts and probation in 16 Colorado for some of the newer members, we just wanted to very briefly, sort of orient you to the 17 organization. We are, of course, a statewide entity with a presence for courts and probation and every 18 county in the State of Colorado. We have just under 4,000 members of our personnel. About 3,500 staff 19 in the trial courts and probation and about 340 judges and justices. We have a diverse range of business.
20 I think people tend to think of criminal cases first and foremost in our business, but we have a half a 21 million new case filings every year in a diverse matter of topics. Whether that's divorces, juvenile 22 matters, small claims. Large and small, all kinds of cases all over the great State of Colorado.
23 Additionally, we are the single largest supervising agency of offenders in the state, and our daily rate 24 right now is about 75,000 offenders in community supervision in Colorado.
25

26 Chief Justice Boatright

27 I am going to apologize in advance, because I'm probably not very good at how the protocol and all that.
28

29 Rep. Weissman

30 Please proceed, Mr. Chief Justice.
31

32 Chief Justice Boatright

33 Thank you. Let me introduce myself. I'm Brian Boatright. I am the Chief Justice of the Colorado 34 Supreme Court. I started on January 1, so I'm still trying to figure out where the light switches are and 35 all of that. Obviously, there are seven members on our Court. I would say that on our Court, in my nine-36 years that I've been on the Court, I think we have reached an all-time high in terms of collegiality and,

1 not coincidentally, productivity. Last year, despite the pandemic, we produced as many opinions as we 2 have in the last 12 years.

3
4 One thing that we changed when I became Chief. We decided this prior to my selection, as you may 5 know, unlike the U.S. Supreme Court, we select our own Chief. And we decided to go to terms instead 6 of just having this sort of indefinite end and all the way to retirement. And people have asked, What's 7 the term? Because we didn't formally announce it, and I will tell you that my term will either be two and 8 a half years or three and a half years. And part of that is we learned this past year to be a little more 9 nimble. You know, ideally, if Chief Justice Coats didn't need to retire because of the mandatory 10 requirement, we would loved to have had him continue.

11 12 Ideally, we would make the transition during the Summer, rather than walking right into the legislative 13 session and being asked to testify in the SMART Act, like in your first month. The other thing that has 14 changed, I think, significantly on our Court, and this happened over the last year and a half, and I'm 15 proud to say, it was at my suggestion, we have greatly increased our administrative responsibilities 16 amongst the Justices. Part of that is accountability. Part of that is visibility. We wanted to get out in front 17 of our people and let them know that we care. So, we have created liaisons to the IT Department, the 18 Finance Department, the Clerks of Court, the Court Executives, the Probation Department, because we 19 want them to know that we're there to serve them in our role through the State Court Administrator's 20 Office.

21
22 Steven Vasconcellos

23 One of the catalysts for that greater engagement between the Court and the various arms of the Branch, 24 including, importantly, the State Court Administrator's Office, was a recent Performance Audit of the 25 State Court Administrator's Office, I believe, the Office of the State Auditor several days ago, gave you 26 an update on that, and I just wanted to cover it briefly from my perspective. You know, the final report 27 was released, and a hearing was held in December of this year, and there were six main topical areas, 28 and I'll not go through those in depth unless there are specific questions. And of course, I'm more than 29 happy to meet outside of the hearing at your convenience if there are follow-up questions or the interest 30 in a longer discussion about the audit. But the bottom line is that the State Court Administrator's Office 31 had several profound deficiencies. And there were six main areas of recommendation by the Office of 32 the State Auditor. We agreed and the Supreme Court agreed with every single recommendation made by 33 the Office of the State Auditor. I've been the State Court Administrator just over a year. The audit 34 started right at the beginning of my tenure, and one of the most important things in this initial period of 35 my service as State Court Administrator is successfully implementing every single one of the 36 recommendations to put our Office in a better footing, to serve trial courts and probation across the 37 State, and to serve the people of the State of Colorado. I take that responsibility very seriously. In fact, 38 we came to the hearing with what we viewed as the most serious recommendations around some of our 39 contracting procedures already implemented. Those changes are already in and, in fact, we're on pace to 40 implement all of the audit recommendations by July of this year.

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 And what I would add to that is you have my personal commitment that we're going to fulfill all of those 3 obligations in a timely fashion. And if you have any concerns about any of those recommendations, I 4 welcome you to reach out to me, personally. You have my commitment.

5

6 Steven Vasconcellos

7 In the interest of time, Mr. Chair, I'm just going to keep on rolling unless the committee has questions. Is 8 that all right?

9

10 Rep. Weissman

11 Sure. Since you asked, let's pause just for a sec. Committee questions so far? Yeah, I think I see Rep.
12 Woodrow's hand raised. Representative, go ahead.

14 Rep. Woodrow

15 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was just wondering if you could speak. Thank you very much for being here, 16 gentlemen and Justice, Chief Justice, it's always good to see you. Could you speak to what those 17 recommendations were?

18

19 Steven Vasconcellos

20 I'm happy to and I apologize for the record I, did not.

21

23 Mr. Vasconcellos, please go ahead.

24

25 Steven Vasconcellos

26 Thank you. Mr. Chair, the six main areas of recommendation were, first, procedures regarding voluntary 27 separation agreements. And I will just say, sort of at an overall level, as our organization grew over the 28 years. You know, there's a certain administrative infrastructure in any state organization, and it's kind of 29 the plumbing and electric of an organization, the real basic functions. And it's been my perspective that 30 we just didn't focus on modernizing those, updating those as needed, and, frankly, taking notice of how 31 the Executive Branch has evolved in those areas. And a lot of what we're implementing are really 32 looking toward current Executive Branch procedures and adopting those as our own. But the first main 33 finding area was in the area of voluntary separation agreements. These happen, you know, due to 34 reorganization or budget shortfalls, what have you. The Executive Branch has a pretty clear set of 35 procedures and policies about when they can and can't be used, how they're how they're to be reviewed, 36 etc. We had one, one or two sentences in our in our Personnel Rules. And while I'm not looking for a 37 Byzantine, overly complicated structure, it was just too loose. And it wasn't clear what the review 38 procedures and approval procedures would be, what the oversight looks like, the kind of analysis 39 regarding cost and benefit to the organization from entering into these incentives are. And those are all 40 changes we're making to our Personnel Rules.

1 The second area was around the use of administrative leave in the Branch. And again, the Executive 2 Branch currently has some pretty clear guidance on when administrative leave can and cannot be used.
3 Limits around the use of in terms of volume of administrative leave. And we had one sentence that the 4 administrative leave must be for the benefit of the organization. And further, our time tracking system 5 just wasn't set up in a way to capture the reasons. And that was another big finding under administrative 6 leave, not so much that there was always a problem with the amount. But you can't tell why. And, so,
7 that's just not good record keeping. We need to be able to demonstrate clearly why administrative leave 8 was used, what the circumstance was, etc. And, so, again, we're looking to the Executive Branch 9 procedures to buff up our current internal policies around administrative leave and improving our IT 10 systems to just captured some, just real, basic information about, So why? Why did Steven take this time 11 off? You know, we've got there was a body of hours. It was something in the neighborhood of 3,000 12 hours of administrative leave across our organization that was identified as problematic. When we dug 13 into the data, almost all of it was between Christmas and New Year's, and much like the Governor does 14 annually, the Chief Justice often grants extra administrative days off. And I think the linkage is pretty 15 clear. The problem is, when you can't point to specific data that just says, "Chief Justice's day off," it 16 opens questions, and it's problematic. So, on that element, it's really just tightening up our procedures.

17
18 Our next main area was around HR record keeping. And this is really one of those real basic, if I can 19 plumbing and electric kind of issues. We weren't always storing our electronic personnel records in a 20 secure fashion. There weren't clear transition procedures. You know what happens when this key player 21 on the staff moves on to another job, or otherwise leaves employment with us. How do we manage those 22 transitions? Just frankly, too sloppy for an organization our size. We're a 4,000 person, $600 million 23 organization. I think some neighborhood lemonade stands were a little tighter on that than we are. And, 24 so, again, it's just fully inhabiting the size and scope and responsibility of an organization like ours.

26 The next area, I mentioned briefly was regarding sole-source contracting, probably the marquee area that 27 required attention. And, as I've mentioned, we've already made several personnel rule changes in that 28 area and are compliant with the audit recommendations, already. We came to the table at the hearing 29 with those changes already made. That's how important this one was to us, and it really goes to, you 30 know, when can we contract with former employees? Previously, we did not have a cooling off period 31 between the time of employment with the organization and when you could enter into an independent 32 contractor agreement with the Judicial Department. Cooling off periods are just standard. Public sector, 33 private sector. That's not rocket science. And, so, we again looked to the Executive Branch and adopted 34 their time frame, which is six-months. And, so, that change has already been made.

35
36 And, then, also buffing up our procedures around review input justification, so that we can demonstrate 37 transparently why. I want to be able to . . . One, sole-source agreements, by their very nature, should be 38 extraordinarily rare. And, two, anytime that I enter into one on behalf of the State Court Administrator's 39 Office, I want to feel comfortable sitting in front of a group like you and telling you why. And if I can't 40 meet those bars, then there's something wrong.

1 The next area was with regard to Procurement Cards. As you know, state agencies have to buy things on 2 short term credit, just like we do sometimes in our personal lives, and, so, we have a certain number of 3 Procurement Cards and people authorized to make those purchases within our Office at SCAO. And we 4 had some challenges with review procedures. And, in some instances, where the purchaser was also the 5 approver. And, again, not super complicated stuff we're talking about in a number of these areas. The 6 person who purchases should not be the person who approves. And, so, clarifying our Fiscal Rules 7 around that has already happened, and pushing out training. I don't want to belabor it. It's pretty 8 straightforward. But that's really kind of the thrust of the Procurement Card issue.

9
10 And then the final issue was entitled SCAO administrative environment, SCAO administrative culture.
11 And it's really a summation of all the previous issues. I have a responsibility as a State Court 12 Administrator to not just talk to you about the highest standards of behavior. But to actually, in my day-13 to-day work life, exhibit the highest behaviors. It's not what I say, it's how I behave that I'm ultimately 14 going to be judged on. And if you don't have that tone at the top of the organization, how can you expect 15 employees to behave in the same way? So really, I'd say a healthy organizational culture at SCAO has to 16 start with me and my position and how we behave. And, then, the administrative rule structure that we 17 create beneath it. Again, I should be able to. Any of the major decisions that we make, even the 18 mundane decisions. I should be able to sit with any audience and talk about, why. What were the 19 reasons? What are the benefits? What are the downsides? We all realize that running any organization of 20 any size, it's an art, not a science. And, there are sometimes judgment calls that need to be made. But 21 even when judgment calls are made, I should be able to have a clear justification, why. Demonstrate the 22 analysis that went in. Talk about, you know, how I worked with the Chief Justice, what gets brought to 23 the Chief Justice, what doesn't. All of those things are incredibly important to the health of an 24 organization. And, so, this last recommendation from the OSA was essentially, one, implement all of the 25 previous recommendations. And, two, the State Court Administrator needs to take seriously their 26 responsibility as. This is not the words they use, but the way I take it is, as an emotional leader of the 27 organization. If I'm not invested in the highest standard of behavior, how can I expect everyone else to 28 be?

29
30 Rep. Weissman

31 Okay. Thank you for the detailed answer. I think while we're at this point, Rep. Benevides also had a 32 question.

34 Rep Benevides

35 Yes, thank you for that answer. And I guess I had asked the Auditors this question, so I wanted to ask 36 you, as well. Is that these findings were significant, as far as over half a million in voluntary separation 37 incentives, and it was 27% of your administrative leave that was granted, that may have been improper.
38 There was 50,000 in Procurement Card issues, and then it was 6 out of 10 sole-source contracts. So, 39 while I appreciate you all, and I know this was not under your watch, sir. But, I appreciate you doing 40 training and fixing the Rules. And my question had to do with, as far as any of the employees who were

1 in this situation that received these incentives or had the errors. Because anybody that gets a 2 Procurement Card gets training and information when they receive it. So, is there a real push on your 3 behalf to maybe go after some of these individuals administratively and claw back some of those 4 payments, since it's such a significant amount? Because that's doable, along with potentially any 5 criminal referrals.

6
7 Steven Vasconcellos

8 Thank you, Mr. Chair.

9
10 Rep. Weissman

11 Mr. Vasconcellos.

12
13 Steven Vasconcellos

14 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Representative Benevides, thank you for your question. Not to minimize any of 15 the issues identified in the audit, but they're not all created equally, I would argue. Some are best 16 addressed through training, and at the other end of the scale, some of the folks involved are no longer 17 employed by the Colorado Judicial Department. So, you know, a range of responses commensurate with 18 the with the severity of the issue. You know, in terms of clawing back some of the money involved. If 19 we use the example, say, of the voluntary separation incentives, we entered into contractual agreements 20 with those parties, and based on the legal advice we received internally and from the Office of the 21 Attorney General, we felt the best course of action was to honor those legal agreements that we entered 22 into. Our big challenge with some of those VSIs, were they just weren't reviewed by our legal experts up 23 front, and had various deficiencies around, say, compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act, 24 etc. And, so, when I started, the first thing we had to do was get those reviewed and correct deficiencies.
25 But we had already entered into legal agreements on some of these matters. You know, in terms of any 26 criminal referrals, I am not aware and we have not found within our own review, overt criminal behavior 27 that merits review. However, I think many of you are aware that the Office of the State Auditor, beyond 28 the SCAO Performance Audit, is also conducting a fraud hotline investigation under the fraud hotline 29 statute. And, I think as the committee may know, when one of those is brought to light, the agency that's 30 subject to the investigation has several choices. They can conduct the investigation themselves. They 31 can partner with the OSA to conduct the investigation. Or the agency can hand the investigation solely 32 over to the OSA, which was the choice that we made. The latter, to have the OSA conduct the 33 investigation independently of us. And, so, you know, there's a range of things that could happen under 34 the fraud investigation, including, in the most extreme, a referral to a local District Attorney for fraud 35 charges. That investigation is ongoing. I don't have details to report. The OSA is still doing their work, 36 and I don't want to get too invasive in their investigation. I think it's better that they have a little bit of 37 independence in doing that. So, we'll see how some of this lands. I hope that answers your question, 38 Representative Benevides.

1 Rep Benevides

2 Yes.

3

4 Rep. Weissman

5 Okay, thank you. Just keeping an eye on the clock, why don't we invite you to keep moving through the 6 presentation? And, I'm sure we'll have more questions.

7

8 Steven Vasconcellos

9 So, no surprise. A worldwide, hopefully, once in a lifetime, pandemic has had a tremendous impact on 10 the operations of court and probation in Colorado. And there's several areas that we'd like to highlight 11 briefly for you. You know, the pandemic itself, almost a year ago now, when it really hit us full force, 12 created a whole host of kind of first time, first blush operational challenges. Which, in very short order, 13 were then complicated by, at least in my 25-year career, the largest budget reductions that we've ever 14 experienced in the Judicial Department, kind of compounding those operational challenges. Just briefly.
15 You know, we took a pretty, no different than every other element of state government, we took a pretty 16 substantial General Fund reduction to come into this fiscal year. And, unlike many other state agencies, 17 we don't really have a programmatic budget, per se. We are well over 90% personal services. We are an 18 agency of people. Our programs, if you will, are the statutory and constitutional requirements to hear 19 different kinds of cases. And, so, we can't choose unilaterally to stop hearing misdemeanors or not 20 process divorce cases or what have you. And, so, even at that very first dollar of budget reduction, it 21 implicates potential impact on staff. And ultimately, we lost approximately 200 positions at the 22 beginning of this fiscal year. Over half of them through layoff. Now, obviously, we saw this coming. At 23 the end of last fiscal year, we implemented a hiring freeze, which was able to help us somewhat. And, 24 so, a little less than half of the positions lost were through vacancies that we accrued through our hiring 25 freeze. But we did have some pretty substantial layoffs that touched most areas of the State. I made a 26 recommendation, a decision, a recommendation to the Chief Justice, former Chief Justice Coats, that my 27 Office, the State Court Administrator's Office take double its proportionate share of cuts. Now, we're not 28 an enormous office, we're about 200 people out of the entire 4,000. But, it was an attempt to try to 29 minimize the impact on the day to day operations of the Branch, where the work day to day really 30 happens in courts and in probation offices in our communities around the State. And, so, our Office took 31 double its proportionate share. But this cut, ultimately, touched most every trial court, most every 32 probation office, and the appellate courts here in Colorado. Again, as you can imagine, several 33 operational changes. And this is such a fluid environment. It's hard to talk about this statically. This is 34 what's happened. Because so many issues are changing month to month, week to week, and sometimes 35 day to day. But we've gone through extended periods with courthouses being closed for health/safety 36 reasons or very limited operations. We used to be able to just set up dockets and run them like 37 clockwork and move people through in an efficient, effective manner.

38

39 And the requirements for social distancing, while important, have tremendously complicated our 40 operations. And we are grateful for virtual tools. In some ways, the pandemic, I'm reluctant to call it a

1 silver lining. But the pandemic has forced us to look at some of our operations and modernize in ways 2 that we might not have, but for the pandemic. And one of those areas is through virtual hearings and 3 doing essentially hearings online via WebEx, using the same tools we're using here today, to keep 4 business going. And we've been very grateful. We had to figure it out in a very compressed time period.
5 And I'm sure folks like Senator Gardner, we might have tested their patience as they were participating 6 in some of those events, as we were trying to figure it out. But we're now at a point where, even in 7 looking toward the post pandemic horizon, virtual hearings are likely to stay. We don't see those going 8 away. That's an incredibly important tool. When you look in retrospect, is there really a reason to have 9 someone drive in to the county seat for a 15-minute status conference in person, when they can probably 10 do it from their living room? Those kind of things are here to stay. What I'm personally looking forward 11 to is the opportunity to use it in a more targeted fashion. I think there are some types of hearings that 12 lend themselves better to virtual proceedings than others. We are not doing trials virtually. And, as we'll 13 talk about here in a moment, trials are where we're really, really struggling in terms of workload and 14 backlog. Chief.

15

16 Chief Justice Boatright

17 I would amend that slightly, the jury trials. We are conducting a lot of trials, civil trials, to the court by 18 WebEx, hearing stories about that. I've had the opportunity since I started to have meetings with all of 19 the different Judicial Districts' Leadership, again, by WebEx. And one of the questions I've been asking 20 all of them is, what practices do you plan on carrying forward? And echoing what Mr. Vasconcellos 21 said, a lot of these short hearings where people are having to travel a long way. And, interestingly, also, 22 I think some probation services are going to change, because they're finding that there's some long-term 23 travel that they can cut back with regard, especially our rural districts, where we have very few service 24 providers, where they've been able to do some of these therapy sessions and some of their program 25 requirements remotely. And they plan on continuing that, as well. But, the one issue that we are having a 26 problem with is our jury trials, and specifically criminal. And I will tell you that, I could go on and on 27 about it, but I think these two numbers will sum it up. On January 19 of 2020, we had 2,718 criminal 28 jury trials scheduled across the entire State, 2,718. On January 19 of 2021, we have 14,635 trials 29 scheduled. In every month, that goes up by 1,200 jury trials. We simply cannot, keep up with all of the 30 demand with regard to jury trials. And part of that's because we're trying to do this safely, as well. I'll 31 give you two examples. In Boulder, they have 104 jury trials scheduled in March. And if they do 32 everything by social distancing standards, which we're doing right now, they can have one County Court 33 trial and one District Court trial per week. So, you can see that number is going to continue to go up. In 34 Arapahoe County, which is one of our a little more high-volume courts, they have 367 jury trials 35 scheduled in March, and they can try seven or eight jury trials in any given week. So, that's why that 36 number of 1,200 continues to go up. The other thing that we have done, and I completely support. And 37 frankly, we've gotten some criticism, is one size doesn't fit all. So, we have allowed the local Chief 38 Judges to control kind of how they're doing the trials and whether to commence trials and when to stop 39 them. And it's for a very simple reason. That is, as I said, one size doesn't fit all. The positivity rates vary 40 greatly. Yesterday, I looked. One of our Districts or one of our counties has a 13.8 positivity rate.

1 Another has a 1.9 so just those numbers alone indicate that we've got to, we've got to treat things 2 differently. We can't have one way of doing it. The other thing is, we have very different facilities. For 3 example, our courthouse in Montrose does not have a jury assembly room, so they have to use the other 4 courtroom to safely assemble the jury for a trial in another courtroom. So, we have those limitations that 5 we're facing.

6
7 Steven Vasconcellos

8 Yeah, no, I can. I'll kick us off. So, as you can imagine, we haven't been sitting on our heels. And we're, 9 in fact, very grateful that while the overall financial picture of the State is still pretty challenging and 10 volatile, that the most recent revenue projections came in a little better than anticipated. And the JBC 11 asked us, with no guarantee, of course, but to submit some amendments, to consider submitting some 12 amendments to our fiscal year, 2022 request. To focus on really that hard kernel of additional resources 13 that we need to address the backlog of work that Chief Justice Boatright has been referring to.
14 Former Chief Justice Coats and I were asked at our budget hearing this year, do you have the resources 15 you need to dig out of the backlog in a reasonable amount of time. And the honest answer is, no. We are 16 smaller than we were a year ago. We have an unprecedented amount of work. We were not fully staffed, 17 as any state agency is, but we were not fully staffed prior to the cuts. I can't say with a straight face that 18 we're going to be able to address this in a reasonable amount of time, without additional resources.

19 Which is ultimately, what's most important about that, is it's an access to justice issue. We want folks to 20 have timely resolution of their cases, regardless of the type of case. We want victims to have their day in 21 court. We want offenders to have their day in court. We want folks to be able to get divorced. We want 22 neighborly disputes on small claims cases to be resolved timely. There's just, again, we think about kind 23 of the marquee types of cases, but there's all kinds of average citizen business that happen in our courts, 24 and we are not going to be able to get to those timely.

26 So, we have several initiatives, we want to just talk to you briefly, that we have proposed to the Joint 27 Budget Committee. And, in fact, this first one is not a budget amendment per se, but it will have a 28 financial implication, and it's addressing our statutory Senior Judge Program. Just very briefly, for those 29 who may not be familiar, there's a statutory program by which we enter into contracts with retired 30 judges. And retired judges are a tremendous resource in helping support the workload of the bench, 31 because they've done the work before. They don't require a lot of ramp-up in training. We can utilize 32 them in any type of case, and they can serve anywhere in the State. And, now, with some remote, virtual 33 hearing tools, that makes it even easier. But there are some limitations to the current program statutorily 34 that we're hoping to address, and I want to take out just a real brief opportunity to thank Representatives 35 Tipper and Carver who have agreed to serve as co-prime sponsors of legislation. If legislation does, in 36 fact, move forward. But, as an example of something we'd like to address, there's a statutory floor for the 37 contracts. They cannot be less than 60 days. And in my first year of service at the State Court 38 Administrator, I've had several judges who are on the cusp of retirement approach me and say, Steven, I 39 would love to join the program, but I don't want to make a 60-day commitment. I have other things I 40 want to do in retirement. I'd like to serve still, in retirement. But I don't want to make a 60-day

1 commitment. That's the kind of thing we want to try to address through some statutory change.
2 Additionally, because of current program funding, we only have room for about 40 contractors on the 3 Program at any given time, and we've got about 15 or so folks on a waiting list. We'd like to get some 4 additional resources to get everybody off the waiting list who wants to be off the waiting list to serve.
5 We're probably not too far, hopefully, from a point in time when we're going to have every single 6 County Court judge, every single District Court judge, doing trials and little else. To start addressing this 7 trial backlog. And Senior Judges are going to be an important resource who can help us, support us on 8 trial work, but non-trial work, as well. Chief.

9

10 Chief Justice Boatright

11 The other thing that we are asking for are going to be some additional staff and magistrates. Because, 12 again, if the magistrates are able to take some of the non-jury trial matters, that will free up our judges to 13 be able to go after the trials. We're asking for right now, and, again, we understand there's no guarantee.
14 We're looking for 76 court staff. We need additional 53 approximately probation staff, 2 full-time 15 employees for the Court of Appeals, and one of the things our Court feels very strongly about is we're 16 not asking for any of our cuts to be to be placed back on our Court. We recognize that right now, the 17 burden is on the trial court, almost exclusively. We've had some minor inconveniences. I kind of 18 jokingly say when I meet these guys, you know, don't tell me about how hard you've had it. I've had to 19 learn how to scan. So, you know, we recognize that the trial courts are bearing the brunt of all of this.
20 So, we're not asking for anything for our Court.

21

22 Steven Vasconcellos

23 Mr. Chair. Additionally, we're not asking for any additional resources for the State Court Administrator's 24 Office. Again, we're trying to focus these budget amendments on the most important point in the 25 organization, which is where the day-to-day business happens in the trial courts and in probation offices 26 around the State. And we realize that it's still a very difficult budget environment. We are not asking to 27 be restored to the level of funding we were prior to the cuts. We don't think that's realistic. We're trying 28 to focus on what we need to dig out of this unprecedented backlog.

29

30 Rep. Weissman

31 Thank you. Before we move on. Rep Benevides has a question on budget matters. Rep. Benevides, 32 please go ahead.

34 Rep Benevides

35 And, actually, my question is about budget matters. But the other things you were talking about with 36 respect to the backlog on jury trials, you had indicated that a year ago, in January, it was 2,700. This 37 year, it's 14,000. So, I have a couple of questions with regard to that. One is, is the waiver of speedy trial 38 indefinite? Where those 14,000 for you to address that backlog using the ways you've just described. It's 39 still south. So, I'm wondering how long that lasts, and if there's been any discussions, I know in Judicial 40 Districts there are discussions with all of the stakeholders. I'm talking defense bar, PD, DA, and the

1 court. To try to figure out what to do. Because I'm just wondering if 14[,000] in this past year has been, I
2 don't like to say this, but sort of legal strategy. That, you know, if I ask for a jury trial, I'm more likely 3 eventually to get a plea deal, because they're never going to get to my trial. So, I'm just wondering if any 4 kinds of discussions are being held amongst all the stakeholders involved in the court system.

5

6 Rep. Weissman

7 Okay, Chief, please go ahead.

8

9 Chief Justice Boatright

10 Yeah, that's a that's a great question. Thank you for asking that. And we are asking for the for the 11 Legislature to help us. We come, kind of hat in hand. Right now, there is a six-month speedy trial that 12 statutory, that's not constitutional. And we are asking to try and gain some flexibility with regard to that.
13 How? The exact form of that. As the Representative said, there's a lot of stakeholders, and I certainly 14 think there are a lot of different concerns about it. You know, people in custody. We don't want them 15 sitting in jail, waiting for their day in court, those types of things. But we are asking to have some 16 flexibility to be able to address that, because, as the question clearly recognizes, we're not going to be 17 able to try these in in the 90-day period. Right now, what we did in response to the pandemic, was we 18 amended one of our Rules to allow for a mistrial to be granted if a jury could not be safely assembled.
19 And we gave an additional 90-days to the speedy trial time-period. But as you can see, the 90-days 20 which is going to apply, I think, to a large number of cases, I don't have the exact percentage, is not 21 going to be sufficient for us to be able to try these cases. And even the six-month time period, this is not 22 something that we're going to be able to dig out in six months. As far as the trial strategy, what I can tell 23 you is, I'm a former trial court judge. I was a judge in Jeffco for 12-years, and I have the privilege of 24 teaching all of our new judges. And one of the things I tell them is we are in a deadline driven business.
25 If people know that there is a deadline, they will make decisions. So, I think that if we are able to get 26 these trials going, we know that we're not going to be up against the clock quite as severely. Cases will 27 start to dispo. But there are going to be a large number of cases. What I would say is it's fairly uneven 28 around the state because of different philosophies from defense attorneys and from the DAs. In some of 29 the Districts, they say once the trials are open, we're going to be trying homicides and sex assault on 30 children cases almost non-stop. Some of the jurisdictions say we still have a lot of the lower-level 31 felonies that are pending, and obviously we have domestic violence and DUI cases. So, we are coming 32 to ask for help with regard to that statutory six-month speedy trial. And there's been some conversation, 33 I know, from different stakeholders, that our Rule is good enough. And I would say it is not, because at 34 some point we are not going to be able to make the finding that the pandemic, that there is a health 35 reason for not calling juries. We're going to have to open up the spigot, so to speak, and start trying these 36 cases. And at that point, whether they're 90-days or 6-months, we're going to be up against the clock.
37 And again, as Mr. Vasconcellos said, this is an access to justice question. I can tell you, that our judges 38 take their personal responsibility, is to try these cases and provide a forum. To dismiss cases because of 39 a lack of speedy trial, feels like a personal failure to our judges and having to face, you know, 40 defendants and victims that because of that, it really is unpalatable for us.

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Mr. Vasconcellos, did you want to add further to that? I am seeing other questions. Okay, Rep.
3 Benevides. If you wanted to ask a follow up.

4

5 Rep Benevides

6 Just to ask a follow up is thank you for that. And I'm glad you're, at least the courts are doing some 7 prioritization of those criminal cases. But, I guess I was, also, when I was talking about. I mean, you all 8 have to do the cases that come in front of you, but the other players in it, the DAs, the PDs, the defense 9 bar, they also have stake in this. And I'm just wondering if something like, it came up in a different bill, 10 is that somebody sitting in jail had served, actually, it was for a low-level crime, the maximum amount 11 for that. They shouldn't have to stay in there longer. They should be able to be released. Or I would even 12 say, for certain charges, that, if they serve the minimum range, that we will never get to it, that there 13 may be consideration of letting them out and dismissing the case at that point. So, it's those kinds of 14 things to get together and think of other ways, because money is not the only way to resolve this 15 problem. There's going to have to be some other ways, and maybe getting those other stakeholders 16 involved with the court may be a way to resolve it. Just a suggestion.

17

18 Rep. Weissman

19 Okay, Chief or Mr. Vasconcellos, whoever would like to speak to that.

20

21 Chief Justice Boatright

22 Yeah. What I would say is, I don't disagree with any of the sentiments that were just expressed. I think if 23 people have served their time based on a penalty, quite frankly, those cases, in my experience, can be 24 resolved fairly easily. I think what we're talking about are, you know, some of the more serious cases, as 25 I indicated, the homicides and sex assaults and the severe, the more high-level Class 1-2-3 felonies that 26 we're facing. But, we also can only twist arms so hard in terms of the separation of powers. The DAs 27 and the public defenders and the defense attorneys have to come to some kind of an agreement, a 28 resolution. But, I think our Court and our Branch is very mindful of the people that are being in custody, 29 and I'm sure that those are the people are going to be prioritized in terms of getting their day in court.

30

31 Rep. Weissman

32 Okay. Senator Gardner, had a question, and then Senator Lee, 33

34 Sen. Gardner

35 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Chief Justice or Mr. Vasconcellos, I'm just wondering if you happen to have the 36 numbers for the Fourth Judicial District or El Paso County as to what we have pending there? And, if 37 you don't have them right at hand, you can just send them to me later.

38

40 I actually do. That's from 2019.

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Mr. Chair, Senator Gardner. Just to clarify, are you asking for the number of pending trials in the Fourth 3 Judicial District?

4

5 Sen. Gardner

6 Thank you. I'm asking, yeah, number, the backlog for felony cases, jury trials in El Paso County.

7

8 Steven Vasconcellos

9 I don't believe we have that at hand, but we can get that easily, and we'd be happy to pass that along to 10 you.

11

12 Sen. Gardner

13 I have heard, anecdotally, because I am a member of the Bar and speak to colleagues. The magnitude of 14 this problem before this week, it has been a matter of concern to me since March, and I appreciated the 15 Judicial Department the Supreme Court's Rule change. But thought at the time that we would find 16 ourselves sitting here today. There are interests, if you will, or concerns on both sides of this equation.
17 Both with respect to the rights of defendants and those who in particular, are not on bond, but the rights 18 of crime victims and the rights of the community and public safety concerns, as well. And I appreciate 19 the discussion. I really, I don't think I have a question, although I would invite your response. I just want 20 to say on the record with my colleagues from both sides of the aisle here that one, this is of all of the 21 fallout problems from the pandemic, from a public safety standpoint, this is the most serious, or at least 22 among the most serious. And we need to act as a Legislature in February, when we return and I want to 23 express my commitment and make a plea to my colleagues that we address this. We address it openly, 24 we have a fair discussion about it, and that we deal with it as quickly as possible. And, if it means we all 25 have to get in a room and do what legislators and lawyers and others do to resolve these things. To 26 finally get to what we can all do. But what works for the Department? And I want to ask the Judiciary to 27 be very candid with us at that time about whether it will work or not. Because my fear is it [affects] any 28 compromise that we might reach. If it doesn't do what we need, then we will have spent a whole lot of 29 time. So, I don't really have a question, Chief or Mr. Vasconcellos. I just want to make that commitment 30 and ask my colleagues to make that commitment today, as well.

31

32 Rep. Weissman

33 Senator Gardner, thank you. I'm just again watching the clock. What I might do is invite Senator Lee to 34 question or comment. I have a hunch it may be on the same subject, and then we can have the Chief and 35 Mr. Vasconcellos maybe respond. Senator Lee, please go ahead.

36

37 Sen. Lee

38 Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I echo the sentiments of my colleague from El Paso County about the 39 urgency of this issue. An ancillary issue, though, is the civil trial docket. The criminal cases are 40 prioritized as a matter of necessity and law, but meanwhile, all of the civil cases are still pending. Could

1 you, Chief, comment on that? Both the numbers of cases and the impact on justice and the economy of 2 having a lot of civil cases pending which can't be addressed because they are on the back burner while 3 the criminal cases are being held.

4

5 Rep. Weissman

6 Okay, Chief, if you'd like to try to weave a response to all of the points that have been laid out.

7

8 Chief Justice Boatright

9 Sure, I don't have an exact number of the number of jury trials, but Senator Lee is absolutely correct.

10 We're not trying any civil jury trials, either. One of the things that we are looking at, and with regard to 11 the Senior Judges, also is looking at alternative locations for maybe trying some of those cases. For 12 example, Arapahoe County looked at renting out the fairgrounds, because we need to have space.

13 Frankly, doing criminal trials in remote locations probably isn't feasible because of security, and, 14 especially, if someone's in custody and having sheriffs spread out, having to transport people and remain 15 there during the trial. But, we are looking at alternative ways of trying the civil jury trials. You know, 16 we're open to all kinds of different alternatives with regard to that. And my guess is there's going to be 17 some office space possibly available that we may be able to try some of these things. And we're open to 18 that. Those possibilities. But he's right. We're not trying them right now.

19

20 Rep. Weissman

21 Okay, thank you. And, you know, Members, this is a big subject before us, and we, unfortunately, only 22 have this hour here. But, I think we all know we're going to be talking further about these issues very 23 soon. For now, why don't we invite you to continue?

24

25 Steven Vasconcellos

26 Thank you, Mr. Chair. If I may, Mr. Chair, we have about five minutes left, and I probably have well 27 more than five minutes.

28

29 Rep. Weissman

30 Yeah, Mr. Vasoconcellos, I've noticed these clocks are actually a hair fast according to the all-knowing 31 Apple standard time. It's 1:50. Nonetheless, I would invite you to be selective. Maybe hit the highlights.
32 We do have the material that was sent in advance to staff and the members can review that in more 33 depth and I'm pretty liberal in giving out Mr. Scanlon's contact information for members who need to 34 follow up, as well. Please go ahead.

35

36 Steven Vasconcellos

37 Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Please feel free to give Mr. Scanlon's contact information out very liberally, 38 very liberally. And, on a serious note, I'm more than happy to make myself available for any of the 39 members to talk about any of the issues in greater depth that we've already discussed, or if something 40 folks felt like it didn't get its full attention because of time constraints today. I'm happy to make time to

1 have follow-up discussions, as well. If it's okay with you, Mr. Chair, rather than go through each of 2 these issues, I just want to hit a couple of the remaining issues in a little greater depth and leave a couple 3 maybe for another day, if possible.

4
5 One of the things that is a long-standing important part of our judicial culture in Colorado is actually 6 engaging. Beyond the actual business engagement we have with the citizens who come to our 7 courthouses and probation offices, is to actually reach out to them in kind of a customer service survey 8 style. And we've done this for about 15 years now. And I think folks often are somewhat cynical about 9 the results of such affairs, because you know, if you think about the average court case, somebody wins 10 and somebody loses, and you must have at least 50% of the folks who are coming to the courthouse 11 leaving upset, and that's really not borne out by actual data. And, so, for the last 15 years, we take half of 12 the Judicial Districts in the State, and we deploy in-person surveys. Now you can imagine in this time 13 and place, that's not possible, and you'll see the survey data that we've. Included, only runs through 2019
14 because the pandemic really threw us for a loop. And, candidly, with some staff reductions in my Office 15 and everything else we needed to manage, we need to let something go. But we are parenthetically 16 looking at reviving the survey in a virtual, online format, and probably having that be the format that we 17 use moving forward. But we ask folks who are exiting the courthouse what brought them to the court 18 that day, and what their perceptions of access and fairness are in the service that've received from the 19 courts. It's important not just to do justice, but that folks actually believe personally that that was done in 20 their particular instance. And, so, when we look at, we included some of that data from our most recent 21 surveys. And when we look at really important issues, and some of it may seem basic, but a sense of 22 safety within the courthouse to conduct business. When we look at were folks who came to the court 23 treated with courtesy and respect. We're well over 80 pushing 90% of the folks who we survey that feel 24 strongly that they received a positive experience and that the courts were accessible. And when we look 25 at that really tough question around issues of fairness. You know, do folks feel like they were treated 26 equitably compared to other parties? Do they feel that the judicial officer listened to them? Do they feel 27 ultimately, was the process fair? And this is an area, I think, where sometimes some of that cynicism 28 crops up. It's not just, you know, half the folks leaving our courthouses upset with the outcome. Is it 29 100%? No. Is 100% possible? Probably not. But, when I look at our data in Colorado compared to other 30 jurisdictions around the nation who engage in surveys like this, we come out in a very strong posture, 31 and I feel very strongly about continuing this kind of engagement with the citizens we serve.

32
33 One of the other areas, I'm going to skip ahead here, to talk a little bit about the text reminder program.
34 The Chief Justice and I had an opportunity to speak with Senator Lee yesterday about a number of 35 issues, including the text reminder program, which was a statutory initiative from a couple of years ago, 36 and before July of last year, there was a Pilot Program, and then the program launched formally in July 37 of 2020. Which, from a timing standpoint, given the onset of the pandemic, was tough. And I have to 38 admit that we don't have the kind of adoption for the text reminder program that I think we all were 39 hoping for up front. I mean, we've had over almost 31,000 defendants engage in the text reminder 40 program. And I may be going too fast here. But for those who don't know, statute requires that

1 defendants receive two reminders prior to each court appearance. We do one a week prior, and we do
2 one the day prior. Now, it's an opt-in program, and that's because federal communication or FCC 3 regulations prohibit an opt-out program, and, so, that does put us on our heels a little bit. When you're 4 working with an opt-in program, you're trying to convince people to share their information. And, of 5 course, we have an obligation in statute to notify folks that this program is available. Also, I believe 6 statute requires that summonses be updated so that at the point of contact with law enforcement, 7 someone can say, hey, I want my reminders via text. And I will say that I think while we are looking at 8 ways to have a more robust engagement with this program. And, certainly, the pandemic has 9 complicated this, because we've gone from what used to be an almost completely in-person engagement 10 with folks to now an almost entirely virtual engagement. And we're going to come out of this with a 11 mix, where we're going to be engaging with folks, both in person and virtually. And we just didn't 12 program our IT systems to handle that. My crystal ball was broken and I didn't see a pandemic coming.
13 So, while we still have work to do, I do believe that in an opt-in sort of environment, one of the most 14 powerful things we can do is continue to collaborate with our law enforcement partners about getting 15 summonses updated, and so that at that point of contact, which I think is probably the most effective 16 way, the effective time to opt-in. So, that can happen more cleanly. Any questions?

17

18 Rep. Weissman

19 Mr. Vasconcellos on this point, I think Senator Lee had a question specifically on the court reminders.
20 I'll also observe. I mean, I think there would be a lot of interest, at least speaking for myself. You know, 21 this was sort of among other things, about making more efficient use of judicial capacity, which we 22 know was constrained before this pandemic. And you know, we've just heard it is acutely constrained, 23 now. So, this seems to me a place that we can push in connection with whatever else is going on, but 24 with that, Senator Lee, please go ahead.

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 Thank you, Mr. Chair. The State Court Administrator and I spoke yesterday and the Chief Justice. And 28 he really answered the question, and I thank him for anticipating my inquiries. I look forward to the 29 court engaging robustly in the implementation of the court text reminder and to the extent that they can 30 urge their law enforcement partners to upgrade the summonses. That's really the point of contact when 31 that mobile phone information is turned over. So, I appreciate the State Court Administrator's 32 engagement and willingness to try to get this more robustly implemented. So, thanks. I don't really have 33 a question. He anticipated it.

34

35 Rep. Weissman

36 Okay. Thank you, Senator. Please go ahead, Chief.

37

38 Chief Justice Boatright

39 One area that I would like to talk about is our judicial outreach that we've conducted this past year. As 40 you may recall, we hired, the Legislature authorized and we hired a Diversity Outreach Position in 2020.

1 And we spent a lot of time. Our court, the Court of Appeals, have spent a lot of time reaching out to 2 minorities to try and encourage a career on the bench. There is a lot of work to do, but I am proud to say 3 that the number of minority judges have increased from 40 to 51 in the past year, and that in the last 4 year, we've had 5 black female judges appointed, and that's more than the last 25 years, combined.
5 There's clearly work to be done, but we are proud of the work, and we are gaining, I think, momentum 6 on that. And, so, we thank you for the Diversity Outreach position. It's been helpful.

7
8 Rep. Weissman

9 Okay. Mr. Vasconcellos, did you want to hit one or two more key things? Oh, I apologize. Rep Bacon, 10 did you have a question? Oh, I apologize. Representative Tipper. Its a little bit hard to see the screen 11 sometimes. Please go ahead.

12
13 Rep Tipper

14 It's actually on the backlog, so I can circle back if we have time at the end.

15
16 Rep. Weissman

17 Okay, thank you so Mr. Vasconcellos, one or two sort of other key points who wanted to hit, or should 18 we go to questions?

19
20 Steven Vasconcellos

21 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just briefly, some out-year statutory obligations we have. The General Assembly, 22 back in 2020, created a new Judicial District that will come online in 2025. We currently have 22 23 Judicial Districts. This statutory initiative essentially bifurcates the 18th Judicial District, which is 24 currently Arapahoe, Douglas Elbert and Lincoln Counties. It would cleave off Arapahoe, which would 25 remain the 18th Judicial District. And then, Douglas, Elbert, and Lincoln Counties would become the 26 23rd Judicial District. As you can imagine, there's a fair amount of planning and logistics that are 27 involved in standing up a new Judicial District, particularly given the pandemic and the pressures on our 28 resources statewide, I'm grateful that that's not until 2025. Our planning for that has been derailed a bit. I 29 remain committed to working with all the affected stakeholders, but this, unfortunately, has not received 30 the attention that it might have otherwise, but for the pandemic. But we are cognizant of our obligation 31 there still. And look forward to some ongoing conversations, additionally, with the General Assembly 32 about ways to make that happen effectively. So that there's a smooth transfer of cases and that our 33 citizens really don't know the difference at the end of the day. Finally, I would like to talk just a little bit 34 about our statutory restorative justice programs. These are some of the more powerful, positive work 35 that we do. The juvenile components of the program were created in statute in 2014. And while a 36 relatively small program, 1,200 juveniles have been served since 2014. It is a mighty program with 37 powerful results. Over 90% of participants do not recidivate, and it's just a wonderful opportunity when 38 the circumstances present themselves. When the victim is willing, when the offender is willing, to 39 engage in conversations to address and repair the harm that was done during the crime. Chief.

40

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Because of time, I had a great story, but I won't tell you so, but it works in the right situations.

3

4 Rep. Weissman

5 Okay, thank you. Let's see, I am. Okay. I think that the Child Protection Ombudsman folks are going to 6 join us online. Maybe we'll just take a few minutes to see if there are any last questions from members 7 of the committee. And again, this is the first, but by no means the only opportunity to get questions 8 answered. Senator Lee, please go ahead and then. Rep Tipper.

9

10 Sen. Lee

11 Well, thank you. I would like to hear the Chief Justice's story, because I anticipate that it was going to be 12 a restorative justice story, and I would be interested in hearing that.

13

14 Chief Justice Boatright

15 All right, I'll try to give you the Reader's Digest version. I had a couple of kids when I . . . A little 16 background about me, as I said, I was a judge in Jeffco for 12 years, and the last 5 or 6 years, I post 17 exclusively on juvenile. And I had two young men who vandalized a local mom and pop grocery store, 18 and they were referred to a restorative justice program, and they were ordered to do their community 19 service at the grocery store. And it turned out, after they had completed their community service, the 20 grocery store ended up hiring one of the young men to work there. And, so, that, I think, is a is a great 21 story of how the restorative justice program can work. And I'm sure we're not going to see that young 22 man back again.

23

24 Rep. Weissman

25 Thank you. Okay, and I think Rep. Tipper said she would take her question offline. Members, any other 26 questions for the Chief Justice and Mr. Vasconcellos? All right, seeing none. Thank you for visiting with 27 us this afternoon, and we will all certainly be in touch.

28

29 Steven Vasconcellos

30 Thank you, committee. Appreciate your time.

31

32 Rep. Weissman

33 Okay, committee, we're going to move right on.

Appendix 27(g)

Brian D. Boatright, State of the Judiciary Address, 2021 Colo. House Journal, pp. 110-18 (February 18, 2021);

1 President Garcia requested the Joint Committee, composed of Senators 2 Coleman and Cooke, and Representatives Gonzalez-Gutierrez, chair, 3 Daugherty, and Lynch to escort the Honorable Brian D. Boatright to the 4 rostrum.

5
6 Chief Sergeant-at-Arms Jon Judson announced the arrival of the 8 9 The Joint Committee escorted the Chief Justice to the rostrum where he 10 addressed the Joint Session.

14 ADDRESS BY THE HONORABLE
15 Chief Justice Brian D. Boatright
16

17 Speaker Garnett, Senate President Garcia, distinguished members of the House 18 of Representatives and Senate:

19 20 This past week, I reached out to a longtime employee of the judicial branch.
21 I asked her how she was doing. She is normally very upbeat and positive. That 22 day, she was very direct. She responded that—for the first time in her 23 twenty-year career—she was not proud to tell people that she works for the 24 judicial branch. That broke my heart. But it also steeled my desire for 25 answers. I am here to tell her, the legislature, the governor, every member of 26 the branch, and most importantly, the citizens of Colorado, that we are going 27 to get this right: Where there was wrongdoing, we will address it. Where there 28 was an abuse of power, we will stop it. Where our policies are deficient, we 29 will change them. We want to know the truth. We recognize that the branch 30 faces a crisis of confidence in its leadership. We know that investigating and 31 addressing the allegations within the branch will be a difficult process, but we 32 are committed to seeing it through to the end: This will result in a culture 33 change, and we are going to make sure that happens.

34 35 When I say “we,” I mean every member of the supreme court. While we 36 frequently disagree on the difficult legal issues that come before us, we are 37 united and speak with one voice when we declare our commitment to this 38 cause. When I say “we,” I also mean our State Court Administrator, Steven 39 Vasconcellos, who started in that role shortly after the first round of allegations 40 came to light eighteen months ago. When I say “we,” I include the leadership 41 team at the State Court Administrator’s Office. When I say “we,” I also mean 42 the chief judges, court executives, and chief probation officers of courts across 43 the state—all leadership in the branch is committed to ensuring a safe and 44 healthy work environment. With the flood of news in the past couple weeks, 45 it is easy to lose sight of the fact that we have so many dedicated public 46 servants in the branch who care deeply about the citizens we serve. I know that 47 every member of the branch wants answers. I know that every member of the 48 branch wants answers and wants to get this right—everyone at the State Court 49 Administrator’s Office, every judicial officer, every clerk, and every probation 50 officer. Even though they may not be proud of me at this time, I want to say 51 here that I am proud of each and every one of them. In the end, I want them all 52 to be proud to say that they work for the judicial branch.

1 We have all heard the claims about the training contract. The document which 2 has been referred to as a memo has been released, and that has been the subject 3 of much conjecture. I am not here to comment on any of the claims and 4 conjecture—except to say that the branch takes allegations of misconduct by 5 judges and staff extremely seriously. The conduct described in the allegations, 6 if accurate, is unacceptable and cannot and will not be tolerated. We need to 7 know if human resources investigated any of these allegations, and if they did, 8 what action was taken. And if they didn't investigate the allegations, we need 9 to know why. What we need, first and foremost, is the truth. Therefore, I have 10 requested a full investigation of the circumstances surrounding the contract and 11 an investigation into each and every incident listed in the document. I have 12 asked the Governor, the Attorney General, as well as leaders of both parties in 13 the House and Senate to provide representatives for an independent panel that 14 will draft a request for proposal to first define the scope of the investigation.
15 Per our procurement regulations (we are going to do this “by the book”), that 16 request stays open for thirty days. Then, the panel will meet again and select 17 the independent counsel or counsels from those who submitted proposals. That 18 person or firm will then conduct the investigation. We hope to announce the 19 members of the panel this week.

20
21 With this procedure, the judicial branch will not have any say in the selection 22 process. We will cooperate with the investigation and will publicly release the 23 results. We also hope that the investigation will provide specific 24 recommendations for changes that we can make to ensure a safe and healthy 25 work environment for all members of the branch going forward. All we ask is 26 that the independent counsel conduct a thorough, efficient, and fair 27 investigation. Until the investigation is completed and any recommendations 28 are implemented, I am to be made aware of any new allegations of misconduct 29 and kept apprised of the progress of any investigation on a weekly basis.

30
31 I said that each and every justice is committed to reform. I would like to tell 32 you briefly who we are—not who we are academically or professionally, but 33 who we are as people. Since we do everything in order of seniority, I will start 34 with the most senior.

36 First, Justice Monica Márquez. Justice Márquez's roots lie in the San Luis 37 Valley, where the Márquez family has farmed and ranched for several 38 generations. She grew up on the western slope and graduated from Grand 39 Junction High School. After college, she served in the Jesuit Volunteer Corps, 40 working with inner city youth. Her teaching and community organizing 41 experiences in underserved communities inspired her to go to law school.
42 Throughout her career, she has worked tirelessly to promote diversity in the 43 legal profession, and she engages regularly with diverse youth, law students, 44 attorneys, and judges to build an inclusive legal community in Colorado.

45 46 Second, Justice Will Hood. Justice Hood and his wife, Diana, moved to 47 Denver more than thirty years ago with a desire to put their new law degrees 48 to use for the public good. Will has spent twenty-four years as a government 49 lawyer or judge. When he was last in private practice, he was the firm's pro 50 bono coordinator. Diana has spent twenty-nine years working at Legal Aid or 51 running a non-profit that helps abused children. They are most proud of their 52 two adult daughters, one of whom is a legislative aide combatting climate 53 change and one of whom is training to become a wildlife rehabilitation 54 specialist.

55
56

1 Third, Justice Richard Gabriel. Justice Gabriel grew up in a working-class 2 family in Brooklyn, New York. He is the first generation in his family to go to 3 college. Because he was able to attend college and then law school only with 4 the help of significant financial aid, he has devoted his over thirty-year career 5 to “paying it forward,” mentoring countless students and young lawyers, 6 educating the public about the judiciary through the Our Courts civic education 7 program, and promoting professionalism and civility among the bench and bar.
8 Additionally, you can’t introduce Rich without noting that he has played the 9 trumpet professionally for almost fifty years.

10 11 Fourth, Justice Melissa Hart. Justice Hart grew up in the Park Hill 12 neighborhood in Denver, where she and her family still live today. She was 13 appointed to the court in 2017. For eighteen years before joining the court she 14 taught at the University of Colorado Law School, where her scholarship, 15 teaching, and public service work were focused on anti-discrimination and 16 access to justice. She has carried those commitments with her to the bench. In 17 2018, Justice Hart helped launch Legal Entrepreneurs for Justice, an affordable 18 law practice incubator committed to training lawyers who will serve low- and 19 moderate-income Coloradans. She had continued to teach at CU and now also 20 teaches at DU, where her class this semester focuses on access to justice issues.

21
22 Fifth, Justice Carlos Samour. Justice Samour was born and raised in 23 El Salvador. When he was thirteen, political unrest forced him, his parents, and 24 his eleven siblings to flee the country. After receiving a death threat, the family 25 packed what they could in their van and left El Salvador forever. With visas 26 in hand, they made the five-day journey to Colorado. When they arrived, they 27 could not speak English, were in culture shock, and only had what they packed 28 in their van. Today, Carlos volunteers at Centro San Juan Diego as part of the 29 Our Court program, teaching citizenship classes to Spanish-speaking 30 immigrants, just like the classes he and his family took when they became 31 citizens. Before joining the court, Carlos was a district court judge in Arapahoe 32 County, where he presided over the Aurora Theater shooting trial.

33
34 Finally, Justice Maria Berkenkotter. Justice Berkenkotter is our newest 35 member of the court. As my first official act as Chief Justice, I had the 36 pleasure of swearing in Maria on January 4. She is a former trial court judge 37 and chief judge in the 20th Judicial District, who has spent years working with 38 stakeholders to develop innovative programs that address public safety, mental 39 health, and substance abuse issues, as well as to improve court operations.
40 Maria has two daughters who are also interested in the law—one was sworn in 41 to the bar in the fall of 2019, and one will start law school this fall.

42
43 At the risk of appearing selfish, I would also like to tell you who I am, since I 44 have given you my personal commitment to lead this culture change. I am a 45 Colorado native. I grew up the Wheat Ridge/Edgewater area and am a proud 46 Jefferson High School Saint. I decided I wanted to be a lawyer when I was five 47 years old after my dad—who was a lawyer—took me to work one day. He took 48 me to an adoption, and I remember that he made the two people involved so 49 happy—I thought he was like Santa Claus. After that, I never thought of being 50 anything but a lawyer, just like my dad.

51
52 Flash forward twenty-five years or so, and I am in court trying a case. At one 53 particular hearing, the judge treated me very badly, very intemperately. I 54 remember thinking that even if the judge was right on the law, there had to be 55 a better way of communicating. That was the first day I thought of becoming 56 a judge. A few years later, I had another experience that cemented that desire.

1 I prosecuted a murder case that dragged on for about two years due to the 2 defendant's significant mental health issues. Ultimately, the jury convicted the 3 defendant of first-degree murder. As a result, the only sentencing option 4 available to the judge was life in prison. I should note that this took place 5 before the Victim's Rights Act was enacted. When I asked the judge if the 6 victim's family could speak prior to sentencing, the judge—who happened to 7 be an excellent judge—unfortunately denied the request, announcing that the 8 court did not have any discretion regarding the sentencing. I will never forget 9 the faces of the victim's family. That day, I decided that I wanted to become 10 a judge, and I promised myself that if that ever happened, I would do 11 everything in my power to let people know that I cared and that I truly listened.
12 A few years later, I was appointed to the district court in Jefferson County.
13 That was twenty-two years ago. And treating everyone with dignity and 14 respect to the very best of my ability has been the cornerstone of my judicial 15 philosophy. And becoming chief justice didn't change that. That is why I am 16 serious about getting answers. Because, at heart, all of this is about how people 17 are treated.

19 Approximately eighteen months ago, our court realized that we had significant 20 issues within the Department that required immediate action. While the culture 21 problems were not caused by any specific individual—and I am not blaming 22 anyone—we realized that change was necessary. As a result, since that time, 23 almost the entire SCAO leadership team has been replaced. First, Steven 24 Vasconcellos became the new State Court Administrator. We selected him 25 after a national search. During that process, we engaged all members of the 26 branch and solicited their thoughts on the finalists' vision statements as well as 27 their thoughts after in-person and virtual town hall appearances. We made 28 every attempt to run a transparent process. Since that time, we also hired a new 29 Director of Finance, a new Director of Court Services, and we are in the 30 ongoing process of hiring a new Director of Human Resources.

31
32 Next, our court changed how we handle administrative responsibilities.
33 Traditionally, the chief justice handled all of the administrative responsibilities, 34 and the rest of the court received reports on various actions. While the goal of 35 insulating a majority of the court from matters on which it might ultimately 36 have to render a decision was laudable, it was not workable. We realized that 37 we all needed to be much more involved in the running of the branch. We were 38 too disconnected from the employees. As a result, we decided to assign justices 39 to the different departments or functions within the branch. Justice Márquez 40 is assigned to the clerks of court, Justice Hood to financial, Justice Gabriel to 41 IT, Justice Hart to the court executives, and Justice Samour to human resources.
42 We are going to let Justice Berkenkotter get her legs under her before we give 43 her an assignment. At the time, I remained the liaison to probation. We 44 implemented this system to not only improve the flow of information but also 45 to hopefully develop relationships with the employees of the branch. We 46 realized that important information was not getting to the chief justice or the 47 court. If information needed to reach leadership, we wanted our people to feel 48 comfortable approaching and talking with us. In addition, we instituted 49 rotational terms for our chief justice. Justice Márquez will be the next chief.
50 We did this, in part, to keep fresh eyes on things. We now embrace the 51 philosophy that seven brains are better than one and fourteen ears are better 52 than two: There is a real benefit to relying on the collective wisdom and 53 experience of all seven justices.

54
55

1 I would be remiss if I didn't recognize another crisis around how our minority 2 communities perceive their treatment in the criminal justice system. To that 3 end, we also stepped up our efforts to help diversify the bench. We feel that is 4 an important part of enacting real, lasting change. One of the best ways to 5 ensure equal justice for all is to have judges that reflect the communities they 6 serve. Too that end, five years ago, several of our justices formed a "Bench 7 Diversity Dream Team" through Colorado's Center for Legal Inclusiveness.
8 The Bench Dream Team became a vehicle to encourage diverse lawyers to 9 consider a career on the bench and to help them navigate the judicial 10 application process. Bench Dream Team members have volunteered countless 11 hours hosting informational sessions, meeting with potential applicants, and 12 conducting mock interviews. As part of the Dream Team's efforts, Justice 13 Márquez teamed with the Center for Legal Inclusiveness, the diverse bar 14 associations, judges, nominating commission members, and 9News alum Adele 15 Arakawa to produce a training video for new nominating commission members.
16 Among other things, that video teaches commissioners how to combat implicit 17 bias.

18 19 Retired Judge Gary Jackson, through his tireless work, made diversifying the 20 bench an urgent priority. Representative Leslie Herod suggested that we hire 21 a Judicial Outreach Coordinator, who would help identify and recruit diverse 22 candidates to the bench. Because of the hard work of the Bench Dream Team; 23 Judge Jackson; Representative Herod; Sumi Lee, our outreach coordinator; 24 Patty Jarzobsky; and many, many others, we have made some inroads. I am 25 proud to say that Governor Polis appointed more Black women to the 26 bench—five—in the one-year period between September 1, 2019, and August 27 31, 2020, than in the previous twenty-five years combined. In addition, 28 fifty-nine percent of judges appointed by Governor Polis in that same time 29 period were female. That has resulted in a nearly 13 percent increase in female 30 judges in the last four years. With that said, the protest for racial justice which 31 took place this past summer and more recent events remind us that much work 32 remains to be done.

33 34 Those events have led us to significantly increase our training around issues of 35 racial equality. Judges Paul Dunkelman and Adam Espinoza—through their 36 leadership roles as Presidents of the District Court and County Court Judges 37 Associations, respectively—have put on a continuing series of excellent 38 webinars on these issues. The webinars are extremely well-attended by judges 39 across the state and, in addition, several districts have made discussing racial 40 justice a special priority. I want to acknowledge the work of the court of 41 appeals. That court established an Inclusivity, Diversity, Equity, and 42 Anti-Racism Committee to combat systemic racism and injustice by promoting 43 acceptance, respect, and value for all persons and creating an ongoing dialogue 44 to confront biases. To date, the Committee has undertaken a number of 45 projects, including spearheading amendments to the Court of Appeals' strategic 46 plan regarding diversity and inclusion, compiling and sharing resources about 47 DEI trainings, and facilitating discussions inside and outside the court, 48 including with regional law schools and law students on these issues.

49
50 In the vein of openness, we also looked at the court's practices around sealing 51 records. This past December, with the able assistance of the Colorado Criminal 52 Rules Committee, our court added Rule 55.1 to our Rules of Criminal 53 Procedure. Rule 55.1 is a rule of transparency and accessibility. To borrow 54 from Justice Louis Brandeis, by allowing better and more expedient access to 55 court records, the new rule recognizes sunlight as the best disinfectant. Once 56 the rule takes effect this May, a trial court will not be able to limit the public's

1 access to any part of a court record in a criminal case unless the judge makes 2 written findings that (1) a substantial interest would be served by making the 3 court record or any part of it inaccessible to the public, (2) there is no less 4 restrictive means than making the court record or part of it inaccessible to the 5 public in order to achieve or protect the substantial interest identified, and 6 (3) any substantial interest identified overrides the presumptive public access 7 to the entire court record. Additionally, any order limiting public access to a 8 court record or to any part of it must indicate the date or event certain by which 9 the order will expire. This will ensure that orders limiting public access do not 10 linger unnecessarily.

11
12 I bring these changes up not to claim that we have already changed the branch's 13 culture but only to demonstrate that we are committed to continued reflection 14 on how we can improve. It will take time, but we are committed to the cause.

15
16 I started my speech by recognizing that we as a branch are in crisis. But we 17 also face another crisis. This, however, is not a crisis of our own making. This 18 is the practical crisis caused by the pandemic.

19 20 To be clear: our trial courts and probation officers have borne the brunt of the 21 effects of the pandemic. Despite risks to their health, our trial courts and 22 probation departments have remained open for business at all times during the 23 pandemic. Our people have acted with the courage of first responders by doing 24 the work required. In my opinion, they have been heroic. While we have made 25 significant changes to how we do business by having virtual and telephonic 26 hearings when possible, there are some hearings that simply require in-person 27 proceedings. Our chief judges have been amazing in how they have innovated 28 and now have modified courtrooms to allow these hearings that must be held 29 in person to be as safe as possible.

30 31 But then there are jury trials. They just have not been possible for much of the 32 past twelve months for safety reasons. As a result, we face an unprecedented 33 backlog of jury trials. I will give you a few numbers that demonstrate our 34 plight. Over the past five years, we have had an average of 2,716 jury trials, 35 with 2,400 of those being criminal trials. On January 19, 2021, we had 14,635 36 jury trials scheduled, statewide—with over 10,000 of those being criminal 37 trials. What that means is that we have somewhere between four and five times 38 the number of criminal jury trials scheduled that we try in an average year.
39 And crime has not stopped, serious crime as not stopped. We come to you, 40 asking for help. But before I address what our strategy is to confront this 41 unprecedented challenge, I want to share my greatest fear about what I am 42 asking.

43
44 I recognize that many of you are angry at the branch for the unwanted attention 45 that it has brought to government. You have every right to feel myriad 46 different emotions about the situation. My plea is that you don't take out your 47 anger on our trial courts and on probation, because this is about us serving the 48 people of this state. So I ask you: If you are mad, then be mad at me.

49
50 Our trial courts need help to provide the access to justice that our citizens need 51 and deserve. Without assistance from the General Assembly and, ultimately, 52 the Governor, we will not be able to adequately address the tsunami of jury 53 trials that await. I've had discussions with some of you about one of the 54 biggest challenges—enforcing a defendant's statutory right to trial within six 55 months of entering a not guilty plea. In the early stages of the pandemic, with 56 the assistance of the Criminal Rules Committee, we were proactive on this front

1 and adopted amendments to Rule 24 of our Rules of Criminal Procedure. This 2 amendment provides us flexibility while we're in survival mode. Rule 24, 3 however, only applies so long as a fair jury pool cannot safely be assembled.
4 Therefore, once our trial courts are able to summon jurors with some semblance 5 of normalcy, we will face significant challenges in this area. We are going to 6 have thousands of trials with either ninety-day or six-month deadlines. We 7 need your help.

8
9 We are asking for three things: (1) We are asking that you revise the senior 10 judge program to create flexibility that will allow more of our most experienced 11 jurists to either preside over jury trials or to free up our currently sitting judges 12 to try more cases. We have recently retired judges who are willing and able to 13 step in but who do not want to commit to the required sixty- or ninety-day 14 contracts that currently are required by statute. We need more options for 15 length of service. We also need additional money to expand the program. We 16 have good judges on a waiting list, hoping to help. (2) We are asking for 17 additional staff and magistrates. As you may be aware, when the Governor 18 asked for a budget reduction last spring, we complied. After significant 19 soul-searching, we eliminated nearly two hundred positions, which required 20 laying off 110 people from every part of the branch. With the exception of one 21 position, we are only asking for staff to help the trial courts and probation. Jury 22 trials require staff, and conducting jury trials safely during and after a pandemic 23 requires more staff than usual. (3) We are asking you to allow us some 24 flexibility around the six-month statutory deadline. As I just mentioned, the 25 amendment to Rule 24 will no longer be effective once trials resume in earnest.

26
27
28 Just knowing that trials can be held will encourage resolution. Recently, I had 29 a meeting with many of my partners in the criminal justice system. This 30 included two chief judges, the Attorney General, the Public Defender, the 31 director of the Office of Alternative Defense Counsel, the head of the Colorado 32 District Attorneys' Council, several D.A.s, and others. It was a productive 33 meeting where we discussed developing a "Best Practice Template" for triaging 34 the backlog of cases. I welcome working with these same partners around 35 reasonable amendments to the six-month statutory deadline for criminal trials.

36
37 As I speak to you today, jury trials are slowly resuming in some judicial 38 districts, with others to follow in the coming months. I am continuing the 39 practice started by my predecessor, Chief Justice Coats, of empowering our 40 chief judges in each district to decide how and when to resume jury trials.
41 Despite criticism to the contrary, one size does not fit all in how individual 42 courts are run. For example, what works in Greeley may not work in Montrose 43 and vice-versa. That is because we have different positivity rates in different 44 counties, coupled with different courthouses with different facilities and 45 different technological capabilities. The decision of how and when to resume 46 trials has to be made at the local level. The chief judges are working extremely 47 hard, and they all have a common goal: to resume jury trials as soon as they 48 can be done safely. But even then, the trials will start slowly due to safety 49 protocols. We want our jurors safe when they serve.

50
51 The pandemic has also brought about some positive changes to practices in the 52 courts and probation departments. I fully expect that many of these new 53 practices will continue into the future. As just one example, many parents in 54 the Dependency and Neglect cases have difficulty traveling to and from court 55 due to a lack of dependable transportation. We have seen that many of the 56 review hearings in these cases—which can be brief if things are going

1 well—can be handled remotely, thus helping parents avoid missing work or 2 treatment. This practice will be employed across all case types as appropriate.

3
4 The pandemic complicated work for our probation departments, in particular, 5 because establishing the relationship between a probation officer and their 6 client is frequently the key to successfully completing probation. I am sure 7 everyone in this room has experienced the difficulties of connecting with 8 people via one of the virtual platforms. With that said, our probation officers 9 have made necessary adjustments and have remained committed to helping 10 their clients and providing services to the best of their ability.

11
12 When people talk about the work of the judicial branch, they often overlook 13 probation. But I want to remind everyone that probation remains the most 14 cost-effective method for supervising offenders. This fiscal year, an offender 15 incarcerated in the Department of Corrections will cost the state approximately 16 $46,866, an offender in the Community Corrections program approximately 17 $9,936, and an offender on parole approximately $6,924. An offender on 18 probation, by contrast, will cost the state about $1,662—a fraction of the cost 19 of any of the alternatives.

20
21 I also recognize that some people are under the impression that probation 22 operates as a sort of zero-tolerance, punitive system—that if, for example, an 23 offender on probation misses an appointment with her probation officer, the 24 officer will immediately file a motion to revoke probation. That’s just not 25 accurate. To the contrary, probation focuses on providing offenders with the 26 rehabilitation and support they need to regain control of their own lives and 27 contribute meaningfully to society. I want to share a story about one probation 28 client. Her story is not an outlier. I am going to share her story in her own 29 words:

30
31 “When I started probation, I came as a broken soul. When I came to my first 32 appointment, my children and I were bouncing between living in my truck and 33 a house filled with multiple dealers. We struggled with basic necessities like 34 finding a restroom and getting water. After a few months of failing regular 35 probation miserably, I was handed off to a new program: Specialized Drug 36 Offender Program.

37
38 “I sat in orientation and they discussed the program and the treatment provider, 39 Mile High Behavioral Healthcare. They identified so many resources, 40 expressed an underlying faith in us as addicts and our ability to recover, and 41 provided support from all angles. I left the room with tears in my eyes. This 42 is what I needed.

43 44 “I started treatment and saw my probation officers weekly. Treatment became 45 my family, probation officers my mentors. They helped instill my faith in 46 myself again. They believed in me and truly cared about my children and [me].

47
48 “Today, I am a Peer Coach. My future is limitless.”

49
50 Her probation officer said that this client was granted early termination and has 51 carried what she learned forward in her new life.

52
53 This is emblematic of the work of probation officers across the state. I know 54 from my time as a trial judge that probation officers take great pride in their 55 clients’ success and consider it a personal defeat when their clients fail. I am 56 proud to have such dedicated people as part of the branch.

1 Although I gave you a brief summary of who I am a few minutes ago, I 2 neglected to mention that, in the limited free time that I have as a justice, I 3 enjoy reading history—even if that means listening to a book on tape during my 4 commute. I’m particularly fond of Abraham Lincoln for his strength of 5 character, grace under pressure, and communication skills. If you visit my 6 office or home, you’ll notice multiple books on Lincoln, including one about 7 his time “riding the circuit” in Illinois as a young lawyer. As he so often did, 8 he wrote something that still is true today.

9
10 In his “Second Annual Message to Congress”—delivered December 2, 1862, 11 after one of the costliest battles of the early Civil War, when he feared that the 12 Union’s resolve to win the war was waning—Lincoln stated, and the words 13 have meaning to me today, that “The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate 14 to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulty, and we must 15 rise with the occasion. As our case is new, so must we think anew and act 16 anew.” Lincoln was talking about the survival of the country. I am talking 17 about maintaining the independence and integrity of the judicial branch. And 18 so I echo his words: We will think anew, and we will act anew.

19
20 I want to assure you that we—the judicial branch—will bring that the same 21 clear-eyed perspective, energy, and determination to tackling the challenges that 22 face the branch and the administration of justice in Colorado during these 23 trying times. We are committed to lifting the current clouds over the branch 24 and making it, once again, a rightful point of pride. We are going to get this 25 right.

26
27 Thank you for the privilege of addressing you today.

Transcript of Hearing before the Legis. Audit Comm., Colo. Leg., December 7, 2021;

Legislative Audit Committee—December 7, 2021 Hearing: Colorado Judicial Department Presentation

1 Sen. Michaelson Jenet

2 We are going to go to the State Court Administrator, which is Attachment J. They're here and will be 3 coming in shortly. All right, are we all already to come to the table? Thank you. Let's start with Ms.
4 Colin. Good morning.

5
6 Michelle Colin

7 Good morning. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to turn it over to Mr. Johnson. He was the team 8 lead on the State Court Administrator's Office Performance Audit, and he'll give you a refresher about 9 the audit and the findings that we had. Thank you.

10

11 Sen. Michaelson Jenet

12 Thank you. Welcome Mr. Johnson.

13

14 Derrick Johnson

15 Thank you, Madam Chair. As you just indicated, Attachment J in the packet contains the status report 16 update for the performance audit that we did at the State Court Administrator's Office, which was 17 released in December of 2020. The report had six findings and recommendations. These were in the 18 areas of establishing rules and policies for voluntary separation incentives, better controls over paid 19 administrative leave, processes for the secure retention of human resources documents, improved rules 20 for when it's proper to use sole-source contracting method, tighter controls over the use of the 21 procurement cards. And, then, the sixth and final finding in that report had to do with the SCAO's 22 overall administrative framework and the implementation of internal controls to foster a culture of 23 integrity and accountability. The SCAO agreed to all of these recommendations. For the status report 24 process, we requested, received, and reviewed documentation. And from that we concluded that the 25 status report, as reported by the SCAO is accurate. We do have the State Court Administrator here to 26 update you on the implementation status of these recommendations or to answer any questions that you 27 might have. Thank you, Madam Chair.

28

29 Sen. Michaelson Jenet

30 Thank you, Mr. Johnson. Welcome, Mr. Vasconcellos.

31

32 Steven Vasconcellos

33 Thank you, Madam Chair. If it's okay, Madam Chair, I have some brief opening remarks.

34

35 Sen. Michaelson Jenet

36 Please.

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 And then I'll just proceed through the status of each of the recommendations. And, of course, happy to 3 stop for any questions that the committee may have along the way. The performance audit of the State 4 Court Administrator's Office last year illuminated a series of critical policy and procedural deficiencies.
5 Deficiencies that, if left unaddressed, would not only impede SCAO's ability to carry out its mission of 6 supporting Colorado's State trial courts, appellate courts, and probation. But could also undermine 7 confidence in the Judicial Department as a whole. I am grateful that the audit came relatively early in 8 my tenure as State Court Administrator, as it has provided a roadmap for investing in the health of 9 SCAO and by extension, the Judicial Department. Implementation of the audit recommendations has 10 been one of Chief Justice Boatright's and my highest priorities. Since the performance audit was 11 released last year, the Department has taken meaningful steps to implement the recommendations. As 12 our status update shows, while we have not fully implemented every recommendation, we have made 13 significant progress on all of them, with full implementation anticipated in the next couple of months.
14 Implementing the OSA's recommendations is not merely an audit compliance effort, it also represents a 15 change in leadership culture at the State Court Administrator's Office. Concrete steps have been taken to 16 create greater Supreme Court engagement and oversight of SCAO operations. While I have, as the State 17 Court Administrator, an important role in advising the Chief Justice on administrative matters, mine 18 should not be the only voice. Each Division at the State Court Administrator's Office now works with a 19 Supreme Court Justice liaison. Each liaison Justice is providing input and critical advice to the Chief 20 Justice on key administrative matters. My senior executive team, two-thirds of which are new to their 21 positions since I became State Court Administrator, now meet twice weekly, working together 22 collaboratively to lead the State Court Administrator's Office. The collaborative leadership model is the 23 only way I know how to make recommendations to the Chief Justice and decisions about SCAO 24 operations that best serve the Judicial Department's Mission. These and other measures are helping 25 foster a culture of integrity, transparency, and accountability in the administration of the State Court 26 Administrator's Office.

27
28 That said, our progress has not been without challenges. Like all sectors of state government, the State 29 Court Administrator's Office has faced a variety of challenges presented by the Covid pandemic and 30 budget reductions, all while supporting the courts and probation statewide in implementing massive 31 pandemic-related operational changes. Additionally, the events that led to the performance audit have 32 certainly damaged employee morale, along with internal and external trust in the organization. Notably, 33 we were without a permanent HR Director for close to two years. As a result, other senior managers in 34 the HR division were pressed in to serve as Acting Director, in addition to their existing duties. I am 35 happy to report that after several recruiting attempts, we were able to hire a permanent HR Director this 36 past June. Despite these challenges, we've been able to make significant updates to both our Personnel 37 Rules and Fiscal Rules and have been pushing forward with the development and testing of our new 38 time and leave system. Really the last key component in audit implementation that will be piloted next 39 month with plans for statewide implementation in February. I'll pause there for any questions before I 40 move into our progress on individual recommendations.

1 Sen. Michaelson Jenet

2 Wonderful. Any questions? Please proceed.

3

4 Steven Vasconcellos

5 Thank you, Madam Chair. Out of Recommendation 1, really focused on policies and procedures related 6 to voluntary separation agreements. I'm pleased to report that the elements of Recommendation 1 have 7 been fully implemented with updates to our Personnel Rules that align with Executive Branch guidance.
8 And I'm going to sound a little bit like a broken record this morning. I think correctly, time and again, 9 the OSA pointed us to existing Executive Branch policies and procedures when addressing our own 10 deficiencies in our policies and procedures. Which is what we've largely done. As I mentioned at the 11 LAC hearing last year, the use of voluntary separation incentives in our organization, historically is very 12 rare. And since the performance audit, we have not offered any VSIs to SCAO employees.

13

14 Moving on to the second Audit Recommendation, policies and procedures related to administrative 15 leave. That recommendation has been partially implemented at this point, largely through updates to our 16 Personnel Rules related to administrative leave and post-employment compensation, addressing issues 17 that were identified in the audit. Here again, we have reviewed and incorporated many of the provisions 18 that are currently under Executive Branch guidance. Under our new rules, administrative leave cannot be 19 used to extend an employee's termination date, which was a key concern identified in the performance 20 audit. Still outstanding for us is the implementation of our new time and leave system, which will 21 provide more robust tracking and reporting of administrative leave, including addressing the concerns 22 about the reasons why administrative leave was used, and, then, the reporting functions to follow up on 23 whether administrative leave is being used properly and within rule guidelines. I would mention. So, 24 we're using, it is now called UKG. It was formerly called Kronos, which is a system widely used in the 25 Executive Branch. So, we were able to attach to an Executive Branch agreement through our 26 procurement procedure. The main reasons for the delay. One, it is a new time and leave system for a 27 4,000-person organization. So, it is not a small implementation at a time when our Office is smaller than 28 it's ever been in my career, in the aftermath of budget cuts. So, there's some complication there. We've 29 had to make some changes to the system on the fly to help make sure that we're going to be in 30 compliance with the Colorado Equal Pay Act. And, additionally, trying to do all of this without an HR 31 Director for most of the last two years has been a little bit of a challenge. So, about six months ended up 32 being added on to our initial expected implementation date. But, pre-pilot work is happening as we 33 speak. The pilot, which will include our office at the State Court Administrator's Office and a handful of 34 Judicial Districts across the State, we'll go live the first week of January. So, we're inside. We're about 35 three weeks out from going live with the hope that we can go statewide with UKG in February.
36 Questions on the second recommendation before I move on to the third?

37

38 Pardon me, Audit Recommendation 3 focused on the storage and review of HR related records. And this 39 is another area where the recommendations have been partially implemented. Our takeaway from the 40 audit was that we needed to focus on the concerns related to family medical leave first. And, so, we've

1 focused on tightening up our controls and policies and procedures related to family medical leave 2 requests, storage of the documentation associated with that, and associated security. We used to have 3 one person in the organization assigned to benefits for 4,000 people. And, while times are tight, we've 4 been able to move some folks around, and now have two people. So, we have doubled the number of 5 folks. I have concerns long-term over whether that's an adequate number of people working on benefits 6 and related issues for the Department. But we're trying to address that through our budget request in this 7 upcoming fiscal year cycle. Our legal team and the Attorney General's Office review every request for 8 family medical leave, and I have final approval or denial over each request. So, at each stage in the 9 recommendation, our legal team will review, they'll make a recommendation on whether to approve.
10 Then the AGs Office will review, they'll make a recommendation on whether to approve. I read the 11 recommendations and then make a final determination. Pardon me. We're in the process of developing 12 similar written policies and procedures for other areas identified in the audit. Specifically, disciplinary 13 investigations and settlement agreements. That's the work that remains to be done there. The 14 documentation is currently being stored securely in a centralized location. You may remember that there 15 were concerns about key HR documentation being stored on personal computers or state computers that 16 weren't somehow connected to the network. And while this sounds like a relatively mundane issue, we 17 are all using the same computer, no one's using private computers, and everyone's using the same secure, 18 centralized network, document storage. So, we do have procedures. What we need to do is reduce to 19 writing formal organizational policies that support those procedures. Any questions? I apologize. My 20 voice is really gravely this morning. I might be a little nervous, too. Any questions on Audit 21 Recommendation Number 3?

23 Moving on to Number 4, sole-source procurement, I'm happy to report that this item was fully 24 implemented, and it was fully implemented before we came to the table at the hearing last year. We 25 updated our purchasing rules and created a new fiscal rule related to independent contractors. You may 26 remember, there was concerns that we did not have clear guidance on any sort of cooling off period 27 between when a former employee left service at the Judicial Department before they could become an 28 independent contractor. This is another area where we've mirrored Executive Branch policies and now 29 have a six-month mandatory waiting period between an employee's separation and the date when that 30 individual is eligible to serve as an independent contractor. We have only had one sole-source 31 procurement since our hearing last year. Our internal audit team reviewed that process over the Summer 32 and determined that it was conducted in compliance with our updated rules and procedures. Any 33 questions on Recommendation 4?

34
35 Moving on to Recommendation 5, budget authority and approval of credit card purchases. I'm also 36 happy to report that we have fully implemented all of the provisions associated with Audit 37 Recommendation Number 5, with updated commercial card rules that went into effect in November 38 2020 and a new budget fiscal rule that was implemented in September of this year, which defines budget 39 authority and formalizes processes for delegation of that authority. Questions regarding Number 5?

1 Finally, Audit Recommendation Number 6, which I really view as a summation of all of the previous 2 recommendations. Asking us to engage in a system of controls that fosters integrity, ethical values, and 3 accountability. And I talk about this in two different veins, I think there's sort of the basics of the 4 implementation. And I won't go on in length, but I think there's a philosophical issue embedded in there, 5 as well, that I'd like to speak to briefly. We have made great progress in all the previous areas leading 6 up. The two areas, I think, from an audit compliance standpoint, that keep us from being fully 7 implemented. Are, one, that full implementation of our new time and leave system, which is coming in 8 the next eight weeks statewide. And the last written policies and procedures in HR that we need to 9 finish. But again, this is kind of beyond, excuse me. I think it's tempting sometimes. Because there's a lot 10 of operational things, rules, procedures that need to be updated. It's easy sometimes to think of audit 11 compliance as a checklist of things to do. But really this is a matter of vigilance. Healthy organizations 12 are always engaged. They're always looking for their areas of liability and weakness, and if they're really 13 in pursuit of the highest level of integrity and health, there's going to be that constant vigilance in this 14 area. One area, for years, the State Court Administrator's Office was not subject to review by our 15 internal audit team. That has changed. We are on the calendar for September of 22. Now, you might ask, 16 why so far out? I think again, in a checking an item off a checklist, fashion, we could have put ourselves 17 on the calendar much earlier. But there wouldn't have been a lot of significant data to work with to see 18 whether we're compliant. I wanted six months to pass. I wanted some time for the new time and leave 19 system to be in place. And some time for some repetition under the new rules, so that our audit team has 20 something to dig into. And, so, that's really the last component that isn't going to be done by February, 21 which is that first full internal follow up audit. Our audit team has done some preliminary looks, whether 22 it was the sole-source I mentioned earlier, or several other areas under the umbrella of this audit to see 23 how we're doing preliminarily. But for me, there wasn't enough data there with a straight face to come to 24 this committee and say we are fully compliant. Which is why I want a little bit of that buffer of time to 25 have more data for them to work with and dig into whether we're really walking the talk.

26

27 Sen. Michaelson Jenet

28 Thank you, Mr. Vasconcellos. It sounds like a significant amount of work has been done, and I really 29 appreciate your dedication to it and your comment regarding vigilance. We do rely on you, and we 30 appreciate you. Thank you.

31

32 Steven Vasconcellos

33 Thank you, Madam Chair.

34

35 Sen. Michaelson Jenet

36 Any other questions? Comments? All right. Thank you very much.

37

38 Steven Vasconcellos

39 Thank you, committee.

Transcript of Hearing before the J. Budget Comm., Colo. Leg., December 15, 2021;

Legislative Joint Budget Committee—December 15, 2021 Hearing: Presentation of the Colorado Judicial Department

1 Rep. McCluskie

2 The Joint Budget Committee will come to order. Welcome back members. We have a terrific afternoon
3 planned with our Judicial Department and Independent Agencies. I am delighted to welcome before us 4 Chief Justice Boatright and State Court Administrator Vasconcellos. Really looking forward to our 5 conversation, and I will turn it over to you, Chief Justice, to begin.

6

7 Chief Justice Boatright

8 All right. Thank you, Madam Chair. If I can do a brief introduction. A year ago, at this time, we were 9 not holding any jury trials. We faced a huge backlog of cases. In the Spring of 2020, we had cut over 10 205 positions, and that included significant layoffs. And we appeared at this hearing with the paralyzing 11 fear that we were going to face more cuts. Because we really had then reached a point where we feared 12 we could not do our constitutional obligation if we endured any additional cuts. I'm pleased to report 13 that we started doing jury trials in many of our jurisdictions in February. Very slowly at first. And we 14 built up the pre-pandemic levels during the Summer. I will say that everyone in the system worked 15 exceedingly hard. And when I say that, I mean the DAs, the public defenders, alternate defense counsel, 16 private counsel. Our trial judges worked exceedingly hard. And in checking with our Chiefs, I think we 17 are not having that backlog that we had a year ago at this time. There's still work to be done, but we're 18 not facing sort of that catastrophic backlog that we feared. Now, the surge of the Delta variant has 19 caused some of our smaller jurisdictions to stop holding jury trials, and we'll see what happens with the 20 Omicron. But we're in a much better place than we were a year ago. Importantly, there were no super 21 spreader events, as jurors have come back. And I will say that I'm really proud of our citizens because 22 they've shown up and they're willing and anxious to serve as jurors in our cases. And, so, I want to say 23 thank you to them. And I want to compliment all the judges, our court staff, probation officers, and 24 especially our Chief Judges, for being careful in making sure that safety was a priority. As kind of an 25 anecdote, one of our Chief Judges told us that, after completing the jury trial, one of his jurors came up 26 to him and said, I wish the doctor's office had as many protocols as you guys did. I felt exceedingly safe 27 to be there. And I think we wanted to make sure that jurors felt safe in coming in. And they're still 28 attending. And I kind of view that as sort of a canary in the mine. If we weren't doing things safely, we'd 29 see a dramatic drop off. And we're just not seeing that.

30

31 So, as the background. As I indicated, we had cut 205 positions in the Spring or Summer of 2020. And I 32 will say at the time, the State Court Administrator's Office took a very high disproportionate share of 33 those cutoffs. Because we recognized that the trial courts were bearing the brunt of what was happening 34 with regard to Covid. And we tried to preserve as much trial court staff as we possibly could. When we 35 were lucky enough to get 163 positions restored, we again focused on the trial court because, again, they 36 were bearing the brunt of what was happening with regard to Covid. And I think we did exclusively trial

1 court staff replacement, with the exception of one Court of Appeals Staff Attorney. But everybody else
2 went. Meanwhile, our State Court Administrator's Office has continued to operate, really with, I think a 3 fairly skeleton crew. Is how I would describe it.

4
5 Our budget requests this year are really driven by three primary forces.

6
7 Number one, the pandemic. Obviously, the pandemic has caused all of us to change how we do 8 business. And I do think there's a silver lining, because it forced us to innovate and pushed us to use
9 virtual proceedings. And the number that I think is really important is, every month we hold 17,500 10 virtual proceedings. And that serves over 130,000 participants.

11
12 Number two, the performance audit of over a year ago taught us some valuable lessons. We learned that 13 we just can't run the State Court Administrator's Office, the Department like we did 20 years ago. We've 14 grown in numbers and complexity. As a result, we have substantial needs in our HR Department, 15 contract procurement department, and training. As an example, we enter into approximately 2,500 to 16 3,000 contracts a year that we know of. And we need to make sure that our procurement process is safe 17 and we're monitoring our liabilities.

18
19 And, then, number three, and I'm sure you're going to hear this from all kinds of different agencies that 20 come before you, the current market environment. We are really struggling to hire people. We are losing 21 people at levels that I've never seen. And I've been a judge for 22 years. I spent my first 12 years in the 22 trial court, and I've never seen the turnover. I've never seen the low application rate. And I know Mr.
23 Vasconcellos has some information that can fill that in. And who we're really hurting are our court 24 judicial assistants. We call them our CJAs. And, really, they're the heart and soul of our trial court 25 organization. They interface with the public. And in many ways, they are the face of the judicial system 26 to many of the people who come into court. It's considered an entry-level position, but it has 27 extraordinary responsibilities. They are our workers who are entering information for warrants, 28 protection, orders, sentencing. And, yet, we're competing with fast food restaurants for keeping them 29 employed. And again, as way of a story. We had, and I go back to Jeffco because that's where I came 30 from. One of our CJAs had been who had been working for particular judge for 15 years, tearfully came 31 in and told him she had to leave. She gotten a job at a municipal court for substantially more money.
32 And even though they had that kind of special relationship. Just for her family, she had to leave. So, in 33 broad strokes, we need people for our financial services and HR departments. These directly tie to the 34 lessons we learned from the audit. These people are necessary because of the turnover and the need for 35 training. And we need professionals to run a good business and limit liabilities on the procurement 36 process.

37
38 Number two, IT staff and infrastructure. One of the things that we have learned is, a lot of the public and 39 I think a lot of the attorneys, like the virtual proceedings. And, although it is harder on our staff, we are 40 urging our courts to try and use them whenever possible. And they're just going to be some things we're

1 not going to be able to use them for. Jury trials, I don't think are on the horizon and things like that. But 2 there are a lot of things for short hearings. Another really good example of cost savings is if you have 3 somebody in the Department of Corrections and they have a hearing up in Weld County that you know 4 is going to get continued. Do that with a virtual hearing. Rather than sending sheriff's deputies down to 5 Canon City, transporting them up and then transporting them back. For, you know, what's really a pretty 6 perfunctory hearing. But we need infrastructure upgrades. One of the things that we've learned is the 7 public likes virtual proceedings, but they want them to go well. And we are struggling with a lot of our 8 infrastructure. The Carr Building is a perfect example. We want to do some certain things with virtual 9 proceedings, like giving one of the attorneys an option to appear in person and another virtually. We did 10 virtual oral arguments for all of last year, and thought they went very well. We don't have the 11 infrastructure. And our Building is eight years old. So, this is really true around the entire State. And 12 many of our buildings, obviously, are much, much older than the Ralph Carr Building.

13

14 And, then, the third thing is training. As I indicated, our CJAs because of new programs, turnover, and 15 the significant responsibilities they have. We need to have extensive training. And that's a lot of the IT 16 staff, desktop training. We can do some of that virtually. Some of that needs to be in person. We need 17 training for our probation officers, so they continue to be able to supervise safely. And for our judges.
18 No new District Court judge comes in with the experience. And I'll tell you, in the District Court you 19 handle criminal, civil, juvenile, probate, domestic, mental health, and in many jurisdictions, water law.
20 And no one comes in with that kind of experience. And, so, we're asking for restoration of our judicial 21 education budget. So that we can improve and include our training.

22

23 At the end, I'll say, we need your help. We are here to serve the public, and we are trying to do it in an 24 efficient, safe and compassionate manner. And we're here today asking for your help. Thank you.

25

26 Rep. McCluskie

27 Thank you, Chief Justice Boatright. Really appreciate your comments. Mr. Vasconcellos your next. Or 28 would we'd like to take questions at this point?

29

30 Steven Vasconcellos

31 We're happy to take questions at this point, Madam Chair.

32

33 Rep. McCluskie

34 Thank you. Any questions or comments? Mr. Vice Chair.

35

36 Sen. Moreno

37 Thank you, Madam Chair. I have a quick question that I don't think is on the agenda. But I would just be 38 curious to get your general thoughts on it. There's been a few folks in my community who are concerned 39 with the workload for the County Courts and I'm wondering if that is something you're seeing statewide, 40 or if it's limited to certain areas? Just curious to get your thoughts on that issue.

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 I'll try. And, then, Mr. Vasconcellos can tell me where I'm wrong.

3

4 Rep. McCluskie

5 Chief Justice Boatright.

6

7 Chief Justice Boatright

8 Thank you, and I apologize. I would say, right now, it's a little bit to be determined because of the big 9 shift in the cases that take effect in April. So, what we have done is. We anticipate asking for some 10 additional County Court judges, I think, in the future. But we just honestly don't know what the impact 11 of that is going to be at the present time, and we didn't want to come to you with speculative 12 information. But we'd rather do a knowledgeable, weighted caseload study to be able to give you real 13 numbers. So that we're not over-asking or under-asking.

14

15 Rep. McCluskie

16 Mr. Vasconcellos.

17

18 Steven Vasconcellos

19 Thank you, Madam Chair. That's correct, Senator Moreno. I think we're really in a period of flux. There 20 have been policy changes that have pushed more cases in the County Court. If that's durable, we will be 21 back. But we want to see some stability. Charging practices, we're still in this sort of we're not quite in 22 the initial teeth of Covid when everything shut down. But things are still in flux. And it doesn't feel 23 stable enough to make that serious of an ask. Particularly, for bench resources, where we know that's a 24 special ask of the General Assembly, requiring the super majority. We want to make sure we're on really 25 solid ground before we approach you on that.

26

27 Sen. Moreno

28 Thank you.

29

30 Rep. McCluskie

31 I'd like to welcome Representatives Bockenfeld and Weissman and Senator Lee. Thank you for joining 32 us today. Mr. Vasconcellos, please proceed.

33

34 Steven Vasconcellos

35 Thank you, Madam Chair. If it's okay with you and the committee, we've submitted detailed answers to 36 the 20-plus questions. I will spare you going through them in excruciating detail and try to hit the high 37 points of each of the questions, understanding, of course, that the committee may have additional 38 questions or may want to redirect me. Completely understand. So, we'll just jump right in if it's okay.

1 With the first common question, which asked us to comment about our remote work policies and their 2 potential impact on leased space, vehicle needs, some challenges and efficiencies related to Covid and 3 whether we expect remote work to continue. By way of background, on the leased space issue. It's 4 somewhat moot for the Judicial Department. The only leased space that the Judicial Department has is 5 the Ralph Carr Judicial Center. By statute, counties provide all of the office space for courts and 6 probation. So that is our one leased space engagement. Is the Carr Center. So, generally speaking, 7 remote work policies aren't going to affect that. Pragmatically speaking, much of the work of the courts 8 and probation, even when they're supporting virtual engagement, is done on site in the office. Because 9 that's where the tools to support that work are located, the network capacity, etc. And, so, most of the 10 courts are in person. My office at the State Court Administrator's Office, at the first of the year, is going 11 to embark on implementing a hybrid work plan. Where folks will spend a mix of time, either working 12 from home or in the office. So, that's to be seen, whether we have some long-term space changes at the 13 Carr Center. But as we sit here now, no change in plans with regard to leased space. With regard to fleet, 14 we have a relatively small fleet in the Department. Approximately 40 vehicles that are used primarily by 15 probation officers in geographically large Judicial Districts and also some regional staff. About 25% of 16 my staff are actually not here in Denver. They're regionalized around the State, including IT support 17 staff, HR staff, training staff. So, that they're closer to the people that they serve. They also utilize some 18 of the fleet. Too early to tell whether we're going to have any changes in fleet. I imagine that to be stable 19 for the time being. With regard to opportunities, the Chief has already referred to this. We probably 20 moved 10 to 15 years in the space, frankly, of a few weeks with regard to implementation of virtual 21 proceedings. That has been both a blessing and somewhat of a challenge, as well. On the upside. And it's 22 tough to look for silver landings and something that's been as catastrophic in our society as a pandemic.
23 But from a business operations standpoint only, it really moved the ball forward for us. We had to 24 engage in virtual proceedings in order to meet our statutory and constitutional mandates. The flip side is 25 we did that on a network that wasn't prepared for the load. And, so, while it's gone, I give us a solid C 26 plus. But due to challenges outside of our control. That's hearings dropping in the middle, freezing, 27 connectivity challenges. Things you can imagine. And we did it over a network that we didn't prep for 28 this. And we went, we pretty much flipped the switch in the space of less than a month. Which, of 29 course, is driving part of our request. So, definitely an opportunity, though. And an improvement that we 30 don't want to let go of. We've had the opportunity to discuss a little bit of this offline with some of you.
31 But, if you're thinking about a geographically large jurisdiction and maybe a status conference that's 32 going to take 20 or 30 minutes in a domestic relations case, why have someone drive in an hour, two 33 hours? In some cases, some of our Districts are so large, three hours for a 30 minute event. We're also 34 very cognizant that many of the people who are engaging in the court services are hourly employees.
35 They're losing money when they come to us. So, this for us is an access to justice issue. We want to 36 make sure that we have the network infrastructure to continue to support this. Not just what we have 37 today, but that we can continue to grow to meet the citizens' needs. Flip side though, there are challenges 38 that have come not just with the network. With regard to virtual proceedings, it is slower process-wise to 39 run through a docket, and the Chief can provide some highlights on this. But it's not just slower, it's also 40 more labor intensive. I've had the opportunity to work as support staff early in my career in the courts.

1 And you can run through a large sentencing docket with relative efficiency. One case is done. You call 2 the next case. The person walks up. If they're not there, that's set aside. But boom, boom, there's a 3 certain flow that happens. We've got to check for audio, connectivity. The folks who are engaging with 4 us have a wide variety of technical facility, a wide variety of quality in sort of their own personal IT
5 equipment. Some folks are on their phone, some folks are on a laptop, some folks are on a desktop, all 6 kinds of things. It's not the end of the world. Justice is not intended necessarily to be an efficiency 7 exercise. So, this is not a complaint. But it is not necessarily more efficient or less work for us to do 8 proceedings virtually. So, that's one of the challenges we've faced. Any questions on the first common 9 question before I move forward?

10

11 Rep. McCluskie

12 Seeing none, please proceed.

13

14 Steven Vasconcellos

15 Thank you, Madam Chair. If it's okay, Madam Chair, I'll just continue to roll through and just stop me 16 whenever if that's all right?

17

18 Rep. McCluskie

19 We'll do that. Thank you.

20

21 Steven Vasconcellos

22 Thank you. The second common question asked us to identify the significant one-time federal funds 23 from stimulus that the Department has received. There are several areas. One, under the Cares Act, we 24 received approximately $350,000 for eviction legal defense grants under ARPA. And we received 25 ARPA funds actually the via a mechanism, through two bills that the General Assembly passed, House 26 Bill 1329 and Senate Bill 292. Both from last session. Under House Bill 1329, we received $1.5 million 27 in eviction legal defense funds to grant out. Similarly, under Senate Bill 292, we received about three 28 quarters of a million dollars in Family Violence Justice monies to grant out to organizations. Finally, 29 through ARPA, we've received approximately $3 million for community-based victim services 30 programs that pass through the Department to DAs offices via the VALE program. So, those are sort of 31 the highlights of the one-time federal funds that we've received.

32

33 Moving on to question three. Senator Rankin you asked about the impact of recent legislation on the mix 34 of misdemeanor and felony cases, and whether that mix is going to impact our operational needs, 35 whether that's technology, problem solving, courts, language, access, et cetera. Every year, the General 36 Assembly passes a large number of bills that has some either small or large impact on Branch 37 operations. I'm only going to highlight a couple of key pieces of legislation. One that passed a couple of 38 years ago and is already effective, one that passed last year and is not yet effective.

39

1 First, is House Bill 19-1263 which changed defense levels for controlled substance possession. It moved 2 a number of felony drug charges down to misdemeanors. That was effective in March of 2020. The 3 effective date of that bill, interestingly, and the start of the pandemic happened almost on top of each
4 other. And I think it's fair to say, for the better part of a year, our world looked nothing like the last 25
5 years in terms of filings. It didn't matter whether it was criminal, civil, what have you. Everything just 6 went topsy turvy. So, not to be evasive, but it is still a little hard to tell what's going on with the impact 7 of that bill. When you look at the competing inputs of the policy change, the operational changes related 8 to impact and, frankly, charging decisions that local district attorneys are coming with. They've had their 9 own, I'm sure, staffing challenges, etc. So, we're not entirely clear yet. What we have seen is a drop in 10 filing of felony drug cases. We have not seen a concomitant increase in misdemeanor drug filings. There 11 has been some small increase, but not the same rate of the decrease in felonies. But, I think the story is 12 still to be told there.

13

14 The other piece of legislation.

15

16 Rep. McCluskie

17 Representative Herod.

18

19 Rep. Herod

20 Thank you, Madam Chair. And do you have those exact numbers in the in the document you provided, 21 or is that, one you can provide later?

22

23 Rep. McCluskie

24 Mr. Vasconcellos.

25

26 Steven Vasconcellos

27 Thank you, Madam Chair. Representative Herod, the filing numbers. There's a historical trend line in the 28 information that we provided to you. And, if you'd like to dig deeper into it, beyond what we've 29 provided, we would be happy to.

30

31 Rep. McCluskie

32 Representative Herod.

33

34 Rep. Herod

35 Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to dig a little bit deeper into that. And, I think it was interesting.
36 This trend line is I think, very interesting. But when you mention that you have not seen the same level 37 of misdemeanor filings correlated with the drop in the felony filings, it makes me wonder what's going 38 on? Do you feel like the DAs are not filing based on issues with court processes? Or do you believe that 39 they are maybe making other determinations as to why they're not actually filing these misdemeanor 40 drug cases?

1 Rep. McCluskie
2 Mr. Vasconcellos.

3

4 Steven Vasconcellos

5 Thank you, Madam Chair. Representative Herod. In terms of some of the DAs' reasoning, I don't have 6 access to.

7

8 Rep. Herod

9 Okay.

10

11 Steven Vasconcellos

12 We have not heard much in the way of complaints or concerns about court processes. We are not in a 13 position where we feel. In fact, we've really tried to bend over backwards to make the courts accessible 14 during these difficult times. And as the Chief mentioned earlier, we've received a lot of positive 15 feedback about offering virtual proceedings. I don't perceive, at least at this point, that that's been the 16 challenge. There may be other considerations that DA's have liberty to, that I don't.

17

18 Rep. McCluskie

19 Representative Herod.

20

21 Rep. Herod

22 Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess when I meant court processes, I was thinking about capacity issues. It 23 sounds like that's not a challenge. It's interesting to me that the misdemeanor filings are down when drug 24 deaths are up, quite frankly. And I'm just trying to get at the heart of why. You know, has there been a 25 change in disposition from the DAs or needing more, offering more treatment options. Are they just not 26 filing because they don't believe it's worth their time anymore? Just again, trying to see if there's any 27 type of way that we can parse that out. Outside of the political but more of like the actual court 28 processes. And then are we seeing that these cases are less successful in conviction? Is also something, 29 possibly could be an issue here, as well. So, wanting to know if you have any data or anecdotal or 30 otherwise that you can present us.

31

32 Rep. McCluskie

33 Mr. Vasconcellos.

34

35 Steven Vasconcellos

36 Thank you, Madam Chair. Representative Herod. We will not have a lot of data that is illuminating DA 37 decision making, necessarily. And I imagine that Mr. Raines at the District Attorney's Council can 38 probably give, I don't want to speak for him. But, I imagine he's got a good sense of the pulse of DAs 39 statewide. And what those considerations are. If there's anything I can do to help facilitate a 40 conversation along those lines, I'd be happy to. Again, I think our data really supports the operation of

1 the courts. So, we're going to know a lot about the charges, the disposition in the case, what the sentence
2 was, if anything like that. Success in treatment, things of that nature. We'll have data along those lines.
3 And I'd be happy to work closely with you and get you what we do have.

4

5 Rep. McCluskie

6 Representative Herod.

7

8 Rep. Herod

9 Thank you, Madam Chair. And I would love to chat with you about that and kind of dig in a little 10 deeper. Thank you. And I think we also have some folks today, possibly with the Public Defender's 11 Office, that might shed some light on this, as well. So, thank you so much. Chief Justice.

12

13 Rep. Herod

14 Chief Justice Boatright.

15

16 Chief Justice Boatright

17 I would just add, and Mr. Vasconcellos alluded to that. This started at the exact same time everything 18 kind of got shut down in court. So, I don't know how much that contributed to it. But I will say that if, 19 through this process of learning. If there's things that we can do better, we're certainly open to seeing 20 what can be done. But I don't know that there's an easy, quick answer right now. Especially, with those 21 two things intersecting at the same time.

22

23 Rep. McCluskie

24 Thank you. Mr. Vasconcellos, please proceed.

25

26 Steven Vasconcellos

27 Thank you, Madam Chair. Moving on to a question for Senator Moreno. You had asked about 28 complexity of our caseload and impacts on Department resources. Of course, historically, caseload, a 29 combination of caseload volume and the relative complexity of those cases are what drive our staffing 30 needs. Covid has, and Chief Justice Boatright spoke about this earlier. Covid has changed our business 31 engagement model pretty substantially. And we have not had an opportunity. It's important, but given 32 everything else that's been going on, it just hasn't been able to be a top priority. Which is to say we 33 haven't had a chance to update our workload models and do full-time and motion studies, as we would 34 prefer. We've made some short-term adjustments to our modeling to try to account for Covid. But what's 35 really called for here, and we were planning on starting on this in the next year. Are from scratch 36 updates to our workload models to account for all the changes in Covid practices.

37

38 Moving on to another question from you, Senator Moreno. Number 5 about the Colorado WINS 39 partnership, and sort of our feelings, since we're not necessarily subject to the WINS partnership. We 40 feel pretty strongly that expanding total comp is critical to attracting and retaining the talent that we

1 need in state government. And we don't want to be in a situation where, depending on which branch of 2 government you work for, you have a different set of benefits that are available to you. We did some 3 outreach earlier with DPA, this week. And one of the things on our mind, that caught our eye, was the 4 possible tuition benefits that are part of the WINS agreement, and that DPA is asking for funding for this 5 year. According to the feedback we received from DPA, all state employees, regardless of branch, 6 would have access to that educational reimbursement program. We're hoping that's the case. We need to 7 see how that program develops. If, for some reason that's not the case, you could anticipate that we 8 would likely approach the General Assembly, the Joint Budget Committee for parity in funding. We feel 9 that's critical.

10 11 Moving on to Question 6. Senator Rankin, you had inquired about the oversight our IT team provides to 12 or assistance that they provide to the independent agencies within the Judicial Branch. As we sit here 13 today, we are only actively supporting one of the independent agencies, and that is the Independent 14 Ethics Commission. It is literally a one-person shop, and we are able to support them very easily. The 15 other independent agencies address their own IT needs. It has not been uncommon when a brand new 16 independent agency is created that we provide sort of startup and gap-filling IT support for the first year 17 to 18 months. And we've done that with several agencies over the last decade. But we usually, when we 18 enter into an MOU, we usually have a limited time that we do that. And, as I mentioned, right now, it's 19 only currently IEC. And we plan on supporting them long-term. Again, one person shop. It doesn't make 20 sense necessarily for IEC to approach you for money for a vendor or what have you. They're in our 21 Building. It's easy enough to support him.

22
23 Rep. McCluskie

24 Senator Rankin.

25
26 Sen. Rankin

27 Thank you. I think there's definitely some concerns behind the question. Security, privacy, you know, 28 efficiency of resources in a time when it's really hard to find IT resources. So, maybe we can have the 29 agencies comment when they give their presentation.

30
31 Rep. McCluskie

32 Mr. Vasconcellos.

33
34 Steven Vasconcellos

35 Thank you, Madam Chair. I certainly would never speak for the other agencies. I would just say, if the 36 proposal was for one of them to take over our IT, I might value our independence. So, for what it's 37 worth.

38
39 Moving on to Question 7. Madam Chair, you had asked for an overview of the positions that have been 40 hard to fill. And the challenges in recruitment based on what we've been able to put together, really hit

1 all levels of positions within the organization. That being said, our greatest concerns are around our two 2 largest entry-level pools of employees. Our court judicial assistants, that Chief Justice Boatright referred 3 to earlier, and probation officers. Those are our two largest employment classes. That's where, really, the 4 meat and potatoes of the work of the Department gets done, frankly. By way of data, in the three years
5 leading up to the pandemic, we received on average about 55 applications per posting. In the last six 6 months, we are receiving on average, and this is all positions, not just the our two largest position types, 7 our two most critical position types, in many ways, among support staff. But in the last six months, we 8 were averaging 12. So, we are down from 55 to a dozen. And it is not uncommon. Of course, those 9 being averages, just thinking from the perspective of what I have direct purview over and our Office at 10 SCAO will get 5-6-7, single digit numbers sometimes. And need to repost because the applicant pool 11 just isn't there. But when we focus, again, back on the direct services to the citizens that happen in the 12 trial courts, that happen in probation, our salaries are not competitive. If you look at the salaries for a 13 court judicial assistant, our starting salary is on par with what most fast food restaurant establishments 14 are offering. And while I have done that work in my youth, and it has a stress of its own. I think it's 15 different than asking someone to come in and meet the public's legal process needs to put on protection 16 orders where people's life safety is at issue, to enter sentences to DOC. The work and the level of 17 training, the level of responsibility is not on par, and we are not competitive. We are not even 18 competitive in Colorado, within sort of the judicial community, if you compare us to say, municipal 19 courts that are funded by the cities. You know, beyond salary, we've also mentioned total compensation, 20 one of the areas that I think is sort of a silent filter on applications that prevent people from maybe even 21 expressing interest in the Judicial Department is an issue like dependent care.

22
23 And I'll highlight child care, but that's only one component, of course, of dependent care. You know, 24 DU did a study back in 2017 so this data is now five years old. And we've seen cost of living in 25 Colorado explode in that time frame. So, it's probably even more pointed as we sit here today. But at 26 that time, the cost of infant care was approximately $15,000. Using today's salary, that's about 40% of a 27 starting CJA's salary. They can't afford to work for us. And I have no doubt, I have no doubt that there 28 are a large number of thoughtful people who would love to take a path of public service, who simply 29 can't afford to. And, so, we don't have an ask today related, you know, to dependent care. But it is a 30 discussion that I'm hoping that we can keep going beyond just today's hearing. Because I think it's not 31 just affecting the Judicial Department, but all branches of government.

32
33 Rep. McCluskie
34 Representative Herod.

35
36 Rep. Herod
37 Thank you, Madam Chair. We had an interesting conversation sometime recently. The days blur 38 together. On the JBC about childcare, yesterday. And the state opportunities for funding to provide 39 childcare in business facilities or where folks work, and it just makes me wonder if we're taking care of 40 state departments, agencies and judicial first. So, I encourage you all to reach out to human services and

1 specifically the Division of Early Childhood, to see if there are opportunities to provide child care in in 2 your courts statewide.

3

4 Rep. McCluskie
5 Mr. Vasconcellos.

6

7 Steven Vasconcellos

8 Thank you, Madam Chair. It is a time for creativity. Representative Herod and I appreciate the referral.
9 Thank you.

10

11 Moving on to Question 8. Senator Hansen, you had asked about the interrelationship between the 12 Department's existing data systems. Particularly, some gaps that have been identified in data that may be 13 of interest to the General Assembly in supporting policy. You know, of course, the number one primary 14 reason for our data management system is it's an administrative support system to support the flow of 15 cases through the courts. To support successful offender engagement for successful outcomes in 16 probation. But in my 20 years at the State Court Administrator's Office, one of my first jobs was pulling 17 data and responding to a lot of requests from the General Assembly. Something we do to this very day.
18 And, so, of course, we are more than happy. We have a history of providing data. We anticipate and 19 expect to provide data in the future. Sometimes we have something that you guys are interested in that 20 we simply don't collect. But we are at a place with our data management system. It is 25 years old. Part 21 of our request this year is a request for some planning money to look at what the next generation of our 22 case management system would look like. By all accounts, I think we are at or near end of life. The 23 programming language that it's programmed in, RPG, is difficult to procure. And, when you can, it's 24 extraordinarily expensive. And, so, with that planning will necessarily come a rich and robust look at the 25 type of data we collect. And, so, I think there's opportunities moving forward.

26

27 Rep. McCluskie
28 Senator Hansen.

29

30 Sen. Hansen

31 Thank you, Madam Chair. And, yeah, really appreciate that response. And as we take a fresh look at the 32 IT systems that are needed, I think it's a great time to take a fresh look at the data needs and engage 33 stakeholders of different issues and different points of view on what data is needed. So, this is the 34 perfect time. And you're not the first part of the State that has a 25-year-old data system. But this refresh 35 moment is a great chance to take on some of the data questions. So, thanks for doing that, and appreciate 36 the long history of helping the General Assembly with those requests.

37

38 Rep. McCluskie
39 Mr. Vasconcellos.

40

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. Moving on to Question 9. Senator Moreno, you had asked, How does our IT 3 infrastructure request fit under ARPA? Our request for ARPA funds is based on a nexus between the 4 impacts of Covid on our technology infrastructure and the available funds provided both by the state and 5 local fiscal recovery funds that are part of ARPA and the revenue loss restoration cash fund that was 6 created in Senate Bill 289 last year. The Federal Register provides some policy guidance to states on this 7 matter. And I'll quote here, "The use of federal fiscal recovery funds can be used for the provision of 8 government services, including modernization of cybersecurity, including hardware, software, and 9 protection of critical infrastructure." And it's really that infrastructure component that we're honing in on 10 with our request. And the Federal Register added with emphasis, "Recipients should have broad latitude 11 for these IT needs under ARPA." So, we feel this is not a terribly provocative request, frankly. As we 12 mentioned, we made some pretty substantial business operational changes. Largely catalyzed, not even 13 largely. Catalyzed, by Covid period. We would not have made the progress to virtual proceedings that 14 we have made today without Covid. And, so, we really feel this is an in-the-pocket request under ARPA.

15
16 Moving on to Question number 10, Mr. Kemm from JBC Staff asked us to comment on the IT issue 17 brief and the IT requests, in general. I'll go through this relatively quick, because I'm going to start to 18 sound a little bit like a broken record. Covid, of course, resulted in a massive transformation and how we 19 do business. Our $33 million in infrastructure and staff requests cover upgrades and improvements to 20 our infrastructure and staffing that we need to sustain stably the changes that we've made. We have 21 critical staffing needs around the state for AV support, IT, desktop support, network engineers. We don't 22 want to see an erosion of the gains that we've made in virtual proceedings and other operational changes 23 catalyzed by Covid due to a network that can't stand up to it and insufficient staff to support the day-to-24 day needs. The Chief referred to it in his opening but not just these, IT staff, but every single component 25 of the State Court Administrator's Office request is what I think of as sort of plumbing and electric. This 26 is stuff that supports the day-to-day success, the day-to-day operations of trial courts and probation. This 27 is not, I mean policy initiatives are important. The General Assembly occasionally passes initiatives that 28 they want us to own and take forward. This is about keeping the lights on and having a justice system 29 that is fully accessible to the citizens of Colorado. That's every component of this request, not just IT.

30
31 Rep. McCluskie

32 Chief Justice Boatright.

33
34 Chief Justice Boatright

35 Two things that I'd like to add to that. Number one is probation also has changed how they do business.
36 And I don't want to underestimate the value of being able to communicate with clients virtually, and not 37 having them come in and miss work. They're able to do some of their treatments and therapy virtually.
38 And we'd like to continue to do that. Because I think we're seeing that that's being very successful. And, 39 as to the last point, Mr. Vasconcellos said, as I alluded to earlier. I'm an old trial court guy, and trial 40 courts have always been sort of my primary focus. And, so, when we began discussing what we were

1 asking for here, it felt very State Court Administrator heavy to me. And, so, we partnered with and this 2 has been, again, been one of the benefits of the transformation we've made over the last couple years
3 with our Chief Probation Officers, our Court Executives and our Chief Judges. And they uniformly 4 support this. Our trial court staff and judges support this request because they said we need this to do our 5 job. And to me, that was the biggest selling point in us going forward with this. You know, getting 6 contracts done, so that services can be provided. Getting HR work done, so people can get hired, etc, etc.
7 Uniformly, they were in support of that. And to me, that was a big selling point.

8
9 Rep. McCluskie

10 Mr. Vasconcellos.

11
12 Steven Vasconcellos

13 Thank you, Madam Chair. Moving on to Question 11. Representative Herod, you had asked us a fairly 14 in depth question about the Bridges adult diversion and problem solving court programs within the 15 Department. Ranging from their availability to felony and misdemeanor cases. How the programs are 16 adapting to the needs of unhoused individuals, the severely mentally ill, etc. I'll try to hit some high 17 points. Please feel free to guide me into what you're most interested in. In terms of type and level of 18 offense.

19 20 Generally, none of these programs limit on offense level. There are some statutory limitations currently 21 with Bridges and the adult diversion program. Mostly very high-level felonies. But, generally speaking, 22 there aren't severe limitations based on type and level of offense. You will see both folks charged with 23 felonies and misdemeanors in these programs. Moving on to the challenge of the unhoused. Lack of 24 stable housing is one of the most critical challenges to success in these programs, and one of the most 25 critical challenges that our staff out in the Judicial Districts are trying to work through. Of course, if 26 folks don't have stable housing, they don't have that most basic human need met, we can't really expect 27 them to be successful in treatment or other provisions of their sentence. Demand is exceeding 28 availability. The housing market in Colorado is extraordinarily aggressive. We have staff, frankly, out 29 hustling every day trying to find solutions, creative solutions, to get folks into temporary, transitional 30 housing, long term housing, etc. It is not merely a matter of funding, although more funding is always 31 appreciated, availability is an enormous, enormous challenge. No one is barred from participation in 32 these programs based on their housing status. But sometimes as far as we can get with a participant in 33 one of these programs is just working on their housing needs. Because, again, until that's stabilized, we 34 really can't go much further. With regard to folks with severe behavioral health needs. For the Bridges 35 Program, that is its statutory reason to be. So, our Bridges liaisons and the work they do connecting 36 offenders to behavioral health services, the case planning and case management work that they do.
37 That's the statutory reason for Bridges to be. Similarly, with adult diversion and problem-solving courts, 38 while behavioral health challenges aren't the reason those programs exist, they are postured to deal with 39 those. Because the majority of our felony cases, defendants have some combination of substance abuse 40 or behavioral health challenges. And, so, if we're not addressing those, we're just setting up ourselves for

1 recidivism and a revolving door. But, again, availability of treatment. So, Covid has been also a good 2 catalyst to kick us in the rear to pursue telehealth. That has been great. Challenges. There's still a limited 3 pool of providers. So, you know, telehealth has in some ways, created opportunity. It's also put greater 4 pressure on the treatment community. Because there are more opportunities for out of community 5 treatment opportunities. So, definitely a challenge there. In terms of the adequacy of the funding request.
6 This is really. The funding request related to these programs are really to get us back to where we were 7 prior to the budget reductions. And, so, this is not going to solve everything. And frankly, even if we 8 came to you today with a substantial increase. The courts by themselves cannot unilaterally solve all 9 these challenges. It will be a multisystem effort, a multi system partnership in order to address these 10 issues adequately.

11
12 Rep. McCluskie
13 Representative Herod.

14
15 Rep. Herod
16 Thank you, Madam Chair. And thank you for this very thorough write up. It's extremely helpful. I think, 17 just to get us to some of the higher-level points here. Something that's jumped out at me was the 18 workload model shows the need for 7.9 FTE coordinator positions in the Bridges Program. But that 19 wasn't included in the restoration request. Just to pick that as an example. To parse out a little bit. Is it 20 because. I mean, would you, if you had those FTEs, would you be able to fill them? And is treatment 21 available in the community for the Bridges Program to continue to be successful if you're operating at 22 that capacity?

23
24 Rep. McCluskie
25 Mr. Vasconcellos.

26
27 Steven Vasconcellos
28 Thank you, Madam Chair. Representative, of the two, I would be more concerned about the availability 29 of treatment. Yes, hiring is hard. However, we are able to get there. It's taking longer. It is more difficult.
30 It's more time-consuming, but we're able to get there. Of the two, I am more concerned about the 31 availability of treatment in the community.

32
33 Rep. McCluskie
34 Representative Herod.

35
36 Rep. Herod
37 Okay, great. So, to be clear, if you were to get those positions, you would need more community 38 placement options for the program to be successful and for those coordinator positions to actually be 39 able to coordinate to something?

40

1 Rep. McCluskie
2 Mr. Vasconcellos.

3
4 Steven Vasconcellos

5 Thank you, Madam Chair. I think for optimum success, yes. Do I think they would have no impact? No, 6 I don't know that. It wouldn't be throwing money away. But I think for optimum success, we need more 7 in the community, more treatment in the community. And we did not. We made a conscious decision. I 8 can't really fathom the challenge of the decision making that the JBC has to engage in. Every single 9 agency has needs beyond what they present in their budget request every year. Just our own internal 10 discussion. I say that because even our own internal to the Department discussions are really challenging 11 to identify. What are we going to go for? Because there are, there are meritorious things that are always 12 left behind. We're trying to be respectful of an amount of growth that's sustainable. The economy is not 13 entirely stable and entirely out of the woods. So, no, we did not request additional staffing for Bridges.
14 And ultimately, while it is important, we were again focusing on some really, really core positions that 15 we felt would help our most basic operations. This is really a plumbing and electric kind of request, this 16 year.

17
18 Rep. McCluskie
19 Representative Herod.

20
21 Rep. Herod

22 Thank you, Madam Chair. And I think we appreciate that as a JBC. But as we look to some of these 23 additional dollars coming to the State, and what we need to meet some of the challenges right now.
24 Obviously, you live or at least work in Denver, so you see what's going on right here in the area, and 25 having more options. Treatment options is something that our mental behavioral health task force is 26 looking at, and there will be an infusion of more resources into our communities. I want to make sure 27 that people have access to those programs, especially those who are in the courts. And, so, it seems to 28 me like there might be an opportunity here, in partnership with the work that they're doing. To provide 29 more folks who can do the case management and the coordination to those treatment beds that will be 30 available in our communities. But, then, it also shows me that we actually have to charge people to get 31 into these programs. Is that accurate? So, these aren't these aren't diversion programs. You have to have 32 a felony or misdemeanor charge to get into these programs. And if the misdemeanor charges are down, 33 people aren't getting into these programs, either.

34
35 Rep. McCluskie
36 Mr. Vasconcellos.

37
38 Steven Vasconcellos

39 Thank you, Madam Chair. Representative Herod, generally speaking, yes, I agree with you. These are 40 all programs that take place post-filing. You know, Bridges. Participation in problem solving courts, for

1 example, in Colorado, are primarily post sentencing, even. And, so, the adult diversion program is a 2 diversionary program, but it is post-filing. So, charges have already been filed. Now they could be 3 dismissed as part of your diversionary agreement, if one is successful. But this is post criminal justice 4 system involvement.

5
6 Rep. McCluskie

7 Please proceed.
8

9 Steven Vasconcellos

10 Thank you. Madam Chair. Question Number 12 came from representative Benevides. She inquired 11 whether we were eliminating the mental health diversion program and what the plan for use for 12 additional diversionary funding was. Our decision item request for the adult diversion program would 13 actually expand, not reduce diversion participation and access to behavioral health interventions. The 14 adult diversion. What we're choosing to do so during. Let me back up, sorry. During the budget 15 reductions, programmatic funding for both the mental health diversion program and the adult diversion 16 program were essentially reduced to zero. We're focusing the recovery request exclusively on the adult 17 diversion program, and we're doing that because that program has the flexibility, not just to grow back to 18 its size, but also to take on the participants that would have been eligible for the mental health diversion 19 program. There's some statutory benefits, frankly, to the adult diversion program, and they really run to 20 program flexibility. Whether that's more flexibility in the kind of charges that can be accepted in the 21 program. More flexibility in the length of stay for the participant to support stable recovery in the 22 program. There's just frankly, more flexibility in statute under the adult diversion program. So, we're 23 focusing the recovery on that program and being able to subsume, essentially, participants who would 24 have otherwise been in the mental health diversion program. Representative Herod, you had asked us 25 about Question Number 13, with regard to our problem solving with court funding requests around 26 accessibility, equitable accessibility, to problem solving courts and our use of funding. I suppose it goes 27 without saying, but equitable access to problem solving court programs is a high priority for the Judicial 28 Department. And we have work to do. We are not there yet. We have active work to do. Our statewide 29 Problem-Solving Court Advisory Committee, which is made up of judges, staff, treatment providers, 30 district attorneys, and defense counsel from around the State are leading this effort. Our team at the State 31 Court Administrator's Office is working closely with the committee to create meaningful change around 32 equitable access and problem-solving courts. Right now, we're working on building a foundation for 33 success that includes some of the following elements. One, maybe most importantly and most impactful 34 right now, is the creation of an equity court pilot program that is only active in two districts right now, 35 the 5th Judicial District along the I-70 corridor, and here in Denver. But the goal is to provide resources, 36 education, and expertise to remove all barriers for participation including language ADA 37 accommodations. I mean, we just want full equity and opportunity for access to these programs. The 38 hope is to expand this pilot to nine jurisdictions in the near term and then spread it statewide based on 39 lessons learned after that. We need better data. Data alone doesn't solve problems, but we need better 40 data on equity and accessibility. So that programs can have a clear-eyed view of the state of their

1 program. So, they know what problems they're addressing in their particular locality. And then, we want 2 to follow up with educational tools to address those identified gaps. We're also looking at reforming our 3 problem-solving court accreditation criteria so that equity is a more clear priority.
4

5 Moving on to Question 14. That also came from Representative Benevides regarding the responsibilities 6 and scope of the training positions that were requested. And I think there was a discussion among the 7 committee about how is training provided to staff in the Judicial Department? And I can tell you that the 8 overwhelming majority of job training, the training on how to do the work for court staff, for probation 9 staff, and for judges, is provided in-house. We do farm some specific topics out, specialized topics out, 10 but the actual job-related training is all done in-house, and this request would expand our capacity. We 11 did lose capacity for training, both for judges and staff, via the budget cuts. And, so, we're trying to get 12 back all of that. And, frankly, grow a little. Investing in education, in the bench, in our support staff, in 13 probation. And our support staff and the trial courts is a very high priority. Right now, our ratios of staff 14 to trainers are well over 200 staff per trainer. Both on the court and probation side. This doesn't mean 15 folks never get training. It does mean sometimes they wait an awful long time to do it and have a little 16 bit of a trial by fire when they start their jobs. And it's really not the way we should be doing things.
17

18 Rep. McCluskie

19 Mr. Vasconcelos, what is a long period of time before they get the training?
20

21 Steven Vasconcellos

22 Thank you, Madam Chair. So, most annoyingly, it depends. And it may look different depending on 23 your geographic region. Upside, we are using a number of training modalities. We are not simply 24 driving 30,000 miles around the state to provide training. We've used the opportunities provided by 25 Covid to really expand. We were doing virtual trainings prior to Covid, that curriculum has exploded 26 since. But what we found to be most successful is a virtual training curriculum that is based on solid in-27 person training. There are some areas of court process, there are some areas of offender management 28 that really are best trained in person. So, what's that right mix of in-person training, one-on-one training 29 and virtual training? We're using all modalities right now. Thank you so much. Somebody knows I get 30 dry mouth. And Madam Chair, I possibly talk too much. Anyway, what could happen, pragmatically is 31 you receive local training to get started. And that's still valuable, and there's always a place for that. So, I 32 have no intention of demeaning that. But that's working on the job training to get you through. To get 33 the solid, strong foundation you need in the work of a CJA, in the work of a probation officer. You need 34 to engage with our with our training unit. And when we're at plus 200 per staff person, we can't hit all 35 the Districts with the kind of frequency that we would really like to and that they're requesting from us. I 36 mean, this isn't just our assessment. This is almost weekly calls to my Office. What can we do? What 37 can we do? What can we do? So, we have a request to try to address that.
38
39
40

1 Rep. McCluskie

2 Thank you. Glad to hear that virtual training is being utilized. And if it's exploded, then obviously it is a 3 valuable path. Please proceed.

4

5 Steven Vasconcellos

6 Thank you, Madam Chair. And the other thing I'd point out just briefly in wrapping that question up. Is 7 the curriculum maintenance. I think one of the challenges we've also had with the size of our team is you 8 get curriculum created, you take a loop of the State, or you distribute the training virtually. Department 9 policy changes, statute changes, case law changes. We need to change training. Curriculum maintenance 10 takes a tremendous amount of time, and we are probably, more than probably, not doing the best job on 11 that side, as well. And additional staff will help there. Moving on to Question 15. Senator Moreno, you 12 had asked about the process for allocating VALE. I will keep this at a very high level if you'd like to 13 delve deeper. We've brought our Director of Financial Services, and we're also happy to speak longer 14 offline, but we consulted with DCJ staff and VALE program administrators, as required by Senate Bill 15 292, from last year. Our office allocated funds based on the DCJ created model. 5 of our 22 Districts 16 rejected, declined funding. So, that money was put back in the pool and those funds were successfully 17 redistributed equitably among the remaining districts, DCJ staff and VALE program administrators have 18 received final notice of allocations as of the end of August. Most of the local VALE programs operate 19 on a calendar year basis instead of a fiscal year. So, the majority of funds will be spent between January 20 and June of next calendar year.

21

22 Rep. McCluskie

23 Mr. Vice Chair.

24

25 Sen. Moreno

26 Thank you, Madam Chair. And thank you for this information. This is one of the areas where folks have 27 said that support for programming was really impacted by the reduction in court fines and fees. I guess 28 I'd be interested in just broadly, if the Department could follow up with information about how those 29 fines and fees have been affected by the pandemic, where the shortfalls are. That would be really useful 30 information for the committee.

31

32 Rep. McCluskie

33 Mr. Vasconcellos.

34

35 Steven Vasconcellos

36 Thank you, Madam Chair. Senator Moreno., we would be happy to provide that information. I do have a 37 eye on the clock, Madam Chair. We just have a handful of questions. I will proceed briskly.

38

39 Rep. McCluskie

40 Please continue. Thank you.

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Question 16, you had asked, Madam Chair, to describe our implementation of House Bill 21-1280.
3 Which is the 48-hour hearing bill. And, specifically, why both weekend days are implicated under that 4 bill. You might remember that there are really two pathways that a Judicial District can take under that 5 legislation. One, a Judicial District can choose to handle those weekend bond hearings themselves, 6 locally. Additionally, there's an option to be part of a regional bond hearing office. There are two 7 regional bond hearing offices. We roughly split the state in half, east and west. 40 of the 64 counties in 8 our Judicial Districts elected to be in the regional offices and have the regional bond hearing officers 9 address those. With 40 counties and a majority of Judicial Districts involved, there's simply logistically, 10 cannot be done in one day. While giving adequate time, for example, defense counsel to have access to 11 their clients in advance of the hearings. Without the court having adequate time to prepare. So, this is as 12 much a function of popularity and logistics related to the regional bond hearing offices as anything else.
13 I can assure you that no Judicial District is split across both days. So, for example, the 5th Judicial 14 District, I believe, is in your representation. They're not split on Saturday and Sunday. All Judicial 15 Districts, all counties of a single Judicial District are in a single day to help provide continuity and 16 reduce challenge for the District Attorney's Office and for the Regional Public Defender's Offices.

17
18 Rep. McCluskie

19 Mr. Vasconcellos, the 40 out of 64. Are those primarily rural, smaller and rural? Mr. Vasconcellos.

20
21 Steven Vasconcellos

22 Thank you, Madam Chair, they are. There are two larger urban districts, not our largest, but in the 8th 23 Judicial District, which is Larimer County and Jackson as well, elected to go into the bond hearing 24 office program. As did the 21st Judicial District, Mesa County. And they are certainly not our largest 25 jurisdictions, but by no means, from an operational standpoint, do we consider them rural. They are 26 good size jurisdictions.

27
28 Rep. McCluskie

29 Thank you. Does that impact volume? Just the size of those two. Is that part of what's playing out here?
30 Mr. Vasconcellos.

31
32 Steven Vasconcellos

33 Thank you, Madam Chair. Somewhat, but I'm pretty confident, having talked at length with program 34 staff and been involved in several of these planning meetings for the implementation. I mean, this is a 35 generational shift in operations, frankly. Only a couple of our locations were doing weekend bond 36 hearings. We're happy to implement this, but it is a substantial, substantial shift. So, I've been personally 37 attending many of the planning sessions. Even if we removed Larimer, even if we removed Mesa, we'd 38 still be across two days. The overwhelming, I think. With the exception of two rural jurisdictions, all of 39 our rural just jurisdictions jumped in with both feet to the regional bond hearing offices. There's enough 40 volume from those alone to require two days.

1 Rep. McCluskie

2 Thank you. If there are additional learnings, experiences that inform how this evolves, I'd love to learn 3 more about that and what your needs may be. Please proceed.

4

5 Steven Vasconcellos

6 Thank you, Madam Chair. Moving on to Question 17. Representative Herod, you had asked for some 7 information related to cash fund usages within our budget request. I will candidly admit, I think our 8 written response doesn't quite hit the mark. Hopefully, what I covered today in the hearing, we'll get a 9 little closer. And again, we're happy to follow up offline as well. But you'd asked about, you know, cash 10 funds related to our request. Balances, reserves, the plans, etc. Only one of our requests is seeking 11 additional cash fund spending authority, and that is part of our IT request. We're seeking additional 12 spending authority out of the Information Technology Cash Fund. It is Decision Item Request Number 13 2, $1.1 million of the $1.9 million request for 16 FTE would be funded out of that cash fund source. In 14 addition, ongoing costs associated with Decision Item Number 2, the Department is projected to spend 15 down some of that cash fund. Those associated costs include security, rising software service fees, and 16 hardware replacement costs. Last, and I've already mentioned the possible funding for planning for a 17 new case management system, as well. But again, Representative Herod, if we're not hitting the mark on 18 what you're looking for there, I'd be happy to meet with you and provide additional information.

19

20 Rep. McCluskie

21 Representative Herod.

22

23 Rep. Herod

24 Thank you, Madam Chair. This is good information to start with. I think as I have questions about 25 certain cash funds, I'm happy to direct them to you and have conversation. But this is the chart that I'm 26 looking for. So, thank you for that. And, hopefully I can probably dig into some of this from other 27 departments as well. But this is very helpful, and I appreciate you pulling that together. Thank you.

28

29 Rep. McCluskie

30 Mr. Vice Chair

31

32 Sen. Moreno

33 Thank you, Madam Chair. And I also appreciated this chart. I think it's great to get an idea of what the 34 revenues and the expenditures are. But just tying back to my earlier question, I know the Department's 35 going to follow up with this information. I am particularly interested in that revenue side and how that 36 has been impacted by the pandemic.

37

38 Rep. McCluskie

39 Mr. Vasconcellos.

40

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. Down to our last couple of questions. Senator Moreno, on Question 18. You 3 had asked us about recommendations to improve data sharing between Judicial, DOC, and DCJ. I'm 4 always happy data is, sadly, maybe near and dear to my heart. And, frankly, we're always open to the 5 opportunity to expand data sharing. My sense of the situation right now is we have a very strong 6 partnership with both DOC and DCJ on data sharing. Felony sentences to corrections are shared with 7 DOC via CJIS in real time. We share other data elements with DOC via CJIS in real time. The Judicial 8 Department and the Department of Public Safety recently renewed an MOU that allows DCJ to access 9 our data directly without having to filter or ask a staff person. They have direct database access to our 10 case management system to support policy research, to support the annual recidivism study. And, so, we 11 again feel that our relationship is very strong there. If there is a particular deficit that is of concern, we're 12 happy to address that. One final thing on this note I'd like to identify, and that is the Department recently 13 has entered into an agreement with the linked information network of Colorado, which is a collaboration 14 between the Governor's Office of Information Technology and the Colorado Evaluation Action Lab at 15 DU. The link provides a streamlined, secure process to research complex policy initiatives. This gets 16 beyond, this allows for a deeper dive, a deeper dig into the data for some of the policy interests that 17 Senator Hansen referred to in an earlier question. So, I think this is another demonstration of our 18 commitment to data sharing.

19

20 Moving on to Question 19. Senator Rankin, you and Senator Hansen had asked about competency data, 21 drivers of that data. We've provided information in our packet on the number of court orders coming 22 from each Judicial District. We're not finding, frankly, that either a single location or a single judge or 23 group of judges are disproportionately driving the number of competency evaluations. Chief?

24

25 Rep. McCluskie

26 Chief Justice Boatright.

27

28 Chief Justice Boatright

29 Thank you, Madam Chair. What I would say on this is the numbers that we are seeing that I think tells 30 us that these competency evals are being requested in good faith. When you look at the number of the 31 competency evaluations and the number of restoration services. It shows that no one's getting restoration 32 services unless they were found to be incompetent. So, if you had a really high competency request and 33 a really low restoration you would see there was a lot of maybe unnecessary or frivolous requests. And 34 it's not going to be 80 or 90%. But the numbers are fairly consistent across every District. So, there's 35 nothing in terms of the data that jumps out. And what I can tell you is, and this is going back to my, you 36 know, 17 years is either a DA or being in the trial court. Is, these are largely requested by defense 37 counsel, and that is not any type of a criticism. But they're the people who are working directly with the 38 defendants and have the best information. But we're not seeing anything in the data to show that that is 39 frivolous or unnecessarily being requested across the board. In terms of why, that's a really complex 40 question. I think some of it, frankly, is that we have some additional representation of defendants. And I

1 think that's a sign that we were having some people with mental health issues that were skating through 2 and we were missing. And what I would say is very, very rarely does a court just on its own request a 3 competency evaluation. The only time I've ever seen that is when the person is going pro se, meaning 4 unrepresented, and the judge is having to deal with them one on one. And they can see that maybe those 5 mental health issues are affecting even their decision to go pro se. But the judges have very little 6 discretion. If there's a request, typically, the court has to grant that. But again, I want to make it clear 7 that we're not seeing anything that's being done for delay or frivolous in terms of these.

8
9 Rep. McCluskie

10 Senator Rankin.

11 12 Sen. Rankin

13 I'm just, I'm forgetting what. We had some statute that changed the representation requirement. And 14 does that, and you mentioned that. Does that correlate with the increase?

15
16 Rep. McCluskie

17 Chief Justice Boatright.

18
19 Chief Justice Boatright

20 Thank you, Madam Chair.

21
22 Rep. McCluskie

23 Sorry.

24
25 Chief Justice Boatright

26 No, no, I apologize. I don't think that's the single driving factor, by any means. I think that that is a 27 factor. But I think the complexities, the lack of safety nets, the amount of mentally ill people. I just think 28 that we end up being as a judicial system, sort of the stopping point. The catch all at the end of the day, 29 where people with mental health needs end up. But I think that's a really complex question, and I don't 30 think, by any means, that's the single, or, probably, even the most significant driving factor. But it is a 31 factor.

32
33 Rep. McCluskie

34 Mr. Vasconcellos.

35
36 Steven Vasconcellos

37 Thank you, Madam Chair. Moving on to Question 20. Representative Ransom, you had also asked 38 several questions about competency. I believe the Chief's and my earlier remarks largely cover that.
39 Unless you have some additional follow up, I'll move on. Thank you, Representative.

1 And, then, Madam Chair, our final Question, number 21. You had asked about, for some information on 2 offense levels compared to competency requests. And I would say, not a lot of shock, frankly, in that 3 data. Half of the requests, alone, are driven by felony charges. Another 30% by misdemeanor charges.
4 Our more serious offenses drive the majority of competency requests. The remaining 20% are made up 5 of the drug felonies, the misdemeanor drug cases, and petty offenses.

6

7 Rep. McCluskie

8 Thank you, members. Any final questions? Seeing none. I am reflecting on the word tsunami, which I 9 remember hearing from one of our Chief Judges about the backlog of cases. To your earlier comments, 10 Chief Justice Boatright. Thank you. Thank you all for your tremendous work over the last 20 months.
11 And, obviously, it has been a burden. But you've worked through the challenges in a very admirable 12 way. So, thank you.

13

14 Steven Vasconcellos

15 Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, committee.

Transcript of *Hearing before the J. Judiciary
Comm.*, Colo. Leg., January 25, 2022 (SMART Act Presentations by Colo. Jud.
Dep't and Colo. Comm. Jud. Discipline);

Joint Judiciary Committee—January 25, 2022 SMART Act Hearing:
Colorado Judicial Department and Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Mr. Chair, we need a couple of minutes to set up. If that's okay.

3

4 Rep. Weissman

5 Okay, sure. Yeah, if you need to get a PowerPoint over here, hopefully our IT, staff can facilitate that.

6 Okay, looks like we have overcome the glitches in the matrix. Mr. Chief Justice, Mr. Vasconcellos, 7 whoever would like to commence.

8

9 Chief Justice Boatright

10 Well, thank you. Now that we've created an air of suspense. I'll start. I want to introduce myself. I'm 11 Brian Boatright. For the past year I've had the privilege of being the Chief Justice.

12

13 Rep. Weissman

14 I'm sorry, Mr. Chief Justice, if you could just maybe pull the mic a little bit closer so everybody can 15 hear. Thank you. Please go ahead.

16

17 Chief Justice Boatright

18 I'll introduce myself. I'm Brian Boatright. For the past year, I've had the privilege of being the Chief 19 Justice of the Colorado Supreme Court. To my right is Steven Vasconcellos, our State Court 20 Administrator. And he has been in that position since 2019. And appearing remotely is Justice Monica 21 Marquez. I was hoping to have Justice Marquez sit with us at table, but unfortunately, she has a family 22 member who has taken ill, and, you know, to err on the side of caution, she's going to appear virtually.
23 But I'm going to ask Justice Marquez to participate, because one of the things I want to talk about, that I 24 think we're really quite proud of, is our diversification efforts on the bench. And Justice Marquez, quite 25 frankly, has been a champion in that area. We have a number of areas that we want to get into. We want 26 to talk about diversifying the bench, the pandemic impacts. We want to talk about our budget request, 27 legislative agenda, and then the required reporting for the SMART Act. Just as a broad overview, the 28 Colorado Judicial Branch covers the entire State. There's 22 Judicial Districts, soon to be 23. We have 29 courthouses in all 64 counties, and we have 3,580 approximate court and probation staff. And when you 30 add that with 337 judges and justices, we have approximately 4,000 employees in the Branch. And when 31 you talk about having 337 judges, it's a group that's diversifying. And with that, I'm going to turn it over 32 to Justice Marquez to talk briefly about our outreach program and our diversification efforts.

33

34

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Okay, Justice, please go ahead.

3

4 Justice Marquez

5 Thank you, Chief Justice Boatright. Thank you, Mr. Chair. And thank you all for the opportunity to 6 appear remotely today. I appreciate it. Of course, it's critical that the public has confidence in our 7 Judiciary. We derive our legitimacy from public confidence in and respect for the decisions that we 8 render. And, so, when our courts reflect the diversity of the communities that we serve, it strengthens 9 public perception that that Justice is, in fact, truly equal for all. We thank again, the General Assembly 10 for the 2019 legislation that created the full-time position within SCAO that is responsible for education 11 and outreach regarding judicial vacancies and the judicial application process. Sumi Lee, who is our 12 head of judicial diversity outreach, began her work in February 2020. And to our knowledge, Colorado 13 is actually the first state in the nation to have a position of this kind embedded within its judicial 14 department. Colorado has become a leader nationally in these efforts. So much so that I was invited to 15 testify before Congress last summer on Colorado's efforts and our work in this area.

16

17 This particular slide here captures some of the demographic data about the judges that have been 18 appointed since that judicial outreach program began in February of 2020. Obviously, at the end of the 19 day, it's the Governor who makes these appointments. But Ms. Lee's work has helped us consolidate and 20 systematize what have been previously ad hoc volunteer efforts by a number of judges who happen to be 21 passionate about this work. So, what Ms. Lee has done is collected and centralized this key data. She's 22 fostered community partnerships. She has developed robust educational and outreach, pardon me, 23 outreach programming. And all this has resulted, thankfully, in a wonderful increase in highly qualified, 24 diverse applicants who have in fact, been appointed to the bench. This slide, at its nub, shows that of the 25 57 judges that have been appointed in that time, they roughly represent the diversity of Colorado's 26 population.

28 And, in particular, we saw a number of black judges appointed. Turning to the next slide quickly, I'd like 29 to highlight just a couple of things. In 2018, due to some retirements, we were faced with a prospect of 30 having literally zero black District Court judges in the State. And now, here at the beginning of 2022, we 31 have 12 black state court judges. Fifteen, if you count Denver County Court. During this time, we've had 32 our first black County Court judge in Adams County, our first black District Court judge in Boulder, and 33 right now we have the largest number of black judges serving at one time in the history of the State.
34 Clearly, we still have work to do. Our Latino judge population continues to lag significantly behind the 35 general population in Colorado.

36

37 But, what does that mean? That means part of this is a pipeline issue. We don't pull our judges from off 38 the street. We pull them from our attorney ranks. And our attorney ranks themselves do not reflect the 39 diversity of our general population. So, with that pipeline issue in mind, we've launched some pipeline 40 efforts. We are partnering with the Center for Legal Inclusiveness to pilot a Dream Team 2.0 project.

1 This is a six-month intensive coaching program that pairs qualified, diverse judicial applicants with 2 coaches to prepare them for this process, the application and interview process. We have this wildly 3 popular Java with Judges program that pairs current law students with judges all across the State in 4 virtual coffee house settings for informal conversation. And we also have our Lorenzo Marquez
5 Scholars Program, which is named after my father. He was the first Latino judge on the Colorado Court 6 of Appeals. And this externship program pairs law students with judges and justices in our appellate 7 court system to learn a little bit more about the writing and research process.

8
9 And then finally, what I'd like to just say is we're not only interested in bringing diverse judges into the 10 state court system, but making sure that the judges who are there feel supported and can thrive. We have 11 two programs that are working to do that. One is our peer-to-peer coaching program led by Chief Judge 12 Gilbert Roman, and then the second is a recently launched program called Chambers Chat. This is a 13 virtual meeting session for our diverse judges to just brainstorm solutions to everyday work problems 14 that they're experiencing. So again, thank you for this legislation. It's really making a difference, and I'll 15 pass this back.

16
17 Rep. Weissman

18 Okay Justice Marquez, thank you. Whoever would like to continue.

19
20 Chief Justice Boatright

21 Thank you. The next slide will show that in the fiscal year 20 and 2021, I think it's corrected now. We 22 had over a half million cases filed in the in the courts. I think that most of the time we focus on the 23 criminal cases. That was 154,000 cases. But we also had 190,000 civil cases, 32,000 domestic, and 24 18,000 probate. The other thing that is important with regard to our workload is currently, our probation 25 officers are supervising approximately 68,000 probationers at the current time. And we'll talk a little bit 26 more later about the cost effectiveness of that. But one of the things that I want to give a shout out to our 27 trial courts. You can see with this volume, we just didn't have the luxury of just stopping business. We 28 had to stay open. We're an essential business and we were able to maintain. We did have a shutdown of 29 jury trials, but we've worked forward, and I want to make sure that I pat all of our trial court staff and 30 our probation officers in particular, who I think get overlooked by this, for their hard work and 31 dedication over the past year. They've done extraordinary work. And we'll talk about one statistic, I 32 think that is really important later on. And that is despite the fact that we've gone and had to pivot to 33 some virtual things and do things during the pandemic, our success rate with regard to our probationers, 34 has not decreased at all. And I think that's a tribute to our probation officers. And I'm extremely proud of 35 all of them.

36
37 The Colorado Supreme Court, as you know, is a seven-member panel. We are the administrative head of 38 the Branch. As a court, we appoint the State Court Administrator, which we did with Steven 39 Vasconcellos back in 2019. And I think one of the things that gets overlooked is that, other than our

1 head of probation and our IT department, our entire leadership program has changed since 2019. And,
2 so, that includes State Court Administrators, as well as a number of heads, as well as the Chief Justice.

3
4 One of the things I also would like to tout is that I am very proud of our merit selection system. We 5 currently have four former trial judges on the Supreme Court. But what's significant about that is, of the 6 four, three of the Justices were appointed by a Republican to the District Court and a Democrat to the 7 Supreme Court. And I don't think that you would find that record on the federal court in that type of 8 numbers.

9
10 I would also say that in our time, since 2018 and 2019 our Court has learned a number of valuable 11 lessons. I think we recognized in in late 2018, when we were going through the hiring process for Mr.
12 Vasconcellos, that there was a lot of dysfunction in the State Court Administrator's Office. And we 13 began some changes under former Chief Justice Coats. You can see we updated personnel rules. We 14 updated our purchasing fiscal rules. That also was a result of an audit report that frankly showed that we 15 had a number of deficiencies, including a real lack in our HR Department of any type of real record 16 keeping. The other thing that I would say is one of the big changes that we made as a Court was we kind 17 of changed how we did business. I started in 2011. Justice Marquez started in 2010. And I think we both 18 would attest to the fact that the Chief Justice handled all of the administrative responsibilities, and it was 19 just basically a report out to the other Justices on a need-to-know basis. And the theory of it basically 20 was that if anything should come up to the Court in our role as judicial officers, that we would be able to 21 maintain that type of separation. But we found that that's not an effective way to lead a Branch of nearly 22 4,000 people. And, so, we changed significantly the way we administer our responsibilities. And we got 23 directly involved with a number of the operations within the Court. And I won't go through all of them.
24 But each one of the Justices has been assigned to a different part of the Judicial Branch. For example, 25 we have a Justice assigned to the HR Committee. We have a Justice assigned to the Clerks of Court.
26 One to the Court Execs. One to the Probation Department. And what we came to the conclusion of was 27 that that 14 sets of eyes and ears was much better than two sets of eyes and ears. And we learned that 28 there are more opportunities for the employees at the State Court Administrators Office, in the field, to 29 have a direct line of communication with the Court. And I don't know if Justice Marquez, being the 30 senior member, wants to comment any further on that.

31
32 Rep. Weissman

33 Justice Marquez, please go ahead if you'd like.

34
35 Justice Marquez

36 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would just echo what the Chief has shared. I would say that the overall structure 37 of the way we communicate vis-a-vis SCAO and the field has changed completely. I think that it has 38 been a vast improvement. And I think that we now provide multiple ways for folks at SCAO and in the 39 field to have a direct link of communication with the Supreme Court. So, I think it's been a very good 40 improvement.

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Okay, thank you. Please go ahead.

3

4 Chief Justice Boatright

5 Mr. Chair. Okay, I want to give a report on an update in an investigation. If you recall, at the State of my 6 Judiciary speech last February, we called for an independent investigation into the allegations that were 7 put into the paper. And in so doing, we asked an 8-member member panel of the Legislature and 8 Executive Branch to meet to select our vendors, to maintain the independence of those vendors. It was a 9 long process, but in August of 2021 the panel made recommendation to vendors, and I will say that they 10 did exactly what we hoped. They vetted a number of really qualified applicants that had put in for this 11 and selected two excellent investigators. And they bifurcated how they're doing the investigation. We 12 have one group called ILG that is to investigate the allegations of workplace culture. And we have one 13 group called RCT that has been hired to investigate the leadership contract procurement process that 14 went through. The other investigation that I'd like to comment on is, we called for, through Chief Justice 15 Coats, requested an investigation of an allegation of workplace fraud based on an anonymous letter back 16 in 2019. And we had the option of investigating that internally. Chief Justice Coats felt that it was better 17 to have an outside set of eyes on that. And we asked the Auditor to conduct that investigation. And after 18 the allegations of the leadership contract was made public, Chief Justice Coats also asked the State 19 Court Administrator to investigate that. That has been ongoing. We're hopeful that we will get the audit 20 report at some time in the near future. But, obviously, that's something that we don't directly control.
21 The contract with the ILG group is for six months, I believe. And work for RCT is five months. And Mr.
22 Vasconcellos can correct me if I'm wrong about that.

23

24 Rep. Weissman

25 Mr. Vasconcellos.

26

27 Steven Vasconcellos

28 I would just reverse those. Mr. Chair. It is a six-month time period for the investigation of the 29 procurement of the leadership contract with RCT. It is a five-month time period, contractually, with ILG 30 for the other investigation.

31

32 Chief Justice Boatright

33 May I resume?

34

35 Rep. Weissman

36 Sure, please go ahead.

37

38 Chief Justice Boatright

39 And I would just say that both of them, because they didn't know what entirely they were contracting 40 for, there are provisions in the contract for extensions. Justice Marquez, do you want to comment on?

1 And part of the reason I asked Justice Marquez to participate with me here, is because I want to 2 demonstrate that we have a long-term commitment to resolving any issues that might be uncovered by 3 this. As I indicated in the State of the Judiciary speech, we have also gone to term limits with regard to 4 our Chief Justice. We haven't set an exact term for my initial term. It's going to be somewhere around 5 three years, depending on how things work. But Justice Marquez has been identified as the follow up, or 6 the next Chief Justice. And, so, I want to give Justice Marquez a chance to talk about our ongoing 7 commitment to this.

8
9 Rep. Weissman

10 Justice Marquez.

11
12 Justice Marquez

13 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again. I'd like to echo the Chief's comments and just emphasize that both he and 14 I are personally very committed to moving forward with these investigations and dealing with whatever 15 the results may be. Our eyes are trained forward to correcting whatever needs to be corrected, to 16 improving the work culture within Judicial. And we recognize that this isn't something that's going to be 17 changed overnight with a wave of a hand. It's a long-term commitment. And that's why I'm here as Chief 18 Justice Boatright's successor, to demonstrate that he and I will do this together, and I will carry this 19 forward into the years that come.

20
21 Chief Justice Boatright

22 And the final thing I'll say about that is that we are committed to releasing the results of those 23 investigations to the public, and will make those obviously available to members of the Legislature. I 24 also want to say that we are giving them unfettered access to a number of documents, through an access 25 agreement, that aren't publicly accessible. And, so, the entire report will not be produced. But any results 26 that the independent investigators come to will be provided publicly.

27
28 Rep. Weissman

29 Okay, Mr Vasconcellos. On that last point, and Mr. Chief Justice, I appreciate your stating here the 30 commitment to release at least some of those findings. I also appreciate the point that when undertaking 31 something in this magnitude, one doesn't necessarily know where it's going to go or how long it will go.
32 If you add five or six months, let's even skip August, if you just start counting from September, those 33 courses of time should conclude while we're still in session here. But I did hear that there was a 34 provision to, a contractual provision, maybe for more time. I would just ask, and maybe this would come 35 to us through Mr. Scanlon. In the event that those provisions are triggered, so as to delay the likely 36 delivery of some kind of results to these committees and the public. We would appreciate notification at 37 the soonest possible moment. Chief.

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Can I provide one point of clarification? In August, the panel members recommended the vendors. We 3 actually did not enter into the contracts with the access agreements until October and November. So, the 4 timeframes will start to run from there.

5

6 Rep. Weissman

7 Okay. So, the clock runs from October or November.

8

9 Chief Justice Boatright

10 Yes.

11

12 Rep. Weissman

13 Okay, thank you.

14

15 Chief Justice Boatright

16 Thank you.

17

18 Rep. Weissman

19 Mr. Vasconcellos.

20

21 Steven Vasconcellos

22 Thank you, Mr. Chair, and we will certainly reach out to the committee if there's any extension. I just 23 had earlier this week, update meetings with the Attorney General's Office, who's acting as a go-between 24 between ourselves and the investigators. And things are progressing well. There's no anticipation at this 25 point that we're going to need to trigger the extensions. Of course, we'll just see what remains to be seen.
26 But so far, no concern about extensions at this point.

27

28 Rep. Weissman

29 Okay, thank you. And before we go to the next major segment of the presentation, Rep. Tipper had a 30 question.

31

32 Rep Tipper

33 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And I know I picked the worst seat in the house. If you can both see me. Justice 34 Boatright, can you clarify for me again. You mentioned essentially what we anticipate. It sounds like it's 35 going to be the summer. Obviously, there could be extensions. A report, but I think you made a 36 distinction between what would be publicly available and what wouldn't. Can you clarify that for me 37 again, please.

38

39 Rep. Weissman

40 Chief Justice Boatright.

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Thank you. Yes. Thank you, Representative, Tipper. What we anticipate is that they will put out a report 3 that is available for the public to be able to read with regard to conclusions, disclosing as [much] of the 4 background information as they can. But as I indicated, we're giving them unfettered access to attorney 5 client privilege and to non-disclosure agreements that if we were to release those publicly, it would 6 subject the Branch and, ultimately, the State to financial liability, and obviously that's something that we 7 want to be very careful about.

8

9 Rep. Weissman

10 Rep. Tipper, good for now, follow up? Okay. Senator Gardner.

11

12 Sen. Gardner

13 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wasn't quite sure where I wanted to raise this, but since we're talking about 14 investigations and concerns. As you know, there has been some discussion about our Colorado 15 Commission on Judicial Discipline. Because of the level at which these matters investigated occurred, it 16 has raised questions about the Commission on Judicial Discipline, its independence. Can it operate fully 17 independently? Does it have the funds to do so and so forth? So, I have two or three pages of questions I 18 thought of Chief. We don't have that amount of time. I wonder if I could just ask for you to comment on 19 the Commission on Judicial Discipline, its existence, its independence. Is it supervised by the Colorado 20 Supreme Court? There is a memorandum of understanding between the two entities and my bar 21 registration fees go to pay for the administration of all of that, as do all of the members of our Colorado 22 Bar. So, that's very open ended. But if you could comment, Chief. I would appreciate it.

23

24 Rep. Weissman

25 Chief Justice.

26

27 Chief Justice Boatright

28 Thank you. To answer your question, no, we do not supervise the judicial discipline commission. But I 29 will say that the system that had been set up long before I was ever a Justice on the Court, was that those 30 attorney's fees would pay for an Executive Director and for a part time administrative assistant. And 31 then it was anticipated that all the legal work that would be done would be done kind of in-kind through 32 the attorney regulation group. This particular situation, I don't believe was ever anticipated when we set 33 up that type of a funding stream. And I will say that that the budget that was established in June for 34 judicial discipline. I went and looked back, its $300,000. And that, obviously, covers the Executive 35 Director's salary, the administrative person's salary, and some of the PERA and whatnot. So, what I 36 would say, is it's my understanding that judicial discipline is asking to be taken outside of that type of a 37 funding stream and to be funded by the Legislature. With regard to the legal fees and with regard to any 38 investigative services, I want to state unequivocally, we completely support that. Because we absolutely 39 value the independence of the judicial discipline commission. Their work is essential to people having 40 confidence in the integrity with regard to the Branch. The difficulty is that under our financial rules, our

1 fiscal rules. Is that anything over $5,000 has to be reviewed by the Supreme Court with regard to fees
2 that are expended out of the attorney regulation. Because we do have a fiscal responsibility. That clearly 3 can't work under these current circumstances. So, we absolutely support their ability to obtain separate 4 funding and to have a separate monitoring. We should not be looking at the expenditures of the judicial 5 discipline commission. Does that?

6
7 Rep. Weissman
8 Senator Gardner.

9
10 Sen. Gardner
11 Thank you. And thank you, Chief. So, if we were to create an entirely separate funding stream and 12 accountability basis for the Commission on Judicial Discipline, I'm wondering, would there still be a 13 need for a memorandum of understanding between the Court and the Commission on Judicial Discipline 14 as to how matters are handled?

15
16 Rep. Weissman
17 Chief Justice.

18
19 Chief Justice Boatright
20 I believe that we do. And I'll give you a couple of examples. How things are ultimately reported to 21 judicial discipline is probably not quite as simple as you might think. And I'll give you one example.
22 Unfortunately, it's a true story where we had a judge who was criminally prosecuted and we had a judge, 23 another judge, who was made privy to information in an affidavit that was sealed. And that put the judge 24 in a position of do I report that or do I not report that to judicial discipline? Because it's confidential and 25 it's not. I think what we would like to do is just have a clear understanding of what each of our roles are.
26 If you look at the core of what the problem is with this so-called Memo, is that the HR people 27 investigated things and then did not turn it over to judicial discipline. And what we want to try and do is 28 get out of the business of investigating the judges. That's what the prior Memorandum of Understanding 29 basically required. And so what I would like to see is, have a memorandum of understanding that if we 30 get a report, say, of some type of and I'll use a hypothetical. Some type of sexual harassment. That our 31 HR Department can come in, make sure that our employees are safe, and then turn that matter 32 immediately over to judicial discipline to conduct any kind of investigation. That way, we're out of the 33 business of reporting and having the questions raised that were raised in that memorandum of 34 understanding. Now the truth of those things will come out through the investigations, quite frankly. But 35 that's really what the crux of the of the allegations were, that HR was investigating these things but not 36 turning them over. So, I think we just need to have clear lines drawn. And that was actually a 37 conversation prior to all of this happening. That Chief Justice Coats had started just a couple years ago.
38 And I think things got derailed by the pandemic and whatnot.

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Thank you.

3

4 Rep. Weissman

5 Senator Gardner, good for now?

6

7 Sen. Gardner

8 I'll stop there.

9

10 Rep. Weissman

11 Mr. Vasconcellos, as you were.

12

13 Steven Vasconcellos

14 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to turn our attention to the impacts that the Covid-19 pandemic has had.

15

16 Rep. Weissman

17 I'm sorry, Mr. Vasconcellos. I'm just trying to keep the questions grouped by subject. Rep Tipper, did 18 you want to follow up?

19

20 Rep Tipper

21 I'm sorry. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm sorry to interrupt you. Just wanting to go back. Just so I 22 understand. So, the gist of the ask would be to create a fund and essentially give authority to an 23 independent entity. I'm obviously speaking at a very high level. And where does that money come from?
24 Are we then providing money through the general fund, or is that money that you all are shifting over 25 into that? And maybe I just don't understand, but I don't want it to be duplicative taxpayer dollars. I don't 26 mean this, but as a windfall. I mean, I think that's what I'm concerned about. If you could just explain 27 that mechanism.

28

29 Rep. Weissman

30 Chief Justice.

31

32 Chief Justice Boatright

33 I think smarter minds can address that. What we are here saying is that we are in support of the 34 independence. I think the problem is, anytime the funding comes from Judicial we have fiduciary 35 responsibilities over the expenditure of those monies and have to verify. And I don't think that that's a 36 workable model, currently. So, I do think the funding has to come from outside. I've heard conversations 37 about cash funds or different things. I don't pretend to be an expert in in the legislative funding. But 38 what I will say is that, with regard to the legal advice, the legal work, and the investigative work. They 39 do need to be outside of the judicial finance umbrella. Because I don't know that we can just say, here's a 40 blank check and go forward with it. There does need to be some type of oversight. But it shouldn't be us,

1 because at the end of the day, their charge is to investigate judicial officers. And I will say, over the past 2 several months, it's really been an uncomfortable situation to try and figure out this funding. Because of 3 that very implication.

4

5 Rep. Weissman

6 Rep. Tipper, good for now? Okay. Mr. Vasconcellos.

7

8 Steven Vasconcellos

9 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Moving on to the impacts that the pandemic has caused. We've had opportunities 10 with this committee to talk about some of this before, but we did want to spend a moment. Because the 11 pandemic continues to have an impact on Judicial Department Operations, both the trial courts, appellate 12 courts, and probation. And you know, as a reminder, in the span of a few short weeks in 2020, we had to 13 completely rethink and change our business model. We historically have been primarily an in-person 14 operation. You come in person to court, you come in person to your probation visit. You come in person 15 to do oral arguments with the Court of Appeals or Supreme Court. And for good public health reasons, 16 that just wasn't possible for a large portion of 2020. And intermittently since then. In terms of what kind 17 of volume are we talking about. These are, these are current active numbers. Every single day, there are 18 1,000 hours of video conferencing happening across the state in Colorado. Those are court hearings, 19 those are probation visits, those are arguments in front of appellate courts. Every month, 17,000, over 20 17,000 video conferences, representing 130,000 users participating. Every single month. We've gone 21 from primarily an in-person operation to the majority of our business being handled virtually. We are 22 thrilled that we were able to do that, and candidly, it probably moved our operations 10 years forward in 23 the span of a few weeks. We also did that over an IT infrastructure that wasn't entirely prepared for that.
24 And with a staff load that wasn't entirely prepared to support it. And that informs important parts of our 25 budget request that we will talk about a little later.

26

27 Chief Justice Boatright

28 Can I say one thing about the?

29

30 Rep. Weissman

31 Please go ahead.

32

33 Chief Justice Boatright

34 Thank you. We are looking very closely at how we can continue with regard to the virtual hearings into 35 the future. We found them to be extremely convenient for the public. They're a great access to justice 36 issue. You know, just by way of example. If you have a short 10-minute hearing that you're able to 37 conduct virtually, it's better than having somebody miss a day of work to take three buses to get to that 38 hearing. And, so, we're exploring ways to continue those virtual hearings. I will say that one of the 39 things that we are trying to balance is that while they are extremely convenient for the public, they can 40 be extremely cumbersome for a trial court in a busy docket. You know, calling on my past history, you

1 have 100-person criminal docket, you're able to call people up, one after another after another. And as 2 we saw just today, connecting virtually can be, really, a time-consuming thing. So, we're really trying to 3 find that balance. But we are committed to moving forward, to having virtual hearings be a part of our 4 platform in in the future.

5

6 Rep. Weissman

7 Oh, I'm sorry. Senator Gardner, go ahead.

8

9 Sen. Gardner

10 Yes, thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, just to comment as a practitioner. The system has worked very well.
11 And one interesting advantage is I sometimes virtually attend a hearing on a matter that I wouldn't have 12 gone to the courthouse to see what happened there. But I had some interest as a non-party, but 13 nevertheless an interest in the litigation. And being able to click on the link and watch has made a huge 14 difference in being able to properly advise others who might be affected by the litigation. So, I applaud 15 you for taking a good hard look at what we're doing there.

16

17 Chief Justice Boatright

18 Thank you.

19

20 Rep. Weissman

21 Okay. Please continue.

22

23 Steven Vasconcellos

24 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And has been already mentioned, the virtual hearing approach has been a 25 tremendous boon to access to justice and something we remain committed to long-term. However, one 26 area of our business that has not lent itself well to virtual proceedings are jury trials. And we are 27 extremely grateful for the General Assembly's support on creating limited continuances due to Covid.
28 The slide that's up on the screen right now illustrates what's happened with jury trials since just before 29 the pandemic started in January of 2020 until December of last year. And, of course, you see quickly 30 things shutting down in the spring of 2020, some fits and starts in trying to ramp things up, and some 31 relative success in the last handful of months in having jury trials move forward again. But I will note 32 that we have not gotten back to pre-pandemic historic levels of jury trials. And, as we sit here today, 20 33 of our 22 Judicial Districts, the Chief Judge has issued an order suspending jury trials again because of 34 local public health conditions.

35

36 Rep. Weissman

37 Senator Lee.

38

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Chief, have there been any dismissals of cases against criminal defendants for 3 failure to comply with the time limits, the speedy trial rules?

4

5 Rep. Weissman

6 Chief Justice.

7

8 Chief Justice Boatright

9 Senator Lee, that's a good question. I don't have that number in front of me. I can tell you that there are a 10 number of those issues in the appellate pipeline. Because we've gotten a number of Rule 21s on them. I 11 can also say, what we called the Covid continuance bill that was passed last year was used 102 times.
12 All on class threes, fours and fives--felonies. So that was not widely used, but actually very valuable.
13 But I can find out if there have been speedy trial dismissals. I just don't have that number at hand today, 14 but that's a good question. I apologize.

15

16 Sen. Lee

17 Thank you.

18

19 Rep. Weissman

20 I think we would find that information helpful. Mr. Vasconcellos, Mr. Scanlon, if the good people in the 21 court data office could see what they can do. Please go ahead.

22

23 Steven Vasconcellos

24 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And just to wrap this up, you know, given the fact that the overwhelming 25 majority of our Judicial Districts have jury trials suspended, we are anticipating this volume to go down 26 again on this chart. And then heading into the next chart, which illustrates our trial backlog since April 27 of 2021. While we are not out of the woods and haven't caught up, so to speak, we were able, until the 28 Omicron surge, to make significant progress on our trial backlog. We did see the backlog grow again 29 slightly, in January, it will probably grow a little through the spring. Hopefully Omicron subsides and 30 we can get back to regular trial business.

31

32 Rep. Weissman

33 Mr. Chief Justice.

34

35 Chief Justice Boatright

36 Can I say one thing? We've been under a little bit of criticism from different parts with regard to 37 stopping the jury trials. But I will say, I think our Chief Judges and our judges have done a marvelous 38 job being committed to the safety of our jurors. I mean jurors don't volunteer. I mean they are asked to 39 come in and compelled to be in there. And I am very proud of the fact that we've not had any super 40 spreader events or anything that's originated out of any of our jury trials. And we're going to do this

1 safely while also balancing people's rights. And maybe Mr. Vasconcellos was going to say this, but one
2 of the things is, I don't anticipate that we're going to be asking for any further extension of the Covid 3 continuance bill at this point. I've learned to never say never, especially in these current conditions. But I 4 think just through hard work and cooperation, we're going to get through this absent some extended, 5 prolonged period. But at this point, we're not asking to extend that. It does basically become ineffective 6 at the end of April.

7
8 Rep. Weissman

9 Thank you. Please go ahead.

10
11 Steven Vasconcellos

12 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Now, I'm going to move into some data that we report as part of our required 13 SMART Act reporting, and that we reported to the committee every year. And you can see another area 14 where backlog because of slowdowns in our business operations due to Covid have raised their head.
15 This first slide here illustrates how our open caseload in District Court is comparing to time standards 16 that are established by Chief Justice Directive. And, in a lot of areas we are behind. Historically, you 17 may remember that we run pretty close to the time standards that are identified by Chief Justice 18 Directive. But in this pandemic era, we have struggled. That being said, I am pleased to report that in 19 one of our most critical areas, which is child protection, which is represented on this chart by what you 20 see as D&N, which is dependency and neglect, both for children under the age of six and for children 21 over the age of six, we are still meeting or right at our time standards. We take our responsibilities 22 toward cases with vulnerable parties who can't speak for themselves, very seriously.

23
24 Rep. Weissman

25 Mr. Vasconcellos, small question on that. I think Covid delays are the fundament of the work. But, when 26 we've talked about volumes in the past, and I'm also thinking back a few slides, but no need to reverse 27 the deck. When we come into sort of an economic recessionary period, like we've been in. Distrain 28 warrants and Rule 120 matters tend to explode in number. And I was looking through the soft copy of 29 this Annual Report here. It looks like those are 75% of all the District Court-level civil filings in fiscal 30 21. Is that contributing to that open number, or is it really just more Covid, itself?

31
32 Steven Vasconcellos

33 Great question, Mr. Chair. For these purposes, we removed to distraint warrants from the data. They are 34 administrative to the point of no human hand really touches them unless some something is filed asking 35 for review. So, they proceed really quickly. They don't, they aren't managed like a regular case. And so 36 frankly, if it would be to our advantage from a data standpoint, to include those because they proceed so 37 quickly. But I would not be comfortable with what that would do to the numbers. It would paint us in an 38 unfairly rosy light. Not based on something we really manage. So, we remove those from the data.

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Okay. Thank you. Please go ahead.

3

4 Steven Vasconcellos

5 Similarly, moving on to County Court, we see some of the backlog impacts, there. It doesn't happen 6 universally across the board. Much of county court civil that is probably closest to meeting the 7 standards. That case area includes protection orders. It also includes some civil money actions in County 8 Court, as well. But the main point of these last two slides is you can't go. You might have seen that jury 9 trial slide earlier. And we had several months where there were no jury trials. We had several months 10 where there was very little business, particularly in the weeks that we are transitioning to virtual 11 proceedings. You can't shut down court operations. We are in every county across the State, as the Chief 12 mentioned. Conducting court business every single day. When you shut down, even for a period of a few 13 weeks, you're going to spend a long time digging back out. And we still haven't had the opportunity to 14 be back at full operational capacity because of the pandemic. I'd like to transition into a discussion about 15 probation. I think most of the members know at this point, but I like to say it every time that I appear.
16 That Colorado probation is the largest criminal justice supervising agency in the State of Colorado. And 17 I'd like to share a few data points about probation. First, we are large. We are 66% of the adult criminal 18 justice population, corrections population in Colorado. We, as the Chief mentioned earlier, supervise 19 over 68,000 adults and juveniles on any given day. We have about 1,200 probation officers, or 1,200 20 probation FTE statewide. Most of the overwhelming majority of that number are probation officers. We 21 have 70 probation locations across the State of Colorado. We are 20 times larger than community 22 corrections, four times larger than DOC and five times larger than parole. We are also cost effective.
23 The average annual cost of a probationer in Colorado is about $1,600 and there are good reasons for 24 different levels of supervision having different costs. So, this isn't a criticism of other agencies, but just 25 to note that we are cost effective when you look at us in comparison to parole, to Comm Corr and to 26 DOC.

27

28 Sen. Lee

29 Thank you for that presentation, Mr. Vasconcellos. On probation, there is research that supports the idea 30 that excessive amounts of supervision sometimes is counterproductive. And I'm wondering if, one, the 31 Probation Department operates under that premise, and whether they have attempted to reduce the 32 amount of supervision.

33

34 Rep. Weissman

35 Mr. Vasconcellos.

36

37 Steven Vasconcellos

38 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you for your question, Senator Lee. We do a risk-based approach to 39 supervision. So, it is not a one size fits all. There are a number of different factors that drive the level of 40 supervision that an individual may receive. And, so, to use an example from our problem solving courts.

1 We find it highly problematic, and the research does not support, for example, including high risk, high 2 need offenders with low risk, low need offenders. It's counterintuitive. You want just the right amount of 3 supervision, no more, no less.

4

5 Rep. Weissman

6 Via LSIR, is that the instrument they use in probation?

7

8 Steven Vasconcellos

9 Sorry, Mr. Chair, I couldn't quite.

10

11 Rep. Weissman

12 I see the chief nodding. I think the question of risk assessment and probation is ascertained by the LSIR 13 instrument. Okay.

14

15 Steven Vasconcellos

16 Correct, Mr. Chair.

17

18 Rep. Weissman

19 Okay. Please go ahead.

20

21 Steven Vasconcellos

22 Thank you. Moving on to another metric that we report as part of our annual SMART Act reporting.
23 This shows probation success rates over the last decade. And they've remained within a relatively 24 narrow band, percentage wise. Showing slight improvement year over year for the last handful of years.
25 The nature of the population that we are supervising has changed over time with legislative policy 26 changes. And we've been pleased that we've been able to kind of flex and meet those needs, as directed 27 by the by the General Assembly, over time. One thing I want to highlight briefly is that we are 28 partnering with the Crime and Justice Institute to do an in-depth study of revocations across Colorado to 29 better understand the reasons why for revocations and identify areas where we can do better and 30 improve. We don't want to just wait for outside pressure to look for opportunities to improve our game.

31

32 Rep. Weissman

33 Chief Justice.

34

35 Chief Justice Boatright

36 Thank you. One of the things that I want to emphasize in this number, and partially in response to 37 Senator Lee. I know just anecdotally that that the probation department is very mindful about bringing 38 people into probation and the potential harm that may cause if they're low risk. So, I think this current 39 pandemic has given us opportunity to a lot of things virtually. And I think we're seeing some benefits 40 with regard to that. But the other thing that I want to emphasize is that the success rate around 70% is

1 not because 70% of people are easy to supervise. It's because our probation officers take great pride in 2 having probationers succeed. And the amount of work that goes into having people succeed is really 3 kind of missed in this data. I guarantee you, in my experience, that 70% of people just walk through 4 probation. There's failures, there's relapses, there's working, there's unbelievable relationships that are 5 set up, and our probation officers are doing a remarkable job. And I think 70% success rate is a credit to 6 their service.

7

8 Rep. Weissman

9 Thank you. Mr. Vasconcellos, I see that you have a number of pretty weighty topics here. I might 10 encourage you to move through the budget information in a summary way. We have engaged with JBC 11 on that. I know that you want to speak to the pending question of the 23rd District, and I see some other 12 subjects on here. So, please go ahead.

13

14 Steven Vasconcellos

15 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will move at pace. And of course, happy to pause for any questions that the 16 committee may have. You did have a presentation, as noted earlier today, from the from the Joint 17 Budget Committee members on our budget request. Some of the key highlights include getting 18 additional staff to address areas of liability to the organization, areas where the trial court districts across 19 the state are not getting the support they need to be successful every day in areas that we've learned we 20 need to improve from last year's performance audit of the State Court Administrator's Office. Those 21 areas include additional HR staff, particularly when we look in the areas of HR, IT, and contract 22 management. And when we look at industry standards. When we look at partner agencies in the 23 Executive Branch who have similar levels of complexity in terms of size of staff overall, on the HR 24 front, volume and complexity of contracts on the financial front, etc. We are lagging well behind our 25 Executive Branch partners.

26

27 On the Information Technology front, again, we are looking. We made pretty dramatic changes. And I 28 think we did a fairly good job, given the circumstances to our business engagement model, moving to 29 primarily a virtual platform. But for sustainability, to prevent the intermittent outages that we're having 30 in Districts across the State that impact, negatively impact access to justice. We need to continue to 31 invest in our IT infrastructure, our network infrastructure, our bandwidth, our security protocols. In 32 order to just maintain what we're doing today and, also, so that we can continue to grow as we move 33 forward. There's also a staffing component to that. Those are not positions that reside at the central 34 offices. They are actually positions that sit out in the Judicial Districts to provide hands on support when 35 there are AV problems. To provide hands on support when desktop support is needed. Just briefly, when 36 I was a fresh-faced young clerk in the 4th Judicial District, 26 years ago, one of the first things I learned 37 about is that we were going to get a brand new case management system. It is the same case 38 management system half my lifetime later that we still have. You'll notice, I now have a head full of 39 gray hair. So, does our case management system. It is a legacy system. It is written in a language, RPG, 40 that it is nearly impossible to find developers for. We have reached a time where it is no longer serving

1 our needs and it's not cost effective to continue to invest in it. I am committed to a robust ongoing 2 discussion with this committee, with the joint technology committee, and with the Joint Budget
3 Committee as we plan to move forward to meet not just the Judicial Department's day to day business 4 operational needs, but the larger needs of the State of Colorado with this new system. We do have some 5 planning money in this year's budget request for the system.

6
7 I'd like to briefly highlight an amendment we just submitted on the 15th of this month to our budget
8 request related to staff salaries. Specifically, requesting some additional dollars for our lowest paid 9 employees in the Judicial Department, who, through a recent market study that we conducted in 2021 10 were identified to be well outside of market. An entry level court judicial assistant in the Judicial 11 Department is paid approximately the same as an entry-level fast food worker in the metropolitan area.
12 And we are losing those new employees in competition. You know, I have done restaurant work when I 13 was a young man. It is not stress free, but you don't necessarily take the work home with you. We are 14 doing felony criminal sentencing, child protection cases, custody cases. All manner of intense work. It is 15 important work. It's honorable work. But we are not competitive in the marketplace. We are losing our 16 experienced folks to county government, to federal government. I would like to, I'm not looking to be, 17 ultimately, top end competitive with the private sector. But I would like us to be at least competitive 18 with some of our governmental peers. Market data supports that, strongly. And, so, we've made a 19 supplemental request, again, to focus on our lowest paid employees, primarily court judicial assistants to 20 raise their salaries.

21
22 Moving on to the creation of the 23rd Judicial District, which is coming in 2025. You know, it is a large 23 affair, both for the State in terms of the Judicial Department changes, and for the Counties. Prior to the 24 holiday season, myself and a few others from our team met with each of the four Counties impacted by 25 the change. We have another series of meetings coming up later this month and into next month to share 26 ideas, talk about how we can best support each other, best collaborate through this. From the State 27 perspective, our biggest changes are to our IT system to accommodate a new Judicial District. We do 28 have some money in our budget request for FY 23 to facilitate programming. Additionally, in advance 29 of the actual creation of the District, we will be requesting FTE positions, not this year, but in upcoming 30 years. For the administrative team, the Court Executive, the Chief Probation Officer that will, on the 31 administrative side, lead that Judicial District. So, more to come from us. So far so good. Part of our 32 money is for a project manager to kind of ride herd over the entire project. We're hoping that we'll be 33 successful with that request. That will help us out tremendously, our team. And for very good reasons 34 and for a very intentional decision. As the Judicial Department has recovered dollars in FTE after the 35 budget cuts that were attached to the pandemic, we have not taken any of those FTE at the State Court 36 Administrator's Office. And focused all those FTE in the trial courts and probation, where the day to day 37 hands on services happen. I think that was the right way to go. It has left our team a little thin, and we 38 need some we need some help. And one of those areas is project management for this project.

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Okay. Rep. Benevides has a question. Representative, please go ahead.

3

4 Rep. Benevides

5 Thank you. And my question went back to the request for financial services and human resource staff.

6 That I'm just hoping, maybe you don't have to do it right now, but could provide more information.

7 That's 16 FTE. And as to what the request is for. One that sticks out in my mind is that 6 FTE for 8 contract management. I wasn't aware you had any managing contracts. And most contract management

9 is done by whoever holds that contract. I'm quite surprised. You have 5,000 contracts. I would also say

10 if your need is that big. I know DPA used to have a contract management system that departments can 11 use to monitor contracts. And there's also, off the shelf, different kinds of technology that could be used,

12 because that's really huge. I oversaw procurement, say, for the City, and we only had a couple of 13 contract managers. So, I'm just curious. And I didn't see any explanation for the 2 FTE for accounting

14 and for grant administrators, and 5 more for Human Resources. I'm just wondering how they'll be used,

15 and how does that compare to what you have. Because this sounds like a significant increase in your 16 current staff. So, either you could address it now or send it to me, however you want.

17

18 Rep. Weissman

19 Okay. Rep. Benavides, we're getting tight on time, so I'll invite a brief response from Mr. Vasconcellos, 20 if one is possible. And we'll urge a detailed follow up to your very legitimate questions. Mr.

21 Vasconcellos.

22

23 Steven Vasconcellos

24 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And, at the front, Representative Benevides, we'd be happy offline to spend as 25 much time as you'd like, going through the requests in detail. But just principally, we historically, did

26 not do the job we should have investing in what I like to think of as the plumbing and electric, the 27 unglamorous parts of our organization. And a lot of that is HR contract management, IT. To just use the 28 contract management example briefly. When our controller, who's been with us only since my term of 29 office, came over to us from the Department of Education. And kind of did an initial assessment of the 30 size of the team. He was appalled. Given the complexity, the amount of money, given the complexity of 31 the contracting. And we have looked toward agencies with similar contract volumes, similar complexity,

32 similar dollar amounts, notably HCPF and CDPHE in trying to build a contract management function

33 that we never really had. We had quite literally 1,000s of contracts. Well, 1000s of vendor relationships

34 that were not covered by contract. And we've been bringing those in one by one, out of the dark, if you

35 will. And this is a long-term. I am signing, every six months, approximately three to 400 contracts in the 36 areas of probation treatment providers, various IT contracts, court interpreters, contract court reporters, 37 the list goes on and on. Representative Benevides, more than happy to get your perspective on this.

38 More than happy to meet with you offline at length.

39

40

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Thank you, Mr. Vasconcellos. If you could kind of race to the end of the presentation and not more than 3 five minutes. I know there's at least one member of the public wanting to speak to us about this subject, 4 as well. Please go ahead.
5

6 Steven Vasconcellos

7 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Briefly, Chief, would you like to speak to the constitutional amendment?
8

9 Chief Justice Boatright

10 Sure. One of the things that we're asking is for a constitutional amendment around the 23rd Judicial 11 District because of the disbursement of the judges from the 18th. And I won't go into detail because I 12 know our time is short. But it is absolutely critical for a smooth transition to a 23rd Judicial District 13 without any disruption. So, we asking for your support on that. And we can talk in more detail, offline.
14

15 Steven Vasconcellos

16 I am going to bound through several statutorily required reporting elements. One on House Bill 21-1280, 17 on weekend bond hearings. Planning for that has been complicated. But so far, so good. Bond hearing 18 officers, magistrates for the western region of the State have been hired. And in the eastern region of the 19 State, those recruitments should be done in the next handful of weeks. We work with a large, multi-20 agency, group of stakeholders in the planning process. We feel like we're on track to be ready this April.
21 So, so far so good.
22

23 On our legislative agenda, we have a request related to County Court. We have some unique residency 24 requirements for county judgeships in Rangely and Rifle that are unique and different than the rest of the 25 State. You actually have to live in the municipality in order to apply for the judgeship, unlike most 26 judgeships. Rather than just living in the county. It limits the pool of applicants quite severely. And, so, 27 we'd like, we are hoping to expand that. Additionally, we have two courts that we would like to move 28 from Class C to Class D. That just means they would become full-time as a matter of law. They have 29 been full time and paid full time for a number of years. Their caseloads aren't shrinking down. These are 30 Montezuma and Garfield Counties.
31

32 On the text reminder program, nearly 300,000 text reminders sent. About 17% of participants opt-in to 33 receiving text reminders. We have an ongoing conversation with Senator Lee about the next iteration of 34 that program, and look forward to that collaboration.
35

36 On extreme risk protection orders. You see data in that slide on the total number of cases that have been 37 filed in the last two years. Last year, 144 total cases filed. 75 temporary extreme risk protection orders 38 granted. 47, I'm sorry, 43 denied. I don't want to give it a short shrift. It's a very serious issue. But I just 39 want to keep pace here. I believe that's all, unless there are other questions.
40

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Okay. Thank you, Mr. Vasconcellos. Sorry to ask you to mash the gas there. Okay. Seeing no hands
3 shooting skyward, I will thank you both for taking the time to visit with us in-person and to Justice
4 Marquez for being with us online, as well. Commissioner Jackson, if you would like to come forward. I 5 apologize. Yeah, yeah, I'm sorry. Rep. Bockenfeld, go ahead.

6
7 Rep. Bockenfeld

8 Thank you, Mr. Chairman, it kind of piqued my interest that you're. That you may have to have a 9 constitutional amendment, which I believe would have to be approved by the voters. What are the 10 ramifications if the voters in the 18th Judicial District would turn down whatever amendment you would 11 propose?

12
13 Chief Justice Boatright

14 It actually would have to be statewide, because it would be a constitutional amendment. So, it wouldn't 15 be just the voters in the 18th. But I think what it would do is create a situation where we have more 16 judges in one Judicial District and no judges in another Judicial District, because, depending on where 17 they live. Because right now, it would be dividing the 18th. And I would anticipate that we would end 18 up with an incredibly inexperienced bench. And what would we do with these other judges that would 19 be in the other Judicial District? This just allows a more rationed reason for being able to separate the 20 judges and transition them without an interruption of services. I think the ramifications would be, we'd 21 have services interrupted.

22
23 Rep. Weissman

24 Rep. Bockenfeld, good for now? And I'll just note for any members of the committee, as one of the 25 sponsors of this bill, a couple years ago, before Covid, I've been in ongoing conversations with the 26 Judicial Branch about making sure that there is no disruption of judgeships due to their residency 27 requirements that are themselves constitutionalized. Idea being that a duly appointed and in some cases, 28 retained by the voters, judge can continue to preside as we are making technical changes to the 29 boundaries in a way that we all approved of here. We never intended to bump off duly appointed judges 30 as part of this transition. And it's been identified that we may need to ask the voters for a small textual 31 change within Article VI, which is of course to make sure that that's the case. Okay, again, thank you 32 both for visiting with us and to Justice Marquez online. And as ever, we invite further follow up offline 33 outside of what time allows here. Now, Commissioner Jackson, if you'd like to join us, I'm sorry to have 34 you waiting here. Okay, Commissioner, again, thanks for waiting with us. Please go ahead.

35
36 Nancy Jackson

37 Thank you very much. Good to see you all. And thank you for having me today. I'm Commissioner 38 Nancy Jackson. I'm currently the Chair of the Board of Commissioners for Arapahoe County. And, so, 39 with the passage of House Bill 20-1026 Colorado will see the establishment of a new Judicial District 40 for the first time in more than 60 years. Given the magnitude of this change, Arapahoe County is

1 grateful to the sponsors who identified the need to provide transition time as part of the legislation. As 2 well as the formal process for consultation and progress reports. As part of today's state measurement for 3 its accountable, responsive, and transparent hearings, Arapahoe County appreciates the opportunity to 4 provide members an update of the progress to date and to identify some issues of concern as we move 5 forward in this process. For example, shrinking timeline. Given the ongoing pandemic and other issues 6 within the Judicial Department, it is understandable, albeit somewhat concerning, that the creation of a 7 new judicial district has not been top of mind for the State.

8
9 In the summer of 2021, Arapahoe County convened its county partners and the 18th Judicial District 10 Attorneys, the Attorney's Office, sorry, to begin discussions surrounding transition needs, including 11 goals, objectives, and the timeline. We really did appreciate the opportunity to speak with 12 Representative Weissman and Senator Fields this past summer. And finally connected with the State 13 Court Administrator in late 2021 to understand their goals and approach.

14
15 A significant amount of work is needed to achieve the implementation date of January 7, 2025 and our 16 time frame now is much shorter. We support the Judicial Department's budget request to support this 17 transition, and would respectfully request that these be funded as soon as practical to ensure the 18 technical work and coordination with counties that can be completed in efficient and swift manner. One 19 time costs. Arapahoe County appreciates the General Assembly recognizing local governments will face 20 one time transition costs through the revision of the Judicial District boundaries and their willingness to 21 understand those costs and assist our Counties with the transition. We are currently in the process of 22 hiring a consultant to support the transition effort to split the 18th Judicial District and create the 23rd.
23 We anticipate knowing the specific costs associated with such an effort within the next year. And we 24 will report as such to the General Assembly as soon as possible to ensure that such funds can be 25 allocated.

26
27 As we enter 2022, we would ask committee members to seek regular updates from Counties and the 28 Judicial Department in terms of progress towards the creation of a new district. Identifying potential 29 roadblocks or items of concern sooner than later, so implementation is not delayed. We thank you for 30 the opportunity to provide this input, and we will look forward to working with you and the Judicial 31 Department in the months and years ahead. And I'm very happy to answer any questions that you may 32 have.

33
34 Rep. Weissman

35 Okay. Commissioner, thank you. And we did receive the letter officially from Mr. Boddich on behalf of 36 the County as well. For members newly joining us, subsequent to 2020, I was one of the sponsors, along 37 with Rep. Van Winkle, Senator Gardner, Senator Fields of a bill to establish, prospectively, a new 38 Judicial District. I think that we passed that in February 2020. And then things started getting difficult in 39 the world. So, the large increment of time that we had as of that point has been somewhat reduced by 40 two years of Covid. I believe that we still have an adequate amount of time, if everybody is expeditious

1 about things. And I believe that efforts are being made to be expeditious. Obviously, Commissioner I
2 have a vested interest in seeing this all come to pass. And we'll be staying on it, and I know that others
3 of us will be as well. Thank you for being here to speak with us. Are there questions for Commissioner 4 Jackson? Seeing none. Okay, thank you.

5
6 Nancy Jackson

7 Thank you very much.
8

9 Rep. Weissman

10 Thank you again, all of you for being with us today. All right, we will move right into the next segment 11 of our agenda today, which is to hear from the Commission on Judicial Discipline. Thank you all for 12 being with us and sorry for making you wait a little bit here. If you have any paper handouts, Ms. Jensen 13 can help get those around. We do have some information in the box folder as well. Okay, looks like 14 we're just getting the presentation set up. Ms. Krupa, Judge Prince, Mr. Gregory, however you would 15 like to proceed once you are ready. Okay, whoever would like to start.
16

17 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

18 Thank you. My name is Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa. I'm the Chair of the Commission on Judicial 19 Discipline. Joining me today are David Prince, who is Vice Chair of the Commission, and Christopher 20 Gregory, who is our recently hired Executive Director. In the audience is also Jim Carpenter, who is a 21 Commission member and many of the other Commissioners are appearing remotely, as many of them 22 come from far out jurisdictions, including Eagle, Pueblo, and Arapahoe County. Thank you for allowing 23 us to be here today.
24

25 The Commission on Judicial Discipline is hoping that we can establish accountability of the Judiciary 26 through independent oversight of judicial ethics. The Commission was established in 1966 through an 27 amendment to Article VI of the Colorado Constitution. The current members include, and always 28 include, four judges, four lay members or citizens, and two experienced attorneys. As far as staff, we 29 have one Executive Director and one part time administrative assistant that we share with other 30 organizations within the Judiciary. Of our duties, Article VI grants the Commission the authority to 31 recommend judges and justices in Colorado either be removed or disciplined for willful misconduct in 32 their office, willful or persistent failure to perform their duties, intemperance, or violation of any Canon 33 of the Code of Judicial Conduct. The Commission investigates complaints of judicial impropriety and 34 makes recommendations regarding discipline, if and when necessary. We are somewhat similar to a 35 grand jury. The Commission aims to maintain public confidence in the Judiciary and create greater 36 awareness of proper judicial conduct in Colorado. The Commission's jurisdiction is of County and 37 District Court judges, the Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court. The Commission has no jurisdiction 38 over magistrates, court staff, municipal judges, administrative law judges, or the federal judiciary. The 39 Commission, as I said, is comprised of judges, attorneys and citizens of the State. Each of the 40 Commissioners serve a four-year appointment with no salary. For administration, we have one

1 Executive Director and one part time assistant, and we arrange separate professional staffing for 2 investigations on a case-by-case basis. Typically, what that means is the Office of Attorney Regulation
3 serves as our investigators and counsel for any proceeding that goes formal. If the Office of Attorney 4 Regulation is unable to assist us, we have, at times, had the assistance of the Attorney General's Office.
5

6 Any concern about a judge's compliance with the Canons is reported to the Commission in writing 7 through a request for evaluation of judicial conduct, or an RFE, that is submitted online through our 8 website. And the Executive Director or a Commission member is assigned to do a preliminary review of 9 the allegations to determine if they involve the conduct of a judge as far as jurisdiction, and if there is a 10 reasonable basis for the Commission to process the request for evaluation as a complaint through any 11 type of disciplinary proceeding. If there's a reasonable basis for that complaint, the judge is notified and 12 asked to respond to the allegations, and the Commission conducts a thorough investigation of the alleged 13 misconduct. Upon a finding of misconduct, the Commission may confidentially issue a letter of 14 admonition, reprimand, or censure the judge, require the judge to seek training or counseling or medical 15 treatment, or initiate disability proceedings. The Commission can also dismiss or dismiss with some 16 concerns, if that is the case, after an investigation. Otherwise, the Commission can recommend to the 17 Colorado Supreme Court that the judge in question be either publicly sanctioned or reprimanded, 18 removed, suspended, or retire the judge, or pursue a diversion or deferred discipline type of plan. The 19 Constitution provides that the papers and proceedings of the Commission are confidential. Most 20 disciplinary actions are taken privately. When appropriate, the Commission can conduct formal 21 proceedings and make a recommendation to the Colorado Supreme Court for further action. It is only 22 when the Commission makes those recommendations to the Supreme Court for formal action or formal 23 discipline that a matter becomes public.
24

25 The performance commission is somewhat different than the disciplinary commission, as it is not 26 statewide, and rates performance of a judge not enforcing ethical rules. The reporting is to the voters, 27 and they have a statute implemented, whereas the Commission on Judicial Discipline has never had a 28 statute, as far as implementation. I refer to the ABA Model Rules for Judicial for Judicial Disciplinary 29 Enforcement, for reasons why the Commission should be established by a constitutional provision to 30 make sure that we are free from interference from any branch of government. To ensure that our fiscal 31 and operational independence is assured, our budget should be separate from that of the Judicial Branch.
32 This protects the Judicial Branch from the charge that it's withholding funds and therefore hampering 33 our investigation of any of its members. The Commission should not have to rely on any other agency.
34

35 Our current funding is provided through attorney registration fees. And there are beneficiaries of those 36 funds as the Judiciary collects them. The disciplinary commission is one of the beneficiaries of those 37 funds. Pursuant to our Rules, the Executive Director for the Commission sets forth a budget and handles 38 the funds with oversight by the disciplinary commission.
39

1 We provided a chart to demonstrate the annual request for evaluation volume in terms of years starting 2 in 2016 through 2020. And to demonstrate that in 2020 of almost 200 requests for evaluations that we 3 received, 73 of those required procuring evidence and examination to determine what action the 4 Commission would take or recommend.

5
6 Our goals for this session, in 2022, are that we hope we can establish independent access to funding and 7 resources for judicial discipline and implement a structure for independent judicial discipline in 8 Colorado. We did provide in our materials, our Report from 2020 and also a draft of some items that we 9 are providing to the JBC to try to secure funding and some of the independence that we are seeking. And 10 we're happy to take any questions that you have.

11
12 Rep. Weissman

13 Okay, thank you. Just to confirm before we jump into questions, because I think there will be many.
14 That concludes the presentation that you wanted to start off with?

15
16 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

17 Yes.

18
19 Rep. Weissman

20 Very good. Thank you. I think I have a few. There was reference earlier to an MOU by which you 21 would gain information to conduct the investigations that you are constitutionally charged to conduct. I 22 want to acknowledge having been looking at Article VI, Section 23 recently, and as you alluded to a few 23 slides ago, there are things that you are not going to be able to say here. I think we all know that. But as 24 much as you can, because this is a subject of significant importance and some recent press attention 25 before this committee. It would just, I think that we would all benefit from as much as you can say. So, 26 I'll start with this question of accessing information to facilitate the investigation. And then, might have 27 another question. But whoever would like to speak to that.

28
29 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

30 Thank you. In regards to the Memorandum of Understanding, I believe that Chief Justice Boatright did 31 discuss that there were some discussions that addressing the MOU between the judicial discipline 32 commission and the Supreme Court, as well as the Supreme Court Administrator's Office, prior to 33 Justice Coats's departure. Due to the pandemic and some other reasons, those discussions pretty much 34 stalled for quite a while. We have yet to actually sit at the table and go further with that memorandum of 35 understanding. We do not have a memorandum of understanding with either the Supreme Court or the 36 Office of Attorney Regulation as far as providing an office or other types of support that we currently 37 receive. Certain commissions do. The Independent Ethics Commission has such an MOU, we do not.
38 We were somewhat subsumed by the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel in terms of providing rent, 39 printers, computers, pretty much all of the resources that we would need for an office. And they would 40 provide attorneys and investigators when necessary to help us fulfill our mandate. Until 2021, that

1 worked rather seamlessly. In 2021, obviously, the Commission announced that we had to hire Special 2 Counsel to investigate matters as the Office of Attorney Regulation, which is under the Supreme Court
3 and works with the Supreme Court, was conflicted, as was the Attorney General's Office. That process 4 and our lack of access and ability to fund our Special Counsel and move forward is what has created our 5 request for independent funding, as well as just looking at this unprecedented time in 2021. Where really 6 to make sure that the public and our citizens of Colorado are assured the integrity of the Commission 7 and the independence of the Commission, we cannot have funding controlled by Judicial Leadership.
8 And if you were asking specifically about the MOU as far as information. Sharing all defer to David 9 Prince to respond to that.

10
11 Rep. Weissman

12 Okay. Mr. Prince, if you'd like to add to that.

13
14 David Prince

15 Sure. And I'm sorry, I had the impression that the gist of your question was how the MOU currently 16 works, that we have for information sharing with the Judicial Department. We've got a memorandum of 17 understanding, an agreement that goes back to 2010. The 2010 agreement requires that anytime the 18 Judiciary receives allegations of judicial misconduct, which means an allegation that a judge has taken 19 some action that violates the Code of judicial ethics, they're required to report that. They're required to 20 report that. You're not hearing me?

21
22 Rep. Weissman

23 Could you just make sure the little green light is on for the mic, at the base of the microphone.

24
25 David Prince

26 Oh, now it's on.

27
28 Rep. Weissman

29 There we go. Okay, thank you.

30
31 David Prince

32 So, there's an agreement that requires that the Judiciary, anytime they receive an allegation of judicial 33 misconduct, they report that allegation and any findings they may have from any investigation they did 34 to the disciplinary commission. That agreement, as I said, has been in place since about 2010. We've 35 found in the 2021-time frame that that's not really been an effective method of getting information from 36 the Judiciary. And, so, there are some problems with the way the MOU is working now.

37
38 Rep. Weissman

39 Okay. Thank you. Couple follow ups. I guess, for Ms. Krupa and Mr. Prince, whoever like to speak to 40 speak to this. To the point about hiring Special Counsel, couple slides back. You know, where there is

1 an interesting mix in terms of funding and authority and procedure, between funding flowing to you
2 through CRCP 227. I'll come back to that. And you have some ability to adopt your own rules 3 procedurally. What was the black letter law on point? Or was there sort of a gap of black letter law on 4 point concerning your decision to go forward with outside counsel for the present matter? And has there 5 been differences of opinion and understanding, perhaps, about proceeding in that fashion?
6

7 David Prince

8 Well, now you're going to test my memory on the Rule, because I believe it's 2(aa) under the Colorado 9 Rules of Judicial Discipline that defines Special Counsel. Special Counsel is authorized to be engaged 10 by the Commission at the Commission's decision. So, that's the basis of authority to hire Special 11 Counsel. We looked at the issue. We actually in terms of the investigation of 2021 which is, I think, 12 what you're talking about, and what was referenced by the Judiciary's presentation. We, frankly, 13 originally, just turned to our traditional supplier of professional services, the Office of Attorney 14 Regulation Counsel, checked with them to see if they would be providing those services as they do 15 usually. They let us know that they had conflicted off the case, which is quite understandable, and that 16 they had gone to the private sector to get counsel. Very similar to what the Judiciary itself did when they 17 hired their own investigators from the private sector to pursue the investigation. The two investigations 18 that you heard talked about earlier. Their suggestion to us that we follow suit and go to the private sector 19 and get counsel. We, in fact, did that. Got counsel, checked with them on a procurement process, 20 checked with them on a budget, got all that sorted out. Went out and got special counsel. Since that time, 21 we have encountered some problems. While the written Rule provides that it's the Commission who 22 decides what the scope of an engagement of Special Counsel is, the Judiciary, at least the leadership of 23 the Judiciary, has asserted that that is subject to their oversight and approval. And we've been in a 24 disagreement with them now for about four months, and part of that disagreement has been Judicial 25 Leadership asserting that they have the authority to direct what would be the proper scope of our 26 retention of counsel despite the black letter law.
27

28 Rep. Weissman

29 Okay, I think I have two more questions and then we'll go to Senator Gardner. So shifting gears a little 30 bit, and I guess I'm going to ask you to opine on a question of law. And if you'd rather not do that, I 31 understand. There were concerns raised about attorney client confidential information and information 32 that might be subject to an NDA, for example, by way of an employment contract, previously. There is 33 specific confidentiality language in Article VI itself, Section 23, I believe. Do we think that that 34 language is sufficient to assuage concerns about NDA-protected information or attorney client 35 confidential information? I'll leave it there and invite you to answer. And I guess if the answer is no.
36 What other steps then might be taken to assuage those concerns, which are understandable among 37 attorneys, while at the same time facilitating the flow of information to this constitutionally created 38 function here? Ms. Krupa.
39
40

1 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

2 Thank you. The confidentiality that's provided for the Commission really is confidentiality during our 3 investigative process. As I indicated before, if we make recommendations that we as a Commission find 4 there was misconduct and recommend any kind of formal proceeding, there's procedures for that to 5 move forward. However, just to even investigate the matter, obviously the Commission would need 6 some information. In contrast to what you heard Chief Justice Boatright tell all of you during his 7 presentation, the two investigations that the Supreme Court is currently undergoing is of harassment and 8 workplace culture and the leadership training contract. The Commission on Judicial Discipline is the 9 only agency or entity in Colorado that can look at the conduct of a judge in context of any of those 10 allegations. While Chief Justice Boatright mentioned that there was unfettered access to attorney client 11 privileged documents and nondisclosure agreements to investigators in each of those investigations, we 12 do not have that access. We have not been given that access, regardless of an MOU. But we have the 13 confidentiality rules to protect that. And as Chief Justice Boatright indicated, if, as in the hypothetical he 14 gave, there was an allegation that a judge had committed some kind of sexual harassment of an 15 employee, or something like that, and the commission is forwarded that information. The Commission 16 does work with the Chief Judge in that District, as well as the State Court Administrator's Office, to try 17 to make sure that the employee is protected and that any investigation moving forward or disclosures are 18 taken with protection of that person in mind. And I'm not sure if that answered your question.

19
20 Rep. Weissman

21 That's helpful. I think in the interest of time, I won't follow up on that one. Last question, and then 22 Senator Gardner will go. A little bit differently. And we, I think actually Senator Gardner's question 23 previously raised this, and Rep. Tipper was asking about it. But for the record, for edification of the 24 committee, as I feel like we might be continuing to discuss this, we are used to funds moving through 25 JBC processes, through the long bill, through some other bill. And in the independent offices that we've 26 been hearing from yesterday and today, and some of them come and ask for more resources sometime 27 that might take the form of a line being newly added or whatever. But as far as the registration fees that 28 we and other attorneys pay, that's moving in a bit of a different way. We've again, we've talked about it 29 some, but I think it's important that we're clear on this. If you could articulate, from your standpoint, as 30 the office and the Commission, sort of the waterfall of funds coming in from attorney payments moving 31 around pursuant to CRCP 227 and then from there.

32
33 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

34 And I'll let Mr. Gregory respond to that, since he's been the one preparing most of the information for 35 our request.

36
37 Rep. Weissman

38 Mr. Gregory, please go ahead.

39
40

1 Christopher Gregory

2 With the funding request. It contemplates sort of two sources of funding, the attorney registration fees, 3 as they exist now. If you look at Rule 227, it contains two provisions. One is that OARC is supposed to 4 be able to offset some of their expenses for wherever they would cooperate with the Commission to 5 complete investigations, provide special counsel. But then, the Commission itself is also listed as a 6 beneficiary. The problem that I think, and why we're here, is that that relationship with the Office of 7 Attorney Regulation Counsel isn't 100% reliable. Where the Commission would be able to go to them in 8 almost any circumstance and have them complete what was contemplated through that provision in Rule 9 227, where this investigation and Special Counsel will be provided. So, what's being requested with the 10 funding request is that we would essentially turn the administrative assistant into a full-time position, 11 add a staff attorney, and add an investigator. So, that those basic functions that the Commission has done 12 over the years would be in-house and completely independent. As the request is written now, the 13 expectation is funding for that would still come out of attorney registration fees, at least in some form.
14 Secondary to that, we're asking that the Legislature approve an ongoing reserve fund, a repeating reserve 15 fund, providing the initial funding for that this year out of general fund money. Something that would 16 allow the Commission to provide, well, for the situation that we have right now, which requires funding 17 for Special Counsel. But in the future, if there were other extraordinary expenses, that reserve fund 18 could be used to address conflicts or whatever cost would be involved. So, that's kind of the separation 19 of the two. But it doesn't, essentially, create that windfall in funding that Representative Tipper was 20 asking about. Because we're not asking to be completely taken out of the funding source that we already 21 have now, and that still would be the stable basis for all of our operations.

22
23 Rep. Weissman

24 Okay, thank you. I'll stop there. Senator Gardner. Then, Rep. Benevides.

25
26 Sen. Gardner

27 Thank you, Mr. Chair. First of all, let me just thank Ms. Krupa, Judge Prince, Mr. Gregory, the 28 Executive Director. And let me recognize Mr. Jim Carpenter, who's also a member of the Commission 29 on Judicial Discipline, as citizen. No stranger to the Capitol, though, Mr. Carpenter. So, we made you 30 come back today. Mr. Carpenter, served in the Ritter Administration. You are here at the request of 31 several of us, because the Commission on Judicial Discipline has never testified at SMART Act 32 hearings, to my knowledge. Others can speak for themselves as to what that reason is. That they made 33 the request. But my reason for the request was that, over the past year and a half, we have had a series of 34 concerning allegations about the Judicial Department that in my 30 plus years as an attorney in the State, 35 the likes of which I don't ever recall. My constituents who know that I'm a lawyer, and my lawyer 36 colleagues who know that I'm a legislator, stop me on the street and call me up and say, What is going 37 on? And whether that's fair or unfair, whether it's an unfortunate set of circumstances. One begins to 38 look and say, what is the mechanism to ensure the ethics and integrity of the Judicial Branch, itself.
39 Which must, by its nature, operate independently. And a judicial discipline commission, which, by its 40 nature, itself, must operate freely and independently. So, thank you for taking the time to be here. I am

1 going to say this funding request is a bit out of cycle. But that's not outside the scope of what the 2 Legislature can do. And I share Representative Tipper's concern of ensuring that that my bar registration 3 fees don't just sort of disappear because they have been used in the past for the Commission. And there
4 ought to be a commitment. But constitutionally, just for my colleagues who don't know. We can't touch 5 those funds. They belong to the Judicial Department. I say we can't. I don't care, to provoke the 6 constitutional crisis to find out if we could or should. But there are ways to ways to get to that. There's a 7 question coming here, Mr. Chairman. So, having said all of that and not having time to go into every 8 detail and in the interest of disclosure, I visited with the Chief Justice, members of the Department, as 9 well as members of the Commission. To try to understand what we as a General Assembly need to do.
10 Let me ask you this, what does independence for the Commission on Judicial Discipline look like? What 11 in your view, do you think the General Assembly should do? And Senator Lee is in the back of the 12 room, but he and I both have taken a bill title to try to do this and ensure for the people of Colorado that 13 there is a Commission. It is set up in the Constitution and can operate independently. And in a way that I 14 can answer the question and say, there is a Commission on Judicial discipline. It is independent. You 15 may not agree with findings that they have, or you may. But there is a place to take your complaint, and 16 you can be assured that as much as any process of citizens and our constitutional government, that it is a 17 free one. I apologize for the speech. What does that mean to the Commission? How do we ensure that?

18

19 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

20 It would be implementation of funding that is not controlled by the Judiciary. That the disciplinary 21 commission is charged to oversee, as opposed to Judicial Leadership. Establishing a durable obligation 22 of the Judiciary to document and disclose allegations of misconduct by judges. So, that they can be 23 examined independently by the discipline commission. And to fix some of the structural issues that 24 undermine operational independence of the Commission, as we're experiencing for the first time this 25 past year. And Judge Prince would like to add to that.

26

27 Rep. Weissman

28 Go ahead.

29

30 David Prince

31 Chair Krupa hits the big three topics. But your question also included a little bit broader, because when 32 you say what the Legislature can do. The Legislature can address the independence of funding. Again, 33 it's independent in the written rules, but it's not operating that way. The duty of disclosure and 34 documentation, and then some of the structural issues. One of the primary issues is constitutional, of 35 course. And that is, again, this analogy, that the disciplinary commission works as kind of a more robust 36 grand jury. So, we do factual investigation. We do get to do some limited discipline. And then, we make 37 recommendations. And, ultimately, those who conduct the trial and make the final decision is the 38 Supreme Court, itself. In other words, the judges who are being overseen. That is in the Constitution. So, 39 this body cannot change that piece of it. That's the only thing I wanted to clarify. But quite a few other

1 things can be done because we've learned many lessons in 2021 about methods in which the structure 2 does not lend itself to our independent operation, at this point.

3
4 Rep. Weissman

5 Senator, good for now? Okay, follow up.

6
7 Sen. Gardner

8 Thank you. And just more of a follow up comment. I want to assure those that are listening, observing 9 today. I am convinced that both the Colorado Supreme Court, the Judicial Department generally, and the 10 Commission on Judicial Discipline are committed to this independent judicial commission. Getting there 11 is a bit more complicated than it appears on its surface. And events of the past year and a half have 12 shown us that there are things as we go through the process that need to be dealt with. So, none of my 13 comments should be taken as critical of those on either side of this equation. But it is incumbent upon 14 us, as legislators, representatives of the people. To do what we can to ensure that independence and 15 accountability. And I think that is shared by everyone in the Judicial Department and the Commission, 16 as well.

17
18 Rep. Weissman

19 Thank you, Senator. Okay, next and last word, we'll go to Rep. Benevides. And Representative, either 20 the paint on the room in which you're zooming in from is yellow, or it looks yellow in the light. It's kind 21 of camouflaging the yellow software hand. So, sorry if I'm not seeing you timely, but Mr. Pogue is also 22 looking out. Please go ahead.

23
24 Rep. Benevides

25 Okay, no problem. I'll try to send you a text, as well. My question really has to do with. You know, I 26 served on the panel that looked at some of these issues, the two investigations that are being done in the 27 Judicial Department right now. We put together the RFP language to go out to hire those. And when we 28 were doing that, we also looked at this Commission. We couldn't really figure out who's supposed to be 29 looking at that. Because there are also state personnel rules when a judge that's in the Judicial 30 Department, which can be in any of the Judicial Districts. If there's a complaint from employees, 31 because the memo, and I think the Chief Justice had referred to it. That memo referenced several 32 complaints over several years from several employees. And there were some issues in their HR 33 Department and in their administration. And things may or may not have been carefully investigated and 34 determinations made. And several of those had to do with sexual harassment and other harassment-type 35 or discriminatory complaints. So, we could never figure out what anybody should do, particularly 36 employees. Should they go to your Commission? Should they go to their employer? Who's the judge?
37 So, we were also looking at, how can we improve on what you do? Because I pulled up, I just pulled up 38 your 2018 Report. And you had 200 cases that went in front of you. And 183 were dismissed, you know.
39 And so I get real worried about the complainant, the individual, is there something with that? That 40 they're made aware of what happened? Or there's no basis? Or other places they could take this to?

1 Because a judge in the Judicial Department is also an employer. And if it is an employment complaint, 2 the complainant has some other options. So, I'm really looking to see if you think the structure you have.
3 If there's anything you've looked at that you could make recommendations to us for changes? Because, 4 honestly, we didn't think this was. Or I'll just speak for me, others that are on this panel could speak, but 5 that it was very effective.

6
7 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

8 Thank you and thank you for your question. The Commission on Judicial Discipline has a screening 9 process, as I described before, that really is to make sure not only that we have jurisdiction. But that the 10 complaint that we receive about the judge is within our purview of looking at their conduct. Whether it 11 affects or implicates misconduct under the judicial Code or in timing issues, which is what we see a lot.
12 Are judges that delay orders that are prejudicial or harmful to the litigants. Different things like that.
13 When something is dismissed, sometimes it's because we don't have jurisdiction. A lot of the complaints 14 that we get are asking for changes in a judge's ruling, which is not what we can do. So, when there is a 15 complaint that is dismissed, the complainant is notified in writing. If there is another resource to send 16 them towards, then we do that. But as far as making recommendations, Representative. We'd be happy 17 to sit with you and discuss more of those without taking up everyone else's time. But as I mentioned 18 before, one of the things that we've discussed is whatever the MOU in existence is, it isn't necessarily 19 working. And this request of ours to document and disclose allegations of misconduct by a judge can 20 include sexual harassment or other conduct that may be in the purview of an employment context. So, 21 there is a request that, structurally, we find some kind of enforcement or requirement of the courts or the 22 State Court Administrator's Office to document and disclose to us allegations of misconduct by judges.
23 And through our screening process, with our confidentiality rules, we determine if we are the agency to 24 deal with that or we can make a recommendation, where else that information can go.

25
26 Rep. Weissman

27 Okay? Rep Benevides, good for now?

28
29 Rep. Benevides

30 Yeah, I appreciate that, and would love to talk to you more about that.

31
32 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

33 Thank you.

34
35 Rep. Weissman

36 Okay, very good. Committee, I think we need to leave it there. We've gotten a little bit further behind 37 time. Thank you all for being with us today. We will jump right into the next segment, which is. Oh, I'm 38 sorry, Ms. Jenson. Oh, I apologize. We do need to. All right, I hadn't been given a sign-up list. Do we 39 have anybody online? Okay. Mr. Forsyth, I think that we've got you connected. If you can hear us, 40 please go ahead.

1 Chris Forsyth

2 Thank you. Can you hear me now?

3

4 Rep. Weissman

5 We are hearing you. Please commence.

6

7 Chris Forsyth

8 Thank you for allowing me to speak. My name is Chris Forsyth. I'm an attorney who's practiced in 9 Colorado for 27 years. Through that practice, I started what we call the Judicial Integrity Project, which 10 seeks to improve the justice system by advocating for laws that increase transparency, enhance 11 accountability, and remove conflicts of interest. The problems with the Judicial Discipline Commission 12 have always been there. It's been around for 55 years. And now in 2022, they're finally requesting some 13 changes. It's a relief that changes are being requested. The funding is one part of what is wrong with this 14 Commission. The Commission was created in 1966, went into place in 1967. In the early 80s, rules were 15 adopted. There was some discipline being handed out by the Commission before the 80s. And rules were 16 adopted creating an Executive Director and requiring the Executive Director to dismiss complaints.
17 From 1986 to 2014 there was not one single case of public judicial discipline. 28 years, there wasn't any 18 public judicial discipline. We started speaking up in 2012 and pointing that out. That there hadn't been a 19 case of public judicial discipline in a surreal amount of time, In 2014, all of a sudden, a stipulation 20 regarding a judge leaving the bench was published. And, then, now we get to the more recent years. In 21 2019, then, finally came another judge where the case was actually litigated. So, due to public pressure, 22 the discipline commission has begun to act a little more responsibly. But problems with the Commission 23 are in the Constitution.

24

25 And I disagree with some of the testimony thus far, saying that the General Assembly can't do anything 26 about the Constitution. As we all know, the General Assembly can pass a resolution for a referendum to 27 put it on the ballot. And that's where the judicial discipline commission originally came from. And we're 28 advocating for the General Assembly to do that again. Because this Commission, as it is constituted, as 29 it is created, is failing us miserably. The recent acts of discipline have been reactions of the judicial 30 discipline to criminal prosecution and news stories. The discipline commission is not taking the 31 forefront on disciplining judges for misconduct, as it should be. There is a state out there who handles 32 judicial misconduct a lot more responsibly. That state is California. You simply need to look at 33 California to see how that commission is set up. And you can draft a referendum off of that and come up 34 with a better Commission. Just recently, NBC News wrote an article regarding judicial discipline, and 35 the article states quote, "Legal ethics experts say, the minuscule share of judges punished every year isn't 36 necessarily indicative that all is well in the judiciary. It suggests a lack of accountability." And that is 37 exactly what we have in Colorado. Is a lack of accountability. California publishes judicial discipline 38 proceedings. Colorado does not. That is the worst aspect of the current judicial discipline process. Is the 39 overbearing lack of transparency. So, to give the discipline commission true independence. It's 40 somewhat hypocritical for the judicial discipline commission testifying here today that it wants

1 independence when it is tied to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court makes the Rules for the 2 Commission. The Executive Director, by those Rules, reports to the Supreme Court. And as long as 3 those items stay the way they are, there will be no true independence for the judicial discipline 4 commission. In California, the commission makes its own rules. The commission is the entity that 5 actually disciplines the judge, not the Supreme Court. They don't have an Executive Director who 6 dismisses most of the complaints, as we do in Colorado. They allow the information that the commission 7 has to be accessed by other agencies. In Colorado, we have a situation where judicial performance 8 commissions are advising voters to retain judges who may very well have been disciplined or are going 9 through disciplinary proceedings. It's unbelievable that this is taking place in the 21st century. Do we 10 want the budget for the commission to be public? Yes, that's how California has it. And the budget in 11 California states the budget shall be separate from the budget of any other state agency or court.
12 California has it, right. Who is on the Commission? In California, they have a better situation because 13 the citizens outnumber the legal professionals. In Colorado, we have four judges, two lawyers 14 outnumbering four citizens. In California, they have six citizens outnumbering three judges and two 15 lawyers.

16

17 Rep. Weissman

18 Mr. Forsyth, typically, we do three-minute public comments here. I've allowed you to run significantly 19 over. I will ask you to conclude, please

20

21 Chris Forsyth

22 Okay. And thank you for allowing me that time. We encourage you to look harder at this and consider 23 drafting a referendum to put before the people that would truly make the judicial discipline commission 24 independent. Removing its ties from the Supreme Court, allowing it to create its own rules, and, most 25 importantly, creating transparency. Documents filed with the discipline commission should be public.
26 The public should know if a judge is facing discipline. And there should be funding for a published 27 database on the Commission's website so people can search whether judges have been disciplined. This 28 is the way it is in almost all the other states. Colorado is just way, way, way far behind. Thank you.

29

30 Rep. Weissman

31 Okay. Mr. Forsyth, thank you for speaking with us today. All right. Can we check? Is there anyone else 32 who is wanting to speak online before we move away from public comments? I don't think we have any.

33 Okay, thanks again for being with us this afternoon. We will now move to the next segment.

Comm., Colo. Leg., March 3, 2022* (confirmation of James Carpenter and Mindy Sooter to Colo. Comm. Jud.
Discipline);

Senate Judiciary Committee—March 3, 2022 Confirmation Hearing for CCJD Members Mindy Sooter and James Carpenter

1 Sen. Lee

2 We do have a quorum, and we are ready to proceed. The first order of business, our confirmation 3 hearings for the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. I see we have some candidates here. If 4 you want to join us at the witness table.

5

6 Sen. Lee

7 So who would like to begin? Go right ahead.

8

9 Sen. Gonzales

10 There is a little great, yep, gray button there at the bottom.

11

12 Christopher Gregory

13 We're on.

14

15 Sen. Lee

16 Okay, very good.

17

18 Sen. Lee

19 Start again, if you would please.

20

21 Christopher Gregory

22 Sorry, Mr. Chair. I'm Christopher Gregory, the Executive Director of the Commission, with me, Jim 23 Carpenter and Mindy Sooter. They are serving terms that started July 1 of this past year, and we're here 24 for that confirmation.

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 Very good. One of you, or either of you, tell us who you are. Just introduce yourself. Tell us a little bit 28 about your background and why you want to serve in this august capacity. And I don't say that 29 flippantly, I think this is really one of the most important commissions that we have in Colorado. I think 30 the public trust in the integrity of judges and justices is absolutely critical to a functioning democracy, 31 and I think we are in a time when everything is questioned. So, to have an independent agency that 32 addresses those issues is, to me, one of the most critical things. So, tell us why you would like to be 33 involved in this.

34

35

36

1 Mindy Sooter

2 Thank you. Mr. Chair. My name is Mindy Sooter, and I am an attorney in Colorado. I've been an 3 attorney since 2003 when I graduated from the University of Colorado School of Law. Law is my 4 second career, and perhaps because it is my second career, I came into it very enthusiastically. And one 5 of the things that I can't say as well as you did, Mr. Chair, but I would just echo is that the institution of 6 our judiciary, both in the state and the federal levels, is core to our democracy. And I am in private 7 practice. I work for a firm called WilmerHale. And because I'm in private practice, I don't do as much 8 work for the state or for the people as I would like to, and so when I was asked to serve on this 9 committee, it was a great honor to be able to help serve our judiciary and do work for the state to help 10 make our government a better place.

11

12 Sen. Lee

13 Okay, thank you. Why don't you follow that same script?

14

15 Jim Carpenter

16 Great. Thank you. Mr. Chairman, members of committee. My name is Jim Carpenter. I come to the 17 Commission as a citizen member, which I think is an important piece of what the Commission's business 18 is. That it not only has judges and attorneys on the Commission, but also four citizen members. I'm a 19 native of Colorado. Grew up in a small town, Granby. I have had a career in both federal and state 20 government. I was privileged enough to work in this building for Roy Romer for four years as his 21 Communications Director, and then as Chief of Staff to Governor Ritter for four years. And you know, 22 I'm a huge believer in the institutions of our democracy. My experience is obviously in the Executive 23 Branch, but the Legislative and Judicial Branches, as well. Colorado has this really interesting system 24 that the voters created in the 60s on how we select, evaluate, and ultimately discipline (in needed cases) 25 judges. I also was fortunate enough to be a citizen member of both the 18th Judicial Nominating 26 Commission and the Supreme Court Nominating Commission, which was an enormous honor to serve 27 on both of those for six years each, actually. And when my term on the nominating commission, 28 Supreme Court Nominating Commission was up, the Governor asked if I would serve on the Discipline 29 Commission, which I have pleased and honored to do that. So, I thank you for your time and your work 30 on all of this and appreciate the chance to be here today.

31

32 Sen. Lee

33 Okay. Well, thank you. Are there any questions from the committee for any of the nominees? Senator 34 Gardner.

35

36 Sen. Gardner

37 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Mr. Carpenter, Ms Sooter, thank you both for being here. Just as a side comment 38 to the committee, I told Ms Sooter that the most impressive part of her resume is that she has a degree in 39 electrical engineering from Texas A & M. I never understood V equals IR but, and I won't ask you to 40 explain it, because I looked it up and I saw something on Google that said YV equals IR is wrong, and I

1 don't even want to go down that road with you. But I would like to ask you both on a more serious vein, 2 we have had a good deal of press discussion and concern in our state concerning the judiciary. The 3 Commission on Judicial Discipline serves a vital role in the integrity and accountability of our Judiciary.
4 I think it's been a good system overall. But do you have any thoughts for the committee? There's no 5 secret that we're considering some legislation to ensure or further ensure the independence of the 6 Commission. And I just wonder if you have thoughts about that legislative proposal, those thoughts you 7 had, I know, Mr. Carpenter was in the room for the SMART Act hearings, and we sort of addressed the 8 same thing. So, I'll stop and just let you comment as you wish, or if you'd rather not, that's okay as well.

9

10 Sen. Lee

11 Ms. Sooter, go right ahead.

12

13 Mindy Sooter

14 Thank you, Mr. Chair and Senator Gardner. I'm not prepared to discuss the legislation, certainly not in 15 any detail, but I will say that I do come to the committee or the Commission with the interest of making 16 the judiciary stronger and making our State stronger as a whole. So that will be the guiding principle in 17 the acts that I help perform with the Commission. But apart from that, as familiar with the details of the 18 process right now with the pending legislation.

19

20 Sen. Lee

21 Let the record reflect that Senator Cooke has joined us, Madam Vice Chair.

22

23 Sen. Gonzales

24 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to follow up on the question from Senator Gardner, and first, just extend 25 my appreciation to you for being willing to serve in this capacity in this time where I do think that we 26 are recognizing the need for some change to the way that things have been done. Ms Sooter, in your 27 application, you reflected on ensuring that the Judiciary has an appropriate work ethic, demeanor and 28 temperament. How do you, and this is a question, actually, for both of you. How do you respond in these 29 moments of conflict, in these moments of challenge?

30

31 Sen. Lee

32 Ms. Sooter.

33

34 Mindy Sooter

35 Thank you, Mr. Chair and Senator Gonzales, well, I would like to think that our government and the 36 Commission can get through this together. We do have a mission to increase the integrity or help protect 37 the integrity of the judiciary, and I do believe that the people who serve this state serve it with good 38 intentions at heart, and we have a mission to investigate complaints that are brought to the Commission 39 to ensure that the judges in the State are abiding by the judicial Canons and there's no appearance of 40 impropriety, and that we take appropriate actions when there is. So, we'll diligently conduct our

1 investigations. Of course, we have a duty of confidentiality as well, but we take the responsibility very 2 seriously, and so we're all willing to dedicate the time, and frankly, it's an honor to be able to serve in 3 this capacity.

4

5 Sen. Gonzales

6 Thank you. Mr. Carpenter,

7

8 Jim Carpenter

9 Yes, thank you, Mr. Chair. Senator Gonzales, I think I would just add to that. You know, the 10 Commission is instituted in the in the Constitution and it goes to maybe Senator Gardner's question as 11 well. You know, there isn't really a statute that provides additional guidance and information and rules 12 and sideboards for the Commission. And, so, I think that those become more important to develop as 13 this as this gets more and more complicated. The Judiciary is under a fair amount of pressure, Covid, 14 growth in the state, just all of these other issues here that puts continued pressure on all of our 15 institutions. And the discipline commission really is the only body that has this ability in the in the state 16 Constitution, to review the behavior and conduct of judges and make these determinations and 17 recommendations. It is a very confidential process. It's a very robust process. We're all volunteers. It's a 18 lot of work. I mean there's a lot of information to read and process and deal with, and so we all I think, 19 have this responsibility to kind of face these challenges that we have and do the very best we can within 20 the constructs of the Constitution. Whatever decisions that you and the Legislature make about 21 additional bills and guidance, we of course will follow those as well.

22

23 Sen. Lee

24 Any further questions from the committee? Just a final comment. I am impressed with the credentials 25 that both of you bring. The fact, Mr. Carpenter, that you have served on a nominating commission and a 26 disciplinary or on a performance commission gives you a robust background into how all of this work
27 works, and then serving under the dome under two governors, I think gives you a real tremendous scope 28 of knowledge. Ms. Sooter, as a practicing attorney, I think you bring those credentials, but I can't help 29 but note your undergraduate academic record, of Magna Cum Laude, of phi beta kappa, Order of the 30 Coif, and Law Review, which to lawyers, are the most highest honors and distinctions. So, you're 31 obviously gifted, and we are honored that you would bring that background to this voluntary endeavor to 32 improve the judicial conduct in Colorado. So with no further comments. Ms Jenson, would you.

33

34 Sen. Gardner

35 Do we need a motion?

36

37 Sen. Lee

38 Need a motion first. Madam Vice Chair.

39

40

1 Sen. Gonzales
2 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I really appreciate you all being willing to serve in this capacity, and I move to 3 the full Senate with a favorable recommendation the appointment of Ms. Mindy Sooter and the 4 reappointment of James Carpenter to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline.
5

6 Sen. Lee
7 Very good. Good motion. Ms. Jenson, please poll the Committee.

Subject: Bill Draft Analysis - Concerning the Commission on Judicial Discipline
Attachments: 22-0764_01_20220225.pdf

Rep. Weissman and Sen. Lee:

Per your request, below is a review we conducted of the constitutionality and other matters pertaining to bill draft LLS 22-0764.01 regarding the role, authority, and procedures of the Commission on Judicial Discipline (“Commission”).

Please note that this feedback is compiled from the analysis of multiple attorneys throughout several separate sections and units at the Department of Law, and that this content does not constitute a formal legal opinion or an official position on the bill draft by Attorney General Weiser. We are happy to work with you or the proponents on any of these matters or in suggesting language.

Constitutionality Issues

- Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(h)/Separation of Powers/Rulemaking Authority. The bill draft proposes several statutes that would be in conflict with the Colorado Constitution. The Constitution requires the Colorado Supreme Court to adopt rules governing the Judicial Discipline Commission’s procedures. The Court’s rulemaking authority is not limited by the Constitution to “formal proceedings” as stated in the bill. The Constitution states: “(h) The supreme court shall by rule provide for procedures before the commission on judicial discipline, the masters, and the supreme court. The rules shall also provide the standards and degree of proof to be applied by the commission in its proceedings.” Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(h) (emphasis added). As such, the Constitution does not provide a role for the Commission or Legislative Branch in this process and rather leaves it solely to the discretion of the Court. Furthermore, the Constitution does not place limits on the Court’s rulemaking authority as provided in Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(h) or subject it to the legislative process. There are multiple sections in the draft bill where the proposed statutes would conflict with the Constitution’s issuance of rulemaking authority to the Supreme Court. To allow the bill draft’s provision on rulemaking by the Commission, a constitutional amendment is required.
 - o Example. The Supreme Court presently has a rule on disqualification via C.R.J.D. 9., yet the bill’s disqualification procedures allow the Commission to determine who may participate in the proceedings, including special masters appointed by the Supreme Court and, in fact, the Supreme Court justices themselves. See Proposed § 107, pp. 13-14.
 - o Example. The Supreme Court presently has rules governing subpoenas issued by the Commission. See C.R.J.D. 4(d), 22. Yet the bill draft’s procedures for issuing and enforcing subpoenas allows the Commission to issue subpoenas, gives the Commission authority to resolve any challenge to a subpoena on its own, and the Commission’s decision is not reviewable. See Proposed § 108, pp. 14-15.
 - o Example. The Constitution provides that the Commission’s proceedings “shall be confidential,” Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(g), and also tasks the Supreme Court with rulemaking to implement the constitutional language. Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(h). The Supreme Court has adopted rules that provide for narrow exceptions to confidentiality, and all of them are consistent with ensuring that there is an effective disciplinary process. See C.R.J.D. 6.5. However, the bill draft would establish statutory exceptions to confidentiality in Proposed § 109, pp. 15-17, despite the express constitutional language that the proceedings “shall be confidential” and despite the Supreme Court’s contrary rules promulgated under its constitutional authority to do so.

- Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(e), (3)(f)/Court’s Exclusive Sui Generis Proceedings. Like attorney regulation proceedings, judicial discipline proceedings are a sui generis process established by the Colorado Constitution over which the Supreme Court has exclusive ultimate authority under the Constitution. See Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(e) (stating the Commission after formal proceedings may “recommend to the supreme court the removal, retirement, suspension, censure, reprimand, or discipline, ... of the justice or judge.” (emphasis added)); id. at § 23(3)(f) (stating Supreme Court “in its discretion” may “order removal, retirement, suspension, censure, reprimand, or discipline,” or may “wholly reject the [Commission’s] recommendation.”); cf. Chessin v. Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel, 458 P.3d 888, 891 (Colo. 2020) (explaining attorney discipline proceedings are “sui generis,” having been “designed for the precise, and sole, purpose of exercising [the Supreme Court’s] exclusive jurisdiction and fulfilling this responsibility of the supreme court.”). Unless the Supreme Court changes its rules governing the judicial discipline process or a constitutional amendment is enacted, the bill’s provisions purporting to move the existing Judicial Discipline Commission out from under the Supreme Court, and those giving the Denver District Court jurisdiction over certain enforcement issues, would conflict with the Constitution and be void. See, e.g., Chessin, 458 P.3d at 892-93 (Denver District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear case attempting to compel the Attorney Regulation Counsel to investigate alleged attorney misconduct); Ritchie v. Polis, 467 P.3d 339, 345 (Colo. 2020) (state constitutional requirement that ballot initiative petitions be signed in the presence of the petition circulator could not be suspended by the Governor, even during a pandemic).
- Colo. Const. art. VI, § 21/Funding. Under Colo. Const. art. VI, § 21, the Supreme Court has rulemaking authority over the administration of all state courts and has general supervisory authority over the practice of law in Colorado. See Colo. Supreme Court Grievance Comm. v. Dist. Court, 850 P.2d 150, 152 (Colo. 1993) (“The Colorado Supreme Court, as part of its inherent and plenary powers, has exclusive jurisdiction over attorneys and the authority to regulate, govern, and supervise the practice of law in Colorado to protect the public.”). The Supreme Court, through the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel (“OARC”), collects fees from attorneys to support the Supreme Court’s obligation to regulate the practice of law. The bill’s blended funding approach (see Proposed § 104(3), p. 10), which apparently is present practice but is incorporated in Judicial Department rules and not in statute, expressly requires an appropriation by the General Assembly and the Long Bill and legislative approval of expenditure of OARC funds. The bill draft thus impedes both OARC’s ability to budget for itself and funded units, and with the Supreme Court’s ability to set registration fees consistent with its exclusive authority to regulate the practice of law.
- Due Process. The bill draft creates procedures which may violate due process protections. By limiting the Court’s rulemaking authority, the bill draft creates an entity with no oversight regarding a large portion of complaints that come before the Commission. There are no due process guarantees, and the bill appears to allow the Commission to unilaterally impose discipline with little or no process. The bill draft creates a new mandatory reporting standard that is much lower than current reporting requirements. It defines “judicial misconduct” as including hypothetical or fabricated allegations, which must be assumed as true, even before any process or opportunity for the judge to respond. See Proposed § 102(9), p. 5. The bill requires reporting and documentation of any “allegation of potential judicial misconduct” (with “misconduct” defined in § 102(9) as “conduct that, if the conduct occurred, is subject to a reasonable argument that it violates the Code of Judicial Conduct”). The bill does not specify what the new “reasonable argument” standard is in the § 102(9) definition. There is also no appellate review on certain issues, such as commissioner disqualification decisions and subpoena enforcement decisions. Regarding disqualification, § 107(4) seems to state that the Commission may choose who to disqualify in the decision-making process, including special masters appointed by the Supreme Court and Supreme Court justices themselves. See Proposed § 107(2)). That decision is not reviewable. Any commissioner may request disqualification of a decisionmaker (including a Supreme Court justice) without even having to comply with affidavit requirements that would otherwise be required under C.R.C.P. 97. In combination with § 111(2) requiring four conflict-free justices, as defined by the bill draft, this provision allows the Commission, at its sole discretion, to create cases where it can prevent any review of its decision. This violates core due process protections under the US and Colorado constitutions and the basic constitutional requirement of separation of powers. Notably, this provision concerns “procedures before the commission” and thus falls under the rulemaking power delegated under Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(h) to the Supreme Court, not the Commission.

- Taxpayer Bill of Rights. Use of fees derived from one source for a purpose that does not benefit the fee payer has the potential to convert a fee into a tax, thereby limiting the ability for that fee to be increased absent a vote of the electorate required by the Colorado Constitution under the Colorado Taxpayer Bill of Rights (“TABOR”). Our understanding is that the bill draft’s fee sharing arrangements with OARC reflects current practice and is spelled out in Judicial Department rule. However, it should be noted that if the fee levels are raised to accommodate new budgetary needs due to the bill draft’s inclusion of the Commission, it is possible that such an action draws a legal challenge from a plaintiff on the reasonableness of the fee amount under the Supreme Court’s case law interpreting TABOR. The risk of such a lawsuit would be that a portion of the last four years of OARC fees could be subject to a refund to the fee payers.

Statutory Issues

- Deviation from State Laws on Legal Counsel to State Agencies and Commissions. Since the 1970s, state law has required the centralization of legal services to be provided by the Department of Law (commonly referred to as the “Oregon Plan”). This policy was reaffirmed in the 2020 legislative session when the legislature modified language governing the providing of legal services to all agencies, commissions, boards, departments, etc. within both the Executive and Judicial Branches. § 24-31-111(1), (6)(b), C.R.S. (“The attorney general shall provide legal services for each state agency. . . .” and “‘State agency’ means any . . . commission . . . of the executive department and judicial department of state government.”). To account for additional expertise or supplemental legal representation as may be required by client agencies, the Attorney General has statutory authority to, when deemed necessary, appoint special assistant attorneys general to provide legal counsel. Id. at § 101(1)(g). The bill draft’s establishment of Commission counsel to provide legal services to the Commission and Office is outside of the State’s Oregon Plan model, deviates from and conflicts with current state laws governing legal services to state commissions, and allows private sector attorneys not approved by the state attorney general to appear before the courts “as a representative of the people if a matter goes to formal proceedings.” See Proposed §§ 105 & 106(3), pp. 7, 10, 11, 12, 14, 17. Our understanding is that the bill proponents do not intend such a conflict, and the Department of Law is willing to offer language suggestions to address this matter.
- Colorado Governmental Immunity Act. The bill draft provides immunity from suit for Commission members and office employees. However, in doing so, the bill draft establishes new immunity laws under the proposed Article 5.3. Consequently, the bill draft potentially removes state employees of the Commission that would already benefit from immunity laws provided under the Colorado Governmental Immunity Act (“CGIA”) as well as substantial case law interpreting the CGIA. See § 24-10-101, C.R.S. et seq. Providing separate immunity provisions for state employees acting under Article 5.3 could create unintended consequences for individual employees. See Proposed §§ 103 & 105, pp. 7, 10-11. The Department of Law recommends removal of these provisions and reliance on the CGIA.

Policy Considerations

- Acceptance of Private Funds. The bill draft’s proposed § 115(1) authorizes the Commission to accept “private funds” to be used for “any purpose consistent with the provisions of this article 5.3”. Such arrangements could create actual or apparent conflicts of interest should certain persons or law firms with interests before the Commission and its oversight of judges be allowed to make private donations to benefit the Commission’s budget.
- Minimum Salary Requirements. The bill draft’s proposed §§ 103(3)(e), 103(3)(f), and 104(2)(b) provide that Commission employees’ salaries cannot be reduced and the establishment of minimum starting salaries. However, this may not be feasible in cases of budget downturns, revenue reductions and budget cuts, state employee furloughs, etc. But budget downturns may require reduction.

- Information Sharing and Confidentiality. The bill draft seems to give the Commission authority to determine which claims of privilege or confidentiality are “valid.” See Proposed §§ 109(1), 113(5)(c). This determination should involve the entity or person claiming the privilege or subject to the confidentiality restriction.
- Privilege and Confidentiality Waiver. The bill draft’s proposed § 113(5) would require the Judicial Department to divulge to the Commission privileged information and information that is confidential by contract. Disclosure of privileged information to the Commission could constitute a waiver of the privilege, particularly under federal case law in which federal courts are not necessarily bound by contrary state statutes on issues of waiver. Similarly, the Judicial Department is bound by agreements it has entered into in the past. The language of the bill draft may require the Judicial Department to violate those agreements, creating potential financial liability to the State. For example, if an agreement states that it cannot be disclosed to a third party “absent a valid subpoena or court order,” this provision seemingly requires the Judicial Department to violate that agreement.
- Administrative Support. The bill draft’s proposed § 104(3) requires the Judicial Department to provide administrative support for the Commission. This runs counter to the bill draft’s stated goals by permitting operational influence over the Commission. For example, under proposed § 113(5)(b)(IV), stating the Judicial Department shall not use its authority to access confidential internal digital files or communications of the Commission, the Judicial Department’s level of support and approval or disapproval of Commission actions could be viewed as interfering with the Commission’s operations.
- Fiscal Note/Resource Limitations. The bill draft requires a report and documentation from the Judicial Department for every complaint of judicial misconduct. See Proposed § 113. The Judicial Department receives thousands of complaints every year from litigants, and current practice is to refer these persons directly to the Commission. If the Judicial Department must document every complaint, gather relevant information and witnesses, and refer that to the Commission, the Department will have a significant increase in workload, which will necessarily have a fiscal impact and require additional resources by the Judicial Department.
- Requirement that All Allegations be Forwarded to the Commission. Furthermore, the requirement contained in proposed § 113(2) that all allegations, however meritless, receive a detailed evaluation will create significant costs and burdens on the Commission. This is also likely to lead to unintended outcome of empowering organized efforts to create the appearance of a misconduct when no factual basis exists for such an allegation. Requiring such a process for every complaint, without any threshold or consequence for filing unfounded claims, is likely to result of harassment of judges, particularly those assigned high-profile cases with significant public interest.
- Open Records. The bill draft contains no clear applications to or exemptions from state open records laws, particularly the Colorado Open Records Act, for Commission records and documents.

Colorado Senate Judiciary Committee—

April 14, 2022 Hearing on SB 22-201

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 Welcome back to the Senate Judiciary Committee. Our last bill that we will be taking under 3 consideration today is Senate Bill 201. And I am excited. Maybe excited is not the right word. But I'm 4 glad that we're having this conversation regarding the bill concerning independent oversight of matters
5 concerning judicial discipline. We are joined by our co-prime sponsors, Senator Lee and Senator 6 Gardner, and who would like to begin? Senator Gardner.

7

8 Sen. Gardner

9 Thank you, Madam Chair. This bill concerns the independent oversight of the judicial discipline process 10 and I will not review all the history of how we got here. I simply will say that Section 23 (3) of Article 11 VI of the State Constitution establishes a Commission on Judicial Discipline with an intent that it be 12 largely independent. That has over the past year become a question of the independence of the 13 Commission, vis-a-vis the Judicial Department because of matters of finance and information sharing, 14 how the handling of complaints should be done and so forth. This bill seeks to address those issues, add 15 some clarity to them. But I must say as we legislate at anytime concerning the Judiciary we always meet 16 the challenge of what is our authority as a General Assembly, a different branch of government. Again, 17 vis-a-vis the Judicial Branch and its independence. We can say what the law is by passing bills that the 18 other Branch on the first-floor signs into law. And then the Court implements those through its decisions 19 consistent with the writing of the laws, and sometimes when we disagree with them we, we say no, that 20 wasn't it, and we rewrite the law. But that's all a very clear thing. This bill begins to create some 21 divisions between the Judicial Department, the Supreme Court, and the Commission on Judicial 22 Discipline. And I must say, as a co-prime sponsor, this must be one of well over 100 bills, I've been a 23 co-prime sponsor on, I've never quite experienced the feeling that I have about this bill and its current 24 state, it is absolutely necessary that we deal with this issue. Necessary that we deal with it responsibly.
25 As you will see, as we proceed, I am not convinced that the formulation we have in front of us is the 26 right bill, it does address the right issues. But the way in which it addresses them is something that at the 27 moment, I'm not entirely in agreement with. As many of you have met with members of the Judicial 28 Branch, and the Commission on Judicial Discipline, and contrary to what might be said in the paper, all 29 of my communications and all of their communications with me have been totally appropriate. I have 30 agreed with both the Commission on Judicial Discipline and with the Court and have disagreed with 31 them as well. I find us as a General Assembly, serving in something of a role of what we are--the 32 people's representative, to sort through this and find the right balance. Again, I was quite concerned 33 when I picked up, I didn't pick up the paper this morning, I picked up my tablet and read, read the two 34 major daily newspapers of both my community and out of Denver and was distressed because there 35 seemed to be a tenor of the articles there that somehow this bill had led to the Judicial Branch,

1 improperly lobbying us or something like that. That just has not been the case. I want to be very clear, 2 with the press that is listening here. That certainly is not, in my view been the case, nor has anything 3 about it, in my view, been out of line or inappropriate for a branch of government and an independent 4 commission of the government to communicate with me as a legislator about the legislation that I'm 5 considering, that I'm sponsoring, and how it's to be done. We as elected state Senators, and over in the 6 other chamber, state Representatives, have an independent charter from our constituents to do what we 7 are doing. And we should not feel that anyone who approaches us from any other branch of government 8 is doing anything other than advocating for a position of what they believe is best, given their 9 constitutional duties and responsibilities. And I guess that brings me to what I think is the challenge of 10 this bill, and it is for us to navigate and find an accommodation between an independent commission and 11 another complete branch of our government, and what their respective roles are with respect to 12 accountability and transparency to the people of Colorado. I think there's a lot to be said about that.
13 We're going to hear a lot more about it. And at the end of it all, there are certainly amendments that 14 focus on each and every one of these issues. My hope is that this is an ongoing conversation and 15 process. Today being the beginning of that process and not the end of the discussion at all. So thank you, 16 Madam Chair, and I'll leave it there, rather than talk for another two hours about what is a very complex 17 topic. Thank you.

18

19 Sen. Gonzales

20 Thank you, Senator Gardner. Senator Lee.

21

22 Sen. Lee

23 Thank you, Madam Chair and members of the committee. I've been a lawyer for almost 50 years. My 24 father was a lawyer, my great grandfather was a superior court judge in New York, I come to the issues 25 we address today from a personal and professional standpoint. And I will explain, based on my 26 background, the gravity of the situation that we today encounter, and the overriding importance of 27 Senate Bill 201. To me, the legal profession is an esteemed and noble one exemplified by some of the 28 brightest, most compassionate, caring, and ethical men and women I've ever known. And I've known 29 them all my life. Many are the moral pillars of their community. They sit on nonprofit boards, they 30 volunteer at schools, churches, Rotary Clubs, they're the ones I've seen step up when someone needs to 31 volunteer, or undertake public service for the good of the community. What I have observed is that 32 many times the best of the best aspire to be judges, and I honor them, because I have learned that is 33 absolutely foundational to a democratic republic that we have intellectually gifted, fair, competent, 34 impartial, independent, and trusted judges consisting of the best of the best. The people of our state need 35 to believe that our judges are above reproach, committed to the highest standards of moral conduct, that 36 they are honest, trustworthy, and fair. But I'm also a realist, and know that the ideal and the real will 37 often diverge. I know that people are imperfect, and that sometimes, impropriety and even corruption 38 occurs. When it does, and particularly when misdeeds go unaddressed, or are covered up, confidence in 39 the legal system itself is undermined. When that occurs, we are no better than a tribal fiefdom run by 40 despotic leaders who ignore the rule of law. If there is a belief that justice can be bought, that the scales

1 of justice can be tipped, that money, influence and power trump justice, that we are a nation of men, not 2 laws, then our democracy at its core is threatened. This bill is prompted by the judicial misconduct
3 scandals that have plagued our state for almost three years. There have been allegations of illegal 4 activity, possible payoffs, and a cover up at the highest level of our judiciary. We do not know as a 5 factual matter what has taken place in the courthouses across our state. We don't know because the 6 institution charged with addressing the misconduct, the Commission on Judicial Discipline, has been 7 marginalized, ignored, and rendered powerless. That institution established in Article VI section 23 of 8 the Constitution does not have the requisite independence or resources to perform its constitutional 9 duties. The allegations, and they are only that, that there are some judges who engaged in improper, 10 unethical, immoral conduct, engaged in sex harassment, sex discrimination, and biased treatment of staff 11 and the public of buying silence about misdeeds. If this misconduct, as alleged and reported in the media 12 occurred, and they are not held to account, then we as a people, the public will lose faith in the 13 institution of the judiciary. If there was no one to look at judicial misconduct, then the judiciary, that 14 noble institution that I've revered all of my life, will be discredited in Colorado. The public will not have 15 faith in a system in which those charged with assessing misconduct of judges are overseen by judges, 16 where judges screen all complaints against judges and select which complaints move forward for 17 investigation. If the judges control the budget, the rules, the appeals, and the outcome, the system is at 18 best suspect, and at worst, fundamentally flawed. So why this bill and why is it needed at this time? I 19 will address both of those issues. But lest we get sidetracked by peripheral issues. please indulge me for 20 a moment as I read you some of the headlines and media stories, which have appeared over the last two 21 and a half years. Understand that these are only media reports, not proven allegations. They have not 22 been subjected to the standards of proof required in court. But there has been a slow and persistent flow 23 of sordid revelations. And there has been no response from the legislature, no response from the 24 Commission on Judicial Discipline, no resolution, and significantly not even investigation by the 25 Commission on Judicial Discipline, the agency charged with doing so. The stories referred to what was 26 called the Masias Memo, a list of complaints about Judicial Department misconduct kept by a high-level 27 employee, Mindy Masias, who was fired and then awarded a $2.5 million contract, allegedly, and I 28 admit as allegedly to buy her silence to train Judicial Department employees. It was never turned over to 29 the Commission on Judicial Discipline.

30
31 Some of the headlines that have appeared in the newspapers over the past two and a half years: "Macias 32 Memo Outlined How the Judicial Department has Created a Culture of Misogyny and Harassment."
33 Two, the memo describes the destruction of evidence at the order of a Chief Judge ignoring allegations 34 that two district court judges, each later named chief of their judicial district had circulated pornographic 35 videos via the department's email system, paying a Court of Appeals law clerk who accused a judge of 36 harassment and a judge who bared his chest and rubbed it on the back of a female employee. That was 37 reported by Migoya and the Denver Post on February 13. Three, "Letters Show Supreme Court Stalled 38 Discipline Commission Scandal Investigation: Supreme Court Threw Up Roadblock After Roadblock at 39 the Efforts to Investigate the Scandal." Despite and I'm quoting the headline, "Despite Boatright's Public 40 Assurances of Transparency and Cooperation: The Letters Portray a Broader Showdown." Four, "State

1 Auditor refers Four People Tied to the Scandal for Criminal Investigation." Five, "Eight Months Later, 2 Still No Action on Promised Investigation, Panel picked in August." Six, "CCJD Launches Inquiry Into 3 Misconduct Allegations: Investigation is Fourth Following Allegations of Quid Pro Quo Contract to 4 Silence Tell All Lawsuit." Seven, Masias Memo was read to then Supreme Court Chief Justice Nathan 5 Ben Coats describing dozens of incidents of misconduct that reached all the way to the State's Court of 6 Appeals and Supreme Court that Masias was prepared to reveal in a lawsuit. Eight, "Colorado Judicial 7 Department Ran Internal Ruse to Keep a Lid on $2.5 Million Contract Allegedly Awarded to Possibly 8 Silence Complaints of Judges Engaged in Sex Harassment," Denver Post July 18 of 2021. Nine, "The 9 Office of Judicial Discipline Reviewed Its Records for Five Years and Has Not Identified Any Referrals
10 From the State Court Administrator's Office or the Office of the Chief Justice That Match the Memo 11 Details." I want to take a moment and commend David Migoya, the reporter for The Denver Post for his 12 intrepid pursuit of facts and truth. The importance of the press to a democracy cannot be under 13 emphasized. He demonstrates the perseverance necessary to keep the spotlight on this issue, while 14 government was ignoring it or attempting to hide it.

15
16 At this point, there are six investigations of these claims by the FBI, the State Auditor, the Office of 17 Attorney Regulation Counsel, the Commission on Judicial Discipline, and two by lawyers and private 18 investigative firms selected by a joint legislative executive committee hired by and responsible to the 19 judicial branch. I recite this litany to keep the focus on the main issue. Some who oppose this bill are 20 engaged in a campaign to deny it, to undercut it, or to defeat it--the bill. To those, I say we have waited 21 three years and the time to act is now. Opponents will claim that the bill is unconstitutional and violates 22 separation of powers principles. To them. I respond that the bill was drafted and reviewed by 23 experienced and competent staff at the Office of Legislative Legal Services, who have written thousands 24 of bills. They know the issues, and they don't write unconstitutional laws. Opponents will say that 25 investigations are underway and let's await the results. To them. I say we have waited over two years 26 and it's time to act. When recommendations from the investigations are suggested, we can include them 27 in bills coming from the interim legislative committee that this bill sets up or any other bills that are 28 appropriate. Opponents will argue that we should not do something this session, because there's not 29 enough time. They say we need more stakeholder engagement. To them, I say we have the responsibility 30 to begin the discussion of this issue in this deliberative body of the Senate. We need to invite the public 31 to express their views. We also need to hear from the lawyers, the bar associations, the specialty bars, 32 the judges, and let them express their views on this issue right now. As a former defense attorney and 33 present litigator, I recognize these arguments for what they are, I am committed to having a bill to begin 34 to address this scandal that has undermined public confidence in our judicial system.

35
36 This bill is a modest one to address the basic issues. First, it sets up the Commission on Judicial 37 Discipline with independent funding from the general fund, rather than through the Supreme Court. I 38 think we can all agree on that one. We will hear testimony that when the Commission on Judicial 39 Discipline sought funds to investigate the complaints of judicial misconduct, they were denied funding 40 for investigators by the Judicial Department. The Commission needs to have its own funding. The 1 Commission was established under Article VI, section 23. This bill implements the Constitution. It is 2 entitled concerning independent oversight of matters concerning judicial discipline. We have a 3 legislative declaration describing the necessity of the bill. We have a section two that sets up a new 4 article 5.3 to address judicial discipline. Section 102 is definitions and establishes the Office/the 5 Commission within the Department of the Judiciary, and it describes the duty of the 10-person 6 Commission of six lawyers and four non lawyers also gives it the power to hire Special Counsel, 7 approve a budget, and grant Commissioners immunity. Section 103 establishes the Office of Judicial 8 Discipline as an independent office within the judicial department. It authorizes the commission to 9 appoint an executive director of the office and sets the duties. It authorizes the commission to appoint 10 and determine the responsibilities of Special Counsel and it gives the commission immunity. It requires 11 the judicial department to continue to provide space in the Ralph Carr Building to the Commission and 12 the Office and to provide accounting, IT, payroll, and HR services for the small two-to-four-person 13 office. Section 104 provides that the budget comes from the General Assembly, not from lawyer 14 registration fees. Section 105 is information sharing with judicial oversight entities, the Office of 15 Attorney Regulation Counsel, the Office of Judicial Performance, the nominating commissions, and the 16 Presiding Disciplinary Judge, while respecting confidentiality. Section 106 is information sharing within 17 the Judicial Department. If anyone in the branch receives information about potential misconduct, they 18 document it, they keep records of it, and within 35 days, share it with the Commission and notify the 19 complainant about non retaliation. And they're required to notify them of the availability of the 20 Commission. It requires the branch to send information to the Commission within 35 days, and it 21 prohibits the branch from withholding based on confidentiality or privilege in order to give the judicial 22 department power to fulfill its stated goal of providing unfettered access to all information and it adds a 23 no waiver privilege or confidentiality provision, and it provides public comment for all rules proposed.

24 Section 107 Is the rulemaking provision that the Supreme Court who is responsible for making rules will 25 give notice to the public and the Commission about rulemaking and meet to discuss any objections to 26 any rules. Section 108 is SMART Act reporting. Section 109 sets up a legislative interim committee 27 with eight members two from the majority and two from the minority from each House empowered to 28 introduce three bills and resolution, the Committee will have open hearings, duly noticed and will invite 29 participation by the public, by attorneys by judges, by bars, specialty bars and anyone else. Section three 30 provides for fraud hotline, disclosures to the state auditor of materials, or information pursuant to this 31 section does not violate or waive any otherwise valid claim of privilege. The final section provides for a 32 cash fund. So that's the essence of the bill and the reasons for the bill. And we're prepared to answer any 33 questions or listen to witnesses.

34

35 Sen. Gonzales

36 I want to thank you both for bringing forward this bill for consideration. I acknowledge that there has 37 been a tremendous amount of work that has gone into the drafting of this bill. And to Mr. Berry, the bill 38 drafter, our respect and commendation. I also recognize that even here today, there will be a lot of 39 discussion, and a lot of questions. And this is not going to be I think, a process where we run through 40 amendments and just yes, no. Okay, next, yes, no. Okay, next. We'll have a lot of discussion about each

1 and every amendment, about each and every witness. Hopefully, not each and every word of this bill.
2 But we'll have a lot of discussion today. And so I want to thank you both for bringing forward this 3 policy. Senator Gardner, you acknowledge that even this bill of what your name is a co-prime sponsor, 4 you still think that it's not perfect. I respect that. And I think that part of this process, this iterative 5 legislative process is for us to strive to get it right. And so I want to just kind of open that. And I also 6 want to acknowledge Senator Lee. The fourth estate, right, the importance of the media, in holding 7 institutions to account. All of us, us included. Certainly, the executive branch and also the legislative 8 branch and, and also the judicial branch. We have a number of individuals who have signed up to 9 testify. But before we get to that, I'd like to see if there are any questions for our bill sponsors before we 10 begin the testimony portion of this hearing. Seeing none, I want to bring forward Chief Justice Brian 11 Boatright.

12

13 Sen. Gonzales

14 Please. Chief Justice, welcome to Senate Judiciary Committee. I'll say this for everyone. And there is a, 15 if you're here participating in person, there is at the in front of the seat, there is a little microphone with a 16 cord and a little it'll be red, if it's turned off, it'll go green. If your microphone is turned on, we want to 17 make sure that everyone participating is able to hear us. And so with that, I'll invite every witness who 18 wishes to share their perspectives on this policy to state their name and the organization that they 19 represent and then proceed to testimony. We generally invite our participants here in the Senate 20 Judiciary Committee to share their perspectives for about three minutes. and given precedent from 21 earlier today. We won't turn on the beep, Senator Cooke. Upon conclusion of the testimony from all of 22 our witnesses we will then open up each witness to questions from members of the committee. And with 23 that, Chief Justice Boatright, thank you so much for joining us here to discuss Senate Bill 201, please.
24 But first, let's turn on your microphone. There's a little red. There's a little button. There you go.

25

26 Chief Justice Boatright

27 Okay. All right. Thank you. Thank you, Madam Vice Chair, I want to start out. I know, time is limited. I 28 want to thank Senator Lee and Senator Gardner for bringing forth this bill, we are here in an amend 29 position. We do not oppose the bill.

30

31 I want to state from the beginning that one of the primary components that we hope goes forward in the 32 bill is full funding for judicial discipline. I will say very candidly, that I don't know that the bill goes far 33 enough in terms of full funding, we would ask that not only are they funded for the things that they have 34 in the bill, but we'd also ask that they be funded for the administrative services that we are required to 35 provide as a result of the bill. And for the simple reason that at some point, it makes us say no, and that 36 appearance, is inappropriate. I don't know how we can provide IT. For example, without looking at 37 computers, I don't know how we can provide finance without looking at bills. And I think that the 38 independence of the judicial discipline commission is greater than all of that. So, I would ask for 39 funding to extend past that.

1 The other amendments that I would ask that we have, and I think that the primary one has to do with the 2 reporting requirement. When I looked at the, the requirements in 13 . . . Now that we have human 3 interaction, I am getting over my cold. Thank you, Senator. One of my concerns is that the reporting 4 requirements are going to be very difficult for us to comply with, it's going to require a tremendous 5 amount of manpower. And what I mean by that is, I think that what this does is it doesn't take into 6 account that we have external complaints. And we have internal complaints. And I think the mechanism 7 laid out in 13-5.3-106, with regard to internal complaints is excellent, because we already have a HR 8 Department that can do reporting and documentation and evidence gathering, and things like that.
9 Externally, unfortunately, in our business, we make a lot of decisions that make people upset. You 10 know, we're terminating parental rights, we're deciding where kids live, we decide who goes to prison, 11 we decide who doesn't. And I once told somebody, when I started, they said, you're gonna make it, 12 you're gonna make 50% of people mad every time you make a decision. And after a year, I told them, 13 they were wrong. And they said, What do you mean, I said, at least 50% of the people are upset at the 14 decisions that we make. So as a result, we get a lot of complaints, we get a lot of complaints now that 15 I'm Chief Justice, that you know, so and so on my domestic case was in cahoots and different things like 16 that. What we have traditionally done, and what we would ask the bill to do is for us to just for those 17 complaints on give the number, the email address for judicial discipline, but to go back and ask for staff 18 in four corners of the state, because it does say any member of the department, to document, to gather 19 witnesses, to get transcripts, and things like that, I think would be tremendously difficult. We're not 20 against the reporting requirement. We just think that needs to be broken out into two different things.

21
22 The other area that I would like to briefly discuss, and I think I understand the practical considerations, 23 is we completely support the interim committee, and that's what we've been asking for since the very 24 beginning. You know, the initial bill did not provide for that draft of the bill and we are completely in 25 support of that. You know, I stood in front of the Joint House and Senate and professed that we want to 26 have accountability. And I still stand by that, I get that this is going to be my legacy. And I want to get 27 this right. What I want to do, though, is I want any decisions that we make with regard to reform, to be 28 transparent, inclusive, and thorough. You know, what I want to make sure of is that we get the results of 29 these investigations. And Senator Lee and Senator Gardner, you were on the panel that helped select the 30 investigators, you know, these are truly independent investigators that are going to come forward with 31 findings and recommendations. And I committed to making the results of that public and I still will do 32 that. And we will address any wrongdoing. And I think this interim committee is an excellent way of 33 going about it. Obviously, I would like to see the Committee be a little more inclusive in terms of having 34 some judges, some members of the Bar, the affinity bars, certainly the Women's Bar on there, I also get 35 how big can a committee be, but you know that that is primarily a concern that I would like to see 36 amended, but I think my time is up. And I think those are the primary considerations that I have.

37
38 Sen. Gonzales

39 Thank you, Chief Justice, for your remarks. And I see a number of questions. So, I'll start with Senator 40 Gardner.

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Thank you, Chief Justice, I think I'll ask a leading question. Are there other concerns you have and what 3 might they be?

4

5 Sen. Gonzales

6 Chief Justice.

7

8 Chief Justice Boatright

9 Thank you. Sorry. I have them laid out in the written testimony that I've provided to all of the 10 legislators. So in the interest of time, you know, I will, I'll defer to that. Yeah, I mean, I think the one 11 other area that I did not touch on, is the document production should be done in a responsible manner, 12 that doesn't expose the state to financial liability. And I think that's been at the core of some of the 13 difficulties that we've had in terms of information sharing. We actually, under the current MOU are only 14 supposed to provide records from HR investigations. And we're willing to go above and beyond that, if 15 certain agreements can be reached, we just want to make sure that we're not exposing the State and the 16 Department to financial liability. It's called an access agreement. And I can go into more detail about 17 that. And then the other. The other thing is, I think provisions in the legislative declaration are 18 unnecessarily provocative, but I understand that that's beyond our control.

19

20 Sen. Gonzales

21 Senator Gardner.

22

23 Sen. Gardner

24 Thank you. And if I may, dialogue a bit with the Chief Justice Madam Chair, I'd appreciate it.

25

26 Sen. Gonzales

27 Certainly.

28

29 Sen. Gardner

30 Chief Justice, my co-sponsor, went through a litany of newspaper headlines and while emphasizing that 31 these are only allegations and not proven, then made a very persuasive argument about the implication 32 being the unhandled misconduct within the Judicial Department. And I take issue with that. I hoped we 33 would avoid that, but apparently not. I just I know you would be somewhat reticent. But could you 34 respond to some of that, please. I heard your commitment at the last State of Judiciary, and you and I've 35 had many conversations and I know there is a commitment. We haven't always seen eye to eye about 36 what it's going to take. But those have been good faith, disagreements between two branches of 37 government more than even two people. And I just wonder if you want to take a moment to give your 38 view of where we are and what your commitment has been and how we're getting there in the face of a 39 bunch of headlines that have been repeated here today.

40

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 Please feel free to dialogue. Thank you.

3

4 Chief Justice Boatright

5 Thank you for that question, Senator. Yeah, this has been really difficult for the Branch to just sit there 6 and take, you know, hit after hit with regard to the headlines. But what I would say is we have 7 confidence in the investigations. And the reality is, I think, as Senator Lee pointed out, there are 8 currently six investigations that are ongoing. I think that this meeting that took place is going to be the 9 most thoroughly investigated meeting in the history of the Judiciary. And I'm confident that the 10 investigators from the FBI on through judicial discipline will be able to sort through and necessarily find 11 what happened. When I stood before the legislature in February of last year. I will confess, I truly had no 12 idea what the allegations, what the truth of any of the allegations were. We have had an entire turnover 13 of our leadership in the State Court Administrator's Office with the exception of a probation supervisor 14 and our IT director, but our entire HR department, our leadership team left and so we were left with 15 really not knowing what any of those allegations were. And if you recall, in the audit, our HR record 16 keeping was taken to task and rightfully so. It was abysmal. And, so, we've been trying to piece together 17 and provide whatever documentation we can to the investigators, and we have provided certain 18 documentation to judicial discipline with regard to those investigations. You know, for example, one of 19 them was a claim of racial discrimination against two justices that now was litigated in federal court and 20 dismissed by summary judgment by a federal magistrate judge. So, you know, these things have been 21 playing out. One of the allegations, the allegation that Senator Pete Lee brings up about the hairy chest 22 judge, I assume that was a contemporaneous thing. We found out that that happened in the late 2000s, 23 either 2006 or 2008. And that matter was, in fact, sent to judicial discipline. So, you know, the premise 24 of the memo is that these things were investigated and then have not been properly turned over to 25 judicial discipline. And what I am saying is, let's allow the private investigations to come forward. Let's 26 see what the results are. And then let's decide what the problems are. And we can move forward from 27 there. Thank you for the question.

28

29 Sen. Gardner

30 Chief Justice, I think, historically, because of the way that we have dealt with judicial discipline in 31 Colorado, which is not unlike other states, there are different models. But how much of that is public 32 and not? I've heard for years, and I've been a lawyer for over 40 years, and I still actively practice in the 33 courts of Colorado. So, I have a lot at stake in the integrity of the system, as I take my clients there.
34 There isn't a lot of public information about what actions might be taken in response to a complaint 35 about judges. And as you say, we even as legislators get complaints about judges and I read them and I 36 refer them to your department. Many of them, I frankly think I don't know enough when I read them to 37 know, was the judge right or wrong, but they have to do with a legal ruling, not misconduct.
38 Nevertheless, we refer them and tend to say to people, there is a Commission on Judicial Discipline, if 39 you believe that this was misconduct. But I think the public doesn't see a lot of what happens. Do you 40 think you've been a trial judge? Is that right?

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Correct.

3

4 Sen. Gardner

5 And now on the Supreme Court? Do you think that the system for judicial discipline works yourself? Or 6 is it overly protective of judges, and I know you to be candid, so please be so.

7

8 Chief Justice Boatright

9 I, from everything that I am aware of, I think judicial discipline works. And what I can tell you is, as a 10 trial judge, you really don't hear much about what's happening unless it would happen to be one of your 11 peers, and I was lucky enough not to have that happen. Or at least one that was made public, but as a 12 Justice, what I can say is we have had and I'd have to count him but five or six public matters that have 13 come to the Supreme Court and the judicial discipline makes a recommendation. And only one time 14 have we not accepted the recommendation. And quite frankly, it was because it wasn't severe enough, 15 they were recommending a payout to a judge, and then their resignation. And we said we wouldn't agree 16 to a payout. And then it went back to judicial discipline, they were able to work something out. And then 17 we accepted the recommendations. So in terms of, you know, judicial discipline doing their job, I don't 18 have any belief that they are not performing their duties to the best of their ability. I know that there 19 have been. I've looked at their website, and I know they had in 2020, they had almost 200 requests for 20 evaluations and I know that a number of them may have turned into private admonitions. I know, the 21 vast majority of them were what you had alluded to which were complaints about a decision, which 22 really isn't the purview of judicial discipline. But from what I know, I don't think the system is broken.
23 But with that said, I want to emphasize something. I am completely supportive of looking at any reforms 24 that would make the system better. And for example, one area that I think we could make better is we 25 need to make any type of reporting or discipline, much more victim centric. Victims need to be 26 consulted about what necessarily happens. When this all happened, we checked with, we actually 27 received a reach out from the 10th Circuit Chief Judge Tymkovich. And they talked about what they 28 learned when they went through some problems. And they created an Office for Judicial Integrity, 29 where, where complaints were referred, and then that office could then work with victims and try to 30 reach some type of an accommodation. Sometimes, a victim may or may not want something referred 31 where a judge could lose his or her job, it may just be that they want the conduct to stop. I mean, it could 32 be everything from you're not giving a staff member sufficient time to pump if they've, you know, 33 recently had a baby to just mispronunciation of a name or not recognizing gender pronouns correctly, 34 maybe they just want correction. So, I think the system has worked. I've not seen flaws in the system.
35 But can it be improved? Absolutely. And we support that.

36

37 Sen. Gardner

38 I've heard you say, and if I get this wrong, please correct me. But I've heard you say that you would like 39 for the Court, the Branch itself to get out of the complaint and discipline business? Is that pretty 40 accurate?

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Yes, it is. Even before all of this happened, Chief Justice Coats had opened up the discussion with the 3 former Executive Director Bill Campbell about doing just that. Because if you look at what the premise 4 of the memo is, is that the HR department investigated things, potentially found misconduct and then did 5 not turn it over to judicial discipline. And we would like to extricate us from doing any of that 6 investigation. Now, I know, in this statute, it has that in there, where we have to document and do 7 certain things. I mean, what I would prefer to do, if we have an internal complaint, is our HR department 8 absolutely has to do an initial investigation, because we need to make sure a victim is safe, and then turn 9 it over to judicial discipline for the investigation. The HR department shouldn't be involved in any type 10 of fact finding or gathering just because of the danger of the premise of what was alleged in that memo.
11 You know, again, the key thing is, is that that memo, accuses the Branch of investigating things and not 12 turning it over. And we would like to have the investigations appropriately handled by judicial 13 discipline. It's not part of this bill. But if I had a wish list that would be on it.

14
15 Sen. Gardner

16 I've had this discussion with some colleagues about the bill. You say, well, we want to be out of the 17 business in in some ways the bill takes the branch out of the business of dealing with complaints, but 18 then there's this huge information sharing component and on the one hand the answer or kind of the 19 response to the judicial branch position is, well, they're out of the business, and they need to package all 20 of this up. But what is your concern with that? And what's the difficulty with that?

21
22 Chief Justice Boatright

23 I think anytime that we are involved in the information gathering, there is the danger that it looks like we 24 tampered with it. And, so, what we would like to do is just make sure that whomever is the reporting 25 party is safe, and then allow judicial discipline to conduct the investigation. I mean, the longer that, in 26 the bill, it says, identification of potential witnesses. Well, there's the danger that we identified 27 somebody and didn't turn them over. A list of any evidence held or known. Maybe we identify, I mean, 28 it just could be the accusation. And, you know, part of the thing why we support fully support financial 29 independence, for judicial discipline, is not only for the functionality, but for the appearance. And so 30 having us taken out of the investigative process, I think only improves the appearance of that.

31
32 Sen. Gardner

33 Now, you make a distinction, I think, between internal compliance, and external, if you will, 34 compliance. And it seems to me that there are these two categories. And by the way, the things that have 35 made so much of the headlines seem to have been of the internal nature, that is employment law kinds of 36 issues, quite frankly, and I remind my colleagues here, we struggled and wrestled with this a few years 37 ago as elected officials and how to properly deal with that. So, this isn't unique to the Judicial Branch.
38 But is there in your mind a difference in how to deal with the complaint from a litigant who says I was 39 mistreated by the judge from the bench and he or she made a bad decision and took my kids away from 40 me when my spouse is an abuser. I get these all the time, and I've practiced law for 40 years, so I can

1 come up with that fact pattern pretty quickly. Is there a difference in how those should be dealt with in 2 terms of information sharing? And then what the internal complaint should be done? Yeah, so that 3 distinction.

4

5 Chief Justice Boatright

6 I think absolutely, because number one, we're not talking about the safety of somebody internally, if 7 there was harassment or, or something like that, this is a decision that we can then just refer the person 8 to judicial discipline directly. And, you know, even take out that minimal step of making sure that we 9 have a reporting party internally made safe, and we can just refer that over. And then judicial discipline 10 can conduct the investigation thoroughly, however they deem appropriate. So going back and getting 11 one of those complaints, that complaint comes possibly to the judge's judicial assistant, and then judicial 12 assistant, according to this to the proposed bill has to, at a minimum, identify potential witnesses, list 13 any evidence held or known, access to all evidence, including administrative digital files, you know, 14 notify the person supplying the information, a number of things. If we could just refer that over to 15 judicial discipline, then we are completely out of the investigation business. And just that allegation that 16 the memo thrusts at us of you did something and did nothing about it, we can be removed from and so 17 the appearance part goes back to more confidence in the process. Which, you know, we may have had 18 some disagreements with judicial discipline, but there's no disagreement as to the importance of their 19 mission. They are vital to people having confidence in our judges. It's vital to our merit selection system.
20 So, you know, anything that we can do to improve the public confidence we support.

21

22 Sen. Gardner

23 I guess I would ask in terms of confidentiality, observance of confidentiality. Some of that comes up in 24 the information sharing. What are your concerns about that in the bill as written?

25

26 Chief Justice Boatright

27 Well, particularly the need to give up confidential and privileged information. What I have concerns 28 about is, regardless of whose privilege it is, by giving it to a third party, there's an argument that you 29 have then waived that privilege, regardless of what that third party is going to do with it. I mean, we 30 have in the Constitution, and in the statute, it says that that information shall be confidential. But it still 31 raises an argument that it could constitute a waiver of that privilege. And I am concerned about the 32 wording. It strikes me as being so broad, that even a judge who may be the subject of an investigation, 33 potentially, potentially, although I can't imagine this is the intent would have communications with his 34 or her private lawyer than be made subject to discovery.

35

36 Sen. Gardner

37 Let me ask you something that gets lost here. We talk about, we're talking about judicial misconduct, not 38 potential misconduct of a court clerk or an administrative person in the State Court Administrator's 39 office or your HR person. We're just talking specifically about constitutional judicial officers. How 40 many of those do we have in Colorado?

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Judicial officers?

3

4 Sen. Gardner

5 Yes.

6

7 Chief Justice Boatright

8 Wow, that's a great question. 350, roughly. Okay. Okay, Mr. Vasconcellos said I was right.

9

10 Sen. Gardner

11 So how, yeah it didn't need to be a trick question. But how many judges do we have on any given day?

12 So, I guess I would just observe that when you have 350 people, no matter how carefully chosen, no 13 matter how carefully vetted, and our judges are carefully chosen and carefully vetted. You have those 14 350 people, there are going to be some instances of misconduct. It's unacceptable, but inevitable. And 15 that's why we have a Commission on Judicial Discipline.

16

17 Sen. Gardner

18 It's interesting. And I have pointed this out to colleagues and constituents. Really, I've not heard a single 19 allegation of all of these and everything I've read in the newspaper, I've not heard a single one of these 20 about a judge being offered a bribe to decide a case differently about, somehow a decision being 21 affected by corruption, if you will. I have heard many allegations about. And, again, only allegations 22 about sexual harassment and inappropriate language and dilatory entry of decisions. Do you know of 23 any of these complaints that are about judges taking a bribe or taking a favor or something like that?

24

25 Chief Justice Boatright

26 No, I think the closest that I have been made aware of was when Judge Kamada up in Greeley, who 27 resigned and was criminally prosecuted was reporting information that he had learned from warrants to 28 friends. But I don't think there was any money being exchanged. I think it was a childhood friend. Not 29 that it minimizes anything. But that's probably the closest that I can think of to what you've been 30 referencing.

31

32 Sen. Gardner

33 My point is that, to my colleagues and constituents has been that unlike some states and some judicial 34 departments across the United States, unfortunately, there has been this rampant concern about one 35 litigant receiving a favor because money was paid or you know, or even campaign contributions made, 36 which is perfectly legal in the states in which it occurs, but nevertheless, the issues we're talking about 37 are not that kind of corruption in decisions. What changes have you made to address the things that we 38 have seen reported in the media?

39

40

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Yeah, I mean, first of all, before anything was reported, we had a clean sweep, nearly a clean sweep of 3 all of our leadership at the State Court Administrator's Office. We're now fortunate to have Mr.
4 Vasconcellos as our State Court Administrator, he's been incredibly transparent.

5
6 Number two, we had an audit that was performed on the old leadership. And we were really taken to 7 task on a number of areas, including as I mentioned earlier, our HR records. We have implemented 8 every recommended change that was made.

9 10 The other things that we have done is we've changed the professional rules for judges with regard to 11 making sure that harassment is known as something that can go before judicial discipline, we put in 12 there that retaliation is not accepted as a result of someone being reported. We've made an ease of 13 reporting.

14
15 The other thing, quite frankly, that we have consciously not done, is we tried not to get ahead of the 16 independent investigations. And I know they've taken much longer than any of us had hoped that they 17 would. But I also think that that's going to be a reflection of the thoroughness with which they are doing 18 it. And we know that they're going to make a number of recommendations. You know, because they've 19 asked questions about them. And we're anxious to implement any changes that are made as a result of 20 that.

21
22 And one other thing that I want to say in response to your comment about the bribery and things like that 23 is, I do think that one thing that I would, I'd like to see us examine in the summer group, as I mentioned 24 earlier, is something that is much more victim centric, because one of the things that we need to be very, 25 very conscious of is the power differential between the judges and the clerks and the reporting. And I am 26 very comfortable with regard to, you know, the information that we have with regard to the so-called 27 memo, but the unknown is going to be they serve I surveyed 4,000 employees. And I don't know what's 28 going to come forward in terms of people saying I didn't feel comfortable reporting something. I don't, 29 we don't know. And we'll learn that when that report is made public. So, I think that is also going to 30 teach us some things that we need to do differently. But yeah, I kind of went off on a tangent.

31
32 Sen. Gardner

33 That's fine. Um, I think we've already talked about this but the financial piece of the bill and sort of the 34 independence of operations and so forth is something that there's broad agreement on. But I do think 35 there's a piece of this that you've addressed that the Judicial Department has concerns about, and it's 36 almost as if you're saying the Commission on Judicial Discipline needs to be made independent, and the 37 bill itself maybe doesn't make them as independent as they need to be if we're going to go down that 38 road, and we ought to. Talk to that a little more for us.

39
40

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 As I said, it, it puts us in a position of having to say no, potentially at some point or questioning them 3 with regard to expenditures, if we're doing the finance. We have procurement rules, we have financial 4 rules that they would then need to abide by. And I think that just if we were to run a foul with it, it has 5 an appearance that we're attempting to control. You know, if our IT department isn't able to produce 6 something that is to their liking, it looks like we're exerting some type of control or interference. And we 7 just want to remove any, any appearance of that at all. You know, I think it's difficult because they 8 would be a very small office, but by the same token, they need to be independent, not kind of 9 independent or mostly independent. Our position is we would like them to be completely independent.

10

11 Sen. Gardner

12 It's my sense that part of the reason we're having this discussion today is that they've been independent 13 under the Constitution, but not really as a matter of practice, wholly independent. That seemed like the 14 thing to all of us for I don't know how many years to be. But recent events have shown that that's not 15 independent enough. And part of this bill was to remedy that problem. And you can respond, as you 16 wish.

17

18 Chief Justice Boatright

19 You know, that's exactly right. I mean, we operated under a system for as long as I've been a justice.
20 And I think as long as our senior member Justice Marquez has been a justice, where we paid for the 21 Executive Director through attorney regulation fees, and for a part time administrative assistant, and that 22 any time there was an investigation, then OARC provided the Special Counsel for it. And it worked 23 great until the current situation. And that shows that our current situation is inadequate. And we 24 acknowledge that and even the difficulties that we've had surrounding funding has shown that there are 25 inadequacies in the current funding system. So that's why, you know, we completely support, we're here 26 in an amend position, but we completely support funding them independently. We just want them to be 27 completely funded independently.

28

29 Sen. Gardner

30 Thank you. I think I'll stop there. I appreciate your answering all my questions. And I'm sure colleagues 31 have questions as well. Thank you, sir.

32

33 Sen. Gonzales

34 Thank you, Senator Gardner, Colleagues, any other questions for the Chief Justice? Senator Cooke.

35

36 Sen. Cooke

37 Thank you, Madam Chair. Chief Justice Boatright. Thank you. Appreciate your testimony. It's been 38 informative. And I appreciate your candidness. So, thank you. My background is law enforcement. And 39 I did six years in internal affairs of a rather large law enforcement agency. And, so, I know how law 40 enforcement handles internal and external complaints. And I think Senator Gardner, pretty much asked

1 the question that I wanted to ask, but I want to make sure I understand the external complaints. I think I
2 heard you say that, you would like to just be able to refer the external complaints. And Senator Gardner
3 used the example of, hey, I think this guy, this judge made the wrong decision. And that's what you'd 4 like to refer to the Commission. And I understand that, what if it's a more serious external complaint?
5 Would that be the same process? And then the kind of what do you do now on internal complaints?
6 Would you like to do the same thing with internal complaints? Just send it directly to the Commission?
7 Or would you like to have another step in between before it gets to the Commission?

8

9 Sen. Gonzales

10 Chief Justice Boatright.

11

12 Chief Justice Boatright

13 Thank you. Yes, Senator with regard to the internal complaints, for example, if we had a judge that was 14 accused of harassing or sexually harassing one of our CJA's, I think out of necessity, we would need to 15 have our HR department come in immediately, and be able to remove the CJA and make sure that they 16 are safe, and then turn it over to judicial discipline immediately. So, there's no evidence gathering, 17 there's no witness list, there's no way that we could have interfered with any type of investigation, or 18 there can't be an allegation of that. With regard to the external part. If it's more serious, for example, the 19 example that Senator Gardner gave, if we had a situation where there was an allegation of, and again, 20 I'm not aware of anything, but let's say it's an allegation of a judge taking a bribe. I think that there 21 would be a dual reporting requirement to law enforcement, and then also to judicial discipline. But 22 again, having us come in and do an initial investigation to gather witnesses. There just is always that 23 appearance of did you really turn over all of the witnesses names? Did you really, you know, you've had 24 this now for a week, what, what should we have done? What could we have done a week earlier?

25

26 Sen. Gonzales

27 Senator Cooke.

28

29 Sen. Cooke

30 Thank you, Madam Chair. And thank you for that. So, I'm assuming that it would be very burdensome 31 for your staff. The way the bills written regarding collection of internal I think that's what I heard you 32 say, internal complaints?

33

34 Chief Justice Boatright

35 No, I think that, that. We performed somewhat, if the bill stands as it currently is comprised, our HR 36 department has been doing similar work to this for a long time. That's what I was saying that former 37 Chief Justice Coats before any of this happened, recognized that, that we should try to get out of doing 38 even this preliminary investigation and then turning it over. But that's our HR department can do that. I 39 don't think that that is an onerous burden. It just, it just creates a and sort of an appearance of what 40 haven't we turned over? What evidence didn't we turn over? What witnesses did we disclose? But we're

1 in a position to be able to do that. External complaints would be extremely difficult, because of the 2 volume of those, you know, if we get that call that Senator Gardner talks about and says, hey, this judge, 3 I think, was sleeping with my wife, or whatever it may be. And that's why he gave her the house, you 4 know, under this, we would have to collect. You know, we'd have to document receipt of the complaint, 5 we'd have to provide notification, we'd have to identify witnesses who all testified in the domestic case, 6 list of any evidence held. I mean, do we gather that evidence? It's just, it would be extremely difficult. If 7 you're in law enforcement, then you've dealt with the people that don't recognize the authority of courts 8 and law enforcement, and we get a lot of business.

9
10 Sen. Gonzales

11 Senator Cooke.

12
13 Sen. Lee

14 Okay. Thank you, Madame Chair. Yeah. Okay. That's great. One last question. Isn't that the job of the 15 commission to get all that information? I mean, I'm assuming that's what would be I've never dealt with 16 it. So, I'm assuming that would be their job, to get the witnesses and to then get all the information, and 17 then do their investigation.

18
19 Sen. Gonzales

20 Chief Justice Boatright.

21
22 Chief Justice Boatright

23 Thank you. Yes, I think, again, sort of the iteration before this, that we found to be inaccurate, you 24 know, they just didn't have the manpower to do that. They had an Executive Director and a part time 25 administrative assistant, they then would go to OARC for special counsel. But we have a memorandum 26 of understanding that our HR department would do an investigation, and then turn that information over.
27 And again, I think the bill, as I read, it, sort of puts that into statute. And, again, we can live with that. I 28 just think it would be better practice if we were able to, especially now that they're going to be staffed, 29 hopefully, with this financial independence, that they can then conduct that investigation.

30
31 Sen. Cooke

32 Thank you.

33
34 Sen. Gonzales

35 Thank you. Further questions from members of the committee? Senator Lee.

36
37 Sen. Lee

38 Thank you, Madam Chair. You just mentioned the memorandum of understanding between HR and the 39 Judicial Department and the Commission. When Senator Gardner and I were talking about this bill, I 40 referred to that memorandum. And I basically said, we've pretty much in respect, put that memorandum

1 into the bill. I mean, not completely and precisely as it's set forth. But that memorandum has been in 2 effect for 10-15 years. And I didn't see a date on it. But oh, from 2010. Is that working? And do you see 3 shortcomings in that, or is it burdensome? And I guess the third part of that question is, well, answer 4 those if you would.

5

6 Sen. Gonzales

7 Chief Justice Boatright.

8

9 Chief Justice Boatright

10 Thank you. Is it working? Well, the allegations in the in the so-called memo says that it's not. It has 11 allowed an allegation that our HR department went in and investigated things, and then did not properly 12 turn them over to judicial discipline, right. So, what I'm trying to do is avoid that allegation. Because I 13 think we've been able to see the harm that just allegations can make, as you alluded to, in your 14 statement, there has been no finding at this point, that any of these things, any of those allegations in the 15 memorandum were improperly handled. There's been no finding of that. But I will say that the 16 allegations have been as damaging and has made this year, probably the most difficult year for me in my 17 professional life. So, would I like to get out of that? Yes. And I think that if we can identify, procure 18 safety for the alleged victim, turn it over, then those allegations can never be made again.

19

20 Sen. Gonzales

21 Senator Lee.

22

23 Sen. Lee

24 Thank you. Well, that's helpful. And I think, is in addition to that there's a path for resolution of some of 25 these concerns and issues. The concern that I have significantly is that information was not provided to 26 the Commission to do an investigation. I mean, this thing has been going on for a long period of time.
27 And, you know, I'm not being flippant when I say this. All I know is what I read in the newspapers. I 28 mean, I don't know more about the allegations than that. But I what I'm hearing and reading, Justice, is 29 that the information regarding the Masias Memo was not turned over to the Commission so they can 30 conduct an investigation. Was there some flaw in the memorandum of understanding that could be 31 remedied? Or how would we have gotten that information? I mean, look, retrospectively what could 32 have been done differently, to get the information about those allegations to the Commission so that they 33 could do their job?

34

35 Sen. Gonzales

36 Chief Justice Boatright.

37

38 Chief Justice Boatright

39 Thank you, I need to kind of tread lightly around this because proceedings before the Commission 40 should be confidential. But what I will say is that, with the five other investigations, we've been able to

1 reach an agreement with regard to waiver, including your own Auditor. With regard to documents. The 2 memorandum itself provides that investigatory notes and findings shall be turned over. What we're 3 talking about are confidential and privileged documents, that we have sought protection with all of the 4 investigative agencies to have what's called an access agreement to show what they would do with the 5 documents. So that it can't be later argued that by giving them to a third party, we've waived them. So, 6 the memorandum itself is not an access agreement.

7

8 Sen. Lee

9 Right. So, we put some language in the bill, and I'd be hard pressed to pull it up quickly. But there's 10 language in the bill, probably about halfway through it in the area about disclosure, which says that the 11 provision of information to the Commission of privileged and confidential information to the 12 Commission does not waive any protections. And we put that in statutorily, and when you and I met a 13 month ago, we identified that language as well, and pointed to it in that in the first edition of the bill, 14 which you all objected to, in which we changed, but that same provision has been consistently in the 15 bills, would that be satisfactory to you to address the issue?

16

17 Sen. Gonzales

18 Senator Lee, I think you're referring to page 16.

19

20 Sen. Lee

21 I knew it was in that neighborhood

22

23 Sen. Gonzales

24 Lines 7 through I believe 14.

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 That's not quite it. It's on line 60 or page 16, line 26. Through the next page, it says the timely disclosure 28 to the commission of information or materials, pursuant to this section by the department does not by 29 itself waive any otherwise valid claim of privilege or confidentiality by the department. What I 30 understand is the reticence of the judicial department to turn over information was confidentiality and 31 privilege. And that was the repeated retort and response to a request for information. Is that language 32 sufficient to satisfy that?

33

34 Sen. Gonzales

35 Chief Justice Boatright.

36

37 Chief Justice Boatright

38 Well, I'm not an expert in it. I think it would go a long way. I don't object to that language being in there.
39 I think what we're concerned with . . . Can I phone a friend? Justice Marquez is going to be the next 40 Chief Justice.

1 Sen. Gonzales
2 Justice Marquez, welcome.

3
4 Justice Marquez
5 Thank you. Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. Senator Lee, in response to your question. I think the 6 concern is it doesn't go far enough to ensure that disclosure of that type of information to the 7 Commission would not be deemed a waiver, an example would be in an employment discrimination 8 context. If an employee were to claim discrimination by a judge supervisor and raise a discrimination 9 claim, and we were required to turn over all of this privileged information with respect to the 10 Commission, the concern is that that same potential plaintiff who goes to federal court. The federal court 11 is not necessarily bound by this statutory language regarding privilege. That's the concern.

12
13 Sen. Gonzales
14 Senator Lee.

15
16 Sen. Lee
17 And I don't want to get down in the weeds on the minutiae of privilege and confidentiality. But there is 18 the idea that the federal court would be applying Colorado law. Isn't that the general rule? And that this 19 language would be minimally persuasive, and maybe binding on them? I mean, how could they ignore 20 Colorado law?

21
22 Sen. Gonzales
23 Justice Marquez.

24
25 Justice Marquez
26 Thank you, Madam Chair, Senator Lee. It's our understanding that federal courts are in fact not bound 27 by that. That's the concern.

28
29 Sen. Gonzales
30 Senator Lee.

31
32 Sen. Lee
33 So, you know, I guess there needs to be a way to do this. And you have a lot of legal horsepower over 34 there on the Carr Building. Why don't you come up with some language and propose it to us, which 35 would address this issue. We want to protect confidentiality, but we want to empower the Commission 36 to get the information that they need. So there has to be a way to do it. So, can we request, implore you 37 all to help us?

38
39 Sen. Gonzales
40 Justice Marquez.

1 Justice Marquez

2 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair, Senator Lee. In fact, I believe we have proposed language that would 3 address those concerns, or at least address the concern that this drafted language, in fact protects against 4 that waiver.

5

6 Sen. Gonzales

7 Senator Gardner.

8

9 Sen. Gardner

10 Thank you. Thank you, Justice Marquez. Let me just, and you won't have seen this specific amendment, 11 but I was asked to prepare an amendment with some language, asked by the Department about privilege 12 and so forth. Is that the language you're referring to that that would address that the proposed 13 amendment that that Senator Lee is saying, well, all the folks over there in the Carr Building ought to be 14 able to figure this out. And before you answer, let me just say, with regard to the federal court being 15 bound by state law, my head already hurts from 40 years ago from my civil procedure problem and 16 federal courts problem about that. Senator Lee, that's not the case that federal courts tend to do what they 17 wish. But I digress, Justice Marquez, please.

18

20 Justice Marquez.

21

22 Justice Marquez

23 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair, Senator Gardner, in response to your question, the language you refer 24 to. Yes, that is the language.

25

26 Sen. Gonzales

27 Senator Lee.

28

29 Sen. Lee

30 Thank you. What amendment? Senator Gardner?

31

32 Sen. Gardner

33 It would be amendment six, L 006.

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Okay. Thank you.

37

38 Sen. Gonzales

39 Senator Lee.

40

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Madame Chair, Can I supplement?

3

4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Chief Justice Boatright.

6

7 Chief Justice Boatright

8 I think one of the things that we've learned from the Attorney General's Office is that the access 9 agreement that we've been able to enter into with the five other investigations. Well, we've entered into 10 agreements, including the access agreements that have provided, provides more protection, according to 11 their advice, but we would accept the amendment.

12

13 Sen. Gonzales

14 Thank you. Any further questions? I do have I think just one question, and I'm very appreciative of the 15 discussion that we've had here today. This, Senate Bill 201 does establish a legislative interim 16 committee and I looked at the various issues that Senate Bill 201 asks this interim committee to review 17 and study and one stood out, in particular to me and I wanted to ask your thoughts, just given your 18 experiences navigating this question over the past two and a half years. And that's the question that you 19 see, outlined on page 22, lines three through five. The best method of balancing the values of 20 confidentiality and transparency for judicial discipline matters. I think that those values are both 21 important and carry a lot of merit. But I'm curious for your perspectives, given the positions that you 22 hold, what insights you would offer to us as we both struggle with these very questions around who 23 receives what information? When? To whom should a complainant direct a complaint? What is the 24 timeliness for a complaint to be adjudicated? How would you all respond to that question? Chief Justice 25 Boatright.

26

27 Chief Justice Boatright

28 Well, thank you, Madam Chair. That's a great question. You know, I think when we talk about the 29 values of confidentiality and transparency, we are almost we're not only talking about legally, but we're 30 also talking about victims, and, you know, the information that they want to provide, and they feel safe 31 in providing, especially with the disparity in the power. So, I think that that needs to be part of that 32 conversation. I would also say that, you know, we want to be able to balance confidentiality and 33 transparency so that we can get information. I mean, it has been extremely difficult the length of time 34 that this has lingered, and I'd like to see something that is confidential, but yet provides the information 35 necessary for any investigative agency to be able to conduct a thorough investigation on this. And I'll 36 ask Justice Marquez if she has.

37

38 Sen. Gonzales

39 Justice Marquez.

40

1 Justice Marquez

2 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. I echo the Chief Justice's comments about thinking about victims going 3 through this process. I think the overarching goal of this should be to come up with a reporting structure 4 that encourages reporting of complaints. And taking into account the victim's perspective, in that regard 5 is an important part of coming up with that process. I think the federal courts have an interesting model 6 that might be worth drawing from, I think that the investigations are going to offer some 7 recommendations with thoughts along those lines that I hope will be taken into account with any reforms 8 that are considered.

9

10 Sen. Gonzales

11 Thank you. You know, I've listened to the discussion that we've had here thus far. And, you know, I 12 have incredible respect for my colleagues here on this committee who have been members of the bar for 13 about as long as I've been alive, and with all the respect that I can wrap into that. But I come to this as a 14 as a non-attorney, and I come to this as a as a member of the public. Right. And I hear you all, when you 15 say, yes, let us be thoughtful about the victims in this process. What I think is complicated about the 16 situation in which we are all in right now is that we are in a moment in our society and here in our State, 17 where trust in our institutions is crumbling, is eroding. Where whether it's because of. We can go down 18 and have probably have a long conversation about why. But whether we're talking about this building, in 19 trust in government, trust in our elections, trust in the courts. The trust in each other is crumbling. And,
20 so, I do, I really do struggle with right now with this idea of what should be confidential versus bringing 21 things out into the light, and in transparency. And, so, we met about a month ago to talk about this 22 policy. Prior to the bill having been introduced, prior to me being having been able to see the policy that 23 was being drafted. And the meeting was the meeting, I had a conversation with both of the bill sponsors, 24 to let them know that we'd spoken. And that was that. And two days ago, a reporter asked me questions 25 about this. And they said, yeah and here was our conversation. And here's what we discussed, and here's, 26 you know, my answer to the questions. I find myself in this fascinating position where we are trying to 27 set forth as we come out of some really complicated and trying times, that have really shaken the 28 public's trust in this institution. We're trying to find a path forward. I'm appreciative that you all have 29 suggested language. I'm appreciative that we're here today, talking about this bill, and how best to make 30 it something that we can all be proud of. Because this is what we've got to do. We've got to figure this 31 out. So that when somebody comes to the court and feels like they got a raw deal, again with deference 32 to both of my colleagues who practice before the courts, where it's another, roll your eyes and oh okay, 33 you've got a complaint, all right. That you can say no, okay, if you've got a complaint, here's where to 34 go. That everybody who comes to have their day in court is able to feel respected, that everybody who 35 works within the court is able to be proud of their work. And, so, I'm appreciative of the fact that you 36 both are here today that you've offered both written comments and that you've offered these. Your 37 comments, and with that we've been able to just talk it through. I just want to see if there's anything else 38 that you think it's important for us to know, as we debate the merits of the Senate Bill 201. Chief Justice 39 Boatright.

40

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Thank you. Really well said and what I would say is, and Justice Marquez isn't here just because she's 3 way smarter and knows all that stuff. But it's to show a commitment that she's gonna be the next Chief in 4 a year or two. And this is a lasting commitment by our court, that we are going to move forward. What I 5 would say is, I think when we met, we had a real fear that something fast was going to happen. And I 6 think you hit the nail on the head in the sense that these are really complicated issues. And I think that 7 the interim summer group, is going to be an excellent way to sort through a number of these things, not 8 only from our perspective and your perspective, but you know, when we heard about all of this 9 happening, we got the bar associations, the diversity bar associations, our consumers to come forward.
10 And I think if there are people who are identified as victims, they should be able to come forward and 11 talk about, you know, different issues with regard to this. So, I think when we met, it was a very 12 different bill. I think Senator Lee acknowledged that there's been substantial rewrites since the time we 13 chatted and, and I appreciate you taking the time. But I think that the Interim Summer Study is exactly 14 what's needed. Because we need to be very deliberative. I use these words, we need to be transparent.
15 We need to be inclusive. And we need to be deliberative about how we do this. Because it isn't just 16 something that we can change a word here or two, and have an easy answer. Because you're right, this is 17 bigger than all of us in terms of what our integrity is and the people's confidence in the system. And, so, 18 I think, just having a summer study group where it is open, and people can come in and express their 19 views, and then we can look at it and, you know, if there are ways that we can improve this, we are, 20 despite the headlines, we do embrace constructive reform as we go forward. And I think there are ways 21 to improve.

22

23 Sen. Gonzales

24 I do just want to. I'll go to Senator Cooke, and then come back to this. Thank you, Senator Cooke.

25

26 Sen. Cooke

27 Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to get Justice Marquez's kind of perspective on having staff document 28 and report complaints from the public. Your perspective, kind of what I asked the Chief Justice. I want 29 to get your perspective on that.

30

31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Justice Marquez.

33

34 Justice Marquez

35 Thank you, Madam Chair, Senator Cooke. As the Chief Justice began, I think he was drawing 36 distinctions between these external complaints and internal complaints. Our main concern with the bill 37 as drafted is the burden that it would cause for staff with respect to the external complaints. And here's 38 an example, a long email that comes to a Chief Judge in a District complaining about all the things that 39 went sideways in a case, and buried in that long email is magic words that say, and my judge was 40 biased. The rest of it probably on its face looks like an example of a complaint that you and Senator

1 Gardner have often seen. But, because it contains a reference to alleged bias by a judge, it would meet 2 the definition that would trigger all of these document collection, investigation, amassing of transcripts, 3 advisement of potential witnesses, and then retention of all of those, turning it over to the commission, 4 of course, but then retaining all of that documentation for the entire career of the judge plus three years.
5 For every single one of those external complaints. I see a giant difference between those kinds of 6 concerns and the internal concerns where you have a court judicial assistant, or a law clerk, raising a 7 concern about a supervisor and sexual harassment. That's different. And I think our HR processes do 8 reflect the memorandum of understanding and, frankly, are not all dissimilar from the requirements in 9 this bill. I hope that distinction makes sense.

10
11 Sen. Gonzales

12 Senator Cooke.

13
14 Sen. Cooke

15 Yeah. Yes, it did. Thank you so much. And I guess I'll ask the same question, too, as I asked the Chief 16 Justice. Under this bill wouldn't it be the judicial discipline commission that would, then should be 17 getting, you know, the names and the evidence and following up on the complaint instead of your staff 18 or the staff of the judicial department. I would think that would be their job and not yours.

19

21 Justice Marquez.

22
23 Justice Marquez

24 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair, Senator Cooke. Certainly, with respect to the external complaints, and 25 again, just the triage and understanding the distinctions of what's a real serious complaint versus not, and 26 what we what the Department currently does. And what we would like to see the bill amended to do 27 would be to say in that instance, sir, ma'am, here's the information, the email address and the website 28 and so forth. With respect to the internal complaints, I think the less involvement that we have at HR, 29 the better just for the concerns expressed by the Chief. If we are left with what this bill requires, 30 obviously, we will make it work.

31
32 Sen. Cooke

33 And Madam Chair, thank you. And I just want to make it clear, that's what I was referring to on the 34 external complaints. That should be their job. They're getting 6.3 FTE this year and six next year, I'll 35 have a staff of 12 people so I would think that would not be over burdensome for them, and that they 36 should be then doing the investigation and collecting all the information, I guess is what I'm getting at 37 on the external ones.

38
39 Sen. Gonzales

40 Justice Marquez.

1 Justice Marquez

2 Thank you, Mr. Vice Chair, Senator Cooke? Yes. Yes, I think that particularly with expanded FTE in the 3 newly independent Office of Judicial Discipline, presumably they would have the resources to do 4 exactly that.

5

6 Sen. Cooke

7 Thank you.

8

9 Sen. Gonzales

10 Senator Rodriguez.

11

12 Sen. Rodriguez

13 Thank you. I'm, I'm sorry, I'm gonna shift gears back because he got ahead of me. With the discussion 14 from Senator Gonzalez, and the discussion about the task force. I see it's just made up of legislators and 15 is there you've had a lot of discussions of things that didn't get brought up in the bill, as to maybe other 16 solutions or a sub task force that could go to the task force that you have ideas about to address the 17 specific concerns that we are either learning or the complications that you're dealing with? And whoever 18 would like to answer that question.

19

20 Sen. Gonzales

21 Chief Justice Boatright.

22

23 Chief Justice Boatright

24 Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah, in a perfect world, I'd like to see, you know, three judges on there-- 25 from a small district, a larger district, and then someone who's probably experienced being the Chief 26 through judicial discipline. I also think that members of the Bar Association, especially the diversity 27 bars, the Women's Bar, need to be a member of this. And I, frankly, would like to see somebody who's 28 probably been a victim of some type of harassment, maybe not necessarily judicial, but can give a 29 victim's perspective on this. I think all those things would be valuable.

30

31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Senator Rodriguez.

33

34 Sen. Rodriguez

35 And, also, maybe in because I don't know, because I don't know if the research but also, is there other 36 models in the country that have been through this process? Before that you could lean back on and 37 maybe have some insight? Or I'm sure you attend enough conferences where his stuff gets brought up?

38

39 Sen. Gonzales

40 Chief Justice Boatright.

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 I will confess, and maybe Justice Marquez can answer this better. We've not done an exhaustive search 3 with regard to what other states have done. And with all due respect, I mean, I think the bill dropped on 4 Monday, and here we are Friday. But, I mean, I know that there's been conversation about what the bill
5 was going to be, but it's transformed. And, and I know there's mention of an Illinois system. And, and so 6 we've talked about that. But I think that that would be another really valuable thing that we could look at 7 through the taskforce is what are other states doing? I don't think, honestly, Colorado is out of the 8 mainstream in terms of, you know, I think there can be different ways of doing it. But I don't think 9 Colorado is out of the mainstream of what we're doing. But I have said this, and I said this to the bar 10 association, people, we really have an opportunity to make Colorado a leader in this, we can transform 11 this into a system that I think other people can say, hey, let's see what Colorado is doing.

12

13 Sen. Gonzales

14 Justice Marquez.

15

16 Justice Marquez

17 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. In response to your question, Senator Rodriguez, the Institute for the 18 Advancement of the American Legal System, or IAALS has done a study on judicial discipline systems 19 across the country. That 2018 report has some very thoughtful recommendations. Having someone from 20 IAALS be a part of this interim summer committee, I think would be a wonderful idea and have that 21 perspective, that national perspective. And then the only thing I would add is to echo the Chief's 22 comments. This has been an excruciating year. Chief Justice Boatright and I are committed to getting 23 this right. And if one positive thing could be wrought from all of this, it's the idea that we have an 24 opportunity here to make Colorado a national leader in this area. Chief Justice Boatright is correct 25 Colorado is very consistent with any number of other merit selection systems across the country. Merit 26 selection systems have key components, the merit selection nominating commission process, a 27 performance review process, a retention process, and the discipline process. Colorado's system looks 28 like pretty much every other merit selection state. Almost all of those merit selection systems came 29 about in the 1960s. They haven't been refreshed for the 21st century. We have a really unique 30 opportunity here to do something great. And I hope that this interim summer committee will come up 31 with some great ideas that we can implement.

32

33 Sen. Gonzales

34 Thank you, Senator Rodriguez for your questions. I just had a few sort of brass tacks questions in terms 35 of your thoughts on whether the members of the judicial discipline commission should continue to be 36 appointed by the Supreme Court or not? Chief Justice Boatright.

37

38 Chief Justice Boatright

39 That's an interesting question. I would think that I don't know if four is the magic number. But I do think 40 that having representation from people appointed by the Chief Justice on there is important for the

1 confidence from the judges' perspective that this is going to be a fair process. I mean, I will say, quite 2 honestly, we had a training recently, and there was a lawyer who works in this area. And I think he 3 scared everybody to death about nothing, I don't think there's been any bad acts by judicial discipline.
4 This isn't intended as a criticism at all, but people . . . I mean, there's a psychological impact if you just 5 send somebody's name to judicial discipline, and that is a scary proposition, you could lose your career.
6 So, I do think that there's an important part, what that number is, I don't know. But I do think having a 7 voice is important.

8

9 Chief Justice Boatright

10 Thank you. Justice Marquez.

11

12 Justice Marquez

13 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. Your question concerned whether the current Supreme Court or the 14 Chief Justice specifically should continue to appoint the four members of the Commission. That is the 15 constitutional structure as it currently exists. If this interim committee wants to completely overhaul this 16 process, which would require a constitutional amendment and adopt a totally different model, perhaps 17 we revisit that question.

18

19 Sen. Gonzales

20 Thank you. And this is one of those sorry, I'm not a lawyer questions. But on page six, line 10. In the 21 definition of Judge, there is a reference to senior basis judges. Is that defined somewhere in statute?

23

24 Chief Justice Boatright

25 I think that it is I can't give you the cite to it. But it's there. There are judges who have retired from the 26 judicial branch and then have been retained by the branch on a contract basis. And I know that it's 27 authorized by statute. I just I apologize. I can't give you the statute up top of my head.

28

29 Sen. Gonzales

30 It's one of those. No, I totally understand it. I think we all kind of recognize what it is and how it works.
31 But anyway, at any rate. I want to see if there's any final questions. Seeing none, I want to thank you all, 32 for your comments and for your perspectives as we're debating this important policy.

33

34 Sen. Gonzales

35 Thank you very much for your time.

36

37 Sen. Gonzales

38 Senator Lee.

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Thank you. I'm not going to pose another question. I just also want to thank you on behalf of the rest of 3 the committee for coming in and spending this amount of time and we look forward to continuing to 4 work with you. I'm not sure we're going to resolve all the issues on this bill today, this afternoon in the 5 next couple of hours. We may have to spend more time to work out some of the details. But you know, 6 some of the, a lot of the things you've said today are refreshing. And we look forward to forthcoming 7 discussions to continue to create the kind of model that, as you say, Justice Marquez could lead us into 8 the next 50 years. So, thank you.

9

10 Justice Marquez

11 Thank you.

12

13 Sen. Gonzales

14 Excellent.

15

16 Sen. Gardner

17 Thank you.

18

19 Sen. Gonzales

20 At this point, we have a number of folks who have signed up in opposition to the policy, in an amend 21 position. We've run the gamut here. In a neutral position and in support. Would you like for us to begin 22 with opposition? Senator Lee or Senator Gardner?

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 Why don't we start with the amend and then opposition?

26

27 Sen. Gonzales

28 Amend and then opposition?

29

30 Sen. Gonzales

31 All right, well, then what we'll do is I will welcome Chris Forsyth from the Judicial Integrity Project, to 32 come and testify.

33

34 Sen. Gonzales

35 I'll also welcome Robin Austin and LuAnne Fleming on deck. Given, usually what I would do is I would 36 call panels. But given the policy and sort of the issues and the number of questions that we may 37 anticipate, I'll go just go ahead and call folks one at a time. So, Mr. Forsyth, welcome to the Senate 38 Judiciary Committee. Thank you for being here with us today. If you can please state, your name, the 39 organization you represent, and then proceed to testimony. Thank you.

40

1 Chris Forsyth

2 Yes, my name is Chris Forsyth. I'm an attorney who has practiced 29 years in Colorado, and I'm 3 executive director of the judicial integrity project. We try to improve the justice system by looking for 4 measures that increase transparency, enhance accountability and remove conflicts of interest. We're 5 happy that this bill shines a light on judicial discipline. The legislative declaration in the bill has some 6 promising language. Unfortunately, the substance of this bill falls short on its legislative declaration and 7 takes a really dark twist. The bill is misleading. So much so that an article published in the Gazette by 8 Dave Migoya who has already been referenced here today, on April 11, declared that this bill quote 9 would dissolve the Colorado Commission on Judicial discipline that sits within the judicial department 10 and create the new independent body that dot dot dot end quote. That statement and other statements in 11 the article are false. It's legally impossible for this bill to do what that article and the bill's title claim.
12 The Supreme Court appoints for members of the discipline commission, writes the rules for the 13 commission, and only the Supreme Court can remove a judge from the bench the Constitution says so.
14 This bill can't change the Constitution. This bill cannot create the independence it claims. Therefore, the 15 bill doesn't fit within its title. The fact that a reporter for a major publication was so confused by this bill 16 shows that it was deceptive and misleading. Pages seven to eight of this bill simply parrot language in 17 the state constitution. There's nothing new with that. Pages eight to nine arguably create a new office but 18 the office, it's simply stating the duties of the current commission. The executive director of this office 19 will most likely be the same executive director that serves the commission. This is the case with the 20 judicial performance commissions. This section simply enshrines current procedure and claims its 21 independent. Independent from what? According to the Gazette, Senator Lee has stated that it'll be 22 independent of the Supreme Court. And that's false because this bill cannot edit or amend the 23 Constitution that says the Supreme Court, you know, provides the rules for the commission and appoints 24 members. The cash fund created on page 11 is a reasonable idea. But the commission has been in 25 existence for 55 years and has never complained about money issues. We don't know if 400,000 is an 26 increase or decrease of current funding for the commission because the funding has always been 27 confidential. Funding this Commission that has failed to publicly discipline and judge for 28 years 28 straight is unreasonable. Why would we provide money to this commission? On page 12, there's a 29 section regarding sharing information with oversight entities, this is already covered by rule 6.5 of the 30 Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline. It's discretionary for the court to share that information and this 31 bill does nothing to change that. Pages 13 through 16 regarding employees in the judicial branch.
32 There's some reasonable words here but none of its binding on the judicial branch. The SMART act 33 language. The Commission already writes an annual report that addresses all these topics. Now we get to 34 the one thing the bill actually does-- this interim legislative committee. This bill is a little confusing, 35 because it's proposing certain things be done at the same time as saying we need an interim committee. I 36 mean, you need to pick your poison. Either we need an interim committee, or you need to come up with 37 your specific ideas. It's misleading. The judiciary committees that have failed at handling this issue. The 38 2021 judicial scandal is really focused on in this bill, but the Judiciary Committees have refused to do 39 anything. And quite frankly, the legislators have been as equally responsible for the 2021 judicial 40 scandal as the judicial branch employees involved. Why? Because they've refused to act. I've been at 1 this judicial reform thing for over 10 years now. And repeatedly, we asked, you know, for a wall in 2 between the state court administrator and the judiciary, if there had been that wall, we wouldn't have this 3 judicial scandal. The problem is, is that the finances and the judging in the judicial branch is being 4 mixed together, you need a wall. We've also proposed public judicial discipline and that all complaints 5 of misconduct be public. If complaints and misconduct were public, there would have been nothing with 6 which to blackmail the Chief Justice. So those policies had they been considered might have been able 7 to help prevent the problem. And this bill wants to put the legislators who wouldn't listen back on an 8 interim committee, where they won't listen to good comments. It's self-dealing. The bill doesn't require 9 public hearings for the legislative interim committee and worse yet, allows the committee to limit who 10 has to listen to by stating that the committee has to listen to quote, any other stakeholders the interim 11 committee deems appropriate, end quote that's on page 22 lines 23-25. So, the bill creates an insular 12 committee that will mostly likely have the sponsors on it, where they can do whatever they want, 13 without opposing viewpoints. Or where they cater too much to the current judges in the judicial branch.

14 Some of the things that Justice Boatright said, were reasonable. The problem is he's not going to be the 15 Supreme Court Chief Justice forever. We need a system, a system that encourages that judges comply 16 with the law. And our system does not do that. And we can't guarantee that someone will be there, you 17 know, who will always do the right thing. This bill cannot create the independence it claims in its title.
18 As Dave Migoya of the Colorado Springs Gazette reported in error the bill claims, it provides 19 independent oversight and removes the commission from oversight of the Supreme Court, which is just 20 false.

21

22 Sen. Gonzales

23 Thank you, Mr. Forsyth, for your testimony here today in opposition to this bill. Colleagues, do we have 24 any questions for Mr. Forsyth? Senator Rodriguez.

25

26 Sen. Rodriguez

27 Thank you. Thank you for your testimony, Mr. Forsyth. And I hope you acknowledge we're trying to 28 make some advances in this. I don't know how long your organization's been around. Have you guys 29 pursued a ballot initiative or constitutional thing to put this on the ballot? We can't change the 30 constitution unless we put it on the ballot. So, I'm just wondering what efforts your organization's made.

31

32 Sen. Gonzales

33 Mr. Forsyth.

34

35 Chris Forsyth

36 Thank you. Most recently, our effort included a letter to the Governor to ask him to work with the 37 legislature to put a referendum on the ballot. That was done earlier this year. Previously, we did try to 38 get efforts on the ballot back around 2014-2016. We were referring to them as the honest judge 39 amendment that would have affected the discipline commission. The problem is, it's crazy hard to get 40 something on the ballot. And if you have something that's truly nonpartisan, like our group would

1 support, nobody wants to fund it, because there's nothing in it for them. People want something that 2 helps them. Fairness, they think it's just supposed to be provided by, you know, government. So, getting 3 the necessary funding was a problem, then it got worse when the state adopted Amendment 71, which 4 heightened the requirement signature requirements. And we've pretty much given up, given that 5 signature requirement, we would have to get well over a million dollars for a nonpartisan altruistic 6 amendment to the Constitution. And, you know, if people are paying for it, they want something in 7 something in it for them. So, we believe that the legislature needs to adopt a referendum. And the 8 problem with this bill is that if it's adopted, the legislature is not going to want to adopt a referendum 9 because they'll say, well, we did something to address that. Or we need to wait and see if that works.
10 When this bill doesn't really change much of anything. So, we would encourage, you know, a 11 referendum that attacks Article VI section 23 and fixes those problems that were put in the Constitution.
12 It's 55 years ago, that amendment went was adopted 1966 went into effect in 1967. It's been 55 years of 13 this, and it's truly a problem. I still practice law. Lawyers don't file complaints because they won't get 14 prosecuted--regarding judges. I mean, that's it why and it can lead to retaliation. So why would a lawyer 15 do that? And it's very difficult because lawyers are ethically bound to complain. And the discipline 16 commission doesn't discipline all alleged misconduct. I've heard the phrase several times, well, that's 17 part of an order. So, we're not going to discipline there. The problem is when the code of judicial 18 conduct is supposed to be in its most effective state is when a judge is issuing an order. So, if a judge 19 does something unfair in that order, it should be looked at by the discipline commission. Other states do 20 that. Other states have a wealth of case law to teach judges how to be judges. In Colorado we don't have 21 that because we have a completely ineffective judicial discipline commission. I'm sorry, I've gone on 22 and on.

23

24 Sen. Gonzales

25 Mr. Forsyth, I would point you to page 22 starting at line 26. That does ask the interim committee to 26 study what amendments to constitutional, statutory, or rule-based law would be advisable.

27

28 Chris Forsyth

29 I understand that that language is in there. But the problem is if you adopt this bill, the impetus is going 30 to be to let this work. We made those changes. We don't need that constitutional amendment. I 31 understand that you've put that language in there. But there's always also that long section that talks 32 about things that the interim committee is supposed to consider is problematic, because at some points it 33 seems like it's pointing the interim commission committee in certain directions such as the Chief Justice 34 brought up Illinois. Illinois is a long running joke. I mean, the misconduct of Chicago judges and courts 35 is it's famous. So, following that system, and having that in there is problematic when there are other 36 states such as California, who we would believe would be more proper. The ABA, you mentioned the 37 ABA, in the interim committee section, and the interim committee, the ABA says we should have public 38 judicial discipline proceedings. But this bill, the way it's written, appears to really hedge towards 39 confidentiality, and I've heard the other members on this committee really hedge towards confidentiality.
40 But we believe that transparency would heal the wounds and transparency is what's necessary. And this

1 confidentiality is a mistake. 35 states have public judicial discipline proceedings. Colorado is only one 2 of 15 that has this secrecy. And that's the secrecy is what causes the lack of trust of governmental 3 entities. We need it to be transparent.

4

5 Sen. Gonzales

6 Thank you any further questions for Mr. Forsyth? Thank you very much. Thank you for your time, sir.
7 Next, I'll call up Mr. Robin Austin, I believe who is participating remotely? Welcome, sir to the Senate 8 Judiciary Committee.

9

10 Robin Austin

11 Thank you. My name is Robin Austin, an advocate with families against court embezzlement and ethical 12 standards (FACES) and co-host of a weekly radio show on blogtalkradio.com hidden truths revealed.
13 I'm involved with American United International to hold the United States government responsible for 14 violating international treaties concerning the lack of effective redress for victims of court sanctioned 15 crimes. I would like to thank the members of the committee and the chairman, as well as the legislators 16 that are that are brought forth this legislation. I believe this is a well-intentioned effort that, that I do 17 recognize and acknowledge a lot of effort has gone into, and I appreciate much that the justices have 18 said that they're trying to do. However, this bill seems on the surface to address problems in judicial 19 oversight in Colorado. But I feel that it is fatally flawed. It repeats patterns that seem too well 20 established in Colorado politics. There's simply too much deference given to those we purport to 21 oversee. It leaves the actual discipline under the aegis of the Supreme Court of Colorado, which has 22 clearly demonstrated as recent scandals show, it can't be trusted on its own to police its own. We see an 23 effort to create a legislative oversight committee, but leave in place provisions shielding the process 24 from public scrutiny. Any reasonable person knows justice and the appearance of justice requires both 25 accountability which this bill pays lip service to but does not accomplish without a real oversight 26 process from a truly independent body and transparency. So, there can be surety among the public. The 27 high jinks and hooliganism are not occurring behind closed doors. Can we really expect an office in the 28 Ralph Carr Building where the Supreme Court is staffed by a 10-year veteran attorney in Colorado 29 courts tasked with determining who among all those he or she has worked with all those years, deserves 30 to be brought up on corruption or incompetence charges. Do we expect that person will actually do it, 31 and that the Supreme Court Justices will now suddenly hold their own accountable, even though it's all 32 behind closed doors, and they never have before. I think not. The present discipline commission has 33 proven it is completely unwilling and/or unable to discipline its own. And this bill maintains that status 34 quo. For these reasons. I do not support passage of this bill.

35

36 Sen. Gonzales

37 Thank you, Mr. Austin, for your testimony today. Colleagues, do we have any questions for this 38 witness? Seeing none thank you so much, sir, for sharing your perspectives with us as we debate this 39 policy. Next, I'd like to call up Luanne Fleming. And then I'll bring up Ms. Marilyn Chappell. But Ms.

1 Fleming if you can please state your name, any organization you represent, and then proceed to 2 testimony. Thank you.

3

4 Luanne Flemming

5 Members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify to you today on this SB 22 201. My 6 name is Luanne Fleming. I'm an advocate for families against court embezzlement unethical standards 7 (FACES). I have an international radio show every Wednesday night on BlogTalkRadio hidden truths 8 revealed. We are part of a grassroots human rights coalition to protect the elderly and the disabled from 9 the abuses in the state's guardianship system. I'm a tier three ambassador for AUI, America United 10 International and Opt In USA. The interim committee sounds like it might be good, but I have some 11 doubts. We've tried several legislative bills to stop the isolation of our loved ones in probate courts, and 12 introduced the judicial integrity project for judicial discipline, oversight transparency. All of this was 13 shot down. The way it is written seems to avoid the input from the public, including advocate groups 14 like us, the people in Colorado should be involved in a way that creates a degree of transparency and 15 accountability that we've never seen before. We are all aware of the blackmail scandal cover up 16 involving the Colorado Supreme Court. We Colorado citizens share the embarrassment as well. My 17 question will be committee working will be behind closed doors. Where would he have that the judicial 18 system currently doesn't work? The bill creates the legislative interim committee on judicial discipline to 19 study Colorado's system of judicial discipline and make grant recommendations for necessary changes 20 to that system. Does this change anything? Or does it just add more control, some oversight, and leaves 21 everybody in the dark? It leaves the Supreme Court as the final arbiter? The positive side of all of this, it 22 shines a spotlight on judicial discipline. I would urge you to consider asking the court of public opinion, 23 the problems all of us have had gone through what the lack of judicial integrity in Colorado. Like I said, 24 my family has lost millions of dollars in the probate court scams by unethical attorneys and judges on 25 the bench. For the integrity, transparency and accountability. There is none. If this bill does not correct 26 these issues, vote against it. I urge you to do that. Thank you.

27

28 Sen. Gonzales

29 Thank you, Miss Fleming for your testimony. Colleagues. Do we have any questions for this witness?
30 Seeing none, I want to thank you for sharing your perspectives with us as we debate this bill. Thank you.

31

32 Luanne Flemming

33 Thank you.

34

35 Sen. Gonzales

36 Ms. I'm not sure if it's Chapel or Chappell. And then we will hear from Ms. Marlene McLean.

37

38 Sen. Gonzales

39 You'll get right at the base. There is a little red button. There's a little gray button with the red light. You 40 don't want to turn it green. There you go. Okay.

1 Marilyn Chappell

2 Good afternoon. Mr. Chair, members of the committee. I am Marilyn Chappell. I'm an attorney and 3 private practice in Denver. I'm here on behalf of the Colorado Judicial Institute or CJI as a volunteer, 4 and, folks I checked the wrong box on the multiple choice quiz. It probably would have been more 5 accurate to say that I'm here in an amend position.

6

7 Sen. Gonzales

8 Ok. Proceed With your testimony, thank you.

9

10 Marilyn Chappell

11 Let me first tell you a little bit about the Colorado Judicial Institute, CJI. We've been in existence since 12 1979. We're a nonpartisan nonprofit. And our mission includes protecting and defending the ability of 13 Colorado judges to decide cases fairly and impartially and free from partisan politics. The subject matter 14 of this bill, disciplining judges, is part of Colorado's merit judicial system for selecting, evaluating, 15 retaining, and disciplining judges. So, this is of critical importance to us at CJI. Our system was adopted 16 by the voters in 1966. And they did that rejecting a system of partisan elections where you would have 17 to be in the position of worrying about campaign donations to judges. We don't have that in Colorado, 18 because that's what our voters created. We have three concerns with the bill in its current form. And I'll 19 be very brief here. First, with the timing. And you've all heard from Chief Justice Boatright. And Justice 20 Marquez about that. That the fact that there are investigations in process. We at CJI support the full, fair, 21 thorough investigations of allegations of judicial conduct consistently with our American system of 22 justice, which includes due process, due process. And, again, we think on the timing here, allowing this 23 process to go forward, and to discover what facts are to lead to wherever the facts go. That should 24 happen so that that information can be used to most thoughtfully and properly and adequately look at 25 what changes may be needed to our current system. There has been talk already about the disclosure and 26 reporting requirements. I won't repeat that. And, also, about the interim committee or task force. And 27 we would hope that we at the Colorado Judicial Institute could be included along with the other entities 28 and stakeholders. Getting back to the bill as it is currently phrased. There's a lot of language in there.
29 That's concerning to us. Yes, no system is perfect. But in the meantime, Colorado has a merit selection 30 system that is a model for other states and for the nation. And yes, of course, it can be improved. But in 31 the meantime, the characterizations in the bill, as it is currently stated, do not reflect the reality of the 32 fact that our system has worked well, for decades. Thank you.

33

34 Sen. Gonzales

35 Thank you, Ms. Chappell for your testimony. today. I wanted to see if there are any questions for this 36 witness. Senator Lee.

37

38 Sen. Lee

39 Thank you, Ms. Chappell, thanks for being here. You and I talked on the phone a week or two ago? I 40 just I didn't really have a question. But I just wanted to assure you, because a number of witnesses have

1 asked the same question. And that is about the interim committee process. And let me assure you that 2 the interim committee process will be a public process. It'll be noticed publicly, the doors will be open, 3 anyone can come and testify, we will have agendas, where we will specifically invite some people to 4 testify that we want to hear from who may have specific expertise, but we will also have public 5 comment periods where other people can come in voluntarily and testify. So, it'll be a very open, 6 transparent process. And we want everyone to come in and participate. I just wanted to put that on the 7 record because three witnesses in a row seem to express concerns about a private closed-door meeting 8 and there's no . . . we can't do that in Colorado. We don't want to do that in Colorado. We want it to be 9 open.

10

11 Marilyn Chappell

12 Senator Lee I would just say the thought there was not any concern about the transparency of that 13 process, the concern that we at CJI have is more this, that if you're going to tweak our merit selection 14 system, it should be done thoughtfully and include people who have knowledge of how the system 15 works, and who were include stakeholders, and attorneys and judges, and so forth. That was the intent 16 there. Thank you, Senator Lee.

17

18 Sen. Lee

19 Thank you.

20

21 Sen. Gonzales

22 Senator Gardner.

23

24 Sen. Gardner

25 Thank you, Madam Chair. Ms. Chappell, thank you for being here. It's good to see you again, after all 26 these years. At least one witness and I think some others testifying remotely at least sort of implied this 27 have argued for a public judicial disciplinary process. What is CJI's view on public disciplinary process?
28 And what are the pros and cons of that? Because I take it that yours is kind of a think tank as well as 29 advocacy group as well.

30

31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Ms. Chappell.

33

34 Marilyn Chappell

35 Thank you, Senators. CJI is a nonprofit, nonpartisan group. As I said, our mission is to basically do what 36 we can to preserve and protect our system. And, also, to make litigants feel that they can get their day in 37 court with dignity and respect. I'm not prepared to answer your question in detail. I will say that, as we 38 all know, there is a confidentiality provision in the state constitution. And it makes it an interesting 39 balance between as has been talked about confidentiality and transparency. So that that is I think, what 40 informs this, the subject matter of this bill, part of that, and makes it difficult, and all I can say is we

1 support a way of threading this needle, that captures the need to maintain public trust, and also allows 2 for an effective system to address judicial misconduct.

3
4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Senator Gardner.

6
7 Sen. Gardner

8 Thank you. And at the beginning of your testimony, you indicated that probably it was more accurate to 9 say that you are in an amend position on the bill, just to understand what parts of the bill or what aspects 10 of the bill, would you say are, are appropriate and that you would be supportive of if that's the right way 11 to describe it?

12
13 Marilyn Chappell

14 Well, ah Senator, sorry.

15
16 Sen. Gonzales

17 Thank you. We're just trying to for the record, that's all. Okay.

18
19 Marilyn Chappell

20 Senator Gardner, again, we are not advocating for specific changes to the bill. Our concerns are more in 21 the three areas I briefly outlined. We haven't really developed a full-throated position on the entire bill. I 22 can't say, you know, given the testimony on financial or funding issues, that we would at all oppose that.
23 But again, I'm not prepared to drill down to the specifics of that. The three areas of concern are what I've 24 stated.

25
26 Sen. Gardner

27 Okay, thank you.

28
29 Sen. Gonzales

30 Any further questions for Ms. Chappell? Seeing none, thank you so much for joining us this afternoon as 31 we debate this bill.

32
33 Marilyn Chappell

34 Thank you.

35
36 Sen. Gonzales

37 Is there anyone else either in the room or online who wishes to testify in an opposition position 38 regarding Senate Bill 201? Seeing none, ah ha. This is why we ask.

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 We have one person, we have two folks who are online who wish to testify in an opposition position.
3 And, so, we'll welcome you each. If you can please state your name. Any organization you represent and 4 then proceed to testimony.
5

6 Marilee McLean

7 Hi, I'll go first, my name is Marilee McLean and I have been working on courtroom reform for 30 years.
8 I work with mom's side back as an executive director and have brought forward lots of legislation in the 9 last few years, and really wanting to have training for our judges that is lacking when it specified 10 training for domestic violence, child abuse, child sexual abuse, and seeing that there's no discretionary 11 rule. A judge can rule however he wants, especially in the family court. And yet, I'm seeing case after 12 case after case where women who have been abused or their children are being abused, or judges are 13 awarding these children to the abuser in epidemic numbers. So, this is not lightly. And so that's why I 14 really believe me the transparency and accountability not only through what we're doing what you guys 15 are doing right now, but through the courtrooms because there is no transparency and accountability for 16 what they do. And I know there was a recent case that was in the news with Natalie Chase, and I'm sure 17 you're aware of that case. But I followed her cases pretty closely. In one case in particular, where she 18 had a woman that was trying to protect her daughters and, and it was actually abhorrent what she did in 19 that courtroom. I've never, ever seen anything like this. And we're talking First Amendment rights being 20 denied due process being denied. Ending parental rights with no grounds. And I know Chief Justice 21 Boatright just said that there's people that are out there because of what's happened. But we're talking 22 inadequacy and competency. So where are we going to do and this legislation, actual discipline for the 23 judges, I believe that needs to be public discipline, and it needs to be out to the public. The blue books 24 do nothing to say what's happening with these judges who they are what they do. There's no disciplinary 25 records ever in those blue books. The public doesn't know who they're voting for and even how to get 26 these judges in. So mainly specified training for these judges and actual discipline of the Supreme Court.
27 That that's not going to work. If we're not going to if you're going to have an interim committee that's 28 going to look at this, then it needs to be somebody just like just Chief Justice Boatright stated. It needs to 29 be people on that interim that know about these issues, and not just ABA attorneys or people that are 30 involved within the legislation. So, I believe it needs to be advocates. Absolutely. So that's really what 31 I'm here to say, transparency and accountability. And I'm opposing it. Thank you.

32

33 Sen. Gonzales

34 Thank you, Ms. McLean, for your testimony. Colleagues, do we have any questions for this witness?
35 Seeing none, thank you very much for sharing your perspectives with us today.

36

37 Marilee McLean

38 Thank you.

39

40

1 Sen. Gonzales
2 And then the last person participating remotely who is testifying in an oppose position?

3
4 Sen. Gonzales
5 Ms. Rosemary Van Gorder.

6
7 Rosemary Van Gorder
8 That's correct.

9
10 Sen. Gonzales
11 Please proceed. State your name, any organization you may represent, and proceed to testimony. Thank 12 you.

13
14 Sen. Gonzales
15 We saw you just for a brief second. But we can hear you.

16
17 Sen. Gonzales
18 Oops, now we can't hear you.

19
20 Sen. Gonzales
21 Oops, we can't hear you, ma'am.

22
23 Rosemary Van Gorder
24 All right.

25
26 Sen. Gonzales
27 Yeah, there you go.

28
29 Rosemary Van Gorder
30 Okay. All right. Thank you for the opportunity to speak. I am changing my initial amend to not agree at 31 all with passage of this bill 22-201. It's been a long afternoon. I'm glad I don't do this for a living. But 32 I'm not with any particular group, just a regular citizen, non-attorney. I'm concerned that the bill does 33 not change the discipline commission. I'm concerned that the bill doesn't create an independent entity.
34 As long as the Supreme Court holds four seats. And only the Supreme Court can write rules for the 35 discipline commission or remove a judge from office. It's not going to be independent. We've heard 36 mention of six different investigations into judicial conduct. I'd like to suggest that there be a seventh 37 and that is, I think very necessary for many cases that appeared before the 18th Judicial District Court 38 Judge Natalie Chase, who was censored a year ago, and no longer on the bench. The atrocities to 39 families in family court has resulted in quite a distrust of the public of family court process in general, 40 because enough judges are not following due process protections for parents and are violating so many

1 codes of conduct. That just Chase was not an anomaly. She is not alone. And what she was censored for 2 was the racial bias. I contacted the judicial discipline commission about this, and I said there are far 3 worse cases and treatment of citizens in her courtroom that have gone unchallenged or dismissed by the 4 referral process of a complaint that they have. Now, if you have a complaint, and the judicial discipline
5 commission is accepting complaints on this judge for up to a year. But why we don't know they won't 6 tell us why what we want is an independent. I think it's incumbent that the State look at every case that 7 has gone before Judge Chase, that she handled, to undo the damage that she has caused. She is . . . I will 8 pause there except that these families have been destroyed by her and the response from judicial 9 discipline has been to refuse to even investigate the complaints. They're just dismissed as a referral 10 letter. Would you please take a look at this and they all come back? I'm sorry. It's not that's not. But it is, 11 it's very important. So, in closing, maybe this could be the seventh investigation that is taken on by 12 support of legislators and the Governor and perhaps the Attorney General. I do know that reference to 13 the 19th Judicial District, Judge Kamada. None of his cases were reviewed, and there were people who 14 wanted that. So, I don't want to repeat, I don't want this last month to kick off and have no action taken 15 on Judge Chase's conduct in the court.

16

17 Sen. Gonzales

18 Thank you, for your testimony with us here today. Ms. Van Gorder. Colleagues, do we have any 19 questions for this witness? Senator Gardner.

20

21 Sen. Gardner

22 Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes, ma'am. You referred to Judge Chase from the 18th Judicial District, I 23 think. It seems that the system worked as it should there. I just wanted to clarify this. And maybe you 24 don't agree, I want to give you an opportunity to respond. Judge Chase was publicly censured and 25 resigned. So was taken off the bench, fired essentially. So, I'm curious, do you believe the system still 26 didn't work in spite of that result? Or what? What are you saying, ma'am?

27

28 Sen. Gonzales

29 Ms. Van Gorder.

30

31 Rosemary Van Gorder

32 Right, that seems like a token, politically correct, can't do anything but address the racial discrimination 33 in that case at this time in this world. But she also disagreed. Within a month of her censure, she filed a 34 complaint and said she felt she was forced to leave, which, you know, yes, she's gone. But there are still 35 cases alive and some closed, where she did a lot of damage and the violations against parental rights and 36 due process, just common decency of how you treat someone respectfully in court. She is . . . check 37 them all. You know, that's what needs to go back and looked at just one reprimand for racial bias is not 38 enough. Thank you.

39

40

1 Sen. Gonzales
2 Senator Gardner.

3
4 Sen. Gardner
5 Well, thank you and I appreciate your testimony. Ma'am. Are you suggesting that and this doesn't seem 6 to be within the purview of the Commission on Judicial Discipline. Are you suggesting that we go back 7 and review every case that Judge Chase had, invalidate the case, and retry the case? It sounds like you 8 don't think her punishment was appropriate? What do you think the Commission on Judicial Discipline 9 should have done to her?

10
11 Rosemary Van Gorder
12 I think they should. Thank you. I think that the Commission needs to investigate the complaints that 13 have been received by parents from cases before her with an honest intent. And do more than one 14 person, sometimes a staff person, just review it and dismiss it back. Those complaints, say a lot. And it 15 is unusual, it would be time consuming, and not something anybody would look forward to, except the 16 people out there who have suffered bad conduct and biased decisions from her temperament and lack of 17 judicial demeanor in the courtroom. I'm surprised it hasn't happened already. But who can do that? Who 18 can encourage at least the contested cases, those before her where she overruled by a summary judgment 19 or default, no fault of your own in these family cases, but parents end up losing their children anyway.
20 There's something wrong in family law courts, but Judge Chase took it to a whole new level, and walked 21 all over people. And I'm appalled that attorneys in those courtrooms haven't filed complaints. But they're 22 part of the problem too, some of them.

23
24 Sen. Gonzales
25 Ms. Van Gorder.

26
27 Sen. Gardner
28 Thank you.

29
30 Sen. Gonzales
31 Seeing no further questions. Thank you, Ms. Van Gorder for sharing your perspective with us as we 32 debate this bill.

33
34 Rosemary Van Gorder
35 Thank you very much.

36
37 Sen. Gonzales
38 You have a good one. That concludes the list of individuals who had signed up to testify in opposition to 39 Senate Bill 201. At this time, I'm going to start shifting over to individuals who have signed up to testify

1 in an amend position. And let's see, I'm going to welcome Phil Cherner from the Colorado Criminal 2 Defense Bar.

3

4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Welcome to the Senate Judiciary, if you can please state, your name, the organization you represent and 6 proceed to testimony.

7

8 Phil Cherner

9 Thank you. I'm Phil Cherner and I am representing today the Colorado Criminal Defense Bar. I litigated 10 cases in Colorado for 40 plus years till I retired. I served on two Supreme Court committees over the 11 decades. I'm currently, in the interest of full disclosure, on one of the character fitness panels that the 12 Supreme Court employs to screen bar applicants. And I also did 20 years' worth of attorney grievance 13 defense and representing law students who wanted to be lawyers. So, we are in a position of amend, we 14 are generally in support of the bill, we have three areas that we think you should consider changes. And 15 I'll try to do this in the remaining two minutes and 32 seconds that I have.

16

17 The first is concerning. Sorry, it's been a long afternoon. There is the possibility that a judge who serves 18 on the Commission, as a result of that service, will learn about alleged conduct of not just a judge that 19 they may be considering for discipline, but also litigants, lawyers and/or individuals. It's our concern 20 that the confidentiality there puts the judge and the lawyer, perhaps one of our organization's lawyers 21 and their client in an awkward position. The judge may be aware of allegations against another judge 22 that also meanders into allegations against a lawyer who may have participated in the misconduct. But 23 that judge sitting on the Commission, who was also presiding in some courtroom can't tell the litigants 24 before he or she about that very allegation. So theoretically, you could have a lawyer standing before a 25 judge, a judge who is aware of accusations against the lawyer, the lawyer doesn't even know so 26 obviously has no chance to respond. We suggest an amendment that mandates recusal by the judge 27 under those circumstances, because the lawyer can't make the recusal motion and I think that's already in 28 the rules of the Commission. But we want to be sure that it's written into statute so that it's firm. And I'm 29 getting a quizzical look. So maybe I didn't explain that. Well, all right.

30

31 The second has to do with the way the Commission is required to provide information. As I read the bill 32 before you, and if you're looking at page 13, that's where it addresses it. The bill, there's a trigger once 33 the judicial department learns of allegations of misconduct, the magic phrase is a complaint, which is 34 defined in the bill broadly, an obligation arises. Pardon me, once the department learns of the 35 information. An obligation arises, to provide a wealth of information to the Commission. We are very 36 concerned of the confidentiality of these things. Because again, they affect not just information about the 37 judge, but in many cases, ancillary allegations against a lawyer who might have participated in the 38 conduct, and/or that lawyer's client. And I would remind you that it's probably the divorce bar that gets 39 the most complaints before the disciplinary authorities. And right below them is the criminal defense 40 community. Our lawyers get a lot of complaints. And remember, they're court appointed in many cases,

1 so they don't have a lot of choice about who their representing. Most of these, and I think it's safe to say 2 the vast majority of these, get tossed out at the intake stage. So hypothetically, if a complaint specious or 3 not, arises at Regulation Counsel's Office or some other mechanism to the Department, the judicial 4 department, the Department immediately has an obligation to turn over everything it knows, to the 5 Commission under this bill. We suggest rather that the Commission be notified that there is an 6 allegation, and that upon their request, the Judicial Department provide whatever information the 7 Commission needs to further their investigation. So that would postpone but not at all change the 8 obligation to turnover, quote all the information as listed in the bill. So, it just changes the trigger 9 process.

10 11 The third thing that concerns us again, because we're always concerned about confidentiality between 12 lawyer and client, and protecting the lawyer members and their clients. Is this phrase about not non 13 assertion of the attorney client privilege and confidentiality, the way the bill is drafted, when the 14 information is turned over, whatever your trigger mechanism is, the Department rather, cannot assert 15 attorney client privilege or confidentiality to refuse to provide the information. But the bill doesn't say 16 attorney client privilege or confidentiality between who. So, we would like the bill to say that it does not 17 abrogate in any way the attorney client relationship between a criminal defense lawyer and the client nor 18 the confidentiality obligation between lawyer and client. And that it further it doesn't abrogate any 19 attorney client privilege between a lawyer representing a respondent in a grievance proceeding and the 20 respondent themselves. So those are the three things we would like to see tuned up in this bill should it 21 get to that point. I'm happy to take questions.

22
23 Sen. Gonzales

24 Thank you, Mr. Cherner. I do see a few questions. I have a couple of questions, but I'll defer to Senator 25 Gardner.

26
27 Sen. Gardner

28 Okay. Thank you. And thank you, sir, for being here. I wanted to visit your first concern. I think I 29 followed what the concern is, there are sitting trial judges on the Commission. And the concern would 30 be their hearing a case. So, take me through that. What?

31
32 Sen. Gonzales

33 Mr. Cherner.

34
35 Phil Cherner

36 Thank you for asking, and I do apologize for badly garbling that. Let me do it again. There are a I think 37 it's four judges who would be on the Commission and as such, they would be privy to whatever 38 commissioners get in terms of an investigation, which no doubt includes allegations against a judge.
39 And often those allegations could involve the conduct of a lawyer. It may be conduct between them. It 40 may be the lawyer is just a witness, but it may hypothetically at least cast the lawyer in a bad light. Now,

1 as you said, these are trial judges or could be. And so, hypothetically, you could have a trial judge 2 presiding over say, a criminal case. And there's a lawyer representing the criminal defendant in that case.
3 The judge, by virtue of his commission participation would have information about the lawyer and it 4 could be negative information. He can't tell the lawyer in the courtroom that he has that information, 5 because of the confidentiality rules of the commission. And I'm not complaining about that. I'm just 6 laying out the scenario. If the lawyer knew the lawyer might move to recuse, or at least have a chance to 7 rebut the allegations. But the lawyer isn't going to know, or probably isn't going to know. Is certainly not 8 going to know through the official channels. So, we think the solution is for a judge in that situation to 9 recuse themselves from that criminal case that they're presiding over. Not from their commission work. I 10 don't know how often this would occur, I would hope not often. And as I said, I think it's already written 11 into their rules. But it's something that we want to guard carefully to protect that lawyer and that 12 lawyer's client.

13

14 Sen. Gonzales

15 Senator Gardner.

16

17 Sen. Gardner

18 Thank you. So, the solution there would be for the trial judge who was also a Commission member, 19 while he or she could not disclose to the attorney appearing before the court. The judge would say, 20 parties, I'm recusing myself from this case. I have conflict, have a concern. Can't say what it is doesn't 21 matter. I'm throwing it back in in the pool for reassignment that. Is that?

22

23 Sen. Gonzales

24 Mr. Cherner.

25

26 Phil Cherner

27 Yes, that is succinct as I can be. And I would add that, in the limited times I've seen recusals judges 28 don't often give reasons anyway, they just say I'm out. It goes to some other judge in the District.

29

30 Sen. Gonzales

31 Thank you, Senator Gardner, for the question. I wanted to, on the third concern that you raised, I wanted 32 to see if you could point us where you were speaking about the confidentiality provision not being 33 abrogated. If you can point us to specific sections of the bill where you have concerns about the 34 language?

35

36 Phil Cherner

37 Yes, it's lines, page 16 rather, lines nine through 12. And if I could just add one more thing.

38

39

40

1 Phil Cherner

2 When I was speaking to the need for Regulation Counsel or whoever in Judicial gets initial information, 3 to not give it all, to the Commission until the Commission asks for more of it. I didn't have a chance to 4 explain why. Attorney grievance proceedings are presently under wraps unless and until Regulation 5 Counsel files a formal complaint. The lawyers are protected from spurious allegations becoming public.
6 At the same time, the public gets information when there's what I will very loosely call probable cause.
7 When they decide to go forward formally. Any information that's disseminated between that office and 8 the Commission, or the judicial department and the Commission. Every dissemination raises the risk, 9 that there will be a leak. And we want to very carefully protect the confidentiality written into law.
10 That's the reason we're suggesting that every shred of information not get forwarded instantly. Let's wait 11 to see if the Commission actually wants it before we start sending it somewhere. And let's not forget a 12 lot of this is done electronically these days. And if you've ever sent an email to the wrong person and 13 embarrassed about it, you know exactly what I'm talking about.

14

15 Sen. Gonzales

16 Thank you, Mr. Cherner. Colleagues, do you have any questions? Any further questions for this 17 witness? Seeing none. Thank you so much for your perspectives as we're working through this policy.

18

19 Phil Cherner

20 Thank you for hearing our concerns.

21

22 Sen. Gonzales

23 Is there anyone else who wishes to testify in an amend position? Either in the room or online?

24

25 Sen. Gonzales

26 Okay, well then at first this point we're gonna go shift over to folks testifying in a neutral position. I'd 27 like to welcome Leticia Maxfield.

28

29 Leticia Maxfield

30 Thank you, Senator Gonzales.

31

32 Sen. Gonzales

33 Welcome. If you can state your name, any organization you represent, and proceed to testimony.

34

35 Leticia Maxfield

36 Yes, thank you. My name is Leticia Maxfield, often called Letty, and I'm appearing here today on behalf 37 of the legislative policy committee of the Colorado Bar Association. And first, just on behalf of the 38 CBA, we want to thank the sponsors for what we see as their very sincere effort to meaningfully engage 39 with the CBA, the other branches of government, community stakeholders, to promote this legislation 40 which is intended to inspire greater confidence and public trust in our judiciary, and its independent

1 oversight. The introduction of Senate Bill 22-201 set the stage for the CBA to engage in a critical and 2 ongoing dialogue amongst its leadership and membership on the topic of judicial oversight in Colorado.
3 This dialogue is continuing with members of not only the CBA, but the larger legal community. In the 4 short time since the bill has been introduced, many comments and questions have already been raised.
5 You've heard a lot of those here today already. None of them articulated more clearly, perhaps by the 6 Supreme Court Justice Boatright and the other Justice who appeared. The CBA remains intensely 7 focused on its review of the bill. And the CBA currently takes no position on this bill. Rather for the 8 benefit of the committee and the sponsors and the Colorado citizens and stakeholders who have all been 9 present and participated here today. We just wanted to offer our brief summary of some of the language 10 and the concepts of the bill that we just think may merit some further consideration. Many have been 11 raised by others, but I'd like you to hear them from the CBA's perspective.

12
13 First, there's broad unilateral buy in among the stakeholders for legislation to establish the financial and 14 functional independence of the Commission on Judicial Discipline. As such, we believe that serious 15 consideration should be given to Section 13-5.3-103 (3) found at page 10, line 22 of the bill. It's our 16 position that requiring the Department, specifically the State Court Administrator's Office to provide and 17 manage services such as payroll, accounting, and human resources on behalf of the Commission does 18 cause both real and perceived conflicts, which really undermine what the purpose of this legislation is: 19 independence of the Commission. We understand that it may be very possible for another administrative 20 agency to oversee these functions that's housed in a separate branch of government such as the executive 21 branch, and we would welcome that for your consideration.

22
23 Second, we understand the desire of this legislative body to cast a wide net and impose to what equates 24 to a mandatory duty to report judicial misconduct at all levels within the Judicial Department. However, 25 to ensure good faith compliance by the Department, or to effectively penalize somebody who fails to 26 comply, what's actually required of the Department, it's judges, its staff must be wholly unambiguous.
27 And there's just a handful of terms and areas in this bill, where we really think there could be some 28 further clarity. And an example of that are the following terms and phrases which are used somewhat 29 interchangeably throughout the bill. And we really think you should consider harmonizing or further 30 defining or clarifying the relationship between these concepts, whether they're the same, what duties or 31 requirements they trigger, and that language is really sort of all surrounded around the complaint. So the 32 various terms that are used throughout the bill our complaint, request for evaluation of potential judicial 33 misconduct, request for evaluation of judicial misconduct, potential misconduct, information indicating 34 or alleging potential judicial misconduct, learns of facts compromising potential judicial misconduct, 35 screening misconduct complaints, pre-screening judicial misconduct complaints, relevant to judicial 36 misconduct, relating to potential misconduct, related to the complaint, relevant to a complaint or 37 potential misconduct, misconduct allegations. And really the point being these are used throughout the 38 bill to trigger certain things, duties, processes, or to really be a defined term, but how they're actually 39 deployed should be harmonized and further clarified so that if we are seeking compliance, we know 40 exactly what is required. As you've heard, the vast majority of judicial proceedings are adversarial. And

1 likewise, we understand that a vast majority of the requests for evaluation of conduct of a judge or a
2 justice are grounded in dissatisfaction with the court's disposition of a particular matter or issue. The line 3 between a complaint by a disaffected litigant and allegations of judicial misconduct just needs to be 4 more clearly drawn in this bill. And I think you heard testimony about the difference between external 5 complaints and internal complaints in the potential various investigative standards that can be used in 6 those different contexts as it relates to the Commission.

7 8 Third, we think further consideration should be given to the tools available to the Commission to obtain 9 otherwise privileged or confidential information. As drafted the bill may require the Department to 10 violate federal and state laws regarding the disclosure of certain employment records or EEOC charges.
11 And while we appreciate that the language found on page 16, lines 20-26 of the bill is intended to 12 protect against a waiver of privilege. A state law declaring that a waiver has not occurred does not bind a 13 federal court, which you've also heard today. We'd ask you to consider using subpoenas or agreements 14 for disclosure under Colorado Rule of Evidence 502 and Federal Rules of Evidence 502 as a more 15 precise tool for disclosure of otherwise privileged information without a waiver. Similarly, as others 16 have said, consideration should be given to clarifying that the disclosure requirements in the bill did not 17 extend to the attorney-client privileges and confidentiality of information between a judge or a justice 18 and his or her legal counsel. While we do not believe it is in the intent of the bill to deprive our judges, 19 or justices or other members, or staff of the Department to the right to privileged communications with 20 counsel, a bright line should be delineated in the text of the bill itself and it shouldn't be open to 21 interpretation.

22
23 Fourth, page 9, line 11 of the bill provides an attorney shall not appear before the Commission five years
24 following service as its executive director. There's simply a concern that this provision violates Colorado 25 Rule of Professional Conduct 5.6, which prevents an attorney from entering into an agreement that 26 restricts the right of a lawyer to practice after the termination of the employment relationship. So, we 27 just would ask you to take a closer look at that.

28
29 Fifth, consideration should also be given to expanding the body of persons appointed to the interim 30 committee to include participation of members of all three branches of government, community 31 stakeholders, including a guarantee of racial, ethnic, and gender diversity amongst those appointed to 32 serve on that interim committee.

33
34 And finally, as the legislative policy committee of the CBA continues to actively review and monitor 35 this bill, we will be intensely focused on ensuring that this legislation is fine tuned to avoid any of the 36 following three potential unintended consequences. One, a chilling effect on the willingness of our most 37 qualified and ethical jurists to enter into public service and become judges. Two, any negative or 38 disproportional effect on the equity, diversity, and inclusivity within the Department, and specifically 39 those serving on the bench. And, three, legal challenges to the constitutionality of the bill as it relates to 1 the separation of powers, which could delay the effective implementation of legislation intended to 2 strengthen our system of governance here in Colorado.

3
4 Overarchingly, the CBA respectfully asks, that as a collective, we diligently move forward to ensure that 5 the Colorado State Legislature, the Judicial Branch, and the Commission create the functional and 6 financial independence of the Commission on Judicial Discipline. If we do this, it will ensure an 7 independent, fair, competent and impartial judiciary. A judiciary composed of persons committed to the 8 highest levels of integrity, who hold office and the public trust and the promotion in the inspiration of 9 greater confidence in our justice system. We all want to get this right. And we look forward to 10 continuing to engage with the sponsors, the community stakeholders and this legislative body on this 11 critically important issue, which is central to our system of government and our democracy. And thank 12 you for letting me have my time and I'm happy to answer additional questions if you have any.

13
14 Sen. Gonzales

15 Thank you. Ms. Maxfield for your testimony. I am curious if there are any questions from members of 16 the committee regarding her testimony. Senator Lee.

17
18 Sen. Lee

19 Thank you, Madam Chair. Could you send us your remarks that you have written there? So, I have a lot 20 there. And if you could get them and Ms. Jenson, she could distribute them to the committee members, 21 and we could have them as we're working through the bill.

22
23 Leticia Maxfield

24 Certainly, we'll have the legislative director for the CBA send them over.

25
26 Sen. Lee

27 Okay. Very good. Getting a thumbs up in the back. Thank you.

28
29 Sen. Gonzales

30 Thumbs up. Here we go. Senator Gardner.

31
32 Sen. Gardner

33 Thank you, Ms. Maxfield for being here. Good to see you, again. Remote notary is that . . .

34
35 Leticia Maxfield

36 Don't bring back bad memories.

37
38 Sen. Gardner

39 Only Senator Rodriguez, and I would understand that. Seriously, you indicated that the CBA was neutral 40 on the bill, do you anticipate a more firm position on the part of the Bar Association as we move

1 forward? I know the bill has come quickly. And I'm told there are a lot of lawyer members of the 2 Colorado Bar Association and as I've learned at the Uniform Law Commission, if 350 lawyers in the 3 room and only 5% want to say something, that's 15. So, is that kind of the issue we're working with 4 here?

5

6 Leticia Maxfield

7 It is a little bit. Senator Gardner, what I will say is I meant what I said. This has really forced the CBA to 8 roll up its sleeves and engage in extensive stakeholder dialogue, not only within CBA leadership, but 9 membership and also our diversity and our affinity bars. We are getting memos from them. They are 10 coming to the Legislative Policy Committee of the CBA. We are having discussions about it. Many of 11 our Legislative Policy Committee members have been watching here today. We learned as much as you 12 did about the position of the branch on some of these issues, some of which are much more nuanced 13 than even I had come to understand in this brief period of time. So, I think we have a lot to discuss. I 14 understand from what I've heard here today, there are probably a handful of amendments that are 15 coming for consideration as well, some of which may be added on some of which may not. So, I can't 16 say that the CBA is going to take a firm position, I imagine we will continue to have very thoughtful, 17 critical comments and we want to be at this table and we want to make sure our diversity bars and our 18 affinity bars are at this table, too. Because this this is a conversation that needs to happen. And like I 19 said we have to get it right for all of us.

20

21 Sen. Gardner

22 Thank you.

23

24 Sen. Gonzales

25 Any further questions? Seeing none, Ms. Maxfield, thank you for your testimony.

26

27 Leticia Maxfield

28 Thank you so much for your time.

29

30 Sen. Gonzales

31 I also want to bring up Emma Garrison.

32

33 Sen. Gonzales

34 Welcome to the Senate Judiciary Committee. If you can please state your name, any organization you 35 represent, and then proceed to testimony.

36

37 Emma Garrison

38 Thank you, Madam Chair. Members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to provide 39 testimony to you today. My name is Emma Garrison, and I am here on behalf of the Colorado Women's 40 Bar Association. We are an organization of over 1,500 attorneys and legal professionals with chapters

1 across the state. Our mission is to promote women in the legal profession, and the interests of women 2 generally. We are still in the process of reviewing this bill so we can better understand the specifics and 3 implications of it as drafted. And the CWBA has not yet taken a formal position with respect to the bill.
4 But we thought it important to be here today to share our overarching concerns on this important issue of 5 judicial discipline that the bill seeks to address. The revelations over the last year and a half about 6 complaints of sexual harassment within the judicial system. And allegations that these complaints were 7 not handled in a transparent way has been profoundly demoralizing for our members. In February 2021, 8 we called a town hall meeting to allow our members to voice their concerns. We also formed an internal 9 committee to press these reforms forward, and to closely engage with this problem on behalf of our 10 members. Since then, we have engaged with various stakeholders, and we are grateful for that 11 opportunity. We are here today to show our dedication to continued engagement on this important issue.
12 When we held the townhall meeting back in February of 2021. The overwhelming consensus was a need 13 for a judicial discipline process that is independent from the judges subject to discipline. We support 14 reform that would make the body responsible for judicial discipline financially independent from the 15 judicial branch. We support changes to the structure of the commission to further keep the judicial 16 disciplinary process independent from the judicial branch. We support further study of this issue in a 17 setting that brings the various stakeholders together, examines what judicial discipline looks like in other 18 states, and creates a solution that balances competing interests, including the concerns of the victims, 19 and the public's confidence in the judiciary. It is our understanding that the vast majority of victims who 20 have raised complaints in the past have been women. We want to ensure their interests are adequately 21 protected, and not overlooked in the name of transparency, particularly when victims personally wish to 22 keep a matter private. There is also significant research showing that women judges and judges of color 23 are more likely to be on the receiving end of complaints as a result of implicit bias. We want to ensure 24 any changes to the process will take this into account, and not lead to a system that discourages women 25 and people of color from applying for the bench. Thank you for your time, we look forward to our 26 continued study of this bill and engagement on this important issue.

27

28 Sen. Gonzales

29 Ms. Garrison, thank you for your testimony, colleagues, what questions do we have for this witness?
30 Senator Gardner.

31

32 Sen. Gardner

33 Thank you, Madam Chair. Ms. Garrison is it? Thank you for being here. And thanks to the Colorado 34 Women's Bar Association for early engagement on this issue. I've heard comments from several that you 35 really did step up early on to talk about this. I want to ask you about this concern as to implicit bias 36 against judges, women, and those of color and being the recipients of greater numbers of complaints and 37 I intuitively get this issue and problem. What I wonder is systemically how do we address that? I mean, 38 the process now is to screen complaints against whomever and to screen them in a way that says okay, 39 what's here is this an unhappy litigant? I mean, it's a similar thing in Attorney Regulation Counsel. Is 40 there something here that really merits further investigation? Or is it something that should be dismissed

1 fairly quickly? So that process exists? Do you have thoughts about what systemically else we could do 2 to deal with the problem? I'm sorry for the long lead in.

3
4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Ms. Garrison.

6
7 Emma Garrison

8 Madam Chair, Senator Gardner, thank you for the question. And thank you for, for drilling in on that. In 9 terms of systemic changes, it has been on our radar for years in terms of judicial performance and 10 judicial nomination. The concerns about implicit bias training, the screeners of the complaints, could be 11 an important issue. And I also think as we have the ongoing conversation of what is made public, that 12 we're not harming women judges and judges of color, by not taking into account implicit bias that might 13 have led to those complaints.

14
15 Sen. Gonzales

16 Further questions, Senator Gardner.

17
18 Sen. Gardner

19 Thank you so. So, I take it that your view would be that our system of confidentiality until you reach a 20 certain point in the judicial discipline processes is important and necessary for what I would call 21 unfounded complaints or complaints that are encouraged by implicit bias. Is that fair?

22
23 Sen. Gonzales

24 Ms. Garrison.

25
26 Emma Garrison

27 Madam Chair. Senator Gardner, yes. I would think that's fair.

28
29 Sen. Gardner

30 Thank you, Ms. Garrison.

31
32 Sen. Gonzales

33 Any further questions? Seeing none, thank you so much for sharing your perspectives with us as we're 34 debating this policy.

35
36 Sen. Gonzales

37 All right. Is there anyone else who wishes to testify in a neutral position on this policy? Either in the 38 room or online? All right. I'd like to welcome up Chris Wallner for questions only.

1 Emma Garrison

2 Thank you so much.

3

4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Oh, okay. Well, he signed up three times here. It's all good.

6

7 Sen. Gardner

8 Make him testify.

9

10 Sen. Gonzales

11 Come back. Okay, well, in that case, I'd like to welcome up the members of the judicial discipline 12 commission.

13

14 Sen. Gonzales

15 Welcome. Before we get started, I just want to extend my appreciation to you all for your patience 16 during this process. And for your service. And I'm sure you all have thoughts about this policy. I'm not 17 quite sure who would like to begin. Ms. Krupa. If you would, please just for the record, state, your 18 name, the organization you represent, and then proceed to testimony. Given the nature, I don't think 19 we'll do a time clock. But please proceed.

20

21 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

22 Thank you. My name is Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa. I'm the Chair of the Commission on Judicial 23 Discipline. I am also the Chair of the Independent Ethics Commission, and I serve on the boards of the 24 Colorado Special Olympics and the National Institute for Trial Advocacy. I'm an almost 30-year 25 attorney in the State of Colorado. I have my own firm, and I have worked mostly as a trial lawyer in 26 criminal defense both for the public defender state and federal system, the Securities and Exchange 27 Commission, and the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel.

28

29 The Commission, as you're aware, has 10 members, the judicial members (two District Court, two 30 County Court), the attorney members are myself and Mindy Sooter from WilmerHale. The judges are 31 Rachel Fresquez from Summit County, Sara Garrido from Jefferson County, Bonnie McLean out of the 32 18th District in Arapahoe. And my Vice Chair David Prince who sits with me today in El Paso County.
33 There are citizen members as well. Jim Carpenter, who some of you may know. Bruce Casias, Yolanda 34 Lyons, and Drucilla Pugh. The judicial members are appointed by the Court. The attorney and citizen 35 members are appointed by the Governor and the Senate.

36

37 The diversity of the Commission is worth mention as well. Our makeup is 70% Female 75% of judges 38 are female. 50% of the commission is made up of people of color and only 20% of white men. When 39 people raise the issue of implicit bias with a commission, and whether or not the Commission's done its 40 job or doing it right. There have been six cases of public discipline since 2014. It is not the Commission

1 that decides when a case is public, it's the Court. We recommend things to the Supreme Court, we are a 2 recommendation body we do investigate, but we don't make our own rules. And we don't make our own 3 findings in terms of discipline or sanction. When it comes to those six cases of public discipline, the 4 number is split 50/50 three male judges, three female judges and five white judges and one judge that 5 was a person of color. There is currently not in any part of our country, a commission on judicial 6 discipline that tracks the demographics of the complaints or the public discipline. That's not done. We've 7 been in contact with the National Center and the national people that guide public discipline of judges 8 and no one does it. So, Colorado would really set that standard. And it is important, it is a good thing to 9 track those numbers.

10 11 The Commission is one of three oversight entities for the Court. The first is the Performance 12 Commission and the Nominating Commission. And then us. There's been talk about a survey. I think, 13 Justice Marquez for years has discussed a survey that shows disparate treatment of female judges and 14 judges of color. That survey is as to performance commissions. The performance commission gets their 15 information from surveys, lawyers, litigants that appear before judges are asked to complete a survey. If 16 there's a bias in that system that definitely needs to be looked at. I'm not sure that there's any 17 demonstrated survey that I'm aware of that shows any kind of disparate treatment. And I mentioned 18 those six cases for that purpose.

19 20 The Senate also heard today about VRA, victims rights issues, there is not that equivalent for the 21 discipline commission and we would welcome that. We do talk with the victims. In fact, in some of the 22 information that we provided to you, there is, quotes, from victims. Of the judges that have been 23 disciplined, four judges were disciplined for abusive conduct. And that compares to the 14 individuals 24 that were targeted by that abusive conduct. I bring that up, because I do think that is an important thing 25 that needs to be considered.

26
27 At the same time, I'll bring up the timing issue. A lot of people have talked about the timing of this bill.
28 And we've heard even Senator Lee and everyone else talk about the timing since that infamous Masias 29 Memo article, and that we still have not even been able to begin our investigation. Of the numbers of 30 pending investigations, not one of them is looking solely at judicial misconduct. All of the pending 31 investigations are focused in their wheelhouse, which is not judicial discipline. We are the only entity 32 that would look at judicial discipline. So, when people say, oh, wait, wait for these other investigations, 33 let them make their recommendations. Let's wait and see what happens. And then we can talk about it.
34 The timing to do something is now. To let us fulfill our mandate, which is to restore the integrity of the 35 judiciary and public trust in it. To be able to expeditiously and fully investigate claims of judicial 36 misconduct, and to educate the judges and the public about judicial misconduct or proper conduct. If we 37 wait and say, oh, let's get this interim committee together, oh, let's wait. We're not allowed to do our job.

38
39 You can pass a bill that gives us funding and creates a document and disclose obligation, which is really 40 just our MOU that we currently have, just memorialized. And add if you want a friendly amendment

1 about victim rights issues. And then the interim committee can continue to look while we work as 2 effectively as we can and as independently as we can at other issues that stakeholders bring.

3
4 The disclosure obligation is nothing new. The disclosure obligation has been there since 2010. And it's 5 not working. Now when the court says well, we can handle internal but we can't handle external. Well, 6 what happens when somebody walks into the court with a complaint and multiple affidavits. And the 7 court clerk or somebody in a district outside of the judiciary says I don't have any duty to document 8 disclose that. What happens to that complaint, what happens to that litigant? What happens to that 9 victim? This is not an onerous process. And we're happy and have talked to stakeholders about 10 amendments, that they give us a summary, that they don't have to give us the entire complaint that 11 Attorney Reg receives. All we want is to be notified of claims of judicial misconduct. And we want, if 12 there's documents provided or investigation done, for that to be shared. And one of the reasons is if you 13 have multiple witnesses or victims, you don't want to expose them to eight different types of interviews 14 during multiple different investigations.

15
16 As far as the interim committee and what stakeholders are there, I understand Senator Lee, that you will 17 have an open process and whatever interim committee there is that you welcome everyone who is 18 willing to provide input. I would hope that includes us. We're one of the bigger stakeholders in this 19 because we do it. All 10 of us volunteer and spend a lot of time and take it very seriously. And we want 20 to protect these people. We want to protect the public, we also want to be able to protect the Judiciary.
21 Unless we are independent, what we do means nothing. How are we supposed to say that we are able to 22 do our job and we can even investigate the one entity that has control an oversight over us? How does 23 that give our Commission any credibility? Just let us do our job. That's all we're asking.

24
25 When the Supreme Court says that they want to get out of judicial discipline business, what they mean is 26 the investigation part and the disclosure parts. We have some of the highest confidentiality rules that 27 they created. What we can talk about is very minimal. So, anything that gets shared with us is not public.
28 And we're not advocating for everything to be public, because out of the numbers of complaints we get, 29 many of them are dismissed, either for jurisdictional issues, because they're complaining about a ruling, 30 which we can't do anything about. Our jurisdiction is very clear. We don't get the volume, that they're 31 making it sound like it's going to be so onerous and cost prohibitive.

32
33 The Supreme Court has exclusive authority to promulgate our rules, to decide the discipline and 34 sanction. They control the entire process. So, when they say they want out of the judicial discipline 35 business, what does that really mean? Because their efforts so far don't seem to indicate that. I would 36 like to turn it over to my co-chair, David Prince, for him to be able to provide some information as well.

37
38 Sen. Gonzales

39 Thank you, Chair Krupa. Judge Prince.

40

1 David Prince

2 Good. I was about to say good afternoon, but I think I should say good evening. Thank you, Madam 3 Vice Chair, and thank you to the members of the committee. Appreciate your dedication in a long day.
4 And I know for you one of many, and frankly, still short by your standards a lot of times. But by my 5 standards, I have to admit it's kind of long. We had been thinking of the of the three-minute clock, so I'm 6 trying to adjust my plan as I go. But my name is David Prince. I'm the Vice Chair of the discipline
7 commission. I've served on the Commission since about 2018. I always forget what year I started, but I 8 think it was about 2018. I've been a lawyer for just over 30 years. So, I guess I'm junior to several in the 9 room. I've been a judge for about half of that time. I was a commercial litigator beforehand in a large 10 firm and involved in management. Relevant to today, I've been very involved in systems design for 11 some reason in the grand scheme of my career. One of the larger projects I did a few years ago with Mr.
12 Vasconcellos actually was designing the certification process for problem solving courts in Colorado, 13 which we were one of the earliest adopters. We weren't the first, but we were one of the earliest adopters 14 and a process that went remarkably smoothly. I am a member of the National Judicial College faculty. I 15 do a lot of teaching also internationally through UNESCO and the State Department on rule of law and 16 court design issues. Again, relevant to today's discussion. In fact, I was actually working on a long-term 17 project remotely with the courts of Ukraine when we had to stop our project because the Russians 18 invaded not that long ago. So, I have some experience with system design, which is part of what we're 19 talking about here today. When we talked about our organization, we thought we would give you an 20 overview of what the organization is because so few people know much about the disciplinary 21 commission.

23 So, Ms. Krupa has talked a bit about who the Commission is and how the commission gets created. I 24 was going to talk a little bit more about just our process. So, there are basically five phases or five steps 25 in our process and this is in the slides that you have. If you want to look at them. We start with the 26 screening process, investigation, formal proceedings recommendation, and then the final decision. So, 27 under the Constitution, we the judicial discipline commission are assigned the task as an independent 28 body created separate and apart from the judiciary with a judicial perspective. That's why we have judge 29 members of the Commission with a lawyer perspective. That's why we have lawyer members of the 30 Commission. And with a citizen perspective, a citizen involved commission. Now if you know our 31 overall system of merit selection, you already know that's a very similar sounding design, because that's 32 similar to the design that we use for the commissions on nominating and the commissions on 33 performance, because it's meant to be citizen involved.

34
35 So, we take this independent body and we say, okay, all of the complaints about judicial misconduct 36 come to this independent constitutional body and then that body decides what happens with it. We do 37 the initial screening. Senator Lee asked me earlier, what's the rule on that? That's Rule 13. In case you 38 care, Colorado Rule of Judicial Discipline 13 lays out exactly what our screening process is. And yes, 39 the large majority of the complaints that we get are what I would call frivolous. There's a standard of 40 reasonable basis, but they're usually a complaint about I didn't like the judge's ruling. That's the large

1 majority, that doesn't surprise you. We get about 200 complaints per year. Of those 200 complaints per 2 year, we need to do factual development, we need to go out and find evidence on about 70 of them. So, 3 that number is probably higher than you expected to hear. Because we look into quite a few of them.
4 Okay, so that initial screening process is done. And that screening process can be done initially by our 5 Executive Director, but he has to report to the Commission. So, the Commission continues to maintain 6 that control.

7

8 Okay, then we go to our investigation phase. That is if the complaint survives, if there's something worth 9 looking into, then we start looking for facts, and Senator Cooke was talking about, you know, our job is 10 to go out and get the witnesses and facts. That's what we call our investigation phase. In that phase, we 11 are essentially a grand jury. Those of you who know the criminal justice system will be familiar with 12 that concept. That's really a fact-finding body and investigative body that does their work before any 13 actual case in a criminal case is filed. In fact, they're the ones who decide whether a criminal case will be 14 filed or not. In that investigative phase, we have to have tools to be able to go out and get evidence. The 15 next phase is formal proceedings. Now, that's the equivalent of the trial if you want to use a criminal or 16 civil analogy. So, if the grand jury says yes, there's going to be charges filed, that's what we do. We say, 17 yes, there's going to be charges filed. We call that starting formal proceedings.

18

19 Formal proceedings start, there's actually two methods to do formal proceedings. You can either have 20 the Commission itself hold the hearing, which is very rarely done. Or you can have the Supreme Court 21 appoint three special masters, and they'll actually hold the hearing. That's the more common approach to 22 it. Okay. And then once you do that trial proceeding, and that's a very abbreviated . . . Analogous to any 23 trial, whether civil or criminal, there's discovery phase in that as well, and some back and forth, and 24 some pleadings and motions. But it's meant to happen over about three months, it's meant to be pretty 25 abbreviated at that point. And then the hearing, does the fact-finding, actual fact-finding on it. And 26 recommendations are made. The Commission itself makes recommendations for formal proceedings, we 27 use what's called Special Counsel under our rules, think of it like a DA, and they're the prosecutor that 28 you bring in. So, when we prepare recommendations, the special counsel also prepares 29 recommendations. If we had used special masters, then the Special Masters would also prepare 30 recommendations. So, a great deal of diversity of opinion brought in here, you actually have three 31 different entities that are coming up with the recommendations.

32

33 Assume it's serious discipline at that point, that goes to the final phase, which is final decision. And 34 that's being proposed. And that recommendation is made to the Supreme Court. So, the entire record is 35 packaged up by the Commission, based on that hearing, sent over to the Supreme Court.
36 Recommendations are made and then the Supreme Court actually has a very wide discretion, it can 37 pretty much do what it wants at that point. It can expand the evidentiary record. In other words, it could 38 hold its own trial. It could hold supplemental proceedings to gather more evidence. It could do more 39 discovery, if it wanted. It can take argument, that's more common, and then make a decision. So that's 40 the basic process from front to back for us.

1 As I said, we get about 200 complaints, we call them RFEs. But we get about 200 complaints a year.
2 About 70 of those we actually have to use and I'll say investigation without meaning necessarily the 3 investigation phase, develop facts and then not many of them actually go to public discipline. We've 4 literally had the six cases over the last several years that Ms. Krupa talked about. And she gave you the 5 basic stats on those. What are the kinds of issues that get judges in trouble for serious discipline, public 6 discipline? Three of those cases involved criminal proceedings. And then four of those cases, notice 7 there's an overlap because there's six, four of those cases involved abusive behavior towards somebody 8 else. And, so, Ms. Krupa gave you some of the statistics on that. Of the four judges who were abusive, 9 they were 14 people who were the survivors of that abusive behavior. And that is only those who were 10 part of the allegation that was the basis for sanction. Because one of things we found out is when we do 11 public sanction, we then start to hear once it becomes public, have all these other instances. And you 12 actually heard a little bit of that on some of the comments today. And turns out there are a lot more 13 people who have issues. We don't end up having to look into those, because we've already done our role.
14 So that's the basic overall process.

15

16 Let's come to the bill. I think I'll wait and see what questions there are about what challenges we've 17 encountered. I think I'll just go to the bill at this point. So, what does the bill do? The bill actually only 18 addresses, it's meant to be pretty narrow. It addresses three fairly simple things, that based on the 19 iterations over the last couple of three months now of work on a bill in various drafts that the judiciary 20 had indicated were appropriate for the bill at this time to address those three topics are.

21

22 Let's take the easy one, create the interim committee to look at the issues that can't be resolved at this 23 point or are not being resolved at this point.

24

25 Next one is, address funding. Now that doesn't appear to be too controversial at that point, either.
26 Independent funding, provide independent funding.

28 And then the third one that's gotten a lot more talk today is establish an information sharing system. And 29 that information sharing is the one you're hearing a lot more about today. And there's two components of 30 that. And I'll go ahead and talk about those. Okay, two basic components are one, we get, let's do one 31 that hasn't talked about been talked about very much today, because I don't think it's controversial. So, 32 let's try to get all those to the side. And that is information sharing among the three entities that are 33 tasked with oversight in our merit selection system. Because right now, as you've already know, we've 34 got nominating commission, we've got performance commission, and then we've got the discipline 35 commission. But each of these three commissions are pretty siloed. They do their own work, they keep 36 their head down, they do their own stuff. They have different rules of confidentiality, different rules 37 about information sharing. They don't work cooperatively. They don't share information with each other.

38

39 Performance commission, there was actually a witness here for the performance commission, but 40 couldn't stay and so he didn't get to testify. But one of the things he was talking about, he's the former

1 most recent former Chair, was that that it's been a continuing frustration with the performance 2 commission, that they don't get information from the discipline commission. Well, our rules don't 3 authorize us to do that. So, we don't really get to share it. Because again, we've got very robust 4 confidentiality rules that go all the way up to the Constitution. The, and we're aware of it, I'm aware of at 5 least one case where a performance commission got pretty serious allegations of judicial misconduct that 6 they took very seriously. And it never got sent over to discipline commission. Now, they weren't hiding 7 anything, they weren't covering anything up, they had their silo, their blinders on. And they were 8 working on their own task and didn't think to send it over to us. And, so, it doesn't get examined. And 9 they say the same thing that they're doing their performance evaluation, and then they find out after it's 10 become public, that there was some discipline that they never knew about. So, they want us to 11 communicate. And that's not provided for right now.

12
13 There is some provision for us to share information with the Judicial Department when it comes to a 14 senior judge, who's someone asking to be a senior judge or a nominating commission when some judges 15 asking to move to a different court, that kind of thing. Okay. So, they're very narrow rules that allow for 16 some information sharing, but not a whole lot.

17
18 So, the bigger one, the one that people are really talking about is the obligation of the Judicial 19 Department to share information with judicial discipline. That's pretty critical. Now, it's been talked 20 about as if it's something novel, and it's something unusual, something burdensome, something onerous.
21 And it really isn't. It comes from the 2010 Memorandum of Understanding. The 2010 Memorandum of 22 Understanding, it's entered through the HR department at Judicial but the Judicial Department has 23 confirmed for several times that it's the judicial department itself that has the duty of disclosure. And 24 they are required to disclose to us when they receive a complaint from the outside of conduct that quote, 25 could be judicial misconduct. They're required to forward that on to us. There's also a CJD, that that got 26 just amended the other last year. And it also requires that complaints, but only complaints of harassment 27 and discrimination, that they actually be passed to the HR department that the HR department then 28 confer with us, and they provide us information. Now, back to the MOU. So, the two categories are the 29 external and the internal. The internal, the old the 2010 MOU requires the Judiciary to actually 30 investigate. A lot of discussion about the act requires an investigation. The bill doesn't actually require 31 an investigation. The old MOU requires an investigation. And that requires an affirmative investigation 32 and then after only the preliminary investigation, meaning relatively rapidly the Judicial Department is 33 to disclose to the Commission all their investigative notes and the results of their investigation, the 34 information that they have. That's the way the system is supposed to work. So, the bill is really designed 35 just to codify that existing requirement.

36
37 Okay. Now, there's some discussion about whether some of the language should be shifted, those kinds 38 of things. That's not a problem, we can tinker with that language. But the basic philosophy is not 39 creating some new and onerous burden, it is to say, you agreed in 2010, judicial department, because it's 40 a contract, that you are going to provide this disclosure information. We have found that that is not

1 happening. And we've also found that the MOU itself is not an effective mechanism for making it 2 happen. And we have found that we don't have an effective means of requiring it to happen.
3 Enforcement, if you want to call it that. And even this bill doesn't require enforcement. The difference is 4 that the bill codifies it. So, it's not just an agreement, and it clarifies that that obligation to disclose is 5 made. A lot of focus is on the requirement that well, witnesses have to be identified and passed on too 6 those kinds of things. Well, there are reasons for those parts of the bill the way that they are. Let's talk 7 about the witness. One, it doesn't require them to go out and find witnesses. All they have to do is pass 8 along the file, and the file will contain the witnesses. Think about discovering a police matter, they hand 9 over the police report. Well, they don't give you a separate list of who the witnesses are. They give you 10 the police report, and the police report says the names in them. So, all they have to do is give us access 11 and send over the file that's related to it. And the truth of the matter is a lot of these complaints, the core 12 information, the actual evidence is in the files of the judiciary. So that's critical that we have that 13 information and access to those files. And that's why the bill also says you'll send over the complaint, 14 you'll send over this basic information that identifies witnesses, etc. But you'll also provide access. So 15 that we can follow up and ask questions.

16

17 Why is witness in there? Well, one, if you look at the judicial. Now, that's embarrassing, because that's 18 my phone.

19

20 Sen. Gonzales

21 Its been that kind of day.

22

23 David Prince

24 So, they're required to send over witness information, as I said earlier, they're not required to separately 25 listed. But that comes from real experience, you already know that we have very strict confidentiality 26 rules. And, so, we're not allowed to talk about the facts of individual investigations or the specifics of 27 the investigation. But we are allowed to talk about how our operations are proceeding and how effective 28 they are. And, so, we asked the judiciary on a question on a case. And we learn of it indirectly. And, so, 29 we asked them about it. And they won't tell us the name of the complaining witness. I wish Senator 30 Cooke were here because it was sort of what his question of well, isn't it the judicial discipline 31 commission's job to go out and find the witnesses? Well, we have to have some help to find the starting 32 place. And the complaining witness's name would be really helpful. And, so, we went month after 33 month before we finally got the complaining witness's name. We have a similar kind of situation where 34 we get word of an allegation that's known in an area, and it involves a judge who is unnamed, at least in 35 the allegation that we're able to get that circulating in the public. You know, the worst kept secret in the 36 courthouse. And, so, we ask about it. Who is this? The allegation is that they did this and this timeframe 37 on this court, this basic identifying information, who is that? Judicial won't tell us. Now, four months go 38 by, and eventually we get the name. And, so, we can pursue. The problem is the information sharing 39 systems we have in place are not working. And, so, we need something more robust, so that hopefully

1 they will be respected. And hopefully, the interim committee will come up with some sort of 2 enforcement mechanism down the road. But that's why that information sharing is so critical.

3
4 We are not trying to offload on to the Judiciary, the obligation of investigation. We have never taken 5 that position. It gets raised a lot, but we're not asking them to investigate. We're asking them to let us do 6 our job, let us investigate. Most of the pushback we've gotten from the Judiciary in the last few months 7 had been more like, well, we want to do the screening of what gets sent to you. There was a proposal not 8 long ago, if we would only send you complaints, if there's a substantial likelihood that they're going to 9 result in discipline. Well, that's our job. The Constitution says the complaints come to the commission.
10 And the commission then decides what to do, how much factual investigation how far along it should 11 go. That's really not appropriate for the Judiciary, because it makes them vulnerable to exactly the kind 12 of attacks we have right now. And it also prevents us from doing our job. We don't actually get to look 13 into the evidence. So, that's why that is such a critical part of the bill. And that's why it's included at this 14 time, because it should be non-controversial.

15
16 I can't tell you how many times I've heard Judicial Leadership say over the last year, we fully support 17 transparency on investigations of judicial misconduct. We fully support and the phrase that was coined 18 is unfettered access to the Judiciary's files and information for the investigators. But that's not our 19 experience. That's not what we're getting. And we can come back to those for specific details. But that's 20 really the overview of what the bill actually does.

21
22 There are reasons that only a couple of issues are addressed. You notice that most of the people that 23 testified in opposition to the bill, they weren't really opposed to part of the bill. What they were opposed 24 to was that the bill didn't do enough. Well, there's good reason for that. Some of their positions, some of 25 their philosophies, I agree with. Some of them, I don't. But there's good reason it didn't go further, 26 because of the interim committee. The interim committee is going to actually study the broader issues.
27 These should be the non-controversial issues. If judiciary gets a complaint of judicial misconduct, it 28 ought to be non-controversial, that they need to pass that on to the discipline commission, and give the 29 discipline commission access to their evidence. I heard some ambiguity, only because we've had this 30 experience for the last year in some of the phrasing of what the Judiciary opposed or didn't oppose, I 31 heard a couple of times the phrase refer it on when they get a complaint. And that was actually used for 32 the third, the outside complaints, the external complaints, we'd refer it on. Well, what that means is 33 pretty important. And it could mean one of two things. It could mean, you raised a complaint. And, so, I 34 will refer you that you need to go somewhere else. Do you need to go in a discipline commission and 35 contact them? Or it could mean what I think it means is, I got a complaint from you, I will pass it on to 36 judicial discipline so that they can do their job. That's all that they're required to do under the act.
37 They're not required to go out and find witnesses, scour files, they're just required to pass along what 38 they actually have. And again, we can narrow that I think it's a very good idea, particularly for the 39 externals to say, if requested, where you where the statute lists what information has to be passed on, 40 just put in a couple of words: if requested. But we have to know about the complaint first, and we have

1 to know the basics. Who's making the complaint? What is the substance of the complaint? Otherwise, 2 we don't know how to even start the investigation. Okay. So that's big picture of what the act is intended 3 to do. I'll stop talking now. We were going to ask our Executive Director, if he would present briefly on 4 kind of our funding that turns out to be not that controversial today.
5

6 Christopher Gregory

7 We might be surprised. I'm Christopher Gregory. I'm the Executive Director of the Colorado 8 Commission on Judicial Discipline. I'm a Colorado native. I was born and I grew up in Gunnison. I've 9 practiced law for 18 years. Prior to becoming the Executive Director, my experience as a lawyer took 10 me to both rural and urban jurisdictions. My focus was on criminal defense, representing children and 11 parents in child welfare cases. I started my career as a public defender. So, I've had connections with, I 12 think, a spectrum of people that have been involved in the court system as well as different clients.
13 Around the State, my practice included being in Las Animas and Huerfano Counties, Gunnison County, 14 Larimer County, Weld County and Boulder County, I spent the last four years as a Commissioner 15 serving approximately two years of that role, either as the Vice Chair or the Chair of our Commission.
16 And then, I was selected to become the present Executive Director. It is truly my privilege to serve in a 17 role where I can work to protect the integrity of Colorado's judicial process.
18

19 That said, I think this bill really breaks down to three simple purposes. One, the Commission right now 20 isn't able to do its job. And the reason that it's not able to do its job is it has to ask permission to do 21 things. Whether that's asking for permission to get evidence to perform its investigations and go through 22 that trial process that Judge Prince described, or it's even to ask for when we would get information. But 23 perhaps the most practical issue here is that the Commission right now has to ask for its financial 24 resources. And that's not what was intended with the constitutional provision, itself. If you were to look 25 at Article VI, Section 23(3)(c), there's a notation that when the Commission was originally created, it 26 was just the commissioners. With the growth of the judiciary, of course, there is more of an 27 administrative function. There's an impossibility that 10 volunteer commissioners would be able to do 28 all of the work. But even then, the idea was that the commissioners would travel and whatever their 29 expenses would be, those would be provided and paid for by the Supreme Court, from its budget as 30 appropriated by the Legislature. There was an expectation that whatever funding the Commission had, it 31 wasn't going to be qualified. And there wasn't going to be discretion as to whether we could spend 32 money on our basic function. Whether we could hire Special Counsel to do something, whether we 33 would be able to afford a computer for our office, whether we'd be able to afford rent, that sort of thing.
34 That was all contemplated at the constitutional founding of this Commission. And we shouldn't lose 35 sight of that. Because I think what's being proposed here is that we shift from our existing funding 36 mechanism, which had itself evolved over time.
37

38 Right now, the Commission is solely funded through attorney registration fees. And this is codified in 39 Rule of Civil Procedure 227. And it notes this basic structure that's been talked about. That my salary, 40 our legal assistant's salary, that's paid for directly through these funds. But then, these funds should also

1 provide for investigations and Special Counsel. In the Rule, it's specific that those resources are 2 reimbursed through the Office of Regulation Counsel. If you look further at our Rules of Judicial 3 Discipline, there's also notation that, as the Executive Director, I should be responsible for preparing a 4 budget and administrating the Commission's funds. What's kind of happened is that, yes, I can submit a 5 request. But all of this is sort of happening through whatever Office of Regulation Counsel and the 6 Supreme Court signing off on their funding is willing to grant and there's our friction and there's, you 7 know, sort of our problem. But just to be clear, right now, our resources are: me, our halftime legal 8 assistant. The investigative resource and the Special Counsel resource, it was a brilliant idea. It's 9 completely scalable. Like, no matter how many complaints we receive, no matter how intensive they 10 would be, we would be able to rely on Office of Regulation Counsel to provide that resource. What's 11 happened recently, and it's not just with this judicial scandal, Office of Regulation Counsel on different 12 cases has said, oh well, we have a conflict, we can't do that function for you. You're going to have to go 13 and find this elsewhere. But that's not accompanied with, let us pay for that. Or, you know, where are 14 you going to get the financing, you know, to do that. Our core current budget right now is about 15 $304,000.

17 What the Judiciary is asking for by requesting that that go to the General Fund is to take that off of their 18 books, also to take off any expense of our investigations or the role that the Office of Attorney 19 Regulation Counsel was providing previously. I think that this Commission, I think that this committee, 20 and this Legislature should be somewhat concerned by that. Because this is essentially a windfall for the 21 Judicial Branch in being able to kind of shift the responsibility for the Commission. Over time, there has 22 been a considerable number of straw men that had been created. And getting to the finances, you will 23 see some more of them. But it's really troublesome that the Judiciary stands and says, oh, it's a 24 separation of powers concern. That's why none of this can be dealt with. If the committee focuses on the 25 fact that Article VI, that is the portion of the Constitution that relates to the Judicial Branch includes the 26 Commission, we are essentially affiliated with that branch of government, allowing us the independence 27 to do what was constitutionally intended. It's hard to understand where that creates a separation of 28 powers problem. The separation of powers problem is that the Supreme Court just is not consenting to 29 the resources and the ability that we need to do our job.

30
31 One thing that was mentioned in the Chief Justice's statements, which I think I need to bring up now, 32 before I shift to the specific funding proposals in this bill, there was an allegation that on one case, the 33 Commission had essentially enabled judicial misconduct by proposing that a judge receive a paid 34 suspension prior to retirement. That case was involving Baca County Court Judge Deborah Gunkel. It's 35 one of our public cases, there is a published opinion about what happened there. The judge had gotten 36 two DUIs before, ultimately, leaving the bench. But as part of that process, there was a negotiation to 37 avoid formal proceedings. The expense of that, and what it would cost the public treasury, or at least 38 attorney registration fees with our current funding. And one of the proposals was for that judge, Judge 39 Gunkel, to retire on a schedule, but also to have a little bit of time to sort out whatever was needed, as 40 far as benefits and the like. But that effectively would have removed her from the bench sooner,

1 immediately. We submitted that recommendation to the Supreme Court, and it was rejected and with 2 really no explanation other than the rule for public sanctions provides for an unpaid suspension.
3 However, we have another Rule of Judicial Discipline 34 that allows for voluntary suspensions with 4 paid leave. So, it's not clear why that was rejected. But it wasn't that the Supreme Court was standing up 5 and preventing the Commission from enabling judicial misconduct. On the contrary, because of the 6 delay caused by rejecting that recommendation, the judge stayed on the bench until the final stipulation 7 was submitted and approved by the Court.

8
9 That said, if I could move to our current funding request and the fiscal note that was prepared for this 10 Committee. What the Commission is asking for is a 4-person FTE office that would include the 11 Executive Director, Legal Assistant but at a full-time rate, an attorney, and an investigator. The reason 12 that we would need a separate attorney and investigator is Rule of Professional Conduct 3.7 which 13 prohibits witness and attorney conflicts and would just, essentially, be the minimal level of resources 14 that we would need to have in order to in-house the functions that have always been or in recent times 15 delegated to the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel. I kind of analogize this to, you know, the fire 16 station. That firefighters aren't utilized 100% of the time, but when they're needed, you need to have that 17 resource ready and available. And that's essentially what we're asking for, with our request. Also, the bill 18 includes a $400,000 essentially trust or insurance fund, so that if contingencies or extraordinary 19 expenses came up, we wouldn't have to ask permission to get the funding, we could just appropriate that 20 and use it. All the while being fiscally responsible and following any required oversight. But if you look 21 at it this way, this isn't creating a real fiscal impact. You know, if the judiciary were responsible for the 22 funds that are already being spent for the Commission, all this would do is just shift the resources 23 around. So, I would just emphasize that. Looking at the fiscal note, though, that was prepared for this 24 Committee. There was some additions in there that I think can probably be dealt with at different times.
25 One was to include $100,000 education and outreach budget. I don't know if that's quite necessary, I 26 think additional money could be added to our travel. So that either me or an attorney working with the 27 office could go and give some in-house presentations to Judicial Districts, to nominating commissions, 28 to performance commissions. Just to ensure that everybody is aware of the Code of Judicial Conduct and 29 following things. The notation for centrally appropriated cost. I think that that's an erroneous figure in 30 the fiscal note that should be corrected. One thing to note, after I took over as Executive Director, I 31 realized that all of our old records from 1966, when the Commission was formed to, I guess, 1990, 32 they're all on microfilm and will need to be transferred to a digital format, and that will cost $6,000. But 33 here's the controversy.

35 And here's the problem with the fiscal note. If you look at it closely, there's a proposed $622,750 and an 36 additional 1.8 FTEs being allocated to the Judicial Department to create, I guess, a liaison position 37 between us and the other commissions, which hasn't been necessary up to this point. And, also, to create 38 an IT position so that they can deploy a $350,000 computer system to track I guess, referrals or these 39 external complaints or whatever. It doesn't make any sense. If you look at the existing MOU that we 40 have from 2010, that does say records need to be conveyed to the Commission. But you know, one thing

1 that I think needs to be mentioned with that is it needs to be read in conjunction with the Chief Justice
2 Directive, 08-06. And I provided both the memorandum of understanding the Chief Justice Directive, 3 another order that we have from the Court delegating our access to cases that might be suppressed or 4 otherwise. And this is, of course, complicated by the new electronic system that we have. But if you read 5 those things in conjunction, the Chief Justice Directive, as it exists right now, says that if there's an 6 allegation of harassment, physical violence, any of those things caused by a judge whether its internal or 7 external, those things are supposed to be automatically reported to the Commission. We're not asking for 8 anything different in the language of this bill. And it doesn't require that the Judiciary complete an 9 investigation. All it says is that these things need to be referred over to the Commission. I would 10 emphasize that if you look at Chief Justice Directive 08-06, what it existed in prior forms, the HR 11 department would do their own internal investigation of things and come to a conclusion as to whether 12 or not it was worthy of coming over to the Commission. It is that exercise of discretion that has created 13 some real problems over time. And I would just emphasize to this Committee, one of them. In one of our 14 older public discipline cases, Robert Rand, up in Larimer County. There was a parade of people 15 impacted by the judge's conduct, and you can read the opinion. And you can see really how over the top 16 those actions were. The difficulty was that case was first brought to the HR department at Judicial 17 approximately a year before it was reported to the Commission. And during that delay, numerous people 18 were harmed. So, all of this aside, it is the timing of when things are reported the Commission. And 19 that's not the only case, we've had others where the Court did their whole evaluation, and then we only 20 heard about it later, because it was directly reported to us. That type of case, you know, also resulted in 21 discipline, but these things have to change. And if all it means is that we add the if requested phrase, and 22 we obviate the need for $622,000, of spending, to the Judicial Department for this, I think it again strikes 23 down one more of the straw persons that had been created in an opposition to this bill.

24

25 Accordingly, I would just humbly request that this committee do everything in its power to allow our 26 Commission to do the work that was defined for it under the Constitution, and has been implemented 27 through the Rules of Judicial Discipline. Thank you so much for listening to my long, drawn-out 28 comments.

29

30 Sen. Gonzales

31 Thank you, Director Gregory, for sharing your perspectives alongside Chair Krupa and Judge Prince. At 32 this time, I want to see what questions members of the Committee have for our witnesses here today.
33 Colleagues questions? I know that you both do so. Senator Lee.

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Thank you, Madam Chair and Judge Prince, you talked about the challenges you had in identifying 37 complaining witnesses and getting that information. You got some information from the Judicial 38 Department and an insufficient amount of information to follow up on it. And you indicated that that 39 was an issue that prevented you from tracking down the witnesses? Could you go through that again,

1 because I know that was a response to Senator Cooke's, or that was an elaboration on an issue that 2 Senator Cooke had raised earlier. And I wanted to have him get the benefit of that explanation.

3
4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Judge Prince.

6
7 David Prince

8 Thank you for the question, Senator. So, one of the comments made earlier is isn't it the discipline 9 commission's job to go out and find the witnesses? Yes, it is. But you have to have a starting place. And 10 so one, I think one has to be clear, or one has to be careful about saying what is the information? I'm not 11 saying it's very well, what's the where does the commission gets started? So, the practical reality is that 12 the complaint is going to come in. For many of these things through Judicial first, let's talk about the 13 internal ones. That's the easiest thing to talk about. And again, that seems to be the least controversial.
14 So, the internal complaint comes in at the judiciary, and they have file material. It's the nature of it being 15 particularly an internal complaint. They have file material. Think of it as a police report. And the 16 question is, and that was left a little vague earlier, is when you say, advised judicial discipline of the 17 complaint, and then get out of the business. Wait a minute, there's an additional part missing. If we don't 18 know what's in those files, we don't have much to investigate. And there is a case example. I can't get 19 into the facts of the case, but I'm talking about our processes, how they work, where we learn of an 20 allegation against a judge. There are some specifics, so it's identifiable. And, so, we ask the judiciary 21 about it. And they won't even tell us who the complaining witness is. So, we don't have anybody to 22 interview. It's in their files, but they won't tell us who it is. And they won't identify who the judge is. It's 23 in their files, but they won't tell us. Months and months go by for the complaining witness. It was nearly 24 a year before we got that information for the judge. It was many, many months. And so the bill that's 25 why some of these provisions are specifically in the bill about you do have to provide the witness list, 26 but they're not required to go out and make a list of witnesses or find out or search the files for 27 witnesses, all they have to do is send over their file, just like a police officer would send over their 28 police report. And in that police report would be the names of the key people. And that would be 29 fulfilling the burden.

30
31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Senator Cooke.

33
34 Sen. Cooke

35 Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for that. I guess what I was getting at was, there's, like you said, 36 there's a starting point. And, so, on an external complaint, somebody calls up and said, hey, I have a 37 complaint against this judge? Would it be just enough for the person from judicial to say, Okay, what's 38 your name and number and then forward that on to you? And then that then, and not say, okay, are there 39 any more additional witnesses? What is their statements or whatever, but just say, hey, here's a name 40 and a phone number of somebody that complained. And then you take it from there, and then you, the

1 Commission, goes out and finds additional witnesses, and then requests the reports, and, and all that 2 kind of stuff. Would that be appropriate?

3

4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Judge Prince.

6

7 David Prince

8 Thank you, Senator for the question. Yes, all I do is send us what they've got. And that's part of the 9 challenge is we just want what they've got so that we can then do our investigative work. We just need 10 that minimum basic information. And sure, if all they have is this person called and made this complaint, 11 and here's the number, they give it to us. That's all they have to give us. If they have a file, though, if it 12 says on this date there was a court proceeding, and the judge used the N word from the bench or 13 something like that. Well, they let us know that they have the complaint. Now, we actually already have 14 access. And this bill also confirmed that we would continue to have access, we have access, so we can 15 just listen to the recording. While they fulfilled their obligation. They've made the record available to us.

16

17 Sen. Gonzales

18 Thank you.

19

20 David Prince

21 Just that simple.

22

23 Sen. Gonzales

24 Senator Gardner.

25

26 Sen. Gardner

27 Thank you all. Thank you all for your service, for your commitment to this issue. I regret that members 28 of the Judicial Department are not here. I didn't expect them to be here. But they can hear what I say on 29 the record about this. It wouldn't have been appropriate to say it earlier. I have met with you more than I 30 met with them. But I have met with them. I understand this problem. I understand it. I think about as 31 well as anybody in the General Assembly does other than perhaps my colleague from El Paso County.
32 And I walk away from talking with all of you both sides and shake my head. Because I think there ought 33 to be a way through this. And there ought to be a way to a bill that everybody can do and I have opined 34 to some of my colleagues and my associate that one would hope that people that were in the job of 35 dispute resolution on all sides could resolve the dispute, but it doesn't seem to doesn't seem to be the 36 case. And so here we are in lengthy committee meetings. Let me get to the chase. And I really appreciate 37 I do what as I expressed to the outset, I think is a very nuanced problem. Judge prints, I appreciate your 38 presenting it in a very simple way. But there are some nuances to it. As to funding, I think there is broad 39 agreement in this room and out there and everywhere about funding because those of us who know what 40 it means to control the purse strings of an organization know that you cannot be truly independent if

1 you're dependent upon your funding of the very people that you ultimately are in charge of having 2 oversight of. But there's some things in the funding provision where I don't know if you intended to or 3 not, but you try to have it both ways. I think the Judicial Department says well, if you're going to be free 4 then be free. I don't want to put words in their mouth all together. But Is that acceptable to the 5 Commission or do you have concerns? It means we probably have to find money and we have to make 6 that so. But are you prepared to do your own IT and your own? And I think that means you go to state 7 OIT and figure all of that out. But are you prepared to run your own operation in that sense and be free?
8

9 Sen. Gonzales

10 Chair Krupa.

11
12 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

13 Thank you. Thank you, Senator Gardner. In the, in the challenges that we faced trying to really just get 14 funding for our special counsel, more challenges became apparent. And if you remember the history, the 15 Commission initially was funded by the Legislature, there were some issues with that some concerns 16 that the Legislature would somehow interfere and guide what we did. So, we wouldn't be independent.
17 Right. So, at that point, I believe it was John Gleason, who's the former head of Attorney Reg. and a 18 Supreme Court Justice that said, okay, you know, let's do it through attorney regulation fees. And it 19 seemed to work fine until it didn't. Because it had never been in an investigation of a Supreme Court 20 Justice. So, when that becomes apparent, the conflict and the inability to resolve that conflict became 21 more apparent. And it was at that point that the Court came to us and said, if you don't like us 22 controlling the purse strings, go get your money. Go get it. And we had, I think, two weeks or less.
23 Three days, excuse me.
24

25 Sen. Gardner

26 If I may, I understand that that was a challenge for you. And I respect your meeting the challenge.
27

28 Sen. Gonzales

29 Chair Krupa.

30
31 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

32 And if I may, what we had talked about was, well, you know, we're not lobbyists. We haven't done this 33 before. We're all volunteers, we don't get paid. We're not really sure what we're doing. And our prior 34 Executive Director did not create the budget. He did not. He relied on Attorney Reg. and the Court to 35 really prepare all of that. So, we hire a new director, he comes in in January, God bless him for actually 36 having some experience on the Commission on Judicial Discipline because he had to hit the floor 37 running, and we had assistance we had some guidance on, tell us what you need. Tell us what you know, 38 tell us your wish list. And we'll see what we can get written and agreed upon. And we're happy to 39 negotiate. We've never not tried to negotiate. We're still trying to negotiate items with the Court. We're 40 happy for whatever funding we can get. Are we prepared? Well, that would really be Mr. Gregory who

1 would have to jump through hiring an attorney, doing all of that work. But yes, initially, when we 2 weren't sure if our funding was getting cut off entirely, we were trying to prepare a budget from scratch.
3 The issue was, we didn't really have one, what we had is designated funds from Attorney Reg that only 4 paid the salaries. That's it. And different from other commissions like the performance commission, the 5 independent ethics commission, we've never had a memorandum of understanding with a court to be 6 housed in the Carr Building, to have computers, phone, IT, all of that. So, we didn't even know if we had 7 that. So, trying to resource that and figure out the funding, I'm sure would be way more than the funding 8 that's proposed. To get us truly independent, we would need more than a million dollars. That's not 9 what's contemplated. And we don't want to sound like oh, taxpayers, it's already being paid for. But let's 10 take it out of there and make you pay for it. Because we pay taxes. We don't want to do that to people. I 11 also pay attorney regulation fees, which I know you do as well. Happy to have either a hybrid of that, 12 that Mr. Gregory as our Executive Director would get those funds into a bank account, and he would be 13 the fiduciary over those funds. Not the Court, not Attorney Reg. If that's something that can't happen, 14 then yes, we need completely independent funding.

15

16 Sen. Gonzales

17 Director Gregory.

18

19 Christopher Gregory

20 I'm sorry. There's kind of a nuance to some of those issues, though, if you start like kind of, you know, 21 breaking out services that you would be, I guess, responsible for on our own. But one of the things that 22 just being in the Carr Building. We are housed with the Presiding Disciplinary Judge in the only suite in 23 that Building that has a trial courtroom. So, when we do have formal proceedings, there is a reason that 24 we have security, that we have the recording system there. It is not a resource that we just go down the 25 street and get a different office. Similarly, when I prepared these budget figures, I had to rely on SCAO 26 because they have all the software and the expertise to break down the particular figures. I don't know 27 how without relying upon them like the other performance commissions or the other commissions we 28 would have been able to even accomplish what we've gotten here today. But on certain things, IT, sure 29 maybe we look at what it would cost to have an outside IT consultant.

30

31 Sen. Gardner

32 Let me just say, Thank you. Let me just say that as far as my attorney registration fees, I've just given up 33 on the fact that $5 of it, because it's your budget is, is a very small part of all of that I wouldn't get a 34 whole lot if I forced him to cut it. And just for members of the committee who don't know that those are 35 not our funds, they're the Judicial Department's funds so that I can practice law in my spare time. There 36 seem to be two aspects of this problem if you kind of get back to 30,000 feet, and one of them is, and 37 they're interrelated. But one of them is the investigation of the most immediate complaint. And the other 38 is what do we do going forward? And I'm not sure that the bill can do a lot about the immediate 39 complaint. I suppose we can give teeth to the turnover of information. But it doesn't sort of answer the 40 question of how to deal with all of those things that can constitute a complaint. Legislative drafting wise,

1 there's different ways to deal with this problem. I have one colleague who says, well, you need to define 2 what a complaint means. In one of my lives, that's what you do under the rules of civil procedure, and 3 we know what that is. And over here, and they're very broad rules about that, that looks like a complaint, 4 its complaint. Over here, it needs to be something very specific, or we have to differentiate between 5 where it's lodged and not. And I do think the Department, I can't definitively speak for them. But what I 6 hear them saying is that they subscribe to the idea that internal complaints, the HR thing and so forth, 7 that yes, that needs to be immediately reported to you. Now, whether that will happen or not Judge 8 Prince, whether it happened in the past, I have publicly said that we're not here because the Department 9 has been perfect over the years, or that things haven't happened in Adams County. And I don't just you 10 know, I can be fairly specific about that, or, or Douglas County or wherever. But it does the way the bill 11 is drafted, cause this problem for people who have to do it. To say, well, we get hundreds. I know I get a 12 bunch of them, and I send them to the legislative liaison that say I was in court. I'll pick on Judge Prince.
13 I was in Judge Prince's court and he decided for the other person, you don't have a domestic docket, but 14 it's tends to be domestic cases. And I know he's biased against men or he's biased against women or.
15 And at that point, if I hit the button and send it over to the ledge liaison and say, well would you take a 16 look at this and respond to it? And you multiply that by the number I know that are out there? Are those 17 the things that everything that said across the desk to a clerk everything that said on the on the way out 18 of the courtroom? Are those things that that need to be reported to you or documented and reported or?
19 How are we going to deal with that.

20

21 Sen. Gonzales

22 Judge Prince, but let's see. Senator Lee, and then Judge Prince.

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 Not to interject, but I think I may be anticipating what you could be saying and the rules that the 26 Commission operates under have preliminary proceedings that have evaluation of the request. And that 27 was referred to by one of the witnesses. I think, I believe Maxfield. A request for an investigation, but 28 then it defines a complaint if members of the commission based upon evaluation of the request conclude 29 there was a reasonable basis for discipline or disciplinary proceedings. They'll process a request as a 30 complaint under the rules, but you go back over to the rules of Judicial Conduct. They also have a 31 definition of a complaint. A complaint means allegations that provide grounds for the Commission to 32 conduct disability or disciplinary proceedings. So, I think we can figure it out in the bill to come up with 33 a definition of what a complaint is, at a preliminary level, and at a commission evaluation for discipline 34 level.

35

36 Sen. Gardner

37 Well, if I may, Senator. My question is what is the Commission's expectation of those hundreds of 38 things that happen at the courthouse or happen by email to the chief judge that potentially constitute a 39 reportable event? Or are they? What would the Commission like to see about that? And what's the intent 40 about the bill? I think it does also, and I think Judge Prince, you may have alluded to it, or someone did,

1 and there. There's also this problem of an external thing, though, that that has more gravitas to it. That 2 we've got to figure out. When someone says, I was at a restaurant last night, and I saw judge so and so.
3 He had too much to drink. And he did a terrible thing to a waitress or somebody there. And that would 4 be external, but it would be something more than an unhappy litigant. And we've, how are we going to 5 deal with all those and not? Because the Judicial Department and you may say, well, they're making 6 more of it than it is. But believe me, I've got 200 other bills like that where somebody on one side of it is 7 said, but that will make me do X 1,000 times over. Every regulatory thing we do. Whoever is affected 8 by it almost assuredly will say, I don't want to be in a position where I have a duty to report 150 things 9 to the Commission on Judicial Discipline. So, I'll stop and let you respond to that. I think you understand 10 what my concern is.

11
12 Sen. Gonzales
13 Judge Prince.

14
15 David Prince
16 Thank you, Senator Gardner, for the question a lot in there to unpack. So let me think for just a moment.

17
18 Sen. Gonzales
19 Your microphone a little bit closer.

20
21 David Prince
22 Oh, sorry. I usually talk so loud that I tried to get the microphone away, because I blow people's ears 23 out.

24
25 Sen. Gonzales
26 I'm just the microphone police in this committee, so.

27
28 David Prince
29 Thank you for the advice, Madam Vice Chair. So, I hate the slippery slope argument. But the slippery 30 slope, well, let me go back to mechanics.

31
32 Sen. Gardner
33 I hate it too. But it's made all the time. And we have to deal with it.

34
35 David Prince
36 Yeah. And I agree. Let's step back to mechanics for just a moment. So, the bill defines complaint. And it 37 defines it for purposes of the bill. The one of the problems in drafting is that in our rules, as they 38 currently exist, we draw this distinction between a request for evaluation and a complaint that nobody 39 else can follow. Which is why you hear us saying, Well, when we get a complaint, but we call them 40 RFEs. So that's a problem. So, really it's not reasonable to use the language of the rules in the statute.

1 But that's a potential problem right there, because it's a different set of terminology. But it's not unusual 2 for a statute to make a definition. So, we have that problem. If the trigger is going to be a complaint, 3 then how do we define a complaint? And, so, what we did was that definition of complaint is drawn 4 from the ABA model. Now remember, you got to step back to context. We've got the MOU right now 5 that says, When is this disclosure duty triggered? Well, the current MOU is says when conduct could be 6 misconduct. Well, now you got a good slippery slope argument, because my goodness, almost anything 7 you look crosswise at somebody and that could be misconduct to a skilled first year law student. It 8 doesn't take a whole lot. So, we move away from that and we say, reasonable inference. I'm short cutting 9 the definition. But the operative part is subject to a reasonable inference that it's violated the Code. So, 10 you do have to have some standards so that you can separate the wheat from the chaff. One of the 11 challenges in coming up to drafting to this point has been that the position taken by the Judiciary has 12 been no reporting, zero reporting. So, its binary, we're either going to report everything under the MOU, 13 which could be, which is an impossible standard to be honest. Or you're going to get nothing. And I 14 think, I hope everybody would agree that those two options are both unacceptable. We've got to get 15 somewhere else. So, we did what lawmakers often did do, we went out looking for where somebody else 16 defines this. And, so, we use the ABA model. Reasonable minds can get into a room and figure out 17 something. But it's also a problem if we went with a model of, we at Judiciary get an external complaint 18 and we have no obligation to pass it on. Then you go back to my example of here's the three affidavits 19 about the judge who was drunk and did the thing to the waitress, whatever your example was last night, 20 and they have no obligation to pass that along. Is that a credible system with the public, if they take their 21 hard gathered evidence, bring it to the courthouse and say, this judge is a bad actor, and that doesn't get 22 passed along? You can't have it that extreme that nothing gets passed along. Now, I heard again, that 23 word referred, but I don't know what it meant.

24

25 Sen. Gardner

26 Well, right now, complaint means information in any form, from any source that alleges, or from which 27 a reasonable inference can be drawn that a judge committed misconduct or is incapacitated? Well, I get 28 five of those a week. And I have to tell you that, as a legislator, I got it from a constituent and I will just 29 pass it on. But when I when I do, I'm like, man, there's nothing going to come to that because it needs to 30 be screened out. Not my job. My role is a different one. But I mean, maybe it is in the definition here.
31 But then you raise a serious needle threading problem. The Department, I don't think I'd have any ill will 32 or anything else, in searching for how to make this distinction has talked about internal versus external, I 33 think that's a component of it. But I think there's also a level of seriousness and evidence around it. And 34 there are a lot of smart lawyers in the Carr Building and down in the basement here, a lot smarter than I, 35 and we probably can find that. But I think I that's the issue here. Is how much reporting? Or how much 36 obligation are we going to impose on the clerk sitting across the desk? Who hears a lot of stuff, right? I 37 mean, that's just the nature of that, of that position to interface with the public. And I don't want them 38 sitting there and generating reports. But I also don't want, I don't want something to happen in a 39 restaurant in Colorado Springs with a judge that many people know, and no one in our bench that I 40 would know of would ever do this, but commit some sort of misconduct in the public that reflects badly.

1 And because it came from an external source, they just say, well, to the, to the person who makes it to 2 the Chief Judge, well go to judicial discipline. When in fact, it ought to be incumbent upon any of us. If 3 not, by ethics, by our own personal sense of what's right. Just pick up the phone and call judicial 4 discipline. I don't mean to bore you go on. But that's one issue. Implicit bias, you started with that. I 5 don't see any evidence when you cite the numbers of cases and all that somehow the Commission is not 6 screening. And I the reason I asked the question I did is, what's the mechanism to deal with that? I mean, 7 it's still the screening mechanism. I don't know any way else, because you can't control who makes 8 complaints or what their perception is. They make them and the reason you have a screening process is 9 exactly that. So, I just want to assure you about that. I've heard that, I understand what the concern is. I 10 also am trying to figure out well, how do I do means what's happening. But as you say, we have a set of 11 cases, it's pretty small. I do want to ask a very direct question. Judge Prince, do you, given the testimony 12 of some of the lay witnesses, do you support a public, completely public disciplinary process for the 13 bench?

14

15 Sen. Gonzales

16 Judge Prince.

17

18 David Prince

19 Well, you phrased that. Thank you, Senator Gardner for that awkward question to ask me. Happily, in 20 good lawyerly fashion, you made it extremely easy, because you took sort of the extreme case. But I'm 21 going to hedge first, which is one, that would be a question for the Commission as a whole rather than 22 me as an individual. Two, you know, at the end of the day, I'm not sure that the Commission is going is 23 ever going to make a real recommendation on this is where the line should be. We're more likely to tell 24 you, here's what we see as the benefits or the burdens of setting it here and there. But you made it easy, 25 because you made it extreme, should it be a completely open and public process. And I'm comfortable in 26 predicting that the Commission would likely say no. And I'm also comfortable in that, because having 27 looked at the way commissions design across the United States, there aren't any that go that extreme.
28 When people talk, and they'll criticize judicial commissions and others, it's not unique to ours. They'll 29 criticize where on the spectrum, the line is drawn for confidentiality. And I think there's legitimate 30 reasons to criticize it. Criticize ours or criticize someone else's. But all of those the lines are drawn right 31 here. They're this tiny little zone of the spectrum. Is it after, think back to our process. Is it after formal 32 proceedings or before formal proceedings? That's pretty much where the debate is. And we wouldn't 33 take a position on that we would just tell you straight up.

34

35 Sen. Gardner

36 And I think the public, I think a lot of the public witnesses perceive that they're talking about complete, 37 open transparency. But I appreciate your answer. I mean, it's very instructive that even what purports to 38 be a very transparent system is they're making a distinction here and there. And we'll get into that in the 39 interim committee if this bill should pass, so.

40

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 Thank you, Senator Gardner. Chair Krupa. I don't know if you had wanted to respond to any of the 3 comments that Senator Gardner raised regarding implicit bias.

4

5 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

6 Thank you. And Senator Gardner, implicit biases is something that in this day and age, every agency and 7 organization that reports to protect the public or maintain integrity, should answer to, right. And that's 8 one of the reasons that I brought up the diversity of the Commission itself. One of the ways that you 9 address that, hopefully, is that you have diverse people that are making those decisions, because the 10 more diversity that you have, then you have the strength of those different views. The other issue is, we 11 are not the only commission that faces that. I was president of the Colorado Hispanic Bar for a while 12 back. And one of the things that, we call them specialty bars, not affinity bars. If you're not a white 13 male, you're special in Colorado, and we're specialty bars. So, what the specialty bars did for years was 14 trying to get the Supreme Court to let us do implicit bias training with the nominating commissions, 15 because one of the things that the specialty bars always look at is the makeup of the bench. And you 16 have that in the in the information that we gave to you that was supplied to us from Gary Jackson. Judge 17 Prince has worked on efforts to increase diversity on the bench. I've worked on it. I'm on a committee 18 now for the CBA working on it. There's 18 ways of trying to affect implicit bias. And that's something 19 that you know, as a Commission, we rotate. We only serve so many years, I was appointed similar to 20 judge Prince in 2018, reaffirmed by Governor Polis. Both of our terms end in June of 2023, much to Mr.
21 Gregory's chagrin. I would say chagrin.

22

23 Christopher Gregory

24 I will miss them terribly.

25

26 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

27 Maybe to others delight. However, because we keep rotating that also ensures some guarantee of various 28 different personalities, types, genders, color, which hopefully is part of why those terms rotate, right?
29 But because of that, we don't do retreats. We don't go on retreats as a commission and have implicit bias 30 training or talk about it. What happens is we're reactionary, right. We get something that comes up, it's a 31 challenge and we go, how do we fix it? And then we go to our controller, the Supreme Court and say, 32 hey, we're butting up against this, you know, these are some issues. We don't create rules. We can bring 33 things to them, but they just mandate rules. So, in addressing that, I think there's always room to think 34 about that. And that's one of the reasons that we have hoped that we could be the first in the country, 35 Colorado, to track these demographics. And I think that would be one of the first steps towards as much 36 transparency of that as we can.

2 I want to thank you, for all of these really thoughtful responses to all of our questions as members of this 3 committee. I want to see if there's any last final questions, because I suspect that we could go on talking 4 about these for a lot longer. But I do want to say. Senator Gardner,

5

6 Sen. Gardner

7 I have another three and a half hours, so.

8

9 Sen. Gonzales

10 I know that's why I'm asking.

11

12 Sen. Gardner

13 Seriously. I just want to say are there other things I haven't asked. I spoke with the Chief Justice and all 14 at length, I want to be fair just because y'all are at the end of the discussion here. It's important that the 15 Committee hear all of this and that it be sort of on the record and those that want to listen. The make up 16 of the commission, or the interim committee, what are your thoughts on that?

17

18 Sen. Gonzales

19 Chair Krupa?

20

21 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

22 Thank you. I respect all of you and the voters trust in you to create the committee, as you deem 23 appropriate. As Senator Lee said, if it's made up of legislators, I don't think we have an issue with that. If 24 the process is really public, and all the stakeholders are allowed to be involved in that process, the 25 problem with creating too large of an interim committee of all of these specialty bars, CBA, DBA, CJI, 26 IAALS, every single interested person is you're not going to get a whole lot done in a year. So, the 27 smaller the committee, but the input from those stakeholders is what's needed. But I just thought it was 28 interesting that from all the comments, everybody said, well, we want the Women's Bar, we want the 29 specialty bars. Well, we're the ones that actually know the process and deal with it day in and day out.
30 So, I would hope that we are part of that information gathering and input providing as well.

31

32 Sen. Gardner

33 Well, and I, I think I've come down, because I've been at both ends of the spectrum for what it's worth of 34 just legislators. Because at the end of the day, we're the ones that can propose legislation and move it 35 forward. And then there's 150 or sometimes in one night, there's 300 people come in and, and testify and 36 give us our best. And by the way, we give a lot more time even in interim committees to those experts 37 that have standing, if you will, for lack of a better term. Yourselves being people with the most standing.
38 And the other end of the spectrum is you get a committee of 16 or, you know, the Colorado Commission 39 on Criminal and Juvenile Justice is 30. And it's unwieldy and very difficult. So, I appreciate your 40 thoughts. Anything else you would like to say to us?

1 Christopher Gregory

2 One point.

3

4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Director Gregory.

6

7 Christopher Gregory

8 I'm sorry, I just thought the financial point. I think, as a practical matter, this bill has to be looked at as a 9 whole. And if we don't have sort of an automatic of expectation of information exchange, the difficulty 10 is that becomes incredibly expensive. If in every one of these cases, if we're going to have a meaningful 11 investigation. It's going to require litigation over discovery, and all of the legal expenses that are 12 involved in that. So, I just hope that as the committee considers this bill, they look at it holistically and 13 see the practical benefits of why each part is necessary.

14

15 Sen. Gardner

16 Thank you and Madam Chair. Ms. Krupa but thank you for pointing out the way we got to where we are 17 with current funding. Because I do think there's no way for you to get a public dollar into your accounts 18 to spend without having someone pull the strings and I don't know whether or the Judicial Department 19 or the Legislature is better. We've been we've been through one department there's, I beg the JBC 20 regularly. So, thank you for your indulgence, Madam Chair, and I wish everyone a good holiday. Thank 21 you.

22

23 Sen. Gonzales

24 Did you Judge Prince? Did you want to speak or were you waving goodbye?

25

26 David Prince

27 Madam Vice Chair, I actually did want to say something, and I'm sorry to keep you even later. But I do 28 have a couple of other things in response to Senator Gardner's invitation. I won't do the long list, 29 because there's actually several things in my notes from those earlier conversations. But I want to 30 emphasize and I have said this before, that there are reasons for what's in the bill. One example we didn't 31 quite follow up on was you talked about the provision of I'll call it administrative support clause, why is 32 it written that way? And we never quite got to really answer that question. Well, there's a reason it's 33 written that way. And that is, one is sort of was hinted at, as we were seeking our funding for Special 34 Counsel and pressed that claim, we were reminded that there was no obligation to provide office 35 furniture, rent, financial support, etc. So, in one of the very first drafts of the bill, it's that's not 36 enforceable. So, we better put that in a bill. So, it is enforceable. There's a reason that didn't change too, 37 because our preference is as much independence as we can get. And some of you will remember from 38 those early meetings, we were looking for that. And, so, the sponsors themselves, actually did some 39 research work with some staffers, as can the OPA provide us that administrative support, because we're 40 so small, it's not necessary reasonable for us to, and particularly with government, not so reasonable for

1 us to go out to the private sector and try to get some of those things. And it was determined that that was 2 not a viable option. Maybe there was a separation of power issue. And maybe there were some practical 3 issues. So that's why it ended up being drafted the way. It doesn't mean it can't change. But just be 4 aware, it's not thrown in there willy nilly. It's not as sort of has been suggested, well, they want to be 5 independent, but they don't really want to be independent. No, we really want to be independent. But we 6 did our research. And people told us, there's not really another way you're going to get that 7 administrative support. So, you better make sure you lock it down, because they've already told you it's 8 not an enforceable right at this point.

9
10 Sen. Gardner

11 Okay.

12
13 David Prince

14 People have talked about the retention. They've got to retain the records for the time the person is a 15 judge. And in three years, again, you can debate whether that's appropriate or not. But there's actually a 16 reason for that our jurisdiction lasts over an individual until one year after they finish being a judge. And 17 in some of our investigations, when we've gone and asked for records information on this complaint, 18 we're told, we have no record retention policy that requires us to save that. Well, that sounds like a hole 19 in the system that we ought to address. So, let's put it in the statute. And that's the reason for the length, 20 because that's essentially our jurisdiction, plus a little bit of a safety margin. So, just those kinds of 21 things.

23 The last thing I want to say, is to give you two examples of a couple of cases that we've handled in the 24 last couple of years. That I think illustrates, and I'm just at the process, not the allegations. That 25 illustrates why we are looking at statutory codification, particularly of this disclosure obligation, but of 26 the rules of the road in general. Okay. So, these will both be internal complaints, because they're very 27 similar. There's an internal complaint about the judge, their personnel, as most of those are, as you 28 Senator Gardner observed earlier. And it's brought to a trusted person, a worker at the Judiciary, who's 29 concerned about this conduct of the judge, they go to a trusted person, authority figure, another judge, 30 ask them what they should do about it. That Judge very wisely, and insightfully says, we need to report 31 this, let's get the Chief Judge involved because that's their job. So, they report it to the Chief Judge. The 32 Chief Judge does an immediate quick investigation, calls witnesses, interviews, them, makes notes, 33 handwritten notes, turns them into little memos that say what's going on exactly what you would expect 34 in any private sector, or government sector, or nonprofit sector business when something happens. And 35 you know, what the Chief Judge does next. Immediately forwards all of that on to the Judicial Discipline 36 Commission and asks us to look at it. And, frankly, is asking us and what are you going to do within the 37 next 24 hours or something like that? And we're not first responders so that we can't quite do. So that's 38 the way the system is supposed to work. That's great. That's what we want. That's what's tried to be 39 codified here. Then you contrast that with another case, same kinds of allegations. That one gets looked 40 into notes are made, a little investigative report is made. Nothing is reported to judicial discipline.

1 Indirectly, judicial discipline finds out about it and so asks about it. Hey, we heard about this incident, 2 can you tell us what happened? No answer. And it's actually the example I was using earlier about, and 3 they don't tell you who the people are, because we didn't actually know. And they don't tell you who the 4 complaining witness is, so you don't know anybody to talk to you don't have any files. Regardless of 5 whether you agree or disagree, is it a functional system? And more importantly, is it credible with the 6 public? When those two completely different routes are permissible? Those two completely different 7 routes are up to the discretion of, in these cases, its Chief Judges, but it's whatever person at the 8 judiciary gets the complaint. It could be an administrative person, too. Is that really a viable system? Or 9 is that a system that's vulnerable to being subject to allegations that misconduct claims are being deep 10 sixed instead of actually investigated? That's what's so important about actually going ahead and 11 codifying a disclosure obligation? Because there is basic agreement on that, at least that I heard today, 12 on a disclosure obligation. Its the same.

14 I said that was the last thing, but I will do one more. And that's just because you heard about it, because 15 you talked with the Chief Justice about several things and he talked about the access agreement. And he 16 sort of said, well, the other the other agencies that are investigating have all agreed to an access 17 agreement, but we haven't been able to close a deal with the Commission. Well, there's reasons for that.
18 And we won't get into the specific details of the of the back and forth of the access agreements. But step 19 back for a second, and ask yourself: Have you guys ever entered an access agreement with them before?
20 Nobody asked us that question. But I'll ask it for you. No, we haven't. Because we've got an MOU. We 21 think that isn't access agreement, but set that aside, all these cases that we've done some very serious 22 cases, all these cases very similar in terms of types of allegations. We've never had to do an access 23 agreement. Why do we have to do an access agreement on this one? Why is this one different? And then 24 you're back to the same question. Is it a viable credible system, when you can single out one case or line 25 of cases and they get treated differently than everything else? And members of the public then get to 26 start asking why are there all these extra hoops? For this stet a set of cases compared to any other? Those 27 are all legitimate questions. And those are legitimate concerns that get answered, if you codify a 28 standard. And a standard that applies, all judges are equal instead of well, some judges are more equal 29 than others. That's one of the fundamental problems with this. The way it's operating now. Thank you.

30
31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Well, on behalf of all of the members here, of the Senate Judiciary Committee, we want to really thank 33 you so much for sharing your perspectives with us as we debate the policy that we have here before us, 34 and we've said it earlier, but we want to say it again. Thank you so much for your service to the people 35 of Colorado and thank you for your work in regards to Senate Bill 201. We appreciate you. That 36 concludes the list of individuals who had signed up to testify. I'd like to see if there's anyone else, either 37 online or in the room who wishes to testify for or against, with a neutral position regarding Senate Bill 38 201. Seeing no further witnesses, we will go ahead and close the testimony portion of this hearing.
39 Colleagues, I do understand that there have been a whole number of proposed amendments that have 40 been circulated. But I do really want to thank everyone for sharing their perspectives on this really

1 fundamental and foundational issue. I spoke earlier about the importance of integrity and these 2 competing values of confidentiality and transparency. And I think that it would serve us all well, to take 3 some time to process what we've all learned today from this hearing and to have some time to let this 4 testimony sit with us. And, so, I'm going to lay this bill over, at the sponsors' request, for action only, so 5 that we can digest a little bit and come back to the table likely next week. Given the fact that It's that 6 time of session and proceed forward. I want to thank everyone for sharing your thoughts, your 7 perspectives, your critiques with us as we contemplate this bill. We will lay over Senate Bill 201 for 8 action only. And with that, we have no further business and the Senate Judiciary Committee stands in 9 adjournment. Thank you.

Colo. Jud. Dep't, Written Testimony
Regarding SB 22-201, April 14, 2022;

STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE

Written testimony regarding SB22-201

On behalf of the Judicial Department, I'm pleased to be here with you today. The core of this legislation is critical to preserving confidence in the courts and upholding our merit selection process. The Commission on Judicial Discipline will function most effectively with direct funding from the General Assembly. Thank you, Senator Lee and Senator Gardner, for running legislation that meets that goal.

I am here today in an "amend" position because I think there are opportunities to improve the bill and, by extension, improve the discipline process. This written testimony is intended to supplement my verbal remarks at the April 14, 2022 Senate Judiciary Committee hearing. I expect that in my limited time offering remarks that I might not have a chance to talk in detail about each of the concerns we have identified so I outline them here in more detail.

- 1. The reporting process would be burdensome on court staff and would keep court staff in a position of making determinations about what information should be reported to the Commission on Judicial Discipline.

Two independent investigators selected by the General Assembly are currently working to provide recommendations to improve internal Department processes related to complaints against judges. One of the investigations focuses on the handling of workplace harassment and discrimination complaints. Rigid statutory requirements for receiving, handling, and disclosing those complaints to the Commission may prevent the Department from implementing positive changes recommended by the investigators. The bill also places burdensome requirements on every judicial staff member to document and refer every complaint received from members of the public, regardless of the nature of the complaint. This issue would be better addressed by the interim committee, which by this summer will have the benefit of the results of the independent investigations and recommendations from experts in the field. For example, the federal courts have implemented a more victim-centered model for complaints that allows the victim to have a say in how the complaint is addressed and provides for options like mediation in lieu of a disciplinary process for the judge. There is a risk that a statutory requirement for automatic and immediate referral to the Commission may chill complaints. The bill should allow room for creative discussions with stakeholders concerning these issues, taking into account the information learned from the investigations.

- 2. The interim committee should include leaders from across state government and across the community.

Deliberations about possible amendments to the constitution should always include a broad cross-section of the community. Deliberations about how to amend the constitutional provisions governing the process for disciplining, and potentially removing, officers of the Judicial Branch should include members of the Judicial Branch. One branch of government should not unilaterally overhaul the workings of another branch in a manner that could create an imbalance of power.

3. Document production by the judicial department should be done in a responsible manner that does not expose the state to financial harm.

As written, the bill would require the Department to violate the law, its confidentiality obligations, and risk waiver of attorney-client privilege. For example, the bill would require the Department to violate federal employment laws that protect certain information, like FMLA records and EEOC charges, as well as certain state laws, such as CCRD charges and laws sealing records in criminal cases, which the Commission is not statutorily permitted to access. The bill would also require the Department to violate its contractual obligations. If an employee's separation agreement states that it cannot be provided to any third party "absent a valid subpoena or court order," the act of providing that information to the COJD, even pursuant to a statutory requirement, subjects the Department and the state to liability. (The Department notes that it no longer enters into such agreements.) In such cases, it is reasonable for the Department to ask for a subpoena prior to production, which the Commission has the power to issue. This bill would require disclosure of attorney-client privileged communications, including legal advice from the Attorney General's Office and conceivably a subject judge's own communications with private counsel, private medical information, information from peer-to-peer coaching arrangements, and judicial deliberations in specific cases. A better solution for disclosure of privileged information lies in C.R.E. 502 and F.R.E. 502, and with agreements under those Rules indicating that the parties do not intend to waive privilege in sharing information.

4. Eliminate the risk of real or perceived conflicts between the Courts and the Commission.

The direct appropriation to the proposed new office is necessary and welcome. But for the Commission to be independent, it needs to have resources sufficient to manage its own administrative affairs without leaning on an arm of the Court to provide that support. Some of the challenges that have surfaced in recent months center on the Commission's conflict with staff who work in agencies that report to the Courts. The current challenge relates to the Commission's relationship with the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel, which currently provides some minimal administrative support to the Commission.

While SCAO provides administrative support for some other small, independent agencies in the Judicial Branch, providing similar support to the Commission would be different and would perpetuate the risk of real and perceived conflicts of interest.

- Accounting support could create a conflict as accounting staff at SCAO require court staff to follow Judicial Department fiscal rules. If the staff at the Office of Judicial Discipline fails to follow the fiscal rules, how is the staff at SCAO expected to respond? Will the staff at SCAO be expected to report the Office of Judicial Discipline to the State Auditor or some other entity? If the staff at SCAO do not respond to requests from the Commission as quickly as it expects, what recourse does the Commission have? Will any sort of failure by SCAO staff to meet the expectations or demands of the Commission, or any criticism or pushback from the staff at SCAO, be seen by the staff at the Commission as retaliation or as an effort to impede the work of the Commission?

- Information Technology support could create a conflict for many of the reasons also listed above relating to accounting support. In addition, Page 16, lines 19-22, restrict SCAO staff from full access to files and data on the computer networks used by the Office of Judicial Discipline. The IT staff at SCAO cannot provide IT support to the Commission without complete, unfettered access to the computers and networks used by that office. No IT team can provide support without that sort of access. Judicial Department policies require that all users are subject to monitoring for improper or inappropriate use of the network, databases, software, files, and communications. The IT staff at SCAO are the frontline security for hundreds of thousands of court files across the state, touching nearly every family in Colorado. It would be irresponsible and reckless to allow an office onto the network secured by the IT team at SCAO unless that IT team has full access to the computer hardware, software, and network, including files and data.
- Human Services and payroll services create a risk of conflict as well. The new Commission will have several staff. The staff at the Commission deserve to have a human resources complaint process that is fair and conflict-free. Under the proposal in the bill, if a staff person at the Office of Judicial Discipline files a complaint against a supervisor, a fellow staff member, or a Commissioner, that complaint would be received by a staff person in the Human Resources Division at SCAO. How is the State Court Administrator, who works directly for the Colorado Supreme Court, expected to handle a workplace complaint against a staff person at the Commission? Any response from the State Court Administrator could be seen as retaliation against the Commission but the State Court Administrator would have an obligation to ensure the staff person is safe.

5. A staff attorney of the Commission should not serve as special counsel to the Commission

A staff attorney serving as special counsel to the Commission removes a layer of independence for the special counsel. A staff attorney employed by the Commission would serve as the prosecutor in the case, which creates an appearance of a conflict of interest and interferes with the special counsel's independence. Arrangements like this are contrary to the recommendations from IAALS.

6. Certain provisions in the Legislative Declaration are unnecessarily provocative and unrelated to the bill.

The fact that investigations are underway does not establish that our system of judicial discipline is broken or that this bill is necessary. The statement that our system "do[es] not now provide a fair and impartial system of judicial discipline" is inaccurate, untethered to any facts or analysis, and taints the existing constitutional process. That judges are involved in the discipline of other judges does not render the system inherently unfair. The legal profession is self-regulating, and the regulation of judges fits in the same model. Other state entities, including the legislature, have similar disciplinary bodies and processes for addressing complaints against their own members. Colorado's judicial discipline system is very similar to every other merit selection state in the country. The Commission is comprised of 6 non-judges and 4 judges. It is therefore inaccurate to state that the system of judicial discipline is "solely controlled by the judiciary" when the majority of the Commission is not part of the judicial branch. Judges serve an important role in the discipline process because they understand the work and can provide context for complaints and investigations. Every other merit selection state provides for final review either by the supreme court or a panel of judges. In Colorado, the supreme court has not, to its knowledge, ever rejected a recommendation from the Commission in favor of a more lenient sanction.

7. Some of the definitions are unclear or confusing when read together.

The current definition of “complaint” is confusing when read in conjunction with the definition of “misconduct.” The current language says that a complaint is an allegation “from which a reasonable inference can be drawn that a judge committed misconduct.” “Misconduct” is defined as “conduct by a judge that may reasonably constitute grounds for discipline.” Taken together, the current draft means that a complaint is an allegation from which a reasonable inference can be drawn that the conduct by a judge may reasonably constitute grounds for discipline. These added layers muddy any definition of what a complaint is. Additionally, the Commission has historically sought to separate a “complaint” from a “request for evaluation.” The Commission currently receives “requests for evaluation,” conducts a preliminary review, and then determines whether to process the request as a complaint. It’s unclear if the bill is now trying to eliminate the Request for Evaluation process and require a formal investigation of every complaint it receives, which would conflict with the procedures adopted by the court, at the request of the Commission, for handling these matters. Other provisions in the bill reference “requests for evaluation.” Additionally, the Constitution and rules should be referenced in the definition of “misconduct” because they define the “grounds for discipline” within the Commission’s jurisdiction.

8. This bill would place a heavy burden on other judicial oversight entities and require them to violate confidentiality requirements.

Oversight entities like OARC receive numerous complaints about attorneys that may also state or imply wrongdoing by a judge. OARC’s records may contain attorney-client privileged information, its own attorney work product, confidential case or client information, and sensitive records wholly unrelated to a judge. OARC’s current practice is to notify the complainant of the Commission and provide contact information. If OARC were required to provide its entire record to the Commission, it would need to conduct extensive review and redaction of its records to comply with its confidentiality obligations, which would place a heavy burden on the office. The same is true for other oversight entities. It is appropriate to direct the Commission and the oversight entities to enter into an MOUs outlining their respective obligations, which would take into account the nature of the records at issue and the confidentiality restrictions that apply to those records.

Merit Selection

Colorado's Judicial Merit Selection System:

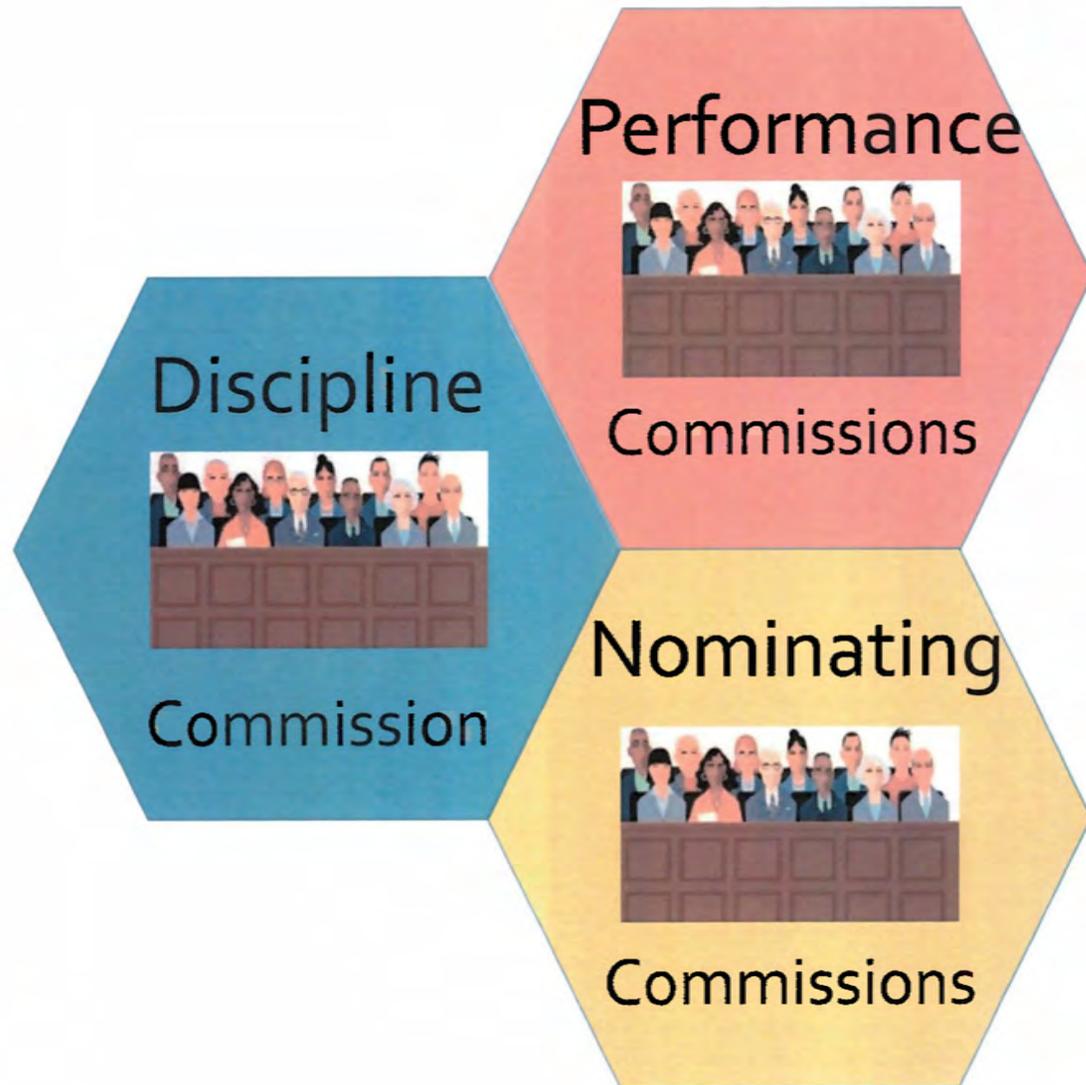

50 years of choosing judges based on merit. Not money. Not politics.

In 1966, Colorado voters approved a merit selection system for judicial appointments. This citizen-involved process helps ensure that Colorado judges are highly-qualified, fair, and impartial. It is the gold standard that safeguards equal treatment for all Coloradans coming into court.

Former judiciary workers urge Congress to protect court employees from discrimination and harassment

With 'judges judging judges,' rogues on the bench have little to fear

Secretive and cozy judicial oversight systems enable judges to subvert accountability in many states. Exhibit A: Oklahoma, where not a single judge was publicly disciplined in 14 years. When the state finally did charge a judge with wrongdoing, he was allowed to resign, his record pristine and his pension intact.

District Court Judge Curtis DeLapp was renowned for his hair-trigger temper. Mispronounce his name, come to court a few seconds late, fail to rise as quickly as he'd like — no slight was too small to set him off.

For almost a dozen cases, DeLapp would be accused to former records who appeared

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE

ORDER

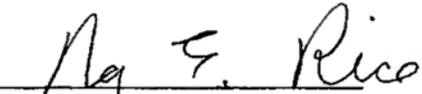

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE TO ACCESS COURT RECORDS

Chief Justice Directive 05-01 (CJD) precludes the release of suppressed court records and records in certain identified case classes and case types in the absence of a court order. Additionally, the CJD requires the redaction of restricted and protected court records prior to their release.

The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (Commission) is established pursuant to Article VI, Section 23(3) of the Colorado Constitution to investigate potential grounds for removal or other discipline of a judge. In order to effectuate access to court records by the Commission for the limited purpose of fulfilling its constitutional duties, the Chief Justice authorizes the Colorado clerks of court to release court records to the Commission, its Executive Director, and investigators or special counsel working at the direction of the Commission.

Pursuant to this Order, clerks are authorized to release, without redaction, suppressed records, protected records, and records whose release would otherwise require a court order under the CJD. Clerks must redact identifying information of sexual assault or child victims, as those terms are defined in section 24-72-304, C.R.S., prior to releasing restricted court records. This Order does not authorize clerks to release sealed records to the Commission.

Senate Judiciary Committee—April 21, 2022

Hearing on SB 22-201

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 The bill for consideration today is Senate Bill 201 and I will invite Senator Gardner and Senator Lee.
3 Last time we met we heard the testimony portion of the hearing and today we are here for action only.
4 Giving our sponsors just a brief moment to get set up here.

5

6 Juliann Jenson

7 Do you want me to hand anything out?

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Do you have the amendments?

11

12 Juliann Jenson

13 I do have them.

14

15 Sen. Lee

16 Yeah the ones from last time. Do you have, well I'm looking for number 1 and 2 from. I've got one from 17 Leg Council.

18

19 Sen. Gonzales

20 All right, y'all. The Senate Judiciary Committee, we'll come back to order. Our last bill that we have for 21 consideration this evening is Senate Bill 201. We are here in the amendment phase for action only. We 22 do have a packet of amendments that have now been distributed to members of the committee and I will 23 turn it over for a motion from Senator Gardner.

24

25 Sen. Gardner

26 Thank you. I move L.001.

27

28 Sen. Gonzales

29 That is a proper motion. Would care to explain the amendment?

30

31 Sen. Gardner

32 So, this is requested by Leg Council. It requires this bill to go to Leg Council because it creates an 33 interim committee and I will just call to the attention of everyone here that we have very delicate timing 34 issues. So, we're going to move this bill. It will be in Leg Council a week from Friday, but between now 35 and then we're going to send it to appropriations. We're going to do seconds we're going to do thirds,

1 we're going to be a model of efficiency, something the General Assembly is not good at. But we'll try 2 and I ask for an aye vote.

3

4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Well, I might want to read this amendment at length. We can do that. Is there any objection? Seeing no 6 objection, L.001 is adopted. Senator Lee.

7

8 Sen. Lee

9 Thank you, Madam Chair. I move amendment L.002.

10

11 Sen. Gonzales

12 To the amendment.

13

14 Sen. Lee

15 This is an amendment requested by the Office of the State Auditor to clarify that section three only 16 applies to a fraud investigation.

17

18 Sen. Gonzales

19 Is there a discussion on the amendment? Is there opposition to the amendment? Seeing none, L.002 is 20 adopted. Senator Gardner.

21

22 Sen. Gardner

23 Madam Chair. Can we take a break?

24

25 Sen. Gonzales

26 Senatorial five.

27

28 Sen. Gonzales

29 We are back. And we are still in the amendment phase. Senator Lee.

30

31 Sen. Lee

32 Thank you, Madam Chair. I move Senate amendment L.015. And ask for an aye vote. And I will explain 33 that amendment. This actually was the amendment, Madam Chair and committee, that was the result of 34 significant meetings and deliberative discussions amongst a lot of the parties. So, I'll go through it to just 35 give you an idea of what we've been doing with this.

36

37 So, the first part of it strikes the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel over on page 5, because they are 38 really separate and apart. The Department includes State Judicial and its sub parts, except for the Office 39 of Attorney Regulation Counsel, and it was determined that it was inappropriate to have them in there.

1 The next one, over on page 10, is the issue of where the Commission on Judicial Discipline will live.
2 And under the original bill, they were in the Ralph Carr Judicial Building, and the amendment provides 3 that they will be there through June 30, 2023 and adds that the Judicial Department or OARC shall 4 provide support. The idea is we want to keep the Commission where it is so that they can work out some 5 of these details. They, it's the tension between being independent, and then still having to have these 6 ancillary HR, Payroll, IT services. So, we'll keep them there under this agreement for a while, and let 7 them try to work it out.

8

9 The next part, page 11, and the next several sections deal with the other primary issue, which was 10 information sharing. And over on page 11, it strikes lines two through four, just that was unnecessary.
11 But on page 13, it talks about what information is provided to the Commission. And you remember, 12 there were concerns about internal or external information. So, the change on page 13, reduced the 13 requirement of information from all such information to the portion of the complaint, alleging just 14 judicial misconduct. And then if the Commission wants to come back and get additional information, 15 that's on page 10-11, lines 10, 11, and 12 of the amended, they can come back and get further 16 information. So, that will reduce the amount of information that the Department had to provide.

17

18 The next section is information sharing by the Department over on page 14 of the bill. And it basically 19 took out the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel as one of the components of the Office that asked to 20 share information, they typically are not going to be involved in that involved in that process.

21

22 But really one of the hearts of the bill is page 15, after line 16, where this new language is inserted, and 23 it talks about the external complaints. If the Department receives a complaint alleging judicial 24 misconduct from an individual that is not an employee, a volunteer, or contractor of the Department, the 25 Department shall notify the complainant of the role of the Commission. So, that information will be 26 communicated to the complainant and they will give get the Commission's information. If the 27 complainant then submits a written electronic complaint, the Department shall forward those materials 28 to the Commission for them to deal with. So, it just sets up a process to simplify and routinize the 29 provision of information.

30

31 The next section deals and we're talking about privilege and confidentiality and what information can be 32 withheld. We have this tension between confidential and privileged information and transparency. And 33 this was truly lawyers talking to lawyers, about lawyerly things about privilege and confidentiality. And 34 they came up with agreements as to what is privileged and what is confidential, and they set forth what 35 those provisions are. And they reverted to, well, there's a specific statement that the Department and the 36 Office of Attorney Regulation will respect confidentiality of the Commission's communications and 37 records. But then certain information can be withheld from disclosure. And that's if it's pursuant to 38 federal law, judicial deliberative provision, really confidential sorts of things, information that might be 39 part of, I wrote in my notes, an employee assistance program, but based upon mental health and 40 professional development programs. That information can be maintained as confidential, but certain

1 information will be disclosed to the Commission, which is, what information is being withheld, the 2 reasons it's being withheld, and providing a log of it. And that's pretty consistent with what lawyers do 3 in the discovery process when they are not turning over information. They say what they're not turning 4 over, and then they describe it.

5
6 And then the next section, page 17. When the department discloses materials or information, it asserts as 7 privileged, they will enter into an agreement under the Rules of Evidence, and it describes how that 8 would be set forth. And the fact of turning over information does not release the claim of privilege or 9 confidentiality. So just by the mere fact of turning it over, doesn't make it public or doesn't waive 10 privilege and confidentiality. And I think that's an important section of the bill for all parties concerned.

11
12 And then finally, on page 22, Chief Justice Boatright had talked about the importance of a victim 13 centered approach to judicial misconduct complaints, to allow the victim to have a voice in how 14 complaints are handled and resolved. So that was incorporated in the bill. So that's the work product of 15 people operating in good faith to narrow the issues. We are still going to have an interim committee to 16 deal with some of the bigger issues, but this addresses the issues that were in the bill satisfactorily to the 17 parties. I ask for an aye vote.

18
19 Sen. Gonzales

20 Thank you, Senator Lee, for walking us through the aspects of this very thoughtfully worded, but also 21 long amendment. And so I want to just make sure that I'm understanding correctly, sort of what's 22 happening where, because we did hear a lot of testimony during our hearing the other day, regarding 23 page 16 of the introduced bill lines 7 through 14, sort of who holds what obligation of either privilege or 24 disclosure and L.015, I believe, seeks to amend that.

25
26 Sen. Lee

27 It does.

28
29 Sen. Gonzales

30 On page 1 lines 30 and 31.

31
32 Sen. Lee

33 What they wanted to make sure of is that the withholding from the Commission disclosure of materials 34 for any of the following reasons, a claim of privilege held by the Department, the Department has a 35 legitimate legal claim to withhold the information. So that phrase was incorporated in there. And then on 36 line 13, a claim of contractual right or obligation occurring after the effective date. So, if there was 37 moving forward. So that was the idea.

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 And then also, there was, we did hear a lot of testimony in the hearing as well in regards to the use of the 3 Department's computer network. And sort of that aspect of the bill, creating a lot of consternation, and 4 they see here that on page two of the amendment lines 4 through 20, that language is struck and replaced 5 with a new process.

6

7 Sen. Lee

8 Well, and also Madam Chair, on lines 22 through 25, were struck page two of the amendment line 4, 9 page 16 strike those and that's what discusses the computer network and access and that came out all 10 together. And then this new language came in dealing with disclosure.

11

12 Sen. Gonzales

13 That is very helpful. Can you help me just understand the last lines 36 and 37 of page 2, and that walks 14 through the end where we're talking about benefits of a victim centered approach to judicial misconduct.
15 Where that fits in?

16

17 Sen. Lee

18 Thank you, Madam Chair, I'd be happy to explain that, as I understand that. Again, I was present when 19 Chief Justice Boatright was talking, making his presentation to us. And he talked about having a more 20 victim centered process. And we have heard that from other stakeholders that may be the victim of 21 misconduct by a judge is looking for a process that is more responsive to their needs, and helping them 22 to heal the harm in potentially a conference with the judge, it would not impair the capability of the 23 Commission to impose discipline. But the views of the victim who may want to continue to work in the 24 office with the judge should be taken into account, sometimes disciplinary processes can create adverse 25 relationships between the complainant and the object of it. So, this just suggests that. And again, I would 26 think some of the details of this will be worked out with the interim committee, that the input from 27 people who are focused on victim centered processes could provide some input.

28

29 Sen. Gonzales

30 Senator Gardner.

31

32 Sen. Gardner

33 Yes, thank you, Madam Chair, having served on the Legislative Workplace Relations Committee, I have 34 to say this is an important thing to be there because we spent a fair amount of time trying to address 35 what is it that when you have a complaint, particularly internal in the workplace, what is it that the 36 victim is seeking, and they have their own very legitimate concerns about continuation in the workplace.
37 Whether they want to stay in that workplace, whether they need to move to another workplace. Whether 38 that would be punishment for them when they're the victim and so forth. So, we're going to spend some 39 time on that. And that's why it's there.

40

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 I appreciate that. Thank you for indulging me by walking me through this in detail. Are there any further 3 questions or discussion from members of the committee regarding L.015. Is their opposition to L.015?
4 Seeing none, L.015 is adopted. Senator Gardner.

5

6 Sen. Gardner

7 Thank you, Madam Chair, I move L.016. L.016 strikes some language concerning the votes of the 8 interim committee. The interim committee in the statute now is made up of four members of the House, 9 four members of the Senate, equal party representation. There was a line there that said in the event of a 10 tie vote with that eight-person committee that the chair would get an additional vote to break the tie. I've 11 discussed this with Senator Lee, as well, we feel like the interim committee needs to bring forth a 12 constitutional provision. And if we don't have consensus, and this is not in any way a partisan issue, then 13 we need to do that. So, it just it takes that somewhat unintended, I think partisan aspect to it. So, I hope 14 to have an aye vote on that.

15

16 Sen. Gonzales

17 Thank you, Senator Gardner. Colleagues, any discussion?

18

19 Sen. Lee

20 Did we vote on 15?

21

22 Sen. Gonzales

23 We did.

24

25 Sen. Lee

26 Did it pass?

27

28 Sen. Gonzales

29 It did

30

31 Sen. Lee

32 Okay.

33

34 Sen. Gonzales

35 And is there any discussion on L.016? Is there opposition to L.016? Seeing none, L.016. is adopted.
36 Senator Gardner.

37

38 Sen. Gardner

39 Thank you Madam Chair, I move L.017. L.017 was at the request of the Attorney General's Office.
40 There was language in the original draft about withholding documents from the State Auditor and the

1 language was too broad. It was really outside the scope of the of the bill and this limits this to the 2 Commission on Judicial Discipline and this particular Department, so, clarification and narrowing of 3 that. I ask for an aye vote.

4

5 Sen. Gonzales

6 Colleagues any discussion regarding L.017? Is their opposition to L.017? Seeing none, L.017 is adopted.
7 Any further amendments? Senator Lee.

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Well, thank you, Madam Chair, I move L.018.

11

12 Sen. Gonzales

13 To the Amendment.

14

15 Sen. Lee

16 The amendment makes some clarifications. The original bill had a working group. We really wanted to 17 come up with an interim committee after discussions amongst a number of people. The other changes to 18 add rules of judicial discipline are just for clarification, I think the bill referred to rules and we wanted to 19 just clarify. And then we also wanted to add the provision down in lines 15 through 18, which describes 20 the outreach and input of the interim committee. That we want this to be an inclusive collaborative, 21 broadly, stakeholder process. So, we just wanted to name some of the people that we certainly want to 22 have involved in this, soliciting input from the commissioners themselves, employees, current and 23 former judges and justices, attorneys, members of the bar association, and the public. That's not 24 exclusive, it is supposed to be expansive.

25

26 Sen. Gonzales

27 Any further discussion? Is there opposition? Seeing none, L.018 is adopted. Senator Gardner.

28

29 Sen. Gardner

30 Thank you, and Madam Chair dropping back, I move L.011. This provides that the commission attorney 31 for the Commission on Judicial discipline will be from the Attorney General's Office, rather than an 32 employee of the Commission. And we clarify that in fact, that's that is the desire of the Commission, and 33 is probably the most efficient way. So, we asked for an aye vote on L.011.

34

35 Sen. Gonzales

36 Is there any discussion? Is there opposition on L.011? Seeing none, L.011 is adopted. Any further 37 amendments? I want to commend you all on this work. I want to commend everyone who has worked on 38 this bill who testified regarding this bill who has been drafting amendments on this bill. Special shout 39 out and commendations to Mr. Berry, for your yeoman's work on this policy, and with that, I will 40 entertain a motion. Senator Gardner.

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. I move Senate Bill 201, as amended, to the committee on appropriations.

3

4 Sen. Gonzales

5 That is a proper motion. And I do think that we will have much time to speak at length about the 6 importance and justifications behind this policy. And with that, I'd like to see if there any closing 7 comments from either of our bill sponsors. Good bill, vote, yes. But yes.

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess I really want to start by talking about the importance of having an 11 independent judiciary, and an independent judicial discipline commission, it is absolutely critical for 12 public confidence in the judicial branch for the public to know that judges are held accountable, just like 13 everyone else is held accountable. As I said, in my opening statement, the judges that I have known in 14 my life have been some of the most extraordinary people that I've met. But like all of us, they have feet 15 of clay. And there are times when they err. And this provides a system of accountability, while 16 recognizing that people who may be victimized by misconduct, need to have an avenue that they can 17 utilize effectively, to redress the wrongs that occurred. The importance of having this process that 18 worked out in this room over the last week result in the discussions, collaborations that occurred 19 amongst the players, amongst the judicial branch, amongst the commissioners themselves, the 20 importance of that cannot be underestimated. And I really want to commend those folks for engaging 21 openly, candidly in that process, and then I can't close without commending Jeremiah Berry, the 22 indomitable bill drafter, who has been working assiduously on amendment after amendment after 23 amendment and multiple bill drafts. This bill went through, as you may know, significant overhaul 24 during the process as we got more and more input. So, I think what we have today sets up a process and 25 we can feel confident that we're going to move forward. We've solved some of the basic problems of 26 independent funding, and some of the basic problems and issues of information sharing. And we're 27 going to put together an interim committee, which has a defined agenda of issues to look at. So, I'm 28 pleased at the outcome of this and thank my co-prime sponsor for his insights and efforts and untiring 29 work to make it come together.

30

31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Senator Gardner.

33

34 Sen. Gardner

35 Thank you. I'll do what I occasionally do on briefs and start with I endorse the comments of my co-party 36 and co-prime. Thanks to Mr. Berry for working 26 hours a day on this, along with all of his other work.
37 I wish the same press that was here and wrote about all of these things were, and I hope they are paying 38 attention this evening, that the Commission on Judicial Discipline and the Judicial Department and 39 particularly that the Supreme Court came together to deal with a very complex and nuanced set of 40 interests in order to partner for judicial accountability and transparency. And that, I think has always

1 been the case. It certainly is the case today and is the case going forward and we look forward to the 2 interim committee and I will stop there and ask for an aye vote with my gratitude expressed to everyone 3 and to Madam Chair and the committee as well.

4
5 Sen. Gonzales

6 Thank you both for your diligence and working trying to address all of the concerns that were raised by 7 the witnesses over the course of the hearing. You know, I think that had we gone to the testimony phase, 8 I'm sorry to the amendment phase. At the end of our last hearing, we would have potentially ended up 9 with a quite different policy. But I think taking the time and being willing to listen and really understand 10 and process and then respond to said concerns, I think, I'm really proud of the work you all have done 11 and know there is much more to do. But with that, Ms. Jenson will you please poll the members

1 Sen. Hansen

2 All right. To Senate Bill 201, Senator Gardner.

3

4 Sen. Gardner

5 Thank you, Mr Chair. I move Senate Bill 201 and J.001.

6

7 Sen. Hansen

8 All right, let's start with J.001. Any discussion on the amendment, any objection? Seeing none, J.001 is 9 adopted. Final discussion on 201, Senator Gardner.

10

11 Sen. Gardner

12 Just quickly, Mr Chair. Senate Bill 201 creates the independent oversight mechanisms for the 13 Commission on Judicial Discipline. It is the result of some very hard work on behalf of both the Judicial 14 Department and the Commission on Judicial Discipline to come to agreement on what are some very 15 difficult and nuanced questions of independence and the Judicial Branch. It is very important bill, and I 16 would also be remiss if I didn't thank both Leg Council Staff and our JBC Staff for getting this note and 17 canary sheet done quickly so that we can get this to Leg Council as well, and I ask for an aye vote.

18

19 Sen. Hansen

20 All right, thank you, Senator Gardner. And I just wanted to pile on quickly there, because this was 21 something that we also prioritized at the JBC and did the set aside to prepare for this bill. And, so, thank 22 you for your hard work, Senator Lee and the staff, because this is, I think, clearly, an urgent need that 23 we get this done and in a good spot and to the Governor's desk. So, thank you for your hard work.

24

25 Sen. Gardner

26 Thank you, Mr Chair.

27

Colorado General Assembly Legislative Council Committee—April 29, 2022 Hearing

1 Speaker Garnett

2 Okay, the next bill up is Senate Bill 201. Sorry about that mix up earlier. Representative Weissman and 3 Representative Carver briefly describe your bill.

4

5 Rep. Weissman

6 Thank you, Mr Speaker and Mr President and Committee. Senate Bill 201 arises out of many months of 7 conversations about how the legislative branch of government should better engage in questions that 8 have arisen concerning judicial discipline and how the process goes in our State. We are here in 9 Legislative Council because part of this bill proposes an interim committee. You can see that starting on 10 page 20, we've modeled this interim committee off of what was set up in House Bill 1325, for school 11 finance last year, because we think that that Bill had some good properties. Here, it's eight members. It 12 is evenly bipartisan, bicameral. We think that that is important for grappling with a subject like this that 13 ought not be partisan. The Chair of the committee is to be appointed by the Senate Majority Leader, the 14 Vice Chair by the House Minority Leader. The interim committee would be approved for up to five 15 meetings, and would be able to refer three measures, which could either be in the form of a bill or 16 potentially a resolution. What three months of very, very intense conversations have surfaced is that 17 there are some very, very big questions here that need to be grappled with in a way that goes beyond the 18 confines of this legislative session. That is what the interim aspect of this work would be about.

19

20 Speaker Garnett

21 Thank you for that. This is technically the first committee of reference in the House for this bill. So, if 22 there's anyone here. First of all, before we go there, are there any questions from members of the 23 Committee for the sponsors? Madam Speaker Pro Tem Benevides.

24

25 Rep Benevides

26 Thank you. And honestly, I am going to apologize to the sponsors, because I haven't read the bill as it 27 changed up a bit, but I thought there was some constitutional issue with regard to the review by the 28 Commission, as opposed to the Court. So maybe, and I read about this, I don't know, so maybe you 29 could tell us if there is or not.

30

31 Speaker Garnett

32 Representative Carver.

33

34

35

1 Rep. Carver
2 Thank you, Mr Speaker. Thank you, Representative Benevides. There are potentially some 3 constitutional issues, and certainly that's what the interim committee is going to look at in the range of 4 issues that are listed out on pages, 21-22 and I think perhaps going over to 23. Some of the issues may 5 need a change in the Constitution, but that would be identified and brought back to the assembly in 2023 6

7 Speaker Garnett
8 Any further discussions from the committee members? Seeing none. Is there anyone here from the 9 public who would like to testify? Seeing none. The public testimony phase is closed. And just if 10 anyone's listening in, this bill, I think, will be referred to House Judiciary, so there'll be another 11 opportunity for the public to weigh in if they so feel the need. Are there any? Representative Weissman.
12

13 Rep. Weissman
14 Sorry, Mr Speaker, just because you mentioned it, and for anybody listening here, and you know, in 15 keeping with conversations we've had with interested parties. We're at the point in the session where it 16 was necessary to come here first, but there will be certainly a robust conversation in Judiciary when we 17 take this bill up next week, and we look forward to hearing in detail and questioning and discussion 18 from anybody who wants to come to that committee at that point.
19

20 Speaker Garnett
21 Wonderful. Are there any amendments? Seeing none. The amendment phase is closed. Is there a 22 motion? President Fenberg, 23

24 Senate Pres. Fenberg
25 Thank you, Mr Speaker, I move to refer Senate Bill 201, to the House Judiciary Committee.

House Judiciary Committee—

May 3, 2022 Hearing on SB 22-201

1 Rep Tipper

2 Rep. Carver, why don't you tell us about Senate Bill 201?

3

4 Rep. Carver

5 Thank you, Madam Chair. This bill which I am on with my colleague Rep. Weissman is a path forward 6 to address the issue of how do we ensure we have a system in Colorado for independent, objective, fact 7 based judicial discipline so that when there are complaints against judges, those in the Judicial Branch, 8 that we have a process that has integrity. That is accessible and addresses some of the concerns that have 9 been raised with the process in the last couple of years. And so, the just of this bill, and I will make 10 brief remarks. We do have a number of witnesses that can go into more detail. But this bill basically 11 establishes an independent source of funding for the Commission. It takes the Commission, which is 12 currently established by rule in the Judicial Branch and places it in the statute and does preserve a lot of 13 the current structure that the Commission has. But then, most importantly, this bill sets up an interim 14 legislative committee to look at a whole range of issues with regards to our judicial discipline process, 15 complaint process. And you'll see in the latter part of the bill, the range of issues that the interim 16 legislative committee is going to take up. You will also see an amendment to create an advisory 17 committee. We have done a lot of stake-holding process. And the Colorado Bar Association, the 18 sections, others, obviously have great interest in this topic. They believe they can bring insight and some 19 expertise and varying perspectives to this process, as we do the deep dive during the interim. And, so, 20 with that, Madam Chair, I'll end my opening remarks and turn it over to my co-prime Rep. Weissman.

21

22 Rep Tipper

23 Thank you very much. Representative Weissman. And I'll just also let folks know that Representative 24 Roberts has also joined us as well, remotely.

25

26 Rep. Weissman

27 All right, thank you, Madam Chair and committee. And I had really hoped on this issue of all issues to 28 be able to be there in person today, but this is how it goes. At the risk of slightly duplicating Rep 29 Carver's opening comments, I did want to sort of lay out the issue in the bill, as I have been thinking 30 about it for many months now. To me, Senate Bill 201 arises out of the conviction I have that those of us 31 who are beneficiaries of the public trust, and that's all of us, as state Representatives have a heightened 32 duty to be protectors of that public trust. It's with no joy, therefore, that as an attorney, as a member of 33 our legislature, as somebody who's been on this committee for six years and chaired it for four, to say 34 that I think public trust in our judicial branch of government has been impaired over the last number of 35 years. It gives me no joy to say that, but nonetheless, I believe that it has been. So, the purpose of this 36 bill is to more actively involve us the legislative branch of government in helping to repair and rebuild

1 from that impairment of trust. So, we do that in a handful of ways in the bill. And I'm not going to go 2 through section by section but thematically.

3
4 First, as Rep Carver said, we seek to codify both the Commission and the Office of Judicial Discipline, 5 which has been around for decades, but we are now giving them a statutory foundation, and we set forth 6 their powers and responsibilities.

7 8 Second, and in connection with that, and this is important, we are providing independent funding from 9 the General Fund for the functions of the Commission and the Office. This ends the dependence on 10 funding from attorney registration fees that flow through the judicial branch, which is the branch of 11 government being overseen by the Commission.

12
13 Third, and this is one of the core parts of the bill to me, we are codifying obligations concerning the flow 14 of information to the Commission so that they can do the work that they are constitutionally charged to 15 do. This question of access to information has been the middle of a lot of the discussion that has 16 happened the last number of months in particular.

17
18 Fourth, we require some annual reporting from the Commission to us at SMART Act that will start this 19 coming January 2023, and will continue annually thereafter.

20
21 And last, as Rep Carver mentioned, we are establishing an evenly bipartisan, bicameral interim 22 committee to continue to grapple with some of the issues that are in this space that are even bigger than 23 the issues we are grappling with in this bill. For a bit of context, the model here was the House Bill 24 1325, interim committee, that was set up for school finance, we thought it was important on this subject, 25 that the interim committee be evenly bipartisan, notwithstanding the current makeup of the General 26 Assembly. These questions are bigger than party or at least they ought to be bigger than party. And as 27 we move forward, particularly with substantive law changes that might involve questions of a 28 constitutional nature and referring measures to the voters in a future year. There needs to be able to be 29 bipartisan support for that. So that was one of the governing principles of how we decided to set up the 30 interim committee. I'll stop there, but we would both be happy to speak to questions.

31
32 Rep Tipper

33 All right, thank you Representative and just wanted to let folks know that Representative Bacon and 34 Representative Lynch have also joined us, as well. All right. Members, any questions for the bill 35 sponsors? All right. Seeing none then why don't we proceed to witnesses and I know I had a little order 36 here but I was told that . . . And I'm sorry sponsors to do that. I thought there was a particular order I just 37 don't have in front of me. I know there was one witness that had a time constraint we're going to call her 38 up first, but for some reason, I can't find it. Lettie Maxfield.

1 Rep. Carver
2 Madam Chair, your discretion.

3
4 Rep Tipper
5 Okay, so let's start with Lettie Maxfield who's joining us remotely and who has a time constraint. Let's 6 also call Marilyn is it Chapell or Chapel that's number three on the list there. And then Mr. Forsyth, if 7 you're here, we'll call you up in person. It's number four on the list. And then, the numbers
8 corresponding to the list that we have. And then I'll also call Mr. Robin Austin, who's remote. Number 5 9 on the list.

10
11 Rep Tipper
12 Alrighty, why don't we go ahead and start with Miss Maxfield and just to let folks know, we're running 13 three minutes of testimony. There's a buzzer that will go off when your time expires. Please introduce 14 yourself and then let us know who you're testifying on behalf of if anyone other than yourself and 15 proceed with your three minutes of testimony. Go ahead Ms. Maxfield.

16
17 Leticia Maxfield
18 Thank you. My name is Leticia Maxfield. I'm appearing today on behalf of the legislative policy 19 committee of the Colorado Bar Association. And first, on behalf of the CBA, we want to thank both the 20 House and Senate sponsors for their sincere efforts to meaningfully engage with the CBA, other 21 government and community stakeholders on this legislation which is designed to promote and inspire 22 greater confidence in public trust in our judiciary and its independent oversight. The introduction of 23 Senate Bill 22 201 set the stage for the CBA to engage in critical and ongoing dialogue amongst its 24 leadership and membership on the topic of judicial oversight here in Colorado. This dialog also 25 continues with members of our larger legal community to this day. Upon introduction of the bill, many 26 comments and questions were initially raised and, as such, the CBA has been and remains engaged in its 27 review of the amendments, which are represented in the re-engrossed bill of April 27, 2022. Many of the 28 initial questions and concerns of the CBA and those brought to us by others in the legal community and 29 other community stakeholders had been resolved by the amendments to the bill. And we sincerely 30 complement the efforts of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the sponsors, the Judicial Branch, and the 31 Commission for what we see is truly a concerted effort to work collaboratively on this critically 32 important piece of legislation. The CBA remains in a neutral position on this bill. But we continue to 33 request that consideration be given to expanding the body of persons appointed to the interim committee 34 to include participation of members of the three branches of government, community stakeholders, 35 including a guarantee of racial, ethnic and gender diversity amongst those appointed to serve on the 36 interim committee. The legislative policy committee intends to continue its engagement in both this 37 proposed legislation and also the highly anticipated work of the interim committee. As we do so, we will 38 be intensely focused on ensuring that, in an effort to improve our system of judicial discipline here in 39 Colorado, we avoid any unintended consequences. Those unintended consequences could be any 40 chilling effect on the willingness of our most qualified and ethical jurists to enter into public service and

1 become judges, any negative effect or disproportional effect on equity, diversity and inclusivity within 2 the department, and specifically those serving on our bench, and potentially any legal challenges to the 3 constitutionality of the bill as it relates to the separation of powers, which may have the effect of, of 4 delaying implementation of legislation that's intended to strengthen our system of governance here in 5 Colorado. Overarchingly, the CBA respectfully asks that as a collective, we continue to diligently move 6 forward to ensure that the Colorado State Legislature, the Judicial Branch, and the Commission, create 7 the functional and financial independence of the Commission, and in so doing, ensure an independent, 8 fair, competent and impartial judiciary. A judiciary composed of persons committed to the highest levels 9 of integrity, and who hold office in the public trust.

10
11 Rep Tipper

12 Thank you very much, Ms. Maxfield. I'll ask you to wrap up there, appreciate it so much. And we will 13 move on to and then just hold the line because if folks have questions for you, we'd love to give them an 14 opportunity to ask them and we'll go to Marilyn Chappell or Chapel, I'm not sure how to pronounce it 15 remotely. Go ahead and introduce yourself and proceed with your three minutes of testimony.

16
17 Marilyn Chappell

18 Yes, thank you. It is Chappell Thank you. I'm Marilyn Chappell. I'm an attorney in private practice in 19 Denver. I'm here as a volunteer as an emeritus board member of the Colorado Judicial Institute. What is 20 CJI? It's a unique organization. It's a nonpartisan nonprofit, established in 1979, with non-attorney and 21 attorney members throughout Colorado, and CJI is committed to protecting and defending the ability of 22 Colorado judges to decide cases fairly and impartially and free from partisan politics. This bill is about 23 part of Colorado's merit system of selecting, evaluating, retaining and disciplining judges. Our system 24 was adopted by our voters in 1966, when they rejected partisan judicial elections, and our system relies 25 on volunteer bipartisan commissions, made up of non-attorneys as well as attorneys. Of course, no 26 system is perfect. And of course, all systems can be improved. But our system is widely admired and a 27 model for those of other states and it has served Colorado well for decades. CJI has three points of input.

28
29 First, CJI supports a robust interim committee process involving relevant stakeholders and, like Ms.
30 Maxfield, we do appreciate the efforts that have been made to take that input into account throughout the 31 process of this bill.

32
33 Second, we're concerned about the timing here. And as we all know, there are ongoing investigations of 34 recent allegations of judicial misconduct. Those are allegations. And under our system of justice in the 35 U.S., we have a system of due process, allowing completion of that investigatory process will enable 36 fully formed decisions on the subject matter of this bill. And we again, support a robust interim 37 committee process that will take stakeholder input into account.

38
39 But finally, this bill has some unnecessarily inflammatory language that itself contradicts the purpose to 40 improve and increase public confidence in the judicial system. And specifically, this language is in

1 portions of the legislative declaration sections (1) (C), (D), and (H), on pages 3 and 4, and in Section 13-2 5.3-110, (7) (B) and (C) on page 22. And this language, unfortunately, as lawyers would say, assumes 3 facts not in evidence. It assumes the truth of these yet unproven allegations of misconduct, and it 4 assumes that the current system cannot address such alleged misconduct. So again, CJI thanks, 5 everybody and we respectfully request that it will be amended to eliminate or reframe that language to 6 make it neutral. Thank you very much.

7

8 Rep Tipper

9 Thank you for wrapping up. I appreciate that. All right, Mr. Austin, you're up next.

10

11 Robin Austin

12 Can you hear me?

13

14 Rep Tipper

15 We can't hear you quite yet.

16

17 Rep Tipper

18 We see that you're not muted. So that's good.

19

20 Robin Austin

21 Can you hear me now?

22

23 Rep Tipper

24 There you are.

25

26 Robin Austin

27 All right.

28

29 Rep Tipper

30 Introduce yourself and proceed with your three minutes of testimony.

31

32 Robin Austin

33 All right. Committee members and Chair I thank you for the opportunity to be involved in this 34 legislative process on SB 22-201. My name is Robin Austin, I advocate with FACES families against 35 court embezzlement, unethical standards, and AUI America United International. I oppose this bill, 36 because it claims to establish and specify the duties of an office of judicial discipline as an independent 37 office within the judicial department. An independent office of judicial discipline within the judicial 38 department. Sounds like an independent office of the fry cook at the corner diner, doesn't it? What 39 makes an office independent, I hope there's enough determination in this body to recognize the danger in 40 creating an office under the umbrella of the court, which is responsible for disciplining the court. Before

1 adoption of the bill. This must be carefully considered and addressed. For the Supreme Court to appoint 2 members of the Commission smells funny to me. There's nothing independent about that. This bill also 3 requires the Attorney General to provide legal services to the Commission and Office. Well, it sounds 4 good, doesn't it? But when I talked to the Attorney General, she stated that her responsibility was to 5 defend the courts and judiciary from lawsuits. She can't both defend them from lawsuits and provide 6 legal services to those tasked with disciplining them without a conflict of interest. She or he would have 7 to choose where loyalty lies. Traditionally with the Judiciary, which will leave the people in the cold 8 without meaningful recourse if this is codified into law. I know legislators wish to pass reforms in light 9 of the very public humiliations our judiciary has recently brought upon themselves. I too, as an advocate 10 for at least 10 years, have striven mightily, often with skeptical, indifferent officials in this very body.
11 They have turned down our efforts to create reform several times. Your job is not to stroke the egos or 12 enhance reputations of politicians with window dressing legislation that solves nothing. You are here to 13 serve your constituents by making government accountable and responsible in transparent and concrete 14 ways. Activists and victims must be included in every step of meaningful legislation. Only they can tell 15 you what the real problems are. Coloradans are being victimized in our courts every day. This bill funds 16 a system that doesn't work. Behind closed door proceedings empower an inept and corrupt status quo.
17 We need legislation that clearly creates transparency and accountability that the people can see, know 18 and participate in governance, and that implements real world consequences for violation of the public 19 trust. I urge you not to pass this bill for these reasons.

20

21 Rep Tipper

22 Thank you, Mr. Austin. And we will proceed to Mr. Forsyth who is here in person. Witnesses online, 23 please stay on for the next testimony.

24

25 Chris Forsyth

26 Thank you, Madam Chair. My name is Chris Forsyth. I'm an attorney who's practicing Colorado for 27 almost 30 years. And during that I started the Judicial Integrity Project. About 10 years ago, we started 28 with an initiative called the honest judge amendment. It was to change the discipline system in 29 Colorado. So the legislature has finally caught up to where we were 10 years ago, that something needed 30 to be done regarding the discipline problem. The discipline Commission has created an Article VI, 31 section 23 of the Colorado Constitution. It's not created by rule. It's that constitutional amendment that 32 must be amended or edited. And hopefully that is what the interim committee will do. The problem with 33 this bill is that the first place legislators went is to judges, to ask judges how they should be disciplined.
34 That's a conflict of interest. Can you not begin to see that asking judges how they should be disciplined 35 is a conflict of interest. And maybe you should take what judges say with a grain of salt. A 50-state 36 survey of Colorado shows that we're unlike most states, 35 states have public judicial discipline 37 proceedings Colorado is one of only 15 that doesn't. Comparatively with other states, we are in the 38 bottom five of public cases of judicial discipline. The bottom five. There's an argument, a strong 39 argument, that we have the worst judicial discipline system in the country because it's a crime, literally a 40 crime is on the books for somebody who reveals the contents of the proceedings at the discipline

1 commission. That's how confidential it is. That's what leads to corruption. That's what leads to the 2 judicial scandal that this bill so often refers to. And it's the Legislature's failure to listen over the years
3 that have led to this. Like this three-minute warning. Here we are, the legislators who spent all their time 4 prior to this bill talking to judges, schmoozing with judges, the Colorado Bar Association, and not 5 spending any time with the victims or those who want reforms. This bill was drafted by anti-reformers.
6 And it's dishonest in its representation on page 8, line 16. The word independent, is used to describe the 7 Office of Judicial Discipline. There is no way on God's green earth that that Office can be accurately 8 described as independent. The employees in that Office will be paid by the Judicial Branch, the Supreme 9 Court still places four judges on the discipline commission, writes the rules for the discipline 10 commission, and only the Supreme Court can forcefully take a judge off the bench. So, it's misleading to 11 the public to put the word independent in there. And unfortunately, what it's trying to do is bolster the 12 current system with this funding. Let's give some funding, call it independent. Funding from the General 13 Assembly will not fix what's wrong with the Colorado Judicial Discipline Commission. The problem is 14 that the Code of Judicial Conduct is not enforced in Colorado courts, period. Thank you.

15

16 Rep Tipper

17 Thank you for your testimony. Mr. Forsyth. Witnesses, excuse me, members. Do we have any questions 18 for the witnesses online or Mr. Forsyth aside here in person? Does anyone have a question for him? All 19 right. Next, we will call up. Ms. Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa. Here in person, Ms. Emma Garrison. Mr.
20 Steve Vasconcellos and Ms. Jenny Dees.

21

22 Rep Tipper

23 Alright, are we missing anyone? And why don't we go ahead and start with Ms. Dees, if we have her up, 24 great.

25

26 Rep Tipper

27 Ms. Dees, I'm not sure I'm pronouncing it correctly. But if you're able to, go ahead and introduce 28 yourself, and proceed with your three minutes of testimony. If you're able to turn your camera on great, 29 if not, that's okay too.

30

31 Jenny Dees

32 I'm not able to.

33

34 Rep Tipper

35 No problem. Okay. Introduce yourself and proceed with your testimony.

36

37 Jenny Dees

38 Thank you. Good afternoon. My name is Jennifer Dees. I'm here to testify about the Commission on 39 Judicial discipline and the issues that I've had in my personal filings and complaints. And I'm going to 40 start last year, December 19 of 2021. I filed a complaint on Judge Sargent in Jeffco County Colorado for

1 threatening to throw me in jail for not wearing a mask and before being very political, just pretty much
2 losing his cool. I filed another complaint on December 30 for the same thing and another on January 4 3 for the same cases. I finally got a confidential letter back January 31, refusing to do anything, even 4 though I had the transcripts and such included in proving my complaint. Then fast forward to March 20, 5 2022, where I was on trial in front of Judge Sargent for a protection order violation, one that was never 6 served. Judge Sargent interferes with my case, and changed the law to fit his agenda. There was no due 7 process during the trial and when the jury came back, not one of them could look at me, knowing what 8 the rest of us didn't know. Judge Sargent had talked to the jury off the record without calling the defense 9 team to inform them. The written jury questions also were never turned in so that we have don't have 10 those. So, we only have arguments on what to do. We did however, when I came back to court with my 11 public defender, Judge Sargent on the record admitted that he had done this with the jury. So, the 12 Commission on Judicial Discipline had plenty of opportunity to judge before he ever thought of a 13 criminal trial, and was able to tamper with it. Because now what we have is a judge tampering with a 14 jury. Think about that Colorado is a representative that has ignored all of these, because every one of 15 these complaints have been sent out to the to you, Mr. Gardner, to you Senator Gonzales they have been 16 sent out to each of you and you have ignored them. We are now further into this and now it's going to be 17 civil lawsuits and other things. But you are wasting the taxpayers' time. You are wasting their money.
18 Now you want to give further money for them to excel at their jobs.

19

20 Rep Tipper

21 Ms. Dees. Thank you very much for your testimony. We'll proceed to the witnesses in person if you just 22 hold the line. We'll go ahead and start with Ms. I was gonna say Garrison, but I wasn't sure I got it, Ms.
23 Garrison and then we'll move to her right.

24

25 Emma Garrison

26 Madam Chair, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to provide testimony to you 27 today. My name is Emma Garrison and I am here on behalf of the Colorado Women's Bar Association.
28 We are an organization of over 1500 attorneys and legal professionals with chapters across the State.
29 Our mission is to promote women in the legal profession and the interests of women generally. We are 30 here to support this bill. The CWBA is fully committed to addressing this issue and it as it is our number 31 one, a number one priority for our members. We would like to state on the record our readiness to serve 32 on the interim committee sub-panel, which is described in the amendment that will be proposed today.
33 The revelations over the last year and a half about complaints of sexual harassment within the judicial 34 system and allegations that these complaints were not handled in a transparent way has been profoundly 35 demoralizing to our members. In February 2021, we called a town hall meeting to allow our members to 36 voice their concerns. We also formed an internal committee to press these reforms forward, and to 37 closely engage with this problem on our members' behalf. Since then, we have engaged with various 38 stakeholders, and we are grateful for that opportunity. When we held the town hall meeting with our 39 members back in February 2021. The overwhelming consensus was a need for a judicial discipline 40 process that is independent from the judges subject to discipline. We support reform that would make

1 the body responsible for judicial discipline financially independent from the Judicial Branch. We 2 support changes to the structure of the Commission to further keep the judicial disciplinary process 3 independent from the Judicial Branch. We support further study of this issue in a setting that brings the 4 various stakeholders together, examines what does judicial discipline looks like in other states, and 5 creates a solution that balances competing interests, including the concerns of the victims and the 6 public's confidence in the Judiciary. It is our understanding that the vast majority of victims who have 7 raised complaints in the past have been women. We want to ensure their interests are adequately 8 protected and not overlooked in the name of transparency, particularly when victims personally wish to 9 keep a matter private. There's also significant research showing that women judges and judges of color 10 are more likely to be on the receiving end of complaints as a result of implicit bias. We want to ensure 11 any changes to the process would take this into account and not lead to a system that discourages women 12 and people of color from applying for the bench. Thank you for your time. We urge a yes vote today and 13 look forward to further engagement on this important issue.

14

15 Rep Tipper

16 Thank you very much Miss Espinosa Krupa.

17

18 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

19 Thank you. My name is Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa. I am an almost thirty-year lawyer in the State of 20 Colorado. I am the Chair of the Independent Ethics Commission and also the Chair of the Commission 21 on Judicial Discipline. I am one of two attorney members that serve on the Commission. The 22 Commission does support the bill. The Commission is very grateful for the legislators, the lawmakers 23 that have made this happen, and encourage collaboration to make sure that all the parties have been 24 heard. The Commission is glad that we have some independent funding insight and some requirements 25 regarding disclosure of complaints against judges, and grateful for an interim committee to continue to 26 work on this. It's my understanding that an amendment was proposed for a sub-panel on judicial 27 discipline, the Commission on Judicial Discipline, as a stakeholder, was not consulted in the creation of 28 that or even a discussion of it. The Commission has in good faith negotiated with the Judiciary, on what 29 we thought were all issues that were to be resolved. It's disappointing that we weren't consulted. We 30 have always welcomed all of the stakeholders and spoke with the stakeholders. But the stakeholders 31 aren't just bar associations and it shouldn't just be law schools and lawyers. There is not a quelling or 32 stopping of women or minority lawyers from applying to be judges. And there is not an implicit bias that 33 can be demonstrated by the Commission's work. The Commission is actually very diverse in its makeup 34 and its constitution. The stakeholders that they keep talking about, the victims, are largely staff 35 members, people that worked for the Court. So, I would encourage any sub panel that is created to 36 consider other larger members of the public, not just lawyers, not just lawyer institutions or law schools, 37 if you're really going to have participation, then get it from the public, because that's who needs to 38 believe in the independence of our Commission for the Judicial Discipline to make decisions that work.
39 There's a lot of talk about the confidentiality concerns. And we do have some of the highest rules of 40 confidentiality amongst our Commission, higher the performance commission and the nominating

1 commissions and that's to protect judges similar to the Independent Ethics Commission from claims that 2 are politically motivated or just not within their our jurisdiction. The judges are held to a higher standard 3 just as lawyers are, and as they should be. And all the Commission is trying to do is fulfill our 4 constitutional mandate. And we're hoping that this step towards complete independence gets us there.
5 When the Judiciary says they want out of the Commission on Judicial Discipline's business, then they 6 really should be. And we welcome and I will take any questions that you have at this time. Thank you.

7
8 Rep Tipper

9 Thank you very much, Mr. Vasconcellos.

10
11 Steven Vasconcellos

12 Thank you, Madam Chair. Committee, my name is Steven Vasconcellos. I'm the State Court 13 Administrator for the Colorado Judicial Department. And I'm here today to testify in favor of Senate Bill 14 201. Like to take a brief moment to thank the bill sponsors Representative Weissman and Representative 15 Carver for their sponsorship of this important legislation. The work of the Colorado Commission on 16 Judicial Discipline is a critical component of Colorado's merit selection and retention process, which is 17 designed to ensure that good qualified judges are allowed to make the tough decisions required of them 18 without fear or retaliation. But it also means that judges who violate codes of ethics are held 19 accountable. While we think many parts of the current system work well, it can certainly be improved.
20 The Judicial Department worked with leadership from the Commission on Judicial Discipline to find 21 common ground and compromise on the key issues that are represented in the re-engrossed version of 22 Senate Bill 201. And I do want to extend my thanks to the Commission members for that very hard-23 earned compromise. I do appreciate it. First and foremost, the Commission on Judicial Discipline needs 24 to be funded directly by the General Assembly, not through an arm of the Court. The public needs to 25 have confidence that the Commission has the freedom and resources it needs to investigate judges as it 26 deems appropriate, without concern of interference from the Judicial Department. We believe it's 27 important that the General Assembly should have a robust open discussion about issues related to 28 judicial discipline before it considers further legal changes to the judicial discipline process. That 29 discussion should include all relevant stake holders, including the public, the legal community, the 30 educational community, and, of course, judges. It's important that we're deliberative and thorough. It's 31 important, excuse me, that we're deliberative and thorough to ensure that we strike the right balance of 32 one accountability, sanctioning judges for unethical behavior. Two, transparency by letting the public 33 know that judges are in fact held accountable. And, three, fairness, ensuring that judges and complaining 34 parties are heard and given adequate due process through the entire disciplinary process. And with that, 35 Madam Chair, I'm happy to answer any questions the committee may have.

36
37 Rep Tipper

38 Thank you very much. Representative Benevides.

1 Rep Benevides

2 Thank you, and I don't I think this will be for Mr. Vasconcellos. And also, Ms. Espinosa Krupa. I don't 3 have any problems with the second half of the bill dealing with having an interim committee look at 4 some of the issues and the questions addressed there. I'm really struggling with the first part of the bill, 5 because, as far as I can tell, the Commission on Judicial Discipline doesn't go away, it continues. But 6 there's also a new Office of Judicial Discipline that's created. And I am not sure how, first how they 7 work together. Because even in our fiscal note, the money goes to the Office of Judicial Discipline. I 8 don't see any money going here to the Commission through this fiscal note. And, so, I'm when you had 9 indicated independent budgets, I'm missing something in this so either one or both of you can explain 10 how those two offices work together.

11

12 Rep Tipper

13 Let's start with Ms. Espinosa Krupa.

14

15 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

16 Thank you, Madam Chair. So, the Commission on Judicial Discipline is the same Commission on 17 Judicial Discipline that currently exists, there's not two separate ones. There had to be one created by 18 statute so that the legislature could direct funding to it. Our funding traditionally, or at least in the recent 19 past, has been through attorney registration fees, which is controlled by the Office of Attorney 20 Regulation and ultimately, the Supreme Court. That in the recent couple of years has proved to be 21 problematic and fraught with some conflicts of interest. Thus, we were basically in a position to obtain 22 independent funding, which is what we were trying to do with the first part of the bill, but the 23 Commission stays the same. The funding just wouldn't have to be approved by the Court or the Office of 24 Attorney Regulation, there wouldn't be that oversight and control of our funding. I hope that answers 25 your question

26

27 Rep Tipper

28 Representative Benevides. And, actually, before we proceed there, just wanted to make sure does 29 anyone have questions for Ms. Dees online? Okay, seeing none, Ms. Dees, thank you for coming and 30 testifying remotely. And we'll continue questions here with folks in person. Representative Benevides.

31

32 Rep Benevides

33 Okay. So, thank you for that response. So, what I'm seeing here is that the creation of the Office of 34 Judicial Discipline on page 8, is merely just a function of getting the money into a separate office, as 35 opposed to a commission. But since that is housed into the Judicial Department, I think, how are those 36 kept distinct?

37

38 Rep Tipper

39 Ms. Espinosa or Mr. Vasconcellos?

40

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for the question. Representative Benevides. For context, the 3 notion of the Judicial Department that's referred to in the bill really is the entire judicial branch of 4 government, including all the independent agencies. So, for example, the Office of the State Public 5 Defender is legally within the Judicial Department. But it is a wholly separate entity, both 6 administratively and financially from the court system. This would set up a similar structure such that 7 the Commission's budget would be completely independent of the court and probation budget, and that 8 the Supreme Court would have no direct or indirect oversight of that funding.

9

10 Rep Tipper

11 Rep. Benevides.

12

13 Rep Benevides

14 So, okay, so the people that are hired already work for the Commission, that are described or are these 15 new hires in addition?

16

17 Rep Tipper

18 Ms Espinosa Krupa.

19

20 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

21 Thank you, Madam Chair. So, we currently have one Executive Director and one part time staff member 22 that we share with another independent agency, those employees would remain the same. The 23 commission members, the ten Commission members all serve as volunteer there's four judges, two 24 lawyers and four non lawyer, non-judge members. So right now, we're only 1.5 staff, hoping to increase 25 that so that we can do our own investigation and have our own attorney.

26

27 Rep Benevides

28 So, the bill does increase it to 4.5 the way I'm reading it.

29

30 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

31 Yes, those would be new hires.

32

33 Rep Benevides

34 Wait, would it be three new hires or four and a half new hires?

35

36 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

37 It would be a full-time administrative staff person, an attorney, an investigator, our current Executive 38 Director, and part time assistant. Okay.

39

40

1 Rep Benevides

2 So, in if I may, because thank you for explaining because I was pretty confused on who was who doing 3 this. But the bigger issue I have is the information sharing and the requirement. So, my understanding, 4 and I could be wrong, is that the Commission accepts requests from a complainant that comes to the 5 Commission and makes a complaint about a judicial officer. They don't go out and solicit complaints, or 6 they don't automatically get complaints that already exist in the Judicial Department, like let's say an 7 employee worked for a judge or some judge and made a complaint about that judge, you wouldn't get 8 that currently in the Commission, unless that employee separately went to the Commission. Is that 9 correct?

10

11 Rep Tipper

12 Go ahead. And you guys can go ahead and dialogue. And then if you're going to direct a question to 13 someone else, direct it to them so that the record can reflect who is responding.

14

15 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

16 Thank you, Madam Chair. The Commission does not go out and seek any complaints or what we call 17 requests for evaluation. The Commission receives those independently. What we have had in the past 18 was a memorandum of understanding with the judiciary, that if there were complaints that went to the 19 State Court Administrator's Office, let's say, or a chief judge, that those would be forwarded to us. It has 20 come to our attention in recent years that that memorandum of understanding was not being honored.
21 And we were not being provided with documentation and complaints, or requests for investigations 22 against judges, at all. That was part of the purpose of adding the duty to disclose to this bill was to create 23 a requirement for that duty to disclose. And that was a big issue with a lot of the stakeholders was, who 24 are you asking to disclose? Are you asking every member of every courthouse to do it? And I think 25 we've struck that compromise, to satisfy the stakeholders that we're not creating work for every 26 employee that works for a judge.

27

28 Rep Benevides

29 If I may continue, is that it's, and that's what I'm really struggling with? I don't I didn't know anything.
30 And this doesn't mention anything about a memorandum of agreement. And you say you haven't been 31 getting that? When did you enter into that memorandum agreement? And how long has it been that you 32 haven't been getting that information?

33

34 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

35 We've had the memorandum of understanding for several years. Over years, there's been some changes.
36 The Commission became aware that we were not receiving that information when the article came out in 37 the Denver Post about complaints of sexual harassment against judges that had been dealt with by 38 Judicial and the Commission was not made aware of those. That's when we became aware that there was 39 information that Judicial had that we were not provided with.

40

1 Rep Benevides

2 Okay, but being familiar with that memo that contained allegations going back in a couple of cases, 10 3 years. So, are you saying that you had not been receiving any information on any complaints for at least 4 10 years?
5

6 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

7 We received some, not all.
8

9 Rep Benevides

10 Okay, then. And why this is important, because I also understand you get complaints not only from 11 employees or people that work with judges, but you also get them from parties to litigation, and that 12 that's a big share of what you currently the work you currently do. Is that correct?
13

14 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

15 That is correct. And if I might, the numbers of public discipline cases that we've had, we in 2020, we 16 had roughly 200 requests for evaluation. Of those 200, roughly 73 required us to procure any evidence 17 or examination of those complaints. As you indicated, we do get a lot of complaints where people are 18 dissatisfied with the ruling of a judge, which is for the Court of Appeals. We don't have jurisdiction for 19 that it has to have a request for evaluation and a claim of conduct or misconduct by a judge under the 20 rules that judges must adhere.
21

22 Rep Benevides

23 So, what you're saying, in the last year that you have, you have roughly 73 cases that actually are things 24 that you would look at. The others are things that you would have referred to the Court of Appeals.
25

26 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

27 Correct.
28

29 Rep Benevides

30 So, the caseload is probably 70 to 100. More or less. I'm just making this up. So right now, and having 31 been an EEO affirmative action officer, I know when individuals bring complaints, it's not easy. I mean, 32 we read about it, and we think, oh, that's terrible that happened to you. But it takes an individual toll on 33 the complainant to come forward. And in many cases, they come forward, anonymously, in order to 34 bring the complaint's situation to someone's attention so, hopefully, it can be addressed. So, and they 35 make a decision of where they can bring that because even as you would, maybe, maybe you did, 36 ma'am, from the Bar Association had talked about a lot of women and sexual harassment complaints and 37 those kinds of complaints, they have choices in where they bring the complaints. And they could go to 38 CCRD, they could go to EEOC, there's a lot of different things they could do. So, in here, it's describing 39 a procedure that says, whoever it is the district, judicial district or somewhere in the court, have roughly, 40 I think it was 60 days to look into it. And then they send all that information to the Commission. And I

1 know from having investigated those 60 days isn't very long to fully complete an investigation. So, I 2 would suspect most are not completed. And then after that period of time, they would go to the 3 Commission, I'm guessing to start up or do a parallel investigation or something. But there's nothing in 4 here that goes back to the victim, the complainant to say: Do you really want this to go there or someone 5 else? That decision appears to be being made for them in this process. And that's just my reading of it.
6 So, I'm just wondering if there's any place else where this process exists, where employers basically are 7 starting investigations, probably not completing them in 60 days, and then handing them off or doing 8 parallel investigations. So that's really the questions. There's somewhere else what was this model done?
9 Because it seems like a little bit of a strange process to me.

10
11 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

12 Thank you. What our experience has been or what the Commission's experience has been is. . . I'll give 13 an example that an employee has a claim of sexual harassment against a judge, law clerk, and goes to a 14 confidant within the court to share that information. That confidant goes to the chief judge, the chief 15 judge tries to do a pretty quick evaluation and investigation to determine how to keep that employee safe 16 and let that employee know their options if they want to disclose it and make a complaint. Typically, 17 then we get something in writing from the chief judge about who they've interviewed, what statements 18 who the witnesses are timing, those 60 days have really been for the court, itself, the presiding 19 disciplinary judge of whatever county to kind of do their assessment of how to keep the employee safe 20 and whether or not if that judge should remain pending any investigation, what they're going to need as 21 far as coverage, so the other parties and complainants aren't prejudiced by removing that judge, if that's 22 necessary. Once the Commission gets it, in the past, how we have usually because we don't have our 23 own investigator, we don't have our own lawyers, the Office of Attorney Regulation has shared their 24 attorneys and investigators. They're very adept at going in and talking to victims and making sure that 25 they feel safe and whatever the process can do to assist them. During our investigation. there usually 26 isn't parallel investigations that we're aware of. Whether or not that person also made a complaint with 27 EEOC, we wouldn't know. Our process is confidential. If that complainant wanted to remain 28 anonymous, they could be however, we have to disclose some of the facts to try to get information from 29 people which largely does then identify that employee. Not always, but at certain times. So, the 60 days 30 is usually something that gives the presiding district disciplinary judge an opportunity to kind of keep 31 house so to speak in their own county before bringing it to us. And sometimes they bring it to us initially 32 and say we're going to hand you everything we have. But the 60 days was to make sure that we got it 33 quick enough so that we could act if a judge needed perhaps not to be on the bench while the 34 investigation was occurring.

35
36 Rep Benevides

37 And I guess I heard you say you're weren't being told about these. So, where what you just described 38 probably happened rarely, in the last 10 years. And if you were waiting for the presiding disciplinary 39 judge to bring it to you, there was no requirement, they bring it to you after 60 days. So that may be 40 brought the ones that did bring it to you, after they completed that, but with a strict 60-day requirement

1 to turn over what you had all the names and all the information. It seems like that could create a problem
2 and also contacting the complainant again, how is that done? Because they never chose the Commission 3 to do this. And to give that information to the Commission, and that's why I have concerns because in 4 most workplaces, it's left to the workplace for that investigation, and some do it well, some don't do very 5 much. And I'm sure that's the same in in judicial districts. But to, and again, 60 days is not very long.
6 That seems like you will have those problems come up. Where I'm a complainant, I complained to the 7 judge, it went to the presiding judge, they're still looking at it. Maybe they interviewed me, they 8 interviewed some people. The next thing I know, I might get something from you all to say now you 9 have it or you have it at the same time. So that's kind of where I'm going is this processing is really 10 quick. And there doesn't seem to be notice to the complainant. And was any of that thought through.

11

12 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

13 And there is correspondence with a complainant. And we do, there is not a victim's right act equivalent, 14 so to speak. But we do work with a complainant. And do take that seriously. And we're looking at how 15 to improve on that process. But we do keep in communication with them, not the chief that gave us their 16 investigation and information.

17

18 Rep Tipper

19 Okay, are there further questions? Seeing no further questions. Other members, questions for these 20 witnesses. Thank you very much for coming today. We appreciate it. I'll go ahead and call up. These 21 next four witnesses are all remote. Ms. McLean. Ms. Fleming, Mrs. Van Gordon, Gorder, excuse me, 22 and Miss Nystrom. So, we only have two of the four that are up there. Is there anybody else in the room 23 that is here to testify on Senate Bill 201. Okay, ladies, it's just you testifying remotely. Why don't we 24 start with Ms. McLean. Go ahead and introduce yourself and then proceed with your three minutes of 25 testimony.

26

27 Marilee McLean

28 Thank you, Marilee McLean, an author, national speaker and international speaker on courtroom reform.
29 So, I've been working on this for 30 years. And we're just barely touching the surface here to the 30 problems that we have within our court system with our judges. I deal with it every day cases every day, 31 where they're not getting their First Amendment rights, no due process. We have judges that are not 32 trained in child abuse, child sexual abuse, domestic violence. And as much as you can think they're 33 being trained, they're on the bench for two years, then they rotate, and they're not getting the training 34 that's necessary to handle these type of cases. So, every day, I see women that are good loving moms 35 that have done nothing wrong, but try to protect their children are losing their children to abusers in 36 epidemic numbers. And that is due to lack of training. And that's also due to discretionary rules. The 37 judges have a discretionary role. Where do these women go? When this happens? I'll give you an 38 example. Last year, I handled a case here in Colorado, Natalie Chase was the judge. I know you've heard 39 of her Judicial District 18. And the mother's case on that, I was very involved in it, and she believed her 40 daughters, three daughters, were allegedly sexually abused and went to court with her with about 15

1 other women. We stood outside the courtroom, but I was an ADA advocate to come in with her so she'd 2 have somebody with her. She went through $350,000 in legal fees. But it didn't matter, because she 3 didn't have an attorney at this point. And Chase wouldn't let her get an attorney because they said she 4 had too much money. On the bottom line, I watched what Chase did in that courtroom. And it's 5 appalling and I don't think any of you can imagine that the fact that she had a racial bias was nothing 6 compared to what she did this woman and her children for the rest of their lives. She lost her parental 7 rights. There was an article in the newspaper on her case, but didn't name her or anything like that. In 8 fact, the mother did going in the paper, and she lost her children and her parental rights. She went to jail.
9 And another gentleman for the article that went to paper. I hope you can hear me it sounds like it's 10 echoing. But there's so much that needs to be done. You guys are really hitting something, it's important, 11 but it doesn't do any good for this to go to a commission of judges and other judges make the ruling. So, 12 an interim committee, yes, you better have some advocates on that interim committee. Somebody like 13 myself that knows what's going on in these cases. And seeing this every day, I have 1,000s of cases.
14 This isn't just in Colorado, it's nationwide. And we have a huge problem with accountability, 15 transparency is important. And until we get that taken care, of all this other stuff doesn't even matter 16 because you're not being protected. Thank you for your time. If you have any questions, I'm here to 17 answer.

18

19 Rep Tipper

20 Thank you very much and just let you know, we could hear you really appreciate it. Okay, well, we'll 21 move to Ms. Fleming. Sometimes when our mics aren't muted in the room. There's an echo so we'll 22 make sure that they're muted. Ms. Fleming go ahead and introduce yourself and proceed with your 23 testimony.

24

25 Luanne Flemming

26 Members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify. My name is Luanne Fleming. I'm an 27 advocate for FACES, families against the court embezzlement standards. We are part of a grassroots 28 human rights coalition to protect the elderly and the disabled from the abuses of the state's guardianship 29 system. I am a tier three ambassador with America United International. An interim committee sounds 30 like it might be good, but I have serious doubts. We've tried for 10 years to stop the isolation of our 31 loved ones in probate courts and introduced the Judicial Integrity Project. This would create judicial 32 discipline, oversight, and transparency. This has been an ongoing problem in Colorado. This bill doesn't 33 include a means for public input. I'm even more concerned, because as noted in the Denver Post, the bill 34 sponsors secretly spent time with the Chief Justice and the Judicial Branch beforehand. My question to 35 you, legislators, who creates this independent judicial discipline commission? And will this committee 36 work in secret? What does independence really mean? I ask that no sponsors of his bill serve on the 37 committee, and you add an amendment creating a judicial task force. This includes public involvement, 38 organizations, such as FACES, victims of probate, to seek real judicial discipline. In my opinion, this 39 bill does not solve any problems at all. Thank you.

40

1 Rep Tipper

2 Thank you for your testimony. And I'm last call for Mrs. Van Gorder. And Ms. Nystrom. And neither 3 are online. Do we have any questions for the two witnesses that just testified? For the two witnesses that 4 are up there no questions for you. But we do have another witness joining us. Thank you very much for 5 testifying. And Mrs. Van Gorder. If you could introduce yourself, tell us who you're testifying on behalf 6 of someone other than yourself. And then proceed with your three minutes of testimony. Give us a 7 second we can't quite hear you yet, if you're speaking.

8

9 Rosmary Van Gorder

10 Okay, how's that?

11

12 Rep Tipper

13 All right, all set go ahead and start over because we didn't hear anything.

14

15 Rosmary Van Gorder

16 All right, Madam Chair and committee members. Thank you for the opportunity today. I am Rosemary 17 Van Gorder from Fort Collins. And I am appearing really on behalf of myself as a citizen but also as an 18 advocate for parents involved with the child welfare system. I want to dovetail on Ms. McLean's 19 comments about family court and the problems with the 18th Judicial District and Judge Natalie Chase.
20 Because this is a perfect example of what do we do now? Well, how do we handle the multitude of 21 complaints that came in after the public censure? I am aware of several families who have submitted 22 complaints to judicial discipline. They have not received an acknowledgement or response or a denial of 23 the it's called an RFE, request for evaluation, which isn't an even an investigation, it is just hey, this was 24 awful. I need you to look at what happened in court with this judge. So, I can imagine from where this 25 judicial discipline commission sits, that it is covering new ground about what to do after a judge has 26 been censured, has left the bench, and get more complaints coming in. It has to be like an eyes wide shut 27 situation. But something has to move forward in the interest of justice for these families who have valid 28 complaints about misconduct. If these evaluations are given consideration for reasonable basis, but I 29 want to know, how many does it take for there to be a consensus that the misconduct rose to the level of, 30 we have to address this? People have a right to redress their grievances to the government. The Supreme 31 Court makes good faith efforts to resolve differences with the Judicial Discipline Commission. That's in 32 the bill. What about the people who have complaints not addressed? And the only avenue I see, due to 33 all the media, the multitude of cases that resulted in complaints on a specific judge. What are you going 34 to do about it? A rehearing, a formal review or rehearing of these cases, whether they're open, closed, 35 old or new or in progress, deserve the same consideration that anybody else that is in a court of law
36 deserves. Family courts are lacking in due process protections. We lack the right to the 14th Amendment 37 due process clause to parent your children. What are we going to do about that? These complaints about 38 family deserves a strong reaction response with the support of the Judiciary Commissions.

39

40

1 Rep Tipper

2 Thank you very much Ms. Van Gorder. Your time is up. We appreciate your testimony today. Members, 3 do we have any questions for Ms. Van Gorder? Seeing none in the room, thank you again. And I'll do a 4 last call in the room. Any witnesses on Senate Bill? 201? All right. Seeing none we will close the 5 witness portion of the hearing and call the sponsor backup in person and Representative Weissman back 6 up on the wall.

7

8 Rep Tipper

9 Rep Carver we have amendment L.022 And L.024. That's been distributed. Why don't you tell us what 10 your intention is. Rep. Carver.

11

12 Rep. Carver

13 Thank you, Madam Chair. And at this time, may I go ahead and move L.022.

14

15 Rep Tipper

16 Second.

17

18 Rep. Carver

19 And then Madam Chair, I also need to move L.023 which is an amendment to L.022 and I would like to 20 discuss them together if I may.

21

22 Rep Tipper

23 Sure. Committee members, do you have L.023? Okay, I'm just the only one that doesn't all right.

24 Representative Carver please tell us about amendment L.022 and amendment. Excuse me. I'll second.

25 Did you move 23?

26

27 Rep. Carver

28 I did.

29

30 Rep Tipper

31 Okay, I'll second it. So, thank you very much Representative Luck and Mr. Pogue. Why don't you talk 32 about 23 and 22 and then procedurally when it comes to it, we'll deal with them accordingly.

33

34 Rep. Carver

35 Thank you, Madam Chair. There has been some reference in my opening comments, Rep Weissman's, 36 and some of the witnesses. This is the advisory group called a sub-panel that we want to add to the bill 37 structure. And the idea is that in this interim legislative committee, which is fully bipartisan four 38 members from the House and Senate, equal number of each party. That this sub panel would, and you 39 can see the membership listed in L.023, that it would bring together perspectives that we believe have 40 some particular depth of understanding. Lawyers that have practiced within our legal system from the

1 bar associations, legal societies, law schools, also two members of the Commission, two members of the 2 Judicial Department. And so we think, given the breadth, and members, I hope you had a chance to look 3 at the breadth of the issues that the interim committee is going to take on, on pages 22 through 24, and 4 those are at a minimum shall study. So those are the required topics. But this whole area of how best to 5 approach a judicial discipline system is to be a very robust discussion, wide ranging, as you'll see, in the 6 initial amendment, L.022. All meetings of this advisory panel are open to the public and broadcast over 7 the internet. Every meeting of the advisory panel shall include an opportunity for public comment. And,
8 so, we are looking at a process that is transparent to the public, that involves the public. But that also 9 brings these varying perspectives and areas of expertise as an advisory committee to assist in working 10 our way through the many areas that we have raised in 201, that need to be looked at. And it is also 11 contemplated in this bill, that when recommendations are brought back to the Colorado General 12 Assembly in 2023. They may, in fact include recommendations involving both statutory issues and 13 perhaps some areas that touch upon current constitutional provisions in the Colorado Constitution that 14 perhaps need to be amended. And so we recognize that there are those issues involved in this area. And, 15 so, I would also just call out, based on some of the comments made, that we really have tried to work, 16 and Rep Weissman and I will make a pledge, we will continue to have robust discussion with all the 17 stakeholders should the committee approve the bill and move it to the House floor. That stakeholder 18 discussion and our commitment to talk with all of those with interest in this bill would continue. So with 19 that, Madam Chair, would request approval of both L.022 as amended by L.023.

20

21 Rep Tipper

22 Thank you. Representative Weissman.

23

24 Rep. Weissman

25 Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to add just a bit to that. Rep Carver was quite thorough in her 26 explication of what's going on here. A couple of key things. One, this is an advisory entity. I think a lot 27 of members of the committee are familiar with this structure where you have have an interim committee, 28 and then you have a supportive group. We use that with a lot of the ARGO work last year when 29 grappling with similarly big issue spaces, but the ultimate decisions are to be made by the eight 30 legislator members who are appointed, as we said in a bipartisan, bicameral way. That's one important 31 thing. This has come together pretty quickly as Rep Carver hinted at, you know, in these last days of 32 session here, we are aware of some concerns that maybe we don't have the balance entirely right. In 33 every respect here and I am certainly open to further refinements and you know, in putting that 34 commitment on the record here, you know, we were running out of time in session, but I believe we do 35 have time to continue to polish details after today. Fundamentally, this structure arises out of things that 36 we have heard from certain key folks, for example, the Women's Bar Association, who the committee 37 heard from earlier, that they want to make sure that they are heard. And I have communicated to 38 everybody who has expressed an interest in this. In the interim committee, you will be heard there will 39 be public meetings. I mean, a lot of people want to weigh in on this over the Summer and Fall in should 40 be able to. This idea of a sub panel structure was sort of just a way to formalize that a little bit without

1 trying to be exclusive as to the many, many hours of public hearings and opportunity for public 2 comment that would also happen in connection with the interim committee.

3
4 Rep Tipper

5 All right, any questions on amendment L.023. Representative Benevides.

6
7 Rep Benevides

8 Thank you. And, you know, I just did another bill that created a task force in the interim committee, and 9 it cost us a little over $100,000 to have legislative services facilitate that. And as you both describe, with 10 hours of public testimony, what the things are required for the interim committee to look at plus 11 handling a task force. I don't see anything in here in the amendments or in the bill, or in the fiscal note 12 that says who is going to do this, who's going to facilitate this work this Summer? Because it's a very 13 short timeframe from the end of our session, until I think October.

14
15 Rep. Carver

16 Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Representative Benevides, I believe on the revised fiscal note.
17 And if we need to call the fiscal analyst, we can certainly try and do that. That we do have on page five, 18 sub heading legislative department, a reference to cause for Legislative Council Staff and also Office of 19 Legislative Legal Services to staff an interim committee. And it references a researcher, attorney, 20 legislative editor. And then certainly member reimbursements. So, because we are talking of a 21 legislative committee consisting of eight members, so I believe those costs and the staffing costs are 22 reflected in the revised fiscal note.

23
24 Rep Tipper

25 Rep Benevides.

26
27 Rep Benevides

28 Thank you for that. I did see those but they were so much less than the small committee we're doing on 29 jail standards, that I was surprised and didn't think that was enough to cover the numbers of meetings 30 and things you all are describing. So, but if the legislative department is saying they can do it for that 31 price, that's interesting. It'll certainly have me revisit other fiscal notes. But that's all.

32
33 Rep Tipper

34 All right. Any further discussion, Representative Weissman.

35
36 Rep. Weissman

37 Thank you, you know, to Rep Benevides's question. You know, what's in that part of the fiscal note is 38 simply what the fiscal analysis process came back with for the number of meetings and other details that 39 we scoped. You'll notice that, you know, we haven't written in per diem or mileage or some other kind 40 of amount for the work of the sub panel.

1 Rep Tipper

2 All right, any further discussion on amendment L 023? Seeing none, any objection to amendment 3 L.023? Seeing none, amendment L.023 to amendment L.022 passes. Any further discussion on 4 amendment L.022, as amended? Seeing none. Any objection to amendment L 022 as amended? Seeing 5 none, amendment L.022 passes. Sponsors, Representative Carver.

6

7 Rep. Carver

8 Thank you, Madam Chair, I move amendment L.024.

9

10 Rep Tipper

11 Second. Rep. Carver.

12

13 Rep. Carver

14 Thank you, Madam Chair. On page 24. at the tail end of the long list of things that the interim 15 committee needs to look at. It makes reference the relative benefits of the models for achieving 16 independent judicial discipline adopted by Illinois and the American Bar Association Model Rules or 17 any other model addressing the final decision maker. This is to delete Illinois. While I'm sure the great 18 State of Illinois has many things to recommend itself, and we are glad to look at their system for judicial 19 discipline, I don't know that we need to call out one of 49 states specifically. We will be looking broadly 20 at how other states. That is, the bill contemplates that the legislative committee will be looking at what 21 other states do as well as the Model Rules of the ABA as part of their review and evaluation, and so with 22 that I ask for an aye vote.

23

24 Rep Tipper

25 Thank you. Any questions on amendment L.024? Representative Weissman.

26

27 Rep. Weissman

28 Thank you just wanted to add, you know, Members, this is this is friendly, I'm supportive of this is 29 something Rep Carver and I talked about. There is casual language whereby, you know, we are not 30 precluding the Summer or Fall process from looking at Illinois or frankly, any other state for that matter.
31 I think Rep. Carver felt, sort of philosophically, it's perhaps odd to call out a single state even though it 32 is one that came to our attention in prior research. But I feel the ability to look at and learn from that or 33 not, if that's what the interim committee and in its judgment decides it is still there. So, no problem was 34 with this clarification.

35

36 Rep Tipper

37 Any questions on amendment L.024. Seeing none, any objection to amendment L.024? Seeing none, 38 amendment L.024 passes. Sponsors any further amendments?

39

40

1 Rep. Carver
2 No, Madam Chair.

3
4 Rep Tipper
5 All right, and Representative Weissman, do you have another amendment?

6
7 Rep. Weissman
8 Yeah, I'm sorry, Madam Chair looks like we might not be able to move it today. The last one was really 9 just technical. Nothing more than a couple of cross reference cleanups. There was a lot of amendment 10 action in the Senate. And I noticed when I was reading, a few things got missed. We're talking about 11 nothing more than 7(b) where it should have said 7(c), that kind of thing. But that's something that we 12 could clean up on second reading. Sorry we are not set to go today.

13
14 Rep Tipper
15 All right, Members, any amendments from the committee? Seeing none, the amendment portion is 16 closed. Sponsors wrap up. Representative Carver.

17
18 Rep. Carver
19 Thank you, Madam Chair. Members. This is the start of what we hope to be a robust, thoughtful, 20 informed process that involves the public, that involves many different perspectives. All with the 21 commitment of strengthening our system of judicial discipline, both in process and substantive standards 22 and doing that in a systemic and thoughtful way. I did want to, Rep. Benevides with regards to your 23 comment about information sharing, point out on page 23, subsection J. Well, actually I and J, that the 24 interim legislative committee is tasked with, must address, the best method of balancing the values of 25 confidentiality and transparency for judicial discipline matters. That's sub (I) but then also (J). How to 26 ensure that the Commission can obtain unfettered access to information and files in the custody or 27 control of the department relevant to judicial misconduct complaints. So, the language in the bill 28 currently on information sharing is the start of the process in looking at this issue, not the end. And 29 members, appreciate your time. My thanks to all the many stakeholders who have worked so hard on 30 this bill, that discussion will continue. And at this time, Madam Chair, I'm ready to move the bill. Thank 31 you, Madam Chair. I move Senate Bill 22-201 as amended to appropriations with a favorable 32 recommendation.

33
34 Rep Tipper
35 Alright it's been moved and seconded. Do we have any closing comments? Representative Benevides.

36
37 Rep Benevides
38 Thank you, Madam Chair. And thank you sponsors for bringing the bill I know you guys have worked a 39 lot on this bill. I wish I could say I was in agreement with what you concluded, I do agree. And thank 40 you for pointing those areas out for the interim committee and the panel to look at. And I think that goes

1 to my point. Those are things they're going to be looking at this Summer, yet, we've made some 2 changes, where we are sharing information already, before the interim committee can actually look at 3 and evaluate the best way to do those things. And I think, at least for me, it's sort of the cart before the 4 horse, in that we are doing this interim committee and sub panel that we just passed, to evaluate other 5 states' ways of doing judicial discipline, which I applaud and all of the other items listed here that the 6 committee will be studying. I think those are important points. And I think they should do that, before 7 we move forward with making changes. I think the changes that are being made in the first half of the 8 bill are significant, including adding new staff, when listening to the numbers of complaints that have 9 been looked at. We don't really know. And as far as I know, other than from a previous situation. There 10 was only one time that I'm aware of that the Commission hired an outside investigation. And they hired 11 that without any money in hand. So, I hope this $400,000 that's been appropriated in this is not to pay 12 past debts of the Commission. This is going forward in the new fiscal year, not for the past. And if there 13 is a need, since we're giving them new staffing, which includes investigators to spend that $400,000, 14 then they should spend it on future cases, but not for past. So, I have real concerns about the first half of 15 the bill. And I wish these were two separate bills, because I liked the second part of all of the things you 16 put in here to have a group outside of Judicial and have the various different stakeholders weigh in on 17 determining how we should be moving forward on this. But because it's an entire bill, I can't support the 18 bill.

19

20 Rep Tipper

21 Any further closing comments from members of the committee? All right, seeing none, Mr. Pogue, 22 please call the roll.

23

24 Staff Pogue

25 Representatives Bacon? Yes. Benevides? No. Bockenfeld? Yes. Carver Yes. Doherty. Yes. Luck? Yes.
26 Lynch? Yes. Roberts? Yes. Woodrow? Yes. Weissman? Representative Weissman? Yes. Madam Chair?
27 Yes.

28

29 Rep Tipper

30 That passes ten to one.

the H. Appropriations Comm., Colo. Leg., May 6, 2022;

House Appropriations Committee—May 6, 2022 Hearing: SB 22-201

1 Rep. McCluskie

2 Next up we have Senate Bill 201, Representatives, Weissman and Carver. Members, do we have any 3 questions for our bill sponsors, I do want to direct your attention to an additional memo included in your 4 canary packets today. Rep Weissman, or Rep Carver, could you explain to us the additional amendment, 5 L.027. Rep. Weissman.

6

7 Rep. Weissman

8 Yes, thank you, Madam Chair. So, we are asking the committee today to adopt L.027, which essentially 9 replaces what we did in Judiciary Committee a couple days ago. So 201, is a bill to try to improve the 10 process for judicial discipline in Colorado. Part of that is we're going to set up an interim committee, and 11 I won't go into that, that's set forth in the bill. Part of what we've been grappling with is how the interim 12 committee will hear input from certain very, very interested stakeholders, for example, bar associations, 13 professional legal societies in Colorado and others. We had landed on an approach that we thought 14 might work in Judiciary Committee that was going to have timing challenges, because this being an 15 even numbered year, we have a pretty short ramp for interim committees in the summer. It was also 16 potentially going to drive more of an appropriation requirement here. So, what we have worked out 17 instead in the last couple of days is what is set forth in L.027, which is just to sharpen and make more 18 detailed and exacting the requirements on the interim committee itself to hear from and elicit input from 19 certain key interested parties. So, that's what L.027 does with that. Then we're not actually changing the 20 appropriation requirement as the bill comes from the Senate.

21

22 Rep. McCluskie

23 Thank you. Representative Weissman, any questions, members? I do want to clarify you are asking for 24 amendment L.027, not amendment L.026?

25

26 Rep. Weissman

27 That is correct.

28

29 Rep. McCluskie

30 Thank you, Representative Weissman. Seeing no further discussion. Representative Tipper.

31

32 Rep Tipper

33 Thank you, Madam Chair, I move amendment L.027 to Senate Bill 201.

34

35 Rep. Duran

36 Second.

37

1 Rep. McCluskie

2 That's been properly moved and seconded. Any objections? Members, seeing none. L.027 is adopted.
3 Any additional amendments? Seeing none. The amendment phase is closed. Representative Tipper.

4

5 Rep Tipper

6 Thank you, Madam Chair, I move Senate Bill 201, as amended to the committee the whole.

5 Sen. Lee

6 We've got the gang back together. I know some of you must have been going through session 7 withdrawal syndrome, and thus really welcome getting back together. So, thanks for being here. We 8 convened today pursuant to Senate Bill 22-201, to undertake what I consider a significant and august 9 responsibility to reestablish public trust in Colorado's Judicial Department. But initially, I want to thank 10 my colleagues for accepting the charge from your leadership in both Houses to serve on this interim 11 committee. It's an expression of their confidence in your knowledge, your commitment, and judgment. I 12 note at the outset that this is a very diverse committee, four members from the House, four members 13 from the Senate, four Democrats, four Republicans. We have lawyers and we have non-lawyers, which 14 is appropriate for the beginning of this process. The impetus for Senate Bill 201, is, quite candidly, a 15 judicial system under siege, a Department plagued over the past three, four years by allegations widely 16 reported in the media. And these are just two of them, reporting significant scandals and judicial 17 misconduct. And these are headlines. There were no less than 15 front page articles about challenges and 18 misconduct within the system, high level misconduct, sex harassment, impropriety by judges and 19 justices and employees of the Department, allegations of the awarding of a multi-million-dollar contract 20 allegedly to cover up improper conduct. All of this resulting in multiple high-level resignations of senior 21 Judicial Department leaders and six, almost seven, investigations by the State Auditor, the Office of 22 Attorney Regulation Counsel, the FBI, two outside agencies engaged by the Judicial Department, and 23 the Commission on Judicial Discipline. I say almost seven because the Denver District Attorney was 24 given a file with information to evaluate misconduct by Department employees, but they received the 25 file too late to conduct an investigation before the statute of limitations ran. Senate Bill 201 passed 26 overwhelmingly, unanimously in the Senate, where it originated, and with 59 votes in the House. It was 27 an attempt to address some of the issues raised in the SMART Act hearing and in the press, but we 28 couldn't address them all, and thus this Interim Committee was formed. Senate Bill 201 did establish 29 independent funding for the Office of Judicial Discipline, a significant issue identified at the SMART 30 hearings. Another significant issue raised at the SMART hearings was the inability of the Commission 31 to obtain information about judicial misconduct from the Judicial Department, which had come to the 32 attention of the off the Commission on Judicial Discipline. It became clear at those SMART Act 33 hearings that the Commission on Judicial Discipline, established under the constitution for this process, 34 charged with addressing judicial misconduct had been marginalized, had been ignored, and had virtually 35 been rendered incapable of performing its constitutional duty. So, Senate Bill 201, established rules for 36 information sharing. It finally created this Legislative Interim Committee to address in greater detail the 37 issues that needed to be addressed. The bill specifically identified 18 areas for the Committee to study,

1 and I encourage my committee members to look at page, I believe it's 18 of the bill, for the areas that 2 this committee is charged with evaluating. Ask witnesses questions about those 18 areas. It's a 3 significant amount of work and we have our work cut out for us. I also want to recognize and thank staff 4 from OLLS, Hamza Syed, Will Clark, and Juliann Jenson. Did I say OLLS? I meant Leg. Council, but 5 also we're being staffed by OLLS: Conrad Imel, Chelsea Prinzell. I really want to recognize the work
6 and the efforts that our staff puts into these hearings. Ms Jenson and I have been in virtual daily 7 communication to organize it. Communicating with members, scheduling the hearings, gathering 8 background materials, and lining up witnesses. I encourage you to look at the box. I'm not sure how else 9 to identify it, but the online place where background materials are provided. We are, committee 10 members, dealing with some pretty arcane subject matter here, which isn't in the knowledge of most 11 people. So we've given you some resource material in the box to read through. We've got the Annual 12 Report by the Office of Judicial Discipline, a 2018 report by IAALS, a nationally recognized 13 organization, the Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System at the University of 14 Denver about best practices for judicial discipline. They surveyed states all over the nation to determine 15 what works. We also have a handbook for members of judicial discipline commissions and a judicial 16 conduct commission guide, How Judicial Conduct Commissions Work, by a lady by name of Cynthia 17 Gray, who is from the National Association of State Courts and is a recognized expert in this area.
18 Again, I urge you to immerse yourself in this. I want to read just a brief sentence from the IAALS 19 Report, which frames what we are talking about here today. Effective judicial discipline is an important 20 part of a trusted and trustworthy court system. The public must know that judicial ethics and violations 21 of the Code of Judicial Conduct are taken seriously. Absent that assurance, the system appears self-22 serving, protectionist, and even potentially corrupt. And it is not just the reality of the existence of 23 effective systems that matters. It's the appearance. A wholly effective system with no transparency and 24 no public confidence will not suffice. I need to say, after describing the challenges the Judicial 25 Department has been facing over the past four years that Colorado has historically been recognized as 26 having a gold standard judicial system. We had a constitutional amendment in 1966 which set up a merit 27 system with local nominating commissioners made up of local practitioners to get good judges on the 28 bench. We also statutorily set up a judicial performance system, which Senators Gardner, Van Winkle, 29 and I worked on three or four years ago to improve, revise, and make even better. And the third 30 component of the system is the Commission on Judicial Discipline. So that's the overview of the system.
31 We're working over the next couple of weeks on the judicial discipline section of it. I think the question 32 I want each of us to be considering as we go forward is, will the public have faith in a system in which 33 those charged with assessing misconduct of judges are overseen exclusively by judges? Where judges 34 screen all the complaints against judges, judges select which complaints move forward for investigation?
35 If judges control the budget, the rules, the appeals and the outcomes, is that a system that will inspire 36 public confidence? So that's the framing of what I see as the mandate of the committee, and I appreciate 37 the indulgence of the members with that somewhat lengthy introduction. But I thought it was important 38 to do so. I'll now turn to my esteemed colleague, Vice Chair Carver, for her opening thoughts.

39
40

1 Rep. Carver

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair. The task we have is spelled out on pages 18 and 19 of Senate Bill 201, and how 3 did we get here? We got here through a memo that surfaced indicating misconduct, indicating improper 4 process, indicating complaints made, and yet no records or little record showing thorough and timely 5 investigation. And this kicked off a process in the Legislature where we looked at the entire system to 6 include the fact that past practice had been that the judicial commission was actually funded by the 7 Judicial Branch. In other words, there was no independent funding source, and that was an issue that was 8 addressed in Senate Bill 201, as well as some of the basics on information sharing. However, the bulk of 9 the review that we're doing in this committee with what we hope to be extensive participation by bar 10 associations, bar sections, lawyers, the public, academics, and legal societies. And you can see on page 11 18, this committee has a mandate. We are directed to do outreach to various groups, and we take that 12 responsibility very seriously. Our task, as the Chair said, is to focus on those 18 areas that are called out 13 in Senate Bill 201, that run for several pages, to gather the input from those across the State, but also to 14 look at what other states have done, any model codes, and really to bring back the goal and our mandate 15 is to bring forward recommendations to be considered by the 2023 General Assembly. On how we can 16 best have a process for judicial discipline, how complaints should be handled, and what are the basics 17 here. I mean, yes, the details, the specific areas, are set out in the various subsections in 201, but a 18 process that does timely and thorough investigation of complaints, that does it in a process that has 19 integrity, that handles this in a way that shows that the process from start to finish is a fair process, is a 20 process that the public can have faith in. That they, then, can see that process and say, yes, this is best 21 practices, we're doing it right in Colorado. And so that is really our charge. And with that, I am grateful 22 to be serving once again, as Senator Lee said, to a certain extent, this is a gathering up of band members, 23 judicial members, and welcome new members as we take this on. So with that, we are looking forward 24 to the presentations, again focused on, what is our task? What are what are the areas that we are to 25 consider, study and make recommendations on. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

26

27 Sen. Lee

28 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. I would also like to give any of the committee members an opportunity 29 to make opening remarks, if they would like to do so. And at the outset, I would also like to welcome 30 newly inaugurated. Senator Van Winkle, welcome to the to the Colorado Senate from the House. Go 31 right ahead, if you'd like to make any remarks. Okay, Senator Gardner.

32

33 Sen. Gardner

34 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. I had not planned to make remarks this morning, 35 but I appreciate the Chair inviting those, and I will try to be brief, others may wish to comment. The 36 charter of this interim committee is clear. Nearly 18 months ago I think now, I heard the Chief Justice in 37 his State of the Judiciary make a commitment to ensure the accountability of the Judicial Department, of 38 the bench, as well as continue with an ongoing effort that every judiciary must have to ensure public 39 confidence. There have been many articles in the newspaper of varying accuracy, quite frankly, and with 40 different spins upon them. All of which have impressed upon me as an attorney practicing some 40 years

1 about how important public confidence in the judiciary is. I see the role of this Interim Committee in 2 ensuring that ongoing effort at public confidence. There's no doubt that some of the events, and we'll 3 talk about them more, have had the effect of decreasing public confidence in the judiciary, in our state.
4 And yet, my own experience has been that there's a fair amount of public confidence in individual 5 judges in judicial districts around the State. But that the unfortunate events, occurrences, inevitable 6 complaints of any group of public servants does serve to decrease that public confidence. I think our 7 challenge is not to turn this into any political football, for lack of a better term, but rather to do what we 8 can to ensure, improve, and impress upon our citizens that we are committed to public confidence, as is 9 our Judicial Department. And I believe that they are. How do we get there in a time in which public 10 confidence in government generally is at an all-time low, public confidence in the legislative branch is at 11 an all-time low? The public must have confidence in the Judicial Branch. And so what we need to do as 12 we look at these 18 different elements is to look at them with clear eyes, with the best of advice, the best 13 of information, and with a large sense of the responsibility that rests upon all of us as legislators in 14 creating a process that will allow for transparency, accountability, and ongoing process, complaint 15 processes, and so forth. I think that's what our charge is. I think the makeup of this committee of four 16 members of each party and four members of each chain chamber is such that it is a recognition that this 17 is not a time for any political speech or grandstanding, but rather to take our charge in this bill and as 18 elected officials very seriously. To not overlook but at the same time, to ensure that we are not throwing 19 gasoline on the fire. And, so, with that, I am ready to undertake this charge. Have been, as all of you, I 20 think, have in the past many months, looking carefully at what we can do to ensure that ongoing 21 confidence, transparency, and accountability. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

22
23 Sen. Lee

24 Thank you. Senator Gardner, Rep Weissman.

25
26 Rep. Weissman

27 Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know I hadn't prepared anything formally, but as we are at the outset here, I 28 thought I would say a few things. First, thank you to you, and also to Vice Chair Carver for being 29 willing to undertake the leadership roles this Summer. I know well it is a fair bit of additional work on 30 top of simply serving. I think it's also significant that you are both doing this, even though neither of you 31 will be rejoining the General Assembly in 2023 due to term limits and other reasons. But I think being 32 part of making the structural changes that we will at least consider making here this Summer as a form 33 of ongoing legacy and contribution, on top of what you both already done. Couple broad strokes. I agree 34 with Senator Gardner that we are talking about public confidence here. I believe a lot of what, Mr.
35 Chair, you referred to, a lot of what I've got in this binder that I just had to upgrade from a small into a 36 big one last night, as I was reorganizing and getting ready for this. It has been public confidence 37 shaking. Critically, though I think that that all important foundation stone of representative government 38 is earned. It is not simply given. We have to carefully review the system that we have, some of the 39 textual foundations of which are nearly 60 years old, and really question whether those are the 40 foundation stones of a system that can earn confidence from the public. To the point about politics, I

1 agree. I mean, and for anybody listening in online, and because we're creating a record here, you know, 2 it's not automatic that any interim committee is at least right now, given the makeup of the General
3 Assembly is four, four like this one, but as two of the prime movers of the bill that put us here, Chair 4 Lee and I didn't have to debate very long at all before we agreed, and our co-sponsors agreed, that an 5 even division is the right way to go about this particular subject. This institution has seen majoritarian 6 interim committees in the past. Whatever we are about here, it oughtn't fall along plainly party lines.
7 And so far, hasn't been or hasn't. And I think that's important. You know, we drew a model from a 8 school finance interim committee last year, which is another very big subject given to challenging 9 debates that often don't fall down on party lines. And I think that we have a great mix of member 10 perspectives here. And I think just the last major theme that's coming to mind is the near singularity of 11 the very challenging occurrences and fact patterns that have sent us here. You know, it has been said, 12 including in the press, that the judicial discipline system that we have in our state, you know, does work 13 at least sometimes, and there have been some pretty awful cases at the District-level where judges have 14 done things not befitting of those positions, and, more specifically, violative of the Canons and the Code 15 of Conduct. And there has been severe discipline, and those judges have ceased to be judges. And in the 16 handful of situations that I've talked about, I think those are the appropriate outcomes. What's 17 challenging here is we're not talking about the District-level. I think in all of our legislative work, excuse 18 me, you know, we find ourselves dealing with the edge cases. The simple stuff is dealt with under 19 existing law. Or it wouldn't come to this place. It would not motivate an attempt to change the laws of 20 our State by bill. I think that is why we're here, because what we're grappling with is anything but a 21 simple case. So, I will be approaching what we do with some of those as my guideposts, and I'm eager 22 for the discussion today and beyond. Thank you.

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 Thank you. Rep Weissman, any other members of the committee want to make any opening remarks?
26 Seeing none, why don't we move immediately into the overview of judicial discipline in Colorado and 27 the Senate Bill with Ms. Jenson and Mr. Immelt.

5 Thank you for joining us. We have some handouts that you have given us, and we thank you for that.
6

7 Juliann Jenson

8 Hi, good morning. I'm Juliann Jenson. I want to take a brief moment to introduce ourselves. I think most 9 of you know me from Judiciary. I've been with the Senate Judiciary Committee for about five years 10 now. Hamza is also helping out with this committee. He's fairly, relatively new to LCS. And Will Clark 11 is our fiscal analyst, who's not here today, and Marie Garcia is our office assistant. And then Conrad 12 here is from OLLS, along with Chelsea Prinsell. And I would also just like to take a like a minute to talk 13 about some important logistics, about the committee itself. Senate Bill 201 allotted us five hearings, and 14 you can introduce up to a total of three bills, joint resolutions, or concurrent resolutions. We're on kind 15 of a tight timeline this interim. Our last day to request a bill draft request is August 19. Of course, you 16 can do it before August 19 as well, but that's the last day. September 30 is the last day to vote on those 17 bill draft requests. There needs to be 42 days between the vote requesting them and voting on them, and 18 then Leg. Council meets on October 14 to review the bill draft requests and make sure that they're within 19 the scope of the committee's charge. So, jumping over to judicial discipline, Senator Lee asked if Conrad 20 and I could give a just kind of a brief overview about judicial discipline and SB 22-201. And again, you 21 have many experts in the room. I'm going to just present a more overarching overview of judicial 22 discipline in Colorado. All 50 states and DC have an oversight agency or commission that investigates 23 judicial misconduct complaints. I think the first one started in California in about 1960. We followed 24 suit in 1966 with a constitutional amendment. The judicial discipline commissions have no legal 25 authority to reverse rulings or order new trials. This is simply about reviewing complaints about a 26 judge's behavior, and these commissions may pursue disciplinary actions ranging from private 27 reprimands to removal. As Senator Lee alluded to before in his opening remarks, there are some other 28 oversight entities in this State. We have the Office of Judicial Performance Evaluation. They evaluate 29 the judges and publish reports during election retention years. There's nominating commissions on every 30 judicial district level that review judicial applicants, and the Attorney Regulation Counsel disciplines 31 lawyers not serving in a judicial capacity. They'll be with us this afternoon and will explain their 32 relationship with the Commission in more detail then.
33

34 The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline monitors state court judges, including those from the 35 County and District courts, Court of Appeals, and justices of the Supreme Court. As I stated before, it 36 does not review judicial rulings or case outcomes. It also does not include municipal court. Their 37 authority and procedures are outlined in the Colorado Constitution, and the Canons regarding judicial 38 conduct are found in the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. The state Supreme Court promulgates the 39 Rules governing the Commission, and it is a one-tier system that operates confidentially. And what I

1 mean by a one-tier system, it is basically all under one umbrella. The Colorado Commission on Judicial 2 Discipline receives and investigates the complaints, they bring formal charges, they conduct the hearing, 3 and they discipline the judge, or they recommend disciplinary sanctions to the Supreme Court. Most 4 states operate in a one-tier system. About eight states have a two-tier commission, and that first entity 5 receives and investigates complaints and then determines to proceed or dismiss the complaint. If they 6 proceed, the first-tier entity presents the findings before a second body that has a different name, 7 membership, just operates very independently. The decision is reviewable by the state supreme courts.
8 But otherwise, the state supreme courts do not have much to do with these two-tier commissions, unlike 9 the first-tier commissions, where the state supreme court may recommend a disciplinary sanction.

10
11 Another area to point out is confidentiality. All states require confidentiality in the complaint-12 investigation stage, and that's for obvious reasons. You want to make sure that the complaint is 13 legitimate before anything is made public. I did hand out a sheet to you. It's from the National Center of 14 State Courts, and it outlines when confidentiality ceases in formal judicial discipline proceedings.
15 Colorado is one of 15 states that conducts judicial disciplinary hearings in private until a 16 recommendation for a public disciplinary sanction is made. Other states may allow proceedings to 17 become public once charges are filed or judges have formally responded. Another area that relates to 18 confidentiality is document accessibility. Some states post documents online as cases move through the 19 proceedings and include outcomes of private admonitions. Colorado does not do that. They don't share 20 any case related information with the public or on its website. There's reference to it and its Annual 21 Report, and that's about it for the document sharing.

22
23 The Commission is comprised of 10 members who are appointed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme 24 Court and the Governor, and they serve four-year terms, and they may be reappointed to those terms.
25 The Supreme Court appoints the two County Court judges and the District Court judges. The Governor 26 appoints the lawyers and the citizen members on the Commission. The Commission, in turn, appoints 27 the Executive Director, who manages the Office, oversees operations, and reviews the initial complaints 28 that are lodged with the office. They meet as needed to consider complaints and other business, and 29 that's generally about bi-monthly according to their Annual Report.

30
31 And next I'll go into the case flow. Any person may file a complaint or a request for evaluation of 32 judicial conduct. Once that complaint is filed, the Executive Director conducts a preliminary review of 33 it, and if it's deemed warranted, may forward it to the Commission members for further review. If, again, 34 it is deemed a reasonable complaint, the investigation starts, the judge is notified and asked to respond, 35 and the Commission conducts an investigation. They may use investigators and Special Counsel, and it 36 advances only if a preponderance of the evidence is met. As a side note, there's a high number of 37 complaints that are dismissed early on. I would imagine most likely for falling outside of the scope of 38 the Commission's authority. 63% of cases were dismissed in the early investigation stage. So, 73 cases 39 were investigated, and of those 73, 64 were further dismissed because no violation could be established.
40 And that was from the 2020 Annual Report of the Commission.

1 So, if there is a finding of judicial misconduct after investigation, the Commission has two routes they 2 can take. One is the private disciplinary action, and this is used for misconduct cases that are relatively 3 minor in nature. Maybe an isolated mistake or a judge agrees to step up to improve his or her behavior.
4 And examples of these private disciplinary actions are letters of admonition, reprimand, censure, 5 training or counseling, treatment, perhaps, docket, management reports. And, if for the more serious 6 cases, formal proceedings may be requested, and these operate more like a trial. A Special Counsel 7 issues the formal complaint and acts as a prosecutor. The hearing is conducted by the Commission or 8 special masters appointed by the Supreme Court. The case is either dismissed or recommendations are 9 made to the Supreme Court, and may include removal, retirement, public reprimand, or public censure.
10 This is a confidential process until the recommendations are officially filed. There's only been six cases 11 since 2014 and those have been for more serious cases like a judge, has been charged with a felony, has 12 multiple incidents that continue, or some discriminatory behavior. So that is the conclusion of my 13 synopsis of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. Again, we'll be hearing more about this 14 this afternoon, and plenty of time to ask many questions, and I'm going to hand it over to Conrad to 15 discuss Senate Bill 201.

16

17 Sen. Lee

18 Okay, but maybe before Mr. Imel begins, let's see if there's any questions for Ms. Jenson, based on 19 preliminary presentation. Senator Gardner.

20

21 Sen. Gardner

22 Thank you, Ms. Jenson. Thank you, Mr. Chair and Ms. Jenson, you may not have the answer to this. I'm 23 going to ask this question because everybody's in the room. So, for informal proceedings, for formal 24 proceedings, you note that there are six cases. For informal proceedings. I didn't see any statistics, 25 numbers, or anything. Are those available? Are they reported? Or are they just so subject to 26 confidentiality that we don't even have the statistics on what those cases might be, how many, and so 27 forth.

28

29 Sen. Lee

30 Ms. Jenson.

31

32 Juliann Jenson

33 I think I'll defer to the Commission on Judicial Discipline for that. I can look in their Annual Report as 34 well and see. Some of them are ongoing. So, it's not like a clear, like this is what happened in 2020

35

36 Sen. Gardner

37 Thank you.

38

39 Sen. Lee

40 Okay, seeing no further questions. Mr. Imel, please tell us about Senate Bill 201.

1 Conrad Imel

2 Thank you. Mr. Chair. Conrad Imel, the Office of Legislative Legal Services. As Ms. Jenson just 3 described, but with a brief little background, the Judicial Discipline Commission is established in the 4 Constitution. It was first created in the 1960s and updated in 1983. Though the Commission is 5 referenced in statutes, prior to Senate Bill 201, it was not established in any way in the statutes. It's 6 governed by court rule, which is what is required by the Constitution and funded by attorney registration 7 fees. So, what Senate Bill 201 did was it established, pursuant to the Constitution, the Commission in 8 statute and a new Office of Judicial Discipline. It set forth a process for information sharing regarding 9 judicial misconduct. It created a new mechanism by which to fund investigations and evaluations, and it 10 created this Interim Committee. And I'll go through kind of each of those.

11
12 So, first, pursuant to the Constitution, the bill establishes the Commission as an independent entity in the 13 Judicial Department, and the bill sets forth its duties, including investigating judicial misconduct and 14 hiring employees for the new Office of Judicial Discipline and employing attorneys or outside counsel
15 to help the Commission and its investigations, the bill established a new Office of Judicial Discipline 16 also as an independent office within the Judicial Department. The Office is subject to supervision by the 17 Commission, and the bill sets the duties for the new Office, including providing staff support to the 18 Commission, receiving requests for evaluation of judges, and conducting public education efforts related 19 to judicial discipline. The bill establishes as the head of the Office an Executive Director, who is 20 appointed by the Commission, and it sets the Executive Director's duties, including conducting or 21 supervising evaluations and investigations, as directed by the Commission. The bill requires the judicial 22 Department to provide space in the Ralph Carr Judicial Center for both the Commission and the Office.
23 And, through June 30 of 2023, so through the next fiscal year, requires the Judicial Department to 24 provide administrative support to the Commission and the Office.

25
26 Next, the bill creates a new cash fund, the Commission on Judicial Discipline Special Cash Fund. This is 27 a new mechanism to fund evaluations, investigations, formal proceedings, and special projects that are 28 undertaken by the Office or outside counsel. For fiscal year 2022-23, the bill appropriates $400,000 to 29 the cash fund from the General Fund, and the bill requires the General Assembly to replenish the cash 30 fund each year up to that $400,000 amount. So, if the Commission and Office use $100,000 during the 31 next fiscal year, then, next year, the General Assembly would appropriate $100,000 to get the cash fund 32 back up to that $400,000 threshold that the Commission and Office can use for its work.

33
34 Next, the bill sets forth a process for sharing information regarding judicial misconduct with the 35 Commission and Office and other entities. There's two sections that discuss this information sharing.
36 First is a section concerning information sharing among the Commission and other judicial oversight 37 entities, which the bill describes or mentions as the Office of Judicial Performance Evaluation, the 38 judicial nominating commissions, the Office of the Presiding Disciplinary Judge, and the Office of 39 Attorney Regulation Counsel. The bill permits the Commission to share information with these 40 oversight entities upon request and requires the oversight entities to share information with the 1 Commission and the Office related to judicial misconduct. The second section in the bill concerns 2 information sharing from the Judicial Department generally with the Commission and the Office. And 3 this is detailed more specifically in the bill with the judicial oversight entities. If a member of the 4 Judicial Department receives a complaint from an employee, volunteer, or contractor of the Department, 5 so like an internal complaint, the Department must maintain a record of that complaint and within 35 6 days, notify the Office of Judicial Discipline and provide the Office with information related to the 7 complaint that the Department has. If the Department receives a complaint from someone who is not an 8 employee, volunteer, or contractor of the Judicial Department, it must tell the complainant about the 9 Commission and the Office, give them the contact information for the Commission and the Office, and 10 forward any information it received to the Commission. The bill requires Judicial to adopt policies 11 related to information sharing and to cooperate with the Commission. And the bill prohibits retaliation 12 against any person for communicating with the Commission. The bill also prohibits Judicial from 13 withholding from the Commission any information or materials based on a claim of privilege or 14 confidentiality, and it states that when judicial does share that information, it does not waive the 15 privilege or confidentiality. There are a few exceptions to that. The Judicial Department is not required 16 to disclose any information where disclosure is prohibited by federal law, that is protected by a judicial 17 deliberation privilege, or that's learned as part of a confidential employee support program. So, generally 18 speaking, the bill requires the Judicial Department generally to share information with the Commission, 19 but that does not waive any privilege or confidentiality of that information.

20 21 Next, pursuant to the Constitution, the Supreme Court is required to make rules relating to the 22 Commission's procedures. The bill requires certain notice requirements related to that rulemaking, 23 notifying the Commission if it is undertaking any rule changes related to its procedures and notifying the 24 public of any potential rule changes in allowing for public comment prior to those changes.

25
26 The bill requires an annual SMART Act report by the Commission, and it requires the Attorney General 27 to provide representation for the Office.

28
29 Lastly, the bill establishes this Interim Committee. I know you've already talked a lot about what the 30 committee will do, so I won't get into too many details. There are a number of subjects listed in the bill 31 that the committee is required to consider, and those are on that green sheet that was handed out to you.
32 The committee is required to solicit input from certain specified parties, as the Vice Chair mentioned in 33 her comments, and as Juliann mentioned, the committee is permitted to recommend three pieces of 34 legislation to Legislative Council. Those could be bills or joint or concurrent resolutions. Lastly, the bill 35 appropriates money for this new Office of Judicial Discipline and the aforementioned $400,000 to the 36 cash fund.

37
38 So that is kind of a brief summary of Senate Bill. 201, happy to take any questions that you may have.

39
40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Thank you for that summary, Mr. Imel. That was quite a task to present a summary of a bill to the four 3 bill sponsors. So well done.

4

5 Conrad Imel

6 Thank you.

7

8 Sen. Lee

9 Rep Weissman.

10

11 Rep. Weissman

12 Thank you question for either of you, and thank you again for stepping up to provide support for this 13 committee. I think years ago, there was no limit on the number of concepts that an interim committee 14 could send downstairs to be drafted, and the Chair and I were members of a particular interim committee 15 in 17 that might have broken a record by requesting for drafting 19 or 20 bills when we were allowed to 16 approve five. My recollection is that the legislative rules have subsequently been updated to impose a 17 two-times multiple. So that by bill having been approved for three bills or resolutions, we may send 18 downstairs by the 8/19 deadline, not more than six. And I think I see nodding heads. Okay. I just wanted 19 to clarify that for all of us as we think about scoping out our future work and for anyone else listening, 20 thank you.

21

22 Sen. Lee

23 Okay, any further questions from the panel to Ms Jenson or Mr. Imel. Seeing none, thank you very much 24 for your presentations.

Appendix 27(s)(i)(3)

Colorado Judicial Department Presentation;

1 Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline: June 14, 2022
2 Hearing—Colorado Judicial Department Presentation 3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Next up, we have a presentation by the Judicial Branch State Court Administrator Steve Vasconcellos, 6 and Court of Appeals Judge Ted Tow. If you would join us and we thank you very much for being here.
7 I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge at this point the efforts put out by the State Court 8 Administrator during the drafting and development of 201. I want to publicly acknowledge your input 9 and cooperative work to put together what resulted in 201. Were it not for that, we would not be here 10 today. So, we can either thank or condemn you, but I would prefer to thank and praise you for the good 11 work you've done, sir. So, who would like to begin? Judge Tow.
12

13 Judge Ted Tow

14 This room is new since the last time I came here 12 years ago. I thank you for this opportunity. Chair 15 Lee and Vice Chair Carver, as well as the other members of the Interim Committee. My name is Ted 16 Tow. I currently sit as a Judge on the Colorado Court of Appeals. I was appointed to that court in 2018 17 after serving about seven years on the trial bench in Brighton in the 17th Judicial District. One of my 18 roles in that position was that I sat on the judicial discipline commission for approximately five years 19 and chaired it the last year that I was on the Commission. I had to leave the Commission when I was 20 appointed to the Court of Appeals, because, as indicated in the slide presentation, the judicial 21 representatives or the judicial presence on the judicial discipline commission is, by constitution, 22 designated to be two District judges and two County judges. The Court of Appeals is not accounted for.
23 I believe, although I can't swear to this because I wasn't around, but I believe it's because the Court of 24 Appeals didn't exist when we first created this in 1966-67. The Court of Appeals, in its current format, 25 was created 50 years ago. If it existed, it was very nascent. I don't remember the exact year this, this 26 iteration of the Court of Appeals was created by the Legislature. But as a District Judge, I was tasked by 27 then Chief Justice Bender to fill a position being vacated by retiring Chief Judge Bailin from Boulder to 28 serve on the Commission. And it honestly is the singular honor of my career as a District Judge. And 29 frankly, was one of the things that made me almost not apply for the Court of Appeals because I didn't 30 want to leave the Commission. It was that good of work. In fact, Judge Prince, who is here today, took 31 my seat when I when I left the Commission. I served with Ms. Krupa, who is also here, and I served 32 with Mr. Gregory, the Executive Director. He was a recent appointee, as I left the Commission. I want to 33 give you, most of the background of the Commission that was stated there.
34

35 There is a background to that, as indicated by Chair Lee in his opening comments, this Commission is 36 part and parcel of our transition in the late 60s away from an elected judiciary to a merit selection and 37 retention system. They are all equal components and all essential components of the system. They are 38 designed to prevent or to ensure, I should say, to ensure an independent judiciary. As Alexander 39 Hamilton wrote in the Federalist Papers, the complete independence of the courts of justice is peculiarly

1 essential in a limited constitution. The judiciary and the judges are not political entities. It is not a 2 political body. We are not governed by and are not supposed to be subject to the whims of the political 3 airs of that moment. We decide cases based on law and fact. The Court of Appeals, in particular, decides 4 cases based on law. We take the facts as they come to us. But the independence is important so that we 5 don't have judicial decision making. We don't have the law being interpreted, so to speak, based on 6 whatever the popular sentiment of that moment is. That independence and that non-partisan, non-7 political element of the judiciary is essential, and it is part of why the Commission on Judicial Discipline 8 and the Commission on Judicial Performance exist. They exist to ensure that a judiciary free of fear of 9 retribution for an unpopular but legally sound decision, is the central core component of the judiciary.
10 And the separation of powers under which our system is created recognizes that those lines need to be 11 carefully maintained. I won't go so far as as Mr. Hamilton when he said, "There is no liberty if the power 12 of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers." He wrote that in the context of 13 why they were giving lifetime tenure to the federal judges, and one can certainly debate whether that's in 14 200 years of retrospective views a good thing or not. We don't have that. We do have a constitution that 15 says the legislature will, to some extent, establish some of the procedures and that type of thing. So, 16 there is some involvement, and that's why we're here. And, for example, the separation of the funding 17 mechanism last year in 201 was an important step, and one that the judiciary welcomed.

18
19 I want to talk, though, briefly about the how the Commission works, and, obviously, I haven't been there 20 in five years. There might be subtle changes in in the process since then. And obviously Mr. Gregory or 21 Judge Prince or Ms. Krupa can correct me if how they're handling things is different now. I don't think it 22 would be substantially different, because it's generally set up by the Rules. Again, the Commission 23 exists as a way to investigate, discipline, and, if necessary, seek the removal of an unethical judge. It is 24 important to understand what it is not. It is not an appellate body. It does not have the task of telling 25 judges they got something wrong in their decision. Rather, its specific charge is limited to taking action 26 against, "Willful misconduct in office, willful or persistent failure to perform duties, intemperance, or 27 violation of any Canon of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct," and the language of the Constitution 28 also goes on to say, "or the judge may be retired for disability interfering with the performance of his 29 duties, which is, or is likely to become, of a permanent character." So, what does the Commission look 30 like? And here I have to respectfully disagree with Chair Lee. The Commission is not judges deciding 31 what charges are filed. The Commission is made up of 10 individuals, only four of whom, not even a 32 majority, are judges. The two District judges and the two County judges that I spoke of. In addition to 33 those four people, there are two attorneys and there are four citizens, who are not lawyers and have not 34 been judges. So, 10 people, only four of which are actually sitting as judges, are the ones who make the 35 decisions through 98.5% of this process, and I don't mean that to be a mathematically specific term, but 36 through the vast majority of the process, and I'll get to the end of that.

37
38 I think this makeup is interesting. I have not read all of the Title 12 statutes, although some of them do 39 come before me as a Court of Appeals Judge. But I would from the times that I have run across some of 40 those statutes, the Architecture Board, the Pharmacy Board, the Medical Board, etc. They are all made

1 up of largely members of the profession they are governing with some non-member participation. I don't 2 have mathematical statistics, but I would submit to you that 4 out of 10 is probably on the low end when 3 you think about a board of a profession governing the disciplinary aspects of that profession, being 4 actually members of the profession. That's important, because I've heard the viewpoint that judges 5 shouldn't be judging judges, and I think it's important to understand that they aren't.

6
7 The Commission is, as was pointed out, in the one-tier system, the Commission receives the request for 8 evaluation. The Commission, through its Executive Director, decides which ones are not just appellate 9 issues and are actually within the bailiwick of the Commission. The Executive Director then refers to a 10 Commission member the role of investigating whether there is merit, whether there is something that is 11 a violation of the Code of Conduct, or one of the other bases: willful misconduct, willful or persistent 12 failure to perform duties. That individual member, and this part is the part that may have changed, but 13 when I was on the Commission, that individual Commission member would review the file, review the 14 records, review all the documents that the Commission had available and make a recommendation to the 15 Commission whether proceedings should begin, whether private discipline should happen, those types of 16 things, or whether it should be dismissed because after review, there isn't an ethical issue here. Those 17 decisions are all made by the Commission.

18 19 If the decision is then made to proceed with private discipline. And there are, there are three types of 20 private discipline. There is a letter of admonition, a private admonition, that is for an appearance of 21 impropriety, though the behavior otherwise meets the minimum standards of Judicial Conduct. If that's 22 what the Commission decides this has happened, then they will have the Executive Director issue on 23 their behalf, a private admonition. If it goes one step further, if the conduct does not meet the minimum 24 standards of judicial conduct, then they'll they will issue a private reprimand. And if it's one step further, 25 it will be a private censure, which is for a substantial breach of the standards of judicial conduct, but not 26 one that the Commission feels warrants formal proceedings and formal charges.

27
28 On the other hand, if the Commission decides that formal process is appropriate in a particular case. And 29 you've seen, as indicated, I think there was some number of approximately 10-ish in the last several 30 years that have gone, if you look through the 2020 Annual Report which is the most recent one online, 31 and that's normal. The Annual Report usually comes out about this time of the year for the previous 32 year. And by the way, I would encourage all of you, if you go to the Office of Judicial Discipline's 33 website, every Annual Report is right there online from 2001 on. And if you read them, you'll see, in my 34 view, a remarkable consistency of how the system has worked. But if they recommend that a formal 35 action gets taken, then the Commission will appoint Special Counsel. When I was there, it usually was 36 essentially asking the Office of Attorney Regulation to loan us an attorney to do a deeper investigation 37 and to come up with a formal decision as to whether or not to file charges. They recommend to the 38 Commission, Special Counsel does, whether that next step is appropriate, and then the Commission 39 makes that decision. All of this time, the Supreme Court is not involved. The Supreme Court doesn't 40 even probably know about it, unless it happens to be one that is generated from within the Branch, like a

1 human resources complaint, a sexual harassment situation that the Supreme Court was made aware of 2 for other reasons, but not through the Commission. But in my experience, the Supreme Court never 3 reached out and monitored or suggested that things happen or micromanage the situation in any way.
4 The only involvement of the Supreme Court up until the last steps in a formal process was essentially 5 the funding decision, which Senate Bill 201 already fixed.

6
7 So, if the Commission decides to proceed with formal procedures, formal corrective action, then, as of 8 approximately 2008, the process is that the Supreme Court is asked to appoint three Special Masters.
9 And those Special Masters are judges who have no involvement with the case. Judges who have no 10 reason to be conflicted off the case. There was a practice at the time that there was an attempt to get a 11 variety of geographic background, gender, et cetera, to the extent you can get on a three-judge panel.
12 But they would seek out people, not from all one District or even neighboring Districts, who could 13 serve, who could find the time in their in their busy dockets, to serve as special masters. Those Special 14 Masters would essentially act as a fact finding body. The Special Counsel would present the case to the 15 Special Masters. The Special Masters would find facts as essentially a small jury would and when they 16 were done, they would come back with a recommendation, which would be taken to the Commission.
17 The Commission would then decide whether or not to make a recommendation to the Supreme Court to 18 authorize formal discipline, public discipline, or actually, the Constitution still permits it to step back to 19 go to private discipline, if that's what that fact finding would warrant and if that's what the Commission 20 would recommend.

21
22 So, the Supreme Court's only involvement comes in at that point, and that is to approve or disapprove of 23 the recommendations. To my knowledge, just I was not a part of those presentations, and I was 24 obviously never on the Supreme Court. But if you read the Commission's public reports, Annual 25 Reports, you will see only one mention of the Supreme Court not accepting one of the recommendations 26 of the Commission, and in that case, I believe there's a reference in the Annual Report that they didn't 27 accept it because they didn't feel that the that the timing of the judge's departure from the bench, which 28 was part of the deal, was appropriate. So, it isn't a situation that is controlled by the seven Supreme 29 Court Justices. It is not a situation that is micromanaged by the seven Supreme Court Justices. It is a 30 situation that the Commission has the authority to initially screen, to, after screening, dismiss or 31 proceed, to proceed with a private discipline, or to recommend a public discipline and the formal 32 proceedings that are associated with that. That's very important, I think, in how this system works. The 33 Supreme Court, again, by constitution, is not bound to accept the recommendation. It is free to impose 34 any of the disciplinary levels.

35
36 I skipped over one thing. There's an important part of this, and that is that it's not always a disciplinary 37 step. Sometimes there is what might be referred to as diversion or a monitoring program. For example, if 38 a judge has trouble getting a docket under control and the delays in the cases are multiple and long 39 standing, the discipline commission will get involved. And the discipline commission, in the past, has 40 imposed a monitoring process where that judge has to file periodic reports with the Commission to say,

1 here's the steps I've taken to get caught up. I've made progress on this number of my outstanding cases, 2 or it might be a requirement to take a class on employee management, if it's an employee-employer
3 situation. Judges are not their clerk's employers, but for many intensive purposes, they're similar enough 4 situated that that those issues can arise. Or maybe it's an anger management class if there are 5 interpersonal issues, for example, amongst the judges, and one of the individuals is seen to be the 6 problem in that regard.

7

8 So, there's a lot of pre-judicial discipline steps. Then there's the private discipline, then there's the public
9 discipline, and all the way up to removal. And one of the stark things you will notice when you review 10 the Annual Reports, is the outcome is often, especially once public charges are filed. Not public charges, 11 they are not public until the recommendation is made, but once formal charges are filed. I don't have a 12 percentage, but I would, I would submit to you, it is a majority of the time. If you go through and tally, I 13 may be wrong, and it may be 50% or close to that, but it is a significant number of times that the 14 individual simply retires or resigns during the process.

15

16 And that's where we get into some of the transparency difficulties, the confidentiality is essential. You 17 know, obviously, judges are public figures. You folks are public figures. You folks get sometimes run 18 through the mud in the press or in somebody's, you know, tweets or whatever. But the significant 19 difference is, as a judge, our ethical code prohibits us from even responding. We cannot even counter 20 with a public statement, any statement made against us. We can't campaign if we're standing for 21 retention, unless there is an organized campaign against that judge, which, to my knowledge, in the time
22 I've been on the bench or involved in the process, I think has happened once, maybe twice, that there 23 was an organized campaign with billboards don't retain this judge, that type thing. So, we don't have the 24 ability, we don't have the authority, and we are ethically prohibited from engaging in those discussions.
25 So, the earlier these complaints or these requests for evaluation, which is what they're called in the 26 Rules, get publicized, the more dangerous it is, because the more it can instill in a judge, the unfortunate 27 human reaction of, well, now I got to be careful how I decide these cases. And we don't want that. We 28 want the judges to be able to make the decisions that have to be made without fear of political 29 retribution. That confidentiality sometimes leaves the public at some level of a disadvantage. In other 30 words, frankly, it's much like the performance system as Chair Lee was involved in some of the 31 modifications on that a few years ago. There are times when a judge will get an advanced copy of the 32 evaluation they're going to receive from the Performance Commission in a retention year that says we're 33 going to have an opinion that says you don't meet recommendations. And, more often than not, then 34 when that happens, the judge says, well, I'm just not going to stand for retention, and the public never 35 sees that the system worked. And that's a difficult line to draw. There's a value to that confidentiality, 36 because if the rule were to change and say, well, that that report is going to become public anyway, then 37 maybe that judge says, well, forget it, I'm going to try anyway. I might as well stand. And then we don't 38 have an unperforming judge or a badly performing judge leaving the bench, which is what the system is 39 designed for. But if it's private, then you have this question of, well, the public is out there asking 40 questions or wondering, is the system really working, or is this just a rubber stamp? Discipline is kind of

1 the same way, in the sense that when the judge is brought up on formal charges, but before they become 2 public, because they become public at the time the recommendation of sanction is made to the Supreme 3 Court. If they retire or resign as part of the negotiation or just because they're they don't want to fight it.

4
5 We have this, a system worked, but maybe not in a way the public can see, and how do we bridge that?
6 That's a difficult question, and one that can have adverse consequences, but I will suggest to you, and 7 Ms. Jenson, I would say, in reviewing the Annual Reports, there has been a slight change over the years.
8 I think Executive Director Campbell started it, and I think Executive Director Gregory, I would assume, 9 is going to continue it. And that is the later Annual Reports do include a brief synopsis, without naming 10 the judge of, in one case, we issued a private reprimand it involved, and a very brief description of what 11 the judge did. I submit to you that has tremendous value. It does open that transparency to the to the 12 public. They can see that the system is working. They may not find out who the judge was, because it 13 was private. It was private discipline, but they're going to see, okay, but a judge who does that's going to 14 get in trouble. And the other value of it is when a judge reads that Annual Report and says, okay, that's 15 behavior I should stay away from. So, there's an educational value to the rest of the bench as well. But 16 there is more transparency in this system than I think you might imagine there is. That Annual Report is 17 full of information about how the system works, why it works the way it does. In reviewing those 18 reports, you will see again, the vast majority, as Ms. Jenson's numbers showed. The vast majority of the 19 of the initial requests for evaluation are screened out by the Executive Director because they are nothing 20 more than the judge decided against me, they must have been biased. That's an appellate challenge.
21 That's not a, if there's a specific allegation of he was biased, or she was biased because of these steps, 22 then the Commission will look at it. But if it's a I lost, and I'm upset at the judge, which is this past year, 23 the 2020 year being somewhat of an anomaly in the only 60% range. Most of the years, it's 80 to 90%, if 24 you look at the statistics, I jotted a few of them down. For example, in 2018, 200 requests for evaluation, 25 183 of them were screened out. 154 the previous year, 123 of those were screened out. So, it's upwards 26 of 80, low 80 percentages that that shouldn't even have gotten there. They are just an individual who's 27 disgruntled because they lost. But then there's those dozen or so every year, and the Commission is 28 given those by the Executive Director, and the Commission follows up on them, not the Supreme Court.
29 Supreme Court doesn't even know about them. Yet, the confidentiality versus transparency is a tough 30 line to walk. I will suggest to you that some of those answers are very difficult. But because of how the 31 system often works by essentially forcing the hand of a poorly performing or poorly behaving judge to 32 just step down, the system is working. And if you look at the Annual Reports over time since this system 33 has been created, I believe you can add up somewhere over 40 judges have resigned while these 34 disciplinary processes have been in place. And those are the ones that don't necessarily get tallied as 35 showing that the system worked.

36 37 Happy to answer any questions that you may have.
38
39
40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Thank you. Judge Tow for that presentation. And I very much appreciate your background, having 3 served on the Commission. So, you know it as a practitioner, not just an academic. So, thanks for that.
4 Any questions from the committee? Senator Gardner.
5

6 Sen. Gardner

7 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Judge Tow, good to see you again.
8

9 Judge Ted Tow

10 Good to see you, sir.
11

12 Sen. Gardner

13 Thank you. A couple of procedural questions, and they kind of revolve around this issue of, are judges 14 the judges of judges. And your points are well taken with regard to makeup of regulatory bodies and 15 disciplinary bodies in the State and I think across the country. But there seemed to be a stage in the 16 process at formal charges where Special Masters are appointed. And I think you indicated those Special 17 Masters, all three are sitting judges, and they not only fact find, but make recommendations. And so let 18 me sort of roll the questions out. One is, is the choice that those Special Masters all be judges, statutory 19 or constitutional? And two, is it ever the case that non-judges are appointed as Special Masters or to 20 serve on this panel of Special Masters? Because it does seem, and I'm not asking this to be unduly 21 critical. But it does seem to me that is a point in the process where we do have all judges doing the 22 judging, if you will, of those elected officials or those public servants.
23

24 Judge Ted Tow

25 I will.
26

27 Sen. Lee

28 Judge Tow.
29

30 Judge Ted Tow

31 Thank you, sorry, Mr. Chair. I will first have to tell you I know that the ability to appoint Special 32 Masters is referenced in the Constitution and then embodied in the Rules after the 2007-2008 changes, I 33 don't recall off top my head if it is designated that they are judges. Although the concept of Special 34 Masters is not foreign to the judicial system, there's a there's a civil procedure rule where Special 35 Masters can be appointed, and they quite often are. And the purpose of the Special Master in that 36 context, and it equates in this context, is to appoint someone with subject matter expertise on a difficult 37 area, because they're going to be the fact finder. They're essentially a highly trained jury, instead of just 38 a jury. That's what a Special Master is designed to be. I would submit to you that it should be judges, 39 and for various reasons. One, every one of them is as a judge. And by the way, at least on one occasion, 40 I think one of the Special Masters was a retired judge who was in the Senior Judge Program, but still a

1 judge. In that context, those individuals are bound by the very same code of ethics that they are making 2 fact findings about. Whereas if you had a somehow a citizen board that wasn't judges that there is not an 3 ethical code. Those judges are trained to be judges. They're trained to make decisions. They're trained to 4 be fact finders, and they have the subject matter expertise of knowing what those rules that are 5 applicable and that are the governing principles and ethical obligations are. One of the things that I think 6 the general public doesn't understand and doesn't know, and frankly, the press never seems to note this 7 difference. In Colorado, and frankly, in most states, every single judge, including the supreme court 8 justices, are bound by the judicial canons. The U.S. Supreme Court has no judicial canons that it must 9 abide by. It's a different situation. So, if a Special Master is appointed by the Chief Justice or by the 10 Supreme Court as a body or to serve on one of these three judge panels to do the fact finding. And by 11 the way, they make the recommendations, again to the Commission. The ultimate recommendation for 12 what the discipline should be comes from the Commission, which does include citizens, non-judges, 13 non-lawyers. But the Special Masters, with their expertise in this subject matter, doing the fact finding 14 is, I believe, essential, because they are bound by that same code of ethics. They know it. They 15 understand it because they're bound by it, but they're also bound by it in their decision making. So, for 16 example, if the Supreme Court says, you know Judge Smith, you're tapped to sit as a special master on 17 these charges against Judge Jones. And Judge Smith says, I go to the theater with him every month. I 18 can't sit on that case. He won't sit on that case, because he has to recuse. There are recusal rules. There 19 are ethical obligations of when you cannot sit. And the Special Masters would have to follow those. The 20 Supreme Court would have to follow those. And to my knowledge, never has failed to. So, I think that 21 that is a significant difference. As Special Masters, they are supposed to be subject matter experts in this 22 field.

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 And I'll clarify if I could, Senator Gardner. Under the Rules of Judicial Discipline, Rule 18.5 Special 26 Masters, "The appointee may be retired justices or active or retired judges of courts of record who have 27 no conflicts of interest and who are able to serve diligently and impartially as Special Masters. Unless 28 otherwise designated, the judge or justice first named in the Supreme Court's order shall be the presiding 29 Special Master. The presiding Special Master is authorized to act on behalf the Special Masters." So I 30 would say they probably are. It says they may be. And it'd be interesting to know if there have any been 31 appointed who were not judges. So, I think the answer is probably yes. Senator Gardner.

32

33 Sen. Gardner

34 Thank you. And on another aspect of this issue. So, we have four judges on the Commission, two 35 District Court, two County Court judges. Are you aware of any instances, and I understand you have to 36 respect confidentiality and so forth, but to the extent you can, are you aware of any instances when 37 complaints have been made against sitting judges on the Commission itself, and if so, how are those 38 handled?

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Judge Tow.

3

4 Judge Ted Tow

5 Yes, sorry, I forget that part. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I was the subject of a complaint when I was on the 6 Commission. In fact, when I was the Chair of the Commission, and what happened was the Executive 7 Director called me and said, Come to the meeting 15 minutes late. We have something to talk about that 8 you can't be there for, and it turned out to be one they screened out. It had to do with a complaint about 9 how I handled two badly behaving lawyers, and one of the clients felt that I picked on their lawyer more 10 than the other lawyer. But the process is that judge doesn't participate. There is also a process by which, 11 for example, when I'm sitting as an Adams County Judge, and one of my good friends who, I use the 12 theater example, because that happens, I have tickets, I go to the theater with a friend of mine who is 13 also a judge. If that person is brought up on a complaint that is not going to get screened out by the 14 Executive Director, but it's going to come to the Commission. I'm going to leave the room because I 15 shouldn't sit on that and I am bound in that role, as I am in my black robe, sitting on the bench. I am 16 bound by the obligation to not participate. And those happen, those judges would step out of the room.

17

18 Sen. Lee

19 Senator Gardner.

20

21 Sen. Gardner

22 Thank you. In your testimony, Judge Tow, you spoke briefly about the I'll call it non-involvement of the 23 Supreme Court bench in these cases. At what point would a member of the Supreme Court become 24 aware of a complaint against a County Court judge or District Court judge? Would they, I mean, they 25 might hear about it through scuttlebutt, but I mean, sort of formally hear about it.

26

27 Sen. Lee

28 Judge Tow.

29

30 Judge Ted Tow

31 Thank you. That is absolutely true. I can't tell obviously, when the informality and the conversations in 32 the back rooms and back hallways would lead to somebody knowing something. But from a formal 33 process, unless the Supreme Court. Let me step back, sometimes a case would come to us when I was on 34 the Commission that essentially started as an HR complaint that an employee went to HR with a 35 complaint about how they're being treated by the judge, or whether they were being given appropriate 36 breaks, or maybe it was, I don't think we had, no, we did have some allegations of sexual harassment 37 that type, or hostile work environment. So, HR generally would be kind of the ones to bring it to our 38 attention. I would assume that at some level, that conversation went up the chain to the head of the 39 Branch before that step was taken, because they're the head of the Branch. They're the CEO, so to speak.
40 So, they're going to have to know what's going on with their employees and their employment situations.

1 So, the ones that are generated internally, my guess is they probably learn about them because they're 2 trying to fix the HR problem that's existing either parallel with it becoming a disciplinary issue, or not 3 withstanding that it's becoming a disciplinary issue. But for those that are litigant based, or, frankly, a lot 4 of times, you'll see in the in the Annual Reports, there's always a handful every year that are filed by 5 somebody who's not even involved in the case. Those types that come from outside of the branch, I don't 6 know why they would know, or how they would know, and they wouldn't know formally until the filing 7 of the recommendation. I believe that's correct. I don't want to overstate that.

8
9 Sen. Lee

10 Senator Gardner.

11
12 Judge Ted Tow

13 They might be notified at the time of formal charges. I don't want to misstate but no earlier than that 14 point.

15
16 Sen. Gardner

17 Let me ask, Mr. Vasconcellos, you haven't testified yet, sir, but as State Court Administrator, do you 18 have anything to add to that, or can you shed any light on when might the Court learn of a complaint?
19 Would they learn of it before it was a formal charge?

20
21 Sen. Lee

22 Mr. Vasconcellos.

23
24 Steven Vasconcellos

25 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you. Senator Gardner. Before it's formal, no. I will tell you I've had the 26 opportunity to speak with the Court about this matter of recusal in general. I think it's important to note 27 that the Constitution was not constructed, the current language was not constructed with Supreme Court 28 recusal in mind. There is arguably a fairly significant flaw in the current structure, a flaw that is 29 recognized by the Supreme Court, a flaw that they're concerned about and a flaw that they very much 30 want addressed. I am confident that we can work with the Commission, leadership from the Commission 31 on Judicial Discipline and do our level best to arrive at a consensus idea to present to this committee, 32 obviously subject to where the committee ultimately wants to go themselves. But I think there's a rich 33 opportunity here for collaboration between the Judicial Department and the Supreme Court to address 34 the whole. I can wholeheartedly assure you that no member of the Supreme Court wants to be in a 35 situation where there's clearly a conflict and unclear guidance in the law about how to address such a 36 conflict.

37
38 Sen. Lee

39 Senator Gardner.

40

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Thank you. Well, for either of you, how would the Court handle a complaint? And I think you sort of 3 touch on this, Mr. Vasconcellos, but how would the Court handle a complaint related to a current or 4 former member of the of the State Supreme Court? Because that's really the issue below that, other than 5 the sort of personal relationship recusals that might be required. It doesn't seem like we have a have a 6 problem, but once you hit the Court, the Court is responsible for the entire system, and so how would, 7 how would the court handle that?

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Mr. Vasconcellos. And maybe you should introduce yourself.

11

12 Steven Vasconcellos

13 Thank you, Mr. Chair. My name is Steven Vasconcellos. I'm the State Court Administrator for the 14 Colorado Judicial Department. Senator Gardner, thank you. If I may ask a clarifying question, are you 15 speaking just sort of broadly about conflict that might arise, or, you know, more specifically, Judge 16 Tow, for example, earlier gave an example where he was the subject of a complaint, or are you speaking 17 more specifically about an issue such as that?

18

19 Sen. Lee

20 Senator Gardner.

21

22 Sen. Gardner

23 Thank you, and I appreciate the request for clarification. I suppose let's say that we had a new seventh 24 member of the Court, someone retired, and this was Justice X. And there was a complaint that Justice X 25 engaged in some conduct in chambers with an employee, and that complaint was made by the employee 26 to the Commission on Judicial Discipline. What would the other members of the Court do? How would 27 they handle this issue of their colleague sitting on the bench right next to them at the same level? Would 28 they, and I think you sort of alluded to this. I mean, would they be required to recuse themselves?
29 Should they? Is there a process? How do we deal with that? That may raise more questions back to me, I 30 understand.

31

32 Sen. Lee

33 Mr. Vasconcellos.

34

35 Steven Vasconcellos

36 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think there's two components to this, and I wouldn't mind Judge Tow helping 37 clean me up on this, but I think there's the ethical responsibility that attaches, regardless of what existing 38 law is. But I think we'd be in a much better place if there were clear legal mechanisms for how those 39 situations were handled when, you know, at the extreme case. You know, this is sort of a reverse 40 telescope, if you will, this Commission on Judicial Discipline process where there may be a high number

1 of cases coming in the front end, ultimately winnowing down to the number that actually reached the 2 consciousness of the Supreme Court, being relatively few. But it's possible, from just an intellectual 3 standpoint, at least, that a case involving a justice of the Court would find itself before the Court. We 4 need clearer mechanisms in the law to address it. This is an issue of great, great concern and great 5 import to the Supreme Court that would be addressed through this process, through this interim 6 committee process, because while the ethical obligations clearly attach, we're going to be in a much 7 better shape if we have procedural mechanisms in place in parallel. Because there's, I think there's too 8 much opportunity for reasonable questions about, will they? What happens? Will they do the right 9 thing? It's a little bit of uncharted water.

10
11 Sen. Lee

12 Senator Gardner.

13
14 Sen. Gardner

15 Thank you. Well, is it then fair to say, and if I don't have this right, don't hesitate. That, if a complaint 16 were filed against a sitting well even a retired justice of the Supreme Court, and it came to the formal 17 charge stage at a point where there the other members of the Supreme Court would be required to 18 consider, take action. On the one hand, the Constitution says that that's the duty of the members of the 19 Court to do that. At the same time, the ethical Canons would call for them to recuse themselves, and 20 presumably all six might say, I serve with this person, and I'm not comfortable doing this, and the 21 appearance is not good. Constitutionally, on the one hand, it doesn't seem like there's a mechanism to 22 deal with that. But the ethical Canons say you must recuse yourself, and we need to replace them with 23 some justices, and maybe you go to the Court of Appeals, or maybe you do something. But we need to 24 resolve that for you, and maybe you can do that by rule, but it's not clear to me that the rule trumps the 25 Constitution, either. So, this may be one of the things that we need to take a good, hard look at as a 26 commission. And I think Judge Tow may have a response. Mr. Chair.

27
28 Sen. Lee

29 Thank you for teeing that one up, Senator Gardner. Judge Tow.

30
31 Judge Ted Tow

32 Thank you. Mr. Chair. Thank you, Senator Gardner. I just wanted to give a little background just in the 33 generic concepts of this recusal idea, because it's not easy. There is an ethical obligation that under 34 certain circumstances, a judge must recuse. There is also an ethical obligation that the judge must sit. In 35 other words, we can't recuse just to duck the hard case or to, you know, this one's got too much, too 36 many pages in the record. I don't want to deal with this one. I recuse. That's an ethical violation. So, we 37 have a duty to sit on these cases, unless there is the ethical obligation to recuse. The ethical obligations 38 to recuse are not always entirely clear. Obviously, if we have a financial interest, we have to get off the 39 case. Those types of things are the are the clear, easy ones. The appearance of impropriety ones are a 40 little bit more difficult. And I'll be honest with you, to some extent every judge is going to have to be the

1 judge for him, her, or themselves to make that call. For example, when I moved from the District Court
2 bench in Adams County to the Appellate Court bench, I did not recuse off of every Adams County case, 3 just because I used to sit with and considered myself professional colleagues with the judge. If the judge 4 made an error, I would reverse the judge. When I sat in the District Court, I was the appellate judge for 5 the County Court cases. I served with those County Court judges in the same building. I would reverse 6 them if they were wrong. But there were a couple of judges that I had a social relationship with. I'm not 7 going to sit on that case. Other judges felt that it was for them more comfortable to just say I'm not 8 going to touch an Adams County case for three years until I've been on this Court of Appeals that long.
9 Ironically, there are three of us on the Court that were Adams County trial judges who are now on the 10 Court of Appeals. So that's why I say Adams County. So that's somewhat of a personal decision. But 11 when it comes to something like this, when it comes to the Supreme Court Justices sitting in the decision 12 of whether this colleague of theirs will be publicly sanctioned or even removed from office, that I would 13 submit to you, that the vast majority of, not all of them, would have a very heavy weight on the side of 14 this is an appearance of impropriety if I sit on this case. I can't speak for them, but it's a different 15 calculation. I just wanted to be clear that this recusal idea of when it's an appearance of impropriety is a 16 little in the eye of the beholder, and we have to ultimately make our own decisions. Some of my 17 colleagues will never sit on a case that is argued in front of us by one of their former law clerks. Some 18 will. I don't know that you can say that that's always an appearance of impropriety, but it depends on 19 what their relationship continues to be. Another example, if I have a situation where I'm dealing with a 20 case that is being prosecuted by my former office when I was a prosecutor, before I was a judge, I don't 21 get off the case just because it's my old office. But if there's a claim that one of my former colleagues 22 committed prosecutorial misconduct, where I'm actually making a decision as to this person's behavior, 23 that's different than saying a legal error was made. I can say a legal error was made. I'm not going to put 24 myself in the position or my former colleague in the position of judging an allegation that that 25 prosecutor committed misconduct. I'm going to get off that case. So just an example of where some of 26 the calculations come in, some of the decision making comes in. What is a reasonable expectation of 27 what the public would see as an impropriety is where we're trying to make these decisions, and different 28 people will come down differently. But on something like this, I would submit to you that you're 29 probably going to get a fairly uniform answer. And as you noted, there is no answer for when they do, 30 there is no constitutional construct to replace them. The Constitution does explicitly say, if a justice is 31 the subject of the complaint, that judge will not sit. But it doesn't go one step further and say, well what 32 about the colleagues?

33

34 Sen. Gardner

35 Thank you both.

36

37 Sen. Lee

38 So, thank you for that. That's a really challenging situation that we might find ourselves in. I'm looking 39 at the Colorado Rules under Rule 2.11 under disqualification, and it talks about the grounds for 40 disqualification, and then it gives the but for at the end, the rule of necessity. And it says in limited

1 circumstances, the rule of necessity applies and allows a judge to hear a case in which all other judges 2 would have a disqualifying interest or the case would not otherwise be heard.

3

4 Judge Ted Tow

5 I think, in this, sorry Mr. Chair, if I may.

6

7 Sen. Lee

8 Go right ahead.

9

10 Judge Ted Tow

11 Under the current construct, I believe the rule of necessity would be the only backstop. And in a 12 situation where, where a justice was facing discipline, the current court would, under the rule of 13 necessity, probably have to sit, because otherwise there is no decision maker in place in the current 14 construct.

15

16 Sen. Lee

17 Well plan B would be the case would not go forward, because all the judges would have to disqualify 18 themselves, but for the rule of necessity, and that seems to me to be an impermissible or inappropriate 19 end point. I just would ask for your opinion on that.

20

21 Judge Ted Tow

22 In my opinion, what would probably happen is that a majority, if not all of the remaining justices, would 23 say to themselves and say publicly, if we don't sit, no one can. This case needs resolution. So, under the 24 rule of necessity, where we would otherwise recuse, we cannot. And we will sit and they would do their 25 utmost to fairly and appropriately adjudicate that proceeding.

26

27 Sen. Lee

28 The challenge there is the appearance.

29

30 Judge Ted Tow

31 That's the problem.

32

33 Sen. Lee

34 The public appearance of impropriety and the and the public might say, this just doesn't pass the smell 35 test. So, we're going to be looking forward to a proposal, creative proposal, to help resolve that issue.
36 So, thank you for raising it, Senator Gardner, and for discussing it in great detail. Very much appreciate 37 it. Rep. Bacon.

38

39

40

1 Rep. Bacon

2 I'm sorry that you have to lean. Thank you. And I didn't mean to interrupt if I was, so please. And thank 3 you, Senator Gardner, for your questions. I had very similar questions. And I just have one thing I want
4 to do to check on my understanding. Then, I want to shift. And I know, Mr. Vasconcellos, you haven't 5 testified yet, but I figure I'd put some questions out there, perhaps, if that might guide. And, so, I think, I 6 guess my question is, in all of these processes, ultimately, the Supreme Court assigns the Special 7 Masters, but then they also have the final call on a few things, not only the discipline, the disciplinary 8 steps, but even what may come from the Commission. And I just want to understand, at the end of the 9 day where the power really lies to be able to make final decisions. And I think we've kind of landed on 10 it, and per the Constitution, it is with the Supreme Court. Is that an appropriate statement that I'm 11 making?

12

13 Sen. Lee

14 Judge Tow.

15

16 Judge Ted Tow

17 Largely, yes. The ultimate answer, once formal proceedings are filed and a recommendation of 18 discipline is made to the Supreme Court, the ultimate answer of what that discipline will be, whether it's 19 accepting the recommendation or choosing one of the other options, ultimately lies with the Supreme 20 Court. The only question I had was one of your phrases, was the ultimate power on what comes out of 21 the Commission. And no, that is not the Supreme Court. The Commission makes the decision on 22 whether a recommendation will be made, and that is not overridable by the Supreme Court.

23

24 Rep. Bacon

25 Yes, and thank you for that, and that's my understanding as well. So, I'm sorry for misspeaking there. I 26 guess my question for both of you, then, when it comes to, you know, like this Branch, and, quite 27 frankly, the managing and running of the courts, I guess I'd like to better understand whose 28 responsibility is it to really address the culture that it feels like we're trying to address. I mean, you 29 mentioned earlier that we have some things that the public doesn't see by way of the system working.
30 We have, obviously, a lot of headlines. And if this isn't necessarily about judges judging judges, then to 31 me, it seems like we may have some culture issues that's you know, kind of leading to these outcomes 32 that we're seeing. And, so, my question is, in regards to the Branch that I think I'm going to phrase these 33 questions, if we think about it as an organization. What is the Supreme Court's role in really addressing 34 culture and really digging into everything from the lines of complaints? Where the complaints are 35 coming from? By way of top lines, themes, right? Not necessarily digging in into any case, and the types 36 of questions that I have under that, if I was thinking about this organization and an accountability system 37 around its culture, there's some types of data points that I'd be curious to see, and so I'm going to provide 38 these as an example for you to share what you may or may not do, but also it may lead to some insights 39 into how we might mitigate some of these problems. So, for me, it's like, how many resignations do we 40 have? Are they higher this year than they were last year. When do those resignations occur before,

1 during, or after? How many complaints do we have, and what are the categories? And if we dug down, 2 who are the top five people with those types of complaints? What does that mean for interventions?
3 What does that mean by way of what we want to see next year? Even from that is, what kind of goals do 4 you set? Do you set goals or targets by way of what you want to see or what you don't want to see? And 5 over and over again. I think some other questions that I'd have with that as well is, if we know that there 6 is a Commission that has, you know, all of these wonderful people. How many times does the Supreme 7 Court disagree with the Commission's findings? Is that public, you know? And so I guess all of that, for 8 me, comes back down to the questions, what does the organization, theoretically, say every year about 9 outcomes they may want to see? Questions that they may have? Whether it's internally derived or 10 externally. Like it seems like Coloradans are curious about inclusion and diversity, or number of 11 convictions or findings. And then what kind of information do you look to track that, and then how 12 much of that is made public, right? And so, if you're going to get to that in your testimony, thank you. I 13 know we're not necessarily talking to any of the Supreme Court Justices, at least today. But I am curious 14 on an organizational level, and I think where that comes back to your testimony, Judge, is just to the 15 extent of, how can we track then where the ultimate decision making is happening, for whom, and 16 therefore, then, the effectiveness of, theoretically, the Commission, right. The effectiveness of justices, 17 and so forth. Is that clear when I'm describing? If it's not, let me know. I tried to fit it in two minutes.
18 We're going to be here for quite a while. But just let me know what isn't clear, and I might be able to 19 help clarify.

20

21 Sen. Lee

22 Thank you, Rep. Bacon. Mr. Vasconcellos.

23

24 Steven Vasconcellos

25 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Representative Bacon. How about this? I'll do my best, and if I've 26 forgotten something, bring me back in. And if I don't have a good answer today, I'll certainly endeavor 27 to bring information back. But I think it's most important in the portfolio of areas of interest that you've 28 expressed, I think it's most important to start with the notion of culture and the question, what is the 29 Supreme Court's responsibility when you think of it as, I think you correctly described it as an 30 organization. You know, the Colorado Judicial Department is a 4000 person nearly three quarter of a 31 billion-dollar operation that is part of the Colorado State Government. But just from an organizational 32 standpoint, it is a large, complex organization with lots and lots of employees. And if you will, I think 33 you can think of the Chief Justice sort of as the CEO and the Supreme Court as his Board of Directors.
34 Having said that, the current approach today. Where we're at today, with this current generation of the 35 Supreme Court, this is a new approach, and we are in uncharted grounds that started around the time of 36 my appointment. Frankly, because of events that led to my position being vacant and my subsequent 37 appointment. It has nothing to do with me personally, but this time is now. This time is now.
38 Historically, the Chief Justice was either the only or overwhelmingly the primary justice involved in 39 administrative matters. There were certainly instances where individual justices may have had a 40 particular administrative interest and dove deeper into that area, but by and large, when thinking about

1 the operations of the Judicial Department at a high level, it was really the Chief Justice, along with the 2 State Court Administrator, and over various generations, varying degrees of engagement with Chief 3 Judges across the state, court executives, chief probation officers, etc. One of the critical, well, one of 4 the blind spots that can accrue with that is you become heavily reliant, heavily reliant, arguably, on the 5 person in my position, the State Court Administrator. Now, to be sure, I have an important role to play.
6 It's a constitutionally created position. I'm an important advisor to the Chief Justice and the Supreme 7 Court. And at the same time, nor should they be solely reliant on me or anyone in my in my role in 8 decision making. We are all human. We're fallible. We have blind spots. No one person can provide the 9 entire global perspective of advice needed for a body like the Supreme Court to make the best decisions 10 about the administration of the organization, not from a judging role. But again, I think in the vein that 11 you're talking about, which is just sort of the real, basic operational, this is a large organization of 12 people. How do we do our work well? How do we treat these people well? How do we have this be an 13 organization we're proud of? The old, historic way wasn't working. We became too reliant on too few 14 voices, arguably. Critical information was not shared in a timely fashion or shared at all. And I can tell 15 you, just from the perspective of my role as State Court Administrator, I don't do this job by myself, nor 16 could I possibly imagine doing it successfully alone. This sort of, you know, strong leader model, where 17 I know best always. I am incredibly reliant and gratefully reliant on my staff of 200, on leaders across 18 the State, be they chief judges, court executives, chief probation officers, clerks of court, to bring 19 information to the table. To bring perspective to the table. In order for me to make the best decisions 20 where I own the decision, or make the best recommendations to the Chief where I own them.
21 Operationally, the big change now is, yes, the Chief Justice is still the Chief Executive Officer of the 22 organization, but each one of the Justices is now also assigned to a major operational area of the 23 Department, and they sit as an ex officio member of the standing committee the advisory body for that 24 area of the Department. Those advisory bodies are made up of leadership from all over the State, from 25 different levels within the organization. We are trying things that are different. Some things will 26 probably work well, some things probably won't, and we will need to adjust. But we're trying to create a 27 system now where there are a multiplicity of voices coming into the Chief Justice so that we avoid those 28 blind spots, so that we avoid ceding too much power into one person, so that ultimately the Chief is still 29 the Chief. They will still have this, this obligation as the CEO, if you will. But how do we put them in 30 the best possible position? This is the big shift that the Supreme Court has made. That leads to culture. I 31 would argue that culture in the organization. And let me, unfortunately, as I'm prone to do, digress for a 32 moment. We have 24 because of the way Denver is constitutionally created differently than the rest of 33 the state court system. We have 24, essentially, although they're not numbered 24 but we have 24 34 judicial districts. So, 24 separate court entities across the State in the state court system. Each of those 35 has a Chief Judge, and that Chief Judge is the administrative authority for that entity. And by the way, 36 you can do this to me, Representative Bacon, like move it on, Steven. If these are details you already 37 know, or if I'm missing the mark for you. So, there's that appointed by the Chief Justice, local 38 administrative authority. So, there is this kind of central administrative body, and then there are the local 39 courts, where the work actually happens.

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Rep Bacon.

3

4 Rep. Bacon

5 Thank you. I don't want to hurry you along. I just know I have colleagues here. Let's have our own day.
6 But I guess my question, along the lines of your org structure, is, if you could help me identify, what is it
7 that you all are looking for, right? And so, if I had to compare this to, I have experience at a school 8 district, right, where we have a superintendent or a chief executive, but there's still like some sort of 9 board. Same is true for corporate spaces or nonprofits that take a look and do, if not at least through its 10 evaluation of its Chief Executive, an evaluation of the health of the organization. And they have things 11 that they look for, right? Like an organization will set mission, vision, goals, targets, right? And I guess 12 that's my question for the structure. And it's not to say that it needs to be structured like everything else, 13 but given the way that it is. One, what are the things that you look for? But two, given the structure that 14 you have, where are there opportunities perhaps to find external touch points? Maybe different eyes, 15 right? To be sure that perhaps a collective culture isn't getting the way of what it is that you actually 16 want to accomplish. It's like, if a whole bunch of people don't think it's a problem, but everybody out 17 here does, and all of the stop gaps are in here, you're never going to see the problem, right? So where are 18 those entry points, if you have any? If you don't, maybe that's what we can discuss as well. But before 19 that, what kind of goals and targets are you setting? And then, ultimately, you know, part of the reason 20 why I'm asking this too, in the sense of the Commission. You know, when I read through the Annual 21 Reports, they talk about how many charges, how many cases, and to some extent, like public findings, 22 but they don't do any sort of longitudinal data, you know, like, Is this getting worse or better? Also, this 23 Commission does have non-judges on it that might be able to say, in addition to just looking at these 24 particular disciplinary issues, here's what we're also seeing, big picture by way of it happening. There's 25 no entry points for that. So, I guess is there an opportunity then for the Commission to be those 26 externalized? But even if they were, what would they be looking for? What is it that you all look for? I 27 think that's what I'm trying to hone in on. And if there isn't an answer to that, that's okay. But if there is, 28 I would really just love to hear it.

29

30 Sen. Lee

31 And part of that question might want to be directed to the Commission when they testify this afternoon, 32 but I think Administrator Vasconcellos can talk about it from the Judicial Department standpoint, what 33 is their vision? If I'm capturing the essence of your question.

34

35 Steven Vasconcellos

36 Thank you Mr. Chair. Thank you, Representative Bacon. Parenthetically, I'm also happy to spend time 37 offline with you in a longer form conversation, if that meets your needs as well. Let's be really blunt 38 about you know what targets we're looking for. Historically, this organization has not been consistently, 39 sustainably self-conscious in the way that I think you're describing. And as leaders in the organization, 40 whether that's the Supreme Court, whether that's myself as the State Court Administrator, whether that's 1 other leaders locally around the state, this is not a sustainable approach anymore. I think part of it was 2 born for many years. So, I've been with the department 26 years. I started as an entry level staff person 3 in the Fourth Judicial District, in Colorado Springs. I've been in this role about two and a half years, a 4 long, strange journey in between those two points, but it was a much smaller, lot fewer moving parts 5 organization. And I think for many years, with the best of intent, I'm not here to question everything that 6 came before me. That would be unfair. But I think sometimes with the best of intent, this was run as a 7 very informal operation, a much smaller operation, and in its time and place that may well have been 8 appropriate. This is a 4,000 person, almost $700 million organization with an incredibly, substantially 9 important role in supporting a civil society. We have to ask better of ourselves, and we'll get into some 10 of my prepared testimony about investigations. I know there's great curiosity, obviously. And if it's 11 okay, Mr. Chair, I'm going to kind of transition into that, because I'm not here based on my deep 12 expertise on the Commission process. Your staff has spoken to that, Judge Tow has spoken to that. The 13 Commission leadership from the Commission on Judicial Discipline will speak with great expertise to 14 that this afternoon. I'm here to talk about some of the events, background that got us here, that helped 15 catalyze for better, for worse, this discussion, this necessary discussion.

16

17 Sen. Lee

18 Why don't you move into that? Thank you, Mr. Vasconcellos.

19

20 Steven Vasconcellos

21 Thank you, Senator Lee. That really leads us here, you know, today. And I really want to start at, given 22 my sort of digressive personality, I want to start by taking kind of a hard left turn into the elephant in the 23 room. At least by my assessment, and that is what's going on with the independent investigations that 24 were commissioned or called for by Chief Justice Boatright at his State of the Judiciary speech back in 25 February of 2021. We're edging into almost a year and a half from his statement. So where are we at?
26 What's going on? So why don't I start there? First of all, just to be clear, I think most folks know, but just 27 to make sure we're level set on background and information, there are two investigations. One is into the 28 circumstances and process leading to the award of a leadership training contract to a person by the name 29 of Mindy Masias, who is formerly the Chief of Staff at the State Court Administrator's Office, and 30 whether that contract was awarded in exchange for silence about misconduct within the Department.
31 That investigation is being conducted by a group called RCT Ltd., and they are led by former US 32 Attorney for Colorado, Bob Troyer. The other investigation is into allegations of sexual harassment and 33 gender discrimination within the Judicial Department. Those allegations being a key area of interest as 34 to whether or not they were why a contract was offered to Ms. Masias. The investigation into the 35 allegations of sexual harassment and gender discrimination also include a cultural assessment of the 36 current state of the Colorado Judicial Department, not just the State Court Administrator's Office, but the 37 Department statewide. Both investigations will include recommendations for areas that the Department 38 needs to address to increase the health and long-term strength and, ultimately, feed the public trust and 39 confidence and rebuild the public trust and confidence in the organization.

1 So first, if we can, let me talk about timelines and process. Because it's important to note that, and some 2 of you are aware, because you participated actively in this process. But not all of you may be aware, 3 neither myself, nor the Chief, nor the Supreme Court, nor anyone in the Judicial Department actually 4 selected the investigators themselves. And that was for a number of reasons, not the least of which to 5 avoid any sort of notion that we would pick investigators that were so called, quote unquote, friendly to 6 our cause. This needed to be sober, independent, and free from influence by the Judicial Department. So, 7 a panel consisting of key legislative leaders, three of whom are on this interim committee and key 8 leaders from the Executive Branch came together and used a public procurement tool, a request for 9 proposals process, to identify potential investigators for each of these two key investigations. Ultimately 10 recommending to the Department that we utilize RCT for the investigation into the leadership contract 11 and a group called Investigations Law Group for the investigation into allegations of sexual harassment 12 and gender discrimination. Some of you committee members may remember ILG, they are firm that 13 conducted a similar investigation into similar allegations within the Legislature several years ago. In 14 terms of timeline, the panel was named in February of 2021. In August of 2021, the panel recommended 15 vendors, essentially to myself. I'm the signatory on the contract with the vendors. We contracted with 16 the vendors that the panel recommended. We signed a contract with RCT in October of 21 October 12, 17 to be exact, and about two weeks later, executed a contract with ILG. And, so, the investigations proper 18 have been taking place since about November of 2021. The original contracts were set to run in April of 19 this year. At this point, extensions have been granted on both contracts; extensions initiated at the 20 request of the investigators. I will admit right up front, that timing for all of this is a tricky bit to manage, 21 and I probably reasonably am subject to criticism, no matter which way you sort of look at this. There's 22 the perspective of being seen as pushing the investigators too hard, maybe with a with a dark turn of eye, 23 because somehow we want to rush them so that's not a complete and thorough investigation. So, we 24 have to be careful against those accusations. Similarly, we have to be careful about this taking too long, 25 which has a number of impacts every day that goes by, I worry about public trust and confidence in the 26 organization that I've devoted half of my entire life to. That's not healthy. And these are, I think by any 27 estimation, incredibly complicated investigations that require their own time. So, when professionals 28 who make their business of conducting these sorts of complex investigations say they need additional 29 time, even though, even now I have a little physical wince, it's the right thing to do. In my opinion, it's 30 the right thing to do, and we have granted those extensions.

31
32 Both RCT and ILG are under what we've collectively agreed to will be their final extensions. For RCT, 33 that is June 29 of this month. For ILG, that is July 29, one month later. There's no intended symmetry 34 between June 29 and July 29, it's just the way it worked out. Candidly, I was hoping that we could do 35 something a little earlier for ILG. No criticism of them. They had some other personal matters scheduled 36 that took them out of the office for several weeks. The key principals who are working on this. And 37 everybody is hopeful that we won't need every last day of those extensions.

38
39 So, the million dollar question, When will reports come out? Will they be made public? We are hoping, 40 as we sit here now, that the final report produced by the Troyer group, RCT, looking into the

1 circumstances and process around the award of the contract will be complete and released within the 2 next 10 days. It is my hope that the report from ILG will be following only a couple of short weeks after 3 that. This seems like a natural area, maybe to take a pause.

4
5 Sen. Lee

6 Let me start with Rep. Weissman.

7
8 Rep. Weissman

9 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am mindful of time here, but we have some key witnesses. I think first for Mr.
10 Vasconcellos and sir, you've already gone about halfway there. I noted in the information that went 11 around earlier, we had these extensions, and yes, we need a balance between thorough and timely. I was 12 going to ask, and you alluded to internal, personal capacity issues, if there's any more to say about the 13 reason for those extensions. And just to get the second question on the record, I'll invite you to respond 14 to both. Second question is different, a new affirmative responsibility on the Department pursuant to 201 15 is to be found at page 13 of the bill 106(6)(I), the Department shall adopt procedures and policies to 16 implement the duties stated in this section and educate Department personnel about these duties.
17 Understanding it's a touch early yet with reference to when the Governor signed the bill, I wonder if you 18 could give us an interim update on progress toward that new charge upon the Department.

19
20 Sen. Lee

21 Mr. Vasconcellos.

22
23 Steven Vasconcellos

24 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you. Representative Weissman. Starting first with regard to essentially, 25 why? Why extensions? The investigators wanted more time that may have been more time to analyze 26 documents that were produced, more time to contact additional witnesses in the case, to use an example 27 from the ILG led investigation into allegations of misconduct and also assessing the culture of the 28 department. One of the, I think, key pieces of their effort was offering the opportunity for staff to be 29 interviewed confidentially. The response, while in total number, it was somewhere north of 100 people, 30 which out of 4000 may not strike one as a lot, it was nearly three times the amount that ILG was 31 anticipating. That's an important effort as part of that investigation, and it takes time. It was time they 32 were not planning for. They were thinking in the neighborhood of maybe 30, maybe 40 folks requesting 33 an interview. We had north of 100 folks requesting interviews. If additional time to do that properly is 34 what's needed, that's where we have to go. If an investigator needs more time to ask for subsequent 35 document requests, that's what's needed. That's what we'll do. We want this to be thorough and 36 complete. This is arguably, my opinion, this is the most important moment in the Department's history, 37 at least since unification, in my opinion. You can't have a situation where, and it's not just the simple 38 fact that you know, the majority of the senior executive team at the State Court Administrator's Office 39 all resigned in short order. That did happen, that is a crisis of its own, but this is also much bigger than 40 that. I think Representative Bacon alludes to it in her questions about maybe taking long, long overdue

1 stock of who we want to be. I mean, of course, the block and tackle of judging, the block and tackle of 2 probation supervision, the stuffs of our work are incredibly important. Who are we as an organization?
3 Who are we as a culture? We have not been sufficiently self-conscious about that historically. For us to 4 be successful in that block and tackle of our work moving forward, we are going to have to step back 5 and wrestle with who we are and who we want to be, and that leadership starts at the very top of the 6 organization, with the Chief Justice and the Supreme Court. Sorry, I got a little sidetracked and was 7 starting to rant there for a second, I apologize.

8
9 In terms of Senate Bill 201 responsibilities, Representative Weissman, obviously, we take those, the 10 reporting requirements and the duty to educate all of our staff about reporting requirements, seriously. In 11 many ways, what has been articulated in statute as it relates particularly to complaints that start 12 internally within the organization. For example, a staff person, say, coming forward and making a claim 13 of bias, of discrimination, of harassment, we have a responsibility statutorily that matches our current 14 process today. Where we gather that information via an interview. I say an interview. It is not an 15 investigation. It is not our role to investigate. It is the Commission's role, and we should not try to get in 16 the middle of that or usurp that role, but focusing on employee safety in the example that I gave, 17 gathering the information as soon as humanly possible, and making sure the Commission doesn't just get 18 that within the statutory guideline time limit, of course, but as soon as possible. Because, as I think any 19 of you who have led teams know and had to work through difficult HR issues, sometimes hours matter, 20 certainly sometimes days matter. And the faster that we can get information to the Commission, 21 effectively, the better it is for all involved. So, process wise, in terms of our procedures, I think we've 22 got probably more work to do prospectively. And this is work that isn't, one thing I'm constantly 23 reminded to appreciate is communication about process is not a one and done affair. You can have, I 24 think there's a danger in viewing these sorts of things as an initiative, because with an initiative, you get 25 a lot of energy, you have this big implementation, and then the big implementation is over, and 26 everybody's tired, and then you kind of go back to the way things maybe were. And when you're 27 communicating about critical processes, like reporting around employee safety or other critical issues, 28 that's something you have to come back to as a practice, not an initiative, and you build that into the 29 underlying structure of the organization, and you hit it regularly. Some of that's built, some of that is not.
30 We have more work to do. Mercifully, I'm very confident that we will get it executed in a timely 31 fashion. I hope that answers your question, Representative Weissman.

32
33 Sen. Lee

34 Rep. Weissman.

35
36 Rep. Weissman

37 Thank you, Mr. Chair. In the interest of time, I might just let this hang as a comment, rather than 38 inviting a response from the Judge, because we moved on to other subjects. But I did want to say it.
39 There was an analogy to Title 12 professions and occupations. And as far as that goes, look, I think 40 that's a fair analogy. I'll use doctors as an example, because my grandfather was one. So, doctors are

1 overseen by doctors. They have expertise about what is the standard of care and so forth. I think, though,
2 that in what we talk about the rest of today and the rest of this whole interim, there's this critical 3 difference. Doctors, or pick any other profession, plumbers, electricians, are not 1/3 of constitutional 4 government. And doctors, collectively and the highest institutions set up in the medical profession, as 5 distinguished from the highest institutions set up in the business of judging, not least the state Supreme 6 Court do not as courts do, adjudicate all manner of other disputes that 6 million people in our state may 7 have with each other, arising in contract and tort, in constitutional matters. So, I do think that there is a 8 fair analogy to a degree about how other professions, in fact, are overseen. But I just think that we 9 cannot miss this very, very big difference. We all need doctors. We all respect doctors. Doctors are not 10 1/3 of constitutional government, likewise, plumbers, electricians, anybody else. What does that 11 comment, that philosophical look, if you will, alone mean about the role of judges overseeing judges. No 12 one thing necessarily, but I did want to make that observation. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

13

14 Sen. Lee

15 Judge Tow.

16

17 Judge Ted Tow

18 Thank you, if I may respond. I agree with you, and I only intended it as an analogy to the extent that it 19 had any bearing. And I agree with you that that the Judiciary is different in that it is 1/3 of the 20 constitutional governmental structure. But also a part of that is that it is the only 1/3 that is intended to 21 be and designed to be insulated from the political pressure. It is not supposed to be governed by 22 concerns about the popularity of its decisions. And while I do not make any suggestion that the current 23 structure of the Commission is problematic, injecting in the final decision-making process or the final 24 appointment, authority, etc., more and more non-trained, non-judicial Canon obligated entities in that 25 decision, it takes more steps toward politicizing the process of judging that is, in my view, not the right 26 steps and potentially dangerous. I do want to be, if I can take just one moment to circle back to one 27 thing, the culture idea--we have to remember there, there are sometimes complaints made internally 28 about a judge that have nothing to do with ethics. This judge won't take a break during trial, and the 29 court reporter's fingers are falling off. That's a legitimate thing for the court reporter to complain about.
30 That should not find its way to the discipline commission. That's a that's a training, that's an intervention 31 from HR, those types of things. And I think the more we just kind of talk in these big pictures about 32 culture and complaints, we need to remember that not every time a judge makes a personnel-based 33 decision incorrectly, that it rises to the level of an ethical problem. Certainly hostile work environment, 34 certainly sexual harassment, certainly misappropriation of government funds, those types of things 35 obviously will. But not everything that is HR based is ethics based.

36

37 Sen. Lee

38 Okay, Madam Vice Chair.

39

40

1 Rep. Carver

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have some questions and concerns just to follow up on your testimony, sir, 3 regarding the two independent investigations. First of all, you know, the extensions were granted. We 4 are where we are. I have to say that the RFP, which was a public document, criteria, specifically 5 addressed when the reports were to be done, and another aspect of the RFP criteria on which decisions 6 were made, on who to hire, and who not to hire, were the robustness of the organization, so that if there 7 were personnel issues that come up unexpectedly, and we can never forecast when that might happen, or 8 family situations, that there was sufficient depth within the organization to complete the task thoroughly 9 and on time. So, I am dismayed to see when I know the RFP stating that as a criteria, and the hope that 10 the reports would be delivered within a certain time period, to find ourselves where we're at. But I also 11 appreciate, and in fact, the Chair and I had discussed this, we certainly understand that for the ILG 12 investigation in particular, that when witnesses come forward with pertinent information, and it is within 13 the scope of the investigation, those folks have information that needs to be gathered. And it needs to be 14 done within a process. And sometimes you can't predict when those witnesses are going to come 15 forward within your task. So having said all that, and having taken a look at the original due dates and 16 the two extensions, we are where we are. With regards to both investigations, understanding now the 17 expected due dates, and I would encourage strongly the extent to which the two groups can complete 18 their report sooner than the deadline of the approved extension would be most appreciated. Again, with 19 discussion with the Chair, it would be most helpful if the recommendations piece is done, or at the point 20 at which the recommendations have been finalized. Even if the report itself is not yet finalized, if those 21 recommendations could be delivered to this committee. We have a very, very tight schedule. You can 22 see the problem we face with probably the set of more extensive recommendations, I'm assuming, from 23 ILG, just given the scope of what they're looking at. And yet, the current deadline is July 29 our 24 deadline to submit proposals for draft legislation is August 19. We are intending to be thorough in what 25 we do. These investigations are critical, and so at the earliest possible date, sir, if you could inquire 26 when those recommendations are in final form, regardless of if the report still needs to be processed and 27 proofed and graphs made or whatever. That we get those ASAP. Your response?

28

29 Sen. Lee

30 Mr. Vasconcellos.

31

32 Steven Vasconcellos

33 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. I am incredibly, so I am right in the middle of 34 this every day. Every day that goes by is a day too long. I want to be fair. I want to make sure that my 35 earlier comments did not come across as either complaining about the work of the investigators.
36 Everything I've seen has been an extraordinarily high-quality professional engagement. Nor did I intend 37 my remarks to seem like I am unconcerned about the deadlines. We are in a spot where overall, the 38 difference between April and June is really not that much from a calendar standpoint, but given the 39 incredibly important work of this committee, it makes a difference that has not been lost on me, and it 40 was not lost on me before I walked in today. And I very much understand and appreciate the import of 1 your comments and where they're coming from. I would mention that particularly given that it wasn't 2 while some capacity issues have driven a little bit of things in one investigation of late, not throughout 3 of late, it is overall been the complexity. There is, I think it always an iceberg, sort of effect that can be 4 at play with an investigation such as this. There are the things that are known, the things that are above 5 water, the things that are largely known that you can see looking into the water in the first couple of feet, 6 that you won't be surprised when they're surfaced. And then there are the things below the water that you 7 only know once the investigation is launched. It is my speculation at some level, I will admit to that, it's 8 partially speculation, but I think it is the things below the water. And that complexity that is attached to 9 it, that has driven the timeline. I have every sense of investigators working incredibly hard. We have 10 been and I would encourage you to speak to the investigators independently of me on this, because I 11 think that probably has some merit given the circumstance. We have been timely, we have been 12 complete, we have been thorough in our production of information for them for these investigations.

13 There has been no slow walking of any information sharing in these investigations. These are complex 14 investigations. We've got a small window to hit here with this committee's work. I feel sort of like it's a 15 form of professional malpractice if I don't do everything in my power to make sure that those reports are 16 ready to hit that window. I also think, I'm sorry, Madam Vice Chair for interrupting, I also think we have 17 to think a little mindfully about recommendations that are provided without the context of the findings.
18 And that's something that does concern me a little. I also am confident there are a lot of incredibly 19 capable, intelligent people involved. We will figure this out.

20

21 Sen. Lee

22 Madam Vice Chair.

23

24 Rep. Carver

25 Thank you, and I appreciate that. And I can tell you that in the discussions the Chair and I have had 26 concerning these two reports. I mean, you are absolutely right. The recommendations are informed by 27 the context, by the full report. Quite frankly, it is simply looking at this challenging timeline that we are 28 facing. And I will speak for myself on this but I suspect the other committee members, if we knew even 29 the big picture recommendations, understanding that the full report will provide the meat and context 30 and the understanding of the recommendations. But given that we've got six bills we can propose by 31 August 19, you can see our concern. And, so, I don't know what the proper process would be, I suspect 32 Chair Lee may have some thoughts on that, and that may be an offline discussion. But what would be 33 appropriate, if any, before the final reports are issued. And certainly we would not want draft 34 recommendations. We would have wanted the group to have finalized their discussion on what those 35 recommendations should be. It's one possible option to help facilitate our work. So enough said. I 36 suspect some additional offline discussions might be helpful. Thank you.

37

38 Sen. Lee

39 Any further comment? Mr. Vasconcellos.

40

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair, thank you, Madam Vice Chair. I just want to be sure, you know I hear you loud
3 and clear. This is incredibly important. We don't want to miss this opportunity. We don't want to miss 4 this opportunity. So, I anticipate more conversation. We will figure this out. We will figure this out. Mr.
5 Chair, if I may just briefly sure I understand the committee's schedule may be already a bit in the weeds.
6 I had other prepared remarks that I'm more than happy to let go of. I suspect you may have heard from 7 me on the things that you want to hear from me most. That being said, if the committee wants to 8 entertain me for another 90 seconds, that's fine too.

9

10 Sen. Lee

11 We could certainly give you 90 seconds, Mr. Vasconcellos, but you can always provide us with written 12 testimony as well, and I know the committee will take a look at that when it is submitted to us. I wanted 13 to put an exclamation point after the Vice Chair's comments. We delayed and deferred certain action 14 under Senate Bill 201, at the urging of the Chief Justice in anticipation of these reports, his words in 15 May or June, and now we're being told late June, July, before the reports are going to be coming forth. If 16 we get reports in June and July which are redacted or which are held back because they need to be 17 further reviewed, I can assure you the committee will be displeased. We expect full reports sooner, 18 hopefully. We agree with the necessity of having complete and accurate reports that are thorough and 19 robust, but the delay is really difficult for us to swallow. Particularly, based on some of the history that 20 we've had in not getting information. So, I appreciate the work the Vice Chair has been doing to try to 21 move these reports to the to the forefront, and regret the delay. But let's do the best we can. Any further 22 comment from the committee? Won't you give us your 90 seconds and go ahead.

23

24 Steven Vasconcellos

25 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, I'll just note briefly in passing, that the gravity of what's at stake here is 26 not lost on me. It's not lost on me. So, one of the things I did want to highlight briefly is that the 27 leadership contract itself has been the ongoing subject and continuing subject via the RCT investigation 28 of scrutiny and investigation. Originally, the contract was reviewed as part of a performance audit done 29 by the Office of the State Auditor. They'll be testifying later today. That report was issued in November 30 of 2020, and at the risk of oversimplifying, but in the interest of time, two of the key questions around 31 that contract, given the scope of what the performance audit was: Was the contract awarded consistent 32 with Department rules? and Were our rules up to task? And the simple answer to both of those questions 33 at that time was, no. It was neither comported with our rules that existed at the time, and taking a step 34 back from those rules, those rules were not sufficient. Our procurement in my time as State Court 35 Administrator . . . Well, one we have fully implemented all of the State Auditor's recommendations from 36 that performance audit as it relates to the State Court Administrator's Office, including these 37 recommendations specifically related to their findings around the award of the contract. Our 38 procurement rules have essentially been overhauled from scratch, largely now in parallel with the 39 Executive Branch procurement rules. There is no reasonable reason that in the overwhelming majority 40 of cases, our rules should not track the Executive Branch's procurement rules. There are some limited

1 areas where ours do vary, and ours, in my opinion, are stricter or tighter than what is offered by the 2 Executive Branch. That contract was also looked at as part of a larger fraud hotline investigation also 3 conducted by the OSA. And I think as it regards to the contract, it was not the only issue reviewed, as I 4 think everybody knows. But as it relates to the contract, two key findings, there was at least some 5 evidence of either occupational fraud and or misuse of public funds that under the under the fraud
6 hotline statute required the OSA to report to former employees of the State Court administrator's Office
7 to law enforcement. I want to assure this committee that we neither had nor sought input on the timing 8 of the referral to law enforcement, contrary to what's been published in the media. We neither had nor 9 sought input, had any control over that timing, and it would have been highly, highly inappropriate for 10 us to do so. Even through some sort of notion of passively trying to slow walk it. That goes against the 11 core of my professional being. I realize even saying that, you have to trust me. But I would offer that 12 several of you have worked with me for a number of years now, not just in this role, but in prior roles as 13 well. And I can assure you that we sought no influence, had no influence over the timing of the referral.
14 It would not have been appropriate for us to even think about that. The other key finding from the fraud 15 investigation was that the Office of the State Auditor did not obtain evidence that Ms Masias was 16 promised a contract in exchange for her resignation or silence. I'm eager to find the results of the Troyer 17 Investigation and have that out in the public sphere. I look forward to robust discussions with this 18 committee and with other key stakeholders in our communities about the results of the Troyer 19 investigation and of the results to the ILG investigation. I appreciate the committee's patience with me 20 this morning in my very nonlinear discussion and presentation. And I remain available to the committee 21 at any point during this process to support positive outcomes that leave us with a system of judicial 22 discipline in Colorado that not only we can all be proud of, but that is a model for other states in the 23 country. Thank you committee.

24

25 Sen. Lee

26 Thank you for your testimony, and thank you for those final comments and for your offer to return to the 27 committee should there be a need to do that. We've run over our time significantly, and I'm trying to 28 figure out, how do we have the Commission on Judicial discipline set for one o'clock? Former Madam 29 Vice Chair. Senator Gonzales.

30

31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just one brief question in regards to the final report. When those reports are 33 released, will we receive full and unredacted versions of said reports?

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Mr. Vasconcellos.

37

38 Steven Vasconcellos

39 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Senator Gonzales, it is my intent, it is the Supreme Court's intent to 40 put as much information into the public sphere as reasonably possible. I cannot say with certainty the

1 action that may take place. I'm also keenly aware, keenly aware of how redaction looks and how that is 2 received publicly. It is my goal to put reports out that are either unredacted or minimally redacted. And 3 would be more than happy if we find ourselves in a situation where information needs to be redacted to 4 talk to the committee about why. And be available for that conversation. I will tell you just briefly by 5 way of background. No different than anyone in a position similar to mine, in a large organization, you 6 inherit legal agreements from your predecessors. Whether or not you would have entered into them or 7 not is immaterial. You inherit those agreements. Parties to legal agreements have every reasonable 8 expectation that those agreements will be honored. The whole redaction question, at some level, boils 9 down to looking at the legal liability of the organization, the cost of that legal liability, potentially, in 10 comparison to what's at stake here with public trust and confidence. I'm going to push for as much, and 11 have pushed, for as much transparency as we can reasonably bear. That is an artful assessment, that is 12 not a formulaic or firm assessment there. That is a judgment call, ultimately. But you know, handing 13 over some sort of report. I mean, I'm imagining a worst case scenario here, Senator, where we hand over 14 report that is more blacked out than it's actually narrative or something to that effect. It's almost as bad.
15 Representative Carver spoke thoughtfully earlier about the connection between findings and conclusions 16 and seeing sort of the narrative arc of the investigation. You can do great damage to that through 17 redaction. I recognize that, and I just recognize the public perception around redaction. I'm going to 18 make every effort to eliminate or minimize that. I can't tell you with absolute certainty, as I sit here 19 today what that's going to look like, but I did want to share my mindset around that.

20

21 Steven Vasconcellos

22 Senator Gonzales.

23

24 Sen. Gonzales

25 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And I appreciate that response. Mr. Vasconcellos. Just one other follow up, given 26 that the members of the Legislative Audit Committee did receive a full report with those conclusions, 27 has that full report been transmitted over to the members of the judicial discipline commission?

28

29 Sen. Lee

30 Mr. Vasconcellos.

31

32 Steven Vasconcellos

33 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I apologize. Senator, I'm a little confused. Which report are you referring to?

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Senator Gonzales.

37

38 Sen. Gonzales

39 I'm referring to the report conducted by the State Auditor.

40

1 Sen. Lee
2 Mr. Vasconcellos.

3
4 Steven Vasconcellos
5 Thank you Mr. Chair. Thank you Senator. Yes, we've shared audit reports, the fraud hotline 6 investigative report. All of that has been shared. We entered with the investigators. We structured the 7 relationship such that we have an attorney relationship with them. There is no holding back of 8 information in what's been shared with investigators. Thank you.

9
10 Sen. Lee
11 Rep Weissman.

12
13 Rep. Weissman
14 Thank you. I was wondering if it was in the scope of the contracts with RCT and ILG, for there to be 15 any kind of presentation, e.g., to a committee like this, one of their work. And then it occurs to me, the 16 answer must be no, because the existence of this interim committee was not contemplated when those 17 contracts were struck. Nonetheless, I would find it helpful, and I think it would be of interest to the 18 public if in connection with the finalization of these reports or the bringing forward of the key parts of 19 them in a timely way, as the Vice Chair alluded to, if at least some of the teams involved with these 20 investigations could be available for discussion and questioning by this committee. If that is without the 21 scope of the contract, and they would need to be compensated for that time in trouble, then I hope the 22 Branch, and I hope this committee can make inquiries about such additional funds as might be 23 necessary. These are professionals need to get paid for the time I get it. But we're talking about context, I 24 think the ability to engage with the folks who actually are bringing these reports to us would be a value 25 add.

26
27 Sen. Lee
28 I would affirm the suggestion of Rep. Weissman. Is that a possibility? Mr. Vasconcellos.

29
30 Steven Vasconcellos
31 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you Representative Weissman. It was not beyond the pale, even though 32 we didn't know at the time that this committee would exist in its current form, it also struck me, at the 33 time of contract creation that it was not beyond the pale, that there would be some sort of legislative 34 reckoning around the findings from the reports. So, legislative testimony is not built into the contract per 35 se. The issue has been broached with both investigators as something we need to realize is a possibility 36 that it will be requested and then that there is merit. I want this committee to have a free-flowing 37 engagement with the investigators that there's no perception of it being filtered through my eyes. You 38 need to form your opinions of the results, and certainly the Department will want to be part of those 39 conversations at some level. But the formation of your opinions about the findings and results need be 40 based, I think, primarily on your own read of the final reports and your ability to engage with the

1 investigators, not through a filtered conversation via myself, or my office, or the Supreme Court. So, I 2 will do everything in my power to try to have that happen. I don't know, as I sit here whether that will 3 require more money or not, or what that might cost, and as I say, to the frustration of some, we'll figure 4 it out. Even though I don't know what that solution looks like.
5

6 Sen. Lee

7 Okay, so with that good faith commitment, why don't you see what you can do with the independent 8 investigators and schedule them with Juliann as soon as possible to come in and talk to the committee.
9 And you know, I don't know if we need to have the final reports for that. We probably should. But 10 anyway, once you try to work that out with the committee. So, we have a presentation beginning in 11 11 minutes from the Commission on Judicial Discipline. And I expect some people might want to have 12 some lunch before that. Can you all wait until 1:15 or 1:30? Is that reasonable to request? Can we ask 13 for 1:30? Does that work for the committee? Okay, all right, very good. So, the committee will be 14 adjourned until 1:30. Thank you, Judge and Mr. Vasconcellos.

Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline
Presentation;

1 Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline: June 14, 2022
2 Hearing—CCJD Presentation

3
4 Rep. Weissman

5 The Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline will come back to order. We are all present and accounted 6 for, so we are prepared for a presentation by the Commission on Judicial Discipline. So, thank you for 7 accommodating the lunch break, and we appreciate you joining us this afternoon.

8
9 Sen. Gonzales

10 Mr. Chair.

11
12 Sen. Lee

13 Senator Gonzales.

14
15 Sen. Gonzales

16 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I did just want to let the committee know that I did speak briefly to Mr.
17 Vasconcellos to follow up, as he wished to clarify his response to my question on the record about 18 having sent the Auditor's report to the members of the judicial discipline commission. The members of 19 the judicial discipline committee have not, in fact, received said report, yet. And, so, he asked me to 20 clarify the record in that regard. So, I just wanted to make the committee aware.

21
22 Sen. Lee

23 Okay, thank you. And Mr. Vasconcellos stated that to me as well. That he had made a mistake on the 24 record. So, appreciate the clarification that the Commission has not received the Auditor's report. Okay.
25 With no further ado, we are honored by the presence of three-tenths of the Commission. So, thanks for 26 joining us. Who would like to begin? Ms. Krupa.

27
28 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

29 Thank you Chair. As many of you had sat through our presentation before, it is somewhat an overview 30 of the current system, but also a presentation of some of the obstacles that we've hit in the last few 31 months, 18 months or so, and some recommendations that we have, at least, based on the current 32 structure.

33
34 Sen. Lee

35 And a PowerPoint presentation, that you have put up on the screen. Thank you.

36
37 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

38 Before I begin, we're here because we were invited to the SMART hearing. I think it was the first time 39 that we actually spoke, and we were asked if we had everything we needed to fulfill our constitutional

1 mandate and do our job. And we said very frankly that we did not. We are very appreciative of the bill 2 giving us independent funding, and we're very appreciative of this process and the opportunity to talk 3 with you, today. I do want everyone on the Interim Committee to know that that we have been meeting 4 with Mr. Vasconcellos. We are trying to work together. They have been very open to meeting with us.
5 Obviously, Mr. Vasconcellos isn't the Court, can't speak for them, or bind them. But we are having those 6 discussions, and we are hoping that we can come to you with agreed recommendations and very clearly 7 where the delineation of non-agreement is so that we can make it easier for you to do your job.
8

9 So, as you heard earlier, the Colorado judicial system's merit selection process was kind of the 10 beginning of how judges became judges in Colorado. The nominating commission is full of lawyers, one 11 supreme court justice that serves as their ex officio chair, and then citizen members. People apply for 12 judicial positions. The nominating committee decides who they're going to interview, and then makes 13 recommendations to the Governor. Other than county court, that's how it works. In Denver County 14 Court, those three names are given to the Denver Mayor. But that is just one of the commissions that 15 provides oversight.
16

17 The importance of judicial oversight, I think, is clear to everyone on this committee, and we've just 18 given a couple of quotes regarding what effective judicial discipline is, so that it's trusted, and that's 19 what we hope to try to achieve. We don't want it to appear self-serving. We don't want it to appear that 20 its judges protecting judges, or that the Commission is just trying to protect judges. When we talk about 21 transparency, that's what we hope we can achieve. Obviously, that also carries with it some 22 confidentiality requirements, and our confidentiality roles are some of the most strict out there. The 23 purpose of our Commission isn't so much to punish the judges. What we are trying to achieve, or 24 supposed to achieve, is to maintain and restore public confidence in our Judiciary. And people have said 25 it today that there's a lack of confidence in government these days, a lack of trust in an independent 26 judiciary. And our Commission doesn't function unless we are perceived as independent and 27 maintaining that integrity.
28

29 While there are other paths to judicial removal, our discipline is really confidential for a variety of 30 reasons. A lot of times we get complaints or concerns about judges over delay cases. That can be the 31 nature of the case or the complexity of the case, or it can be something that, as any of us have 32 experienced, where you get overwhelmed, and instead of making the right benchmarks to tackle it, it just 33 kind of gets into a file and you bury your head in the sand. In those instances, when it's not a repeated 34 instance, or the judge just really let something get away. We try to make sure that the judge has a system 35 in place so that doesn't happen. That doesn't always need to be public. As you heard, we get roughly 200 36 complaints or requests for evaluation. The majority of those are outside of our jurisdiction, or they're 37 seeking some appellate remedial measure. Or, as Mr. Vasconcellos or Ted Tow said, there are 38 complaints that are really better handled by HR or an employee matter. It doesn't arise to the level of 39 judicial discipline.

1 What becomes public, and what we're trying to achieve by that is similar to any sanction that is public, 2 that is given, it is so that there's an education piece to it. So there's a piece of that that people recognize 3 that there is a heavy and serious sanction for certain conduct to be a remedial measure as well. We don't 4 impeach. We don't affect retention or recall. Obviously, if a judge is publicly sanctioned by the 5 Commission that would affect their ability, I think, to sit and remain. But just as any body making a 6 recommendation of a sanction for conduct, we take into consideration the length of the time the judge 7 has served, if they're a new judge, if they got proper training, if there's a harm to keeping them on the 8 bench, either to the public or to staff. There's a lot of considerations that the Commission tries to make.
9 Obviously, we only make recommendations for any public sanction. We have no power to impose it.

10

11 I mentioned the oversight entities, and I talked a little bit about the nominating commissions. The 12 performance commission is different. The performance commission sends out surveys to attorneys that 13 practice before judges and asks us to complete surveys.

14

15 And I can back up, some of you may not know me. My name is Elizabeth Espinosa, Krupa. I'm an 16 attorney. I have my own firm here in Colorado. I worked as a public defender for many years, a federal 17 defender. I worked as a trial attorney for the Securities and Exchange Commission, and I worked at 18 Attorney Regulation as a trial attorney for them before starting in my own firm. And I serve on many 19 different boards and commissions. It's my way of giving back to Colorado, something my parents 20 instilled in me a long time ago. It's important to me as a lawyer that there is oversight, not just of 21 lawyers, but also of judges. And I have been very blessed to sit on this Commission. Our non-lawyer, 22 non-judge members are some of the brightest and most helpful people I've ever had the pleasure of 23 working with, and I would never say that they lacked subject matter jurisdiction to make any decision 24 that we make.

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 Ms. Krupa, how much time do you and the other volunteer members of the Commission spend doing 28 this volunteer work?

29

30 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

31 A lot. So, corporate board members are usually paid, but corporate board members usually spend about 32 200 hours a year serving on a corporate board, more if they're on an audit committee. Something like 33 that, I would say.

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Four hours a week.

37

38 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

39 Right, and I would say that we have been a little over that. Some of it with some of the obstacles that we 40 faced since 2021 and some of it because of some of the publicity that's gone out there, whether that's the

1 reason for it or not. But our current numbers saw roughly a 25% increase of requests for evaluation, or 2 what we call complaints, just in this year alone. And that may be some of it is just education. I'm not 3 sure that a lot of people knew we existed before we testified at the SMART hearings and got to really 4 have a public education piece.

5
6 If I may Senator Lee, the performance commission releases a report that basically summarizes the 7 survey results that they get back, and the surveys obviously go to attorneys that practice before that 8 judge, you're asked when you receive the survey, you know, how much time have you spent in front of 9 this judge? Have you done a trial? Have you done a motions hearing. Have you had a written order from 10 this judge? It asks questions about their demeanor, knowledge of the law, things like that. So, the 11 performance commission, that piece that they look at actually gets published before elections for 12 retention. It is a powerful piece, and something that I think the public relies on quite heavily, largely 13 because we don't appear in front of these judges. We wouldn't know anything if we didn't get the 14 information from the performance commission. The difference with the judicial discipline commission, 15 again, is we only act upon requests for evaluation or complaints. Very rarely I think, if ever, have we 16 had the opportunity to really do anything on our own. Nor have we, I don't believe during my tenure.

17
18 But the Commission on Judicial Discipline is similar to the nominating commission in terms of its 19 makeup. So you've heard that there's four judges, two lawyer members, and four citizen members. That 20 the judicial members are valuable to the Commission, and invaluable, if I could say, largely because 21 when we get delay cases, whether it's a domestic relations courtroom or a civil courtroom, to have a 22 judge that has that experience to explain what's a normal delay, or what a complex case might be, or 23 how it's handled in different jurisdictions. Because some of our complaints that we get are from very 24 rural jurisdictions where judges serve different roles. So, it's invaluable to have those judicial members.
25 The attorney members, are helpful as well for their expertise in either the practice, or the cases, or 26 experiences in different jurisdictions. As I mentioned, our four citizen members have been more than 27 invaluable. Since the bill created some extra staffing for us, we've had the opportunity, and luckily, 28 while working with the State Court Administrator's Office to have a member, a citizen member, that 29 helps us write these, not only employee rules that we have to come up with, but also the postings and the 30 guidelines for us to interview and hire people so that it meets employee guidelines and the legal 31 ramifications of doing so.

32
33 There's a slide that provides our judicial members. Judge Fresquez is in the Fifth Judicial District in 34 Eagle County. She's a County Court Judge. Judge Garrido is in Jefferson County. She is a County Court
35 Judge. Bonnie McLean is in the 18th Judicial District. She is the Chief of their Domestic Relations 36 Division, and then Judge Prince, who is my Vice Chair and right-hand man who sits in El Paso County.
37 The other attorney member is Mindy Sooter, she replaced Chris's position when he left. And, then, the 38 citizen members. Jim Carpenter, most of you know him. Bruce Casias, Yolanda, Lyons, and Drucilla 39 Pugh. Bruce and Drucilla are from other jurisdictions, so they either have to travel, or at least during the 40 pandemic, got to appear remotely, and not have to make the trip. The diversity of the Commission is

1 something I've mentioned before in terms of makeup. That we are a 70% female commission. 75% of 2 the judges are female. We are 50% persons of color and only 20% white male, which is pretty 3 remarkable for a government commission.

4
5 The next slide provides some indication of the Colorado population, and then the number of judges 6 based on their race or ethnicity and/or sexual orientation to demonstrate the diversity of our current 7 bench, by contrast. And as you heard, Mr. Gregory was hired as our Executive Director. We have, thank 8 you for the bill, an administrative assistant, an attorney, and an investigator pursuit that we are doing to 9 try to get those positions filled. You heard from Ms. Jenson that, traditionally, when we had to 10 investigate or interview witnesses, obtain evidence, we had traditionally had attorneys from the Office of 11 Attorney Regulation Counsel assist us with their investigators and their lawyers. They acted as our 12 Special Counsel. Every now and then, we've used an attorney general or deputy attorney general to 13 assist us, and the bill made that pretty clear that we can have their assistance when needed. And we are 14 using them in the interim for a variety of reasons.

15
16 As I mentioned, our mandate under the Constitution is to protect the public from improper conduct of 17 judges. Not only preserve the integrity of the judicial process and maintain public confidence, but we 18 also need to create better awareness of what is proper judicial behavior and to provide a fair and quick 19 resolution of those complaints for misconduct or disabilities. Disabilities, we've had judges who have 20 suffered or start to suffer early onset of either dementia or Alzheimer's. Things like that, or sometimes 21 there's a physical or other mental health disability that we need to step in and try to assist in that.

22
23 In terms of our process and how it works, there's five phases that we try to refer to to keep it as easy and 24 clear as possible. So, there is the intake and screening that Judge Tow discussed and is governed by the 25 Rule. Either our Executive Director or it's assigned to a Commission member, who can immediately 26 dismiss a complaint or request for evaluation if there is no reasonable basis. And again, that's usually 27 lack of jurisdiction, or it's just not conduct covered or contemplated by the rules. Whether the 28 Commission moves forward to investigate a complaint, that is, again, only if there is that reasonable 29 basis to move forward under the rules and the conduct is under our jurisdiction. I think Judge Prince had 30 talked about it before, as have I, that the role of the commission at that point is really like a grand jury in 31 a criminal proceeding. We develop factual evidence. We can use investigators and special counsel if 32 necessary. We have, and there's some debate over this recently, but whether we have subpoena power to 33 get information at that point, that complaint would only advance if the conduct that is alleged in our 34 investigation provides a preponderance of evidence standard. Then, we can recommend formal 35 proceedings. That formal proceeding phase is similar to a trial, not with a jury necessarily, but more like 36 an administrative proceeding. The Special Counsel would become the prosecutor. The hearing is 37 conducted and can be conducted either by the Commission itself or through the appointment of Special 38 Masters. Those three special masters, as you heard, are judges or retired judges, and typically have been 39 appointed by the Supreme Court. That standard is clear and convincing evidence at that trial phase.
40 Chair Lee, I think Representative Weissman has a question.

1 Sen. Lee
2 Rep. Weissman.

3
4 Rep. Weissman

5 Thank you. And I don't want to disrupt the flow of Chair Krupa's comments, but narrow question, 6 backing up a phase or two. I just wonder if I could invite you to unpack the reasonable basis standard in 7 application, you know, less than the latter standards. I'm thinking enough evidence to survive a motion 8 to dismiss, enough evidence to survive a motion for directed verdict, something like that. Just because 9 there are concerns in the space, as you are, more well aware than almost anyone else. Things are brought 10 forward that may be a matter for appeal, but are not a matter for judicial discipline. So, I think this 11 threshold sort of screening in and screening out standard and exactly what quantum of evidence has to 12 be there to proceed or not proceed is a question of public interest. So, I just wanted to build a bit of a 13 record here today, as we're starting out. Thank you.

14
15 Sen. Lee
16 Ms. Krupa.

17
18 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

19 Thank you, Senator Lee. So, the reasonable basis, obviously, even under the rules, we're not an appellate 20 body. We don't we don't look at appellate issues. We don't judge whether or not a judge made a correct 21 legal finding or left out a fact. Some of the examples that I can provide are where the judge during a trial 22 makes continuous remarks that are or seemingly appear to be based on gender, or if a lawyer or party is 23 a person of color, things like that. There are times where we ask for the record. We want to hear the 24 record because we want to hear the judge's tone. We ask for a transcript. We ask for a little bit of 25 additional information before we even decide if there's a reasonable basis. It's usually either the 26 Executive Director or the Commission member that reviews all of the material and then presents to the 27 Commission as a whole the summary of the conduct, what was reviewed, and any recommendation as to 28 whether or not it does meet a reasonable basis. If it's dismissed on its first onset because of lack of 29 jurisdiction or it just doesn't rise to that reasonableness level, the Commission is apprised of that. Our 30 Executive Director does prepare and provide reports at each meeting, of every letter of dismissal, and 31 they're all reviewed by us, which is time consuming. But we are apprised of every dismissal, and we do 32 get requests to review a dismissal when people don't like our dismissal. But the reasonable basis 33 standard is really whether or not the conduct is something that comes within our jurisdiction or that a 34 rule could even be applied to. But again, we do oftentimes get the record or look for extrinsic 35 information as well to assist us to make sure that it's not something that was heard and offensive to the 36 hearer, but there's nothing that we can see that arises to that level.

37
38 Sen. Lee
39 Rep. Weissman.

40

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Thank you. So your last comment, I think surfaces that it is not a purely subjective standard, as we 3 would expect from the use of the word reasonable. There is an objective standard aspect applying. But 4 as far as quantum of proof or quantum of evidence, it is not clear and convincing. It is not in this phase, 5 Rule 13, preponderance. Fair to say that within the guidelines that you just laid out, at this early stage 6 the Commission, acting through the Director or the individual Commissioner is looking for the presence 7 of enough evidence, by analogy to a courtroom context, to send the matter to a jury. Is that about right?
8 So if somebody is, and I think it's Rule 50 (a) or (b), if there is a motion for a directed verdict, which is 9 made if one party, if the party making that motion, thinks that there could not possibly be evidence for 10 the other outcome, we have to be more than there. Is that fair, just for our operating understanding right 11 now?

12

13 Sen. Lee

14 Ms. Krupa.

15

16 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

17 Thank you. It's not quite at that level. I would compare it more to a preliminary hearing where you know 18 is there evidence that would substantiate that claim, not looked at whether or not it was proven, but 19 whether the claim has a factual basis and a reasonable factual basis that would fit under judicial 20 misconduct rules or guidelines.

21

22 Rep. Weissman

23 Okay, the analogy to a PH, I think, is actually great for a largely bunch of lawyers and some people who 24 are smart enough to not get into the profession. Rep Lynch, that's for you. Thank you. I'll leave it there 25 for now.

26

27 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

28 As far as the recommendations that have been . . .

29

30 Sen. Lee

31 Rep Carver.

32

33 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

34 I'm sorry.

35

36 Rep. Carver

37 Just to follow on Rep. Weissman's question. Would it be more analogous to the standard of a prima facie 38 case? Or would you think that closer?

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Ms. Krupa.

3

4 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

5 So prima facie is really just more allegations. We would need some type of evidence or proof, rather 6 than just a claim.

7

8 Rep. Carver

9 So elements supported by some evidence.

10

11 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

12 Correct.

13

14 Rep. Carver

15 Thank you.

16

17 Sen. Lee

18 Judge Prince.

19

20 David Prince

21 I'm just offering a simple analogy because it is a little hard to articulate. Thank you for recognizing . . .

22 Is the microphone on? Now it's on. Okay, it just occurred to me a simple example would be Judge

23 Prince. The allegation against Judge Prince is that Judge Prince had a personal bias against me when he 24 ruled against me, okay? And that's it. That's the bare allegation. Let's make it a little bit more. And he 25 demonstrated that on the hearing I appeared in front of him on June 1, and that's all the allegation is.

26 Well, that's not very much, but we'll probably go ahead, and not probably, we will go ahead and listen to 27 the recording. And so let's say that in the recording, I actually say something, you know, I don't like the 28 look of you, and I'm not really listening to your argument. Well, that's a reasonable basis. There's some 29 evidence and support. There's an allegation of bias. It's an allegation that's cognizable under the Code.

30 That's kind of prima facie. So, there's a prima facie piece, there's a probable cause piece, because you've

31 got to have evidence like you do at preliminary hearing, but it's higher than probable cause. Probable

32 cause is still pretty low. But if we listen to the recording, and it sounds like an ordinary court case and

33 absolutely nothing happened, and they don't point to anything else, then we'd say, well, there's no

34 reasonable basis. Met prima facie, because the allegation of bias is sufficient, but they haven't given us a

35 factual allegation that's supported by any evidence. So, I just thought I would try to offer one example 36 that might help.

37

38 Sen. Lee

39 Ms Krupa. Sorry, Senator Gardner.

40

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Thank you. While we're asking questions about this. So, the intake and screening your rule allows for 3 the Executive Director or the Commission to dismiss if there's no reasonable basis, and I fully 4 understand you get it. And so there are a lot without reasonable basis. Are there standards, though, for 5 the Executive Director to make that decision, as opposed to the Commission? Or how do you sort of do 6 that? Because otherwise, it seems to me that Mr. Gregory may be the most powerful man in the 7 Colorado judicial scheme, if you will.

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Mr. Gregory.

11

12 Christopher Gregory

13 Thank you. Thank you. Mr. Chair, there is and actually, if you look at the Colorado Rules of Judicial 14 Discipline. The basic rubric that we use is under Rule 13, and there's different criteria, I think, four, five 15 parts to it, but really it's drawing this distinction between whether one of these requests for evaluation is 16 just essentially trying to use the disciplinary process as an appeal, that is something that we have no 17 power to do anything with. If the allegations are frivolous, so this would go to that question of probable 18 cause or prima facie case, if there's just no colorable way to look at this and expect that you know the 19 complaint has any merit as it would relate to a violation of a Code. That's one thing. And then more of 20 kind of this, I guess, substance of the evidence question that, if you do read the whole thing together, is 21 there really a reason for judicial disciplinary proceedings. And that, again, just ties into whether what's 22 being alleged aligns with a potential violation of a Code. It is, I think a very, very liberal standard to 23 being able to review these requests for evaluation. If they do seem colorable, then it really is for the 24 Commission to decide if we want to move forward with greater degrees of investigation. But a typical 25 one, like I think Judge Prince gave in his example. It's very generalized, but if you pull the record to see 26 what was said during a hearing, that's kind of an investigation that I think the Commission often does 27 when it's trying to screen out which of these requests would be dismissed or would move forward to 28 either a much more in-depth investigation or formal proceedings. But there is a standard. It isn't, you 29 know, boundless discretion on the part of the Executive Director on what is treated as a complaint or 30 what is not. But those standards are in Rule 13 and Rule 14 of our Rules of Judicial Discipline.

31

32 Sen. Lee

33 Senator Gardner.

34

35 Sen. Gardner

36 Thank you. Following up, I mean, what I'm getting at is, it would seem to me that there may be cases 37 with no reasonable basis that are something more, and maybe I'm just not understanding Mr. Gregory, 38 but do you basically have the ability to find no reasonable basis on each and every case that comes in in 39 front of you? I mean applying the standards and not applying the standards? Or internally is there some, 40 is there some division between yourself as Executive Director, because I recognize there are cases that

1 are outside the jurisdiction of the Commission, and that's probably clearly a dismissal, but there may be 2 those that require some additional judgment, right?

3

4 Christopher Gregory

5 And I think this . .

6

7 Sen. Lee

8 Mr. Gregory. Ms Krupa, Mr. Gregory.

9

10 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

11 Thank you, Senator Lee and Senator Gardner. So no, Mr. Gregory is not the most powerful man over the 12 Judiciary.

13

14 Sen. Gardner

15 I doubt he thinks he is.

16

17 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

18 He reports to us, and we review every dismissal as a Commission. And there are times where we have 19 concerns, and there are dismissal letters sent with concerns and pretty clear language about the concern.
20 So, all of the dismissals are reviewed by the Commission. They're not solely at the discretion of our 21 Executive Director.

22

23 Sen. Gardner

24 Okay.

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 Senator Gardner.

28

29 Sen. Gardner

30 Thank you. I appreciate you clarifying that, because it sort of looks like the Executive Director can 31 dismiss a whole group of them without review, but what you're telling me is even those that he would 32 recommend dismissal, they're going to be they're going to be reviewed by the Commission before that 33 actually happens.

34

35 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

36 Correct. Sorry.

37

38 Sen. Lee

39 Mr. Gregory.

40

1 Christopher Gregory

2 And I would just add one small point to that. You know, while I was serving on the Commission, at least 3 one or two instances through that review process, we did identify a dismissal that probably did deserve a 4 little bit more consideration, and ended up reversing the decision and moving forward in a different 5 direction. But yeah, in addition to just that process, I think what Judge Tow was describing in some of 6 his testimony this morning. When the Executive Director does flag one of these requests for evaluation 7 as something that could be colorable, we typically assign it to one of the Commissioners to engage in 8 this more detailed investigation of what the request for evaluation is. That may be looking in detail at the 9 register of actions from the court case, the recordings from what was said on the record, and then present 10 a recommendation for the entire Commission to vote on as to whether they want to proceed with 11 dismissal or pursue one of the other disciplinary mechanisms.

12

13 Sen. Gardner

14 Thank you.

15

16 Sen. Lee

17 Who's up? Ms. Krupa.

18

19 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

20 Thank you. In regard to the recommendations, the Commission prepares and transmits recommendations 21 to the Supreme Court for discipline following proceedings, along with the record of the proceedings.
22 Special Counsel as well can make recommendations. And if Special Masters are used, the Special 23 Masters' recommendation is also provided to the Supreme Court. The proceedings are confidential 24 unless and until the Supreme Court takes those recommendations and permits it to be public.

25

26 As far as the Supreme Court proceedings, once the Supreme Court receives the record, they have 27 different options. They can conduct further proceedings to expand the record, if they have more 28 questions or need more information. They can adopt or modify or just simply reject our 29 recommendations or remand it for additional implementation. Once the Supreme Court makes a final 30 decision, that decision is published, unless the Supreme Court decides to keep it confidential. So, the 31 Commission has no authority to make public decisions. That all lies with the Supreme Court. In terms of 32 our sanction authority, those are provided for in the Rules. The Supreme Court has the authority to do 33 public discipline, removal, retirement, suspension, disability, either public reprimand or censure, or a 34 public diversion or deferred. The Commission can impose private discipline only, which are the 35 dismissals, disability, a type of diversion plan, private admonishment, a private reprimand or a private 36 censure, and oftentimes by stipulation. There are times where, before we recommend formal 37 proceedings, a judge will make an agreement with us, as long as it's a private agreement. Obviously, the 38 Commission takes into consideration the conduct before it's willing to agree to a private measure. But 39 there are those cases, as I said, where it doesn't arise to the level where we think public censure is 40 warranted, and we do make those agreements, as well. I believe Judge Tow indicated that it is only the

1 Commission that decides whether or not a case or a complaint / request for evaluation goes into formal 2 proceedings. That's actually inaccurate, the responding judge or judge accused of misconduct can make 3 that request formally as well.

4
5 In terms of our confidentiality, the Constitution does set forth confidentiality. In 2021, the Supreme 6 Court effectuated rules, adding to that confidentiality, but our examination of misconduct is confidential 7 unless and until those recommendations are filed with the court. Individual investigations are all 8 confidential, although we can discuss, as we did at the SMART hearing, where we need assistance to be 9 able to conduct that, such as our hiring of Special Counsel to be able to conduct certain investigations.
10 As far as any disclosures that we can make, we are allowed to make those as long as it's required for us 11 to fulfill our mandate.

12
13 We talked a little bit about our annual requests for investigations or evaluations in terms of volume, the 14 reports that are on the Commission's website do actually discuss more than just the 200 requests in 2020
15 or 2021. There is language without naming the judge that goes through specific instances of dismissals 16 or dismissals with concerns, and also a history of recent disciplinary matters. So, it will talk about 17 whether or not there's public censure or private discipline, including dismissals, and some of the 18 information surrounding that, without naming the judge or the jurisdiction. In 2022 as I stated, it's 19 projected that we will have 250 requests for evaluation from at least our current totals through the end of 20 May, and then, on average, we have had typically 70 requests for evaluation that require evidence 21 procurement. In terms of our public discipline cases, as you can see in the next slide, from 2004 to the 22 present, there's been six judges that have been publicly disciplined. Three male judges, three female, five 23 white judges, and one judge identifies as a person of color. If you contrast that to the chart to the right of 24 it, the known individual recipients of misconduct, I would say either complaining party or victim, in 25 terms of gender association or whether they are persons of color. Those numbers are pretty different. In 26 terms of who usually makes the complaints, it's not always parties that appear before the judge. A lot of 27 our public discipline cases have been people that work in the courthouse or have worked for the judges.
28 It's not parties that are disgruntled. These are people that are directly affected day to day. And as far as 29 the types of conduct resulting in public discipline, either abusive behavior or discriminatory behavior, if 30 there's been criminal proceedings, a felony is a mandatory removal. But DUIs, those types of things, or 31 multiple incidents of aggravating behavior, either to multiple staff or multiple instances towards one 32 person. These are just some of the things we've heard from complainants or victims. We take the 33 confidentiality of the complainant or the victim very seriously. We try to also consider if the conduct 34 rises to the level of where we think there should be an immediate suspension pending formal 35 proceedings, what that does to the District as well for us to recommend removal of a judge. Because of 36 what that does for all of the other litigants cases that are pending in that court, and the overwhelming 37 duties for other judges in that District.

1 Sen. Lee

2 Ms. Krupa, do you talk with the victims and find out what their preferred disposition might be, or 3 discuss options with them?

4

5 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

6 Well, we don't have Senator Lee, while we don't have any Victims' Rights Act equivalent within the 7 Commission, we do speak with victims, particularly about whether they feel safe. What we can do or 8 what we can recommend, either to a Chief Judge or the HR administrator, working together to make 9 sure that that person is taken care of. As well as if that judge, where that conduct may lie. There have 10 been complainants that have requested transfers or have gone to work for another judge, but we do have 11 discussions with them. We do interview them, we do try to consult with them. But there's not any 12 equivalent where that's a required mechanism, and sometimes they don't really want to talk to us.

13

14 Sen. Lee

15 Sure, what I'm thinking about. It was alluded to by the Chief Justice and Justice Marquez, when they 16 spoke to us that some victims prefer a more victim centered solution to the misconduct that they, you 17 know, they really don't want to see the Judge sanctioned or some sort of severe penalty imposed. They 18 just want to have a safe workplace. I'm reading the comments that you had up there from some of them, 19 and it seems that they just want to do their job. They don't want to feel harassed, intimidated, sad, 20 scared, anything. So, it would seem that it might be appropriate to be able to fashion a solution that 21 involves counseling and training and more sensitivity oriented processes for the for the magistrate, than 22 the sanctions that typically are imposed. So, I wonder, would it be helpful to you to have a wider 23 panoply of alternatives, potentially restorative justice types of referrals that you could potentially send a 24 judge if he's willing, and a victim, if she is willing to a restorative justice process to potentially work out 25 a better method of repairing the harm? To enable the people to move on?

26

27 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

28 Well, I've heard the Court mention a type of restorative justice, or even mediation. Again, we have 29 employed similar types of resolutions. Where we recommend certain trainings for judges, or we 30 recommend different things to try to assist if they're going to remain on the bench and that employee is 31 going to be anywhere near them or wants to be anywhere near them. Our experience has been either the 32 staff member or complainant does not want to work with them, and oftentimes, depending on the 33 position of that person, their entire life has been as a clerk or a law clerk, or something like that, and part 34 of reporting to us or making anything public with us, there are some concerns for them about their 35 futures moving forward as far as employment, things like that. So, we try to measure that. But I can tell 36 you, Senator Lee, that in speaking with the Women's Bar Association about this very issue, they have a 37 lot of concerns about it. That while there may be options for us, that telling complainants that there's 38 going to be required mediation or required restorative justice, where they need to sit down with the 39 judge that will quell. There's a concern, I think, by the Bar, and a concern, equally by the Commission, 40 that we're not trying to quell complainants. There's a way to serve things so that the judge can have

1 remedial measures and a complainant feels heard and safe and we're doing what we can then, then I
2 think we're meeting that goal. My concern is, if there's some kind of, let's make sure everybody mediates 3 first, that that is going to have an impact, that that we don't necessarily intend.

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 I'm not proposing that. And we never, in the restorative justice world, use the term required restorative 7 justice. It's always, always voluntary, subject to the discretion of the parties. So, I'm just proposing 8 consideration of that as an alternative. To talk about with the victim, if they are interested. If they are not 9 interested, off the table. But as a possibility to promote some healing and to reduce the tension that took 10 place in the workplace, not required mediation, not anything mandatory. But just as an option for 11 consideration. The victim would have to want it and agree to it, and the offending, responsible judge 12 would have to be deemed suitable. So that person would have to go through an assessment to determine 13 whether or not they're really suitable. I mean, if their attitude is well, I mean, that's just appropriate, she's 14 too sensitive--not suitable. But if he says, you know, I really screwed up, I didn't realize it. It may be 15 suitable. So, just something for consideration. Just wanted to put it on the table for discussion.

16

17 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

18 And thank you. I don't think we're opposed to that by any means.

19

20 Sen. Gardner

21 Mr. Chair.

22

23 Sen. Lee

24 Senator Gardner.

25

26 Sen. Gardner

27 Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Ms. Krupa, let me take a little different view on this, than the Chair. I 28 served on the Legislative Workplace Interim Study Committee, and there are a lot of commonalities here 29 dealing with a specific group that has a constitutional office. They don't report to anyone in the sense, 30 they're responsible to everyone and report to no one, in some sense, and it's an awesome responsibility 31 that judges have. One of the things we found, as we discussed this in the legislative workplace context, 32 was, and this came from a lot of victims, was not the notion of restorative justice and so forth. But, 33 rather, the notion was, I don't want anybody to be disciplined. I don't want anyone to lose their job, and 34 it's not that serious. But I want this to change, and I need an avenue to do that. For someone to talk to the 35 judge and say, really, it's not okay to hug me every morning when you come to work or, you know, 36 depending on your generation, call me by some endearing name because I'm a female. And yet, here's 37 the thing that I think we need to think about. We're moving to a system where an HR complaint will 38 necessarily be handed over after an employee is safe, so forth. That is necessarily going to be handed to 39 the Commission on Judicial Discipline for something to happen. And I just think that between the 40 Judicial Department and the Commission on Judicial Discipline there might be some discussion about 1 what that particular thing looks like, because not every one of these situations of discomfort in the 2 workplace, which is very legitimate, necessarily rise to the level of I need to publicly censure you. And 3 so again, it's not even a restorative justice thing. It's just handling things at the level that they're at. And I 4 don't think, maybe I'm wrong, but I don't think that's something that the Commission has actually sort of 5 been challenged with doing in the past. Because I think we've had the problem of things not being 6 reported to you that ought to be reported. Now, I think we're going to move to, if I understand where 7 we're going, we're at a situation where, if an HR complaint is made against a judicial officer, against a 8 judge, the Department HR is going to do very little on that, other than inquire, ensure the employee is 9 safe, and then hand you a file. And your choice at that point may be somewhat limited, given where we 10 are, so I don't know. You can comment or, probably, its a subject for a longer conversation offline.

11

12 Sen. Lee

13 Ms. Krupa.

14

15 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

16 Thank you. So, Senator Gardner, I think there was a lot of discussion before the bill whether or not 17 mandating disclosure to us was going to be this huge, overwhelming job to the Judiciary, and it was just 18 going to inundate us with HR complaints. That hasn't been the case. In fact, what it's done is had at least 19 discussions between us and HR when there has been something that's come to their attention, where they 20 do investigate, because they still have those responsibilities. We can't do it for them or make 21 recommendations as far as employee relations and human resources issues. But we have coordinated and 22 tried to coordinate so that we're not having three different people sit down with a very reluctant victim 23 who is trying to process it on their own. So, as far as whether or not we're going to receive all these HR 24 complaints, we haven't seen that. There seem to be some discussions between us and the reporter, at 25 least of you know what that conduct is, and it has risen to those levels generally.

26

27 Sen. Gardner

28 Thank you.

29

30 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

31 So well . . .

32

33 Sen. Lee

34 Rep. Bacon.

35

36 Rep. Bacon

37 Were you going to continue or finish the thought? I don't want to interrupt you.

38

39 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

40 By all means. Go ahead.

1 Rep. Bacon

2 Thank you. I'm curious. So, when we had the opportunity to talk to the Judicial Branch, I asked some 3 questions around culture, just in thinking about, what are the things that the Branch may look to 4 accomplish or keep track of or progress monitor. And, so, when you put up the slide about all of the 5 sentiments and the feelings, I think it was like a word cloud. My question for you is, formally and 6 informally, what is your relationship to the Court, the Supreme Court, as kind of the arbiters of these 7 things around these sentiments and feelings, right? Is it something that you report out regularly to them?
8 Do you find yourselves in the position, and I don't even know if this is within the scope of what the 9 Commission does as a matter of the Constitution, let alone any of their rules. But do you have 10 conversations about what you see over time and if any of these words have changed, right? And what, 11 perhaps any sort of authorities or opportunities that you might have to kind of keep up with them over 12 time, as you take in these complaints? I think what I'm really curious about, too. Part of me just wants to 13 know when you all have the opportunity to say, Hey, there's something going on here. And what role, if 14 any, that you have to be able to change some of the outcomes of these words. I think, like on the 15 restorative justice piece, I think generally, when it comes to that, people need to feel safe and secure in 16 being able to do that. And so there needs to either be rules that are protections or laws that are 17 protections as well as a demonstration that people are safe, as well. And so part of me wonders, this is 18 like, again, what is your relationship with the Branch? What is it that you as a Commission can weigh in 19 on or actually do to help create those rules or spaces, or even conversations on what it is that people 20 need to feel safe? So that was kind of broad, but ultimately, I think the question is, what is it that you 21 can do, or what's within the scope of the Commission in regards to these things that I may have named 22 as culture, or where do you find there to be opportunity to really help change the sentiments of 23 protection or security or safety?

24

25 Sen. Lee

26 Ms. Krupa.

27

28 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

29 Thank you. Senator Lee. So, I'll back up a little bit. In terms of the Commission's relationship with the 30 Supreme Court. We make recommendations to them. Largely our authority is defined by what you've 31 seen and what you've heard today. We don't have the authority to make recommendations to them based 32 on different issues that we've seen. If there's one district, let's say that just is repeatedly in front of us and 33 really needs more management and assistance. There's not a mechanism for us to go to Court and say, 34 hey, you got to clean up this District. Similarly, if it's allegations by multiple employees about one 35 judge, typically, that's us talking to the Chief of that District about certain things before it would be 36 really to the Supreme Court, just in terms of initial safety measures. But again, that's all guided by our 37 confidentiality. And that's all set forth by the Supreme Court. So, we can't always go to the Chief Judge 38 and say, Hey, we have this complaint. Because we're not allowed to. There are impediments to some of 39 that. And when we started this process, at least at the SMART hearings and initial conversations with 40 Senator Gardner and Senator Lee about what we needed to be able to be independent and independent in

1 terms of being able to fulfill our mandate. Some of the recommendations we have for you are clearly 2 just from obstacles that we've hit. We could go beyond that, and I would, I think we would all welcome 3 that on the Commission. To have that opportunity to really not only take a reflective look back as you're 4 suggesting, but to be able to make some of those recommendations. We don't have that authority or even 5 ability at the current time. As far as conversations with the Supreme Court. Yes, we have had 6 conversations with them in certain type case related investigations or recommendations. But largely not 7 in terms of trends or protections, things like that. That's not exactly set in terms of the Rules. And in 8 terms of affecting outcome, it's really our recommendations, and all we do is make a recommendation.
9 We're not the final decision maker.

10

11 I think Judge Tow made it sound like as though the Commission has all this power and the Supreme 12 Court only steps in at the end. I'm not sure that's 100% accurate. I think the Supreme Court is briefed 13 pretty often and knows a lot about what we do. They basically are our controlling body. We don't do a 14 lot without them. But in terms of affecting the outcome, at least with what we can tell you and this 15 committee is really we're just trying to make sure that at least Colorado's Commission on Judicial 16 Discipline meets the requirements that it should. That we truly are impartial and independent.

17

18 And as far as transparency, that we really take a look at that. I understand that the confidentiality rules, 19 we all do in terms of you know, you don't want this process to be abused, so that judges are publicly 20 shamed into retirement or performance evaluations that are unfair because of a complaint that really 21 would have never gone anywhere. I don't think the Commission's advocating that.

22

23 What I do think the Commission advocates is really for us to be able to fulfill what we need to do, and a 24 lot of the impediments that we had really started in that 2021 time-period. I don't think we had a lot of 25 Supreme Court involvement in Commission business up to that point. And it really wasn't until the 26 proverbial, issue in the room of the court investigating itself that a lot of this came up. So, we just want 27 to be able to do our job where there's impediments, we're just trying to make sure that we have processes 28 in place, such as, when there's a conflict with the Supreme Court, then who's the decision maker, things 29 like that.

30

31 And as far as the investigations, the two investigations that the Supreme Court has initiated, I understand 32 they had a committee that picked who is conducting the investigation, but they're the client. So to those 33 investigators, that's who's going to get that unfettered report? And the Judiciary says that they want to be 34 transparent and provide unfettered access. Well, I don't know that. That that's what's really going to 35 happen. Whether the redaction comes from the Court before and you never see it, or what is released to 36 the public, I don't know. And I don't think the Commission can tell you what the result of any 37 investigation will be. I'm not sure, and I don't think any Commission member would say that you'll have 38 that before you need to start making some decisions in August. But what we can tell you is what is 39 preventing us right now from doing it, and what we need to be able to move forward. That's not blaming

1 Judicial. It's not saying that Supreme Court is protecting itself, but really to try to help us be as 2 transparent and as responsible in our duties as we can, without hindrance.

4 Sen. Lee

5 Rep. Bacon.

6

7 Rep. Bacon

8 I just want to shift a little bit. Can you share with me again, if I missed it, I'm sorry. When something 9 moves into the public discipline phase. Or what is the qualifier for a claim, or for a public discipline 10 outcome? Does something move to that category, or does it start in that category?

11

12 Sen. Lee

13 Ms. Krupa.

14

15 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

16 Thank you. So, when the Commission does an investigation that really only advances into that trial or 17 formal proceeding phase if there's a preponderance of the evidence. That trial or decision phase where 18 we would have a special counsel that prosecutes, for lack of a better word, on behalf of the people of 19 Colorado, either to the Commission or, historically, to Special Masters. That is still confidential. It will 20 not become public up and until the court determines that that is the case.

21

22 Sen. Lee

23 Rep. Bacon.

24

25 Rep. Bacon

26 So part of my question in reading your document, it says, In the most serious cases. I'm on page six. In 27 the most serious cases, the discipline will be public discipline. But then it says in the most serious cases, 28 when an agreement cannot be reached between the responding judge and the discipline commission, the 29 commission files formal proceedings. So, I guess what I'm just asking again, maybe you answered this.
30 But I think what I was looking for is there something that qualifies either a claim, whether it's degree of 31 something, whether it's severity of something, that would move the claim or case into a public discipline 32 place where there needs to be formal proceedings? You all make private decisions, and there's public 33 decisions. So, I'm just curious if there's something that, if there's qualifiers for that by way are these 34 categories? Or is it about level of agreement or settling of a claim.

35

36 Sen. Lee

37 Ms. Krupa.

38

39

40

1 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

2 Thank you. So, in our rules, there are kind of those delineations of. And we can, I don't believe that's in 3 our materials, but we can provide those factors that are considered before it would be made public or 4 moved to that to that phase.

5

6 Sen. Lee

7 Okay, please continue. I did want to note it's 2:30. We're a half an hour behind schedule when we came 8 back. We're supposed to have the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel at 2:00. They presumably 9 would be starting a couple of minutes from now. So, if we could sort of move it along a little bit, that 10 would be appreciated. I don't want to curtail any magnificent disclosures that are forthcoming, but 11 proceed. Senator Gardner.

12

13 Sen. Gardner

14 Yes, in defense of our witnesses, we're the ones asking all the questions.

15

16 Sen. Lee

17 I fully agree. It's all on us.

18

19 Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa

20 Thank you. Senator Lee, you'll be glad to know my portion of it is done, and Judge Prince is going to 21 address the impediment that we've hit and our recommendations.

22

23 Sen. Lee

24 Very good. Judge Prince, impediments and recommendations.

25

26 David Prince

27 Thank you, Mr. Chair, Madam Vice Chair, and members of the committee. I'll dispense with the 28 introduction. I'm one of the members of the committee. Some of you have been introduced to me before.
29 Well, I guess I'll do a little introduction. So, I've been a practicing lawyer for over three decades. I am a 30 sitting trial court judge in El Paso County. About half my career, I was a practicing lawyer. About half 31 my career, I've been a trial court judge. I've served on the Commission now for about five years. As you 32 hear, I moved into the spot of Judge Tow as he moved out, and I serve now as the Vice Chair. Couple of 33 things before I get to my slides. Just a very quick follow up, because we've talked about it a lot, and I 34 know we're worried about time. But a follow up on the issue two of our senators raised regarding 35 restorative justice and maybe options. Just a couple of things.

36

37 One, more tools would be helpful. We do have a broad option of diversion programs or things by 38 stipulation. So, when we're talking about, I don't want to minimize it, but a lower-level issue, such as the 39 example you gave of you really shouldn't be calling me an endearment every morning or hugging me 40 every morning, something like that. Those are issues where this is something that is probably education

1 oriented. We can talk, we hope. We can talk with this person and try to heal this relationship, as Senator 2 Lee was talking about, and we've done some of that, but we could use better tools. And we've had 3 ourselves in a position once or twice where we need something like that, and we don't really have access 4 to it, and we just haven't had the staffing in the past to even know what resources may be in the 5 community. And one of the plans we already have is that as we get that staffing that you have so kindly 6 authorized to us, we will be looking for those resources and looking to improve upon that. The 7 challenge, and something that Chair Krupa referenced, was that this idea of a of a diversion program for 8 employees has been discussed in the context of Senate Bill 22-201 a couple of times, and also with some 9 of the affinity bars. And it was raised as an alternative. It was presented as an alternative to going down 10 the road of judicial discipline or an alternative to reporting, and that's what's got some people nervous 11 and has us nervous. And an aspect and Chair Krupa has already talked a little bit about that, but an 12 aspect of it that hasn't been talked about relates to our confidentiality. And a reminder that all of these 13 pieces actually weave together quite a bit. So, when we do public discipline, or the discipline is made 14 public by the judge in some fashion, but when we do public discipline, when it becomes public 15 knowledge that a judge has been involved in some misconduct. Usually, it's going to be one of the more 16 serious cases. Usually, that means it's going to involve some sort of personnel issue or some sort of 17 abusive behavior, as you heard earlier. What then happens is, once it does become known publicly, is we 18 start to get more complaints. We start to find out there are other people who have been adversely 19 impacted by this judge, but were afraid to come forward. And so we get very worried about an idea that 20 says that, instead of going through discipline, if somebody and the phrase that's been used in past has 21 been "they just want the conduct to stop." Well, that's important, and it's important to be respected, and 22 it's important to be evaluated as to level of seriousness. But if it is the type of conduct where there are 23 likely to be other people adversely affected that we wouldn't necessarily know about, we worry about a 24 program that's diverted to the person so that others never have the chance to come forward. Because, 25 again, in our experience, they only come forward after we're done with our process, because we're so 26 secretive. Nobody knows, oh, so and so already reported that judge. And so it would be a little safer for 27 me to step forward and say something. So, it just has to be careful in the design.

28

29 And then another aspect is that we have actually had some discussions. One, I want to thank legislators 30 for being a critical part of getting us to a point where we are now having meaningful discussions with 31 the Judicial Branch on many of these issues. And one of the issues we've talked about was exactly those 32 concerns, and at least I've received assurances in those very preliminary discussions that they're mindful 33 of that, and that's not really what they're proposing. Even if it may have sounded like that to many 34 audiences in the past. So, I just wanted to touch on that before we go much further.

35

36 Another issue I wanted to touch on is something that really is critical to I think our whole discussion 37 today, and Chair Krupa mentioned it briefly. And as I listened to Judge Tow describe the process of 38 judicial discipline in the way the Commission operates and its relationship with the Supreme Court. I 39 would have given a very similar description in, at any time in the first three years of my five-year term 40 on the Commission. And one of the phrases he used several times was the Supreme Court is not

1 involved in micromanaging the cases. The Supreme Court wouldn't even know about the case until you 2 make recommendations. That has not been our experience in 2021 and 2022. Those have actually been 3 where the challenges have arisen, where the Supreme Court and Judicial Leadership have become 4 involved in the cases from the beginning. Making public statements about what facts are in the case, 5 public statements about what facts should be found in the case, those kinds of things, and then becoming 6 directly involved in deciding what information is released to the Commission, what resources are 7 provided to the Commission, what scope of issues can be assigned to the Commission, Special Counsel, 8 all of those kinds of things. I agree with Judge Tow that I doubt those things happened prior to about 9 2020 but they're the reasons that that bring us here. Is that this has been done differently now. And I
10 think of that old Sesame Street exercise of one of these things does not look like the others, and we look 11 at all the cases we've handled and how differently certain cases are handled compared to others, and 12 that's where the challenges come that we're asking you to address. So, I just wanted to touch on that, 13 because I agree with a lot of that description, except that that's not what's happening now. That's the 14 difference.

15
16 The other aspect is also keep in mind that he's talking mainly when he says in the ordinary course of the 17 case, from a case perspective, procedure perspective, the Supreme Court wouldn't be told about the case 18 until recommendations. That's technically correct, and for the vast majority of cases, again, 80% plus, 19 using his numbers, get dismissed and don't really go forward. And he's absolutely right, they probably 20 would never even know about most of those cases. It just wouldn't come before them. Wouldn't go 21 anywhere. Those aren't the cases we're worried about procedure-wise. We're worried about the serious 22 cases that do go forward, and again, most of the serious cases, the way the structure works, the Supreme 23 Court has been involved in those cases before it comes up for recommendations. And they'll get that 24 involvement either because, as Judge Tow himself acknowledged, it might be a high-level personnel 25 issue, so it comes before them. As Mr. Vasconcellos acknowledged, the Court as a whole in Colorado, a 26 little bit different than other places, is essentially acting as a Board of Directors, or the C-suite, as the 27 corporate people call it sometimes, running the organization. It's not just the Chief Justice doing the 28 administrative job. And, so, most of these serious cases involve serious challenges to any organization, 29 and so they've had to be involved in addressing it before it ever becomes a judicial discipline issue.
30 Because also, remember, we are not first responders. We are generally last responders. Other people 31 have to deal with the immediate challenge of a judge is not able to serve for some reason. And so we've 32 got to figure out who's going to handle those kinds of things. So, those are the reasons that they come 33 up. And then, of course, the Court announced last year that the Chief Justice is now being briefed on 34 each and every misconduct allegation against a judge, every week. So, long before a case even comes to 35 us, much less gets investigated, goes through formal proceedings, gets to the point of recommendations, 36 at least one member of the Court has been briefed on a weekly basis, extensively for many, many weeks 37 on what's been happening. So, they're exposed to a great deal of information, which creates challenges 38 for the system.

1 So, anyway, returning to, kind of going back to slides, I decided I would try to walk through the same 2 five phases that Ms Krupa described to talk about the issues that we've encountered. So, I start with the 3 intake and screening level. Oh, I'm sorry, is there a question?

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 I hesitated based on the former comment that the delay of the committee is caused by the questions from 7 the committee, but I will, I'll accommodate my own delay. When we're talking about the Supreme Court 8 becoming involved in cases, and we talk about disqualification because of knowledge, etc. Doesn't the 9 Chief becoming involved in cases and being briefed on cases on a weekly basis create a risk that he 10 would have knowledge of the cases sufficient to disqualify him should that case proceed through a 11 disciplinary process and reach the Supreme Court? He would have had prior knowledge of the case if he 12 had been monitoring it as a Chief Justice along the way.

13

14 David Prince

15 We haven't crossed that bridge yet procedurally with a specific case. But what I can say more generally 16 is that under both Rule 2.9 of the Code and Rule 2.11, assuming they apply to judicial discipline cases, 17 and you heard earlier that that the Code does apply. But assuming those two apply, yes, they require that 18 if a judge has knowledge of facts, a case, then, generally they need to disqualify themselves from the 19 case. And a judge is allowed to consult staff under 2.9 I think it's (C). I forget. Under 2.9 a judge is 20 allowed to consult courthouse staff in doing their duties, but they have to take reasonable steps to make 21 sure that they're not exposed to facts relevant to the case. And so yeah, you have that issue, and I don't 22 think we have a clear answer to it.

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 Okay, all right, thank you. Pardon the interruption, as they say.

26

27 David Prince

28 Certainly, thank you, Senator Lee. So, if we look at the intake and screening phase, some of this is a 29 little bit of review for you. There was some talk about the new statute anticipates that HR complaints 30 will be handed over to the discipline commission, and that's true. The explanation, or the context, is that 31 that's been the case by agreement since 2010. So, that part of the statute actually is not new. There's been 32 a requirement that the Judicial Branch basically provide to us allegations of judicial misconduct, or 33 allegations that rise to a level of judicial misconduct that have to be reported to the Commission under 34 an agreement since 2010 and that agreement gives us access to information and files held by the 35 Judiciary. What we found, and what we've addressed in prior hearings, was that the 2010 agreement was 36 not actually being fully implemented. There were instances where it had not been followed. And, so, one 37 of the things that Senate Bill 22-201 did was basically codify that duty. Now there are some variations in 38 it. It's not 100% the same language. So, I think there can be some argument that it's a little bit broader, 39 but it's generally codifying that. The challenge that remains. So, hopefully that's largely addressed that 40 issue.

1 The challenge that remains is that there's no enforcement mechanism for that duty in the statute. We 2 have a codified obligation, but it would be helpful to also have some form of enforcement mechanism.
3 Because that's the challenge we ran into with the 2010 agreement. We already had a duty of disclosure 4 when we found that our requests for compliance were not fully effective. As a practical matter, we didn't 5 really have an enforcement mechanism. Because our rules are not that clear on how you go about 6 enforcing those duties, and to the extent you have paths to do it, they all lead through the top levels of 7 the Judiciary. And they're the ones making the decisions on whether the information is being provided or 8 not. So, it's not a very effective enforcement mechanism, and it's also kind of ambiguous. Because 9 nobody really wrote those rules with the current situation in mind. So that's one of the things that we 10 think need to be addressed.

11 12 I move on to the complaint investigation phase. There, the big challenges that we ran into were 13 resourcing issues. Where we needed resources for the unique investigations that came up in 2021 14 through 2022. What we learned was that there was an opportunity that hadn't arisen previously. There 15 was an opportunity for access to funds to be blocked, which just had not happened before, and to be 16 blocked by those who had conflicts with respect to what was the investigation to be funded. And so 17 happily, again, the Legislature got together and helped us with that. And part of Senate Bill 22 201, is to 18 provide funding and personnel, so we were hopefully able to deal with those obstacles, and hopefully 19 that's in a good position access to information in the complaint investigation phase. Again, we've already 20 talked about one aspect of that, that's the disclosure obligation that was in the 2010 MOU didn't turn out 21 to be very effective. The new statute addresses that.

22
23 But there's another aspect of that, and that's subpoena authority. So, part of what happened over the last 24 couple of years was that we got invited to issue a subpoena in order to get information. Obviously, I 25 can't talk about individual investigations, but I can talk about the processes that we use. And, so, we got 26 invited to issue a subpoena, we issue a subpoena, and the lawyers representing the Leadership of the 27 Branch advised us at that point that they didn't think that we had subpoena authority and that they didn't 28 necessarily feel the need to comply with the subpoena. And, so, we talked about an enforcement 29 mechanism. And again, there's some ambiguity in the Rules of what that enforcement mechanism would 30 be. And, so, the position, at least taken by the counsel representing Judicial Leadership was, well, we'll 31 just do it by an original proceeding before the Supreme Court. Which, under the circumstances, 32 essentially is the body that's making the objection. So, the Supreme Court is going to rule on the validity 33 of the Supreme Court's own objection was basically the way it was presented. And, so, I return to that 34 issue of enforcement mechanisms. Now there's an added piece of it, and that is subpoena power. So we 35 actually do have subpoena power under Rule 22. We think it's pretty clear, but there doesn't seem to be 36 complete agreement on that. And, so, it would be helpful if the Legislature would actually codify 37 subpoena power. And the aspect of the subpoena power that's in question is when we're actually doing 38 the factual investigation, do we have subpoena power? Well, step back and think about it for a moment.
39 Remember so the idea, the argument that's been made, is that you don't have subpoena power until 40 formal proceedings. So, you don't have subpoena power prior to formal proceedings. Remember, you

1 can't have formal proceedings until you've already demonstrated the case by a preponderance of the 2 evidence. In other words, you've got all the evidence you need to win a civil case before you can have 3 formal proceedings. Well, it's hard to do an investigative phase without subpoena power, without the 4 authority to require the production of evidence and reach that standard of already having gathered the 5 evidence. There's a bit of a vicious cycle there. In other words, you don't have subpoena power until you 6 have the evidence to show the claims. Well, wait a minute, if I already got the evidence to show the 7 claims, why do I need subpoena power? And there's another technical issue that I won't get into, it's an 8 argument as to whether the Commission's even a party to the formal proceedings, or whether the 9 Commission has its own subpoena power, or only has the authority to issue subpoenas as requested by 10 others. So, lots of detail in this.

11 12 Moving on to formal proceedings. In formal proceedings, another of the set of challenges we've had is 13 the location of rulemaking authority. In Colorado, under the Constitution, rulemaking authority is 14 assigned to the Supreme Court itself. In a survey across the country, there are about 20 other states that 15 assign rulemaking authority to the discipline commission itself. In Colorado, we have the analogous 16 Performance Commission. They have their own rulemaking authority. We found that some of the 17 challenges were, quite frankly, that the rules as written were not always honored, and the rules as written 18 sometimes leave things out. For example, you've heard both from Ms. Jenson's presentation and ours, 19 that when you get to formal proceedings, the Constitution gives the Commission the discretionary 20 authority to choose between two paths for those formal proceedings. Who will hear the trial? It can 21 either be the Commission itself or the Special Masters. However, when the Supreme Court wrote the 22 rules, they only addressed hearings before the three Special Masters, so there are no rules that permit or 23 address if the Commission itself holds its hearing. There's some other quirks in those Rules, and then 24 issues such as authority to hire Special Counsel, which came up and define the scope of Special 25 Counsel's work. Well, there's an existing Rule for us. This is Rule 2(aa), and it quite clearly states that 26 the discipline commission is the body that decides what Special Counsel does and the scope of their 27 engagement. Well, according to Judicial Leadership in the last year or so, they actually have that 28 authority, or at least the Commission's authority, to do so is subject to their review. The example that I 29 can give you is one that's related to a discussion that you all had this morning, to some degree. You 30 talked a lot about the recommendations for the discipline process that are anticipated from the privately 31 hired counsel of the Judiciary. You recall that discussion? The discussion was mainly about concerns 32 about the delay and the timing. And some discussion has been held several times about, well, the 33 Legislature, the General Assembly, really needs to wait until you get those recommendations from the 34 privately hired counsel. Well, if you go back and look at the public statement issued when we hired our 35 private counsel, we actually followed the lead of the Judiciary, and we identified two broad topics that 36 they were being hired to do. One, was to help with investigations, evaluations, etc. But the other was to 37 make recommendations on the judicial discipline process. Well, and again it's very similar to what the 38 Supreme Court released when they identified the scope of the engagement of the privately hired counsel.
39 One of the points that Judicial Leadership has been very insistent on over the last year and a half has 40 been that the Commission should not be permitted to have the authority to have its Special Counsel

1 make recommendations on the discipline process. So, we have not involved them, and we decided to 2 live with that. So, even though that Rule says quite explicitly, it's the Commission that decides the 3 scope, judicial leadership has said, no, that's not the way it works. We have ultimate authority to decide 4 what issues your Special Counsel can look at, and they've been quite clear that they object to having our 5 Special Counsel look at recommendations. So, we've had to do that part of it on our own, but they've 6 also made the assertion that they have the authority to dictate certain issues being beyond the scope of 7 what Special Counsel can look at. Certain arguments beyond the scope of what Special Counsel is 8 allowed to make. We have resisted that aspect, and we have not agreed to that part of it. But that's a 9 problem with, as far as we can tell, coming from rulemaking. Because the Rule is crystal clear, but it is 10 not being honored as things are currently handled. And, so, a change in who has the rulemaking 11 authority would probably be helpful with that.

12
13 Another issue that ended up being discussed a few times today are those rules of disqualification for 14 judges. It was said in that context. Well, actually the rules for the decision makers involved in judicial 15 discipline are fairly ambiguous at the moment, a bit vague, a bit of a patchwork, and some 16 inconsistencies. It is not entirely clear that the Code governs the standard for when a judge is involved in 17 judicial discipline as a decision maker. It's not entirely clear if the Code is what governs. In other words, 18 to Rule 2.11 which usually governs a judge making a decision on disqualification. We would think that 19 it does. What you heard this morning suggested that it does. But that's not entirely clear. The 20 Constitution lays out some specific, just really two examples. Two specifics, of when a judge is a 21 Supreme Court justice or a judge member of the Commission is required to disqualify themselves from 22 judicial discipline. And it's really only when their own discipline is at issue or their own disability. And,
23 so, there's a question as to do you follow what's written in the Constitution and only that, or do you 24 supplement it with the Rule? There are several decision makers involved in judicial discipline. There are 25 the members of the Commission. There are the special masters. Special Counsel also has significant 26 decision-making authority. And then there's the Justices of the Supreme Court under the current system, 27 as well. And, so, what our proposal is, and right now, we have Rules that were adopted last Fall, which 28 define disqualification for members of the Commission only. They don't address the other categories.
29 So, what our proposal is, is that you follow the lead of several other states and just enact a very simple, 30 straightforward standard for disqualification. And just say all of the decision makers are governed by the 31 same standards that govern when a judge recuses. So, that's really 2.11 under the Code. At the end of the 32 day, a very simple and straightforward proposed solution to that challenge.

33
34 Sen. Lee

35 So, Judge Prince, that would apply to the Supreme Court if they have a conflict as well?

36
37 David Prince

38 Yes, sir, it would.

39
40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Okay.

3

4 David Prince

5 The way we propose it would apply to each of the decision makers involved in judicial discipline. The 6 other issue we found is that there's kind of a definition of what does disqualification means. How far do 7 we have to step back from involvement in the case? And that we've seen inconsistency, shall we say, in 8 the way that's administered. If someone says they're disqualified, but they're still involved 9 administratively. It talks about it a little bit more in the written report. But basically, the Rules that were 10 adopted last Fall for disqualification of members of the Commission say clearly that if you disqualify as 11 a member of the Commission, you will not be involved in the judicial discipline process of that case in 12 any way. It strikes me as a very good standard. The Commission is absolutely okay with that, but that's 13 not the standard that's applied with other decision makers involved in the process. And so that should be 14 uniform, because it does make sense. It does seem to be an excellent standard.

15

16 Moving on to formal proceedings and the pool of Special Masters. One of the discussions this morning 17 was a statement that the Special Masters, when they're appointed because they are judges. By the way, in 18 answer to the question earlier, the Constitution does require they be judges or justices. You cannot be a 19 non-judge or justice and be a Special Master in Colorado. And that, you know, you can debate that's not 20 something we're making a recommendation on. That's fine with us, but you can debate whether there's 21 value in a different perspective. But one of the things that was described was you want the judges 22 because they have subject matter expertise. And that is partially true, but you have to be clear, they are 23 subject matter experts in being a judge. In a judicial discipline case, there are other aspects of subject 24 matter expertise that are pretty important. One is the relatively arcane and very rarely known or 25 understood procedures of how judicial discipline actually works. You've now heard three presentations 26 today, and I suspect we could quiz you and still trip you up, because it's very unusual. It's very different 27 than other things. And you don't, you don't come encounter with it very often. Even we on the 28 Commission, we're the, probably the greatest experts there are, because we do it the most. We still are 29 constantly looking back at a relatively short set of rules to remind ourselves. Because it doesn't come up 30 in everyday life. So, they're not subject matter experts in the procedure, because usually the Special 31 Masters are appointed on an ad hoc basis. Usually, they don't have prior experience. They're not subject 32 matter experts on the Code itself. Again, I realize that judges live by it, but most of us don't really spend 33 a whole lot of time looking at it, except for the very obvious things. So frankly, our proposal is that, why 34 don't you create a pool from which the Special Masters are drawn? You know, a normal panel. There's 35 no magic to these numbers, but a normal panel is three special masters. So, let's create a pool of six or 36 nine, whatever number you want, and have them become subject matter experts. We'll have them serve 37 for several years, and so they'll get to know the discipline process and the standards. And importantly, 38 we've got several questions on what really is the difference between this type of what's reasonable basis, 39 what's the difference between private and public? Problem is those are like sentencing in a criminal case.
40 There are some factors that help you in the statute, but they're pretty gray areas until you have some

1 experience. And there, I can't remember the number of factors, but in answering your question, 2 Representative Bacon, it's called the Deming factors. It's a long list of them. I forget whether it's eight or 3 12, but quite a few that you go through to try and evaluate how serious is this? And it does require some 4 experience and some expertise. So, our system would be better served, assuming we stay with Special 5 Masters, as I assume we will, is to have a pool that starts to become genuine subject matter experts on all 6 three categories, rather than just the issue of being a judge. And that also, you have them serve longer 7 terms. It insulates them from any influence. It makes it less likely that you're hand picking a Special 8 Master tailored for this case because you think they'll be favorable to your point of view. Something like 9 that just insulates a lot of issues.

10 11 With respect to terms, if we are making changes at the constitutional level, another recommendation that 12 we make for very similar reasons, is that you lengthen the term of the members of the discipline 13 commission. Currently, our terms are four years. We would suggest you increase that. You can debate 14 what's the exact right time, but you'll get better institutional knowledge and better subject matter 15 expertise across those three categories if you make it a little bit longer. By way of comparison, a District 16 Court Judge serves for six-year terms, and appellate judges serve for 10-year terms. And a large part of 17 that is one, to insulate them from those political influences, and two, to give them expertise. Same thing 18 really applies to the discipline commission members. So, we would suggest longer terms as well, there.

19
20 At the final decision phase. The final decision phase comes back, really, to the issue that Senator 21 Gardner teed up. Which is this issue of conflict. And what do you do when the final decision maker has 22 been somehow involved? And as was said this morning, we actually don't have a process for that. And 23 it's not a purely hypothetical situation. It has actually happened in the United States. Just a few years 24 ago, it happened in Wisconsin. And Wisconsin, I don't claim to be an expert on their system or even the 25 facts of this. But in Wisconsin, there was a member of the Supreme Court who had a discipline case 26 brought against them. If I recall, it was a laying on of hands alleged with another justice. So, it's 27 interaction between two justices on the Supreme Court. Not surprisingly, a solid majority of the 28 Supreme Court recused. And they had a system, for these purposes analogous to ours. It's a little 29 different, but analogous. And the result was nothing. The constitutional body was disempowered. That's 30 probably not a word was taken out of the equation because a majority, I don't know why. It wasn't all of 31 them, frankly, but a majority of them recused, and so they had no power to act, and so nothing was done, 32 and the discipline matter was never heard. And I think everybody would agree that that is a very poor 33 result, and we wouldn't want that to happen here. But it again indicates that these are real issues. These 34 are not purely academic, and they're not purely tied to whatever facts you're thinking are being reported 35 in the newspaper right now. They exist over time, and in many different scenarios they come up. And, 36 so, we do need to have a procedure. And I'm happy to say the Judicial Branch appears to agree with us 37 on that, that we need to come up with some way to address it. And the problem is, the process is 38 currently defined at the constitutional level, so you probably need a constitutional fix. Maybe we can 39 argue about around the edges, somehow rulemaking authority allows us to address it. I don't know.
40 Those get to be difficult issues, and you want to make sure you've got credibility in whatever you adopt.

1 But you really have to address them. And I've touched on this a little bit, but when we talk about 2 conflicts at that final decision maker level, people immediately think of, just the example that was given,
3 or the example in Wisconsin, an actual justice of the Supreme Court, current or retired, doesn't matter.
4 An actual justice of the Supreme Court is alleged to have engaged in misconduct, and that's the case.
5 That's as simple, straightforward an example as you could come up with. And, so, people can say, Okay, 6 I see the conflict there. That the judge had, that the justice has, and so they shouldn't sit on their own 7 case. And maybe they also know enough about the process and the concepts of judging that they say, 8 Well, it's a collegial court, as the ABA calls it. It's a collegial court. And so maybe the other justices, 9 because they know that judge so well, should step off. Maybe not. That's a kind of a debatable point.
10 That's really only one narrow margin, narrow sliver of the conflict issues that arise. Remember that you 11 heard this morning that Colorado conducts the business of the Judicial Branch a little differently than 12 many other states. We don't assign all the administrative duties, what I call the corporate duties. At 13 times, we don't assign all the assign all those duties to just the Chief Justice. Instead, the Justices, as a 14 whole, started a few years ago acting as that Board of Directors, or that C-suite. So, they're actually 15 involved in the decision making. And, so, you've got a couple of levels here. Let's assume that light 16 fixtures. Let's assume that there's a contract let by the Judiciary to replace all of the light fixtures in all of 17 the courthouses in the State. And let's assume that there's then an allegation that there was a bribery 18 scheme, something clearly inappropriate with the letting of that contract and the contract itself was 19 approved and let by the Supreme Court in their administrative roles. Well, what do we do with that? If 20 we have a discipline case, who makes the final decision? It's not just the direct conduct, it can be the 21 decisions. Or administratively, I'll use an example from another situation. Let's say that at the at what 22 used to be called "busy corner" in Colorado Springs, at Tejon and I forget if it's Colorado or Pikes Peak.
23 Pikes Peak. Tejon and Pikes Peak used to be called "busy corner." So at "busy corner", I'm standing 24 there one day. I'm a final decision maker in judicial discipline, and I'm a judge locally, and there's a car 25 accident. These two cars just come slamming into each other at the traffic light there, okay. As a regular 26 judge, a civil case gets filed, personal injury case. Comes and gets assigned to my courtroom. What do 27 you think? Should I, as a judge, having been a witness to the actual car crash, sit on that case? Of course 28 not. And the rules, you don't have to know these rules. That's common sense, but our rules actually 29 provide, No, you're a witness to critical events. You should not sit as a judge on that case. So, I have to 30 disqualify. Okay, now let's assume same kind of scenario, but it's, well, let's use the judges. Oh, I forgot 31 what state it was, but there's a famous case from a few years ago where some judges got a little 32 inebriated an made an unfortunate choice of locations to go to in the middle of the night during judicial 33 conference back in I don't know if it's Minnesota or Illinois. I think it's Illinois actually. And they got 34 into an altercation with another customer at the place, one of the judges ends up getting shot in the 35 altercation. There's quite a contra temp and lots of injuries. And not surprising that not only criminal 36 charges arise out of it. I don't think any of them got criminally liable. I can't remember now if the judges 37 got criminally liable, but then there becomes a discipline case, understandably. Because it doesn't 38 necessarily make the judiciary look good to have three or four judges brawling on a street corner drunk 39 as skunks. And so that became a judicial discipline case. Well, assume now that there was a fourth judge 40 with them who was just standing around and who wasn't drinking and wasn't participating, but was a

1 witness to everything that happened, and assume that that judge is on the final decision-making body.
2 Should they sit on the judicial discipline case? I would say it's exactly the same as the car crash case.
3 They should not. So, when you factor in that administrative role, you end up seeing all these personnel 4 issues. Again, the most serious cases are usually going to be personnel issues, and so in that 5 administrative capacity, they end up being involved in some of the facts that come forward. And, so, you 6 have those issues. All I'm trying to do is impress upon you is that the conflicts for the final decision 7 maker don't arise only because the final decision maker is the one that was directly involved and who is 8 accused of misconduct. There are many paths to conflict in our world of judging.

9
10 Couple of options, a few options that we suggest you consider. I think we're a little reluctant at this point 11 to actually recommend a specific one, but I laid them out as the Illinois model. The Illinois model is 12 where you actually create a separate body to make a decision. And you can make it a group of judges 13 who aren't involved in that administrative chain. You can make it multi-perspective, like Colorado does 14 on other oversight entities like us, frankly. They can be judge-perspective, lawyer-perspective, and 15 citizen-perspective. So that's a model that seems to address a lot of those issues. Now, if you did that 16 model, keep in mind, just like any other governmental body in our state that makes a decision, that 17 decision is still subject to judicial review. But it's a review that is, we call it Rule 106. It's a limited 18 review, really constitutional kind of process review. I'm being overly simplistic, but not trying to get into 19 the weeds on that. Another model is the Pennsylvania model. Pennsylvania is probably a more popular 20 model than the Illinois model. It's also the model adopted by the ABA code. And this is that shadow 21 court, or that pro tem temporary court. So that you say, well, when the Supreme Court or the final 22 decision maker has a conflict, then we'll create a totally separate court from whole cloth, one time only.
23 And there's obviously some advantages of that, because they have no ties. The problem is it assumes, 24 really only that model, that conflicts will arise because it's the individual judge's conduct, and so it'll be 25 very rare. And the other part of the model is that they have no institutional knowledge, they have no 26 background. They've never done it before. They haven't existed until this one time when they've been 27 created. And then there's a kind of a variation on a New York model, and the New York model would 28 have taken care of the Wisconsin issue, and that is, the discipline commission makes a decision, and you 29 change the procedure slightly. And instead of saying the discipline commission makes a 30 recommendation that goes up to the Supreme Court. You say the discipline commission makes a 31 decision and it can only be overturned if there's a conflict-free court to set it aside. And that would be 32 pretty novel. I'm not sure that it's a great idea, but it's one of the ones that's been kicked around in these 33 discussions, and there are some others as well.

34
35 The last issue that I'll talk about is another big one for you, and frankly, I'll pretty much punt on it. I'll 36 tell you right now, before I get there, and the Commission will pretty much punt on it. And that is the 37 issue of transparency. It's come up a few times. And as Ms. Jenson described this morning, we actually 38 all draw from the same source, a great chart that sounds like she circulated. A great chart from National 39 Center for State Court's Center for Judicial Ethics. I think it's called, I always forget the name. In 40 Colorado, the reality is, there's a continuum of where discipline cases can be public. The real

1 maneuvering room is right there in the middle, in a very narrow band. There's not a lot of outliers. And 2 it's that question, really it boils down to, do you make it public when you start the formal proceedings, 3 when you start the trial? Or do you make it public only after the trial is done? I'm simplifying. In 4 Colorado, we're in a minority, but it's a pretty good minority. We're 15. In 15 states, it's after the trial is 5 done. In 35 states, it's before the trial starts. That's really the difference. There's a really unique system in 6 Arizona where they actually publicize everything, but they redact the judge's name. So, every single 7 complaint is posted, what we call an RFE, is posted online in Arizona. But they redact the judge's name.
8 So that's another creative thing to do that strikes me as really quite odd. I think you ought to stick to the 9 mainstream and decide between, is it before the trial, or is it after the trial, or some sort of hybrid in 10 between. So, those are really the main topics that we were making recommendations on of issues to be 11 addressed and to try and resolve through legislative action. And, so, I'd be happy to answer any 12 questions.

13

14 Sen. Lee

15 Thank you, Judge Prince. Rep Weissman.

16

17 Rep. Weissman

18 Thank you Judge and Chair Krupa and Mr. Gregory, thank you all for being here. Backing up a few 19 moments ago to the difficult question of access to information. Well, there were many difficult questions 20 there, but maybe I'll just ask about one of them. If, in the normal course of say, civil litigation, 21 something isn't happening, you do a motion to compel. You've pointed out the problem that the bodies 22 that will be deciding the equivalent of such a motion, should it be made by the Commission, would be 23 decided by those against whom it might be operating. I think we all see the problem there. You've 24 pointed out some other states that offer models in terms of structure of final decision-making authority. I 25 wonder if you have a recommendation to another state or otherwise on this question of I mean, I hope 26 we don't even get here, but clearly we already have, and I think repeatedly so. In the event that there is 27 this impasse, how do we structure? How do we create a decider? You the Commission are trying to get 28 information of course out of constitutional duty. You can't get it. In my mind and if there's a better 29 metaphor, please lay it out for us. But my mind is going to something like a motion to compel. But then 30 I get to what body with authority to issue a ruling that might reach the Supreme Court, and the SCAO, 31 for example. What does that body even look like? How do we constitute that authority?

32

33 Sen. Lee

34 Judge Prince.

35

36 David Prince

37 So, there are some options. I will tell you that there have been enough issues and enough different lines 38 we could go down that I haven't done as much research on that as I would like to do and will do further.
39 But we've also been having some discussions with the Judicial Branch of trying to work out some ideas 40 of our own that we could enter by contract, for example, on an individualized basis. And, so, one of the 1 things we talk about is, well, let's try having an arbitrator. That's one of the ways to get decisions out of 2 the Court, get subject matter expertise. There's a problem with doing that right now, as far as we 3 understand, we actually couldn't do that right now, because there's a prohibition on at least certain 4 government entities from entering arbitration agreements. So, you would probably need statutory 5 authority to go down that road. The look on your face tells me that you realize there are pros and cons, 6 like there will be for any solution. There are pros and cons to using an arbitrator. One of the issues, of 7 course, is that, for all practical purposes, when you go to an arbitrator, the decision stops there. And 8 there really isn't an appellate right. Yeah, there's some challenge in court, but not much. You're really 9 looking at a decision right there. You could try to do a different version of that by designating an 10 individual court. But you know, this is also one of the advantages of, if you get that pool of special 11 masters, you can help define what will be their role. If you're rewriting some pieces of this. And, so, I 12 have to admit my thought, and it struck me as so reasonable, I haven't really looked at more options, but 13 I will. Is that if you restructure those Special Masters a little bit and have them be more insulated, so that 14 you don't have as you have right now, the opportunity for a conflicted party to hand pick who the 15 masters will be, and you come up with a selection process, a few safeguards. Why wouldn't you use the 16 Special Masters just like you would for regular trial court, and that would be where you filed your 17 motion to compel, even if it was before formal proceedings, which is kind of the challenge we have, is 18 before formal proceedings. So, you don't have masters really to go to, and there's a process to get there, 19 but it's a little vague, and then you're back to, well, who's going to actually choose them, and are they 20 going to be conflicted, those kinds of issues. So, that's my thinking. I know that there are a couple of 21 other models, but really, most of the models around the states don't really deal with this type of conflict 22 issue very well, because it's just assumed that when it's going to be the final decision maker that's in 23 conflict, that's going to be incredibly rare, usually would only be one member, and so it's fine still 24 having the final decision maker do everything. We, like Wisconsin, are sort of looking at that potential 25 of where you lose the functionality, in some fashion. Either practical or technical, of that final decision 26 maker. And, so, you need to come up with a with an alternate model for the discovery issues.

27

28 Sen. Lee

29 Rep. Weissman.

30

31 Rep. Weissman

32 Thank you. In the vein of flow of information, which is necessary to all these matters, I guess, one 33 comment, one question. It's come up, I think, with the Commission and other entities, including some 34 we're going to hear from this afternoon. Concerns on the part of those from whom information is 35 flowing about attorney client privilege and duty of attorney client confidentiality. It is in the bill, page 36 14 of the enrolled for a very good reason that, all other things equal, disclosure of information to the 37 Commission does not work to waive those. I can't cite to a particular conversation from memory, but it's 38 been suggested, is it the province of the Legislature to sort of say what the zone of protection could 39 otherwise be construed to be a waiver of that privilege or confidentiality? And I guess we're getting into 40 questions about the line between statutory prerogative and common law. I think for now, I just want to 1 say it emphatically is within the legislative prerogative to do what we have done in (e) on page 14 of the 2 enrolled for a public policy reason. Put all of the other debates about attorney client privilege and 3 confidentiality aside, and there are a lot of lawyers in this room. We don't take those things lightly. We 4 shouldn't. But it, frankly has enraged me, the idea that concern about waiver of those in other contexts 5 would operate to impede things that have been going on for years. So, I think that part of the bill is 6 important, and if we need to make further such specifications in the public interest by defining limited 7 circumstances where disclosure that we, the policy making body, want to happen for some public end.

8 That alone doesn't work waiver. Now, if the entity in whom the privilege adheres screws something else 9 up, okay, that's different. But I guess that's the end of the comment for the record. The next question 10 was, there is a new, this is sort of the other half of the coin of a question that I put to judicial, hours ago.
11 106 (a)(2) of the bill provides that if the Commission makes the request for information about an 12 investigation, you are to receive it within 35 days. Now it's right around 35 days since the bill was 13 signed, and if you could not have made such a request that would operate under that section until after 14 signature, and then the clock would start running. I guess my question is, has there been a new such 15 request that would fall under that obligation on the Branch / right in hearing in you as the Commission, 16 and how's that going so far?

17

18 Sen. Lee
19 Judge Prince.

20

21 David Prince

22 Thank you, Representative Weissman, for the question and topic. So, I'll go reverse. I want to comment 23 on your comment and also answer your question. Obviously, this is one of those areas where constantly, 24 we have to be very careful about not getting into the facts of allegations, et cetera. But you're asking a 25 process question. How is our process working? Consistent with our other discussions? We're allowed to 26 talk about process under our Rules and how it's working. I will tell you we have not made specifically a 27 request, and think of it as for a practical reason. The bill just got enacted, and the policies I don't know 28 for sure, but I'm fairly confident the bill requires policies to be adopted and prepared by each of the 29 Districts within Colorado for compliance and for gathering, and I don't know, but I'm pretty sure, that 30 process probably isn't very far down the road of creating those policies. And we are having productive 31 discussions. And so, frankly, as a sign of good faith, we've not made that request and haven't felt the 32 need to. I suppose that's pretty important, yet because we are having some productive discussions, and 33 we assume that the Judicial Branch is probably going to involve us in trying to prepare those policies, 34 and that hasn't happened yet. So, it's going to take some time, and I'm confident, though, that if it was a 35 newly filed case going forward, we would probably have very good relationship in trying to get that kind 36 of information. Circling back to your comment on waiver. Keep in mind that the provision that you've 37 just identified in the statute, there's a very good argument that it's superfluous. It's not actually needed, 38 because the Constitution itself provides exactly the same thing. The Constitution itself provides that 39 giving information to the discipline commission does not waive privilege period full stop. Our rules 40 provide that providing information to the discipline commission does not waive privilege full stop. It's

1 really that simple. The statute, so now we've got it by constitution, by rule, and by statute. So, hopefully, 2 that will put that issue to bed. There is an exception that hasn't existed before for claim of federal 3 privilege, privilege under federal law. And in the negotiations that occurred, the Commission did agree 4 to that, even though you could argue that it's chipping away at what's the constitutional side of it, but it 5 was an acceptable compromise. And federal law, one of the issues that got brought up before, federal 6 law actually is quite deferential to state law when it comes to issues of privilege and the relatively new 7 rule of evidence that deals with exactly this issue that's been cited a few times. It's 500 something. I 8 always forget the other two digits because I'm getting old. But it says specifically in the in the comments 9 that were approved by the U.S. Supreme Court that when you're looking at claims of privilege, in this 10 case, to be claim of waiver, you were to apply whatever law state or federal is the most expansive in 11 recognition of the privilege. So, there really is very, very little risk before the statute that there was 12 going to be a waiver by production to us. It has been presented as one of the arguments quite 13 extensively, but I hope that has finally been put to bed. The statute really wasn't necessary, but the 14 statutory protections are there in case it helps. Related to that, I mean, there was some discussion of the 15 Denver DA's Office and their challenges with an access agreement. And I know that it's been told to 16 many lawmakers that there's an access agreement issue with the Commission on certain matters to be 17 evaluated. The added context I add to you there, that's still going on, that's still being discussed. That's 18 why Mr. Vasconcellos had to correct himself. Again. I'm not being critical of him in any way. I knew 19 immediately that he had just misspoken, but he had to correct himself. Because in February, the 20 Judiciary said we provided the executive summary of the last audit report, and they said we're working 21 to provide that to all of the investigators. A commitment made very early in February. Well, we sit here 22 today and we don't have it. The Denver DA got a redacted version. We didn't even get a redacted 23 version. And it's this access agreement issue. But remember those other agencies, because what they like 24 to say is, well, we've negotiated with all these other agencies other than the Denver DA and they've all 25 agreed to it, and the Commission hasn't. Well, I don't know what agreement those folks signed, but the 26 agreement that was presented to us would have prevented us from actually doing our job. We've made 27 great progress on that. I'm confident that, frankly, in a matter of days, probably, if not just a few weeks, 28 we will actually finally have that access agreement. But all those other agencies didn't already have an 29 access agreement. We've already had an access agreement since 2010 that says that we get access to 30 their files and that they provide information. And, then, you're also back to that Sesame Street exercise 31 of one of these things does not look like the others. In the time I've been on the Commission, we've done 32 factual investigation on more than 200 cases, literally a couple hundred cases. There's only one set of 33 matters where an access agreement has ever been requested or demanded as a prerequisite to providing 34 that information. So, our system has worked pretty good. The problem is that we've learned, in 2021 and 35 2022, it's vulnerable to being made not to work. And those are some of the examples we've been trying 36 to give you today. And that's the important part of that enforcement mechanism by whatever means, 37 whatever it ends up looking like.

38

39 Rep. Carver

40 Rep Weissman, done? Senator Gardner.

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Thank you, Madam Chair, I wanted to go back to something that you addressed earlier. Pardon me, and 3 that was the change in 2021-2022 about what the Court knows about cases, and maybe I'm not saying 4 that right, but as well as I think something Chair Krupa might have said about the Court being briefed on 5 cases. I mean, is this change across the board for all cases involving a county judge or a district court 6 judge, or is it just sort of the unique set of facts that bring us here today, and does the Court get a general 7 briefing, or do they know that complaints been filed against Judge Smith or Jones out in the 17th or 8 wherever? What is the state of that right now? Madam Chair.

9

10 Rep. Carver

11 I beg your pardon, Senator. Judge Prince.

12

13 David Prince

14 Well, I was trying. Thank you, Madam Chair, I was trying to look very quickly to see if I could find the 15 actual quote. So, short version, thank you for the question. Short version is, I don't entirely know the 16 answer, because it's not our policy. In February of 2021, the Court. Hang on. Actually, if you give me 17 just a second, I'll actually find the language.

18

19 David Prince

20 I think it's the February 8 statement. Which one, the State of the Judiciary? Hang on, I think you and I 21 are thinking about two different ones, though. Will get you to specific quote, my memory was that it was 22 in February. My colleague tells me it was a little bit later. But the Supreme Court, I think, primarily 23 speaking through the Chief Justice. That's what we're trying to remember. I remember it being a joint 24 statement. He remembers it being the State of the Judiciary. Our memories are flawed. But the 25 announcement, I recall, it wasn't actually the Chief Justice speaking. It was a statement by the Court 26 itself, and so it spoke about him in third party. That's why I'm pretty sure he wasn't the one saying it.
27 And it said that among the commitments were one, we're going to create an independent group of 28 lawmakers and executive branch people to select investigators to look into this, and a couple of other 29 things they were going to do. And one of the things they were instituting was that Chief Justice 30 Boatright will now be briefed on a weekly basis on all and appear to be new claims of judicial 31 misconduct. And so that's what we know. Beyond that, we don't know what's in the briefing. We don't 32 brief them. We don't brief them on the cases. They are briefed on those cases. So, I'm handed something.
33 So, it was in the State of the Judiciary, but I'm remembering a different statement. So, there actually is a 34 different statement, but it's in that time frame. You know, whether it's February or March, I don't think it 35 matters. And what he was explaining was that he is monitoring the cases to make sure they're properly 36 handled. So that indicates a fair amount of exposure to information, and that it would be every week, 37 that's all I know. Somebody.

Rep. Carver

Senator Gardner.

Sen. Gardner

Thank you, Madam Chair. So, Judge Prince, you don't know if the Chief Justice is getting briefed or not briefed, and if he does get this information, he's not getting it from the Commission. Is that all accurate? I'll say that again if.

Rep. Carver

Judge Prince.

David Prince

I was still trying to, I see a reference to it. I'm still trying to find, there it is. Now I found it. Thank you. The statement I was looking for is actually February 16, 2021, and it speaks in the third party and says Chief Justice Boatright has directed that he be notified and receive weekly updates on all future misconduct complaints across the Department to ensure each incident is fully investigated and acted on as appropriate without delay. And that was to all of the personnel within the Judicial Department. And it actually was by Chief Justice Boatright directly. And so it gives the impression that it's talking about the substance of the case. This returns to then our experience with serious cases. So, when we get serious cases, we end up knowing something about how the case has been handled through the Judiciary before it comes to us, not always, and so we get to see some of that down the road. So, in the context of that experience, it sounds to me like there's a briefing that would let them know what are the allegations? What are we doing about it? How are we make sure it's being addressed and that the briefing in the context of that discussion was not just getting it to the judicial discipline commission, it was ensuring a safe workplace. It was making sure HR was handling it properly. It was all of the aspects of it. So, it certainly gave us the strong impression that it's talking about the merits of the case, the facts of the case.

Rep. Carver

Senator Gardner.

Sen. Gardner

Thank you, Madam Chair, but that information wouldn't be made available by the Commission at all. Is that right? And unless they'd reached the stage of the proceedings where the information was releasable?

Rep. Carver

Judge Prince.

1 David Prince

2 Correct, we do not participate in the briefing in any way. We do not provide the information in any way.
3 If the case has progressed, or they have information through the Judiciary about well, we know 4 discipline commission is already looking at it. We know they've got investigators, because their 5 personnel can tell them those kinds of things. We know that they've been doing these interviews. I mean, 6 lots of information that they can have from many have from many sources about what the discipline 7 commission is doing, but the discipline commission does not provide them with any of that information.

8

9 Sen. Gardner

10 Thank you.

11

12 Rep. Carver

13 Other questions by committee members.

14

15 Rep. Carver

16 Thank you, panel, Mr. Chair, any questions, or are we ready for our next presentation?

17

18 Sen. Lee

19 Let's go to the next one.

20

21 Rep. Carver

22 Thank you very much for your presentation and the extensive Q and A. Very helpful, thank you.

Appendix 27(s)(i)(5)

Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel Presentation;

1 Rep. Carver

2 Please proceed with your testimony.

3

4 Margaret Funk

5 Thank you for the invitation to come and speak today. I understand that you're interested in hearing a 6 little bit about what OARC does in regard to our role in the past as Special Counsel for the Colorado 7 Judicial Commission, as Judge Tow mentioned, for probably 20 to 30 years, the Commission has 8 reached out to our Office and asked us to assist as Special Counsel on a variety of cases. We've acted as 9 Special Counsel in probably most of the cases, maybe all but two or three in the last decade, I can tell 10 you, just in the last five years, our Office has handled over 10 investigations / formal proceeding matters 11 that have been generated by complaints to the Commission.

12

13 Rep. Carver

14 Questions from the committee. Rep Weissman.

15

16 Rep. Weissman

17 Thank you, because this is the first meeting. I'm just sort of thinking about record laying and 18 clarification. As you noted, your jurisdiction is all attorneys, 25,000+ active status at any given point.
19 Some of those attorneys are judges. So, there is a zone of, it would seem concurrent jurisdiction, 20 possibly depending on who makes a complaint to what entity. You could be investigating somebody at 21 the same time as the Commission is investigating that same somebody. Where that somebody is an 22 attorney and a judge, I wonder if you could just unpack for all of us and those listening a little bit more 23 about how that goes. Let's assume the complaint has gone to both of you. You are responding, let's just 24 put the sua sponte initiation aside. A complaint has come to you, you have actual knowledge it's also 25 going to the commission. What happens next? Please.

26

27 Margaret Funk

28 Sure. And I think there's some presumptions there that are not necessarily accurate.

29

30 Rep. Weissman

31 Okay.

32

33 Margaret Funk

34 So, our role in Special Counsel arises when the Commission has received a complaint, the Commission 35 has vetted the complaint, and . . .

36

37 Rep. Weissman

38 I'm sorry, just for clarification, I am appreciating that you have had this historical Special Counsel role.
39 My intent with the question is not acting in the role of Special Counsel for the Commission, but rather 40 OARC possibly undertaking an investigation of judge qua lawyer, not judge qua judge, where you're

1 stepping into this other role. I appreciate you sort of have these two modes here. It's the more standard
2 mode of OARC investigating lawyer qua lawyer while the Commission is investigating lawyer qua 3 judge. I wanted to explore that.

4

5 Margaret Funk

6 Sure. Excuse me. May I?

7

8 Rep. Carver

9 Move forward, Ms. Funk. And, then, when Rep. Weissman is done, I have a follow up question, that 10 same thing, please. Sure.

11

12 Margaret Funk

13 Sure, so there can be investigations into a judge who is also a lawyer. FYI, not all judges are lawyers, 14 but for those that are lawyers, there can be parallel investigations going on if the misconduct invokes an 15 allegation that not only the Judicial Code has been violated, but also the Rules of Professional Conduct 16 that govern attorney discipline. So, it's not apples to apples. It's apples to fruit. And I say that because 17 they're both fruit. But as a lawyer, I have no duty, and there is no rule of professional conduct that 18 mandates that I'm impartial. On the contrary, I have a duty to be a zealous advocate for my client. Judges 19 need to be impartial. Judges, there are different duties that apply to judges than lawyers. Increased 20 duties, I would say, those duties of impartiality, fairness, not engaging in conduct that would even lead 21 to the appearance of impropriety. So many allegations about judges and misconduct related to those 22 allegations are made under rules that don't apply to attorneys. With the few exceptions of overlap that 23 I'm going to tell you right now. Private misconduct. If I'm a lawyer and a judge and I get a DUI, I'm 24 responsible to both sets of regulators to report my DUI and to deal with that issue with each agency. So 25 as a lawyer, I'm responsible for reporting that I've been convicted of a DUI. As a judge, I'm also 26 responsible. What the outcome will be, is different, most likely, for many reasons. As lawyer regulators, 27 we have certain interests in how we can help protect the public and promote justice here in our State by 28 regulating lawyer conduct. The judicial commission has additional interests, including protecting the 29 judiciary, including making sure there's faith in the judiciary. So, there are different goals. There are 30 some overlapping rules. Once in a while, there will be concurrent, parallel investigations, but that's 31 actually not the norm.

32

33 Rep. Carver

34 Rep. Weissman.

35

36 Rep. Weissman

37 In the interest of time, and knowing that you have a follow up, Madam Chair, I'll leave it there for now.

38

39

40

1 Rep. Carver

2 Rep. Bacon, did I see your hand up? Because you can certainly go. All right. My follow up question is 3 you referenced that you recalled 10 cases where your Office and the Commission was involved in 4 investigation, that type of thing. Could you summarize the types of allegations? If that is something you
5 can share with us, what types of cases in those 10 cases were you dealing with? Where both your Office 6 and the Commission were involved in the investigation and determining a way forward. Ms Funk.

7
8 Margaret Funk

9 So, when I referenced 10 cases, those are 10 cases where someone from our Office, either myself or a 10 deputy that I supervise, or an assistant regulation counsel, a trial attorney that I supervise was actually 11 acting as Special Counsel for the Commission. So, I just want to make sure my reference to 10 plus 12 cases doesn't mean that OARC was doing a lawyer investigation and the CJD was doing its investigation 13 contemporaneously, just to make sure the record is clear. Those cases, the six that were up on the screen 14 earlier for public discipline, I believe all of them were ours, but one. And the ones that didn't result in 15 public discipline and resulted in private admonition, private censure or private reprimand, generally 16 involved misconduct in the workplace, allegations, bias, harassment and then retaliation for complaints.
17 Also, some in-temperament allegations, and I believe one of the privates might have been related to a 18 DUI. Don't quote me on that.

19

20 Rep. Carver

21 And the Special Master from your office staff is that based upon an appointment that was initiated 22 through your process, or this was where the Commission reached out to you because of the nature of the 23 allegations and the status of the individuals, and requested that a Special Master come from your Office.

24

25 Margaret Funk

26 Our office has never served as a Special Master. I believe you're asking about Special Counsel.

27

28 Rep. Carver

29 Special counsel, excuse me.

30

31 Margaret Funk

32 So, we are only appointed as Special Counsel if the Commission reaches out to us, asks us if we are 33 available to work as Special Counsel on their behalf. We vet their request and let them know yes or no.
34 Very rarely have we ever said no. We do everything we can to try to accommodate the Commission.

35

36 Rep. Carver

37 Thank you. Further questions from the committee. Mr. Chair.

38

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair, could you tell me, were you involved as Special Counsel in the Mindy 3 Masias case? Did you work with the Commission on that case?

4

5 Margaret Funk

6 We are not. We have never been appointed Special Counsel for any matter related to Mindy Masias that 7 was in the press, and that's, I think, the best answer I can provide.

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Okay, that's what I was trying to find out, because I had read that, and I assume everything I read in the 11 press has to be accurate. Were you asked to serve as Special Counsel by the Commission in that case?

12

13 Margaret Funk

14 I don't think it's appropriate that I comment on that.

15

16 Sen. Lee

17 Could you explain why you don't think it's appropriate for you to comment?

18

19 Margaret Funk

20 Well, under the definition of Special Counsel as provided in the rules of procedure for judicial 21 discipline, Special Counsel is listed as counsel for the Commission. So, a conversation between our 22 Office and the Commission arguably may invoke a privilege at that stage. If, hypothetically, they had 23 reached out and asked for us to pursue that matter on their behalf, and so not coming to a conclusion or 24 making that assertion, I'll just tell you I don't think it's appropriate that I comment on that.

25

26 Rep. Carver

27 Mr. Chair.

28

29 Sen. Lee

30 No further questions.

31

32 Rep. Carver

33 Other questions from the committee. Ms Funk, thank you. Oh, Rep Bacon.

34

35 Rep. Bacon

36 All right, I'm probably going to ask this question as I process a little bit. I guess, since you're here, I'd 37 like to maybe ask your thoughts within the scope of what your organization does, given what we're 38 talking about here. Thank you for explaining the role of Special Counsel in these cases. But some of our 39 conversations have really been lending itself to look into procedure as well as to looking into anything 40 that we could do to build, I don't know whether it's procedural rules or whatnot, to get to a place where

1 we're preventing some of the things that obviously have brought us here today. And, so, part of me is 2 just wondering, you know, if you do have any initial insights or thoughts on that, given your role, and 3 just what you have seen, particularly around these six cases or all but that one was yours. Obviously, 4 don't need you to go into spaces where you're violating privilege. But given some of the procedural 5 things that we at least have raised today, or any insights that you may have, given your work. I am just 6 wondering if you have any top lines to be able to share with us, you know, given what we're trying to 7 look into, and I'm sorry, I just feel like I haven't gotten or and I you could have said it, and I'm sorry if I, 8 if I didn't process that, but I'm wondering if you could share just a little bit more.

9

10 Rep. Carver

11 Ms. Funk.

12

13 Margaret Funk

14 So, recommendations about changes to the process, from my experience with the process?

15

16 Rep. Bacon

17 Sure, or if there are any I want to use regular words, and I'm trying to sound smart. So, I don't know if 18 the words are necessarily criticisms or critiques, but I think it's clear what we're trying to solve for. And 19 just in your experiences, I'm wondering if there are there any barriers or any insights, or anything that 20 you're finding in your experiences that you know you can share with us so that we can figure out how to 21 make things better. If that's helpful.

22

23 Rep. Bacon

24 Ms. Funk.

25

26 Margaret Funk

27 I appreciate the question. I can tell you that our Office, because of the many areas of regulation that we 28 do, from admissions, to CLE, to discipline. Every five to seven years, we take a look at our procedural 29 rules. We look at what other jurisdictions are doing in the country that are similar in culture and similar 30 in size and geographic diversity and regular diversity, as we are. And we analyze whether or not we 31 believe we should make changes to our procedural rules. And we would go through the same process, 32 we do go through the same process that the Commission would do. You know, the Commission's Rules 33 were significantly amended in 2012 after the Commission proposed the Rules to the Court for adoption, 34 we would do the same. My biggest suggestion for my long answer is when you tweak only one part of a 35 set of rules, there are unintended consequences. And what I've learned from many years of rule 36 rewriting, is taking a holistic approach to the whole set and really crafting what you think will be the 37 best for the future after talking to all sorts of different stakeholders, people who've been victimized by 38 judges, people who work for judges, people who supervise judges, citizens who show up in front of 39 judges, other regulators, attorneys who represent judges in proceedings with the with the CJD, they have 40 a very interesting perspective, too. What we would do was it would be to invite a broad group of 1 stakeholders and say, what works, what doesn't work, what is your suggestion to do it better? I wish I

2 could tell you there are two things that if you did, the Rules would be fixed, and I can't. It really is a 3 dynamic process, and I think it involves the whole set, if done right,

4

5 Rep. Carver

6 Rep Bacon, okay? Questions from other committee members. Ms. Funk, thank you for being with us 7 today. We appreciate your testimony.

8

9 Margaret Funk

10 Thank you and good luck.

11

12 Rep. Carver

13 Thanks.

Appendix 27(s)(i)(6)

Colorado Office of the State Auditor Presentation;

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline—
June 14, 2022: Testimony of the Office of the State Auditor

1 Michelle Colin

2 And, so, I just wanted to start out and give you a little context around the impetus for the audit. I 3 know, as you've talked about earlier today, throughout that you're all aware of that several years 4 ago, our Office did receive allegations through the State's fraud hotline, which we oversee and 5 administer related to the State Court Administrator's Office. There are some very strict 6 confidentiality requirements around any fraud allegations that we receive, as well as any fraud 7 investigations that we conduct. And those requirements do prohibit us from discussing the 8 allegations or our investigation and the report and that any reports we issue publicly and 9 releasing any information from those. However, given the issues that were brought up in the 10 fraud allegations, the former State Auditor decided at that time that we would conduct a 11 performance audit at the State Court Administrator's Office with the idea being that our 12 performance audit results, our report is made public. And so that information would be available 13 to you as legislators as well is just the general public. So just, I know many of you are aware of 14 it. But our performance audits, they take a broader look at how an agency or a program operates 15 to identify any systemic issues. We don't investigate specific people or specific instances as part 16 of a performance audit, we will look at samples, we'll look at cases, those types of things in the 17 audit. But the idea behind that, and the purpose of it is to help us make an overall assessment of 18 how a system or a process is working, and whether or not we see any areas of concern or 19 problems that should be addressed. And we can make a recommendation about that. So that is 20 how we approach that performance audit. At this time, I would like to turn it over to Mr.
21 Johnson. He's one of the audit managers in our office. And he was just going to give you a broad 22 overview of the findings and recommendations that we made in that audit if that's okay with you, 23 Madam Chair.

24

25 Rep. Carver

26 Yes, please proceed. Thank you.

27

28 Derrick Johnson

29 Thank you, Madam Chair. As Michelle stated, I'm Derrick Johnson, performance audit manager 30 and I was the team lead on the audit. Before I get started, I will let you know that we did bring 31 copies of the highlight sheet for the report, as well as a few copies of the full report itself. And if 32 you would like electronic copy of that that's available on the State Auditor's website at any time.
33 So, we conducted this performance audit of the state court administrator's office during 2021 or 34 2020, apologies, and released the report in December of that year. And the report contained six 35 findings and recommendations and I'll summarize those briefly.

36

1 The first finding concerned voluntary separation incentives which the SCA offered to staff in 2 fiscal year 2019. Because they had a planned reorganization in some positions were no longer 3 necessary. The SCA executed 10 separation agreements with employees who had expressed an 4 interest and rather than offering them lump sum payments for separation, the SCO awarded them 5 paid administrative leave based on the number of years of service the employee had been with 6 the SCAO. By offering administrative leave instead of a lump sum payment, the SCAO 7 continued contributing to the employee's retirement benefits and health insurance during the 8 admin leave period. Through the audit, we found that the SCAO couldn't demonstrate that the 9 separation agreement incentives had received the required approvals. It also wasn't clear how the 10 positions approved for the incentives were necessary for the reorganization. We found that the 11 SCAO did not know the actual payout amounts for the agreements before they were put in place.
12 Because the agreements didn't specify those amounts. In the end of these 10 employees received 13 over $500,000 in salaries and benefits. This was more than would have been received if the 14 judicial branch had used an approach similar to what's used in the executive branch. At the time 15 of the audit, the SCAO did not have any formal rules or policies around VSIs. So, we 16 recommended that the SCAO establish them and that they address issues such as determining 17 who can get incentives, how they would be approved, and the method for determining incentives 18 most more closely aligned with the Executive Branch.

19
20 Then the second finding concerned paid administrative leave. At the time of the audit, the SCAO 21 routinely approved paid administrative leave in accordance with its personnel rules. And this 22 leave could be granted for reasons determined to be for the good of the state. During fiscal years 23 2017 through 2020, so over four years, SCAO staff recorded over 25,000 hours of administrative 24 leave. Some of the issues we found in this area were that it wasn't always clear that the leave was 25 granted for the benefit of the state because there was no reason provided or that the reason was 26 given indicated that it should have been some other form of leave the used instead of admin 27 leave. Also, some employees received more administrative leave than what we calculated to be 28 the norm across the organization. And in fact, two instances of two employees who got over 150 29 hours above the norm in a given year, we saw instances where employees were allowed to use 30 admin leave in conjunction with work time in order to accrue compensatory time off and then 31 large amounts of time used for investigations of employees and settlement agreements. The 32 SCAO's use of administrative leave during this period we looked at cost the state more than 33 $476,000. At the time of the audit, the SCAO and judicial personnel rules provided limited 34 guidance on the appropriate use of admin leave and did not require staff to document the reason 35 for using the leave and didn't have limits on how much could be used. So, we recommended that 36 the SCAO define the appropriate use of administrative leave, require employees record the 37 reason for using the leave, and then establish limits on how much leave could be used for certain 38 purposes.

39

1 Third finding in this audit report concerned the SCAO to not retaining some key Human 2 Resources records, including family medical leave records that were missing at least some of the 3 required forms, and the SCAO could not demonstrate that employees were eligible for the 4 amount of FMLA that was granted. Additionally, we found that some disciplinary cases did not 5 have documentation showing that investigation actually took place. The Human Resources staff 6 conducting those investigations were no longer employed with the SCAO, and the information 7 was not stored on a shared drive. So, there was no record of what had happened. This area, we 8 recommended that the SCAO to establish policies and procedures that require all human 9 resources documents to be stored in a secure shared file, and also develop a contingency plan for 10 when staff leave.

11 12 The fourth finding in the audit concerned sole source procurements of which there were 10 in our 13 testing period. And sole source contracting is a method that is used when an agency determines 14 that only one vendor is capable of meeting their needs, and therefore a normal competitive 15 solicitation isn't worthwhile. And we found issues with six of the contracts that were entered into 16 in this manner, some of which had more than one issue. The issues included one contract, where 17 a former employee was awarded a sole source contract within days of their resignation. Although 18 the contract was subsequently cancelled at the direction of the Supreme Court, the proximity of 19 dates between when the employee resigned and when the sole source justification and contract 20 were signed gave the appearance of impropriety. Additionally, the SCAO did not have a copy of 21 one of the executed contracts, and another contract had division justification for using this 22 method. We also identified contracts that did not have proof that the SCAO negotiated the price 23 and terms as required by judicial purchasing rules. The SCAO spent over $1 million on the six 24 sole source contracts for which we found issues. At the time of the audit, judicial fiscal rules did 25 not explicitly prohibit former employees from contracting with the Department for a specified 26 period after leaving employment. Additionally, the judicial fiscal rules and the SCAO did not 27 have sufficient written policies around sole source contracts. So, we recommended that the 28 SCAO establish those rules, policies and procedures to tighten those controls. And this would 29 include prohibiting former employees from contracting with the SCAO for a specified period 30 after separation, and then identifying specific information that would be required in justification 31 and negotiations.

32
33 Our second to last finding in this report was about procurement cards which are used to make 34 purchases that don't require a formal procurement process. Between July 2016 and April 2020, 35 SCAO staff made about 10,000 P-card purchases totaling $3.5 million. We looked at a sample of 36 these purchases and found problems, including purchases for which the person who made the 37 purchase also later approved it, and purchases where there was no clear indication that it had 38 been approved at all. Again, at the time of the audit, the SCAO did not have written policies for 39 staff around the approval of P-card purchases. So, we recommended that they improve controls

1 by establishing written policies to indicate who can serve as budget authorities to approve 2 purchases and how purchases should be documented, approvals should be documented.

3
4 And the sixth and final finding in this audit was largely the result of findings presented 5 previously. This finding was based in part on the SCAO's own code of conduct. But we also 6 considered principles established in the government standards for internal controls, which 7 contains principles such as a commitment to integrity, establishment of clear responsibility and 8 authority, and design and implementation of control activities. Over all the issues that we found 9 during the audit raised questions about the oversight for its human resources and financial 10 services functions, and its culture of accountability. Much of what is contained in the finding 11 considers elements of the previous five findings and the culture that led to them.

12
13 Overall, these issues we found were due in part to a lack of an effective system of controls within 14 the organization, including lack of written policies, rules and procedures and key areas. In 15 addition, at the time of the audit, the SCAO had rarely used its internal audit function to monitor 16 its own activities, but rather used internal audit to look at the districts. Therefore, we 17 recommended that the SCAO implement an effective system of internal controls that fosters a 18 culture of integrity, ethical values and accountability by updating rules to ensure that they 19 provide clear direction to staff and implementing monitoring activities to ensure the controls are 20 working properly. This would include using its internal audit function to monitor those controls.
21 The SCAO agreed to implement all of the recommendations. And in November of 2021, we 22 asked the SCAO for a status report of the recommendations. It reported that all of them were 23 either implemented or partially implemented through updating or creating new rules, policies and 24 procedures. The SCAO reported that the recommendations that had not been fully implemented 25 should be implemented sometime this year. And if I heard Mr. Vasconcellos accurately earlier, I 26 think he reported that they all had been implemented. And Madam Chair, that concludes my 27 presentation.

28
29 Rep. Carver

30 Thank you for your testimony. And it would certainly be helpful to the committee, if the hard 31 copies that you've brought of the highlights and report we'll certainly gather those. Questions 32 from the committee?

33
34 Rep. Carver

35 Rep. Weissman.

36
37 Rep. Weissman

38 Thank you, Madam Chair. And thank you both for being here. Understanding that the systemic 39 audit is fully public, you're allowed to talk about that openly. And thank you for doing so. I did 40 want to ask questions that I hope are more about process than specifics of the fraud hotline

1 investigation. So, I believe that landed in the OSA's lap and kicked off the statutory process 2 April of 2019. April 15th or so. Is that correct?

3

4 Rep. Carver

5 Please dialog.

6

7 Michelle Colin

8 Thank you, Madam Chair. Okay, thank you. Um, I'm looking for the date. Yes, you're correct.
9 April 2019.

10

11 Rep. Weissman

12 Madam Chair.

13

14 Rep. Weissman

15 Okay. And then per the fraud hotline, statutes, your office reaches out to the entity complained of 16 in this case, the judicial branch. And there is a threshold question whether that entity will 17 undertake the investigation internally or defer to OSA? I think that was about May 19. Is that 18 approximately correct? Sorry, May 19, 2019.

19

20 Michelle Colin

21 Yes, it was in May of 2019. Just maybe just a little point of clarification. So whenever we 22 receive any fraud allegations, we have staff on our fraud hotline who review the allegations to 23 determine whether it's within our jurisdiction, and if we find that it is then we will make a 24 referral to the agency that's impacted by that. And then it's up to the agency to review the 25 allegations and decide how they would like to proceed. One option is for the agency to request 26 that we conduct an investigation on their behalf. And that is what happened in this situation. The 27 Chief Justice at that time had asked our office to conduct the investigation on the judicial 28 department's behalf.

29

30 Rep. Weissman

31 Okay, thank you. May 29 2019, I think was the date of that communication. I think stepping 32 back and letting OSA proceed is exactly the right call that should have been made in that case.
33 So, fair to say that OSA's fraud hotline investigation was underway, had commenced, by May 29 34 2019, If not previously. So, at that point, the other entity in this case the judicial department had 35 deferred to OSA and you're then off and running. Is that a fair colloquial way of putting it?

36

37 Michelle Colin

38 The May date is when we received a letter asking us to conduct the investigation. I think let me 39 refer to my document to see on. We had an entrance conference would judicial in July of 2019 40 to, I guess, kind of, you know, start the process at that point. Yes.

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Okay. My recollection of the fraud hotline statute is there aren't hard time parameters, you don't 3 have a shot clock, you have a mission to do, and you may need time to do it. Not so many 4 months after July 19, we had this unfortunate little virus thing happen, that we're still kind of all 5 dealing with in some ways. I'm sure that didn't help. But I guess I'll sort of get to the end point of 6 this process. And then I might want to back up and ask about access to information. You 7 completed the report, and per statute transmitted it to the entity being investigated, in this case, 8 the Judicial Department when?

9

10 Michelle Colin

11 February 4 of this year, 2022.

12

13 Rep. Weissman

14 Okay. So that is, in fact, the date on an executive summary document that I have that was all that 15 was broadly public. So that was that date was coextensive with the completion of the final report, 16 which has been less fully available 2/4/ 22.

17

18 Michelle Colin

19 Correct.

20

21 Rep. Weissman

22 Okay, thank you. I just wonder if you could, again, I know you can only talk about the process 23 and not get into specifics. But and, you know, COVID is nobody's fault. How did your office?
24 How did you find doing that mission that you are statutorily directed? To do? How easy or hard 25 was it to proceed? Do you feel that you readily had access to the information that you needed to 26 assess the claims made in the initial fraud hotline complaint, and subsequently put fully into your 27 bailiwick? By the May 29, 2019 letter from the then CJ?

28

29 Michelle Colin

30 It I mean, I will start by just saying it was a very, there were extensive allegations that were 31 made, there were many issues to consider and to look at. We received extensive documentation 32 information from judicial and other sources, we conducted many interviews. I mean, we had, I 33 think we got over 16,000, documents, lots of emails, then it was going through every one of 34 those and taking a look at it. So, there was a lot of information to go through and consider. We 35 did enter into a data access type of agreement with judicial and that was executed at the end of 36 August of 2019. That set up some parameters around our access to the information. Our statute 37 does say that we should have access to all of the information directly related to the scope of the 38 investigation. And so that was part of our access agreement. With that said, I will say that the 39 judicial department was concerned about privileged information that was relevant to the scope of 40 the investigation, we did come up with a process for us to be able to view that privileged

1 information. Without it being considered a waiver of Judicial's privilege by sharing that with us.
2 We did not have actual custody of those privileged documents and judicial is the one that 3 determined what was privileged and what was not. Judicial staff and attorneys reviewed 4 everything before it was provided to us to determine if it was within the scope of the 5 investigation based on any search parameters or anything like that, that we had provided to them 6 when they were looking for emails or certain documents. So, they did review all of that 7 information prior to providing it to us and to determine: 1. Is it directly relevant to the scope?
8 and 2. Is it privileged? If it was considered to be privileged, then we were given a list of those 9 documents. You bring up COVID. Originally and I think we had some initial instances prior to 10 COVID, and all of the quarantining, and just all the everything shutting down, where some of 11 our staff did go over to the judicial building and look at documents there. Once COVID hit and 12 that wasn't an option. And then as the process progressed, we were given electronic access to 13 view the documents. But again, we didn't actually have physical custody of those documents. But 14 we did receive the information that we needed to look at, or, and we did consider all of that 15 information in those privileged documents as part of our investigation, and reaching our 16 conclusions and such. So, we did have access to the information. I'm trying to think, if there were 17 any other pieces, and if you have a follow up question, I'll pause a minute.

18

19 Rep. Weissman

20 I do. Thank you. That's all very helpful. I'd like to press a bit further. My recollection is that 21 before my time serving here anyway, the state has had a fraud hotline for a while that used to be 22 housed in DPA 2017, there's an audit bill that moved over to your office. If you have a ballpark 23 number in your head, subsequent to that time, subsequent OSA being in charge of the fraud 24 hotline, you've had about how many investigations that have proceeded to any extent.

25

26 Michelle Colin

27 I'm gonna turn around and refer to somebody who has more information on that. So just one 28 second.

29

30 Rep. Carver

31 And, sir, if you could introduce yourself, and then proceed to answer the question. Thank you.

32

33 Greg Fugate

34 Thank you, Madam Chair, members of the committee. My name is Greg Fugate, and I'm an audit 35 manager with the auditor's office. And I've been involved with our hotline operations, since we 36 took it over from the state comptroller's office. Since we took over the hotline and the passage of 37 the hotline bill that gave us kind of the statutory authority, I would say we've gotten about 100-38 150 allegations reported a year, most of those are outside of our jurisdiction, because they don't 39 involve an allegation of occupational fraud against a state employee, current or former, or 40 contractor. So, we get a lot of reports, but we have to kind of filter that out in terms of referrals to 1 state agencies, perhaps maybe a total of 15 to 20 over the course of the last several years. And 2 then of those, we've only to this point, to my knowledge, we've only done two investigations on 3 behalf of state agencies.

4

5 Rep. Weissman

6 Okay. The other ones having been done by the agency that was implicated.

7

8 Rep. Weissman

9 And, okay, appreciate that. But the purpose, there was to, if you will establish a denominator and 10 what we're talking about now is the numerator. So, my question for any of you now that there are 11 three of you here, how common is the practice Ms. Collin that you just described in terms of the 12 access agreement? And sounds like the pretty painstaking review prior to information being 13 turned over to your office in the first instance?

14

15 Rep. Weissman

16 Correct. That's right.

17

18 Michelle Colin

19 This was the only investigation where we had an access agreement.

20

21 Rep. Weissman

22 Okay, thank you. And you've so much spoken to this. But I just want to clarify, my eyes have 23 fallen on some of the same language that you use cited 2-31-10.53 (c)(1), you have access to 24 information directly related to the scope of the investigation. Well, what's directly related? I been 25 aware of these concerns about privilege. It sounds like there was maybe also some contention 26 about what is directly related. Would you say that both of those came into play and the process 27 by which information was made available to your office?

28

29 Michelle Colin

30 Yes, I would.

31

32 Rep. Weissman

33 Alright, thank you. How much would you say that process extended your runway, your time 34 period of pursuing the complaint that was raised up to you and the way that you felt you needed 35 to pursue it per statute?

36

37 Michelle Colin

38 I would say the review process, extended our investigation timeline quite extensively. It was, as I 39 said, you know, we over 16,000 documents that we received, or had access to more than that is 40 you know, what had come up and searches and things and all of that information was reviewed

1 by judicial prior to being provided to us. And then we obviously had to do our review of that 2 information as well.

3
4 Rep. Weissman

5 All right, thank you, Madam Chair, this depending on follow up, this may be my last question in 6 this little dialog. Another part of the statute, we are now at 110.53 (c)(IV). This has been put into 7 issue in the press recently, the investigation finds evidence of apparently illegal transactions, and 8 lets us, the state auditor shall immediately report the matter to an LEA. Now, in a long sorry, to a 9 law enforcement agency, appreciate my colleagues prompting me to unpack my acronyms. Fair 10 senator. In an investigation like this, just depending on where the facts lead you, you might find 11 evidence of apparently illegal transactions or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or public 12 property and anywhere along the continuum of that investigation. And yet, so on the one hand, 13 and just to sort of say, where I'm going for other members of the committee, I sort of wonder if 14 maybe we haven't discovered a potential problem here that might be in the rearview mirror as to 15 this possible investigation. But I think we, we as a general assembly, if not, we as this 16 committee, maybe ought to put it on our list of things to clean up. On the one hand, in this 17 (3)(c)(IV) there's this duty to immediately report the matter to one of the listed entities law 18 enforcement agency, DA or AG as appropriate. And on the other hand, there are these 19 requirements of confidentiality about the investigation ongoing, and in fact, a summary and 20 executive summary is out there in the public space. I'm sure house judiciary, I don't even have a 21 full report, because the statute says I am not entitled to it. I think maybe there's a tension here.
22 What has been reported in the press and what I have independently verified through my own 23 research is that by the time the matter went to, in this case, the Second Judicial District, the folks 24 there consistently with their attorney, ethics obligations and heightened prosecutorial ethics 25 obligations, felt that they no longer had enough time to proceed, given the prevailing statute of 26 limitations for the offenses that might have been in the offing here. I'm not second guessing 27 them. But I just think possibly there's a statutory tension and with an eye to possibly resolving 28 that for the future, it would help me to understand how your office navigated this tension. The 29 duty to report, possibly criminal activity on the one hand confidentiality on the other, do you 30 construe that duty to immediately report as attaching at the end of the process, in this case, 31 2/4/22. Or immediately upon discovery of some problematic facts upstream of finalizing the 32 report or either or something else?

33
34 Michelle Colin

35 Our position is that our report was completed on February 4, 2022. When we completed it, and 36 we issued it to the Chief Justice. And we immediately at that point upon after we sent it to the 37 Chief Justice, we sent it to law enforcement. The question of immediate is, in our mind, we did 38 that immediately upon concluding our investigation. I think I know I've testified I think before 39 the Judiciary Committee earlier in the session that we take our responsibilities very seriously.
40 And when making a report to law enforcement for criminal investigation, we feel it's our

1 responsibility to make sure that we feel confident in our conclusions and that we have done 2 sufficient work to be able to confidently make that report to law enforcement. And that is what 3 we did. I don't think it's appropriate to make because maybe we have suspicions or maybe we 4 have some pieces of information that are indicating there might be something there. We did not 5 feel it's appropriate to I guess prematurely make a report to law enforcement. And, so, when we 6 were finalized that is when we made our report.

7

8 Rep. Carver

9 Rep. Weissman are you about wrapped up?

10

11 Rep. Weissman

12 That's very helpful. Thank you. I think it's very important that, that you on behalf of the office 13 just laid that out very plainly, I'll just put out there for our collective consideration. And I 14 appreciate the point you made about not wanting to make that criminal referral, casually. We're 15 talking about people's rights on the other end of that. One doesn't want to be on the other end of 16 any matter, much less criminal matter be on civil one. Just a really unfortunate intersection with 17 some other operative deadlines. In this case, I have thought about something. And it may be 18 without the scope of this committee, but we want these fraud hotline investigations to happen, 19 you're the right office to do them. We don't want criminal referrals, if any have to be made to be 20 made lightly. We also don't want people to escape consequences for actions that they might have 21 perpetrated against the state in the public fisc. So that's something I've started turning over in my 22 head is whether we ought to provide for a narrow tolling of statutes of limitations where your 23 office has been doing one of these investigations and information might have flowed sooner, but 24 for that, and the duties of completeness, and confidentiality, and so forth. I don't have that all the 25 way through in my own head. But there are so many things that have popped out in the last three 26 plus years of this. This is one of them. So, thank you for indulging me in that back and forth.

27

28 Rep. Carver

29 And Rep. Weissman, we will take that under consideration, check the scope. And well, I'm sure 30 we're going to have many in depth discussions about many issues. Sir, you had a comment.

31

32 Michelle Colin

33 Thank you, Madam Chair, to sort of a comment to Representative Weissman. Certainly, the last 34 three years have really stressed tested the fraud hotline statute as our Office has learned as well. I 35 think one of the things for the committee and people to know is the statute of limitations is on the 36 prosecutor side of things. Of course, we're not in the position of prosecutor. And, so, under the 37 current hotline statute, if the allegation meets the criteria of it was an occupational fraud and the 38 individual or individuals alleged to have committed the fraud were current or former, state 39 employees or state contractors, we have an obligation to investigate and report out those results 40 in accordance with the statute regardless of when those incidents occurred. So, it's very possible

1 that even on future investigations and other agencies, that we would go through the same 2 investigation process, make a report to law enforcement and run into a similar circumstance 3 where there's statute of limitations is extended. So, the hotline statute framework doesn't 4 contemplate that as part of our role. So, it for us it was really not a not a material factor in 5 driving the investigation.

6

7 Rep. Weissman

8 Understand, thank you.

9

10 Rep. Carver

11 Rep. Bacon.

12

13 Rep. Bacon

14 Thank you. And again, I'm doing one of those. My own checking for understood, checking for 15 understanding. Sorry, so I had a question on tolling as well. But I guess I just want to understand 16 the connection to, you know, any criminal charges, and I understand you all are not the local or 17 the law enforcement agency. But is it required, you know, to pursue fraud cases, for these types 18 of incidents instances for an investigation to happen by the auditor first, or is there a 19 requirement? You know, even in pressing charges, for the auditor to have done an investigation?
20 Is that required? And maybe anyone on this committee might know the answer to that?

21

22 Rep. Carver

23 Who on the panel wants to address that? Sir?

24

25 Greg Fugate

26 Thank you, Madam Chair, Representative Bacon, sorry, I can't see you. So, I will still be on the 27 microphone. Under the hotline statute that really just prescribes what the OSA's responsibilities 28 are for reporting after we do an investigation. But apart from that, an agency is free to contact 29 law enforcement. So, in terms of our responsibility, we would not make a report to law 30 enforcement unless we have conducted an investigation. So, the investigation is what triggers 31 that potential reporting requirement on the back end that Representative Weissman referred to 32 but again, state agencies sort of writ large are free to also contact law enforcement of their own 33 their own action based on evidence that they have. So, the OSA's investigations are sort of a 34 sliver of the larger process of how the state as an employer would look into allegations of fraud 35 by its employees or contractors.

36

37 Rep. Carver

39

40

1 Rep. Bacon

2 They can and I think, you know, the first thing my mind went to was if there's any HR issues, 3 you know, it's like you gotta go through EEO before you get to court and so that's why I was 4 curious. And, so, I'm wondering if you might just repeat this for me, you know, and just for the 5 millions of people who are watching or watching this. We have an understanding of the statute of 6 limitations being, you know, two to four years, mostly, you know, depending on what's 7 happening. And, so, it's our understanding that some of these issues around this alleged fraud 8 right occurred and 2018 2019. We are now in 2022. We heard from a district attorney say they 9 didn't have enough time. So, we can assume for anyone that can do some math on what the 10 statute of limitations might be. And, so, I guess we're just trying to understand because you said, 11 I know, you may not be able to give us a particular amount of time. But you know, you said that 12 it was, what was it a substantial delay? You know, I think what we're just trying to hear is, is 13 there a potential for an agency, let alone the judicial department to take a lot of time to be able to 14 interfere? If there could be any criminal charges brought against something if that's theoretically, 15 what we're saying, we have three years to bring a crime, and they can take however much time 16 they want, in theoretically vetting every document before you get it. And therefore, the statute is 17 run, you know, is that a possibility? Is that kind of also what I'm hearing? I don't, and I, and I 18 want to be really respectful, because I don't want to put you all in a position. You know, but it 19 kind of sounds like they took a lot of time. And the clock is the clock. And I think we're just 20 trying to figure out if that is something that is at risk, given these procedures. Does that make 21 sense? And I will be completely respectful of what it is that how you want to answer that. But it's 22 just for like the layperson to understand what the timing did. And also what was required to even 23 file criminal charges, because we're at a place now where it seems like it's a couple of million 24 dollars. And we can't hold anyone responsible for that. And at the very least, we get to write laws 25 up here. So, we just want to be able to understand the risks.

26

27 Rep. Carver

28 Ms. Colin.

29

30 Michelle Colin

31 Thank you, Madam Chair. I will start and then Mr. Fugate may add to my comments. I can't 32 speak, we can't speak to the Judicial Department's intent. I mean, throughout the process, we 33 establish they provided information that we asked for. So, I can't speak to what their intent in in 34 going through it. I know they were very concerned about privileged information and protecting 35 that privilege throughout the process of what they provided to us, ultimately, knowing that we 36 would have a final report when we started the investigation. I mean, we're not obligated to report 37 to law enforcement unless we do find that there is an appearance of I'm not going to get the 38 words right, but illegal activities and such. So going into it. Did we know we would end up 39 making that report to law enforcement? No. That was something that we determined as we went 40 along. Your theoretical question? Yes, I assume it would be possible that if that was an intent

1 that that could happen. But I'm not commenting or saying that that was Judicial's intent in this 2 specific. And I'll let Mr. Fugate add to that.

3
4 Rep. Carver

5 Mr. Fugate.

6
7 Greg Fugate

8 Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll also add on. Certainly, we're focused on the Judicial Branch, I 9 want to step back a little bit from the broader fraud hotline framework. Part of the intent of how 10 this was structured is we definitely want to prevent and detect fraud, we want to hold those 11 accountable. In many cases of occupational fraud, the employee is still with the organization.
12 And, so, a lot of times the fraud or the accountability comes through an administrative solution 13 where the employee is terminated or disciplined or something to that effect, possibly could end 14 up in criminal charges. But first and foremost, in an occupational fraud context, it might be more 15 of an administrative employer, employee situation, action. And I think that's probably sort of the 16 what the hotline statute contemplates, primarily, the judicial case was more of an extreme. Also, 17 the allegations against individuals. None of them were employees of the State any longer either.
18 So again, part of part of the difficulties in navigating any investigation is, is the employee still 19 there? Those types of things. So, I just wanted to broaden the context a little bit and have us 20 think of, yes, criminal charges could be an eventual outcome of an investigation, but more likely 21 is going to be some sort of administrative discipline first, and then, you know, if you meet the 22 criminal threshold again, we're also not criminal investigators. So that's not a call that we're, that 23 we're making. So, if that's helpful or not.

24
25 Rep. Carver

26 Rep, Bacon are we all good? I noticed Senator Gonzales had a question.

27
28 Sen. Gonzales

29 And thank you for that. That was helpful. I just wanted to be sure I was hearing what I was 30 hearing. But and if you've shared about this, I apologize as well. But in the scope of the work 31 that you've done, this is just a broader question. And as understanding this audit, you know, in 32 regards to executing it with particularly, or particularly with the judicial branch, you know, can 33 you give me a sense of context in regards to either how many times you've looked into that 34 space? And where are these questions around privilege common in your work? And, you know, 35 looking into the judicial branch, or, more broadly with other government agencies, how would 36 you place either the delays or the questions around privilege and so for some context, I, I get it, 37 you know, I've run a large, and we had a billion dollar operating budget, we have work products 38 and whatnot, I've been to the place where people have asked us for things, we've had to go into 39 exec session and figure it out. And so, yes, that exists for any agency. But I'm curious if there

1 was something that may have felt like an outlier for you all, with this particular governmental 2 entity.

3

4 Rep. Carver

5 And whoever wants to address the question.

6

7 Greg Fugate

8 Thank you, Madam Chair, Representative Bacon, I can't speak to the specifics of the judicial 9 situation. But I'm going to speak more generally, in terms of sort of our performance audit kind 10 of function. So I'm 21 years in as a performance auditor with the office. And we've always been 11 aware of issues of privilege attorney with agencies, I would say those conversations have 12 become more prevalent in our just general auditing function since the 2018 decision in Fox 13 versus Alfine, from the Supreme Court. And so whether it's agencies, Attorney General 14 representatives raising the attention, it's more of an overt conversation we're having just in the, in 15 the course of performing our audit function, in addition to in this case, the investigation through 16 the hotline, so it's kind of a newer development that both the OSA and agencies are trying to 17 navigate around so that we're not, we're still privy to the information, because fundamentally, we 18 can't do our jobs as auditors for the General Assembly if we don't have the access to the 19 information about programs. But we also don't want agencies withholding information that could 20 be beneficial to our conclusions about program functions or service delivery, things like that for 21 the taxpayer. So, it is a new territory that we're navigating through our audit function if that's 22 helpful.

23

24 Rep. Carver

25 Ms. Colin.

26

27 Michelle Colin

28 Madam Chair, I will say, just to expand on that slightly, and that on the performance audit side, 29 we have had it come up where if it is privileged information, and the agency lets us know that, 30 then we do have to ask them if it's information that we feel like we would want to include in the 31 audit report, we do have to ask the agency, you know, are you willing to waive privilege for us to 32 be able to report that and we have had agencies say no, we're not willing to do that. And in that 33 case, we do include some language in our audit report. Just I guess, recognizing that limitation 34 that we were provided, we're not allowed to disclose that as part of the audit. So, we've had to 35 have had that come up. And as Greg said, it seems to be the whole privilege conversation does 36 seem to have come up more frequently in recent years.

37

38 Rep. Carver

39 Rep. Bacon.

40

1 Rep. Bacon

2 And that's across agencies or I mean, I guess the question is with judiciary how do they place, 3 okay,

4

5 Michelle Colin

6 Across agencies.

7

8 Rep. Bacon

9 Okay. Thank you.

10

11 Rep. Carver

12 And I saw both Senator Gonzales and Rep. Weissman had their hand up. Senator Gonzales first.

13

14 Sen. Gonzales

15 Thank you, Madam Chair. Part of what I'm trying to understand is just sort of the chain of events 16 of who received what when. And, so, I was in receipt of an email from Mr. Terry Scanlon, 17 forwarding the email from Chief Justice Brian Boatright on Monday, stating that on Friday 18 evening that he had received the final investigation report and Executive Summary for the Office 19 of the State Auditor's fraud hotline investigation. Was that report, was that a full report? Was that 20 an Executive Summary that the Chief Justice received?

21

22 Rep. Carver

23 Ms. Colin.

24

25 Michelle Colin

26 Oops. Seems like it went off again. We provided a full report to the Chief Justice on February 4.

27

28 Rep. Carver

29 Senator Gonzales.

30

31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Thank you, Madam Chair. Is the Chief Justice the only entity within the Judicial Department 33 who received the report? Have you all sent it to the Commission on Judicial Discipline?

34

35 Rep. Carver

36 Ms. Colin.

37

38 Michelle Colin

39 Madam Chair. No, the Chief Justice is the only one that we sent the full report to as well as we 40 sent the Executive Summary to him as well. But our statute says that upon completion of our

1 investigation, we should submit it to the head of the affected agency. And in this case, that was 2 the Chief Justice.

3

4 Rep. Carver

5 Senator Gonzales.

6

7 Sen. Gonzales

8 Thank you, Madam Chair, just as a as a wrap up. The Chief Justice then published that Executive 9 Summary. And I think on the website but the full contents of the report are, are still remain 10 sealed, for lack of a better word. Is that correct?

11

12 Rep. Carver

13 Ms. Colin.

14

15 Michelle Colin

16 Yes, that's correct. Okay, from our side? Well, I say that's correct. That's correct, from our side.
17 The Chief Justice is the only individual that or organization that we sent the full report to. Know 18 what has happened to it since then? I can't speak to that.

19

20 Sen. Gonzales

21 Thank you.

22

23 Rep. Carver

24 Rep. Weissman.

25

26 Rep. Weissman

27 Thank you, Madam Chair. And I was actually going in a very similar place to Senator Gonzales.
28 Ms. Colin just to surface what I think is the black letter law to what you just said you. Again, the 29 entity under investigation here was the judicial branch. That's why you sent the report there and 30 nowhere else you're doing what the statute says I'm not doing what the statute says it doesn't say 31 to do. Again, we're at 10.53 (c)(II), I think, "state auditor shall report the results of the 32 investigation to the head of the affected agency." And then there's other language if it's a 33 gubernatorial appointee. So, in the event that the General Assembly wanted some committee of 34 reference, or the executive committee or some website or the whole public to get a copy, we 35 would just have to go and amend that language. I think you are performing a strictly statutory 36 function. Correct?

37

38 Michelle Colin

39 That's Correct.

40

1 Rep. Weissman

2 All right.

3

4 Michelle Colin

5 Sorry, madam chair.

6

7 Rep. Carver

8 That's fine. Mr. Fugate.

9

10 Greg Fugate

11 Thank you, Madam Chair. And this goes back to my earlier comments about when we're doing 12 the investigation, we are doing it on behalf of the in the head of the agency affected. And, so, in 13 effect, we're standing in their shoes, I think one of the individuals earlier use the term sort of 14 client and so that if that's helpful, that's who were reporting to, which is different from our 15 performance audit function, which is through the audit committee and those types of things. So, 16 it is a different reporting framework than you would see through an audit where the audit 17 committee and general assembly are kind of our audience, so to speak.

18

19 Rep. Bacon

20 Rep. Weissman.

21

22 Rep. Weissman

23 I appreciate that slightly different question now. So, the Executive Summary of the final report 24 was available 2/4/22. The full report was available to the client, if you will, also 2/4/22. Not ever 25 having been on the audit committee. I just truly don't know how this next part goes. What is the 26 back and forth, if any, between the client in this case, the judicial department and your office 27 prior to the finalization of the report? Or is there any? So, Ms. Colin per our prior exchange?
28 There was a bunch of back and forth about obtaining the information you just needed to get to 29 the point of even having a draft report. Was there a date in which you had something you 30 considered a draft report? And then what's the process? Does it go through a red team inside the 31 OSA? Is it draft shared with the client organization, in this case, the Judicial Department? What 32 does that look like? What were the timelines there if you're allowed to say?

33

34 Rep. Carver

35 Ms. Colin.

36

37 Michelle Colin

38 Madam Chair, Representative Weissman. We followed the same basic process that we use on our 39 audits and that yes, the agency, in this case, Judicial, we did provide a draft report earlier in the 40 process. We wanted to give them an opportunity to review for privilege. We also had some 1 questions still, subsequent to judicial review of the draft, we continued to obtain some additional 2 information, we made some further requests for information, they provided additional 3 information we reviewed considered, we did go through that process several times before 4 finalizing the report. That's the same basic process that we follow on our audits. We want to 5 make sure that we have as complete and accurate of information as we can have. And, so, we did 6 have that process through out I guess, you know, completing the investigation.

7
8 Rep. Carver

9 All good Rep. Weissman? Other questions by the committee? Mr. Chair?

10
11 Sen. Lee

12 Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, first, I want to commend all of you for this audit. I don't sit on 13 the audit committee. But I've been around here for a while and seen a bunch of audits and read a 14 lot of them. And this seemed and maybe I guess I'm asking this as a question. This one seemed to 15 be a pretty big one. To me, you found a million dollars in leave and unsupported contracts that 16 were let and a half a million dollars in voluntary separation incentives. Leaves granted with no 17 records, staff granted 1016 hours of paid leave, $3.87 million of sole source contracts. When I 18 read this, it seemed to me that these were pretty gross deviations from policy, is that a fair 19 assessment? Or is this the normal sort of audit finding that you discern in an agency of three 20 quarters of a billion dollars?

21
22 Michelle Colin

23 Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. Chair, we did find some significant issues in the audit. I know, as 24 Mr. Johnson had mentioned, that last finding and recommendation and our report, it was kind of 25 a culmination of the various issues that we had had separate findings on and then we had some 26 additional information in there. I would say in, in a lot of the cases, the findings that we had. In 27 some cases, it wasn't just a matter of not following policy, what we found was in many instances, 28 there were not policies, or they were very high-level general rules, but not a lot of specific 29 policies for staff to follow. And exactly, you know how to implement those rules. And so that 30 you saw a trend and as we were going through the findings and recommendations of I think in 31 every recommendation, we had language around you need to develop policies and procedures 32 and inform staff about how this should work and make sure that staff are following those 33 throughout the process.

34
35 Rep. Carver

36 Ms. Colin.

37
38 Rep. Carver

39 Mr. Chair.

1 Sen. Lee

2 Thank you. So, I get that, I understand that there may not have been policies or policies existed, 3 which were deviated from. I'm just trying to get a sense from you of how significant your 4 monetary findings were, in this particular audit. Was this a big deal? Is this one, you go home
5 and tell your spouse about and say, boy, you wouldn't believe what I found in this department 6 today. When I read it, that's sort of the sense that I had, but again, I don't live in the world that 7 you live in. You know, to me, this evinced a significant lack of oversight. I'm not suggesting. I 8 mean, maybe incompetence, maybe gross incompetence, negligence at a high level, I think 9 someone used the term lack of integrity. Give me a sense of how you viewed this.

10

11 Rep. Carver

12 Ms. Colin.

13

14 Michelle Colin

15 Thank you, Madam Chair. I would say it's hard for us to necessarily say it was this more 16 significant than others. I think it's as far as the monetary value of what we found. It's somewhat 17 relative when we have Medicaid audit findings that's off often really big dollar amounts, just 18 because you're talking about big dollars to begin with. So, I don't know that I can say is this, you 19 know, worse than other audits or recommendations and findings in that sense, from the monetary 20 perspective? It's we definitely found issues and there were dollars associated with it, we 21 questioned it. We did have information in the report about just the culture in the office, that, that 22 there did not seem to be strong controls over the office operations, at least in the areas that we 23 were looking at in the audit, and that we recommended that changes be made to improve that 24 because there did seem to be a big lack there.

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 Yeah, I'm partially what . . .

28

29 Rep. Carver

30 Mr. Chair.

31

32 Sen. Lee

33 Partially what I'm getting at is we're trying to take an overall view of what's going on in a 34 department where our focus is judicial conduct and judicial discipline. But this is a Department 35 that is responsible for all of the judges, they, you know, the chief judge of the justice of the 36 Supreme Court is responsible for the 22 Districts and to see this amount of malfeasance in the 37 Department kind of brought my attention to the fact that this really was a Department that was 38 out of control that wasn't being managed that was not being conscientiously operated by leaders 39 with a sense of integrity, and conscientiousness. So that's the thrust of my questions to you. Am 40 I off base and drawing those conclusions?

1 Rep. Carver
2 Ms. Colin or Mr. Fugate?

3
4 Greg Fugate

5 Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. Chairman, this is a this is a good audit. And this isn't really a 6 commentary on judicial. But if you look at sort of performance audits, you know, oftentimes 7 we're making recommendations about policies and procedures or documentation or you know, 8 Supervisory review all of our go to recommendations as auditors. What we're really trying to 9 shore up is the control environment. And this is a good example of just for any organization that 10 when you don't have that good control environment, things can get even further awry. And, so, I 11 think as performance auditors, that's one of our primary goals is to say, okay, how do we make 12 sure that system of internal control that agencies have to rely on to do their jobs for the citizens 13 of Colorado are operating well and so this is a good example of what can happen when that 14 environment breaks down. And you get larger dollars. We also try to quantify dollars whenever 15 we can, we can't always but that also helps to drive home the effect of well so what if I didn't 16 have documentation justifying that sole source contract? Well, this is what happens. We were 17 relying on that documentation to give us assurances that it is an appropriate contract or that it is, 18 you know, serving the state's interests and so auditors, we tend to focus on those documents and 19 policies and procedures. But this is exactly why.

20
21 Rep. Carver
22 Mr. Chair.

23
24 Sen. Lee

25 Thank you, Madam Chair. So, you're focusing on the policy, the process and the procedures, and 26 I'm focused on the people who implement the policies, practices and procedures, i.e.
27 management. So, that's what I'm looking at it when you have, you know, in policies and 28 procedures that either one don't exist, or two are not being followed. That, to me is a reflection 29 on management, or mismanagement or incompetence. And so that's kind of where I was going.
30 But I appreciate the fact of what you all do, because the audits that I've seen, you really bring 31 people back to their roots, in terms of following appropriate internal accounting, policies and 32 procedures and processes to ensure that what people are doing is, is justifiable and explainable 33 and, and can be tracked. So again, part of what I wanted to say is thank you to you for the work 34 that you did. And, yeah, we really appreciate what you do.

35
36 Rep. Carver
37 Mr. Fugate.

38
39
40

1 Greg Fugate

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you very much for that, Mr. Chairman. I would agree, I would 3 agree with you I should step back and say fundamentally, any system of control is dependent on 4 management, taking responsibility for implementing that. So, it's people who implement these 5 processes and so yes, that that's why we direct our recommendations to the management of the 6 divisions or departments that are responsible because they ultimately are the ones who have to 7 act to put those in place. So, thank you.

8

9 Rep. Carver

10 Questions by the committee? Senator Van Winkle.

11

12 Sen. Van Winkle

13 Thank you, Madam Chair, or Madam Vice Chair. If I understand correctly, your office referred 14 for people to the Denver District Attorney's Office for criminal investigations. But what the 15 prosecutors said, I believe they said this in in the press, they were given highly redacted copies 16 of the report. Why would a criminal referral be given a redacted copy? And how did that 17 happen?

18

19 Rep. Carver

20 Ms. Colin.

21

22 Michelle Colin

23 Thank you, Madam Chair. We did provide a redacted version of the report to law enforcement 24 when we issued that. I guess I would say it's still consistent with what I had said earlier is that the 25 Judicial Department was concerned about waiving its privilege if that information was not 26 redacted and provided to the Denver DA's office. And, so, we did provide them with the 27 opportunity to redact any information that they felt was privileged or protected information. And 28 that is the information that we provided to the Denver DA's office. And I think that was the basis 29 for that.

30

31 Rep. Carver

32 Senator Van Winkle.

33

34 Sen. Van Winkle

35 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. And if I guess the next question would be somewhat obvious if 36 there's a criminal referral that needs to be given, why would in any case a redaction be allowed to 37 be made?

38

39 Rep. Carver

40 Who wants to respond to that?

1 Michelle Colin

2 Thank you, Madam Chair.

3

4 Rep. Carver

5 Ms. Colin.

6

7 Michelle Colin

8 I will take a shot at that. Our statute does not direct us either way on that. Not to I guess just keep 9 repeating ourselves. But we were conducting that investigation on behalf of the Chief Justice and 10 Judicial Department. And, therefore, we did ask and have conversations with them about they 11 were aware we would be reporting if we identified any appearance of fraud or illegal activity, 12 that we would be required to report that we did have discussions about that. In the interest of 13 protecting that privilege. We did allow them to redact that information. With that said, the 14 Denver DA 's office could contact judicial and have that discussion with judicial about obtaining 15 that information. It was not our privilege to waive, but it was Judicial's privilege to waive. And 16 that was a conversation between judicial or that could have happened. I can't speak to whether it 17 did happen. But that could happen between Judicial and the Denver DA 's Office.

18

19 Rep. Carver

20 All good? Any other committee members? Panel, thank you so much for your testimony and the 21 extensive Q&A. Very helpful. Appreciate your time this afternoon. And with that, we'll move on.
22 I'll turn it back over to Senator Lee, Mr. Chair on logistics and next steps.

Appendix 27(s)(i)(7)

Logistics and Next Steps;

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline:
June 14, 2022 Hearing—Discussion of Committee Logistics

1 Sen. Gardner

2 I mean, I'm comfortable doing it remotely, but I'm just not sure I can do it at all that day. But I could do 3 the 30th.

4

5 Rep. Carver

6 But could you do the 28th or 29th?

7

8 Sen. Gardner

9 No, 28th and 29th both are.

10

11 Rep. Carver

12 I can do the 30th.

13

14 Juliann Jenson

15 That's not 42 days. You've got to do the 28th or 29th.

16

17 Sen. Gardner

18 Can we do 28, 29, or 30?

19

20 Sen. Lee

21 That shouldn't be a long meeting. Should it?

22

23 Juliann Jenson

24 No, generally speaking, they're not long meetings.

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 Should we do that on the 30th? On Friday the 30th? Okay?

28

29 Sen. Gardner

30 So I may do it remotely, but I can do it.

31

32 Sen. Lee

33 Okay.

34

35 Rep. Lynch

36 Mr. Chair, I'm out, off grid for that entire week.

1 Sen. Lee

2 So you can't do anything on the 30th. So there's no . . .

3

4 Rep. Lynch

5 22nd to the 29th, I'm out.

6

7 Sen. Lee

8 So you couldn't get to a place where you could call in.

9

10 Rep. Lynch

11 No.

12

13 Sen. Lee

14 So, what do you think we okay doing it without them? I'll let you figure that one out.

15

16 Rep. Carver

17 Excuse me. Rep Lynch, you said you were out through the 29th. Are you available on the 30th?

18

19 Rep. Lynch

20 Yes.

21

22 Rep. Carver

23 Okay, we're talking about the 30th.

24

25 Rep. Lynch

26 Oh, okay, okay.

27

28 Rep. Carver

29 Yeah.

30

31 Sen. Lee

32 All right, September 30. Continue. Ms. Jenson.

33

34 Juliann Jenson

35 So, we got the last two meetings.

36

37 Sen. Gardner

38 We have the last to the next to the last.

39

40

1 Juliann Jenson
2 Bill draft requests and we're going to vote on them. And you have two meetings in between. So that 3 between now and August 17.

4
5 Rep. Lynch
6 Pardon me, Mr. Chair, I thought, I thought we were doing the July meeting, so I'm talking July not. I'm 7 totally open in September. Sorry.

8
9 Sen. Lee
10 Yeah, we got a month, two months ahead of you. Okay, so now we're going back to July.

11
12 Juliann Jenson
13 We can do that anytime in July, depending how you guys want to space this out.

14
15 Sen. Lee
16 Anyone interested in something the week of the 18 to 22, July, 18 to July 22 anytime in there? Like 17 maybe the 20th? July 20. Rep. Bacon.

18
19 Rep. Bacon
20 I think two of us won't be available on the 19th and 20th.

21
22 Sen. Lee
23 21st?

24
25 Rep. Lynch
26 Is it the 19th and 20th?

27
28 Rep. Bacon
29 I have the 19th and 20th.

30
31 Rep. Lynch
32 21st.

33
34 Rep. Bacon
35 Oh, 21st is good. Okay.

36
37 Sen. Lee
38 21st?

39
40

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Not a great day for me. But I can do it remotely.

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Okay.

6

7 Sen. Van Winkle

8 I may be remote too.

9

11 7/21.

12

13 Juliann Jenson

14 I looked on the calendar there is the CSG West meeting in Boise during that week. But if no one's going, 15 that's fine, so.

16

17 Sen. Gonzales

18 At least you know about it Ms. Jenson. It's on your calendar.

19

20 Juliann Jenson

21 21st?

22

23 Sen. Lee

24 Yeah, I think we're, we're fixing on 21 7/21.

25

26 Sen. Gonzales

27 Lucky number.

28

29 Rep. Carver

30 Mr. Chair. And this is an unknown at this point. Unfortunately, if we were able to get the ILG report 31 early in July, then it might be useful to. I just throw out to the committee. Would we want a hearing 32 date, earlier in July, prior to the 21st to hear from the investigators? As well as you know, and I am 33 hopeful, that our urging today might produce that. Of course, we don't know that.

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Well, I'm out the week of the 4th, but I'm available the week of the 11th through 15th. So, let me throw 37 out, does the 13th work? July 13? This would be in lieu of 7/21.

38

39

40

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Okay, that would be remote, but it would still be better. I would just miss out on all of the exciting 3 festivities for the Uniform Law Commission that day. I would have to sit in my . . .

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 What a difficult choice you would have.

7

8 Sen. Gardner

9 You know, I think what's that called a hobson's choice?

10

11 Sen. Lee

12 Hobson's choice, right. I think let's, should we pencil in the 13th? I'd like to see how that works. Rep.
13 Lynch.

14

15 Rep. Lynch

16 I like that better than the 21st as well. That works okay, better for me.

17

18 Rep. Weissman

19 I'd like to make a similar point as Rep. Carver made. I mean, from memory, we're supposed to get one of 20 the two reports, 6/29, the other 7/29. Thus, apart from speeding up the 7/29 delivery, which I hope we 21 can do. I think it might be expedient to have a meeting relatively soon after 6/29. We want to bake in a 22 few days for ourselves and others to digest that. Now, Mr. Chair, I heard you that you're out the week of 23 the fourth. If we suppose we meet the. I think I just heard the 13th and then we were talking about the 24 21st to space things out. We could maybe bump that to the following week. I mean, I don't know that it's 25 necessarily a bad thing to have meetings a week apart. That can be a long time in the arc of legislative 26 business. So we could do 13th and 21st or 13th and sometime the week of the 25th. But these work.

27

28 Rep. Lynch

29 That's the week I'm out.

30

31 Rep. Weissman

32 Fox, goose, grain, thank you. Rep Lynch. 20th, that's what I said, 33

34 Sen. Lee

35 The week of the 13th, you're out, Mike?

36

37 Rep. Lynch

38 I'm out the 22nd through the 29th.

39

40

1 Sen. Lee
2 But week of the 13th, you could do the 13th. Yes, sir. So let's do that.

3
4 Sen. Lee
5 13 and 21, is that what you are saying? We don't know if we're going to get that other report.

6
7 Rep. Carver
8 Well, maybe we need to determine based upon when things flow, and then we're going to look at what 9 Leg Council is going to provide us on research on what other states do. Do we do a meeting later in July 10 or the first week in August?

11
12 Sen. Lee
13 Yeah, and I don't think that ILG or Troyer was going to take a whole day. That'll just be part of a 14 presentation.

15
16 Rep. Carver
17 No whether or not we expect that research to be done from NCSL. We're talking about the research that 18 has been requested by our staff from NCSL, other states, that type of thing. And so would it be we could 19 certainly cover that on July 13. But the thought process is, do we need to schedule now or wait and see 20 how things go? Another hearing between July 13 and August 17? Whether we're going to need another 21 working hearing?

22
23 Sen. Lee
24 Yes, Juliann.

25
26 Juliann Jenson
27 I would advise, if you think you want to have all five meetings, and we're all here today, I would advise 28 this, penciling them in, because the interim schedule is going to fill up fast and there's going to be 29 overlap. So that'd be my only recommendation.

30
31 Sen. Lee
32 What date should we pick? We've got the 13th and what could be the other one?

33
34 Rep. Lynch
35 Do the first week of August.

36
37 Sen. Lee
38 I can't hear you.

39
40

1 Juliann Jenson

2 The fourth or fifth after the NCSL meeting.

3

4 Sen. Gonzales

5 Mr. Chair, just for Representative Bacon and I, we both have conflicts on the afternoons of both August 6 the 4th and August the 5th.

7

8 Sen. Lee

9 Want to go for the 10th?

10

11 Sen. Gonzales

12 10th is wide open.

13

14 Sen. Lee

15 Let's try August 10. Does that work?

16

17 Sen. Gardner

18 August 10th?

19

20 Sen. Lee

21 10 and we might be able to get the other independent investigator on that day.

22

23 Sen. Gardner

24 Let's do it.

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 August 10, we're all nodding.

28

29 Juliann Jenson

30 Do you want me to recap the dates? Say it again. Should I recap the dates? Okay, so I have July 13.

31 Probably an all day meeting with, hopefully, the investigators and other what other states are doing.

32 August 10, agenda to be determined. August 17 was when you will vote on your bill draft requests. Or 33 request your bill draft request, I should say, and then, September 30 is our day we will vote on your bill 34 draft requests.

35

36 Sen. Lee

37 All right. Rep. Bacon.

38

39

40

1 Rep. Bacon

2 And, so, I just want to be sure that we're holding the right amount of time. Do we have a start and end?
3 Is it kind of like the 10 to four or just the whole day?

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 From breakfast to dinner.

7

8 Rep. Bacon

9 The hours matter to me. So, I'm just curious if we have a sense on when we would start.

10

11 Sen. Lee

12 Ms. Jenson what's?

13

14 Juliann Jenson

15 I'm just going to predict July 13 will probably be a full day. We're not sure what we're doing on August 16 10 yet, so.

17

18 Sen. Lee

19 We may get the other independent investigator's report.

20

21 Juliann Jenson

22 Typically, when the meeting is about requesting bill drafts and voting on the bill drafts are more of a 23 half day affairs, or like a morning or an afternoon.

24

25 Sen. Lee

26 Does morning or afternoon work better for the August 17? Does anyone care? I'd call morning. Okay?
27 Juliann, Kevin, Senator Van Winkle, I can't tell what your identity is.

28

29 Sen. Van Winkle

30 Mr. Chair, my sincere apologies. I was looking up another committee meeting that we have at the 31 Capitol that day that I sit on and July 13 is their next meeting, from 10 to four.

32

33 Sen. Lee

34 Well, it knocks that out.

35

36 Sen. Van Winkle

37 I could always find a substitute, I suppose, the sales and use tax force, which I chair.

38

39 Sen. Lee

40 It's hard to sub out on that.

1 Rep. Carver
2 Can we do the 12th, Tuesday the 12th of July?

3
4 Sen. Lee
5 July 12th?

6
7 Sen. Gardner
8 As opposed to the 13th?

9
10 Sen. Lee
11 As opposed to the 13th.

12
13 Sen. Gardner
14 I'm sorry, I'm still at the Uniform Law Commission that doesn't do me any good at all, but I can do it.

15
16 Sen. Lee
17 Okay, so that'll be a full day on the 12th. The 10th might be a part day, the 17th might be a part day, and 18 the 30th is. And if there's any topics or experts that you all want to hear from, chime in to Rep. Carver or 19 myself, and we'll see if we can line them up, or we've been talking to people from the national state 20 court group and others to find out how other people are solving this. So if you have any ideas. Yes, Rep.
21 Carver.

22
23 Rep. Carver
24 Mr. Chair, I would expect we're going to need the bulk of a of the day to hear testimony from the bar 25 association, the different bar sections. Potentially, local bar associations may want to come testify. Now 26 we're also doing outreach, I believe, to all those groups requesting not just testimony, but written 27 submittals. Again, focused on our 18 areas, and I'm wondering if doing that, the timing of that in one 28 sense, they may raise issues that we have not heard about today, and that might help form our universe, 29 or how we address these. On the other hand, I know that they may also have interest when we get to the 30 point of doing draft legislation. Having input on that, but I suspect their testimony and submittals will 31 bring forth additional issues beyond what we've heard from and of course, we don't know what the 32 issues are that are going to be raised in the two investigatory reports. So, just a thought, Mr. Chair.

33
34 Sen. Lee
35 Good thought. So I would propose that we try to get bar associations in particular. You know, they're 36 always invited for public testimony, but maybe to come in on 7/12. Schedule some on 7/12 and have 37 them make presentations. Okay, all right. Any other comments? Thoughts on scheduling? Senator 38 Gonzales.

39
40

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 I am stunned that it wasn't more painful than it was, and I'm grateful to all of the members for y'all's 3 flexibility.

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 The scheduling process. Yeah, yeah. Okay, well, good. All right, so the next item on the agenda is 7 public testimony.

Appendix 27(s)(i)(8)

Public Testimony and Adjournment;

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline: June 14, 2022

Hearing—Public Comment and Adjournment

1 Sen. Lee

2 All right, so the next item on the agenda is public testimony. We do have seven, eight people signed up, 3 so let's begin public testimony. We have Chris Forsyth from the Judicial Integrity Project. Please join us.
4 Mr. Forsyth.

5

6 Sen. Lee

7 So, we're going to be limiting testimony for three minutes if there are questions there after that we will 8 not be putting limits on the testimony. But we would ask that the witnesses adhere to the standard three-9 minute protocol for the Judiciary Committee. Okay, Mr. Forsyth, welcome and thank you for staying 10 with us all day and listening to the testimony. We appreciate your interest in the topic.

11

12 Chris Forsyth

13 My name is Chris Forsyth. I'm an attorney. I've practiced in Colorado for almost 30 years, and as part of 14 that, I started the Judicial Integrity Project. 10 years ago, we proposed our first initiative to fix the 15 judicial discipline system by pursuing a constitutional amendment. So, you're 10 years behind us at 16 looking at this issue. It's been an issue for a long time. I've given you a handout that shows in evaluating 17 a system of judicial discipline, these are the questions that you need to answer. If you answer these 18 questions, you will have your system of judicial discipline. On page two, you'll see there's a chart that 19 has the dismissed complaints filed with the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. The source is 20 the Annual Reports, which have been referred to repeatedly today. If you'll notice the dismissals start 21 out in 1982 that was the oldest report I could find. And in 85 they hit a low. What happened in 1985?
22 The Supreme Court adopted a rule for the Commission that created an Executive Director that reported 23 not only to the Commission but to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court also adopted a rule asking the 24 Commission to dismiss complaints that are appellate in nature, was the language at that time. The 25 dismissals immediately increased significantly and never went down after that point. For 18 years in a 26 row, or 28 years straight, excuse me, 28 years straight. There wasn't a published case of judicial 27 discipline in Colorado. 28 years straight, we started banging the drum in 2012. So, what happened? In 28 2014 the first case in 28 years appeared of judicial discipline. What was it? It was a misogynistic judge 29 up north of Denver, I want to say, Weld, I forget. His name is Rand and he stipulated to leave the bench 30 for his improper behavior towards jurors and court staff. There was no reason for the Supreme Court to 31 make the court case public, except to make the point that it had a public case. The six other cases that 32 have been given since then, that have been referred while the six includes him, those cases have been 33 DUIs, two DUIs, a judge who pled guilty to a federal offense for tipping off his friends who were 34 involved in a drug ring, a couple racist judges. And all of those situations became public in the media 35 before they were revealed or dealt with by the discipline commission. So, before those cases became 36 public, they were made public by the press. Page three of this handout is to show you the map of where

1 proceedings are confidential. Judge Prince testified, oh, there's not much difference when it's you know, 2 there's not a huge difference here. There's a big difference over when cases become confidential or 3 become public. Most cases, in most states--35 states, the proceedings are public once a complaint is 4 filed. The problem in Colorado is, as you can see from the prior chart, not many cases have been filed.
5 So, the Judicial Code of Conduct has it has not been enforced as a matter of history. And then, because 6 my time is dwindling, on the last page, we have a comparison using those factors on the first page that 7 you were handed. And it addresses, goes through are the proceedings public. And it compares California 8 and Colorado. California actually checks all the boxes in the right manner. Colorado is exactly the 9 opposite. I'm not exactly a fan of everything California, but on judicial discipline, they got it right. These 10 referrals by judges and again, all you've heard from today, here are our judges, those with a conflict of 11 interest. The standard that we should be looking at is the public's confidence in the judiciary. You shove 12 the public's testimony to the last of this hearing, limited to three minutes after you listen to judges tell 13 you what they want. This proceeding, this very proceeding, is an exact example of what is wrong with 14 government, and in particular, what is wrong with a legislature holding any checks and balances over the 15 Judicial Branch. You will let a judge talk forever about what a judge wants, but the true question is what 16 the public's confidence is in the system, and you've made a precedent here today that you don't give a 17 damn what the public really thinks and you're going to limit them to three minutes at the end of the long 18 day. When the judges have done everything they can to limit strong conversation about what should be 19 reformed. It's manipulative for a judge to get up here and the State Court Administrator to get up here 20 and say, you know, we think that this is wrong, and there's no law about the Supreme Court, you know, 21 having to recuse in this one specific instance. So, let's work on that. That's misdirection, that's leading 22 you away from the overall picture that you need to look at, which is, who should be on the discipline 23 commission? Who should be making the rules? All these broader questions that are brought on this first 24 page that I give you. And these are the questions that ultimately need to be answered, because right now, 25 we do not have an enforceable Code of Judicial Conduct. When you're making news out of DUIs and 26 felony convictions, you're not sweating the small stuff in courts, like a judge not being fair, like a judge 27 using federal law instead of Colorado law in a binding decision. The small stuff that is enforced in other 28 states, and if you look at other states, searchable databases that they have you'll find case after case after 29 case of judges who have been disciplined and they won't see the light of day. So, I agree with Senator 30 Lee Colorado, is the gold standard. It's the gold standard at hiding information on judges. It's the gold 31 standard at protecting bad judges, and we are the envy of bad judges in every other State in the Union, 32 because nowhere are they more protected than the here, other than the federal judiciary. You need to 33 make changes, and you need to look at this fresh and new. And you need to understand that all these 34 organizations, you're talking about, the Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System, 35 that the Chair brought up, oh, they wrote a report. That's an entity of judges. Rebecca Love Korlis, a 36 former Supreme Court Justice started that. What did Rebecca Love Korlis do? She wrote the initial 37 opinion in Colorado that the Open Records Act does not apply to the Judiciary. That was her 38 contribution, and that's the organization she started.

39
40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Mr. Forsyth, would you wrap up, please, sir.

3

4 Chris Forsyth

5 The bar associations, these other organizations that you're talking from hearing about, they have judges 6 involved. They have judges steering, you know the thought process of those organizations. Again, you 7 need to get back to the public's confidence and the appearance of impropriety. If you look at those two 8 standards, those will guide your way properly through the question of what needs to be done in Colorado 9 regarding judicial discipline.

10

11 Sen. Lee

12 Okay, thank you. Are there questions for Mr. Forsyth? You alluded to, I believe other states, Mr.
13 Forsyth, that have applied their judicial commission to judges who what got a ruling wrong? Let's see, 14 refusing to follow well established law or enforcing a rule related to a ruling. Do other states do that or 15 do they?

16

17 Chris Forsyth

18 It's two different degrees. If you look at other states, you'll see a disparity. A different treatment of 19 judicial conduct. And there are states where, if the law is well established, a judge can be disciplined for 20 it. Colorado takes the opposite view on this broad thing, saying, if it's appellate in nature, meaning the 21 discipline commission is taking that to mean, if there's anything merely related to an order or something 22 that can be appealed, related to the conduct, they're not going to look at it. So that's a lot of judicial 23 misconduct not getting looked at by the discipline commission. So other states have different standards.
24 Furthermore, the burdens of proof. I was shocked to hear Judge Prince talk about the burden of proof to 25 even proceed on a complaint against a judge meant you had to essentially win a civil proceeding before, 26 that was his version of the burden of proof. So it's a much higher burden of proof than even I thought 27 that the discipline commission was applying. And maybe that explains 28 years straight of no public 28 judicial discipline. But other states, yes, look at enforcing the Code of Judicial Conduct in a different 29 manner than Colorado.

30

31 Sen. Lee

32 Okay, any other questions from the committee? Seeing none. Thank you for your testimony.

33

34 Sen. Lee

35 Andrew Toft. Is Mr. Toft with us? Welcome, sir.

36

37 Sen. Lee

38 If you would identify yourself, tell us your affiliation and provide us with your testimony.

39

40

1 Andrew Toft

2 Yes, sir. Thank you. Mr. Chairman Lee, Madam Vice Chair Carver and members of the committee. My 3 name is Andrew Toft. I was licensed to practice here in Colorado in 1982 most of my practice involves 4 representing clients in the District and County Courts here in Colorado, predominantly along the I 25 5 corridor. I'm here today on behalf of the Colorado Bar Association. Vice Chair Carver, you've already 6 made a number of the comments that I had in my prepared comments, but I'll go ahead and reiterate 7 them. First of all, and foremost, the CBA is grateful for the opportunity to participate in this hearing and 8 looks forward to participating further with the interim committee as the committee studies the issues
9 identified in subject section (7) of 13-5.3-101 and SB 22-201, as well as any other aspects of Colorado's 10 judicial discipline process, the interim committee decides to examine. The CBA believes the work that 11 the committee will do to fulfill its duties under SB 22-201, is every bit as important as, if not more 12 important than, the work that went into drafting, debating, amending and passing SB 22-201 so it could 13 be signed into law, and the work of this committee could begin. When the committee drafts legislation 14 in furtherance of the goals of SB 22-201, as authorized in that bill, the CBA looks forward to working 15 with the committee in being used as a resource by the committee in drafting that legislation. CBA is 16 fully aware that this committee will rely on the research and drafting skills of the Legislative Council 17 staff and the Office of Legislative Legal Services, given the experience many CBA members have with 18 Colorado State Courts, the administrative court system, including the disciplinary processes for a 19 number of professions and the CBA's long standing involvement in the legislative process through its 20 sections, in CBA's legislative policy committee, the CBA is certain it can make valuable contributions to 21 the drafting of any legislation for the 2023 legislative session, as well as related research. The CBA is 22 ready to provide assistance from reviewing and proofing drafts of the legislation to analyzing issues of 23 due process, privacy and confidentiality, separation of powers issues that may impact this committee's 24 final product. Colorado lawyers, whether CBA members or not, represent Colorado citizens in the courts 25 of this state, from Julesburg to Cortez, in Springfield to Craig. Every day, the courts are open and in 26 session. The CBA can ask for input on this committee's work from 26 local bar associations spread 27 across the State as well as discuss the issues that will come up in these hearings with the diversity bars 28 here in Colorado. Any improvements to the judicial system by the work of this committee, in that the 29 CBA supports improvements to the judicial system and disciplinary process, will benefit not only CBA
30 members by helping us better represent our clients, it will help every lawyer who practices in Colorado 31 courts whether or not those lawyers are CBA members. One of my colleagues, Letty Maxfield testified 32 at the previous committee hearings on the bill that the vast majority of judicial proceedings are 33 adversarial, and we understand that the vast majority of requests for evaluation of conduct of a judge or 34 justice are grounded in dissatisfaction with the court's disposition of particular matter or issue. The line 35 between a complaint by disaffected litigant and potential allegations of misconduct needs to be more 36 clearly drawn. This concern is not shared by all involved in this process, but the CBA hopes that this 37 distinction between disaffected litigants and citizens with allegations of genuine misconduct is kept in 38 mind as modifications to the judicial disciplinary process are considered so Colorado does not lose 39 highly qualified jurists or highly qualified candidates from the increasingly diverse pool who want to 40 become judges in the future. Improvements to the disciplinary system must be fair and equitable for all

1 to have confidence, and hopefully increased confidence in the judicial system, mainly the citizens here 2 in Colorado. The CBA looks forward to working with this committee to increase that confidence.

3
4 Sen. Lee

5 Thank you Mr. Thank you, Mr. Toft, for your testimony. Any questions? Senator Gardner.

6
7 Sen. Gardner

8 Thank you, Mr. Chair, really, no question. Mr. Toft, just thank you for being here, thanks for being here 9 on behalf of the Bar, and I really invite you and members of the Bar to communicate with me, especially 10 about your concerns as we go forward. And I'm sure I speak for the entire committee on that. Thank 11 you.

12
13 Andrew Toft

14 Thank you, Senator.

15
16 Sen. Lee

17 And I would affirm the comments of Senator Gardner that encourage your members to contact us and 18 raise any issues of concern with us. We're vitally interested in getting input, so communicate that to 19 them, and we look forward to hearing back. Thanks again for being here.

20
21 Andrew Toft

22 Thank you very much.

23
24 Sen. Lee

25 Rep Carver.

26
27 Rep. Carver

28 Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I'm sure you've heard this numerous times. I'm sure you read it in the bill, but 29 it would be most helpful, given the substantive issues, 18 in total, listed out in 201 for the CBA, the 30 different bar sections, the local bar associations, not just to think about testimony, but which we have to 31 limit to a certain number of minutes, but to delve into those sections, and to submit written comments on 32 any or all of those topics and get them to Juliann. Those are the types of input that the committee 33 members can be digesting upon receipt. Given our short time frame, given our limited number of 34 hearings, and obviously we're also looking at how we reach out beyond the bar associations to legal 35 societies, the public, others. So that they know the topics which are our mandate from the legislature to 36 address, and they know a way to submit that so that we can start hearing those comments and digesting 37 that as soon as possible. So, thank you.

38
39 Andrew Toft

40 Thank you.

1 Sen. Lee

2 Thank you, Mr. Toft again. Appreciate it. Marilee McLean. Is Ms. McLean here? She is remote.
3 Welcome. Thanks for joining us. If you would identify yourself and your affiliation and provide us with 4 your testimony.

5

6 Marilee McLean

7 Yes, Mr. Chair and interim committee. My name is Marilee McLean. I'm the Executive Director for 8 Mom's Fight Back, which is a nonprofit here in Colorado, 501 (c)(4) that works on legislation. And I 9 just want you to know that I've been working 30 years on courtroom reform and the problems that we're 10 having in the system with our judges. I've been speaking and writing on this issue to improve our family 11 court. This is a national crisis, not just here in Colorado. But what's happening is you want to have 12 legislation reform, and is it constrained by the Colorado constitution, which says that the Commission 13 on Judicial Discipline must keep the majority of the discipline confidential, and gives the State, the 14 Supreme Court the authority to set rules for the group. Under the Constitution, only the Colorado 15 Supreme Court, not to the Commission and so they can censure, they can remove and suspend judges.
16 Once again, leading judges to determine judge's discipline. The interim committee, you need to know 17 that judges every day are silencing good, loving moms that are trying to protect their children. I live in 18 this, every day. I have calls from all across the nation and right here in Colorado, hundreds. This year we 19 passed legislation which is called Julie's law. HB 21-1238 which was to do with training for CFIs, PREs 20 but judges were the main source that needed that training. They need training on domestic violence, 21 specified training, child abuse, child sexual abuse, trauma, coercive control, and that is not happening.
22 And when they're on a bench for two years and are rotating, they're not getting the education that they 23 need, no five hours that they get a year that they can pick. They need specific training on these issues.
24 Our children in this State are going to live with their abusers in epidemic numbers. They are children 25 that have been murdered. So, we really need to take a look at this. Most of these cases are domestic 26 violence cases. This year, I gave you the legislation that was passed. And the other thing I wanted to say, 27 you know, there's an example. I just want to give you an example here. And I know you've heard about 28 Judge Natalie Chase. But I was involved in that case where the protective mom, Natalie Chase sent her 29 to jail. There was no First Amendment rights for that mother, the 14th Amendment, lack of due process.
30 The behavior in the courtroom was abhorrent. I mean, if any of you could see how Natalie Chase treated 31 this good, loving mother, that was just trying to protect her children. It was absolutely crazy. And there 32 was least 15 other public outrage from people that have actually gone through the system and had the 33 same problems. And this isn't a he said, she said. This is about abuse, and if they don't understand abuse, 34 this is a huge problem. So anyway, Chase sentenced this mother to 18 months in jail. Recently, there 35 was an appeal that just came out, went to the Supreme Court, and this is what I find, is amazing, and it's 36 absolutely absurd. She would not allow this mother. She already spent $350,000 on legal fees. She 37 would not allow this mother at the point that she had no representation, one month before she was going 38 into court, couldn't find her an attorney, so she went pro se. She worked months. I mean, that whole 39 month, just trying to pull together what she would say in court. The judge would not let her talk. She 40 was not allowed to speak, so she ends up wanting to get an attorney, but Judge Chase said she had too

1 much money. She didn't she would not allow her to get his attorney to represent her. So, this woman had 2 represented herself pro se, went to jail, and now, this is the latest. The Colorado Court of Appeals last 3 week sent the mother back to finish a year of jail sentence for violating the judge's gag order issued by 4 Judge Natalie Chase and under all the stuff that she's gone on with her and the misconduct of this judge, 5 the Court of Appeals admitted that there was substantial constitutional issues with the gag order.
6 However, they upheld it, and when the judges have shown to be unfit, their ruling should be reviewed, 7 and that's what I'm asking bound by judicial canons. So, you know, that's not all of it. Because they are 8 throwing out evidence. They have admissibility problems, admissibility standards. They can bring in 9 information that they want to bring in, and they can throw out whatever they want. This needs to be 10 looked at. And so I'm hoping this year, with you guys in the interim committee, that you can listen to 11 other mothers or the women that I'm dealing with that are going through this, and our children are not 12 safe, and the safety of the children come first. So, our judges need lots of training. That's my information 13 for you guys. Thank you.

14

15 Sen. Lee

16 Thank you for your testimony. I would. Refrain from applause. This is a hearing. It's not a 17 demonstration, but we appreciate your participation. You're certainly welcome to testify. Okay, next on 18 the list is Mr. Robin Austin, remotely, is Mr. Austin with us? How about Ms. Luanne Fleming? Ariana 19 Busby?

20

21 Ariana Busby

22 Yes, I'm here.

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 Hey, Ms. Busby, welcome to the Judiciary Committee. Thanks for joining us. If you would introduce 26 yourself, tell us who you represent, if you're affiliated, and provide us with your testimony.

27

28 Ariana Busby

29 Yes, thank you Mr. Chair. Hello everyone, and thank you for your leadership on this committee. My 30 name is Arianna Busby. I'm here on behalf of the Colorado Women's Bar Association, where I'm one of 31 their Public Policy Co-Chairs. I'm a litigator in private practice, but many of you may know me from my 32 time as a staffer in the Senate. I believe many of you also have the opportunity colleague, Alison, this 33 morning, and our other representatives of the legislative section. We're not prepared at this time to 34 provide any recommendations, but we would echo many of the sentiments offered by the Colorado Bar 35 Association today by Andy, I'm sorry. Can you hear me?

36

37 Sen. Lee

38 If you could just slow down a little bit it might be easier to follow you.

39

40

1 Ariana Busby

2 Of course, I'm so sorry.

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 That's all right.

6

7 Ariana Busby

8 As I was saying, we're not prepared to offer any recommendations at this time. However, we would echo 9 many of the sentiments offered by the Colorado Bar Association, and we would thank you for the 10 opportunity to participate in this committee moving forward. Representative Carver, we greatly 11 appreciate your comments about having the Bar Association to be involved in future presentations. If 12 that is something that you guys do move forward with, we would just respectfully request that those 13 presentations be scheduled for that third meeting after the independent investigations are scheduled.
14 Thank you.

15

16 Rep. Carver

17 Thank you. This is Rep. Carver. We'll certainly keep you apprised through Juliann and certainly 18 understand that would be useful, I think, for all the bar sections and CBA to have an opportunity to look 19 at the investigators' report, and we appreciate that. We're hoping to get those reports soon. Thank you so 20 much.

21

22 Ariana Busby

23 Thank you.

24

25 Sen. Lee

26 Thank you. Ms Busby, any other questions for Ms. Busby from the committee? Seeing none thank you 27 again, and we look forward to hearing more from you.

28

29 Ariana Busby

30 Thank you.

31

32 Sen. Lee

33 Okay. Kathy Wilson, do we have submitted text from Ms. Wilson? Okay, did you want to testify? Come 34 on up.

35

36 Deborah Carroll

37 Oh, Thank you.

38

39 Sen. Lee

40 Take your time.

Deborah Carroll

Thank you.

Sen. Lee

If you would, please introduce yourself, tell us your name, any affiliation that you may have, and please accept my appreciation for staying with us. You've been with us a good part of the day. So, thank you for that.

Deborah Carroll

Well, I appreciate you letting me speak without signing up. I do recognize the seriousness and the types of cases that judges deal with. The craziness that human beings can demonstrate in times of weakness and vengeance. And, you know, the whole realm of human behavior.

Sen. Lee

Could you identify yourself, please? That's all right.

Deborah Carroll

My name is Deborah Carroll, and I am affiliated with the Judicial Integrity Project for 10 years, as well as numerous mothers and fathers rights organizations across the United States of America. A lot of them have been shut down by Facebook. So we're reestablishing connections. Anyway, I want to say I recognize the job. I recognize. I go to court and I watch what's happening. And my first experience was in family court, where a mother had two ex-husbands who were allowed to be ganged, she was allowed to be ganged up by Magistrate Christopher Bois Annette in Jefferson County Court, so that both fathers hearings were one after the other, and when they would restrict her with one one child, they would automatically restrict her with her three children. So, I was a school teacher for 33 years, and I had absolutely no idea about what was happening to the children in their families, and that started in 2011. I've joined every group I could since then, and I've expanded beyond family court to also be involved with a lot of the cases that Luanne Fleming and Robin Austin work within probate court, and I have been in juvenile court on many, many occasions, watching unbelievable, bad outcomes for children. What I want to say is, when did this happen? When did it happen that the American public is afraid of the courts? That is, we need a sea change. In the bill 22-201, I repeatedly read about the need to avoid the appearance of impropriety. I would add the avoidance of appearance of extortion, coercion, collusion and profiteering. And one of the things that I am asking for as part of a long term affiliation with the Judicial Integrity Project in the refusal of Colorado courts and judges to reveal their conflicts of interest and financial holdings, I have done research on CHAFA, and I would like to know how many legislators, judges and attorneys and Bar Association affiliates and others have bought real estate through their LLCs and their IRAs and other forms of hiding where their money is going. That houses players in the cottage industry of the courts, which includes the urine analysis and drug testing sites, the rehabilitation centers. How many of those are owned by legislators and the above the judges who have

1 received favorable financing to send court parties to receive child family investigators, parental 2 responsibility evaluators, trauma bond therapists and other court ordered services being provided out of 3 buildings owned by judges and others. Not only would I like to suggest that investigation to take place, I 4 would like to start the ability of the public to respond to unfair treatment in the courtroom, questionable 5 practices, not allowing their witnesses to be called, just unfavorable bias against them. And I would like 6 to have the State of Colorado pay for a rogue judge hotline where people can call and tell what happened
7 in their cases. Right now, the reporting, I don't know what's going on with my time. It's going up. I 8 appreciate that. I don't need it.

9

10 Sen. Lee

11 That's all, right, you exceeded your limit, but I wanted to allow you to continue testifying, so we'll just 12 turn it off and okay, just finish up if you would.

13

14 Deborah Carroll

15 I don't really. I mean, my ideas, I have many ideas, but I want you to know the bottom line for me is, 16 what's happened to our children. I believe that a lot of what's going on in the craziness of these school 17 shootings and others are related to decisions made or not made in the courtrooms, where to place the 18 children, who to give them to, or where to leave them when they should be removed. So we have a big 19 problem here. And I don't, I don't know about, you know all of this focusing on the scandal. There's a 20 whole lot of information about what went wrong, but I'm telling you, it's much bigger problem than the 21 scandal of paying off somebody to give them a contract to shut her up about filing a sexual harassment 22 charge against a judge. There's a lot bigger problems. Mr. Forsyth talked about. It's not just about DUIs.
23 It's about destroying families and what happens to the innocents. And I just want you to know this is 24 about my 18th appearance in front of a legislative hearing or a committee, and I have a lot more to say, 25 but I won't trouble you with that. I appreciate you listening to me.

26

27 Sen. Lee

28 Okay, well, we appreciate you coming to this hearing, and you're certainly welcome to come back and 29 participate again at one of our other hearings, we're going to have four further hearings, and as I say, 30 you're welcome to come back and testify and share your thoughts and ideas with us. So, thank you.

31

32 Deborah Carroll

33 Thank you.

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Any questions? Seeing none? Are there any other witnesses who would like to testify before this 37 committee? Come forward, please.

2 Hello. My name is Halina Topa. I have an accent. I'm originally from Poland. In fact, I'm going to 3 Poland in August.

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 Can you spell your last name?

7

8 Halina Topa

9 T,O,P,A, like Tom O, P, like Peter A, and I just wanted to say that I came in the United States in 1974 to 10 escape possible Russian invasion. Both of my parents were Nazi fighters. My mother was shot by Nazis 11 on three different occasions. Now, I'm not Jewish. Hitler attacked Poland, and on one occasion, a Nazi 12 officer has saved her life. I've been a victim of and what I wanted to say, which is very, very important, 13 that Poland is safest places for women and children, I make a joke, is because our government knows 14 that Polish men run faster than Polish women. Okay, so what I have encountered in United States is 15 absolutely disgusting, and I am an American citizen, and I am over here to bring positive criticism. I've 16 been victim of domestic violence. I was basically sex trafficked. Okay? I have a child with what in 17 Poland would call baby chaser, a man who wants a baby, but, you know, you he cannot go to the sperm 18 bank or ovaries bank. Okay? So, I was beaten, kicks, strangled. I was left on the highway nine months 19 pregnant for getting sick in the car. Then I was sued for custody. I was attacked after childbirth. I was 20 involved from hospital. I know people who escaped from Auschwitz. Okay. Dr Bilinski, he's dead. I 21 know the things that are happening to United States should be of very much concern. We have police 22 who doesn't know the law. We have we have criminals in the uniforms, and when I see you people, my 23 child was kidnapped by parental alienation, okay? And women are being sued for custody for the babies 24 which I being Polish and the Polish joke. Your Honor, Your Honor, I impregnated around women.
25 Please help me. I'm a I'm a red blooded American and a future president. You know, if men cannot pick 26 a good woman for a mother, what's wrong with people? You even considering giving him? You know, 27 what is wrong with you people? What is wrong with you people? I seen, I saw the movie with zombies, 28 and that's when my child was kidnapped. K.J. Moore, when I testified in United States and in Colorado.
29 Judge Palidori, when I testified around being kicked and beaten, you know, and you know it was, I was 30 like stupid and, and the Judge Palidori in Jefferson County, Colorado, United States, she says, Halina 31 has no ability to encourage love and affection towards the child's father. I don't have ability to encourage 32 love and affection towards Stalin either or Hitler. Okay, what is, why do you why you allow stupid 33 people, stupid cops being in the public? What are you doing? Maybe I don't know. I have a Polish joke, 34 you know, and you know, maybe I'm very, very my son was kidnapped. He was self-mutilating himself 35 in his father's custody. And Judge, K.J. Moore, who is, who is still, a judge, I filed for emergency 36 custody, and she says the child is not in immediate danger. Well, you are because you went to the law 37 school. Was it Harvard or yellow or where did you get so stupid? Stupid, you know, why Polish people 38 are called dumb. Because we don't get stupid, and I'm accusing you in United States today, today of 39 lacking heart, common sense and balls. Have some balls. Don't be diluted John Wayne's okay. We have

1 fought in Poland very much for freedom and Poland is a lot better than you. Shame on you. Get up and 2 do something.

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Thank you, Ms. Topa. Thank you for your testimony. Any other witnesses who would like to testify this 6 afternoon, seeing none the testimony phase is concluded. Seeing no further business before the

JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE in Colorado

Merit Selection

Colorado's Judicial Merit Selection System:

50 years of choosing judges based on merit. Not money. Not politics.

In 1966, Colorado voters approved a merit selection system for judicial appointments. This citizen-involved process helps ensure that Colorado judges are highly-qualified, fair, and impartial. It is the gold standard that safeguards equal treatment for all Coloradans coming into court.

How does it work?

Effective judicial discipline is an important part of a trusted and trustworthy court system. The public must know that judicial ethics and violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct are taken seriously. Absent that assurance, the system appears self-serving, protectionist, and even potentially corrupt. And it is not just the reality of the existence of effective systems that matters; it is also the appearance. A wholly effective system with no transparency and no public confidence will not suffice.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE SYSTEMS

PREFACE

Until the 1960s, the formal methods for addressing allegations of state judges' misconduct, such as legislative impeachment or recall elections, were cumbersome and time-consuming. These shortcomings were highlighted when scandals rocked several state judiciaries,¹ revealing a need for more efficient disciplinary procedures. Starting in 1960, California and eventually all states established variously named bodies (this Report uses the generic term "commission") to investigate allegations of judicial misconduct or disability and—where appropriate—prosecute, adjudicate, and either recommend discipline to the state's highest court or impose it, subject to appellate review.²

Effective judicial discipline is an important part of a trusted and trustworthy court system. The public must know that judicial ethics and violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct are taken seriously. Absent that assurance, the system appears self-serving, protectionist, and even potentially corrupt. And it is not just the reality of the existence of effective systems that matters; it is also the appearance. A wholly effective system with no transparency and no public confidence will not suffice.

another, although it offers some generalizations based in part on a May 2018 IAALS staff review of commission websites. Cynthia Gray, who directs the National Center for State Courts Center for Judicial Ethics, has highlighted some principal variations in her work.³ And the Center publishes quarterly its very helpful Judicial Conduct Reporter, with summaries of commission activities and decisions, among other publications.⁴

Finally, we recognize that many of the practices that we endorse in this Report are already in place in many or even most states. In short, the system is already doing a good job in many areas. We also recognize that commission structure, jurisdiction, and operations may be beyond a commission's authority to change, based as they are in constitutions, statutes, and court rules. In this Report, we seek to identify some better practices that commissions, state supreme courts, and legislatures can review and identify as doable and advisable—or not. We also seek to identify concrete ways to improve the trustworthiness of the judiciary. This Report is a companion document to IAALS' report on its 2017 Judicial Recusal Convening,⁵ and both reports seek to identify concrete ways to improve public confidence in the judiciary.

Former judiciary workers urge Congress to protect court employees from discrimination and harassment

By Ann E. Marimow

Secretive and cozy judicial oversight systems enable judges to subvert accountability in many states. Exhibit A: Oklahoma, where not a single judge was publicly disciplined in 14 years. When the state finally did charge a judge with wrongdoing, he was allowed to resign, his record pristine and his pension intact.

By MICHAEL BERENS and JOHN SHIFFMAN in BARTLESVILLE, OKLAHOMA | Filed July 9, 2020, 10:53 a.m. GMT

District Court Judge Curtis DeLapp was renowned for his hair-trigger temper. Mispronounce his name, come to court a few seconds late, fail to rise as quickly as he'd like – no slight was too small to set him off.

For almost a dozen years, DeLapp used his power to terrify people who appeared

PURPOSE OF JUDICIAL ETHICS OVERSIGHT

The Center for Judicial Ethics was created by the National Center for State Courts as the leading source of information for judicial conduct commissions and about commissions. The Center for Judicial Ethics has explained the purpose of the conduct commissions as follows:

Every state has a judicial discipline system that reviews, investigates, prosecutes, and adjudicates complaints about judges. The primary purpose of these systems is not to punish judges but to maintain and restore public confidence in the integrity, independence, and impartiality of judges and the judicial system by:

- Enforcing rigorous standards of judicial conduct on and off the bench,
- Reassuring the public that the judiciary does not tolerate or condone judicial misconduct but recognizes and condemns it,
- Deterring further misconduct by the respondent judge,
- Deterring similar misconduct by other judges,
- Impressing upon judges the significance of misconduct,
- Making the public aware of what constitutes proper and improper judicial conduct,
- Protecting judges from false or unfounded accusations, and
- Maintaining the necessary balance between accountability and judicial independence.

To accomplish those goals, judicial conduct commissions:

- Assist judges who have committed minor ethical violations change their behavior,
- Impose or recommend a public sanction when warranted, and
- Secure the removal of a judge from office when necessary.

Handbook for Members of Judicial Conduct Commissions at 4.

Colorado's own Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System ("IAALS") has explained the history and role of judicial conduct commissions as follows:

Until the 1960s, the formal methods for addressing allegations of state judges' misconduct, such as legislative impeachment or recall elections, were cumbersome and time-consuming. These shortcomings were highlighted when scandals rocked several state judiciaries,¹ revealing a need for more efficient disciplinary procedures. Starting in 1960, California and eventually all states established variously named bodies (this Report uses the generic term "commission") to investigate allegations of judicial misconduct or disability and—where appropriate—prosecute, adjudicate, and either recommend discipline to the state's highest court or impose it, subject to appellate review.²

Effective judicial discipline is an important part of a trusted and trustworthy court system. The public must know that judicial ethics and violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct are taken seriously. Absent that assurance, the system appears self-serving, protectionist, and even potentially corrupt. And it is not just the reality of the existence of effective systems that matters; it is also the appearance. A wholly effective system with no transparency and no public confidence will not suffice.

Recommendations for Judicial Discipline Systems at 1, IAALS (July 2018).

The director of the Center for Judicial Ethics, Cynthia Gray, has further explained,

To maintain and restore public confidence in the integrity, independence, and impartiality of their judiciary, each of the fifty states, beginning with California in 1960, has established a judicial conduct organization charged with investigating and prosecuting complaints against judicial officers. Although punishment plays an "undeniable role" in judicial discipline (Johnstone, 2000, at 1234), protecting the public, not sanctioning judges, is the primary purpose of the judicial conduct commissions.

One way to protect the public is to remove the offending judge from office. . . . [A]nother way to protect the public is to keep it informed of judicial transgressions and their consequences, so that it knows that its government actively investigates allegations of judicial misconduct and takes appropriate action when these allegations are proved. Judicial discipline thus protects the public by fostering public confidence in the integrity of a self-policing judicial system (Johnstone, at 1234).

In addition, sanctions deter further misconduct by the disciplined judge and other judges.

Gray, Cynthia, How Judicial Conduct Commission Work, 28 Justice System Journal 3 (2007).

The Colorado Supreme Court has adopted the following descriptions of the role of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the "Discipline Commission"):

The [Discipline] Commission is responsible for maintaining the integrity and independence of the judiciary.¹

...

The Constitutional mandate of the [Discipline] Commission is to protect the public from improper conduct of judges; preserve the integrity of the judicial process; maintain public confidence in the judiciary; create greater awareness of proper judicial behavior on the part of the judiciary and the public; and provide for the fair and expeditious disposition of complaints of judicial misconduct or judicial disabilities.²

Credible systems for the oversight of judicial ethics allow the judicial branch of government to maintain its special position of trust in our society so that it may maintain decisional independence. Without a credible system that ensures ethical behavior by judges, we run a high risk of losing the benefits of a judiciary whose decisions are insulated from popular politics, a judiciary where all stand equal before the law with cases decided on merit rather than influence.

COLORADO'S ADOPTION OF A JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE COMMISSION

In the middle of the 20th Century, Colorado had a highly politicized judicial system that relied on partisan elections to select judges. The system had frequent problems with incompetent, corrupt, and biased judges. In 1962, the Colorado General Assembly referred a constitutional amendment to reform the structure of Colorado's judiciary to the voters. The measure passed with an overwhelming majority.

In 1966, the League of Women Voters used Colorado's initiative process to present a further amendment to Colorado voters. With this amendment, Colorado would adopt a merit selection system for selecting judges (commonly called the "Missouri Plan") and for overseeing judges. This proposal was known as "Amendment 3." The voters of Colorado adopted Amendment 3 through the initiative process.

As part of court reform, Amendment 3 created the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the "Discipline Commission"). Under the thinking of the era, Amendment 3's design for oversight of judicial ethics was progressive. Instead of leaving judicial ethics wholly to the judiciary for opaque self-policing, Amendment 3 created an independent Discipline Commission. The Discipline Commission was created to have multiple perspectives and voices in overseeing judicial ethics, with representatives of the judiciary, the bar, and non-lawyer citizens. As a further check, Amendment 3 diversified the appointment authority for commission membership. Before that era, judicial ethics was usually left exclusively to judges with no outside oversight and little accountability other than the election of judges.

Once adopted, Amendment 3 became Article VI, § 23(3) of the Colorado Constitution. It has remained essentially unchanged for 65 years.

² Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline, Rule 1(b) (emphasis added).

SCOPE OF AUTHORITY OF COLORADO'S DISCIPLINE COMMISSION

The Discipline Commission's general authority and function are defined by Article VI, § 23 of the Colorado Constitution. The Discipline Commission has authority over justices and judges "of any court of record of this state." This has been interpreted to mean:

- Judges of the county court,
- Judges of the district court,
- Judges of the court of appeals, and
- Justices of the state supreme court.

The Discipline Commission does not have authority over federal judges sitting in Colorado, magistrate judges, municipal court judges, or non-judge personnel of the Colorado Judicial Department.

Colorado's Discipline Commission is to take actions within its powers regarding a judge or justice for:

- Willful misconduct in office,
- Willful or persistent failure(s) to perform duties,
- Intemperance, and
- Violation(s) of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct.

Within the context of its disciplinary powers,³ the Discipline Commission is further authorized to:

- Conduct investigations,
- Order informal remedial action,
- Order a formal hearing before the Discipline Commission,
- Call for appointment of a panel of three special masters (who must be qualified judges or justices) to hold a hearing and issue a report to the Discipline Commission, or
- Recommend public discipline to the Colorado Supreme Court.

The Discipline Commission has direct authority to impose private discipline on a judge. However, with respect to public discipline, the Discipline Commission only has authority to make recommendations to the Colorado Supreme Court. Under the current system, only the justices of the Colorado Supreme Court have authority to impose public discipline on a justice or judge such as a public censure or removal from office.

The Colorado Constitution makes no provision for deciding judicial discipline cases when the members of the Colorado Supreme Court have conflicts of interest that would otherwise disqualify them for sitting on the case under the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct.

³ The Discipline Commission also has authority to take action in cases of judicial disability. The Discipline Commission's role in disability proceedings is not further discussed in this report as it is not central to the current discussion.

THE CASELOAD—ALLEGATIONS, JUDGES, AND VICTIMS

Pursuant to the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (“Colo. RJD”), the Discipline Commission publishes an annual report with a detailed breakdown of the caseload it handles. These annual reports can be reviewed at http://www.coloradojudicialdiscipline.com/Annual_reports.html

The Discipline Commission receives allegations of misconduct by judges and requests to investigate possible misconduct. The Colo. RJD refer to these collectively as “Requests for Evaluation” or “RFEs.” The Discipline Commission receives approximately 200⁴ written RFEs alleging judicial misconduct per year.

A large majority of the allegations of misconduct received by the Discipline Commission are facially invalid. The largest portion of the allegations are simply complaints of disagreement with a ruling entered by a judge filed by a disgruntled litigant. The Discipline Commission does not act as an appellate court. The Discipline Commission also receives a large number of allegations of misconduct against professionals outside its authority, such as federal judges, magistrate judges, judicial administrative personnel, and personnel from other branches of government.

Over 90% of the allegations of misconduct received by the Discipline Commission are outside of the Commission’s jurisdiction or don’t meet the criteria for further action and do not progress beyond the initial “evaluation” stage, the initial screening stage assigned to the Discipline Commission. This ratio is consistent with judicial conduct commissions across the United States.

Of the misconduct allegations received by the Discipline Commission annually, approximately 70 require the Commission to undertake factual investigation, to develop a factual record through gathering and reviewing evidence.

In many cases that involve actual misconduct, the judge acknowledges error and the discipline matter is resolved by agreement. In the majority of cases involving actual misconduct, the judge’s misconduct can be addressed and corrected, often through private discipline. In the most serious cases, the discipline will be public discipline.

In the most serious cases when an agreement cannot be reached between the responding judge and the Discipline Commission, the Commission files “formal proceedings.” For the understanding of most people, this is essentially a trial.

As of the date of this writing, Colorado has had 6 instances of public discipline since 2014. Half of these cases have involved male judges, half have involved female judges. Five of the six have involved judges that were understood to be members of the racial/ethnic majority.

⁴ The RFE’s for 2022 are currently on a pace to increase by approximately 25% to the 250 level.

Public Discipline Cases

	Judges Disciplined (6) ¹		Known Individual Recipients of Misconduct (14) ²
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Male	3	50%	1	7%
Female	3	50%	13	93%
White	5	83%	11 (3) ³	78%
BIPOC	1 (1) ⁴	7%	3	12%

² Litigants, attorneys, other groups affected cannot be quantified and are excluded, only a person that was the individual target of the misconduct is included.
³ Listed as white if race/ethnicity not known.
⁴ Discipline process was after Judge had already resigned facing criminal proceedings.

Cases involving public discipline are more likely than other cases to involve judicial misconduct that has one or more victims. The six cases of public discipline involved charges of misconduct victimizing 14 individuals.⁵ The victims of this judicial misconduct were overwhelmingly female at 93%. Approximately 12% of these individual victims were known to be diverse members of the community and that diversity was related to the misconduct.⁶ Most of these victims worked within the Judicial Department. Some were judge colleagues/peers of the responding judge, but most were non-judge personnel and at a lower level in the power structure.

Victims of serious judicial misconduct have described their experiences as follows:

- From different victims: Terrified, threatened, tears, appalled, angry, shocked, uncomfortable, nauseated, scared, in a daze, humiliating incident, hoped would never resurface
- Afraid I would get fired if I told administration about this
- I can't risk angering him, my clients are in precarious positions
- The judge might retaliate, and I felt my job was on the line
- I wanted to get out of the division
- I did not want to report to administration
- I was sweating, nervous, terrified, wanted to get out
- Scared to death I might get fired, then angry
- I did not want to tell anyone, just wait for a transfer
- A stab through my heart each time

⁵ After discipline of a judge is made public the Discipline Commission will often receive reports of other instances of misconduct involving other victims. The figures reported here are limited to the victims involved in the charged conduct. Later identified misconduct and victims are not included in these figures as these alleged instances were not litigated in these cases.

⁶ The reported figures are limited to individually involved victims and do not attempt to quantify those adversely affected by misconduct involving groups, whether groups of litigants or segments of society.

- I had to put up with it, I could not hurt my clients
- I was uncomfortable appearing in front of him
- I was horrified by being told [xxx] by someone I trusted as a professional mentor.
- Removed me from the equation altogether, erased my agency, ignored the power dynamics at play, convinced myself that reporting would prove futile

HOW DOES THE DISCIPLINE PROCESS WORK?

If one is familiar with the literature in judicial ethics, Colorado has a “two-tiered unified system.” Colorado’s system is “unified” rather than “bifurcated” because both the investigative and the adjudicative functions are combined in the Discipline Commission. The system is “two-tiered” because the Colorado Supreme Court, rather than the Discipline Commission, holds the authority to make the final discipline decisions and make final determinations of fact. This is not an uncommon mid-twentieth century model.

In Colorado, as in many states, the Discipline Commission acts largely as a form of grand jury. In general terms for the most typical serious cases, the Discipline Commission receives the allegation of misconduct, screens it, develops evidence, decides if a formal complaint should be opened, gets the position of the responding judge to the allegations, reviews more evidence, decides if the case should go to trial, and, after trial, recommends a sanction to the Colorado Supreme Court. The Colorado Supreme Court then reviews the record of prior proceedings, decides if further evidentiary hearings should be conducted, hears arguments, and decides whether a sanction should be imposed and, if imposed, what that sanction should be.

The Discipline Commission breaks this process down into 5 phases.

Intake and Screening In this initial phase, the Discipline Commission receives the allegation of judicial misconduct, the RFE. Under Colo. RJD 13, it performs a screening process. This process is designed, in part, to dispense with facially invalid and frivolous complaints as quickly as possible. If an allegation of misconduct is dismissed at this stage, the judge at issue is not even told of the allegation to avoid unnecessarily creating potential conflicts of interest.

The Discipline Commission is directed that it “shall” dismiss an allegation of misconduct at this stage immediately if the allegation has no “reasonable basis.” Colo. RJD 13(c).

Complaint Investigation If, and only if, an allegation of judicial misconduct is found to have a “reasonable basis,” the Discipline Commission is authorized to characterize the allegation as a “complaint” under Colo. RJD 14. This decision, in turn, triggers the formal “investigation” of the allegation by the Commission (as opposed to the “evaluation” of an allegation in the Intake and Screening phase). This Complaint Investigation is the second phase of Colorado’s judicial discipline process.

The Discipline Commission sends to the accused judge a formal notice of the allegations and decision to investigate under Colo. RJD 14(a). The Discipline Commission also pursues its investigation of the allegations, sometimes through the use of professional investigators and sometimes involving an attorney⁷ for assistance known as “special counsel.” The Discipline Commission has the authority to recommend to the Supreme Court an immediate temporary suspension of the judge at this phase or pursue expedited proceedings when circumstances warrant.

As suggested, the Discipline Commission’s primary role during the Complaint Investigation phase is to investigate the facts and gather evidence. While Colo. RJD 22 provides the Discipline Commission with subpoena power (again, much like a grand jury), the Colorado Judiciary has recently taken the position that the Discipline Commission does not hold subpoena power or any other fact gathering authority at this phase. Instead, the Colorado Judiciary has recently begun asserting that the Discipline Commission holds no authority to compel production of evidence.⁸

A case may advance out of this investigative phase and into the third phase if and only if the Discipline Commission finds that the available evidence proves the misconduct by a “preponderance of the evidence.” This is the familiar burden of proof applied by juries in civil trials such as personal injury cases and contract disputes.

⁷ Traditionally, these personnel have been provided by the Supreme Court’s Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel.

Formal Proceedings This third phase is the equivalent of the trial for judicial misconduct. Unlike a civil case in which a plaintiff needs only a good faith basis to file a case or a criminal case in which the People only need probable cause to file a criminal charge, formal proceedings in judicial discipline may only be filed if the charge has already been established by a preponderance of the evidence. Thus, a discipline trial cannot even be scheduled until after the case has been proven by a preponderance of evidence. This process is governed by Part C of the Colo. RJD.

Under Colorado’s Constitution, the Discipline Commission has two choices in pursuing formal proceedings. The Discipline Commission may hold the hearing itself or it may have the hearing held before three special masters who are judges. Colo. Const. Art. VI, §23(3)(e). However, when the Colorado Supreme Court adopted the Rules of Judicial Discipline, it omitted rules to govern formal proceedings held by the Discipline Commission. The rules as designed by the Supreme Court only provide for judges to conduct constitutional formal proceedings.

The charges of misconduct are brought in formal proceedings in the name of the People of Colorado, just like a criminal case. The People are represented by “special counsel” rather than a district attorney. The special counsel is appointed by the Discipline Commission. At the request of the Discipline Commission, the Supreme Court appoints a panel of three special masters to hear the formal proceedings. The rules do not make clear who selects the judges that serve as the special masters. Traditionally, the Supreme Court has selected the judges who will serve as special masters.

The standard of proof at formal proceedings requires the misconduct charges to be proven by “clear and convincing evidence.” If one or more allegations of misconduct are proven, the special masters, if used, enter formal findings and make recommendations to the Discipline Commission for sanction. The special counsel that handled the formal proceedings also makes recommendations to the Discipline Commission for sanction.

Recommendations After formal proceedings, the Discipline Commission receives the record of the proceedings, the findings following trial, the recommendations of the special masters if special masters were used, and the recommendations of the special counsel. The Discipline Commission then reviews these materials and formulates its recommendations for the Colorado Supreme Court. See Colo. Const. Art. VI, §23(e).

The Discipline Commission files its recommendations with the Colorado Supreme Court accompanied by the record of the proceedings.

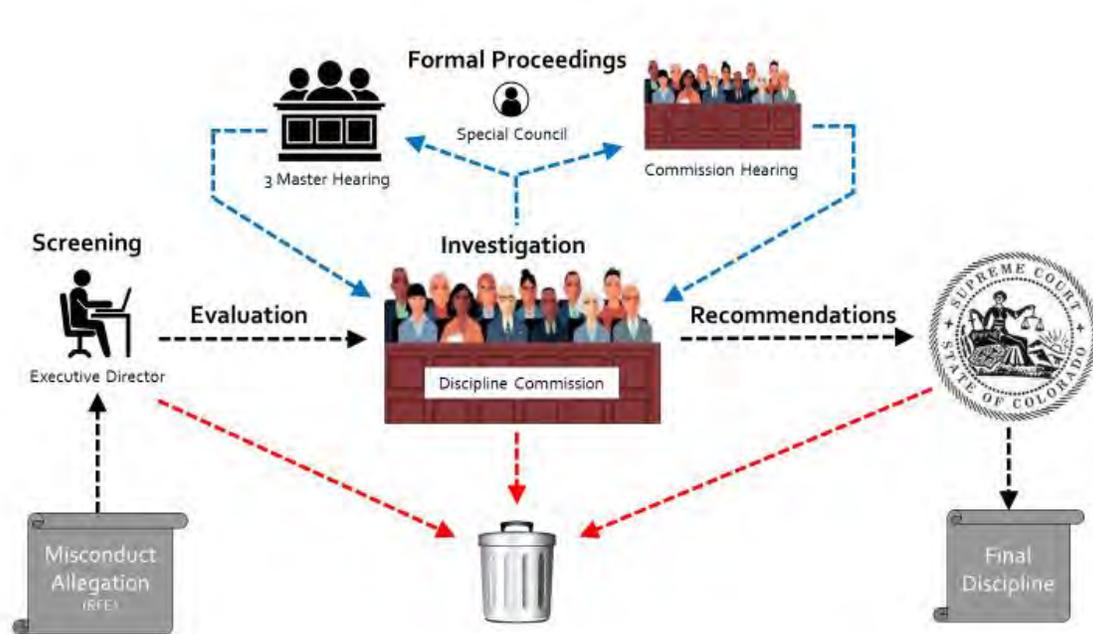

All of the disciplinary proceedings have been confidential under Colorado’s Constitution until this phase. The filing of the recommendations is not ordinarily confidential (though the Supreme Court appears to have the authority to make all or portions of the filings confidential). The filing of the record with the recommendations does not deprive any confidential materials of their confidential status. Therefore, any privileged or confidential materials examined in the disciplinary process retain their confidential or privileged status. See Colo. Const. Art. VI, §23(3)(g). The recently enacted statute also confirms these continuing privilege/confidentially protections at C.R.S. § 13-5.3-106(6)(e).

Supreme Court Final Decision Proceedings The fifth and final phase of judicial discipline proceedings is held by the Colorado Supreme Court under Colo. RJD 39. The Supreme Court receives the record and recommendations from the Discipline Commission. The Supreme Court may then conduct further proceedings as it deems fit, including gathering more evidence, before making a final decision on discipline, whether it should be imposed and what sanction to impose if any is warranted.

The path of an allegation of judicial misconduct through Colorado’s current system of judicial discipline is depicted below.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE DISCIPLINE COMMISSION

The membership of Colorado’s Discipline Commission is defined in our Constitution. The commissioners are comprised of 10 uncompensated members. The judiciary holds 4 positions, 2 district court judges and 2 county court judges. These judge members are all appointed by the Chief Justice of the Colorado Supreme Court. Of the remaining positions, 2 are required to be attorneys and 4 are non-attorney citizens. The attorney and lay members of the Discipline Commission are selected by the Governor and confirmed by the Senate. All Commissioners serve on a volunteer basis without compensation (other than necessary reimbursement for travel expenses incurred in performance of the Commissioners’ duties).

The current members of the Discipline Commission are as follows:

Judges

Hon. Rachel Fresquez
Hon. Sara Garrido
Hon. Bonnie McLean
Hon. David Prince

Attorneys

Elizabeth Espinosa Krupa
Mindy Sooter

Citizens

Jim Carpenter
Bruce Casias
Yolonda Lyons
Drucilla Pugh

Colorado has followed a tradition of ensuring diversity of perspective and membership on the Discipline Commission. The current membership is 70% female. Of the judge members, 75% are female. Half of the members are racially or ethnically diverse. Only 20% of the members are majority males. This compares to the Colorado population which is evenly divided by gender and is 67% white. This compares to the Colorado judiciary which is 84% white and 59% male.

The special masters that preside over formal proceedings are required to be judges or justices but may include retired judges or justices.

CURRENT CHALLENGES TO COLORADO’S SYSTEM OF JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE

In February of 2021, the press reported allegations that the Colorado Judiciary had suppressed complaints of misconduct against judges. The press reported allegations that the Colorado Judiciary had bought the silence of witnesses to judicial misconduct allegations. The events and revelations that followed have illustrated structural impediments to the Discipline Commission fulfilling its Constitutional mandate.

The challenges facing Colorado’s judicial discipline system are not unique to Colorado. Other jurisdictions have faced analogous problems in recent years. A series of articles by Reuters addressed similar issues and can be found at <https://www.reuters.com/investigates/section/usa-judges/>. The federal judiciary of the United States is facing analogous structural challenges. See <https://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/2022/05/16/judges-accused-discrimination-bullying/>. Pennsylvania undertook its own examination of its system of judicial discipline in recent years. See <https://www.pmconline.org/resources/2017-report-recommendations-improving-pennsylvanias-judicial-discipline-system>

Colorado also is not alone in conducting the kind of review this interim committee is undertaking. Montana recently enacted legislation, HJ40, creating an interim committee to study and audit its judicial discipline process. See <https://montanafreepress.org/2021/09/14/montana-republicans-question-judges-about-ethics/>. The NCSC’s Center for Judicial Ethics reports that California is also pursuing a process for reviewing its judicial discipline system after an audit found shortcomings. See generally <https://www.courthousenews.com/california-auditor-calls-judicial-misconduct-probes-weak/> (discussing the audit results). And, as the Washington Post article cited above discusses, the U.S. Congress is examining the system of judicial discipline in the federal court system.

While the factual situation bringing these issues to the forefront may be unique to Colorado, the issues and the need to update antiquated systems of judicial discipline are arising to one degree or another in jurisdictions across the country.

This Report will address the impediments to effective judicial discipline illustrated recently in Colorado’s system using the five-phase structure discussed above and then discuss system-wide impediments.

Intake and Screening The Colorado Constitution created a single, multi-perspective, citizen-involved entity to examine allegations of judicial misconduct. That entity is the Discipline Commission. However, the Discipline Commission cannot examine allegations of judicial misconduct that it does not know about. The events of 2021-22 revealed that the Colorado Judiciary has not been disclosing some allegations of serious judicial misconduct.

The Colo. RJD assign to the Discipline Commission the task of screening for merit allegations of judicial misconduct. See Colo. RJD 13. The Discipline Commission is tasked with dismissing immediately misconduct allegations that are frivolous or otherwise unsupportable. See id. The Colorado Judiciary is not granted screening authority with respect to allegations of judicial misconduct.

In recognition of the Discipline Commission’s screening and examination roles, the Discipline Commission entered a written contract with the Colorado Judiciary dated February 5, 2010. The 2010 agreement is still in effect today. The 2010 agreement requires the Colorado Judiciary to report to the Discipline Commission allegations of judicial misconduct that it receives. If the Colorado Judiciary conducts a “preliminary investigation” of an allegation of judicial misconduct, the 2010 agreement requires it to provide to the Discipline Commission “all” of the “investigatory notes and findings that address the alleged judicial misconduct.” These duties of disclosure attach regardless of the merits of the allegation.

Until 2021, the Discipline Commission believed the Colorado Judiciary was complying with the 2010 agreement and relied on that compliance. Events of 2021-22 have revealed that the Colorado Judiciary has not been complying with the 2010 agreement. The Colorado Judiciary has not disclosed to the Discipline Commission allegations of judicial misconduct as well as the results of their investigations of such allegations in some cases. Nondisclosure of judicial misconduct allegations and nondisclosure of file materials relevant to such allegations represent serious impediments to fulfillment of the Commission’s mandate to examine such allegations for potential merit.

When the Discipline Commission asked the Colorado Judiciary in early 2021 what policies had been adopted to implement the obligations stated in the 2010 agreement, the Colorado Judiciary’s response did not identify any comprehensive implementation efforts. Moreover, the Colorado Judiciary’s responses have indicated that it has entered one or more contracts with third parties that purported to block compliance with the disclosure requirements the Colorado Judiciary defined for itself in the 2010 agreement.

When the Discipline Commission learned that the 2010 contract obligations had not been honored, the Commission made requests for compliance. The Discipline Commission was unable to obtain compliance. The Colorado Judiciary declined to make the affirmative disclosures required by the 2010 agreement and asserted that it would only respond to specific questions. When the Discipline Commission posed those specific questions, the Colorado Judiciary would answer some but not others. The Colorado Judiciary would provide only limited information and few if any supporting documents. In one example, the Colorado Judiciary declined for several months even to identify the judge that was the subject of a publicly reported allegation of misconduct, also declining for nearly one year to identify the critical witnesses to the events at issue.

Faced with these challenges, the Discipline Commission concluded that it had no immediately available and practical means of enforcing the contractual disclosure obligations.

Newly enacted C.R.S. §13-5.3-106 addresses this impediment of nondisclosure by codifying the Colorado Judiciary's duty to disclose allegations of judicial misconduct to the Discipline Commission. However, the statute does not identify an enforcement mechanism in the event non-compliance is discovered. Thus, the practical situation may not have materially changed from 2021.

Complaint Investigation As noted above, in this phase the Discipline Commission acts like a grand jury, investigating and gathering information. The Discipline Commission has been reliant on the Colorado Judiciary's cooperation in providing it with access to file materials, personnel, and resources to conduct these investigations. The events of 2021-22 revealed that this access to information and resources is dependent on the level of cooperation provided by leadership of the Colorado Judiciary.

Resourcing Investigations

In the past, the Discipline Commission has been primarily reliant on personnel loaned by the Colorado Judiciary (specifically, the Supreme Court's Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel) to conduct these investigations. In 2021-22, the leadership of the Colorado Judiciary acted to impede the Discipline Commission's access to conflict-free personnel and resources. The leadership asserted the authority to control the scope of the Discipline Commission's investigatory assignments to special counsel and the authority to control the Discipline Commission's retention of special counsel.

The leadership of the Colorado Judiciary also asserted the authority to block funding for investigatory special counsel. The Discipline Commission's primary objection to this asserted authority was that any financial oversight should be through a conflict-free decision-maker. The Discipline Commission did not, and does not, object to oversight of its finances but objected to having that financial oversight exercised by those involved in the conduct to be examined.

Additionally, the leadership of the Colorado Judiciary asserted that a number of unwritten and evolving rules would be used to limit and constrain the financing of the investigation at issue. The Discipline Commission objected strongly to use of unwritten and undisclosed "rules" to constrain an ongoing investigation. Again, these were asserted to provide control of the investigative resources to conflicted individuals and even individuals that had asserted publicly that they had disqualified themselves from participation in the relevant matters.

Newly enacted C.R.S. §§13-5.3-102 through 104 address these personnel and resource control impediments by codifying the Discipline Commission's prior authority to determine the scope of special counsel engagements, providing conflict-free funding to the Commission, and authorizing the Discipline Commission to hire its own personnel to conduct investigations.

Accessing Information/Evidence

A critical part of the complaint investigation phase is the Discipline Commission's ability to access information and files held by the Colorado Judiciary. A large portion of the misconduct allegations investigated by the Discipline Commission involve facts and evidence held by the Colorado Judiciary. Upon request, the Discipline Commission enjoyed open and free access to relevant files and information held by the Colorado Judiciary until 2021. In the past, the Discipline Commission received this open access upon request in hundreds of examinations conducted in recent years. As indicated, this open access to judicial records is consistent with the parties' 2010 agreement.

In 2021, the leadership of the Colorado Judiciary ended this open access to its records for some, but not all, discipline investigations. As discussed in relation to the screening phase, the Discipline Commission did not receive information and files when requested on some, but not all, misconduct allegations. Access to information and file materials has continued unimpeded on some analogous misconduct allegations. This open access has continued for those cases that do not involve examining the conduct of individuals that also play a role in deciding how much information access will be permitted.

This inconsistency of information access itself illustrates a critical problem in the structure of judicial discipline. If information access is not reliable and predictable but, instead, is subject to subjective standards and decision-making involving those whose conduct is at issue, the investigatory system is neither effective nor credible.

As noted above, the newly enacted statute codifies a duty of disclosure owed by the Colorado Judiciary relating to allegations of judicial misconduct. The duty as stated is uniform in application to misconduct allegations made as to all Colorado judges regardless of position or stature. But, as also noted, no enforcement mechanism has yet been defined.

Subpoena Power

Prior to 2021, the Discipline Commission enjoyed a remarkably high level of cooperation and candor in its affirmative information gathering efforts. In the Discipline Commission's current institutional memory, it had not had a judge being investigated or third party record holder decline a request for information. As noted, this changed in 2021 for a small category of matters. An essential tool for an investigative agency is the subpoena power, the power to compel production of evidence when the evidence is not forthcoming on a voluntary basis. The events of 2021 required the Discipline Commission to exercise subpoena power for the first time that can be identified in its history.

Under Colo. RJD 22, the Discipline Commission is granted subpoena power. However, the rules do not provide a clear conflict free enforcement mechanism, particularly in the circumstance where the leadership of the Colorado Judiciary would be the defendant in an enforcement action—either as a party being investigated or the party declining to comply with the subpoena.

In 2021, the attorneys for the Colorado Judiciary took the position that the Discipline Commission has no subpoena authority in the investigation phase of judicial discipline. The Colorado Judiciary further took the position that any dispute over the subpoena power would be addressed in an original proceeding held before the Colorado Supreme Court, the ultimate administrative decision-makers that originally invited, and later objected to, the subpoena that would be at issue. The Colorado Judiciary later expanded this asserted limitation of the subpoena power to all investigations of judicial misconduct.

Recommendation: The Discipline Commission recommends that the General Assembly codify a subpoena power commensurate with other investigative entities and grand juries. A conflict free enforcement mechanism should also be established.

Formal Proceedings Rulemaking Authority. The formal proceedings phase illustrates a structural problem that exists system wide for judicial discipline in Colorado, rulemaking authority. The Colorado Constitution grants the Discipline Commission the discretionary authority to select between two mechanisms for formal proceedings, the Commission may hold the hearing itself or may have three special masters appointed to hold the hearing. The Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline adopted by the Colorado Supreme Court, however, make no provision for hearings before the Discipline Commission itself and appear to purport to eliminate this constitutional option. See Colo. RJD 18.5(a) (phrasing use of special masters appointed by the Supreme Court as “shall” for this constitutionally optional mechanism of pursuing formal proceedings creating, at a minimum, ambiguity).

According to the NCSC’s Center for Judicial Ethics, 20 jurisdictions in the United States place rulemaking authority with the entity that handles judicial ethics oversight, known in Colorado as the Discipline Commission. An analogous entity in Colorado, the Commissions on Judicial Performance hold rulemaking authority for their proceedings.

Under the Colorado Constitution, the Colorado Supreme Court is granted the authority to adopt rules for judicial discipline proceedings. The events of 2021 illustrated the problems that result when a conflicted entity holds rulemaking authority over the process for accountability and holds the authority to interpret those rules.

One of the challenges the Discipline Commission encountered with the current rulemaking system is a willingness by leadership of the Colorado Judiciary to set aside rules as written, presumably because of their authority to change or re-interpret those rules. For example, Colo. RJD 2(aa) unequivocally grants the Discipline Commission the authority to determine the scope of assignments given to its special counsel. However, the leadership of the Colorado Judiciary asserted in 2021-22 that it held the authority to determine the scope of special counsel assignments on certain matters. Additionally, Colo. RJD 3(d) gives the Executive Director (with oversight by the Discipline Commission) the authority to determine the Commission’s budget and administer the funds. However, leadership of the Colorado Judiciary persistently asserted in 2021-22 that unwritten rules restrict and override this written grant of budget authority, at least in relation to certain investigations.

Recommendation: The Discipline Commission recommends that the example of the Colorado Commissions on Judicial Performance and 20 other states be followed and rulemaking authority be placed with the Discipline Commission. This will require amendment of Art. VI, §23(3)(h) of the Colorado Constitution.

Special Masters

All formal proceedings to date have been conducted through the panel of three special masters process. The special masters are required to be judges. The special masters are currently selected on an ad hoc bases when needed. As a result, special masters are unlikely to have experience with or be familiar with the unique discipline procedures and decisional standards.

Recommendation: The Discipline Commission recommends that a small pool of potential special masters, such as six, be established. When an individual panel is needed, the appointment would then be made from this pool, selecting conflict free special masters that are available on the short timelines contemplated under the Colo. RJD. The potential special masters would serve for a minimum number of years and would gain expertise in the proceedings and the decisional standards. This could be accomplished by rulemaking authority rather than by statute.

Similarly, the Discipline Commission recommends that the four-year terms of commission members be extended to provide for greater institutional knowledge and greater insulation from political influence. For example, district court judges serve six-year terms while appellate judges serve ten-year terms for these same reasons. Members of the nominating commissions serve six-year terms. The terms of commission members should be extended to a similar range, maintaining staggered terms. The length of the membership terms is set in the Constitution and, therefore, an amendment to the Constitution would be required to implement this reform.

Recommendations and Final Decision Phases Among the significant impediments to credible judicial discipline illustrated by the events of 2021-22 is that Colorado’s Constitution fails to provide for the functioning of a system when the members of the Colorado Supreme Court have conflicts that would ordinarily prevent their handling of a matter under the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (the “Code”).

Conflicted Final Decision-Maker

Personal Involvement or Decisional Conflicts

As noted, under the current judicial discipline system in Colorado, the Colorado Supreme Court makes the final decisions on serious judicial discipline cases. The Constitution and the Colo. RJD require an individual justice to recuse on a discipline case involving the justice’s own possible sanction. See Art. VI, §23(3)(h); Colo. RJD 9. However, in 2021, allegations of misconduct arose that involved conduct of the Supreme Court as a whole, actions taken involving the Court as a whole such that all of its members are important factual witnesses. Those allegations also involved allegations of individual misconduct instances involving more than one member of the Court. These are, of course, merely allegations and the current discussion is not addressing whether the allegations have merit but, rather, a credible system for examining the potential merit of those allegations.

Additionally, after the allegations of misconduct became public, the Supreme Court then took collective actions in public⁹ that would ordinarily raise questions of whether the justices would need to recuse under the Code on a related judicial discipline case.¹⁰

As the public statements of the Supreme Court raise disqualification issues for the justices as a whole and the current system makes no provision for functioning when the final discipline decision-maker has conflicts, the ability of the current system design to function on the conflict matters is in doubt. More importantly, the system lacks credibility with the public.

Administrative Conflicts

Judicial officers in leadership positions within the judiciary have more extensive administrative roles than the public generally understands. Justices of the Supreme Court act much like chief executives and a board of directors for a 4,000 personnel entity with an annual budget of over half a billion dollars. The Colorado Supreme Court has announced in the past that administrative leadership duties for the Judicial Department are handled by the justices as a whole (some collectively and some by portfolio assignment) rather than delegating all these responsibilities to the Chief Justice alone. See <https://www.denverpost.com/2020/12/07/audit-colorado-supreme-court-administrators-office/>; and see, e.g., www.denverpost.com/2019/07/18/colorado-judicial-department-resignation/ (combining decisional conflicts with administrative conflicts, a Court spokesman was quoted as explaining that all of the justices approved the Masias contract at the center of the 2021 allegations of misconduct). Thus, in addition to their roles as judges, the justices are at the head of the corporate chain of command in the judiciary. Most cases involving serious judicial misconduct come before the justices in a corporate administrative or managerial role long before a judicial discipline case can progress to being filed in the Supreme Court. They may be handling the matters as personnel matters, as docket coverage issues, as loss prevention matters, as contracting matters, or a myriad of other managerial roles. At times, the justices become personally involved in trying to manage the purely administrative or corporate side of a situation that later develops into a discipline proceeding against another judge.

As a result, in most judicial discipline cases involving serious potential sanction, one or all of the justices has been involved to some degree and has direct knowledge of facts or ex parte exposure to facts or evidence that will be part of the discipline case. Under Rule 2.11 of the Code, such firsthand knowledge and/or ex parte exposure to evidence would ordinarily require a judge to be disqualified from handling a related case.

As administrative leaders of the Colorado Judiciary, the justices of the Supreme Court must also protect the Judiciary from financial liability and otherwise protect the system-wide interests of the Judiciary. This creates potential conflicts of interest if the justices are also involved in judicial discipline matters because the financial or other interests of the Judiciary may conflict with the interests of judicial discipline. The justices can be put in the position of having to decide whether to put ethics or dollars first. For example, when the Chief Justice stated to the Joint Judiciary Committee SMART hearing that the Judiciary was providing investigators with full access to files and information, the Chief Justice also indicated that a reason for withholding files and information by noting that sharing had to be limited to avoid “subject[ing] the branch ... to financial liability.”

⁹ This report does not attempt to discuss any alleged conduct other than the public actions taken by the justices.

¹⁰ See Code Rules 2.9, 2.10, and 2.11 and, by way of examples, the public statements issued by the Colorado Supreme Court on February 4, 2021, February 8, 2021, February 16, 2021, January 25, 2022, and February 7, 2022.

In oral communications, non-judge leaders with the Colorado Judiciary have also asserted that concerns about the risks of incurring financial liability were driving part of the decisions to withhold files/information. In the fall of 2021, a leader in the Colorado Judiciary asserted that the work of the Discipline Commission’s special counsel had to be limited in order to protect the Colorado Judiciary from potential financial exposure to a civil claim for damages.

For these reasons, a judicial discipline model that designates the Supreme Court as the final decision-maker in discipline cases raises far more conflict situations than just those involving a justice acting as a judge and ruling on their own conduct or decisions. The conflict situations are inherent in such a system design given the administrative or corporate roles of the justices of the Colorado Supreme Court.

Recommendation: Colorado’s discipline system should be revised to provide for a conflict free final decision-maker on serious discipline cases. Several options are available to address this issue.

Under the process adopted in Pennsylvania, a “pro tem” supreme court is created to handle the discipline case if a member of the state’s supreme court is the responding judge. However, this system requires the creation of an entirely new court when such a situation arises, and the members of the “pro tem” court have no institutional knowledge or history. It also does not, as adopted in Pennsylvania, address the administrative conflicts discussed above that arise in Colorado’s approach to assigning corporate roles to the justices.

Given the scope of Rule 2.11 disqualifications that arise for members of Colorado’s Supreme Court, another option is simply to change the final decision maker rather than creating a “back up” process that only applies when misconduct allegations are made directly against one or more justices. The new final decision-making body for all discipline cases would be changed from the Supreme Court to a multi-perspective board that includes representatives of the judiciary, the bar, and the citizenry that minimizes the risk of conflict issues arising that would incapacitate the decision-maker as a whole. The general structure of Colorado’s existing system could be maintained with just the final decision-making body being reformed consistent with other judicial oversight entities in Colorado.

Given the impediments raised in 2021-22 by interested parties, the power to appoint the judicial members of the board should be diversified. Membership should be comprised of judges representing the appellate judges as a whole, the district court judges, and the county court judges. Each of these categories of judges should, as a whole, select from among their members the individual(s) to serve on the final decision-making board.

One member of the board should be selected by the Discipline Commission. This member could come from any of the three main categories (bench, bar, citizen) but would be required to be a former member of the Discipline Commission. Because the Discipline Commission itself handles, by far, the most judicial discipline matters, this position will provide subject matter expertise and experience to the final decision-making entity as a whole. The person would not be permitted to sit on a matter if they had also seen the matter while a member of the Commission.

Consistent with due process, a final decision on discipline would still be subject to review by the courts (ultimately, a review by the Supreme Court) consistent with the standards found in C.R.C.P. 106 that apply when any other governmental body makes a decision.

The Colorado Constitution designates the Supreme Court as the final decision-maker in judicial discipline cases. Changing this structure will require an amendment to the Colorado Constitution.

An alternative to amending the Colorado constitution would be to exercise the General Assembly's authority to enact a statute establishing a procedure on public policy grounds that provides for the recommendations of the Discipline Commission to become final unless overturned by a conflict free majority of the Colorado Supreme Court (which would be four justices). This solution would not be ideal and should be considered primarily if amending the Constitution is unavailable or unsuccessful.

Disqualification Standards

The rules for disqualification of decision-makers in the judicial discipline process are spotty, ambiguous, and inconsistent. For some decision-makers, such as the justice of the Colorado Supreme Court, substantial ambiguity exists as to what rules of disqualification are accepted as applicable.

In 2021, the Colorado Supreme Court exercised its rulemaking authority to amend the Colo. RJD and adopt a new Colo. RJD 3.5. Rule 3.5 stems from a proposal made to the Supreme Court by the Discipline Commission in June of 2019 but rejected by the Supreme Court at the time. The Supreme Court later made material changes to the proposal and adopted the revised version in late 2021 without prior notice to or consultation with the Discipline Commission. When the Discipline Commission asked for the opportunity to provide input on the new rule, the Chief Justice advised in writing that "Feedback is not necessary."

As indicated above, the public allegations of judicial misconduct and allegations that these claims were suppressed by judicial leadership raised a number of serious disqualification issues for the Colorado Supreme Court regarding its roles in judicial discipline. The Supreme Court responded to these issues by enacting the 2021 amendments that created extensive disqualification rules, but rules applicable solely to Discipline Commission members. The new disqualification rules do not purport to apply to the other critical decision-makers in the discipline process such as the justices of the Supreme Court or special masters. This has exacerbated rather than ameliorated the uncertainty in addressing conflicts of interest in judicial discipline.

Additionally, the meaning of disqualifying oneself from a judicial discipline matter has been inconsistently defined. Under the new Rule 3.5, a disqualified member of the Discipline Commission must have "no involvement in any aspect of the proceedings after the date of recusal." This is a reasonable and appropriate standard and the Discipline Commission has complied with this standard. However, the Commission's experience is that other participants in the judicial discipline process from the Colorado Judiciary have declared a recusal but asserted a right to maintain active involvement in the proceedings at a substantive administrative level. The meaning of disqualification or recusal should be uniform for all those involved in judicial discipline matters.

Recommendation: The Discipline Commission recommends that the General Assembly set uniform, transparent, and reliable standards for disqualification of decision-makers in the judicial discipline system. The General Assembly has the authority to effect this change by statute. People v. Prophet, 42 P.3d 61, 62 (Colo. App. 2001); People v. Bobian, 626 P.2d 1132, 1134-35 (Colo. 1981).

The Discipline Commission recommends the decision-makers in judicial discipline be defined as the members of the Commission, the members of the final decision-making body (whatever form may finally be chosen), and the special masters. The standards should be set as the same standards that govern judge disqualification in cases as stated in the Code, primarily at Rule 2.11.

System Wide Reform

Transparency

All judicial discipline systems in the United States recognize that allegations of judicial misconduct should be confidential during the initial screening process. The variation among states is defining when judicial discipline proceedings become public to allow for transparency and oversight. In Colorado, we draw this borderline between the confidential and public proceedings at the conclusion of the formal proceedings--the trial. This is relatively late in the process as compared to other jurisdictions. An issue for the Interim Committee is whether this borderline should remain as it is or be altered by constitutional amendment. This requires a careful balancing of competing policies in the context of the unique needs of Coloradoans.

As the Center for Judicial Ethics explains,

Confidentiality of complaints

In all states, commission proceedings are confidential at the initial stages after an individual files a complaint against a judge, and a commission cannot confirm or deny that a complaint has been filed against a judge, is being investigated, or has been dismissed, unless an exception applies. Confidentiality at this stage is intended:

- To encourage complainants to come forward without fear that the judge will learn and retaliate,
- To encourage witnesses to cooperate without fear that the judge will learn and retaliate,
- To reassure participants that the media or others will not contact them,

How Judicial Conduct Commissions Work • 14

- To allow a commission to encourage infirm or incompetent judges to resign before charges become public,
- To allow a commission to warn a judge about minor misconduct without publicity, and
- To protect a judge's reputation from unexamined allegations that may prove baseless.

Handbook for Member of Judicial Conduct Commissions at 14-15.

As to where the borderline is drawn, the Center goes on to explain as follows:

Confidentiality after formal charges; public hearings

A table showing when confidentiality ceases in formal judicial discipline proceedings in each state is available on the Center for Judicial Ethics website.

In the majority of states (35), when formal charges are filed, confidentiality ceases, the charges and the judge's answer are public, and the subsequent hearing on the charges is also open to the public.

- In 26 states, confidentiality ceases after formal charges are filed.
- In seven states, confidentiality ceases when the judge files an answer to the complaint or when the time for filing an answer has passed.
- In two states (Oregon and Rhode Island), confidentiality ceases at the beginning of the fact-finding hearing. The rule for the Oregon Commission on Judicial Fitness and Disabilities provides that the Commission shall issue "a public notice of the hearing not less than 14 days prior to the date of the hearing."

Id. at 27-28.

The Discipline Commission has experienced advantages and disadvantages of the confidentiality borderline currently governing in Colorado. The Discipline Commission defers to the General Assembly on whether that borderline should be adjusted in Colorado but will be happy to discuss the options and relative merits as the Interim Committee may choose.

An Insulated and Conflict-Free Funding Source

For the last decade and a half and pursuant to an agreement between the Disciplinary Commission and the Judiciary, the Disciplinary Commission's operating expenses have been funded through attorney registration fees. The Disciplinary Commission's investigators and attorneys have also been provided through the Colorado Supreme Court's Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel. These funding mechanisms were formalized through amendments to C.R.C.P. 227.

Starting in 2021, problems arose that prevented the Disciplinary Commission from accessing funding and resources to pursue investigations. The system proved to have insoluble conflicts. Through SB22-201, these immediate challenges were overcome by providing for direct funding of the judicial discipline system with General Fund monies.

The prior funding mechanism using a specified, fee-based funding source under C.R.C.P. 227 had certain advantages of being politically/economically insulated as well as scalable to variable disciplinary needs. Funding through attorney registration fees was also consistent with provision in Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(c) that the Commission's expenses were "to be paid by the supreme court from its budget to be appropriated by the general assembly."

Under the new system of using General Fund monies, judicial discipline is left vulnerable to adverse economic conditions and changes in the political landscape. To serve in its appropriate independent and non-partisan role, the Interim Committee should consider whether Colorado's discipline system should be funded through an insulated and non-discretionary funding source.

Recommendation: The Discipline Commission's core operations should be funded through an economically insulated, non-discretionary funding source. One possibility for such a funding source includes the direct appropriation of attorney registration fees by the Legislature, consistent with the authority provided through Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(c) or new authority defined through a potential constitutional amendment. Another possibility is the use of designated filing and other court fees, similar to the funding model for the Colorado Commissions on Judicial Performance. See § 13-5.5-115, C.R.S. (creating State Commission on Judicial Performance Cash Fund through revenue generated by criminal and traffic case docketing fees).

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

- Subpoena Authority: Codify subpoena authority for the Discipline Commission to investigate judicial misconduct allegations akin to other investigative bodies and grand juries.
- Disclosure/Discovery Enforcement Mechanism: Codify a conflict free mechanism for addressing disputes with the Colorado Judiciary over claims of privilege or confidentiality as well as compliance with the statutory duties to document and disclose complaints of judicial misconduct.
- Rulemaking Authority: Grant the Discipline Commission rulemaking authority over judicial discipline on the model of the Colorado Commissions on Judicial Performance.
- Special Masters: By rule or statute, create a continuing pool of judges that are qualified to act as special masters in judicial discipline matters to foster institutional expertise.
- Commission Member Terms: Extend the current four year terms of Commission members to provide greater subject matter expertise and greater insulation for political influence. For similar reasons, District Court Judges serve six year terms and appellate judges serve ten year terms.
- Conflict Free Final Decision Makers: Maintain the current two-tier judicial discipline system but change the final decision-maker to a conflict free, multi-perspective, citizen involved entity with representatives from the bench, bar, and citizenry. Address appointment power and term lengths to assure insulation from undue influences.
- Disqualification Standards: Codify clear, uniform, and consistent disqualification standards for all decision-makers involved in judicial discipline. Apply same standards that have been previously established for judge disqualification and define meaning of disqualification.
- Transparency: Evaluate the policy considerations and determine whether the border between confidentiality and transparency in Colorado's judicial discipline system should be altered.
- Funding: Evaluate the viability of funding the judicial discipline system through a source that is insulated from politics and variations in the economy consistent with the model used for the Colorado Commissions on Judicial Performance.

Background on the independent investigations

June 14, 2022

Two independent investigations into allegations of misconduct are expected to be released in the coming weeks. Both investigators were selected by a panel of legislative and executive branch leaders. The Governor's Office, Attorney General's Office, and General Assembly appointed the following leaders to serve on the panel that selected the investigators:

- Senate Judiciary Committee Chair Pete Lee
- House Judiciary Committee Vice-Chair Kerry Tipper
- Representative Adrienne Benavidez
- Senator Bob Gardner
- Representative Terri Carver
- Jacki Cooper Melmed, who then served as chief legal counsel for Governor Polis
- Kara Veitch, who then served as executive director of the Department of Personnel and Administration
- Maritza Dominguez Braswell, who then served as the Deputy Attorney General overseeing the Civil Litigation and Employment Law section at the Department of Law

That panel solicited an RFP and then interviewed prospective firms. The panel chose RCT Ltd, a firm led by former United States Attorney Robert Troyer, to investigate the issues surrounding a leadership contract. The panel chose Investigations Law Group to conduct an investigation into the so-called "memo" as well as issues related to the culture of the workplace in Colorado's courts.

The following are key dates in the process of these investigations:

- February 19, 2021, panel named to recommend independent investigators
- February 25, 2021, first panel meeting
- August 5, 2021, panel recommends RCT Ltd (Robert Troyer) to investigate leadership contract; Investigations Law Group (ILG) to investigate allegations of workplace harassment
- October 12, 2021, Judicial Department executes $75,000 contract with RCT Ltd. Contract period is 6 months with option for a single 12-month extension.
- November 1, 2021, Judicial Department executes $250,000 contract with Investigations Law Group. Contract period is 5 months with the option of a single seven-month contract.
- April 2022, ILG granted an extension at its request.
- April 2022, RCT granted an extension at its request.
- June 2022, a second and final extension granted to ILG at its request. Extension runs through July 29.
- June 2022, a second and final extension granted to RTC at its request. Extension runs through June 29.

16 Sen. Lee

17 We do have a quorum, and we are ready to go. Thank you, members, for joining us. It seems like a long 18 time since we were here a month ago. This is the second meeting of the Interim Committee, and just 19 since there's been sort of a hiatus, I just wanted to remind people that we had a day-long hearing a month 20 ago in which we had briefings by Leg. Counsel, Ms Jenson, and Mr Imel on the bill and the landscape.
21 We heard from the Chair and Vice Chair of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. We heard 22 from the State Court Administrator, Appeals Judge Tow. We heard from the Office of Attorney 23 Regulation Counsel, the State Auditor, and public testimony, both from the Judicial Integrity Project, 24 from the Colorado Bar Association, and the Women's Bar Association. One of the goals and purposes of 25 these hearings is to be very public and invite the public, and we are trying to get that word out so as 26 many people participate and provide input. So, we have public testimony scheduled at all of our 27 meetings and invite people to either present their testimony in person or submit it to the committee and 28 the members will read it. So today, we have a pretty full agenda which is available to you, and I 29 encourage the committee to stay engaged with the issues that are the mandate of the committee. We 30 really need to focus on what the committee is intended to do, looking at judicial discipline. So, with that, 31 I'll turn it over to Madam Vice Chair.

32

33 Rep. Carver

34 Thank you, Mr Chair. Thank you to all who have joined us in person or remotely. As the Chair 35 referenced, we have 18 specific subjects covering the broad array of issues on how the complaint 36 process should work within the Judicial Branch. And there are many pieces to that, but that is our 37 charter, as specified in SB 22-201. So, we appreciate all those who have testified thus far and who are 38 going to testify today. Just a reminder, because of the broad scope of the job that this committee has to 39 do, addressing these 18 subjects, we just want to remind everyone listening to this hearing or here in 40 person, that you are always welcome to submit written comments referencing any of those 18 areas or

1 all of them. And I know that some organizations were waiting until the ILG report came out. That came 2 out yesterday. So, I would encourage all of you who have interest in any or all aspects of those 18
3 subjects to put together your written comments, provide those to the committee, sending them to Juliann 4 Jenson. Which, then, the committee can start digesting, because of our very compressed timeline to get 5 this work done, we would encourage you to do that. We want to fully consider all your comments and 6 perspectives in this important work that is being done. Thank you.

7
8 Sen. Lee

9 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair. Any other comments from any other committee members are welcome.
10 One other note, I would specifically like to thank Senator Gardner for joining us, remotely from 11 Philadelphia. He's doing the very exciting work of the Uniform Law Commission in Philadelphia, but at 12 my urging and request, he's going to try to participate here and do both tasks. And having known him for 13 over a decade, I know he's fully capable of performing more than two things at the same time. So, thank 14 you, Senator Gardner, for being here with us today.

15
16 Sen. Gardner

17 Thank you, Mr Chair.

18
19 Sen. Lee

20 The other thing I'd want to note, and I guess this is sort of in the area of Chair's prerogative. When I was 21 preparing for this hearing today, and I put on a suit I hadn't worn for a while because we haven't been in 22 session for a while, I found that it was a suit that contained the Ukraine ribbon, and we were wearing 23 those routinely during the legislative session. I just want to recognize, memorialize, and honor the 24 people of Ukraine, who are fighting daily to preserve, protect, and defend their democracy. May the 25 inspiration of the people in Ukraine inspire this committee as we do our work to form a more perfect 26 union. And with that, I'll ask Mr Forsyth from the Judicial Integrity Project to join us. Thank you for 27 being with us today, sir, if you would introduce yourself, tell us any organization you represent, and 28 provide us with your testimony.

29
30 Chris Forsyth

31 Thank you. My name is Chris Forsyth with the Judicial Integrity Project. I'm an attorney who's practiced 32 in Colorado for 30 years. We don't know where we're going, unless we know where we've been. If you 33 can't see the forest for the trees, your chances of making a good decision are slim. One must understand 34 Colorado's judicial system and its history to know what to do regarding the judicial discipline system. In 35 short, you need to know the big picture. I do not stand before you alone. In your packet is a petition 36 signed by almost 900 Coloradans. These are not parking lot signatures. This is an online petition where 37 people put thought into it before they signed it. Colorado has a commission-based judicial system. We 38 have nominating commissions that help decide who becomes a judge, a discipline commission that can 39 recommend if a judge needs to be removed, and performance commissions that are to advise voters 40 whether a judge should be retained. The system is dysfunctional. The commissions do not work

1 together. There are walls between all of them and the public. If a judge is actually disciplined, it most 2 often is not public, because judicial discipline proceedings are confidential. Neither the nominating 3 commissions nor the performance commissions know whether the potential nominees or judges up for 4 review have been disciplined. The performance commissions lack information, and the nominating 5 commissions are not transparent and lack public involvement. The state court system is often rightfully 6 criticized for catering to the wealthy and connected and treating the poor and marginalized as second-7 class citizens.

8
9 This system is where this valid criticism begins. In 1966, it started then when nominating commissions 10 and gubernatorial appointment to select judges was put forth to voters. Prior to that point, judges ran in 11 contested elections. We are not in favor of contested elections, but the public is much more involved in 12 such a process. The nominating-appointment process is not public and lacks public involvement. It is 13 elitist. Nevertheless, in the Blue Book for the 1966 elections, as part of the arguments for the 14 amendment, it was stated that, "The courts would be completely removed from politics. Judges would be 15 free from the pressures of politics and campaigning, and would be able to devote their full time and 16 attention to the conduct of judicial business." Freeing judges from politics is a laudable goal. We don't 17 want judges accepting financial contributions from parties who may eventually end up in their 18 courtroom. Allowing judges to devote their full-time and attention to being a judge is an important goal.
19 If this is the result of the nominating-appointment process, this is definitely worth the loss of public 20 contested elections. A commission to address judicial discipline was also contained in the 1966 21 initiative, the commission was called the Commission on Judicial Qualifications. The Blue Book for the 22 1966 election stated that "the Commission was patterned after the California system for removal of 23 judges." The initiative barely passed. It received 53% of the vote. 47% voted against it. Under current 24 law, the initiative would not have passed because it did not receive 55% of the vote. Since 1966, 25 California's judicial system has been amended several times to make it more transparent, accountable, 26 and remove conflicts of interest. Colorado's has not. The promise from 1966 was the judges would be 27 completely removed from politics.

28
29 While it is good that judges aren't running in contested elections, to say judges have been completely 30 removed from politics is incorrect. As a group, judges have become a powerful lobbying force at the 31 Legislature. The Judicial Branch has a legislative liaison who's constantly in the Capitol during the 32 legislative session. And judges are members of other lobbying groups such as the Colorado Judicial 33 Institute, where judges are board members and members. The group's major fundraiser is an event where 34 people pay to sit at a dinner with judges. The idea is that if you fund the organization that lobbies for 35 what judges want, you might get an upper hand in a case. We've nicknamed the event "Want to buy a 36 judge." Judges are also members of the Colorado Bar Association. The CBA is the only voluntary Bar 37 Association west of the Mississippi. That means lawyers do not have to belong to it, and neither do 38 judges. Yet, it's a very politically active group. Although it claims to be a membership organization, it 39 has an executive council that runs the organization and a small legislative policy committee that takes 40 positions on legislation. The policies they often lobby for are for what judges want, but most likely

1 would not be supported by a majority in the members of the organization. Then there is IAALS, the 2 Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System. It's another organization where judges are 3 involved. A former Colorado Supreme Court Justice founded the organization. I've been in this building 4 trying to improve the legal system with legislation. It was a simple measure, to provide more 5 information to the judicial performance commissions. Who stood in the way? IAALS and its former 6 Supreme Court Justice who wrote the initial opinion stating that Colorado's Open Records Act doesn't 7 apply to the Judicial Branch. She was able to stop purely altruistic legislation on a party line vote.
8

9 So, politics have not been removed from the Judiciary. Indeed, what has been created is an incredibly 10 powerful judicial lobby for what judges want. Judges' voices are multiplied by four when it comes to 11 policies in Colorado, to legislators under the dome, this has proven very convincing over time. It looks 12 to legislators like there's an overwhelming support for maintaining what judges want, but it's simply the 13 powerful judicial lobby being very crafty. The promise from the 1966 Blue Book, that quote, "The 14 courts would be completely removed from politics." That, obviously, has not occurred. We've even 15 heard multiple judges speak in these hearings about what judges want, with more to come. As for the 16 discipline of judges, the Commission on Judicial Qualifications worked for a while. But in 1982, the 17 Legislature put forth a referendum changing the Commission on Judicial Qualifications to the Colorado 18 Commission on Judicial Discipline. The referendum passed. Apparently at that time, the Supreme Court 19 realized what it could do with its rule making power. Although the Justices on the Supreme Court are 20 sworn to uphold the Constitution, the Rules the Supreme Court wrote undermine the Constitution. They 21 often make rule changes. But here's a Rule that was in effect for many years. As you can see, the Rule 22 regards screening of complaints. The Rule allows the Executive Director to act alone. It provides that the 23 Executive Director, "Shall dismiss complaints that are based on disputed rulings under the jurisdiction of 24 the trial or appellate courts." So, if a judge violated the Code of Judicial Conduct in an actual court case, 25 and that violation affected his ruling, the Executive Director was required to dismiss the complaint. The 26 Rule is directly contrary to the Constitution, which requires prosecution for any violation of the Code of 27 Judicial Conduct. Here's the current Rule, which was written in 2017. This version still focuses on 28 dismissing cases. The Rule now avoids the shall dismiss language, but still accomplishes the same thing 29 by focusing on the absence of a reasonable basis for a complaint. The Rule now requires the Executive 30 Director and members of the Commission to close matters that dispute a judge's rulings on motions, 31 evidence, procedure, or sentencing or a judge's findings of fact. But it does now state without providing 32 grounds for discipline. That sounds a little better, like they made an exception for violations of the Code 33 of Judicial Conduct. But then there's this other reason: "The allegations involve subject matter that is not 34 within the jurisdiction of the commission." So, even if a violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct is 35 alleged, if the allegations involve a person claiming the judge's ruling was wrong, which the 36 Commission has no jurisdiction over, the complaint must be dismissed. Why is the Supreme Court so 37 focused on making sure cases are dismissed? It's because it has a conflict of interest. There should be 38 serious consequences for what the Supreme Court has done. Did the Supreme Court have the power to 39 draft rules regarding judicial discipline? Yes. Did the Supreme Court have the power to adopt rules that 40 limited the violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct that could be enforced? No. The State

1 Constitution states judges can be disciplined for any violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct. The 2 Supreme Court determined to not follow the Constitution they are sworn to uphold. The Supreme Court 3 decided judges could not be disciplined for violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct when we expect 4 to be protected by it the most: when we're in court, when judges are ruling on cases.

5
6 Malfeasance in office means an unlawful act committed willfully by an elected public officer or breach 7 of an official duty enjoined by law. Was it not malfeasance for the Supreme Court to adopt Rules 8 directly contrary to the Constitution? Was it not malfeasance in office for the Supreme Court to 9 unilaterally determine that certain violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct cannot be prosecuted?

10 11 We can't see what's in any of those dismissals because the judicial discipline proceedings are 12 confidential in Colorado. We are unable to validate all the dismissals because we cannot see them.
13 Colorado has one of the least transparent judicial systems in the country. There is no support in 14 Colorado, absent that of the Judiciary to maintain Colorado's current level of confidentiality regarding 15 judicial discipline proceedings. Even the judicial performance commissions, which have repeatedly 16 fought against receiving more information about judges, have stated that having discipline information 17 would help. 35 states have public judicial discipline proceedings. So should Colorado.

18
19 And don't be confused about the language in Senate Bill 22-201, which created your committee. It does 20 not change the status quo regarding the confidentiality of judicial discipline. Rule 6.5 of the Colorado 21 Rules of Judicial Discipline still governs who can receive judicial discipline info. Unless you get the 22 permission of the disciplined judge, a government agency has to jump through a bunch of hoops to 23 possibly get the Supreme Court to enter an order requiring a release. That's not transparency.

24
25 Since the discipline system has started being criticized, they are prosecuting more judges. We started 26 banging the drum in 2012. In 2014, the first published case of judicial discipline appeared. It involved a 27 stipulation of a judge leaving the bench. This photo is of judges who have been prosecuted since that 28 time. None of these cases are related to judicial orders. The Colorado Constitution states that a judge can 29 be removed from office for any violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct. Yet we're 36 years and 30 counting without a published case of judicial discipline related to a court case. The cases show us that if 31 a judge gets a DUI, criticizes another judge is racist or misogynistic, or commits a federal offense, then 32 the judge might receive public discipline. That's a pretty low standard for the governmental branch we're 33 supposed to trust the most. The bottom line of all of this is that we're supposed to believe that for 36 34 years and counting, no judge deserves public punishment for anything he or she did related to his or her 35 ruling on a case. 36 years and counting. And the dismissal rate of complaints against judges is 97% and 36 has been 97% for almost 30 years. It's unbelievable. Possibly, the worst thing getting lost in all of this is 37 that judges are not learning how to become better judges, because judges aren't being disciplined.
38 Lawyers constantly learn from published judicial discipline proceedings. Lawyers discipline 39 proceedings are public, yet judges who are public servants, have their proceedings in private, and there 40 is a dearth of case law in Colorado on how to interpret the Code of Judicial Conduct. Judges desperately

1 want to keep the current system. That's why, since 2014 we've seen public judicial discipline cases after 2 a 28-year drought. There are even new proceedings going on right now involving Judge Timbreza out on 3 the Western Slope. The Supreme Court is attempting to put on a show to save the system that protects 4 them. We must not be fooled.

5
6 All states have judicial discipline systems. You'll be hearing from some folks at the National Center for 7 State Courts later today. So, I'm not going to go over what other states do, but it must be noted that all 8 50 states have judicial discipline systems. So, even in states where judges run in contested elections, 9 which is in most states, there is a judicial discipline commission. That means a discipline commission 10 isn't something unique to Colorado's so-called merit selection. That term is a very successful marketing 11 term to describe our modified gubernatorial appointment process for judges. But it's hard to understand 12 how such a system has merit when so much focus, time, and energy is used to hide facts from the public.

13
14 As for the scandal, it involves more problems with the Judicial Branch than simply the discipline 15 system. A major component of the scandal is the inappropriate relationship between the Chief Justice 16 and the State Court Administrator. The National Center for State Courts also addresses the principles of 17 judicial administration. Hopefully, you'll hear from them about that later today, we agree with the 18 National Center for State Courts that judges should focus on policy-level issues and administrative tasks
19 should be handled by staff. We agree that there should be accountability and transparency. The RCT 20 investigation makes proposals that are troubling. In regard to the situation involving the administrative 21 functions, the investigation encourages the involvement of all justices on the Supreme Court in such 22 functions. It encourages the Supreme Court to act as a board. We do not agree with this approach. The 23 justices on the Supreme Court should solely focus on hearing and deciding cases. They are already 24 rightfully criticized for not granting certiorari in enough cases. The RCT investigation would give them 25 less time to hear cases.

26
27 We believe there should be a wall between the State Court Administrator and the judges in the Judicial 28 Branch. The justices on the Supreme Court are not experienced in running a business or hiring 29 employees. The people should hire the State Court Administrator. Then, if something goes wrong, the 30 justices of the Supreme Court are not to blame. The State Court Administrator should be chosen through 31 a contested election. There seems to be the thought that, since Chris Ryan is gone, everything will be 32 okay, but the Supreme Court simply chose another insider after him, rather than hiring an outsider who 33 has an MBA and experience running a large business. The State Court Administrator is a position that 34 has been mired in scandal for a long time. It's a position that has too much authority without any checks 35 and balances. The State Court Administrator directly affects justice. He places retired judges under 36 contract and assigns them to cases. We already know they improperly used a contract to hire a former 37 employee who had been disciplined. Imagine what he can do with the power to place certain judges 38 under contract and assign them to cases. He has the power to ensure certain statewide policies are 39 adopted with Court of Appeals. This must stop. We did not draft proposals for the bifurcation of the 1 judicial and financial functions of the Judicial Branch because this committee is solely focused on the 2 discipline system. But we'd be happy to draft such proposals.

3
4 We do, however, have a proposed draft of a referendum to be put before the people. The referendum 5 would be for a new judicial discipline system. It's the second document in your packet. It's behind the 6 second blue sheet in the packet. The proposed new discipline system would contain eight citizens who 7 are not lawyers or judges. The citizens would be elected in the same manner all of you were selected. If 8 that selection was good enough for this committee, then it's good enough for the discipline commission.
9 So we proposed two citizens chosen by the Majority Leader of the Senate, two by the Minority Leader 10 of the Senate, two by the Speaker of the House, and two by the Minority Leader of the House. Three 11 lawyers would join the citizens on the Commission. The lawyers would be appointed by the Governor 12 and must have been registered as an independent for at least the last five years. The lawyers also need to 13 have practiced law for 10 years. In a consulting, non-voting capacity, one judge would be on the 14 Commission. The judge would be the Chief Judge of a judicial district, and selected in rotating order by 15 the number of the Judicial District. Each voting member would serve a four-year term. The non-voting 16 consulting Chief Judge would serve a one-year term. All discipline would be public. The Commission 17 would be able to actually discipline a judge, including removing the judge the bench. The judge would 18 have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court. Once at the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court can hold 19 its own hearing if it wants. If the Commission's order is not supported by the law or substantial 20 evidence, it may dismiss the matter or impose discipline it deems more appropriate. The documents filed 21 with the Commission would be public. The exception would be if a complainant wants to keep his or her 22 name or the name of other witnesses confidential. If so, neither the complainant's name nor the 23 witnesses' would be public unless and until the Commission initiates the process for a formal hearing.
24 The Commission would be required to maintain an electronic copy of all records or documents and any 25 orders or documents issued by the Commission in an electronic database that is accessible by the public.
26 The documents shall be searchable under the judge's name. Many states already have this in place. The 27 Commission, instead of the Supreme Court, shall adopt its own rules. The political activity of members 28 of the Judicial Branch would be limited. With the exception of requests for Judicial Branch funding, no 29 member of the Judicial Branch nor any agent thereof, may lobby or attempt to influence a member of the 30 General Assembly or any agent thereof or appear in the Capitol during legislative session, unless 31 subpoenaed by the General Assembly. If they do so, it's a violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct 32 punishable under this section. The budget of the Commission would be public and separate from the 33 budget of any other state agency. The Commission shall maintain an office that may include 34 investigators, attorneys, and other support staff. The members of the Commission would be required to 35 review all complaints and cannot delegate their decision making on any complaint to a staff member.
36 The Code of Judicial Conduct may not be amended by the Supreme Court without consent of the Senate.
37 The last time the Constitution was amended was 1982 there was a completely different Code of Judicial 38 Conduct in effect on that date. The Supreme Court has assumed it can amend it many times since. But 39 some curious things have occurred since that time. So, this committee may want to take a look at which 40 Code of Judicial Conduct should be enshrined in the Constitution at this point in time. The statutory

1 provisions that make it a misdemeanor, a crime, to disclose the contents of the proceedings before the 2 discipline commission would be repealed. At this moment, it's still a misdemeanor in Colorado for 3 anyone to reveal the contents of the proceedings before the discipline commission. In these proceedings, 4 so far, a two-tier system has been mentioned. Our proposal is for a one-tier system. Most states have a 5 one-tier system. A second-tier in most systems makes it harder to discipline a judge. It's simply another 6 obstacle to discipline. The judges who are arguing for this want to make it look like the Legislature did 7 something. But the something would actually make the discipline system worse than it is. So, back to the 8 big picture, the walls between the commissions and the public should come down. Walls between the 9 Supreme Court and the Legislature and the State Court Administrator need to go up. We need a 10 renovation. After the appointment of a judge, the public must become more involved, which should 11 reduce the appearance that courts are for the wealthy and the elite. We believe this is the path to 12 restoring the public's confidence in the Judiciary. This is the path towards Judicial Integrity. Thank you.

13

14 Sen. Lee

15 Thank you, Mr Forsyth, and I will note that the committee has received your packet with your proposals 16 and petition et cetera. So, thank you. Are there any questions for Mr Forsyth? Seeing none. Thank you 17 for your participation in our discussions.

Presentation by former CCJD Member and former 10th Judicial District Court Chief Judge Dennis Maes;

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline— July 12, 2022 Hearing: Testimony of Hon. Dennis Maes

1 Sen. Lee

2 Now we have a presentation from Dennis Maes, former Chief Judge of the 10th Judicial District, former 3 member of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. Your Honor, we are honored to have you 4 with us today. Thank you for being here. Thanks.

5

6 Dennis Maes

7 Thank you and thank you for the opportunity to appear before this committee today. I'd like to share a 8 few observations I have surrounding the Interim Committee's hearings on judicial reform. I retired May 9 21 of 2012, after 24 years as a district judge in Pueblo. I served as the Chief District Judge the last 17
10 years of that term. Before I begin, please allow me the opportunity to acknowledge the outstanding 11 Pulitzer-level reporting by David Migoya from the Denver Gazette concerning this dark moment in the 12 history of the Colorado Supreme Court. He relentlessly pursued the truth, despite formidable roadblocks 13 placed in his way by several state agencies, including the Colorado Supreme Court. His work is a stark 14 reminder of the importance of the press in a free, democratic society. For about a year before I was 15 appointed to the district bench by Governor Roy Romer, I had the privilege of serving on the Colorado 16 Commission on Judicial Discipline. The CEO at the time was Rick Wehmhoefer. I was impressed with 17 the work and the efficiency of the Commission. It satisfied its responsibilities pursuant to the Colorado 18 Constitution. The Commission on several occasions, during the Annual Judicial Conference, provided 19 training sessions to the spouses of the judges to educate them with the workings of the Commission. In 20 the interest of transparency, I would suggest that the Commission arrange similar educational 21 opportunities for the public to inform them of the important work the Commission undertakes to ensure 22 judicial accountability. I will say there has always been somewhat of a tension between the judges and 23 the Commission because of the very nature of the Commission's charge. However, I never observed 24 anything out of the ordinary that offered concern about the process. I and my colleagues recognize the 25 importance of the work of the Commission and its credible oversight of us in the merit selection system 26 of Colorado judges. It has worked well in the past and deserves to continue its work in the future without 27 undue influence from others, including the Colorado Supreme Court. While I agree that systems should 28 continually be reviewed and reformed when necessary, I would strongly submit that it is just as 29 important to rely on those processes that have served as well in the past. In particular, I would point to 30 the single most important principle that has provided the guiding light for the United States judicial 31 system since its inception, a deep and abiding commitment to and belief in the rule of law, which holds 32 that no person or entity is above the law. It is that principle that guides every judge, every single day in 33 the exercise of their judicial responsibilities.

34

35 It is my belief that the Boatright Court lost its way concerning this sad and embarrassing moment in the 36 history of the Colorado Supreme Court when it disregarded and disrespected long established principles,

1 rules, processes and ethical considerations that judges take an oath to obey. As the Interim Committee is 2 well aware, the judicial commission has jurisdiction over all Colorado state judges, including the 3 Colorado Supreme Court. Grounds for judicial discipline are found in Rule 5 of the Colorado Rules of 4 Judicial Discipline.

5
6 It is necessary to identify specific instances when the Supreme Court chose to circle the wagons to 7 protect the few, rather than to comply with established protocol, to illustrate the contempt it had for its 8 own process. Fundamental to the American commitment to the rule of law is that cases be decided by 9 neutral decision makers, the judge, the jury. All confidence in the system is lost if the public believes an 10 outcome has been determined prior to the commencement of the case. Similarly, all confidence would 11 be lost if the public believes the guilt or innocence of an individual is determined before the presentation 12 of evidence. The same result occurs if the court determines the credibility of witnesses prior to the trial.
13 That is what the Boatright Court did here. As early as February 4, 2021, Chief Justice Boatright issued a 14 statement concerning an article that appeared in the Denver Post on February 3, 2021 denying the 15 central allegation that Chief Justice Coats and his counsel, Andrew Rottman, whom he described as 16 "both dedicated public servants" "would ever authorize court resources to silence a blackmailer." Chief 17 Boatright went on to back Coats and Rottman with the weight of the credibility of the entire Supreme 18 Court by declaring that any statement to the contrary was, "simply false." All of this before any 19 investigation or trial. At the outset, the Colorado Constitution directs that any allegation of judicial 20 misconduct should have been referred to the judicial discipline commission, but Boatright failed to do so 21 and instead declared the outcome prior to the onset of an investigation. Secondly, Boatright ignored 22 Rule 2.10 of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct, which prohibits interested judicial statements on 23 pending or impending cases or issues that might come before the court. Mind you, these comments were 24 made prior to the awarding of the Troyer contract. Boatright violated Rule 2.11(A)(4) by reaching a 25 conclusion on the issue before the receipt of any evidence. Again, please keep in mind that it was 26 distinctly possible the Supreme Court might be called upon to review the matters, whether in a civil 27 setting, through a referral to the judicial commission, or a criminal proceeding against the principles 28 involved in the investigation. It appears the court had little or no concern commenting on information 29 that was being provided to it in an ex parte fashion, contrary to rule 2.9 of the Code. Boatright 30 reaffirmed this standard of behavior on February 16, 2021 when he announced he would be briefed on a 31 weekly basis on all "misconduct complaints across the department to ensure each incident is fully 32 investigated and acted on as appropriate without delay." Presumably he was also referring to complaints 33 of judicial misconduct that should rightfully be referred directly to the judicial commission, and under 34 the present system, might be subject to review by the Supreme Court.

35
36 Does this process seem fair to the person or persons being investigated? I trust the answer is no. Such a 37 process would likely require Justice Boatright and any other Justice who might be privy to the 38 information to disqualify himself or herself pursuant to Rule 2.11(A) because the judge would have 39 personnel knowledge of the facts in dispute in the proceeding. Yet another solid reason why any judicial 40 misconduct concerns should be referred to the judicial commission, as required. Boatright's decision to 1 comment on the veracity of certain witnesses and/or participants compromised any investigation or 2 proceeding that might ensue. He describes certain individuals as, "dedicated public servants" and that 3 the justices had "full confidence" in a named judge alleged to have committed acts of alleged judicial 4 misconduct. On what did the Chief Justice and the other Justices base their conclusions? Had they 5 conducted their own investigation contrary to Commission rules? Did they base their conclusion on ex

6 parte communications? Were they sending a subtle message to those who might disagree with the Court 7 that their observations would not receive the same considerations as those who appeared to be in lock 8 step with the Supreme Court? Whatever the perception, it was clear that certain decisions had already 9 been made by the court in determining to hire private counsel to conduct an "independent investigation" 10 to "clear those wrongly accused."

11
12 One aspect of the Troyer Report that rings true is the disconnect between the Supreme Court and the 13 actual operation of the court system and the many dedicated employees that assure that the courts run 14 smoothly. The now infamous memo clearly illustrates that the rank and file believed there were two 15 separate tracks for discipline, those for higher-level administrators, their cronies, and the judges, and 16 another system for those less situated. Any reform must address the behavior of those agencies which 17 might be beholden to the Supreme Court. For example, the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel, at 18 one time, held certain authority over the judicial commission. The OARC had the authority to determine 19 the office space of the Commission and the authority for funding for certain projects. In both instances, 20 the OARC made it difficult for the Commission, presumably siding on behalf of the embattled Supreme 21 Court. It is alleged that the OARC vacillated between recusing itself from the fray, only to decide at a 22 later time to reassert itself, usually to the detriment of the judicial commission. It appears it might be 23 appropriate to codify that once a recusal is declared, that the recusing party must withdraw from any 24 further involvement in the proceedings. Although it appears the funding of the judicial commission has 25 been resolved with recent legislation, it would be appropriate to prohibit an arm of the Supreme Court 26 for any supervisory role over the Commission, as was the case with the OARC.

27
28 I am aware of the recommendations submitted by the Colorado Commission to the Interim Committee, 29 as well as the recommendations in the Troyer Report. I am acutely aware that reform might require 30 amendments to the Colorado Constitution and the complexity, cost, and perils inherent in offering 31 constitutional amendments, but believe certain recommendations are absolutely necessary. First and 32 foremost, the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline must be completely free from 33 interference from outside sources, including the Colorado Supreme Court as the final decision-making 34 authority. Instead, the final decision-making authority should vest with an independent entity which is 35 representative of the community. The Commission should be independently funded and required to 36 follow established standards of financial accountability. The Commission should have full subpoena 37 power, which is governed by existing law. Any disputes involving the subpoena power and discovery 38 matters included therein should be resolved by an entity other than the Colorado Supreme Court. It has 39 been suggested that a body consisting of attorneys, judges, citizens and other disciplines might be

1 considered. This might be discussed simultaneously with the recommendation concerning final decision-2 making authority in discipline cases.

3
4 The Commission has performed admirably, despite the roadblocks it has encountered. There needs to be 5 a level of stability for the Commission to carry out any reform that might be adopted consistent with the 6 rules surrounding the appointment of members to the Commission on Judicial Discipline, all eligible 7 members who are subject to reappointment should be reappointed. I am disappointed to say that I am 8 concerned that judges presently serving on the Commission might not be reappointed by the Supreme 9 Court because of the strength and courage they have exhibited in addressing this turmoil. Such refusal to 10 appoint would reflect poorly on the Supreme Court.

11 12 The Commission should have rulemaking authority similar to that enjoyed by the Commission on 13 Judicial Performance. I have previously joined in an Op-Ed expressing various concerns about the 14 Troyer Report and will not repeat them here, except to address its conclusion that a major portion of the 15 report faulted the Colorado Judiciary for not preparing Chief Justice Coats for the job. I was astounded 16 to hear this excuse, as it has been my experience in Colorado, at the time Coats was appointed, 17 [Colorado] enjoyed an outstanding reputation throughout the country for the quality of training it 18 provided its judges. Colorado was one of the few states that actually had leadership training for Chief 19 Judges, which included the Chief Justice. Ironically, the Masias Contract, which has been at the center 20 of this mess, was a contract to provide leadership training because the two outside professionals who 21 had previously provided the training were retiring. I personally had the privilege of being appointed and 22 serving as Chief Judge of the 10th Judicial District under the leadership of Chief Justices Anthony 23 Vollack, Mary Mullarkey, and Michael Bender. Each provided outstanding administrative and ethical 24 leadership and were progressive in moving the Colorado Judiciary to deep respect throughout the 25 judicial community in the nation. I am unaware of any concerns the Judicial Department might have had 26 concerning the leadership abilities of former chief justices to serve until the revelations contained in the 27 Troyer Report, and only as they implicated Coats. It is one of the many questions left unanswered in the 28 Report. More specific details concerning the specific knowledge of the then-serving Justices of what 29 they knew when they learned it should have been addressed, including the specific knowledge of each 30 individual Justice. Thank you for this enormous undertaking. While much damage has been done to the 31 integrity of a once proud state judicial system, I am convinced that the resolve of this Committee and the 32 deep respect our state has for the rule of law will restore it to the status it deserves. Thank you.

33
34 Sen. Lee

35 Thank you, Judge Maes for your service to the State of Colorado and for your presentation to the 36 committee today, we have a question from Vice Chair Carver.

37
38 Rep. Carver

39 Thank you, Mr Chair. Thank you Judge for joining us today and making the trip north on the Interstate.
40 We greatly appreciate it. I want to focus on the complaint system and the deficiencies that have been

1 revealed, significant deficiencies, since that is the bulk of our tasking under 201, and your experience on 2 the Commission is invaluable. So, with the with the Chair's indulgence, I have three questions, if I may, 3 dialog.

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 Fire away.

7

8 Rep. Carver

9 Thank you, Mr Chair.

10

11 Sen. Lee

12 Before you do that, let me acknowledge and welcome Rep. Bacon, who's been here for a while, but I 13 didn't want to interrupt the Judge, thanks for being here. Go right ahead, Madam Vice Chair.

14

15 Rep. Carver

16 Thank you, Mr Chair. First, I want to ask you to comment, if you have a comment on some points that 17 were raised in the prior testimony. There was the rule that was put up, the Commission rule, or the rule 18 that has been promulgated by the Judiciary on what is and is with. Let me start again, what is to be 19 excluded in the initial screening process. Do you have a view on whether complaints should be accepted 20 for further investigation by the Commission if they involve the merits of a court's ruling on a motion or 21 the merits of the case, or any other aspect. I have always believed, and perhaps will hear this from the 22 National Conference of State Legislatures, that the ruling and all aspects of the judge's ruling on motions
23 and other aspects are to be handled through the appeal process and not a complaint process. And I know 24 you were here and heard the testimony. Would you address that, please?

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 Judge Maes.

28

29 Dennis Maes

30 Thank you, Madam Vice Chair, I think one of the things that's necessary to discuss in this process is, 31 what kind of commission are you setting up? Are you going to commit to give the commission the 32 resources it needs to do the thorough research that it needs to investigate certain complaints? And I 33 guess what I'm talking about is, the short answer to your question is, I think if they are properly staffed, 34 that the only time what might appear to be an appellate issue that should come before the Commission 35 on Judicial Discipline is if there were some judicial misconduct that was involved during the same 36 proceeding. But I was, and am, comfortable with at least the initial determination as to whether or not an 37 issue is simply an appellate issue. But obviously, the Rules define what might be judicial misconduct.
38 And if there is something within the ruling in the case that might have appellate issues as well as 39 discipline, then it should be fully investigated. Absolutely.

40

1 Rep. Carver

2 Thank you for that. And, then, the testimony of the prior witness, indicating that violations of the Code 3 of Judicial Conduct would not be within the realm of what claims are heard by the Commission. And 4 perhaps I misheard the witness, but that is not my understanding. That, if there is violation, alleged 5 judicial misconduct under the Code, that there is a pass, can you speak to that and perhaps clarify?
6

7 Dennis Maes

8 Well yeah, and I'm not sure exactly what the intent of that testimony was. I recall what you're speaking 9 about. And once again, I would go back to what I mentioned at the outset: that when we start talking 10 about reform, that sometimes we forget about all those things that have guided us through the processes 11 and which have really served us well. And I mentioned some of the things like ex parte communication, 12 commenting on pending or impending cases. Look to the rules that we already have. I mean, there are 13 definitions in the in the Code that that talk to us about what appears might be in the realm of what the 14 Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline should be addressing. And let's go back to those. I think 15 sometimes we try to make things much more complicated than they are. I mean, I always go back to a 16 comment, one conversation we had, some judges had about in terms of recusals. I said, well, the first 17 thing you do is go to the Rule that talks about recusals. That provides you with a lot of guidance on what 18 you're going to do, then you have case law and the whole bit. So, once again, I think I would advocate 19 for a fully staffed Commission to begin with, so that they can do as thorough job as they can in making 20 determinations as to whether or not something should come before that body. Included in that might be 21 an explanation why, even though there was, might have been, an allegation of misconduct. Why the 22 commission chose not to accept the case and have that as a reporting requirement. You know, I know, 23 there's a lot of concern, and I certainly don't have the answer as to when confidentiality should stop and 24 when it should start and the whole bit. But I definitely believe it's an area that should be deeply 25 explored, and there should be a point in time when the confidentiality shield is removed.
26

27 Rep. Carver

28 Thank you. Judge Maes and, then, my final question. And you may not have the Troyer Report in front 29 of you, but their Recommendation 10 specifically addresses various aspects, and that's on its the title is 30 under improving judicial officer complaint process, and it talks about, obviously, the deficiencies, 31 starting with that many didn't know what the complaint process was, and then they didn't trust the 32 complaint process. But the rules were vague. There was not specificity. Since you have been on the 33 Commission, can you give me a sense of and obviously, these things are established by Rule. In your 34 opinion, should it, are there aspects that should be statutory versus the more flexible leaving it to rule?
35 So again, and that's on page 61 and 62 and perhaps you could provide, if you're interested, of course, 36 provide some follow up comment in writing. But I'm interested in hearing, especially from former 37 Commission members, and you are so invaluable being both a judge as well as a commission member of 38 long standing, the structure of the complaint process. Understanding or we're developing an 39 understanding of the deficiencies of that. Where it needs to be, by rule versus statute. And, also, on page 40 62 there is discussion about confidentiality. And I think that's another aspect where and both these points

1 are covered under our 18 items. But one aspect of our task is, what should be statutory, what should be 2 rule? So that's a pretty deep question, and certainly would welcome your written comments, if you 3 choose to provide them on those issues.

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 Judge Maes

7

8 Dennis Maes

9 Madam Vice Chair, if you would, I do have the Troyer Report with me, but if you would allow me to 10 have the opportunity to review it, and I would be more than happy to get you some written comments on 11 it. I had mentioned during my comments about some of the, as we all know, the problems with 12 amending the Constitution, but it appears to me that there's certain things that could be codified. For 13 instance, the rule on recusal. I don't think that there's anything that's really space science about that, that 14 couldn't be written down. But if you would provide me the opportunity, I would be happy to provide you 15 my comments on that. What particular portion of the Troyer Report was that?

16

17 Rep. Carver

18 It was in the . . . Mr Chair, if I may.

19

20 Sen. Lee

21 Go ahead.

22

23 Rep. Carver

24 It was in the recommendation section. It's recommendation 10 on pages, 61 and 62.

25

26 Dennis Maes

27 Thank you.

28

29 Rep. Carver

30 Thank you, sir,

31

32 Dennis Maes

33 And I will do that.

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Senator Gardner had a question. He's remote.

37

38 Sen. Gardner

39 Thank you, Mr Chair. Judge Maes, thanks for being here. It's good to see you again. I wanted to ask you 40 about the Troyer Report. I saw a newspaper Op-Ed that you co-authored that seemed to indicate that you

1 took issue with some of the factual conclusions of the Troyer Report. I don't know if you would want to 2 expand on that or speak to what you had to say in the Op-Ed about that, but I read the Troyer Report 3 closely and wondered what conclusions you, as an experienced factfinder yourself, may have taken 4 away from that. Thank you.

5

6 Sen. Lee

7 Judge Maes.

8

9 Dennis Maes

10 Thank you, Senator Gardner, it's nice to see you again. I'm assuming you're having a good time, in 11 addition to all the work that you're doing out there, but good to hear from you and see you. In a broad 12 sense, I thought the Troyer Report was rather superficial, and I do have it with me, and I would, quite 13 honestly, relish the opportunity to kind of go down it in detail at some point. I thought it was rather 14 superficial. Senator, you're as a lawyer, you're well-aware of some of the court rules that we must abide 15 by. And I'll just come straight out and say it. I, if you or I in a courtroom proceeding started calling 16 somebody a liar or something like that, it'd be about 10 seconds before the judge came floating out of 17 the chair and say, you're never going to say that again in here. You're not going to refer to it. I was really 18 put aside by the fact that one, I thought the Troyer Report was very biased. I thought they took a great 19 deal of liberty in in commenting on the veracity of certain witnesses. And let's don't play any games 20 about it, particularly Chris Ryan. Although they never interviewed Chris Ryan. Now, I understand that 21 they didn't interview him, probably because he didn't allow him to. But I thought some of the comments 22 they said about, he was not truthful, he was lying about that. I was really offended by that. I did not 23 know. Please provide me with the background information that you have to support that particular 24 opinion. So, I just thought they skipped a lot of putting the dots together on some of their conclusions 25 and stuff. And I don't have all of that with me right now. I do have it in my briefcase, but I just thought 26 that there was way too much what I considered speculation and editorial comment. But there wasn't any 27 backup support for it. Where's the evidence that you're telling me this. Did, and the lack of specificity 28 and maybe it was the confidentiality in saying this, Justice said this or that Justice said that. You know, 29 one of the things that we're very proud of in our system of justice in the United States is the opportunity 30 to confront your accusers. Well, who was saying that Chris Ryan was a liar? Who was saying that this 31 person was not telling the truth? How did you get that information? Where is it documented? How can 32 we get the behind the scenes information that you have? You, Troyer, has to make those particular 33 conclusions. Those are pretty damning conclusions that were reached in that Report, and they may very 34 well, Senator, be true. I just didn't think there was any backup information for it. That I would have 35 required if they would have been in my courtroom, telling me this is the evidence here. I would have 36 said that's insufficient. I'm not interested in your opinion. I'm interested in the facts that got you to that 37 opinion.

38

39 Sen. Lee

40 Senator Gardner.

1 Sen. Gardner

2 Thank you, that's all, and I appreciate that analysis. And as far as having fun in Philadelphia, the 3 Uniform Law Commission is primarily sitting in a room with 300 other lawyers to draft law. So 4 fortunately, unfortunately, my family can have fun while I sit in the room with lawyers.

5

6 Dennis Maes

7 Have a good one.

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Representative Weissman.

11

12 Rep. Weissman

13 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And Senator Gardner, I'm shocked to hear that sitting in a room full of lawyers is 14 not also a form of fun for you or any of us. Judge, thanks for being here. I wanted to drill in a little bit 15 more specifically. Something that I think has bubbled up to the surface over the years here is when we 16 were all in school, the simple, broad stroke of the function of the judicial-third of government is that 17 judges decide controversies arising under the law. And you certainly do that. A lot of the problem here 18 has come up from the fact that judges and Chief Judges and Chief Justices in particular are also 19 administrators or bosses or employers, if you will, of large, complex organizations filled with humans 20 and human imperfections and sometimes even human rivalries. The prior witness suggested one set of 21 ways to separate that. We've seen other ways, maybe just by way of example. And of course, without 22 getting any into anything individualized or revelatory of anyone's specifics. When you were a Chief 23 Judge for quite a number of years, and there arose, to say, a situation that maybe I'm not putting the 24 question right. I mean, within the Judicial Branch itself, you could have a situation that is both 25 something that implicates judicial discipline and HR matters. Take kind of an extreme example, if a 26 judge is just screaming racist stuff from the bench, clearly judicial conduct or misconduct is implicated, 27 and nobody is the gatekeeper of that information, because the courtroom is full of a variety of folks. I 28 think the problem comes in where sometimes conduct happens pretty deep down within the Branch 29 itself. Employees, clerks, interns, and, thus, there's both an HR lens on it and there's a judicial discipline 30 lens. I think it's pretty clear that the Constitution says that initial threshold determinations are to be made 31 by the Commission, which is like the Branch itself, constitutionally created and charged. There have 32 been implications that maybe that hasn't been happening consistently over the last couple of years. From 33 your standpoint, having to be in the middle of this for one of our Judicial Districts. How did you 34 navigate this, and how do you think that it should be navigated as we consider these matters statewide?

35

36 Sen. Lee

37 Judge Maes.

38

39

40

1 Dennis Maes

2 Thank you, Representative Weissman. And they do come up. They do come up as a Chief Judge. I took 3 my responsibilities very seriously and sometimes ended up with less of a friendship than I had before I 4 was a Chief Judge. But, for instance, once again I think we have guidance in what's the jurisdiction of 5 the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. And obviously, if I'm getting something that is clear to 6 me, that is a matter, or was clear to me, that was clearly a matter of judicial misconduct, then that would 7 be reported directly to the Commission on Judicial Discipline for them to deal with. You get into the HR 8 problems. Let me give you an example. Judges that maybe just didn't put in a full day of work. Let's put 9 it that way, I thought it was directly my responsibility to sit down with the judge and talk about, look, 10 here's what your responsibilities are. You know, you don't have carte blanche just to come and go as you 11 please. You have dockets to control. And, obviously, some of that is covered by the Rules under the 12 Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline. So, on those kinds of cases, where I didn't think there was any, 13 where it was an administrative issue, you know, running the courts and all that. I didn't have any 14 problems with that. I will tell you, Representative Weissman, that I had very regular meetings with my 15 administrative staff. And the one thing I would caution them is, I know a million ways to get myself in 16 trouble. I need you to keep me out of trouble, so you tell me. And, so, we would talk about things, and 17 we would talk about the administrative part of it. Obviously, they were not privy to anything else that 18 might have been, something that might be subject to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline.
19 The requirement is, if you believe there is, has been judicial misconduct, you report it. And you turn it 20 over to the body that has the authority to deal with it and also has the resources to deal with it. It was not 21 unusual for me, and we've heard about this, the somewhat tension sometimes between the State Court 22 Administrator's Office, the Supreme Court, the trial courts. And it's there, believe me. But I would also 23 refer to judicial counsel on this. Hey, I've got, I've got something going on here. What is your, what is 24 your recommendation to me as my lawyer on how we handle these things? So, you know, the worst 25 thing you can have is what's happened here in many instances, and that's just ignore it. Maybe hope it 26 goes away, or something like that. It's not usually the most comfortable. I don't know that I've provided 27 you with the answer you're looking for, but there is that tension between the HR part of it and where do 28 we get into a judge's behavior that I might bring him in and say, I think we need to take a look at this, as 29 opposed to, now you're committing judicial misconduct.

30

31 Sen. Lee

32 Rep. Weissman.

33

34 Sen. Lee

35 Thank you, appreciate the answer. To go a little bit further on some of that. So, if I'm an aggrieved party, 36 and let's just say, a judge. I'm just making up an extreme, easy example here to use it as a foil. A judge 37 screams inappropriate things at me from the bench, and I'm a litigant. I may have a claim in judicial 38 discipline. I could go to the Commission. I don't have to, though, as a private individual out there. So, I 39 guess two things I'd like to invite you to speak to a bit further. That's me as a hypothetical private 40 citizen. If, however, I am another judge who becomes aware of something going on in the judicial

1 system, then I'm not a private individual. I am bound by attorney ethics, and I'm bound by the Code of 2 Judicial Conduct, itself. And I think that you were alluding to this, but you know there are in those codes
3 affirmative duties to report certain things if you become aware of them. So, I'd like to hear you say a 4 little bit more about how you construed that in your time as Chief Judge, specifically in the context of 5 affirmative duties that you felt to report things up to the Commission on Judicial Discipline, if you
6 became aware of them. And, then, in terms of the balance of HR and letting the constitutional system 7 work. Swirling around out there in the great blender of things that the committee here is needing to 8 reduce, per the bill that scopes our work, are some notions of sort of legal liability. Well, what if 9 something comes out and sees the light of day, and then there might be exposure to the State in the form 10 of a civil judgment that would have to be ultimately paid by the State and the taxpayers. I didn't hear you 11 speak to any of that. And I'll just, I guess I'll say plainly, and then invite you to agree or disagree. You 12 know, if the State acting through any of its employees or agents has done wrong and given rise to a civil 13 claim, then, frankly, I think we need to answer for that, just like anybody else does. And I don't think to 14 me that cuts across the need for a constitutional mechanism for judicial discipline to function as set forth 15 in the law. Backing all the way up on the Constitution and the provisions in Article VI. So, I'd invite you 16 to speak more to both of those. please.

17

18 Sen. Lee
19 Judge Maes.

20

21 Dennis Maes
22 Representative Weissman, as a matter of fact, you bring up a good point. As the Chief Judge, when we 23 would have civil matters involving judges, I generally had to sign off if there was some sort of an 24 agreement that was reached on a civil lawsuit. So, you have the other concern is that even though I'm the 25 Chief Judge, I have really no authority over any of the other judges. I mean, they are a constitutionally 26 appointed judge, just like I am and I could sit down and have a chat with them about, hey, I really think, 27 you know, maybe you ought to step it up in this way or that way, or the whole bit. But do I have any 28 authority to enforce it? No, I didn't and I don't. And I don't know if that's a good thing or a bad thing, 29 you know? I mean, the Constitution is the Constitution. But it's interesting that you put me on the spot 30 right now, because now I'm thinking about those cases where I said, Yeah, I think we ought to settle 31 these and what was the reason for the complaint to begin with? And should that have been also 32 submitted to the Commission on Judicial Discipline? So, I guess I don't know the exact answer to that, 33 other than to say that, at least when I was the judge, I would hope to be guided by the Rules, and I would 34 be guided by whether or not this is something that's interfering with the operation of the courts as a 35 whole, those sorts of things. I would like to try to take those into consideration in how I was going to 36 handle a particular dispute. I will tell you that there were times when I would have a lawyer come into 37 my chambers and say I was, by the way, my name's Representative Weissman. I was just up in judge so 38 and so's courtroom, and, you know, yeah, I know my argument was pretty lousy and all that, but did he 39 really have to scream at me or anything like that? I'd get those kinds of things. And I will tell you right 40 now that one of the things I really believe in, and it all, you got to balance all of this stuff as well. You

1 know, I mean, on how egregious is something that's being reported to you? But I also felt like, hey, if I
2 get something out of the ordinary, that's not my in my character, screaming at somebody. I would want 3 somebody to tell me. To come up and say, hey, look what you're doing. I think, to prevent something 4 from becoming much more of a problem. So, in a circumstance like that, I would bring the judge in. I'd 5 say, look, I wasn't there. I don't know. All I can tell you is, this is what it is. You know, if the allegation 6 is accurate, you might want to take a look at it. And I'm not certain, but I think it used to be the process
7 that the Commission on Judicial [Performance] did interim evaluations, not just when the judge was up 8 for retention, and, you know, took those kinds of issues into consideration. And I guess my whole point 9 is, what can do if there's behavior out there that can prevent somebody from ending up being referred to 10 the Commission on Judicial Discipline. I think we have those responsibilities, to do that. God knows, 11 none of us are perfect, and I had my bad days. I will tell you the best lesson, Representative Weissman, I 12 learned as a judge is my clerk. I hired my clerk. I was on the bench for 24 years. My clerk was with me 13 for 23 years and 11 months. Now, I don't know how she put up with me for that long, but one of the 14 most important lessons I ever learned is we walked off the bench one day and she says, you know your 15 behavior, that's the way you are. You really kind of stepped over it this time. Well, that's the only time 16 she ever told me that, but she knew how much I respected her and stuff. It was a valuable lesson for me.
17 You know, yeah, you're absolutely right. So, some of these things are just common-sense things, too. I 18 mean, how can we help each other be better human beings and correct something before it becomes a 19 more serious issue?

20

21 Sen. Lee

23

24 Rep. Bacon

25 Thank you, and thank you for your testimony today. I'm wondering if I can ask you, perhaps some of 26 your insights on, you know, being an administrator within this system. One of the recommendations 27 from the Troyer Report was really about preparing the Chief Judge to be an administrator. But I think 28 I'm just curious on what any sort of leadership training it is that any of you are provided, as well as what 29 is it that you norm around by way of organizational culture, with handing anything from something that 30 might be an HR issue to a misconduct issue? And particularly, as a Chief Judge within your District, so 31 can you share a little bit on what may be happening in such leadership training? How perhaps you were 32 trained, if any, formally by the agency? And what was your guidance, I guess maybe even outside of the 33 CJD, in regards to you being an administrator in this organization?

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Judge Maes.

37

38 Dennis Maes

39 Thank you for that question. Representative Bacon. And I'll speak about myself personally. When you 40 are first appointed to the bench, we go to judge school. And I don't know how long it is now, whether it's 1 one or two weeks. But I will tell you this, that I thought it was very thorough, and I thought it was very 2 intense, and it wasn't, hey, this is a week of let's all get to know each other and the whole bit. But here's 3 what we're doing. And as a result of that, we would have individuals from the departments come and 4 talk to us about that. About, you know, here's what the office of probation services does. Here's what the 5 clerks do. And, of course, they had their own organizations, as well. And, you know the other thing 6 Representative Bacon is. I don't want to be too critical, but if you're there for a while. I was on the bench

7 for seven years before I became the Chief Judge. Well, I saw what was going on. We had judge 8 meetings, we had meetings with staff. So, there was always that opportunity. When I mentioned that I 9 thought the State Court Administrator's Office training program was really excellent. I really meant that.
10 I thought that they provided us with a great background in terms of here's where the different divisions 11 of work are and why and the whole bit, and getting to know what is the organization. The other thing, 12 Representative Bacon, is I had a great deal of faith in the people I hired that were my administrators.
13 And I was the first to admit, I don't know near as much as my district administrator knows about some 14 of the administrative processes here. But I was never hesitant to go say, Would you please teach me, tell 15 me about it. And, you know, communication is always the thing. It's always the thing. So, I mean, there 16 was just a need for a lot of communication. When I was a Chief Judge, I implemented this what I called 17 chat with the Chief. And what that was, is I would have quarterly meetings where we would have the 18 entire court staff, obviously some skeleton staff, to take care of business and all that. But all the 19 employees. And it was a come and hear what's going on. See what, hear what we're doing. And we 20 would have reports from the directors. We would also have a social hour. So, the people after the reports 21 were in could sit around and meet with their colleagues and talk about, you know, Dallas, or whatever 22 the heck they wanted to talk about. But, so, just a constant way of trying to educate those around us. I 23 mean, I was never ashamed to ask a question about something. God darn knows, you know, there's 24 anybody that needs help, it's me. You know, ask my wife for 42 years, she'll confirm that. So, I just was 25 surprised when I read that part of the Troyer Report about this individual jumping into a job with 26 seemingly no experience. That was not my experience at all. And I will tell you that, as the Chief Judge, 27 we had a Chief Judge's Council, and those were periodic meetings that we had that were actually run by 28 the Chief Judges. It was our agenda. Now, at the Judicial Conference, when all the judges were together, 29 we had a meeting of all the Chief Judges. That meeting was specifically called by the Chief Justice of 30 the Colorado Supreme Court, and the agenda was set by that particular person. So, there was never an 31 opportunity where I felt that I didn't have the resources to reach out to help me through a process. And 32 when I mentioned earlier about consulting with counsel, what should I do with this particular case? You 33 tell me you're my lawyer, you know. And of course, let them do their jobs. That doesn't necessarily 34 mean that we were always in lockstep. At the end of the day, I'm the one that made the decision. But I 35 wanted to hear from people about what are all the options that are out there. So, it was a real surprise to 36 me when a suggestion came that our Chief Justices somehow were not prepared for the job. Those three 37 that I mentioned, they were not only fabulous judges, but they were fabulous individuals. We had our 38 spats, you know, but it was always the business part of the thing. And I was always very impressed with 39 them and what they were doing and what they were trying to do to teach us. You know, we had our. . .
40 Representative Bacon, I will tell you there was the tension between the state courts, individual state

1 courts, and the Supreme Court. Well, why do you have all of a sudden, $100,000 for that position? I can 2 use three clerks down here in Pueblo. There's always that tension and there always will be that tension.
3 And that's just the way the system works. But there was always communication about it.

4

5 Rep. Bacon

6 Rep Bacon.

7

8 Rep. Bacon

9 Thank you. And I guess what I'm curious about is. I'm sorry, I tend to process as I ask a question. So, 10 I'm wondering if you'd give me a little bit of grace. But what I want to understand is, what sort of either 11 public accountability measures or steps does the Chief Justice need to take in managing the organization, 12 particularly around budget, right, hiring and so forth. You know, who's looking at overall, how many 13 contracts were issued, all those procurement things. Because I think it just strikes me in many public 14 institutions that one, a chief executive could say they don't know procurement policies and, also, just 15 have something be signed without understanding the rules behind it. And, so, I don't know if there's sort 16 of like these are just examples to kind of illustrate the point. But, are there annual reports? Are there this 17 is the state of the court? Are there annual budget reviews? I mean, we look at them because of the 18 funding pieces. But I'm curious what the organization does that perhaps isn't codified in the Code to set 19 some sort of public learning knowledge and accountability around how the organization is run. I think, 20 unfortunately, through reading the reports, we're not getting some of those details, and so we're kind of 21 having to guess. So, for example, I'm like, Well, what is the actual syllabus of the leadership training, 22 you know? I'm curious. Or, do you have to post things for all of the Chief Judges of all the Districts to 23 know about? And, so, I guess, for me, I don't want you to perhaps explain the whole Department, but are 24 there some things that you can come to regularly expect that you feel like should be happening as a 25 matter of organizational policy or protocols that you have maybe seen from other Chief Justices over 26 time? Right? That perhaps didn't happen here. If you have anything to share on that, that might be 27 helpful. But, I guess we're just looking into the insights of how is the organization run. What is it that 28 people can expect to see or know particularly about the things discussed here in regards to contracting 29 and procurements and how much money we have, and any responsibility about the HR processes, any 30 reporting out to you all. Are there any annual reports? This is how many complaints we've had. Do you 31 get to be included in saying, as an organization, we want to lower this number, or just anything? How is 32 it that you all are included in I call that organizational culture and organizational policies that aren't 33 necessarily codified in statute or code. If that makes any sense?

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 And Judge Maes feel free to answer fully and completely, but I'll just note, we're 20 minutes behind 37 schedule, and the role of this committee is to look at judicial discipline, not procurement rules and things 38 of that nature. So, within that context, we appreciate your answer.

39

40

1 Rep. Bacon

2 Representative Bacon, let me break it down to the lowest common denominator. And we all had our, I'm 3 in the 10th Judicial District. I had my budget. So, I was fully aware, because of the information given to 4 me by my court administrator, what our budget was. What are our needs, what does it look like next 5 year, what does it look like last year, here's what our stats are and the whole bit. On the larger picture, a 6 general idea, you know, we would know that, hey, we're going to take a hit this year from the 7 Legislature, or something like that, and so you need to prepare for it. But, we had audits. We constantly 8 got figures concerning caseloads, that sort of thing. You know, it's one of the bases on how many judges 9 are in each District. But just going back to me, I thought the information that I had from my staff was 10 always very adequate for me to be able to say, here's where we are in terms of the state of the 10th 11 Judicial District. And I just, again Representative Bacon. I trusted the people that I had in those 12 positions, and I trusted them to tell me. Just to give you an example, we had an occasion where Chief 13 Justice Michael Bender was coming down to Pueblo for a certain thing with the courts. And I decided 14 that I would like to introduce him to the Pueblo Community. And, so, I arranged for a little get together, 15 social get together, and I had the court system and the probation department pitch in to pay for that, and 16 the auditors told me I better never do that again. So, you know, those are the kinds of things that you 17 learn from. You know, that you don't do anything intentionally. And I never did something like that 18 again, but I was always very comfortable in terms of the decisions that were being made locally. I can't 19 imagine a half billion-dollar budget or anything. I couldn't tell you.

20

21 Sen. Lee

22 Okay, thank you Judge Maes, both for your service as a judge, a chief judge, and on the disciplinary 23 commission. I can't help but noting that it must have taken some courage for your clerk to chide you 24 about your approach, but it also took some humility from you for her to feel empowered to do that.

25

26 Dennis Maes

27 Yeah, we're just human.

28

29 Sen. Lee

30 We are indeed. Again, well, thanks for your testimony here today.

31

32 Dennis Maes

33 Thank you all.

Appendix 27(s)(ii)(3)

Presentation by the National Conference of State Legislatures;

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline—
July 12, 2022 Hearing:
Presentation by the National Council of State Legislatures

1 Sen. Lee

2 Next on the agenda, we have Michael Hartman from the National Council of State Legislatures, and he 3 is online. We apologize for being a little bit behind schedule, but we appreciate your testimony. Mr.
4 Hartman, I don't know if you're there. We see a slide up on our video, but we don't see you. Maybe, we 5 do see you.

6

7 Michael Hartman

8 Are you able to see me now?

9

10 Sen. Lee

11 Very good. Thanks for joining us. If you would, introduce yourself and your organization. And again, 12 appreciate you being with us.

13

14 Michael Hartman

15 Yeah. Well, hello. My name is Michael Hartman. I want to take a moment to thank Chairman Pete Lee 16 and Madam Vice Chair Terry Carver for allowing me the time to speak today. I will be covering the 17 issue of judicial conduct committees from a national lens, highlighting what other states may be doing 18 that is innovative or just different, as well as larger trends. Hopefully, by the end of this I will have 19 covered some of the topics of interest to this committee, and I'm happy to follow up on questions I'm 20 unable to answer today.

21

22 But before I begin, I do want to take a brief second to tell you about NCSL and myself. NCSL is the 23 country's most trusted bipartisan organization serving legislators and staff for more than 40 years. Our 24 membership includes well over 7000 legislators and around 30,000 legislative staff. We promote policy 25 innovation, create opportunities for lawmakers to share knowledge, and ensure state legislators have a 26 strong, cohesive voice in the federal system. We do this because we believe in the importance of the 27 legislative institution, and know that when states are strong, our nation is strong.

28

29 As I mentioned earlier, my name is Michael Hartman, and I am a Policy Associate at NCSL. I have a 30 Bachelor's of Science in Psychology from The Ohio State University and a Juris Doctorate from Denver 31 University here in Colorado.

32

33 So, without further ado, let's begin. On the screen, I've laid out what topics I'll be covering today. As you 34 can see, we will start with model rules and end with confidentiality and transparency. Perhaps one of the 1 most debated topics, in my opinion. Along with those, we'll cover some of the other major aspects of 2 judicial conduct commissions, or what I'll call JCCs, for short.

3
4 First up is the recommended model by the ABA. It's actually been some time since there has been a 5 major recommendation for reform. Back in February of 1978, the American Bar Association first 6 adopted the standards relating to judicial discipline and disability retirement as a national model for 7 enforcement of judicial conduct codes. A little over a decade later, in 1990 the ABA set out to review 8 the 78 rules with the following goals in mind: a shared conformity with the new ABA model judicial 9 code of conduct to ensure prompt and fair discipline for judges, to enhance public confidence in the 10 judiciary, in the judicial disciplinary system, to ensure the protection of the public, and to protect the 11 independence of the judiciary and establish a model for states to use as a resource to establish improved 12 judicial discipline systems. From these goals, following extensive amounts of research and discussions, 13 the model rules were approved in 1994. Published in January 1995, the model rules end with the 14 statement, "these model rules are presented with the understanding that each jurisdiction should 15 determine for itself whether to accept or modify the individual rules." With that in mind, let's look at 16 what those model rules entail. Rules 1 through 5 outline the organization and structure of JCCs. For 17 example, they provide that the authority of JCCs should extend to any person performing judicial 18 functions or exercising judicial powers in the state's judicial branch. The major exempt carve outs would 19 be administrative law judges and federal judges. The rules also recommend membership to have an 20 equal number of judges, lawyers, and public members. Rules three through five primarily address a 21 singular concern, and that is whether it is appropriate for a single JCC board to act as the investigator, 22 prosecutor, judge and jury for a disciplinary case. On a basic level, the model rule solution was to 23 propose two independent panels, one which would handle the investigation and prosecutorial function, 24 and a second which would handle fact finding and decision making. Rules 6 through 16 cover many of 25 the general provisions, including defining the grounds for discipline as any conduct constituting a 26 violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct, the Rules of Professional Conduct or other applicable 27 professional codes. The only other ground for discipline is the willful violation of a valid order of the 28 highest court, the commission, or a panel of the commission, such as those panels contemplated in rules 29 3 through 5. The rules establish clear and convincing evidence as the standard of proof, allow for state 30 rules of civil procedure to apply generally, provide the right to counsel for the judge, prohibits ex parte 31 communications, provides immunity to civil suit for communications with the Commission, provides 32 service of process procedures, subpoena procedures, provides an emergency tool for the highest court to 33 place a judge on interim suspension upon the filing of an indictment if the charge raises a substantial 34 question as to the judge's fitness for office and provides other notice provisions, more broadly. Of 35 particular interest is rule 11, which addresses confidentiality under the model rules prior to the filing of 36 formal charges, all proceedings are confidential. If the complaint is dismissed without the filing of 37 formal charges, the commission may never disclose it. If the matter proceeds the filing of formal 38 charges, all proceedings are public, except incapacity proceedings. Rules 17 through 25 cover 39 disciplinary proceedings generally. The process begins with the receipt of a complaint by the 40 Commission and is broad enough to allow disciplinary counsel to initiate a complaint themselves, as

1 opposed to just outside sources. Many of these rules are procedural in nature and cover the filing and 2 hearing process rules. Of note are Rule 18 and Rule 25. Rule 18 governs the use of dismissed complaints
3 by the commission. It is intended to protect the judge from the use of unsubstantiated information years 4 after the information was received. It provides that if a complaint has been dismissed prior to the filing 5 of formal charges, the allegations made in that complaint are not to be used for any purpose in any future
6 judicial or lawyer disciplinary proceeding against the judge. Rule 25 provides for the review process. It 7 provides that dismissals and the recommendations for sanctions shall be reviewed by the highest court in 8 the state, which may accept, reject or modify in whole or in part the findings and conclusions of the 9 commission. The highest court may dismiss the charges, remand to expand the record, or impose 10 sanctions. For the ABA, the requirement that any public sanction be imposed by the highest court and 11 not the commission, is essential to the independence of the judiciary. Rules 26 and 27 actually cover two 12 specific scenarios. The discipline of a member of the state's highest court. And the second scenario is 13 cases involving allegations of mental or physical incapacity, respectively. So, Rule 26 provides that a 14 complaint against a member of the highest court proceeds through the process in the same way as any 15 other, except that a special supreme court is constituted to act in place of the highest court. The special 16 court shall consist of a number of judges equal to the number of justices of the highest court, and may be 17 composed of trial or appellate court judges, or a combination of the two. The special supreme court will 18 act on interim suspension motions and serve as the appellate review body for the imposition of 19 sanctions. Rule 27 covers both cases which incapacity is being brought against a judge, and cases where 20 a judge actually pleads incapacity as a defense to other charges.

21
22 ,Although that was very brief, let's now turn to look at what the states are actually doing nationally. So, 23 the purpose of JCCs was to maintain and restore public confidence in Integrity, independence, and 24 impartiality of their judiciaries. Beginning in 1960, California became the first state to establish such an 25 organization. Now all 50 states have some form of a JCC. They have different names in different states, 26 such as commission, board, council, court or committee. In 2007, Cynthia Gray, who you will be 27 hearing from later, did a complete scan of state JCC laws and found differing sources of authority. As 28 you can see from her work in Table 1, most states have passed constitutional provisions which allow for 29 JCCs. As I'm sure you know, the Colorado Constitution provides that there shall be a Commission on 30 Judicial Discipline comprised of certain membership with certain terms. It also defines the grounds for 31 discipline. Of note are subsection E and G. Subsection E provides for the appointment of three special 32 masters to act as fact finders for the Commission, who may then recommend to the Supreme Court the 33 removal, censure, reprimand or discipline of a judge. This sort of addresses the concerns brought up 34 earlier in the ABA Model Rules 3 through 5. Subsection G provides that prior to the filing of a 35 recommendation to the Supreme Court, all papers filed with the Commission or masters are confidential 36 and privileged. This firmly establishes Colorado's line in which confidentiality ceases. So, we will be 37 discussing confidentiality a little bit more on a national lens in a second. On your screen, I've actually 38 highlighted one example of a recent state change that has occurred constitutionally. Like Colorado, 39 Texas has constitutional provisions. So, the reform was done through a ballot proposition. As you can

1 see from on screen, Texas passed a constitutional amendment expanding the scope of authority that their 2 JCC has to candidates for judicial positions as well as judges themselves.

3
4 So, with that, let's next look at how states handle membership. So, I'm actually going to run through the 5 next few topics quickly, as most of this information is from the Center for Judicial Ethics, and I noticed,
6 since Cynthia Gray will be talking, she is the Director of the Center. So, their resources on these topics 7 are extensive. If there is something not covered by one of us, feel free to reach out afterwards, and I'm 8 sure we'll be able to get you an answer. With that said, commission memberships are designed to be 9 representative of the vast interests within a state. As such, JCC membership is unique in each state.
10 However, there are some commonalities. Many memberships include judges, attorneys, justices of the 11 peace, public members, or clerks of the court. Within judges, states sometimes choose to further break 12 down the membership of judges by the type of court they're in. For example, Tennessee requires two 13 trial judges, one general session judge, one municipal court judge, one juvenile court judge, one court of 14 appeals or court of criminal appeals judge, and two additional judges. Throughout the states, term limits 15 range between three and six years. As for the selection of members, members come from a plethora of 16 sources. Some states allow each member to be picked from amongst their peers. So, for example, 17 Montana has two district judges selected by district judges, one attorney selected by the Supreme Court, 18 and two public members selected by the Governor. Other states have all members selected by one body.
19 For example, Ohio's seven judges, 17 attorneys, and four public members are all selected by the 20 Supreme Court. However, many states have some form of both systems occurring. For example, North 21 Carolina has one court of appeals judge, two superior court judges, and two district court judges selected 22 by the Chief Justice, four attorneys selected by the State Bar, and four public members, two selected by 23 the Governor and two selected by the General Assembly. Of particular note to an audience of legislators, 24 is that Virginia is perhaps the only state which has all seven of its members selected by the General 25 Assembly.

26
27 So, with that quickly covered, I'm going to move on to sanctions, as well. As far as public sanctions are 28 concerned, most of the states have similar types of sanctions, ranging from warnings to complete 29 removal. On your screen, you'll see three state examples of possible public sanctions. Between them, 30 they cover all the common forms of public sanctions. The major difference in practice regarding 31 sanctions is really concerning whether the supreme court directly sanctions individuals or if the court 32 simply has review authority over the sanctions placed by a JCC. As you may know, Colorado sanctions 33 judges through the Supreme Court after Commission recommendations. This is much like Florida. As an 34 example, on your screen, taking the opposite approach, California is a state which allows the JCC to 35 implement sanctions which are, then, reviewable by the Supreme Court. Interestingly, some states have 36 taken a hybrid approach. For example, Texas allows several public sanctions to be implemented by the 37 JCC with court review. However, removal and retirement are reserved for the court following 38 recommendations from the Commission. Texas is an interesting example, because they have some 39 technical nuances at play as well. For example, removal recommendations are heard by a seven-member 40 Review Tribunal appointed by the Texas Supreme Court. Additionally, public admonition, public

1 warning, and public reprimand may all be done prior to formal charges and are not subject to court 2 review.

3
4 With that quickly out of the way, let's move on to the delicate balancing act of confidentiality and public 5 transparency. So, as a psychology major, I like to start this section out by first mentioning some 6 psychology literature. As far back as the 80s, psychologists have been looking at the relationship 7 between feelings of fairness and losing in court. Both in formal and in informal settings, the general rule 8 of thumb is that people are more willing to accept loss in court if they feel the process was fair. Judges 9 and court personnel, as well as legislatures, should be interested in procedural justice because studies 10 indicate that it encourages decision acceptance and leads to positive views about the legal system, more 11 broadly. For example, there was an observable reduction in recidivism for at least four years following 12 an individual experiencing what they deemed a fair hearing. In other words, those individuals who 13 experienced an unfair process were more likely to reoffend. If you are more interested in procedural 14 justice literature, I would highly recommend Tom R. Tyler's work titled procedural justice and the court.
15 The real reason I mention this is to highlight the importance of a fair procedure for all the parties 16 involved. The trick is, what is considered fair is sometimes subjective. AKA, a political question. As 17 such, states have all tried very carefully to develop what they deem to be a fair process when it comes to 18 public transparency and confidentiality. With that said, they are not all the same. The last complete 19 national scan of confidentiality laws surrounding JCCs, that I am aware of, was done in 2007 by Robert 20 Tembeckjian in the Justice System Journal. On screen is Table 1 from his work, which covers when 21 confidentiality ceases. As of 2007, 35 states have adopted sunshine laws or rules regarding formal 22 judicial disciplinary hearings. Even in 2007, legal scholars such as Robert were arguing in favor of more 23 transparency. For example, he argues, keeping judicial disciplinary proceedings private runs the risks of 24 signaling to the public that judges are benefiting from special treatment. Particularly, by comparison 25 with criminal defendants, parties to civil litigation, or an official of a company sued by shareholders for 26 securities violations. The harm to a judge's reputation deriving from an as-yet unproved misconduct 27 claim is surely no less than the harm to a defendant indicted for an as yet unproved crime. Moreover, 28 from the very founding of the United States, the constitutional presumption has been that the accused, as 29 well as the public, are better protected against government tyranny by open processes. Regardless, states 30 must answer the political question, what is fair for all parties involved?

31
32 And with that, I will end my presentation. I want to thank you again for having me. If allowable, I can 33 answer any questions you may have. If I am unable to answer now, please reach out by email, on screen, 34 and NCSL will be sure to follow up as quickly as possible.

35
36 Sen. Lee

37 Thank you for your presentation, Mr. Hartman, we do have a question from Representative Weissman.
38
39
40

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thanks, Mr. Hartman, for talking with us, and very much appreciate the point
3 about procedure and how folks feel about the outcome. I think that bears on all of our work here, as you
4 noted. I think that you are familiar. Just to set the stage for the question. You're familiar with the VRA 5 or Victim Rights Act in Colorado, at least somewhat? Okay, it was observed, I think very rightly, at our 6 last hearing, that there really isn't any such VRA for procedural or substantive rights attaching to 7 complainants in the Colorado judicial discipline system. I spoke to one person who has been a 8 complainant in a matter, and the way that that person put it is, the system treats me as a witness. It does 9 not treat her as a victim or survivor in the sense of having rights that attach under our framework or 10 Marcy's Law in other states, and so on. The system needs to treat complainants as witnesses, no doubt.
11 But I think the point is, can it not also treat them in another way? So, my question, and I realize you may 12 need to pin this for follow up, but I'm very interested in it. Does NCSL have any comparative research 13 into first, the threshold question, whether there is any such framework, whether by constitution, statute 14 or court rule in any other state that orbits its judicial disciplinary function or system and vests rights. For 15 example, just to be notified about what's going on every X days, or something like that, or rights that 16 may move from procedural to substantive. And if the threshold question is clear that there is any such 17 system, it would be useful to see kind of a breakdown of the elements across different states. So, as we 18 consider what we're doing here for the balance of the interim, we could learn from that.

19

20 Sen. Lee

21 Mr. Hartman.

22

23 Michael Hartman

24 Thank you, Representative. That is actually a really interesting question. Unfortunately, NCSL doesn't 25 currently have kind of a national scan on victims' rights, as they're associated with judicial misconduct 26 themselves. Recently, we did do a little bit of research into victims' rights as extended beyond when a 27 case is dismissed, generally. So how that typically works out is some states have effectively defined 28 victims in their victims' rights act to be broad enough to continue victim status even following dismissal 29 of a case. In some of those instances, though, that definition of a victim may expand into judicial 30 conduct proceedings. However, I have not done a deep dive into those specific statutes to be able to 31 speak clearly on whether that is true or not. But theoretically, some of those definitions are broad 32 enough to encompass victims in all proceedings, which may include judicial misconduct proceedings, 33 depending on how the state defines their victim's rights. What I can say is we can probably get you some 34 more information. I am unfamiliar with any statute that currently exists expressly dealing with this.

35

36 Rep. Weissman

37 Okay, thank you, Mr. Hartman, I'll just say thank you now for the answer. Appreciate the point about 38 you know, a suitable definition might do the job of invoking all of the general VRA. We are going to 39 hear later from NCSC, and what I may do is reach out after the fact to you and them. Our nonpartisan 40 staff may do the same. I would definitely like to avoid reinvention of any wheels or duplication of effort,

1 but I do think comparative work would help in the interest of time. I think I'll leave it there and maybe 2 seek you out after the fact. Thank you.

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Okay, any other questions from the panel? Madam Vice Chair.

6

7 Rep. Carver

8 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Mr. Hartman, for your presentation. And in the interest of time, some 9 of these questions or queries may be more appropriate for written follow up. So first, I think Rep.
10 Weissman raises a very interesting point about procedures within our complaint process that recognize 11 the concerns and interests of the complainant. And understanding that this is a civil process while the 12 VRA is in a criminal setting here in Colorado. If I may, Rep. Weissman be so bold that, as you're 13 perhaps looking into Rep. Weissman's query, that if you find in on the civil side, whether it's an existing 14 judicial complaint process or analogous to HR processes, complaints filed within governmental 15 agencies, what kinds of procedural steps are embedded or do you see that speak to the complainant's 16 interests? And certainly that would include what is going on with the complaint, right? Retaliation, 17 whistleblower, any other things that you might find that might be relevant to what we're looking at in the 18 judicial complaint process. So if you wouldn't mind perhaps expanding your search to include those civil 19 systems, I think that might be helpful. Second of all, Mr. Chair, if I may. And I think all of these are if 20 you can respond in writing and send to Juliann to share with the committee. Given our full schedule 21 here, I would also like to see, I think it would be helpful, given the vast expanse of what we're being 22 called upon to do, again In this very short time frame. Is those states that utilize a commission system, if 23 there is a way to perhaps hone in in a bit more detail? And perhaps Cynthia will do this this afternoon. I 24 don't know. A bit more detail on how confidentiality is dealt with in those other similar commission 25 states. Those states that use a commission but then have a second body. A second body that either 26 reviews what the proposed disciplinary action is or a separate body apart from the commission, but not 27 the court, in deciding what the proper punishment should be, disciplinary action. But those models in the 28 states that utilize a commission but then utilize another body. I think that would also be helpful as part of 29 our work. And again, if you haven't taken a look at Senate Bill 201, as you're looking at those areas, feel 30 free to add material that would speak to those pertinent sections in 201. That's all I have. Thanks, Mr.
31 Chair. And thank you, Mr. Hartman, so appreciate NCSL and your expertise and assistance to 32 legislators.

33

34 Sen. Lee

35 Thank you, Mr. Hartman, and again, I'll echo the sentiments of my colleagues. We appreciate the 36 assistance you provide us in sort of giving us an overview of what's going on elsewhere, and as we move 37 into some of these more creative areas. As was alluded to, we have 18 specific areas that we're supposed 38 to look at, and some of those areas focus on the goal of increasing public confidence in the judicial 39 system. Over the past four years, we've had some things occur in Colorado which could easily 40 undermine people's confidence, or mandate us to do things to ensure confidence. One of the things that

1 we're asked to look at is whether or not a judicial system, or, excuse me, a judicial conduct system that is 2 controlled by judges, can inspire public confidence because it could feel like or have the optics of judges 3 protecting judges. So, if you could just sort of respond academically to that idea, and then if there are 4 any suggestions as to other ways to do it. You alluded to it when you. Well, I'll leave it at that.
5

6 Michael Hartman

7 Yeah, I guess looking at that is really a tough question, because it really brings up separation of powers
8 issues and making sure that we're at least maintaining the independence of the judiciary. And that's why 9 I think the ABA actually recommends that no matter what structure you really set up, there is a kind of 10 review by the Supreme Court, if the Supreme Court isn't the one making the decision in the first place.
11 Now that's where they kind of, in the ABA model rules, came up with that extra kind of special 12 proceeding in which what happens in the scenario in which your highest court is actually the one being 13 investigated. And, so, they made up sort of an additional court procedure that could be created to try to 14 alleviate that and get rid of the bias within the system. I can't speak to the efficacy of that, as I don't 15 know. However, that was one solution proposed. Other solutions may reflect in creating other special 16 programs and potentially not having it be 100% led by the Judiciary. Some of the memberships for 17 JCCs, especially, are much broader in terms of who can appoint. Like I said, it's a single governing body 18 in Colorado, much like Florida, that appoints the membership for the JCC, whereas in other states, 19 sometimes that's expansive. And even in I believe it was Virginia, it's actually put into the hands of the 20 General Assembly to try to get a potentially more representative body put together. Again, I can't speak 21 to the efficacy of that, but that is the idea that I think many states are pushing for and trying to make a 22 more independent body.
23

24 Sen. Lee

25 So, we've done some of that in Colorado with the membership of our Commission. It's, you know, four 26 judges and six non judges, four of whom are citizens. So, it's pretty diverse. In addition, who, under the 27 ABA model, appoints the members of that special body?
28

29 Michael Hartman

30 So, here's why I may be a little bit, this is my personal opinion here, but there's why I'm a little skeptical 31 about the efficacy of the ABA model. There is I believe they have it set up, and that the Supreme Court 32 would then select that special panel of judges in equal size, number as themselves. I foresee the 33 situation, if you have a situation in which you are fearful your Supreme Court is committing misconduct 34 and maybe abusing the system, they may pick judges for that special proceeding that are friends of theirs 35 or are otherwise potentially compromised in bias. So that's why I'm a little skeptical towards their 36 model. However, I'm not exactly sure how you would create a different model that still maintains that 37 independence of the Judiciary, because as soon as you take away their appointment role, that's sort of the 38 last say that they would have.
39
40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Right. Okay, give me just a minute. There was a couple of other questions, and we're again running into 3 our public testimony time. So, one of the tensions that we've had in Colorado is the pre-screening of 4 complaints by the Judicial Branch before or coincidental with their referral to the Office of Judicial 5 Discipline. What other models are there or recommendations are there to ensure that complaints about 6 judicial misconduct aren't, for lack of a better term. This is an inartful one, but "hijacked" by the Judicial 7 Department and not referred over. I mean, how can a human resources officer in a judicial branch do a 8 preliminary investigation without appearing to and, then maybe dismiss it, without appearing to protect 9 the judge and not get the case to the Commission. I didn't say that very well, but I think you get the idea.

10

11 Michael Hartman

12 I think I understand what you're getting at. In order to bring back some of the testimony from the 13 previous speakers, we've had. Kind of that interesting balancing act of which situations of misconduct 14 deserve a judge walking in and having a conversation, or even a law clerk recommending like, hey, You 15 just weren't acting right today. That wasn't you. And which ones should follow the mandatory reporting, 16 and that's maybe a hard line to find the perfect balance to. And perhaps a little bit outside of my 17 expertise at the kind of national statutory level. Perhaps, Cynthia may have a little bit better 18 recommendations for what maybe internal policy regulations could be put in place for enforcing kind of 19 that mandatory reporting. So, that you're not obviously over reporting incidents that shouldn't be 20 reported. But you're making sure to report all incidents that should be reported. So, I think that's a nice 21 balancing act that I don't quite know from the top-level national thing, but hopefully Cynthia, from the 22 National Center of State Courts, might have an opinion on that one.

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 Okay, well, thank you, Mr. Hartman, any other questions for the representative from the National 26 Council? Seeing none. Thank you again, and we look forward to having some further dialog with you, 27 sir.

28

29 Michael Hartman

30 Thank you so much for having me today.

Appendix 27(s)(ii)(4)

Public Testimony (Morning);

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline—
July 12, 2022 Hearing: Morning Public Testimony

1 Sen. Lee

2 Okay, committee, that brings us to the public testimony portion of the hearing. We are, as usual, a little 3 bit behind schedule. But let me, are there witnesses in the chamber who would like to testify in public 4 testimony? I want to give people who are here the opportunity. Why don't the three of you with your 5 hands up, come on up to the table. Thank you all for being here today. We appreciate it. We're moving 6 up public testimony in respect of a request that it be done so that people do not have to wait until the end 7 of the day. So, you're the beneficiaries of a request that was made to the committee. We are going to 8 give you three minutes to make your remarks, and there could be questions from the committee, and we 9 would ask that you identify yourselves, tell us any organization that you represent, and then provide us 10 with your testimony. Who would like to begin? Okay.

11

12 Tracy Ashmore

13 Thank you. My name is Tracy Ashmore.

14

15 Sen. Lee

16 Click that button on the mic.

17

18 Tracy Ashmore

19 I see. Is that better?

20

21 Sen. Lee

22 Yep, okay.

23

24 Tracy Ashmore

25 Mr. Chair and Madam Vice Chair. My name is Tracy Ashmore, and I'm an attorney in private practice at 26 a law firm in Denver, and I only am speaking for myself. I'm not identifying my firm. I wanted to call to 27 your attention what I believe is one problem in the current system and that is, there's no remedy for 28 judicial delay. And by the way, I think we've got a really strong system with a lot of, with the majority 29 of terrific judges that are awesome, but we do have some problems. And I thank you for your time, and I 30 can, just watching your faces this morning, it was very heartening. I can tell you're really committed to 31 making changes that might improve the system, if possible. The disciplinary rule calls for judges to act 32 with diligence. And it's not more specific than that. There is a statute, which I really appreciated. I 33 believe it was your question, what could be done by statute? There is a statute at 13 C.R.S., 13-5-135, 34 called Time Limit on Judgment, and it requires a court to rule within 90 days after the adjournment of 35 court. So, 90 days is a specific number, a lot more specific than diligently. Some members of the 36 Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline recently spoke at my Inn of Court, and they said they don't 37 enforce this statute because the language is arcane. I disagree, but that and $5 might buy me a latte. At 38 the end of every trial, the judge says court is adjourned. So, I don't think that the word adjourned is 39 archaic, but the Commission on Judicial Discipline does and so this statute follows up with a procedure 40 for someone to make a complaint to the Judicial Discipline Commission for enforcement of the 90-day

41 rule and the process following certain steps in CRS 13-5-136 ultimately would allow for a judge's salary 42 to be forfeited until the ruling is made. My request, and I know I'm just one person, and there's probably 43 smarter people. Cynthia Gray, I've been following her work since I've been traumatized by delay. She's 44 fantastic, and I would encourage you to know that lawyers in general really endorse her work.

45

46 Sen. Lee

47 Which is why we invited her to testify in front of our committee.

48

49 Tracy Ashmore

50 Yes, she's fantastic. And then I thought I would highlight my personal experience. I had an eviction 51 case, which is an expedited proceeding in Vail. And after two days of hearing, 27 months later, we did 52 not have a decision. I called Bill Campbell, and he discouraged me from making a complaint. I had 53 another case in Aspen that finally went to trial five years after it was filed, and the judge got everything 54 wrong and was reversed on appeal. But an eight-year long process for a basic civil dispute is, I think, 55 objectively speaking, too long.

56

57 Sen. Lee

58 So, can you wrap it up?

59

60 Tracy Ashmore

61 Sorry.

62

63 Sen. Lee

64 It's all right.

65

66 Tracy Ashmore

67 If you look at the Colorado Judicial Discipline Commission's 2020 Annual Report, and by the way, they 68 have not issued the 2021 report yet, even though it's July of 2022. Page 13, a judge was issued a private 69 reprimand for a delay of three years in issuing a decision. The report further states it was based on the 70 number of witnesses. In fact, what happened was, after the defendant in that case complained, about a 71 year later, the judge signed. The State of Colorado, the State was the plaintiff's proposed order, and so 72 we need we, I just think we can do better on the issue of delay. Thank you.

73

74 Sen. Lee

75 Okay, thank you for your testimony. Next.

76

77 Sen. Lee
78 We can hear you.

79
80 Ruth Burns
81 Okay, I'm Ruth Burns. I'm also an attorney, and I'd like to speak to you today on some issues that I've 82 been seeing with some of the District Courts. Specifically, one District Court that I've been practicing in.
83 I went ahead and sent you along a copy of the motion for recusal that I had filed in that case, which was 84 denied by the judge. But it's about 11 pages long, and I lay out all of the perceived violations of the 85 Rules of Judicial Conduct that took place in that case, and I include the evidence of where I think that 86 came from. So, this is why I started talking to my state representatives. Back in September of 2020, I 87 spoke with Representative Kennedy. He was very kind to me, and I'm assuming that's why I was invited 88 to speak here today. I talked to him about, there are really two reasons that I can see why we have so 89 much trouble with judicial discipline in Colorado. The first is a phrase called self-regulating profession.
90 The second is a phrase called absolute immunity. These two phrases . . .

91
92 Sen. Lee
93 What was the second one?

94
95 Ruth Burns
96 Absolute immunity. And it's like qualified immunity, but it's absolute. It means you just can't be sued at 97 all. It doesn't matter whether your conduct was reasonable or not. It just means, because you are who 98 you are, you're free. And this is, specifically, you can't be sued in a civil case. You can still be 99 prosecuted criminally, but the odds of anybody actually trying to take criminal prosecution against a 100 judge are fairly slim. You're not going to see that unless there's extremely egregious conduct. Whereas 101 most of the conduct that's violating the rules in most cases, I think, are of a lesser degree, but still really 102 problematic for anybody who's appearing in those courts. The self-regulating profession issue is the fact 103 that you expect lawyers to inform on each other and judges to inform on each other. I understand that 104 that is an obligation that we all have, but I can tell you from my own experience that is not happening 99 105 times out of 100. The notion is that if you're going to inform on me, I will inform on you, and then we're 106 all in trouble, and nobody has any fun, and we're all having a problem. So, the result of that is that 107 there's a sort of conspiracy of silence in the profession, where the lawyers are keeping their mouths shut 108 about what they see about other lawyers, also about what they see about judges. So, that's a situation 109 where people are just afraid to speak up. And I think that that's a problem. With regard to some of the 110 other things that had been brought up today, the delay issue, that's happening all the time. I've seen it.
111 Some of that is in that motion for recusal, the absolute immunity doctrine, where nobody can be sued at 112 all. Basically, what this does is you've got a situation where a judge can't be regulated or won't be 113 regulated. You have a situation where the people can't regulate the judge because they can't sue the 114 judge, and the only real option the people have is to try and un-elect the judge. But most people don't 115 know enough about the judicial system to say whether they should keep or not keep a judge. So, most 116 judges are getting retained by election. So, it's just not really a very viable system to actually keep

117 people safe. And I really feel that you ought to consider abolishing that absolute immunity doctrine. You 118 also benefit from it, so does the court. But it's something where your self-interest is showing, and it's not 119 really appropriate for anybody to try and say they are immune from the Constitution when they are 120 working for our government. So, I guess I'll stop there.

121

122 Sen. Lee

123 Okay, sir.

124

125 Jacob Bellinsky

126 Good morning or good afternoon already. My name is Rabbi Jacob . . .

127

128 Sen. Lee

129 Press your button.

130

131 Jacob Bellinsky

132 Hello.

133

134 Sen. Lee

135 We hear you now.

136

137 Jacob Bellinsky

138 Good morning or what time is it? Almost afternoon. My name is Rabbi Jacob Bellinsky, and I moved to 139 Colorado eight years ago from overseas. And before I get into the details quickly of my case, I just want 140 to say it's quite unfortunate. It seems that not only is the judicial commission apparently ineffective and 141 incompetent, but it seems to be set up that way. Because how do you enforce a system of judicial 142 conduct that's only recommended professional conduct? There's no teeth to it. There's no there's no basis 143 for actual statutorily prosecuting any of the criminality that might happen in court. The various things 144 that happened today here, you know, talk about a criminal complaint or trying to pursue criminal 145 complaint against a judge. This is 123 page complaint I sent to all of our state officials, to Governor 146 Polis to Attorney General Weiser, to Chief Justice Boatright to U.S. Attorney Cole Finnegan and with 147 copies to also Christopher Gregory, the Executive Director of the Judicial Commission and the local 148 sheriff where the crimes occurred. My case is a very, very shocking, shocking situation, shocking case.
149 I've been a father for 30 years. I have eight children, and we started with the court process. My ex wife 150 decided she wanted to try and pursue custody of one of the children. That expanded into three years, 151 three years of a nightmare. Three years where my family was entirely destroyed. I have contacted and 152 spoken and tried to speak with various officials. I submitted recusal complaints. I submitted all kinds of 153 complaints and information and motions for remedy. After a year and a half and two years of spending, 154 having to spend my entire life savings, any equity I had. I had to start representing myself. Well, you 155 know what? I researched the law. I filed a Rule 60(b) for fraud upon the court, and you know what? And 156 there's no statute of limitations for fraud. There's a serious fraud upon the court, deprivations of rights,

157 criminal activity that's happening in our court system, okay. The judge in my case, Judge David Cooper 158 Taylor and the attorney, Attorney Andrew Newton Hart, they conspired together. They essentially 159 removed my rights. It is not a criminal case. It's not a dependency neglect case. There's nothing like that 160 at all. And for just absolutely nothing, for no reason whatsoever, I've been reduced to having not seen 161 my children in over a year for some of them, and over almost two years now for one of my daughters.
162 This is the despicable situation that's happening in our government. And it is systemic. There's 163 corruption. And I just wanted it to be clear, and I wanted to be on record that I have been waiting for 164 months to receive any kind of information from Governor Polis or from any, any of those people I 165 mentioned, and I have not. I've been ignored. I've been treated like, like I'm the criminal, when I'm the 166 victim. Okay, my children are the victims. And I cited, I cited all the different statutes of what victim 167 services I'm entitled to, and my children are entitled to. And basically you have, I'm entitled to crime 168 victim services under CRS 24-4.1-100.1 to 24-4.1-305, and under Article II, section 16 of Colorado's 169 constitution, under the federal crime victims rights act and 18 USC 3771 among many, many more.
170 Okay, this complaint I have submitted has been ignored. Has been ignored for month after month after 171 month, week after week, all of my complaints, all of my all of my attempts for remedy, to all the 172 different state institutions. Have all been ignored. Have all been ignored. And I want to just the point I 173 want to mention today, and I think it's very important, is that when I, when I tried to contact Chief 174 Justice Boatright to ask for sua sponte action in my case, because my family has been separated, we 175 have been persecuted, we have been harmed and injured, and we continue to be every single day that 176 passes. Okay, Chief Justice Boatright ignored every single letter I had sent. Eight certified mailings in 177 the last over the past month of March. Okay, from there, all of a sudden, I get a letter from the, from the 178 from the Clerk of Court, suggesting that, oh, we sent off your information to Christopher Gregory at the 179 at the judicial commission. I didn't ask for a, I didn't ask for a, for an ERD, or whatever they call it.

180

181 Sen. Lee

182 Rabbi, could you finish up please?

183

184 Jacob Bellinsky

185 Sure. I did not ask for an evaluation. But this is important, okay? Christopher Gregory is in this is 186 involved in this whole Commission. Well, all of a sudden I receive a rejection letter or denial for an 187 investigation I never even asked for. I asked for a sua sponte action, a criminal follow up to be to be 188 conducted, and all of a sudden I get a letter from Christopher Gregory saying that they've dismissed my 189 request for evaluation. There was never a request for evaluation. These are crimes. These are criminal 190 these are because it's criminal activity, okay? And I would like the State of Colorado to understand that 191 I'm going to be pursuing a RICO act, violation, civil, civil and further other, other act, unless some 192 action is taken immediately. And anyone who hears my voice today, I beg of you to take action for my 193 children and for my family. Okay, thank you.

194

195

196

197 Sen. Lee

198 Thank you for your testimony. Are there any questions from any of the committee members for any of 199 these witnesses, Madam Vice Chair.

200

201 Rep. Carver

202 Just very quickly first. Thank you so much for bringing up the delay issue, and we'll certainly take a 203 look at that and on the recusal. And this is something that we can follow up later on. But was, did you 204 ever submit that to the Commission, or what is your understanding on whether that would fall within the 205 Commission's jurisdiction, which it may not?

206

207 Ruth Burns

208 What I did was I went ahead and moved the court to recuse. It was, it's a long and tangled tale. There 209 were two judges that were involved in my case at the court level. The first was the Chief Judge. The 210 second was a brand new judge who had no civil experience at all. And the case that I was bringing 211 forward was against a city government. It was a reasonably complex case. I sued the mayor and the city 212 council as individuals, as well as in their official capacity. And there was a lot of shenanigans, in my 213 view, from the court, and one of the shenanigans was the transfer of my case from the Chief Judge to 214 this brand new judge. That was in the motion for recusal. I thought it was the Chief Judge who had done 215 that. When I looked at that order, I realized it was not the Chief Judge. It was the Chief Judge of the 216 judicial district who had actually made that order, and it's the judicial district where the city government 217 sits. So, one of the things I was going to suggest to you folks as something you might do to make less of 218 this happen is to make some kind of a ruling where, if a judge works for a city government, then they 219 cannot later be a judge. You know, if they're a municipal court judge, then they can't later be a district 220 court judge in that same judicial district where they're going to be making decisions about the 221 organization that they worked for. Because that's what I was seeing, was that the Chief Judge of the 222 judicial district used to work for the city. And I just have to question why that judge? I mean, you can 223 understand why the Chief Judge of the judicial district would be involved in the creation of a new 224 division within that district, you know, in the hiring of the new judge, in the procurement so that you can 225 get the desks and the chairs hiring the personnel. But what I just don't really understand is why there 226 would be any substantive ruling on a case that actually was involving an organization or an entity where 227 that Chief Judge formally worked. That's a violation of the rules of judicial conduct, of the Rules of 228 Professional Conduct, there should not have been any substantive ruling from that. So, coming back to 229 your question, yes, I am going to put it in front of the Judicial Discipline Commission, but I haven't yet, 230 because I only just got my ruling from the appellate court, and based on what we were hearing, you don't 231 do that until you've got your ruling. Sorry, go ahead.

232

233 Sen. Lee

234 Rep Carver,

235

236

237 Rep. Carver
238 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And just to clarify, I do not have personal knowledge of whether recusal, while 239 I've looked at the Commission rules, I don't have a memory sufficient to determine if that is within their 240 jurisdiction or not. My initial thought as I heard your testimony was that it was an appellate issue. But I 241 thank you for bringing that to our attention. And certainly there needs to be a path for that to be 242 reviewed. My understanding is that through the appellate process, like other rulings by the judge. But 243 appreciate the testimony that you brought here today. Thank you.

244
245 Ruth Burns
246 Thank you.

247
248 Sen. Lee
249 Seeing no further questions. We thank you for joining us today and providing us with your insights. Are 250 there any other . . .

251
252 Jacob Bellinsky
253 May we leave some material with for the for the council, for the commission to review?

254
255 Sen. Lee
256 Sure, pass it to the staff.

257
258 Ruth Burns
259 And I was also going to ask if I could go ahead and send some more written testimony, as well. Just kind 260 of clarifying, what I said, if that's okay, thanks.

261
262 Sen. Lee
263 Thank you, sir. Um, is there anyone else in the room who would like to testify, or is there anyone online 264 who would like to testify? There is. Why don't we take . . . How many do you have up there?

265
266 Sen. Lee
267 We've got 15 witnesses signed up. We've just done three. We have witness testimony scheduled for now 268 and for a little after four o'clock. I just wanted to knock out the ones that were here and available right 269 now. So, let's get Jenny Lynn and Judy Atwood. Ms. Lynn, please join us. And I don't know if you were 270 listening. Welcome. I just want, yeah, we can hear you. I just wanted to tell you that you have three 271 minutes to testify, and there will be an opportunity for questions thereafter. So, if you would, we have 272 your name, tell us if you represent an organization, and provide us with your testimony.

273
274 Jenny Dees
275 All right. My name is Jennifer Dees. I've been dealing with the Denver and Colorado courts since 2012 276 when me and my ex filed for divorce after 15 years of marriage. Judge Hood, who is now a justice on

277 the Colorado Supreme Court was the judge in our Denver case. Our divorce had settled with 50/50 278 parenting time with our twin, eight-year-olds and my two year old, who was with me 100% of the time, 279 as my ex was not the file for the father, nor did he want the child for exception. My child was never 280 made a party, the two year old, to the divorce case. Nor was he ever added as a child of the marriage.
281 Within a week of Judge Hood granting the divorce, my ex hired his unethical attorney who had 282 connections with Judge Hood. My ex had told Judge Hood on the record he wanted no parenting time or 283 financial responsibility for my child. During the issuance of decree of divorce, and Hood issued the 284 divorce decree without my child listed in the parenting plan or on the separation agreement. Within a 285 month, my ex filed for paternity of this child into the divorce case, which was settled and closed. Judge 286 Hood had no jurisdiction over my child, who lived in Arapahoe with me and the petitioner lived in 287 Jeffco. Denver County had no jurisdiction. Judge Hood only heard one witness that my ex put on the 288 stand before the hearing ended due to time. The paternity hearing was set out a few months. But instead 289 of finishing the hearing, Judge Hood ordered without explanation, granting my ex was legal father to a 290 biracial and Native American child. Without any due process, without ever having a full hearing on the 291 paternity or being able to put my witnesses on the stand. Hood kidnapped our child. The bio father was 292 asserting paternity, and came to court two times for Hood to refuse to allow him to speak because he 293 was African American and my ex the petitioner, claiming he was bio dad, was white. My ex filed a 294 fraudulent vital records form to get a falsified birth certificate naming him as bio dad to an African 295 American child actor. He filed this paternity motion. He was never on the birth certificate before this. I 296 have these illegally crossed out and altered vital records and docs that were accepted for a fraudulent 297 birth certificate. Judge Hood used this action to claim my ex was the legal father and that we couldn't 298 refute it because he was listed on the birth certificate. Hood was given the crossed-out forms and it just .
299 ..

300

301 Sen. Lee

302 Ms. Lynn. Miss Lynn, let me stop for a minute. I appreciate your testimony. I appreciate the 303 circumstances you're describing for us. This sounds like a custody and divorce dispute, and . . .

304

305 Jenny Dees

306 No, I think it goes further, because it goes to the Commission on Judicial Discipline and how you all 307 have . . .

308

309 Sen. Lee

310 Well, if it's a matter that should be before the judicial discipline . . .

311

312 Jenny Dees

313 It went before them. They've denied it, and I have all of that evidence. I have everything recorded and 314 everything. Like so I'm filing a 60(b)(3), to void out these orders with him, and it's going federally. It's 315 100 page motion with exhibits. It's coming to every single one of you. So, then we can file for

316 impeachment on Hood, because what he's done is illegal, and the other judges have covered it up, and 317 you all have allowed it, and the Commission has covered it up.

318

319 Sen. Lee

320 Okay? Well, thank you.

321

322 Jenny Dees

323 I have all the reports. I have them recorded. I have the Commission Director threatening me on a 324 recorded phone call that if I tell anybody about their report, that they'll hit me with criminal charges.

325 How does that work?

326

327 Sen. Lee

328 Ms. Lynn, Ms. Lynn, we've heard your testimony.

329

330 Jenny Dees

331 No, you cut me off, but I do have it recorded and will show the people that I can't even state my 332 testimony without being cut off by the representatives claiming they want to fix this.

333

334 Sen. Lee

335 You've exhausted your time before the committee, and I am going to cease your testimony at this point 336 in time. Okay, did I see a Ms. Atwood?

337

338 Jenny Dees

339 They won't listen to what Judge / Justice Hood did.

340

341 Sen. Lee

342 Ms. Atwood? Are you? Can you hear us?

343

344 Judy Atwood

345 Good afternoon. Can you hear me now?

346

347 Sen. Lee

348 We can hear you now. You'll have three minutes to provide your public testimony. Please keep it within 349 the scope of the issues that the committee is mandated to address. Thank you. Go right ahead.

350

351 Judy Atwood

352 Thank you. Good afternoon members of the interim committee, Mr. Chair, and Madam Vice Chair. My 353 name is Judy Atwood, and I'm an advocate here for women who experience domestic violence. I want to 354 be very blunt with you. Here it is. The family court system across the continent has become the moral 355 equivalent of a slave trade. Mothers and children have no rights at all. The constitution is thrown out the 356 window. Millions of dollars are being made by professionals that deny domestic violence, sexual abuse 357 of children and physical abuse of children. The court is willing to even let fathers who are confirmed 358 and mothers who are confirmed to molest the children should have a relationship with your children.

359 And if these things have, as if these things haven't happened. But a mother who told to shut up about 360 abuse. That's a reason to cut her off from her child on the court side. Ignorance, I'm sorry to say, is not 361 the problem. The problem is horrible mother hating attitudes combined with greed and court leave, and 362 this means, unfortunately, that trainings for judges and other personnel are not the answer. Things are 363 getting worse. Judges are imposing gag orders on Mothers, prohibiting them to discuss the custody 364 evaluator's report and with anyone other than their own lawyer. So much for free speech. She's violating 365 the court order if she asks someone whether they actually said what the evaluator claims they did.
366 Speaking of which, evaluators are forbidding women to record their meetings with the evaluators. What 367 excuse there be for this? Obviously, because they weren't able to make up what she supposedly said, and 368 judges are citing evaluators who have this policy. There's a lot more. Judges are forbidden women to 369 take their children to qualified sexual abuse evaluators. They are putting women into supervised 370 visitation for disbelieving their children's disclosure. I'm afraid passing better laws don't help much 371 either, because public court judges consider themselves above the law. So, they ignore it, except when 372 they want to blame their bad actions on the law. Then, suddenly they claim that the law leaves them no 373 choice. So, what's the solution? We're leaving that to you. Thank you.

374

375 Sen. Lee

376 Thank you for your testimony. Ms. Atwood, are there any questions for this witness Seeing none, you do 377 have about 40 seconds left if you want to propose a solution to the issue you identified. We're prepared 378 to listen.

379

380 Judy Atwood

381 The complexity of the family court system isn't straightforward. There's so many moving parts in a case, 382 and that includes custody evaluators, judges, attorneys, sometimes PCDMs, and these cases are very 383 complex. I suggest that we start by doing surveys for families. After family court, we find out where the 384 trouble, where the communication problems are, where we have to identify what families need. Um, 385 moving forward.

386

387 Sen. Lee

388 Okay, very good. Thank you for that. And if you have, if you want to elaborate that on that, or provide 389 any further details, you can submit them to the committee on our website, and we'll certainly take a look 390 at them again. Keep in mind that the mandate and charge of this committee is to address issues of 391 attorney discipline and the processes and procedures for that. But again, thank you for your testimony.

392

393 Judy Atwood

394 Thank you.

395

396 Sen. Lee

397 I think that's all we have on for public testimony right now. If there's anyone else who wants to testify, 398 please rejoin us at little after four o'clock this afternoon, so we are on lunch break. Please, committee 399 members, if you would be back here at one o'clock to hear Cynthia Gray, the Director for the Center for 400 Judicial Ethics. Thank you. The committee stands in recess.

The National Center for State Courts;

Legislative Committee on Judicial Discipline—
July 12, 2022 Hearing: Testimony of Cynthia Gray

1 Sen. Lee

2 The Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline will come back to order. We have a presentation from 3 Cynthia Gray, the Executive Director of the Center for Judicial Ethics of the National Center for State 4 Courts. Is Ms. Gray on the screen?

5

6 Sen. Lee

7 She's on the screen.

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Ms. Gray, thank you for joining us. It's an honor to have you participate in our Interim Committee on 11 Judicial Discipline. Thanks for being here.

12

13 Cynthia Gray

14 Well, thank you for the invitation. I appreciate the opportunity. Should I just start right up?

15

17 Sure. Go right ahead.

18

19 Cynthia Gray

20 Okay, my name is Cynthia Gray. I'm Director of the Center for Judicial Ethics of the National Center for 21 State Courts. And in October, it will be 32-years, as long as I've had that position. The National Center 22 for State Courts does many, many things, providing information and support and research for the state 23 court systems. The Center for Judicial Ethics is a national clearinghouse for information on judicial 24 ethics and discipline. It means I spend my days gathering information, reading statutes, rules, 25 constitutions, decisions, opinions, newspaper stories, and gathering that information. And, then, I use it 26 in a lot of different ways. I answer questions, I write things. I make presentations to judges. I provide 27 research support and information for the judicial conduct commissions. Every state has a judicial 28 conduct commission. And DC has one too. And there's a system for the federal judiciary. Other than that 29 generalization, it's difficult to make any statements that are true about all the commissions. Each one is 30 different. And, so, it's hard to identify the best model, the best way of doing things. Just because there 31 are so many moving parts it is hard to identify which is best. Some are created by Constitution, some by 32 statute, some by court rule. They have different number of members, the numbers are broken up 33 differently between judges, lawyers and public members. They're appointed by different folks there.
34 They have different sanctions available, they have different structures, the supreme court's involvement 35 varies from state to state. So, a lot of what day to day, or a lot of the answers to questions have to be 36 well, it depends on the state. That said, I'll do my best to answer questions and to address some of the 1 issues. I must say many of the issues that you're looking at have been issues for the 32-years that I've 2 been doing this job.

3
4 And, interestingly, there are currently you're one of three committees looking at state judicial discipline
5 systems. That is certainly three more than have ever been existing at one time. I can't actually remember 6 the last time there was one in the states, I mean states have had reforms but they haven't necessarily been 7 preceded by legislative committees. The other committees are in California and Montana.

8
9 In California, it's an independent committee. It's established by the Legislature, but the members are not 10 just legislators. They're representatives of different groups. It was created because a number of years 11 ago, the Legislature was receiving complaints from their constituents that the commission was not 12 pursuing many complaints. And on the other hand, they were receiving complaints from judges that the 13 commission was pursuing too many. So, they set up an independent commission to look at that. And 14 first there was the state auditor. It did an audit of the commission. And they did find some problems, 15 make some suggestions and recommendations with respect to the structure and procedures of the 16 commission. And now this committee is looking at it more closely, or maybe just from a different 17 perspective.

18
19 Then in Montana, the Montana Legislature. This is mainly based on newspaper stories, but as I 20 understand it, the Montana Legislature introduced legislation that would have changed the way district 21 court judges would be chosen. And someone in the Administrative Office of the Courts sent out an 22 email, asking the judges in the state what they felt about this legislation, and the legislators got wind of 23 it. And they were concerned that this was a misuse of court resources, and staff for lobbying and 24 working on behalf of a private organization. In this case, the Montana Judges Association. And they 25 started an investigation. They issued subpoenas. The supreme court said you can't subpoena these 26 records. Because if there's misconduct here, it needs to be investigated by the Judicial Standards 27 Commission. And, so, that's why the Judicial Standards Commission is being reviewed.

28
29 I did sit in on this morning's proceedings. So, what I thought I'd do is, rather than just talk for an hour, 30 which I can do on this subject with no problem, I could address some of the issues that came up or some 31 of the things that were talked about and discuss them and provide information or promise to provide 32 information after we're done here. And, then, I can spend as much time as you'd like, answering 33 questions. The issue of the victims' rights act was raised. As far as I know, no state has a statute or rules 34 or anything that applies, anything like that, to judicial conduct commission proceedings. But I can poke 35 around a little bit and see if there's something I've missed. Commissions do try to keep complainants 36 informed. Some I'm sure do a better job than others. On the issue of what happens when a supreme court 37 justice is being investigated, or has proceedings filed against them. 13 states have rules that specifically 38 address that issue. And the proceedings remain the same until the case, until the end, when there's a 39 recommendation or a decision that would ordinarily be reviewed by the supreme court. And in those 13 40 states that have a specific rule, there's a variety of ways they have of creating the temporary court. In

1 some courts, the seven senior appellate court judges or the seven chief judges of the appellate courts or 2 seven district courts, are chosen at random. I do have information on that. And I can provide that to you 3 after the speech.

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 That would be helpful. Thank you.

7

8 Cynthia Gray

9 You're welcome. In 26 to 27 states, the rules for judicial discipline commissions are adopted by the state 10 supreme court. In the other states, it's adopted by the commission itself. And if you want a list of those 11 states, I can provide that as well. There are a couple that I couldn't figure it out from the rules who 12 adopted them.

13

14 The issue of confidentiality. This is an area where Colorado is an outlier. Not by itself, but it is unusual 15 in that most states, 35 states, the hearing on any formal charges of judicial discipline is public. That's not 16 true in Colorado or 15 other states plus the District of Columbia. In those states, the confidentiality 17 ceases at the end. In the 35 states, it ceases with the filing of the formal charges. In a couple of states, it's 18 the filing of the answer. And so, the hearing is public. And it does not, and I can provide an up-to-date 19 table of which states are which for you again at the end.

20

21 Sen. Lee

22 That would be helpful, too.

23

24 Cynthia Gray

25 It doesn't depend on the structure of the state, when confidentiality ceases. There are states that have 26 different structures in each of the different categories of confidentiality. And confidentiality can be 27 looked at from a couple of different ways. One is what does the commission have to disclose? And then 28 the other is what complainants can't talk about. And confidentiality is a very controversial subject. The 29 investigative stage is confidential in every state. So, the filing of the complaint, the investigation, the 30 decision to whether to file formal charges, and possibly private discipline, all of that is confidential in all 31 the states. And that's controversial. People want to know what the complaints are, when they've been 32 dismissed, what did they say, and many people would like to the investigation to be open as well. And 33 that way, Colorado is in line with all the other states. When it comes to the public hearing, Colorado is 34 not unique, but it's in the definite minority. Mr. Hartman described the ABA Model Rules that were 35 adopted in 1994, I guess. And what's unique about the Model Rules or the concept that the Model Rules 36 introduced, was the idea of there being one commission with two panels. It would be a 12-member 37 commission with four judge members, four attorney members, and four public members. And then the 38 investigation would be overseen by a three-member panel, one from each of those categories. And then 39 the hearing would be before a nine-member panel, three members from each of those categories. And 40 then membership between the investigative panel and the adjudicative panel, or hearing panel would

1 switch back and forth rotating. The Model Rules don't specify how, they leave that up to the state to 2 figure out the best way to divvy up the membership. But at any particular time or from state to state, 3 case to case, month to month, year to year, a member might be sitting on an investigative panel or sitting 4 on the hearing panel, depending on how they're assigned at that time. At the time the ABA adopted the 5 Model Rules, no states have that structure in effect. And currently, there are nine states that have a 6 two-panel model, where their membership rotates between the different roles of investigative and 7 hearing. No state has adopted the Model Rules completely. In that respect, none of these nine states have 8 a 12-member commission with four judge members, four lay members, four attorney members, and, 9 then, dividing up the roles depending on what they're doing at the time. So, that while some idea of 10 rotation has been adopted by the states, the district, the numbers, the proportions, has not been adopted 11 by any of the states. In addition, there are eight states that have what I can refer to as two-tiers. The 12 difference there is that, instead of having rotating membership, one commission with members rotating 13 roles, they have two separate bodies. And the membership is separate and they don't they don't change 14 roles depending. So, for example, in Pennsylvania, there's the Pennsylvania Judicial Conduct Board, it 15 has a set membership. And if they decide to file formal charges, they do so and then the case goes to the 16 Court of Judicial Discipline. The staff of Judicial Conduct Board becomes the prosecutors there. The 17 Court of Judicial Discipline has a separate membership, separate staff, separate address, and they hear 18 the case. They decide whether the judge has committed misconduct, they decide what the appropriate 19 sanction should be. Now, the decision of the Court of Judicial Discipline is final, but the judge can 20 appeal it to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. Although the Pennsylvania Supreme Court's review is 21 limited, they can't make a different findings of fact, it's just pretty much questions of law and, maybe, 22 the sanction. As I mentioned, there are 9 or 8 states that have something like that. But again, each of 23 those is very different and depends very much on the state. The remaining states are often called unitary.
24 Although some of those too have ways of breaking off the fact finder, the fact-finding process. One way 25 or the other, many of them, the commission decides whether to file formal charges. But the hearing itself 26 is held before one or more special masters. Special masters file a report with the commission and the 27 Commission then decides whether to adopt the findings of the special masters. But the reason some 28 states have gone to the two-tier or two-panel model is the argument that the unitary system violates due 29 process. And that argument has been raised many, many times. And it's been rejected by every state 30 supreme court that has addressed the issue, because they find that there is U.S. Supreme Court 31 precedent, not in the context of judicial discipline proceedings, but other administrative proceedings.
32 And they've pretty much followed that. Again, I have information on all this, if you're interested in it, 33 that I can provide to you in writing. It's a little confusing to talk about. But I'm happy to do that, if you'd 34 like to see it.

35

36 Sen. Lee

37 Sure, if you've got that available, we are interested.

38

39

40

1 Cynthia Gray

2 Okay. Since the issue of legal error in screening came up, . . . I'm going to get a drink of water. Most 3 commissions, and this is another generalization I can make, dismiss most of their complaints without 4 filing formal charges or without private discipline. You know, upwards of 90%. And many of those 5 aren't investigated, they're screened out at the initial cut. And this is very, very controversial. People do 6 not understand why that's the case. And the reason is that, often, the complaint represents a disagreement 7 with the judge's ruling. And it doesn't present an issue of judicial conduct, judicial misconduct, or a 8 violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct. But there are exceptions. Most states have some exceptions to 9 the rule on legal error. Legal error is not reviewable as misconduct. The California Supreme Court, for 10 example, has adopted a list of exceptions. I mean, a violation of the Code is one and it can also be 11 articulated as even a legal error if it is in bad faith or if there's a pattern or there's a demonstration of bias 12 and intentional legal error, or an abuse of authority or disregard of fundamental rights. That those also 13 can be pursued by the commission. Again, they don't very often do it, but they do sometimes. It's 14 definitely the exception, rather than the rule. And I looked at the rule that was identified for the 15 Colorado Commission that says, complaints will be dismissed if they're based on disputed rulings under 16 the jurisdiction of the trial or appellate court. And I don't know how that's being interpreted, if it's being 17 interpreted as, you know, based in any kind of way or related in any kind of way to a disputed ruling, 18 that would be broader than the case law in many states. But if it's interpreted more as based solely on 19 disputed rulings, under the jurisdiction of the trial or appellate court, that would be more consistent with 20 the case law. But as I say, I don't know how it's being interpreted by the Commission. There are other 21 states, other states have provisions that are worded differently on what the exceptions to the legal error 22 rule are or what the legal error rule is. And even calling it a legal error rule is an oversimplification. The 23 issue of delay came up and it's not an issue you need to Colorado. I don't know if you find that 24 reassuring. But it's handled all kinds of ways. It is something for which judges are disciplined. Across 25 the country, a judge in Washington State just a couple weeks ago was disciplined for three substantial 26 delays in cases, in small claims cases. An appellate judge in California, recently retired in pursuance to 27 an agreement with the Commission and agreed to an admonishment, because of delays in appellate court 28 cases, in the cases he was responsible for. Also, he was the presiding judge in that court. And there was 29 also finding that there was chronic delay for other judges that he hadn't been addressing as presiding 30 judge. But discipline for delay is not necessarily the best. You know, it's sort of a last resort, you sort of 31 want, before the commission investigates, to hold it for public hearing, and then disciplines the judge, it 32 would be better if the judge didn't delay in the first place. Or, if there were another way of drawing the 33 problem to the judges attention and getting it taken care of administratively. And in that respect, states 34 have lots of different processes in place. And I don't know what they are. I only know about them 35 because when I read the discipline cases, they're often referred to it. In some states, judges have to file 36 affidavits saying, I don't have any cases that have been under advisement for more than 60 days or the 37 only cases I have under advisement are these. And if they don't follow the affidavit, they don't get paid.
38 Others, if they go back and find the affidavit isn't accurate, that's another grounds for discipline.
39 Sometimes, if a complaint is filed against a judge to the commission, the commission, it looks like 40 sometimes they call up and that will nudge the decision out of the judge. But again, that's not necessarily

1 the best way to do it. In some states, the Chief Judge gets involved, they get all kinds of reports, and 2 they're supposed to follow up on them. So, I don't know what the administrative process is for 3 addressing delay, but it is definitely a ground for discipline in some states. And, in some states where it's 4 a significant problem, sometimes the sanction can be significant, as well.

5
6 And then, the finding of the Troyer Report about the clarity of the rules, about how complaints are 7 handled, complaints about judges. As I read, interpreted the report, and I might be wrong, and I'm going 8 to stay online and listen to the testimony from the next folks. But the lack of clarity there was in how the 9 HR department of the Judicial Department handles complaints, not how the Commission on Judicial 10 Discipline handles complaints. And I may be wrong.

11 12 And in reading the Troyer Report on the issue of reporting, that does seem to be an issue of the 13 relationship between with possible overlap between the HR responsibilities and Commission 14 responsibilities. And, again, I'm not sure how other states handle it, because it's definitely a, it can be an 15 HR problem. It's definitely a discipline problem, in some respects. Some of the remedies have to be 16 undergone as an administrative issue. If someone feels they've been denied a promotion, they should 17 have got because of gender bias. The commission can't do anything about that. They can sanction the 18 judge, but they can't give them the promotion. So, there may need to be dual remedies in those cases.
19 But maybe the court staff don't know about the multiple ways they can address this. That they need to be 20 informed more about the Commission on Judicial Discipline, they need to be informed more about the 21 other remedies. As you may know, the federal judiciary has faced a lot of complaints about sexual 22 harassment and other workplace conduct. And they've undertaken some steps for that. And they've 23 created multiple ways for court staff to complain about judges, and they've done a lot of education about 24 what the what the remedies are, or what the avenues are for folks to complain. But I don't know how 25 much of that involves complaining under the Federal Judicial Disability Act. And, so, I'm not sure what 26 that is. But I guess the idea is that people might be uncomfortable complaining one way, so you give 27 them another option to maybe even another option. And they also have mediation available as one of the 28 options for employees who want to pursue a complaint against the judge for one reason or the other.

29
30 So, I may have overlooked something and so I'm sorry. From the notes I could make out, this is what I 31 wanted to address. But, I'm happy to take any questions or make a list of things I should get back to you 32 on in due time. Any questions?

33
34 Sen. Lee

35 Rep. Weissman.

36
37 Rep. Weissman

38 Thank you, Mr. Chair and Ms Gray. Thanks for making time to talk with us today. A couple categories, 39 I think, probably just some requests that ought to be pinned and followed up offline, because although 40 your knowledge of this is pretty encyclopedic, I know that some more research may be required. The

1 first, and you've already alluded to it, is the idea of a something like a VRA for complainants. Sounds
2 like you have looked at that, you're not familiar with it. Rep. Carver, in our discussion this morning 3 brought up I think, another useful source of potential analogy, which is notice provisions in 4 administrative complaint processes. I'm thinking of various licensing boards, practice acts that oversee a 5 regulated profession. Surely, there's some kind of complaint mechanism in there, you know, there could 6 be others. But you know, it was it was brought up at our last hearing, there really is no such thing. And I 7 think it's important that we grapple with that. So that was that was one. Let me think. Number two is 8 escaping me right now. I'll move on to number three, possibly you could speak to this more in real time.
9 I don't know if you were on this morning when Judge Maes was visiting with us. But I asked him about 10 sort of affirmative duties, and it goes to this question of the HR function versus the judicial discipline 11 function. And the way that that can get blurred sometimes, you know, I'll have to go back and look, but I 12 think variously, Rule 1.113 sort of duties to an organization might say something about that. Rule 8.3, I 13 think in terms of other duties placed upon an attorney, in this case, a judge qua attorney. I'll pause for a 14 moment now. But I just wonder if you could speak to what you see as you survey states and judicial 15 discipline systems in terms of affirmative duties on judges who are under a judicial code and also under 16 an attorney code to come forward. In this case, to the judicial discipline commission, when they observe 17 problematic conduct.

18

19 Cynthia Gray

20 The Code of Judicial Conduct does have a rule about that. I haven't looked up the Colorado version. But 21 the Model Code. There's a Model Code version, I suspect it's something similar. Every time they've 22 revised the Model Code, they've made the rule a little tougher, but it's still it's not enforced very often.
23 And a lot of the advisory committee opinions on the topic, not necessarily Colorado ones, but from other 24 states seem to bend over backwards to find reasons judges shouldn't report other judges. And I 25 understand that that's hard, reporting on someone you know, but it's definitely a problem. If reports are 26 not made. So, the rule says something like . . . Again, this is a model, so I'm not sure if it's what 27 Colorado follows, but it says if a judge has knowledge that another judge has committed a violation of 28 his code that raises a substantial question regarding the judges honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a 29 judge in other respects shall inform the appropriate authority. Then, the second part is that a judge who 30 received information indicating a substantial likelihood that another judge has committed a violation of 31 this code shall take appropriate action. And there are similar rules with respect to conduct by attorneys.
32 So, what the rule says, what judges have to do, depends on how much they know and how serious the 33 offense is, which makes sense. On the other hand, many of the violations of the of the Code that arise to 34 misconduct, that arise to sanctionable offenses, and, particularly, the most serious are pattern offenses, 35 where judges, you know, didn't lose their temper just once. They lost their temper over and over again, 36 didn't make one inappropriate joke. They're consistently making inappropriate jokes. You know, weren't 37 late to the court only once. But you know more days than they are on time. And while any single judge 38 may only know of only one or two of that pattern, unless they report it to a central location, like the 39 Commission on Judicial Discipline, the pattern may never appear. And, so, Colorado isn't alone in 40 maybe it's a little fuzzy, and maybe needs to be enforced a little more strictly in order for the Code to be,

1 for the commissions to get the big picture that they need to address misconduct by judges. Does that 2 answer your question?

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Rep. Weissman.

6

7 Rep. Weissman

8 Thank you. That's helpful, then I'll certainly go do some more digging. And thank you, Mr. Chair, I 9 guess one follow up in the obverse. So, from the standpoint of black letter requirements in the RPC, or 10 the Code of Judicial Conduct, or, you know, officially adopted comments thereto, or model texts for that 11 matter. So, you've spoken to requirements to disclose. Putting aside some of the things we've talked 12 about in this committee today and last month, for example HR considerations. For example, concerns 13 about minimizing litigation exposure? Are you aware of anything in the RPC or the CJC that would pull 14 the other way on a judge, that would be a basis of a black letter requirement not to proceed to share 15 information with the disciplinary authority?

16

17 Cynthia Gray

18 Certainly not. Black letter, no. I guess you could say, this could be an applied rule, not to spread rumors.
19 But I don't think there's any black letter, because the idea is, when you make a complaint against a 20 judge, particularly another judge. And it can be couched in terms of, I don't know if the judge did this or 21 not, but this is what I heard. And then it's up to the commission to do the investigation to see if it took 22 place. So, I don't know of anything, other than human nature, a reluctance to complain about people you 23 know, that it's not there. And there is also the option of taking appropriate action. The other option 24 people have, which might mean talking to the other judge and bringing it up. And, if I knew judges were 25 doing that, instead of reporting to the commission, that would be reassuring. But it's not clear that that's 26 happening either.

27

28 Sen. Lee

29 Rep. Lynch.

30

31 Rep. Lynch

32 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Ms. Gray for being with us today. So, you have a more global look at 33 these commissions across the country. We have a 97% dismissal rate of these complaints that come in, 34 how does that compare with others around the nation?

35

36 Sen. Lee

37 Ms Gray.

38

39

40

1 Cynthia Gray

2 I think that's about the same, you know, give or take five, you know, 5-10%, I can look up some other 3 states for you, if you want. Most have their annual reports online. Now, sometimes they count things 4 differently, every state is different. Sometimes states count the complaints they receive against federal 5 judges. And some states don't count those. Some states count the complaints they've received against 6 former judges, but don't pursue. But some do. So, there's a lot of differences. But 97% is, is probably, I 7 mean, it's not every state, every year but it's not. That figure doesn't surprise me.

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Okay, thank you, Representative Carver.

11

12 Rep. Carver

13 Thank you, Ms. Gray for being with us and your in-depth knowledge is very helpful. There are three 14 areas I want to mention. But this can all be addressed offline and perhaps in writing. First, from what 15 you've seen across the country, do you see different complaint processes set up? One for parties to 16 litigation who have a complaint against the judge versus judicial branch employees? Are those 17 complaints typically handled by the same system? Or two separate systems?

18

19 Sen. Lee

20 Ms. Gray.

21

22 Cynthia Gray

23 As far as the judicial conduct commissions go, they would have the same system regardless of who the 24 complainant is, what category of person that complaint is. I do think most state judicial departments also 25 have a complaint system for their employees. Something like any large organization has an HR 26 department, they would have something like that, too. So, a state employee would have to two options: 27 go to the HR department, go to the Commission on Judicial Discipline. But if they went to judicial 28 discipline, then the system would be the same.

29

30 Rep. Carver

31 Okay, and I'll make this quick, Mr. Chair.

32

33 Sen. Lee

34 Go right ahead.

35

36 Rep. Carver

37 What do you see across the different states, as far as anonymous reporting?

38

39 Sen. Lee

40 Ms. Gray.

1 Cynthia Gray

2 Most commissions do accept anonymous complaints. They don't particularly like them, because of 3 course, they want a name and a phone number and an email address that they can follow up with. But 4 they will accept them, because they understand why people want to file anonymously. That for people 5 who see the judge a lot, and that the judge has a great power to retaliate against, might want to file 6 anonymously. Court staff, particularly attorneys who appear before the judge, other judges, might want 7 an anonymous route. So, most commissions will hear it. Some states have rules that explicitly allow it.
8 Other states have a rule that says they can investigate information that comes from any source, and that 9 includes anonymous complaints. But I think I have some articles, or at least one article on that as well 10 that I'd be happy to send you.

11

12 Rep. Carver

13 That would be helpful. And obviously, part of the anonymous complaint is not just if you personally, as 14 a judicial branch employee, you feel that you've been mistreated by a judge, but also somebody in the 15 judicial branch who says, look, I've heard the talk around the watercooler something's not right in HR, 16 something's not right in financial services. But they don't, perhaps they don't feel like they have a safe 17 mechanism to report that. So, again, we can follow that up, offline. Final question. And on this, I'm 18 referencing specifically, a topic under Senate Bill 201 where it talks about the committee needing to 19 address the appropriate method for defining a consistent and clear set of disqualification standards for 20 each of the decision makers in the judicial discipline system. So, I know you don't have that Senate Bill 21 in front of you. It's 22-201. And it is on page 19. It is subsection (H). If you could have a look at that and 22 if there are standards that other states are using that are different than Colorado, just a representative 23 sample. It would be nice to see how other states are addressing that particular issue.

24

25 Cynthia Gray

26 Okay, I can do that.

27

28 Cindy Gray

29 Thank you.

30

31 Sen. Lee

32 Any other questions? Representative Bacon.

33

34 Rep. Bacon

35 Thank you. I'm curious if you can share any insights on any kind of theoretical basis, or perhaps even 36 legal basis, around why states choose for proceedings to be confidential. I guess I'm just trying to 37 understand what is it that they are trying to protect for by way of practices. Maybe that you've seen in 38 the other states?

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Ms. Gray.

3

4 Cynthia Gray

5 The investigative stage commissions keep confidential because they, I mean, partly because it required 6 by law to do it, but partly because they feel that it helps in their investigation. It encourages 7 complainants to complain. That they don't necessarily want the judge or the whole world to know that 8 they've complained. And it just facilitates the investigation. The Commissions believe in and most 9 investigative agencies do keep their investigations confidential. You know, grand juries do it. The law 10 enforcement does it. Attorney General's offices do. So, that's why the investigation is kept confidential. I 11 am not sure why, why the hearings are kept confidential. Excuse me, in states. I've never heard a 12 justification for it. Now, most of these rules have been on the books for decades. So, partly it just they, 13 you know, come from a time where there may have been less transparency, in general. From 14 governments, and then what's it called, when you don't want to change? That just sets in so they don't 15 change, or it's difficult to change. Constitutional changes, if it's in the Constitution, it's difficult to 16 change. The New York State Commission on Judicial Conduct, their hearings are confidential. Only 17 their decisions become public, and the Commission has worked for years and years to change that. The 18 Commission does not like the confidentiality rule. They find it very hard to maintain after a certain 19 point. You know they like their investigations to be confidential. They think that aids them. But after a 20 certain point, when you're going to have a hearing, and people are being subpoenaed to appear at that 21 hearing, it just, it just becomes a lot of work for them. A lot of additional work for it to become 22 confidential. And they don't think that it helps with the system that the people can't sit in. They don't 23 know about the charges. They don't know about the, you know, nobody can sit in on the hearing. So 24 that's, I think, why, over time, states have gotten there. A few more states have gotten less and less 25 confidential as time goes by, but it's been the majority rule for 30-40, years that the hearings be public in 26 most states.

27

28 Sen. Lee

29 Okay, Ms, Gray, you were asked about disqualification standards, and I also noted in your testimony 30 that you seem to have indicated that you read the Troyer Report, and I would suggest that's 31 conscientiousness above and beyond the call. So, thank you for that. I think it became clear in that 32 Report that the Judicial Branch felt like they were not sufficiently attuned to what was going on with 33 regard to complaints around the State, and that as a result, the Chief Justice has said that he's going to 34 get, as I understand it, regular reports on investigations so that he can be attuned to what's going on in 35 the various courts. Would that prior knowledge serve as a disqualification for the Chief to participate in 36 a decision later on, if he's been sort of monitoring a case as it was in its infancy.

37

38 Cynthia Gray

39 That's a good question. And I don't know what the answer to that is. I mean, if he's just, if it's just a 40 procedural, you know, he's, you know, they're telling him what the steps are, rather than the results. But

1 you know, personal knowledge acquired outside the courtroom can be a disqualifying basis, but I hadn't 2 thought of that before. So, I'm not, I can't give you a coherent answer. I'm afraid off the top of my head.

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Well, you certainly hinted at a coherent answer, because procedural versus substantive is a significant 6 and appropriate distinction. If he's getting briefed on, you know what the facts are as they are developed 7 in the investigation, that would give him specific knowledge of what's going on, and that would seem to 8 be. It would be, not seem to be, it would be a disqualifying factor. So, I think that's helpful clarification 9 that you've provided. Any other questions from the committee? Seeing none. Ms Gray, thank you very 10 much. Thank you for talking with us earlier on about this, and for your participation today and for your 11 participation in our hearing. And your work to make the state court systems, the foundations of justice 12 and democracy that they are. You're an icon.

13

14 Cynthia Gray

15 Well, thank you. You are very kind and I have lots of things to follow up with. And if you think of 16 anything else, please let me know.

17

18 Sen. Lee

19 That's very gracious of you. Thank you. Okay, so the ever-efficient interim committee is 10 minutes 20 ahead of schedule. So, we will take a brief recess.

Appendix 27(s)(ii)(6)

Presentation by Robert Troyer and Nicholas Mitchell / RCT, Ltd.;

Colorado Legislature Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline—
July 12, 2022 Hearing:
Testimony of Robert Troyer and Nicholas Mitchell

1 Sen. Lee

2 The Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline will come to order. Old habits die hard. So, we have a 3 presentation by the investigators of the contract issue, RCT limited--Robert Troyer and Nicholas 4 Mitchell. So, we thank you for providing us with your report, and we would very much appreciate you 5 to tell us what you learned.

6

7 Robert Troyer

8 The most important thing to clear up is that it should be called the Mitchell Report. You're asking about 9 the Mitchell report? I don't know, Nick, you want to? Do you wanna talk about it, it's a very open-ended 10 question. We had had a limited scope under our contract. The contract that was put out for public bid, 11 we were the successful bidder. The contract that we then entered, subject to that bid, specifically, just 12 asked us two things. It asked us to investigate facts that would help us reach conclusions concerning 13 whether there was any misconduct or impropriety in the award of a $2.7 million contract with Mindy 14 Masias. So, we focus specifically first on investigating the motives and intentions and actions behind the 15 actual contract approval. And then the second thing we were tasked with was simply making 16 recommendations for improvements to the judicial branch of government based on what facts we found, 17 during this time period, from sort of the summer of 2018 until the summer of 2019.

18

19 Sen. Lee

20 So, some of us on this panel, were on the committee that made the selections, that sent out the RFP and 21 made the selections. So, we're intimately familiar with your credentials, but maybe for the benefit of the 22 rest of the panel, you could provide us with a little bit of background on who both of you are and what 23 your qualifications are and what gives you the expertise to engage in this process.

24

25 Robert Troyer

26 Sure, we'll start with the less qualified of us first. I had been a lawyer for 32 years, private practice doing 27 some high-end criminal defense work and investigative work at two different law firms, and then was in 28 the federal government as a federal prosecutor for 15 years, including six years as the second in 29 command at the U.S. Attorney's Office, five years as a line criminal prosecutor, and two years as the 30 U.S. Attorney for Colorado. Since I stepped down from that job three and a half years ago, I've done 31 numerous investigations, including two extensive investigations of the Catholic Church and the entire 32 Colorado history seven-year history of Catholic clergy sex abuse in Colorado. I've worked with a variety 33 of policing and other government agencies on internal affairs, specific matters as well as internal affairs, 34 policy changes and training and procedural reviews. That includes Denver Police Boulder, Commerce 35 City, the Denver Sheriff's and, and then other than the Catholic Church, a couple of other smaller 36 investigations like this.

1 Nick Mitchell

2 Good afternoon, Nick Mitchell. And thank you for giving us an opportunity to be here with you this 3 afternoon. I am also a lawyer and have I won't sort of recite my entire career history. But I think most 4 relevant for this project is that I served as the independent monitor for the City of Denver for eight and a 5 half years, overseeing the discipline system for the Denver Police Department and Denver Sheriff's 6 Department. And making recommendations overseeing investigations into internal affairs matters and 7 making recommendations for systemic reforms in the disciplinary systems for those two large public 8 organizations. Experience, which I think is entirely relevant to the work of this committee and to 9 perhaps a lesser extent, to our charter as the investigators of this contract. I'm currently the court 10 appointed monitor of a federal consent decree between the United States Department of Justice and the 11 County of Los Angeles for the reform of the jail system in Los Angeles County. So, I am reporting to a 12 federal court in California and issue reports regarding necessary reforms in the jails in Los Angeles 13 County.

14

15 Sen. Lee

16 And my understanding is that the Los Angeles County jail has more inmates than the entire Colorado 17 Department of Corrections.

18

19 Nick Mitchell

20 You know, I don't know how many inmates are in the Colorado DOC, but the LA County jail system is 21 the largest municipal jail system in the world. So, I would not I would not be at all surprised.

22

23 Sen. Lee

24 Do you know what number it is, just curious?

25

26 Nick Mitchell

27 The number fluctuates, and it came down substantially during the height of the pandemic, I think it was 28 at about 18,000. It came down to about 13,000 at the height of the pandemic, and it's probably back up 29 around 15 or 16,000 inmates in custody right now.

30

31 Sen. Lee

32 Same numbers here. Okay, thank you. All right. I just wanted to establish a little background and 33 credentials before you provided your report. So, if you could tell us what you learned as you 34 investigated the allegations of contract misconduct?

35

36 Nick Mitchell

37 Well, so, we did not prepare a presentation for you, we're happy to talk with you about our findings. Or 38 if there's specific questions or topic areas you'd like us to speak to, We're happy to address, you know, 39 any issues of concern to the committee.

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 What's the preference of the committee? Do you want to ask questions? Or do you want to get an 3 overview or your conclusions or recommendations? Or what's the sense of the committee? Okay, how 4 about a broad overview of what your findings were, and give us your conclusions? You did have some 5 conclusions that you reach, but just a general overview, I think we understand the methodology, but the 6 number of people you interviewed and the key players, any excluded players, things of that sort, and 7 then.

8

9 Robert Troyer

10 Nick, do you want to do conclusions and recommendations? Okay, I'll take a shot at it. We reviewed just 11 in terms of methodology. I guess I'll start with methodology. It was not just Nick and I who did this 12 work. We had a retired judge from California, who's an expert and professor and trainer and teacher on 13 judicial ethics. She was part of our team. We had former director of CBI Mike Rankin, former criminal 14 Assistant Special Agent in Charge for the FBI also who's done a number of investigations with me. He 15 was involved on our team. We also had Cindy Lombardi, the former Director of Procurement for the 16 State of Colorado as a member of our team. So, we had those subject matter experts, Nick and I. And we 17 interviewed 27 people total. We reviewed over 12,000 documents provided by the judicial department.
18 And at our request, and with a number of follow-up requests. And we also reviewed documents that 19 were part of the Office of State Auditor investigation that was completed while we were well into our 20 work, but their findings came out I think in February. So, we reviewed those. And we were able to 21 review transcripts of interviews they had done as well. Some of those overlap with the interviewees we 22 talked to. There were three primary people who did not agree to talk to us, we didn't have subpoena 23 power. And we didn't have any ability to force folks to cooperate and talk with us. One of those people, 24 Chris Ryan, we did review both of his state auditor transcripts. He was interviewed twice by them. So, 25 we were able to hear his side of the story through those transcripts, as well as numerous public 26 statements he's made in the media. And, so, we had a sense of his accounts of various important facts.
27 Through those things. We were not able to interview either Mindy Macias who was the Chief of Staff, to 28 the State Court Administrator at the time. We were not able to talk to Eric Brown, who was the Director 29 of Human Resources. At the time, both of them were at the center of this, and did not agree to talk to us 30 for I'm sure a variety of reasons, but that'd be speculation on my part. And broadly, what we found is 31 that, contrary to some speculation and some media reporting, that the contract that the Judicial 32 Department entered with Mindy Masias to provide leadership training was not approved by then Chief 33 Justice Coats in order to cover up what came to be referred to as dirt about the Department. That is 34 salacious incidents of sexual harassment or other misconduct, both by judicial officers and staff at 35 Judicial over the years. That that was not the motivation for approving this contract. We found instead, 36 really, frankly, an alarming culture at the Judicial Department itself that facilitated a series of events that 37 resulted in the approval of this contract. And we can talk more specifically about what that culture was.
38 But we concluded that because the Chief Justice is the CEO of the Judicial Department, but isn't trained, 39 and equipped, and supported by staff and other colleagues, to be a qualified and effective administrator, 40 he was not. Chief Justice Coats was not keeping an eye on and using good intuition and support to 1 evaluate information and decision making from the Supreme Court Administrator. And as a result, the 2 Supreme Court Administrator, Mindy Masias, who was the Chief of Staff and then Eric Brown, 3 probably the next most powerful person at the State Court Administrator's Office, we're able to engineer 4 this contract for Mindy Masias for their own reasons. I'll put it that way. So, there was mismanagement.

5 There was misjudgment. There was misconduct. There was not, that we found, any motive or intent to 6 approve this contract is some kind of payoff to hide misconduct at the Department.

7
8 Sen. Lee

9 Okay, we have a question from Senator Gardner on the virtual screen.

10
11 Sen. Gardner

12 Thank you, Mr. Chair and Mr. Troyer, Mr. Mitchell. As the Chair noted, several of us were on the 13 selection committee for your contract and are very familiar with your background and appreciate your 14 work. I asked a question of Judge Maes earlier because he has been publicly very critical with your 15 work, and I hope you heard that or have been apprised so that you might respond. But I'm struggling 16 with something. And by the way, I think your report is very thorough. It reaches some conclusions. But 17 when I got done, I still struggled with the conclusion that this contract was not awarded to Mindy 18 Masias as a payoff or a cover up. And perhaps there's no evidence that the Chief Justice, then-Chief 19 Justice approved the contract in order to use the phrase: shut her up. But it did seem to me that there was 20 a strong implication that this contract was awarded for improper motivations, some of which may have 21 been to make Mindy happy or, or to get Mindy on her way, or out the door, or, you know, if not to shut 22 her up, pay her off, or something and that just still lingers out there. So, do you disagree with kind of my 23 assertion altogether? Or are there elements but just not on the part of the Chief Justice? That's kind of a 24 scattershot. But this is the core of, of a lot of the questions. And, by the way, just so I don't have to come 25 back in and be recognized. I really appreciate the recommendations you made and the observations and 26 recommendations that I have found them very useful, but to the question.

27
28 Sen. Lee

29 Sure.

30
31 Sen. Lee

32 Mr. Mitchell.

33
34 Nick Mitchell

35 Well, Senator, I appreciate that question. For the avoidance of doubt, this contract should never have 36 been approved. I think we want to be extremely clear about that. We intended to be clear about that in 37 the report, there is a heightened obligation. When you're talking about public monies being expended for 38 public purposes. There were, as Bob mentioned earlier, there was both mismanagement and misconduct 39 associated with the approval of that contract. And we want to be extremely clear about that point, it 40 should not have been approved. No monies as we understand it, wherever paid under that contract, but

1 the contract itself was a serious breach of the public trust. You know, when we took this project, we had 2 read all the media reporting, and we were aware of the facts as they had appeared in the press, and we 3 were extremely diligent in pursuing the leads as we found them. And we have reached conclusions that 4 we think are supported by the evidence that we found in the investigation. And we feel confident in the 5 conclusions that we've reached. There may be other evidence that someone else may have and we that, 6 you know, we were only able to find the evidence that we were able to find we feel confident in our 7 conclusions. But we certainly want to be extremely clear that the contract should never have been 8 approved, and both reflected mismanagement and misconduct in the approval of that contract.

9
10 Robert Troyer

11 I would just add, Senator, I'm sorry. Did I interrupt?

12
13 Sen. Lee

14 Go ahead. Mr. Troyer.

15
16 Robert Troyer

17 I would add your question is very good and gets to something. I think that it may be at the root of why 18 some people are skeptical about this conclusion apparently. And that is the difference between Chris 19 Ryan's motivation and Chief Justice Coats's motivation. The timing, the chronology, the consistency of 20 the testimony that documentary support for the multiple witnesses who were able to comment with 21 direct personal knowledge about Ben Coats's motivations, all line up to make our conclusion about his 22 motivations very firm. I think you've, you're on the right track. When you say there's still something 23 there's still something nagging that leads us to believe that the contract was a way to keep Mindy happy 24 and get her out the door. That phrasing you used is precisely what we found Chris Ryan's motivation to 25 be. And as the report lays out, he engaged in a bunch of actions and omissions in his communication of 26 information to Coats about what was going on, that allowed him to accomplish that goal. But I think 27 really that was Chris Ryan's goal, and not Ben Coats's goal.

28
29 Sen. Lee

30 Senator Gardner.

31
32 Sen. Gardner

33 Thank you. Gentlemen. Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Troyer, I appreciate that. I think I'll just leave it at that. I 34 appreciate your explanation and clarification of that, because it does seem that your challenge was fairly 35 daunting. As you went through this and did not have the benefit of testimony from several key witnesses 36 for reasons of declining to testify. I would say, then, that the conclusion seems to be if I if I read your 37 report correctly, that the Chief Justice failed to manage properly or was not able to manage properly and 38 was misled by his senior staff. Is that a fair read of what you have to say in your report?

1 Robert Troyer

2 Yes.

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Mr. Troyer.

6

7 Robert Troyer

8 Yes.

9

10 Sen. Gardner

11 That's all I have, Mr. Chair.

12

13 Sen. Lee

14 Okay, thank you, Senator Gardner. Representative Bacon.

15

16 Rep. Bacon

17 Thank you, I'd like to build a little bit off of Senator Gardner's kind of line of thinking, and perhaps I'll 18 just make a statement and, and solicit your responses to that. You know, first, I was trying to understand 19 the scope of your investigation and being able to make an assessment on behalf of the Judicial 20 Department, let alone those individuals who lead it, and who were involved in the issue around this 21 contract. And, so, while we may have found that, you know, Chief Justice Coats either mismanaged or, 22 you know, didn't know, to have an administrator and some other people in senior leadership have these 23 motivations. I guess what I'm just trying to understand is how does that transfer then, to the broader 24 department, right? Even though the chief executive may not have known, that people who were the ones 25 pushing for this contract did, and therefore the judiciary did execute a contract, if that makes sense. And,
26 so, I guess that's what I'm just trying to understand, by way of your insights into that type of, I hope it's 27 logical what I said, thinking, especially as it connects to the scope of what you were looking into. You 28 know, was the scope because perhaps I didn't read all the details of the RFP, you know, looking at to 29 particularly identifying culpability of individuals, or the Department as a whole. And then therefore, if 30 the motivation for one or two people who were responsible for pushing this contract was to, quote 31 unquote, be in the best interest of the Department, which I still don't understand what that actually 32 means. Or I would love to know if you have any insights of what that is. And then it was executed.
33 Therefore, right. So curious, your thoughts on that? If I seem off base, but also as it pertains to the scope 34 of what you were looking into, in regards to this contract?

35

36 Sen. Lee

37 Mr. Mitchell.

38

39

40

1 Nick Mitchell

2 Thank you. And thank you for that question. I think there are a lot of layers to that. One of them that 3 kind of comes out for me is the notion that a department, any government agency is ultimately made up 4 of its leadership and its employees. And, so, to the extent that we have identified through our 5 investigation and this report that we've issued, that some of the leaders of the Department engaged in 6 misconduct in the award, or obtaining of that contract, that does bind the Department given that they 7 were leaders of the branch. And I think that's a fair point and a fair assessment. I think a corollary to that 8 is the fact, Bob alluded to the organizational culture that we uncovered as we did this investigation, 9 which was. Perhaps among the most troubling facts, if you will, that we found during this investigation 10 was that there were multiple employees within the Department who had concerns about the contract. But 11 given the climate of fear and intimidation that had been created by certain people in leadership positions, 12 those employees never came, never voiced their concerns. And, so, I think, baked into your question, I 13 think, and correct me if I'm wrong, is this notion of culture and leadership. And we certainly were 14 extremely concerned by the toxic organizational culture that we uncovered, and have made 15 recommendations at the end of the report that we think will help to get the Department on a path to 16 addressing that toxic organizational culture that caused employees to feel fear, and be unwilling to come 17 forward with their concerns about the contract.

18

19 Sen. Lee

20 Rep. Bacon.

21

22 Rep. Bacon

23 Thank you for that. I think, what I'm also curious about in your experience, particularly with all the other 24 agencies that you've named, and also, I want to respect any sort of, you know, like indictments by way 25 of quote unquote, criminal culpability. But, you know, when it comes to the responsibilities of a chief 26 executive, in regards to what they did, and didn't know about rules, you know, ultimately, have you 27 found they're still responsible for it? Right. And I think I think that's kind of where we're also going with 28 this. So the first point to my questions were, you know, regardless of who it was, the fact is, it was a 29 motivation. Right. And therefore, it seems like the department is responsible for that. But the second 30 piece is, as well, in regards to the chief executive, and thinking what they've known or should have 31 known or didn't know, there's still a sense of responsibility there of what's going out the door. And so 32 what I'm curious about, I asked earlier, to Judge Maes, if you found if you can expand upon as well, 33 what actually was happening in any sort of leadership trainings? You know, I saw a lot of references to 34 it. Um, but I didn't actually see what was happening there, you know, like, what are the agendas or 35 syllabi, or whatever it is, when it comes to training? And then did you find that there was any sort of 36 culture around generally training all of the other judges in the organization, particularly as compared to 37 what may have happened before this Chief Justice? I think the only other thing I'm saying there, too, is 38 like, I'm not sure how to contrast right. Before, you know, Judge Coats came into leadership, if there 39 was any discernible difference that was building upon this culture, perhaps even for 20 years. Right.
40 Were there any contrasts if you saw any? So, what was in the leadership type of training that you found

1 was happening? Did you see anything else? By way of leadership training in the culture of the 2 organization? And do you have a sense perhaps have any contrast of what may have been different in 3 this administration than ones before?

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 Who wants that one?

7

8 Robert Troyer

9 I'll try

10

11 Sen. Lee

12 Mr. Troyer.

13

14 Robert Troyer

15 Thank you, Senator. Let me see if I can handle that. We looked at the actual leadership trainings that had 16 been given The program started in 2006. It was developed and they actually rolled it out and started 17 doing trainings in 2009. There were one or two very small sort of sub vendors but primarily from 2009
18 forward for 10 years it was two particular vendors who did all of that training. And Chief Justice Coats 19 and Chris Ryan and others thought that that training had become a little bit rote, had become a little 20 threadbare. And, so, we talked to a number of interviewees about their impressions of the trainings and 21 got a sense of it. We didn't study their curriculum. We attempted to talk to those two prior vendors who 22 were not willing to talk to us. So, we got a sense of what that training was, it was not specific to the job 23 duties of executives at a district level, or at the Supreme Court level. It was, what are your personality 24 traits? And what color are you according to these psychological profiles and personality/behavioral 25 profiles? And what does that mean? If you're yellow? Do you get along with someone who's blue? And 26 how can you maximize the, you know, working relationship, given the contrast and personality colors, it 27 was that kind of stuff. And that's why I think some people we talked to, one person in particular, who's a 28 real student of leadership training said, there's some value in that. And it was presented pretty well. But 29 that's as far as it went, it didn't get into a chief executive, for example, must sit down with the top 30 administrator, the first day on the job. And they need to hash out who's responsible for what, what the 31 expectations are, those need to be written down, there needs to be a performance review, based on the 32 five things that are going to they are going to set together as expectations. It was not, let alone here's 33 how the Financial Services Division works. Here's how the Human Resource Division works, et cetera.
34 So, there was no training like that. At the district level, I'm not sure. So, we didn't look at that it didn't 35 become relevant to our scope, we would have looked at it if it had, but what does the Chief, like Judge 36 Maes when he was the Chief in Pueblo in the 10th, what if any training did he get as Chief in terms of 37 working with his top administrator? And, also, what relationship would he have with the SCAO? So, we 38 didn't see evidence of any of that stuff. I think there were three parts to your question. But now I've 39 talked long enough. I can only remember the second part. But I think the second part was about whether 1 over time this had changed in terms of both the lack of training and also the CEO oversight, if you will, 2 is that fair?

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Rep. Bacon.

6

7 Rep. Bacon

8 Yeah.

9

10 Sen. Lee

11 You're on track.

12

13 Robert Troyer

14 Okay. It's a surprise. And the answer is each Chief Justice, we learned has her or his own personality.
15 And there's a lot of discretion in that CEO position within how you express that profile. So, we heard 16 Justice Malarkey was a certain way and might have been more hands on. Chief Justice Rice was a little 17 bit different, maybe a little bit more closed circle, maybe less collaborative, maybe a little bit different 18 expectation from Counsel to the Chief Judge, Andy Rottman and from Chris Ryan, or Jerry Maroney, 19 the prior administrator. And Chief Justice Coats's personality was different. And one of the flaws that 20 we found was that all of this broke, before that personality really ever got expressed. And I mean, you 21 might say, not just drinking from a firehose, but knocked down, throw against the wall and blown down 22 the sidewalk by a firehose starting the second week on the job. Not to, by any means, excuse his failures 23 in managing this.

24

25 Sen. Lee

26 Representative Bacon.

27

28 Rep. Bacon

29 Thank you. Where I'm going is how someone or people who've been with an organization for a long 30 period of time, grow into a space or place where they know they can behave a certain way. And, so, it 31 kind of sounds like this department. The culture on the one hand could be determined by whoever the 32 Chief Justice is, but then there's some sort of component of trying to figure out what we need to do by 33 way of training or insights or whatever, over time so that people don't go 10-20 years, thinking they can 34 behave a certain way. Right. And so that's, that's what I think I was just trying to understand, by way of 35 the contrasting questions, you know, how much of this, how much did you find by way of the 36 organizational culture really comes down to actually who the Chief is? Or is it lack of actual systems 37 and protocols that can withstand time so that people can't go a couple of decades, taking particular 38 licenses. So perhaps that was just a little bit more of my own narrative. It just seems like subtext that I 39 wasn't able to really pull out of the report. And so I just want to be able to leave it there. So, I'll pause.
40 I'll stop there. Thank you.

Sen. Lee

Mr. Troyer, would you want to respond to that?

Robert Troyer

I do quickly that that's very well-articulated. And Mr. Mitchell might want to weigh in on this, too. But I think the answer is pretty clear cut in this situation. These problems were not driven by the personality and the skills of individual Chief Justices over time. These were deeply embedded forces, deeply embedded culture of the CEO leaving the state court administrator's office to do its thing. And the personality of that that administrator changed over time. And when that person was too busy, or focused on other tasks, like building a new building, you had a circumstance where the people at the next level, the people right below. The Director of the Human Resources Department, the Chief of Staff, maybe others, right at that next level of management, were allowed to create what we found, which was a culture of fear, intimidation, and silence, and real punishment and retaliation, if you were going to do something like, say, this contract doesn't seem right to me. So, I think it really was along the norms that go to your point about what's acceptable in this place, when I am at my job, eroded over time, not because of personality, but because of lack of attention.

Sen. Lee

I thought it was Rep. Weissman and then Rep. Gonzales, but I'll defer to either. Senator Gonzales, sorry.

Sen. Gonzales

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Rep. Carver

And make it quick. Mr. Chair, since we got a reprieve from the fire drill evacuation. I think we were talking about anonymous reporting, and, and how to factor that in and again, if, and you may not have heard any of the earlier commentary. But, you know, another issue that we have is what to make statutory versus what needs to be left to rulemaking because certainly you don't want a structure that is so detailed, so prescriptive in the statutory scheme, that does not provide sufficient flexibility. And, you know, the judicial branch is the third branch. So that is a factor. Any particular thoughts based on what you have seen and heard in this investigation as well as your other work?

Sen. Lee

Mr. Mitchell.

Nick Mitchell

Yes. And thank you for the thoughtful question, because anonymous reporting certainly does come up in any workplace, any public workplace in which certain employees are afraid of potential retaliation. The issue of anonymous reporting comes up. And I guess I would, I would distinguish, I would say, systems

1 should permit anonymous complaints to be filed. Any complaint system that wants to be legitimate and 2 wants to be perceived as legitimate, should be willing to take in allegations of misconduct, no matter 3 what format they come in, whether they're filed online, filed by phone, going to your supervisor. And 4 whether they're filed with a person's name attached or anonymously, if someone in a position of 5 authority has engaged in misconduct, it is the institution's interest to find out about that, to investigate it, 6 and take appropriate action if necessary. So, I think anonymity should not be a factor that would prohibit 7 someone or prevent someone from being able to file a complaint. As a realist and an investigator, I will 8 say that anonymous complaints are often extremely hard to investigate. Any investigation needs to have 9 witnesses, you need to identify who to talk to, what documents, if any, to obtain, what video, if any to 10 obtain. And when someone has filed an anonymous complaint, it's often very hard to bring that 11 complaint investigation to a satisfactory or a definitive conclusion. Anonymous complaints, generally 12 speaking, are more likely to result in not-sustained indeterminate investigative outcomes. But that's not a 13 reason that a system should not accept or receive anonymous complaints. It should. There are standards 14 that relate to that issue in a law enforcement context and that encourage law enforcement agencies to 15 accept anonymous complaints. I'm not aware of equivalent standards in a judicial context, though, there 16 may be some such standards out there that I just don't know about.

17

18 Rep. Carver

19 Thank you for that. And looking on page 62 of your report. I think there has been discussion about 20 complaint intake and how that information should be shared, at least at an aggregate level. I do wonder 21 about, in the system that you found. Did you see any aspect of the complaint system or during your 22 interviews that was working?

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 Mr. Mitchell.

26

27 Nick Mitchell

28 Well, I'll say, as we've already discussed here today, we were not able to interview Mindy Masias or 29 Eric Brown, two individuals who would have had a significant amount of information about the 30 complaint system and how it worked. So there may be information that we were not able to obtain that 31 reflects certain aspects of a functional complaint process. The information that we obtained, generally 32 reflected a dysfunctional complaint process. And as I sit here today, there's nothing that comes to mind 33 about that process that seems particularly strong or robust. I am aware as we commented on in the 34 report, there have been some improvements or changes implemented by the Department after the events 35 in question. But during the period of our investigation, or the period that we were investigating, I can't 36 think of any part of the complaint process that was working particularly well.

37

38 Rep. Carver

39 Thank you for that. And then the final question is more of a perception question. You know, there's been 40 some media reports that have raised the issue about whether the investigation was conducted

1 independently without influence by the Judicial Branch, all that type of thing. And as Chair Lee 2 mentioned, the whole point of the investigation, and the way it was done was to try and keep the 3 selection, both the task of the investigation what was to be investigated, as well as the selection of the 4 teams, independent of Judicial. But there has been some concern expressed in various media articles.
5 And can you just address whether you experienced any influence from Judicial in how you conducted 6 your investigation?

7

8 Sen. Lee

9 Mr. Mitchell.

10

11 Nick Mitchell

12 Thank you. We did not. The conclusions reflected in this report are our conclusions that we've formed 13 using our independent judgment, shaped by our decades of legal and investigative experience. Our 14 conclusions do not reflect improper or undue influence from any party, including employees of the 15 Judicial Department. They are our conclusions. And we were not subjected to any improper or undue 16 influence during the investigation.

17

18 Sen. Lee

19 Representative Weissman.

20

21 Rep. Weissman

22 Thank you, Mr. Chair, thank you both for being here. I have a couple of different questions, which are a 23 mix of procedural and substantive. And I'll try to not plow ground that our colleagues have plowed 24 before. So just getting back to the nature of the investigation itself, I guess, by reference to your 25 document, you say a little bit about methodology starting at page seven for anybody who's following 26 along. So, there was this process that I was not part of, but some of my colleagues were in terms of 27 scoping the RFP, and causing that to be put out, and you and others bid into it. And here you are. My 28 Records reflect that the contract was signed on are about the 11th or 12th of October of 21. Work began 29 thereafter. You mentioned talking to folks. In terms of access to let's just say written information. How 30 did that go? Did? How did you decide what writings you needed? How did you pursue those writings?
31 Did you feel that you were able to get timely access to those writings? Specifically, did you strike an 32 access agreement or any other document by that name pursuant to CRE 502 in order to obtain 33 information in writing?

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Mr. Troyer.

37

38 Robert Troyer

39 Thank you, Chairman Lee. We didn't sign an access agreement. There's a term in the contract that 40 expressly says we have, first of all, we had a relationship with judicial that allowed us to get unfettered

1 access at our request. And they had an obligation to provide us what we asked for. We asked for broad 2 categories of documents at the beginning, based on what we what we knew, the general sort of time 3 period, and also what subject matters were going to be and we got a very large volume of documents in 4 response to that, I would say, overinclusive. We then had and I can't remember off the top of my head 5 how many times we did this, but we had a number of specific follow-up requests over the course of the 6 investigation. We would learn something from an interviewee and say, can we also see such and such 7 can we see so and so's emails? Can we see the policies on this subject matter? Can we see for example, 8 can we see the five prior contracts entered with the prior vendors? And can I see the prior vendor RFP 9 that goes all the way back to 2015? Some of those materials were already in the what became over 10 12,000 documents. Others we asked for specifically, and they're provided in separate smaller responsive 11 tranches, if you will.

12

13 Sen. Lee

14 Rep. Weissman.

15

16 Rep. Weissman

17 Okay. Thank you. So, in short, access to information that you felt you needed was essentially per 18 contract. It was part of the same writing that defined scope of work and compensation and timelines.
19 There was not a separate writing and there were no specific references to CRE 502.

20

21 Robert Troyer

22 That's correct.

23

24 Rep. Weissman

25 Okay, shifting to another method of gathering information. You certainly refer to this, we've spoken of 26 it. As you noted, no subpoena power, but three key personalities here declined to talk: Ms. Masias, Mr.
27 Brown, Mr. Ryan. I wonder if you could to unpack just a little bit more how that went. You reached out 28 to them and never heard back at all. You reached out to them, perhaps through counsel and they simply 29 stated not going to talk. Specifically, if the latter of those two, did they allude to, and I guess depending 30 on exactly when you tried to contact them. You know, my understanding as the auditor wrapped up 31 around February, criminal referral was at that time, the Second Judicial District then had a pretty brief 32 amount of time under the prevailing statutes of limitation, my understanding is when OSA pursuant to 33 statute makes a criminal referral that goes to the law enforcement authority, there is no notification to 34 the individuals being referred under the statute. That's kind of what one would expect. I truly do not 35 know what contact if any personnel at the Second Judicial District or Denver PD or otherwise had with 36 any of these three individuals. So I don't know as a factual matter, if at what point they came to know 37 that they were being investigated. At any rate, I would be interested if, bringing it back to sharpen the 38 question, if the three folks in question in any way in the course of registering their disinclination to 39 speak with you referred to pendency of a criminal investigation?

40

1 Sen. Lee
2 Mr. Troyer.

3
4 Robert Troyer
5 Thank you. Well, our contact with all three of those individuals was through counsel.

6
7 Robert Troyer
8 They all have separate counsel. And, in one case, multiple counsel. The nature of all those. In one case, 9 counsel simply never responded. In the two other cases, counsel, again, I can't remember precisely 10 because these are telephone conversations in which I'm making a request. And in a couple of those 11 conversations, the response was, we'll get back to you. And then that didn't happen. In a couple of 12 conversations, there were multiple reasons. To my recollection, there was never in any of those 13 conversations, a specific statement that we are concerned about criminal prosecution, and Fifth 14 Amendment privilege, or any other concern related being the subject or target of a criminal 15 investigation. There was some articulation of you seem like a nice guy, but judicial is paying you. So, 16 we don't trust the process.

17
18 Sen. Lee
19 Rep. Weissman.

20
21 Rep. Weissman
22 Thank you, I think two more, Mr. Chair, and then I see Senator Van Winkle, I'm gonna have to get used 23 to saying that has some questions. Jumping now into the middle of the report. And, you know, we 24 circled around this before, I'm on page 24. Now, we're sort of in the guts of how the contract happened.
25 Again, you reach the conclusions you reach. I left with an uneasy feeling. As you know, as you noted, as 26 I think some of my colleagues affirmed to. You state that Morrison, one of the employees knew that a 27 contract was not the consideration for the resignation agreement. So that stated pretty definitively. And 28 interestingly here we use a term of art from contract law, the negating of which I think is very 29 consequential. And then, you know, that part of the discussion of the facts as bracketed both before and 30 after by the findings that nonetheless are difficult for a concerned reader to digest. I guess I'll put it that 31 way. So, I just wonder if you could elaborate a little bit more on how that part of your interrogations 32 went. I use that term, figuratively, sorry. And how you come to be so sure of that conclusion as to the 33 mental state of that one individual. I have to be clear, I've never spoken to her, at least not that I can 34 recollect. But that part of the report just jumped out to me as interesting.

35
36 Sen. Lee
37 Mr. Troyer.

38
39 Robert Troyer
40 Sorry, Senator. As you can tell I'm not adept at the procedural format sometimes.

It's a unique sort of Kabuki show that we engage in here to ensure that people on the outside know who's speaking. So, it goes through the Chair.

Robert Troyer

I appreciate it. I'm trying to learn. Thank you, Mr. Chair. The answer is that is based on interviewing Terri Morrison, interviewing several other people in her legal department, comparing and assessing the credibility of those interviews against emails and documents that we reviewed that reflect the chronology, statements made among employees about what they were trying to accomplish with the resignation agreement. And it's all of that evidence that that supported the firm conclusion about the contract consideration.

Sen. Lee

Rep. Weissman.

Rep. Weissman

Okay, thank you. So, analogously to how you reached certain conclusions about Mr. Ryan. You talked to a bunch of folks and you weighed at all against itself and applied your best judgment. Okay. One, one more sort of small question about procedure, you were talking about the document transfers? I guess, as a matter of timing, when. So, your contract was finalized in let's just say mid-October 21. How soon did information start flowing? And then, at what point did you feel that you had everything that you needed? And when did you when did you basically get the last of the information that you ever asked for? And such that, past that, point it was kind of just chewing over what you had?

Sen. Lee

Mr. Troyer.

Robert Troyer

Thank you, Chairman Lee, we got, my recollection, I don't have the date in front of me. But we got the first large set of documents provided in a secure database called Relativity that we were given access to and basic training on the use of. We're familiar with that from other investigations already. And that was within approximately a month of signing contract. I think a little bit less actually. In terms of when the last thing was provided. That's a tougher question to answer, because there's a tapering. So as the investigation is winding up, interviews are winding up, report drafting starts. There were all the way down to that stage. All the way down to the spring of this year. There were things that we thought, let's just make sure we didn't miss something. An example that comes to mind is, one last chance Judicial Department, do any of these people have job descriptions? Before we reached the conclusion that none of them had what we would consider a job description, which I'm familiar from my government service should say, your job is this. Your expectations this year are these five things. These are your goals. This 1 is our relationship as supervisee/supervisor. We were shocked to find those didn't exist. And, so, we 2 asked one last time.

3

4 Sen. Lee

5 Amazing.

6

7 Robert Troyer

8 So, there were some things there were some things like that down to the end. But the vast majority of the 9 documents were provided in the first month or so.

10

11 Rep. Weissman

12 Okay, that's helpful. Still in the procedural lane, there's a contractual relationship between your firm and 13 the judicial branch per the procurement process. Did anybody in the branch see any draft, any segment 14 of the final report prior to your wrapping up your work and delivering the finished product to them were 15 upon you know it was made public relatively quickly. What was the, I guess, was there any back and 16 forth? Or was the nature of the agreement such that you are here doing your work? They are over here to 17 provide information as you requested. But otherwise, there's not a bridge.

18

19 Sen. Lee

20 Mr. Troyer.

21

22 Robert Troyer

23 Thank you, Chairman Lee. The contract specifically addresses this and we went to some lengths in the 24 negotiation process of that contract to ensure what I'm about to describe. Which is that we, for purposes 25 of making the report as accurate as possible to make sure we've made no factual errors, no, no typos, no 26 errors in people's titles or something, something of that nature, that we would give the Judicial 27 Department a draft that we considered final. That they would then have a period of time and I can't 28 remember off the top of my head, if we gave them two weeks, what the time period was defined as.
29 They were, then have time to review that and provide any comments or corrections they wanted. And 30 the contract specifically said, we have no obligation whatsoever to accept a single one of those edits, 31 comments, suggestions, etc. And, so, we went through that as the contract required, provided them what 32 we considered a final, gave it to judicial, had a conversation with the Supreme Court Administrator and 33 the Chief Justice relatively quickly after that. I believe we accepted three or four, two or three typo-type 34 corrections and otherwise did not change the report at all in response. After accepting those two or three 35 typo-type comments, we then put a date on it and issued it to them as final, completing our contract.

36

37 Rep. Weissman

38 Thank you that discussion is helpful. Last one, Mr. Chair, appreciate your indulgence. I didn't see a ton 39 of discussion in here squarely on this point. So, I think I know the answer. But for the record. Part of 40 what makes this committee's work challenging is just the, you know, the years of stuff that's been

1 swirling out there and the press and, you know, frankly, the degrees of germaneness are not of all of that 2 to what we are specifically charged to do. What I do not believe you were setting out to do is to squarely 3 answer the question whether any action or omission of anyone in particular, might have constituted a 4 violation of the Code of Judicial Conduct. That is outside the scope. Is that correct?
5

6 Sen. Lee

7 Mr. Troyer.

8
9 Robert Troyer

10 Thank you. Yes, that is correct.
11

12 Rep. Weissman

13 Thank you, Mr. Chair.
14

15 Sen. Lee

16 Did you not? I'm sorry, what was your answer to that?
17

18 Robert Troyer

19 The answer is that is correct. That was specifically not in our scope.
20

21 Sen. Lee

22 Okay.
23

24 Robert Troyer

25 It was not in our scope. We were not asked to make a determination whether anyone violated the 26 Judicial Code of Conduct, the code of attorney conduct, any employee code of conduct, or any criminal 27 law. So, we were specifically not asked to do an assessment of either state or federal potential criminal 28 violations. So, we did not do those things.
29

30 Sen. Lee

31 Okay. and your contract was specifically to investigate contract, fraud, misconduct, etc. And not these 32 other areas. Okay. Thanks for that. Representative Van Winkle. Senator Van Winkle.
33

34 Sen. Van Winkle

35 Good catch.
36

37 Sen. Lee

38 Time passes and I forget.
39
40

1 Sen. Van Winkle

2 Missed it myself. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And allow me to piggyback on some of Rep. Weissman's 3 earlier questions and something I heard, I don't know maybe a full hour ago. So, allow me to connect 4 some dots and take it specifically to the key events surrounding the contract and the possible quid pro
5 quo. Those appear to come from a single meeting where the alleged memo was read. And the report 6 concludes that Coats did not agree to the deal in an effort to silence a lawsuit. But how were you able to 7 assess the truth of what actually happened in that meeting, specifically, the Chief Justice's involvement 8 trying to cut a deal or not, when two of the four people in that meeting refused to speak to you. And 9 those two could have recalled those events in that meeting very differently than the other two, correct?

10

11 Sen. Lee

12 Mr. Troyer.

13

14 Robert Troyer

15 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, one of the other people in that meeting has given many accounts of what 16 happened in that meeting. Chris Ryan has given publicly many accounts, including transcribed 17 interviews with the State Auditor. So, we looked at exactly what he said happened based on those 18 statements. And of course, we interviewed Chief Justice Coats, we interviewed Andy Rottman, the two 19 other participants in that in that meeting. We're also aware of a deposition transcript given by Eric 20 Brown in the context of an unrelated federal lawsuit, in which he said he didn't recall what happened in 21 the meeting, and he wasn't sure who wrote the talking points list. And said something to the effect of it 22 might have had multiple authors. So, we had some sense of what, incomplete of course, but some sense 23 of what Mr. Brown might have said. And, so, the conclusions about what happened in that meeting, 24 come from those sources and are stacked up against the chronology. Undisputed events that had 25 preceded, numerous events that preceded the meeting. And that events after the meeting that reflect the 26 conduct of all the participants in that meeting. Suffice to say, as the report explains, that chronology and 27 those events are entirely inconsistent with the version of that meeting presented by Chris Ryan.

28

29 Sen. Lee

30 Senator Van Winkle.

31

32 Sen. Van Winkle

33 Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just one more question along these lines. Did you learn in your investigation 34 whether the other Justices were aware of the contract whether did any of the Justices happen to ask like, 35 why is it being given in light of the firing?

36

37 Sen. Lee

38 Mr. Troyer.

39

40

1 Robert Troyer

2 Thank you, Mr. Chair. No, as the report, as the report explains, this is one of the cultural problems that 3 we identified for reasons of fear of recusal in potential litigation that may result from employee matters, 4 that may end up in litigation that may end up in front of the Supreme Court. There was a lack of 5 collaboration and real information sharing between the Chief and the other Justices. And, so, the nature 6 of those communications, as surprising as this may sound, it was surprising to us was more of a--the 7 Chief Justice is going down a road with the Supreme Court Administrator toward what they perceived 8 was a proper solution to what they called the Mindy problem. And the Chief would simply report to his 9 colleagues periodically, things like if we find there's no other mis-reimbursement or other financial 10 misconduct by Mindy Macias, which Chris Ryan has been told to look into, we might ask Mindy to 11 resign and come back and do a contract. And it wasn't even presented based on our interviews as: Are 12 you okay with that? It was the Chief just saying this is where we're headed. And other Justices saying, 13 okay, thanks for letting us know, kind of thing. That was the nature of the relationship.

14

15 Sen. Lee

16 Any further questions? Okay. Rep. Bacon.

17

18 Rep. Bacon

19 I have two questions. Or probably rather a set. So, I want to go back to that the meeting that we were 20 just talking about, I think, where Rottman, Coats, Brown, and Ryan were in regards to allegedly rattling 21 off this list of things that she knew. And, so, you all had the opportunity to talk with Justice Coats. And 22 I'm curious about what your assessment is, you know, actually about his awareness because I'm looking 23 at I'm not sure what page this. But I'm looking at a page where there was just a paragraph where Justice 24 Coats turned to Ryan and asked, Do I need to hear more of this? Ryan shrugged da da da. But then it 25 says Coats went on to ask a few questions. And he asked about her health, which means I'm curious if he 26 knew about the FMLA piece, right? He asked or he said that he did not care what dirt Masias had on the 27 Department. Then he said that the Department was not going to make any concessions to her about the 28 termination. And then three, neither he nor the Department was trying to do anything to harm Masias. So 29 what I'm trying to understand there was, even though he may not have been aware of this list, he was 30 aware that it seems like he was aware that there was something going on with Masias enough to want to 31 say I don't care about what kind of dirt, what's going on with your health, right, or anything around this 32 termination. And so I'm asking, I guess what I'd like to know perhaps is a little bit more insight on where 33 you feel his awareness was, particularly to the place where he would still think it's okay to contract with 34 her. After saying things like this. And so honestly, I'm trying to sound like a legislator. And I want to 35 just say, you know, y'all need to just tell me what was going on. But I'm trying to figure out how to 36 sound like a person who went to law school. So, I'm sorry. But for me, I just want to know if there any 37 insights there because you shared what he said in the meeting. But I'm curious your thoughts in having 38 interviewed him? What kept coming up by way of some sort of awareness and some sort of assessment.
39 So, whether or not he didn't know these things, he still knew that there was some sort of something 40 going on with dirt or concessions around, right, her termination. That even later, it was okay to sign a

1 contract that was above market, you know, with this woman. So, I guess my lay question is, like, did it
2 sound like he was picking up on something and sure it might be any sort of assumptions, but I don't see 3 anything else to kind of understand any sort of indications of processing? What was happening in this 4 whole scope? Does that make sense? If I see you outside, I'll give you the real talk version of this. So, 5 thank you.

6

7 Sen. Lee

8 Mr. Troyer.

9

10 Robert Troyer

11 Thank you, Chairman. I'll try to answer that. I think I see what you're getting at. And yes, we 12 interviewed both Andy Rottman and Ben Coats in a lot of detail about what exactly is going on in the 13 meeting, and what different people's mindsets were. I think the best way to get to the heart of what you 14 all want to know is, from the beginning, the Chief Justice's attitude is: You're telling me it's a problem to 15 have her gone completely? You're telling me it's in the best interest? You being Chris Ryan, that it's in 16 the best interest of this Department that we have her around, we have her do this training, we reach this 17 solution? Why are you reading this to me? What is all this other stuff? Let's get this back on track. You 18 told me this is about getting her in a contract so you can effectively institute a reorganization plan that 19 you said is your priority. Why is this guy talking about this stuff? Meaning Eric Brown? I'm gonna bring 20 this meeting back to its purpose. Where are we with this contract? How is her health? Everybody knew 21 she was out on FMLA. And the understanding, I don't know what the facts are. I can tell you the 22 understanding was that it was very serious. So, he's saying first how she doing? Is she okay? Second, 23 this stuff has nothing to do with how we make these decisions. This stuff. I don't even know why Eric 24 Brown is reading this. Okay, we're doing this for the reasons we talked about doing this way back in 25 October. And that's really, you know, obviously Nick and I have picked up on the skepticism that that 26 you guys have about this conclusion. But it's, it's just one of those things where sometimes we want a 27 story to be sexy and dramatic and we've been told before we read the report or the actual investigation 28 that it's going to be. And actually, it's much more common circumstance, which is just poor human 29 behavior, deficient, regrettable. Really, really disappointing human behavior, especially for a Judicial 30 Department, any public service organization. But that is really what's going on from way back when this 31 reimbursement stuff hits the fan in the Fall. And that's why in our conclusion, we feel, still feel, and felt 32 in the report very firm in that conclusion that things didn't change in this meeting where the dirt memo 33 was read. Motivations didn't change. A contract for silence didn't spring out of someone's forehead.
34 Instead, the simple fact that way back in July, Coats and Ryan had talked about needing a new training 35 program, then they have a reimbursement problem with Masias. And Chris Ryan starts talking way back 36 then, way back in October, about getting Mindy Masias on a leadership contract. That's undisputed. And 37 it's confirmed in every interview, and all the Chris Ryan stuff and everything else and all the documents 38 that this was under discussion and being propelled forward months before this meeting where dirt was 39 discussed. As a result, when this starts with Eric Brown, there's frankly confusion and irritation from 40 Rottman and Coats. Why are we talking about this? We've already been talking for two and a half, three

1 months about the contract. First of all, is she okay? Second of all, where are we with this? Like where 2 are we with moving the contract forward that we've been talking about for a long time. This stuff doesn't 3 have anything to do with that. So, that's probably more of a narrative version of my own on the fly 4 summary of what's already in here. Already in the report.
5

6 Sen. Lee

7 Rep. Bacon
8

9 Rep. Bacon

10 Thank you for that. And, you know, quite honestly, I was trying to figure out what I made of the 11 chronology as well, you know, not having spent the time. It was noted, when she went on FMLA, for 12 example, you know, like the day around the termination conversations. And, so, I was just curious about 13 that. But I just want to shift a little bit to the complaint processes. And I'm curious, your insights. I know 14 the scope of your work, was not to look into any particular judicial or attorney violations or even 15 criminal culpability. But it struck me in here that there was a lot of conversation about people 16 theoretically, could have been made aware of harassment. And so while we're talking about people don't 17 know what the complaint system is, did you also see something around the culture of people's 18 responsibilities once they become aware of something, as well? And potentially, in this conversation, do 19 you see that there should be any tangible touch points, or spotlights on particular pieces of statute? I 20 mean, for the lay people, it's like, what does EEOC say about stuff like this? Right, in education, we 21 have mandatory reporters, but like, is there any certain scenarios that you saw throughout this, that 22 people were also not supported? As a matter of, you know, once becoming aware of how people or staff 23 may have felt, that there may have been some other steps even outside of the agency that could have 24 been taken to protect those people? So, you know, again, we're talking a lot about the complaint process.
25 But I think I have another set of questions around what is staff supposed to do when they become aware 26 of things and what are their responsibilities either as a matter of departmental procedure, let alone law, 27 and is there any anything that you see from this that we need to pay particular attention to, by way of 28 existing law? If that makes sense.
29

30 Sen. Lee

31 Mr. Mitchell.
32

33 Nick Mitchell

34 Thank you for that insightful question. I think, you know, this ties for me to the issue that was raised 35 earlier about what should be in statute versus what should be in procedural rules. And I think that this 36 issue may be appropriate to be handled within the procedural rules of the agency. As a sort of best 37 practice with complaint processes, I can say that when a person is in a supervisory position, and 38 becomes aware of any misconduct, any serious misconduct within the agency, they should have an 39 obligation to report that through the proper channels to address fears that the victim may have about 40 coming forward themselves. And there should be a process in place within the organization to protect

1 the victim in case they are not willing to come forward. But the supervisor who becomes aware of 2 allegations of serious misconduct must be under an obligation to report that up the chain through those 3 processes, upon pain of potential discipline themselves if they fail to take action. Willful blindness, 4 turning your eye if you're in a supervisory position, is not acceptable. It should not be condoned, it
5 should be explicitly repudiated in the agency's rules. And one of the obligations of being a supervisor 6 within a public organization like the Department should be an obligation to protect employees who have 7 been victimized by any kind of misconduct. So, I think that was an issue that we were attuned to, as we 8 did this investigation. We thought about all of the potential decision points at which these kinds of issues 9 could have been resolved. And making sure that supervisors within the chain of command are bringing 10 issues to the attention of the appropriate authorities is one way that organizations can kind of clean up 11 when there is a culture of fear of retaliation and even misconduct. That's one of the steps that 12 organizations can take to begin to clean up that culture.

13

14 Sen. Lee

15 Any other questions from the committee? I must echo my Co-Chair or my Vice Chair's comments. I too, 16 was shocked and horrified when I read this report, and I appreciate the way you all have characterized it.
17 What this report did for me was pull back the screen to reveal a Department mired in a toxic 18 environment with lax oversight by senior management, legal staff making grave mistakes--not reporting 19 and fulfilling their legal obligations to senior management. Led by, I have to say an incompetent, 20 uninvolved, in-curious Chief Justice Coats, who was characterized by one reporter, as more bumbling, 21 incompetent than nefariously, intentionally engaging in a conspiracy to pay for silence. But I was just 22 shocked. I've worked for two Fortune 500 companies. And Mr. Troyer when you told me that they didn't 23 have job descriptions. I mean, that's a fundamental basic component of any human resources system.
24 Eric Brown was a human resources manager. That's unconscionable incompetence or malfeasance, not 25 to have job descriptions. How do you know who reports to who, who supervises who? You describe a 26 department where the leader is turning a blind eye to things being said to him. If I'm in a meeting, and 27 someone's telling me something about misconduct, or about potential sex harassment, I'm not going to 28 put up my hand and say don't tell me any more about that. I'm going to call with my legal counsel and 29 get a full explanation. Let me just read you what one reporter said when he was having read your report, 30 where it said in there:

31

32 Sen. Lee

33 That the contract was not given to buy silence but the Chief knew that the person he was considering 34 was under a disciplinary suspension for engaging or disciplinary action. She couldn't sign contracts, she 35 couldn't authorize expenses, she couldn't travel. And then he asked for is there any more, and there were 36 40 more instances where her personal expense account showed variations from policies and procedures.
37 The report was just as Coats suddenly okay, giving her the contract, so long as she did not commit 38 additional fraud. Does that mean a little fraud is acceptable? As long as the dollar amounts aren't too 39 high? This is the leader of this department granting a how many million-dollar contract was that, 5 40 million? He didn't know the amount of the contract. He didn't know how long the contract was lasting.

1 And quite frankly, for your report to say while he didn't get sufficient training, I thought was shocking.
2 Did he not ask for training? Had he not been in that Department for X amount of years sitting as a
3 justice? There's only seven of them. It isn't like the other Chief that preceded him was invisible. He saw 4 what that person was doing. He must have known. I'm shocked at what this Chief Justice Coats didn't do 5 as a leader of that Department. And, so, the question I have now under the leadership we have now, 6 you've made 16 recommendations. Have any of those 16 recommendations been implemented by the 7 new Chief Justice? Do they have a complaint procedure? Do they have procurement processes? Do they 8 have job descriptions? Do they have training programs which will prevent this thing from going 9 forward? This stuff is so toxic that you described that I would think leadership would immediately sit 10 down with senior management and go through the list and hire outside consultants. Do you know what 11 they have done to implement any of the 16 recommendations? Mr. Mitchell.

12

13 Nick Mitchell

14 Well, when the report was issued, we received a memorandum from the current Chief Justice which 15 outlines certain steps that had already been taken by the Department to implement some of the 16 recommendations either in part or in whole. But as you'll note, our final recommendation in the report, 17 which again relates to the issue of transparency, is that Bob and I have called on the Department to 18 report to the Legislature, the Governor, and the public with greater specificity than what we've received 19 in that memo what specific steps the Department plans to take or has taken to implement these 20 recommendations, including with timetables, where appropriate. So we firmly believe that there is a 21 public interest in knowing exactly what steps are being implemented, we've called on the Department to 22 provide that information periodically. You know, it's not our view that this is a this is not a one-time fix, 23 make some changes to policy and then this is all finished. This will be an ongoing process to reform the 24 culture that we've described in this report. And we anticipate continued reporting. Or we hope and we 25 believe that the Department has committed to continual reporting on the steps that it's taking to 26 implement these recommendations and fix the culture described in this report.

27

28 Sen. Lee

29 Well, in Justice Boatright's letter accompanying your report, he said, the Judicial Branch has already 30 made substantial improvements over the last year. Do you know what those substantial improvements 31 are? With specificity?

32

33 Nick Mitchell

34 May I?

35

36 Sen. Lee

37 Sure. Mr. Mitchell.

38

39

40

1 Nick Mitchell

2 Thank you. Being sensitive to the issue that Bob has come across here. We learned during the 3 investigation about certain internal changes that had been made by the Department. For example, in 4 many of our interviews, interviewees talked about the significant gap, the divide between Justices of the 5 Supreme Court and administrative personnel in the SCAO that existed at the time of the events in 6 question. That the Court was not generally aware that the SCAO sort of administered itself, if you will, 7 and Justices of the Court, we're not aware of these cultural issues that we describe in this report. We 8 were told many, many times in our interviews that the Justices of the Supreme Court now serve on 9 administrative committees and have much more frequent contact with employees in the SCAO so that 10 when these issues arise, they can be addressed by members of the Court, we learned about other changes 11 to the complaint process. For example, the creation, as we discussed in the report, the creation of an 12 online complaints portal that employees can use to provide notifications, or file complaints of sexual 13 harassment or other misconduct, which was a change, an innovation if you will, after the events in 14 question. We still had substantial questions about the efficacy of that system. So, when I said before that 15 some of the recommendations had been implemented in part, that one related to the complaint process 16 probably has been implemented, in part with certain internal changes, including that new complaints 17 portal, but not in whole. So, I think there are, we learned about some steps that have been taken. But we 18 still have lots of questions about what specific plans the department has to implement the balance of our 19 recommendations.

20

21 Sen. Lee

22 Mr. Troyer.

23

24 Robert Troyer

25 Thank you, Mr. Chair, just a quick addition to that. One of those recommendations that Mr. Mitchell 26 was describing that we're not sure the status of that I think is, is essential, and it's around the edges of a 27 bunch of questions that have been asked this afternoon. And that is the creation of an ethics officer 28 position. The creation of that position and creation and definition of that position in a way that that 29 person is truly independent, reporting directly to someone so that that person doesn't fear retaliation, that 30 ethics officer doesn't fear, retaliation or undue influence, that can be a person that somebody in this 31 circumstance, somebody like Terri Morrison, or the lawyers who drafted the contract, or anyone below 32 Eric Brown, who was concerned could go to and pull the alarm. So that's an essential one, we don't 33 know the status of. On the bright side, one, just supplement to what Mr. Mitchell said that occurred to 34 me. Obviously, we've talked a little bit about the complete mishandling in May 2017, of the Supreme 35 Court administrator's selection process. My understanding is that that has been changed. And in a very 36 thorough, careful, laudable way, was determined collaboratively by the Justices. How we're going to 37 pick Chris Ryan's replacement. How they went about it in terms of townhall meetings, in terms of 38 actually asking the person they selected and really drilling down on qualifications and preparedness to 39 fulfill that role. That process came out in a number of our interviews and really sounded to us like a gold 40 standard process that certainly would have avoided the problems that happened in May 2017. And now

1 has been, it's our understanding, has been codified, so to speak. So, there are some things like that, that 2 we don't have full access to it. But we understand some things have been done. The one that I remain 3 concerned about, simply because I don't know, is that ethics officer position. I think really is important.

4

5 Sen. Lee

6 And I realized all of that is somewhat outside the scope of your engagement. But I know you've been 7 deeply involved with the Department over the last months and months. So, I just thought you might 8 know what of the recommendations. I echo the comments of a prior colleague who expressed great 9 appreciation, I forget who said that, for the recommendations. I think they were right on. And I think 10 they would be a path towards reformation and bringing the Department into the maybe the 20th century, 11 they got a ways to go to get to the 21st. But I think your recommendations will be most helpful 12 guidelines. So, thanks for that. Any further comments? Senator Gonzales.

13

14 Sen. Gonzales

15 Thank you, Mr Chair. I am curious. If you all have any insight as to how to proceed. We've been talking 16 over the course of today and also during our last meeting, about trying to think through sort of victim 17 centered processes for repairing harm, or whether victim centered approaches for accountability in these 18 types of issues of misconduct. You both have spoken to, while this report is focused on sort of 19 procurement and this contract and the misconduct surrounding that aspect. I'm just curious if you all 20 have any insights into this potential victim centered approach in terms of the recommendations that 21 you've offered in terms of a portal or a mechanism to submit complaints, just given your expertise and 22 the and the work that you both have engaged in, if you have any thoughts on that question.

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 Mr Mitchell.

26

27 Nick Mitchell

28 Well, my first thought is that I appreciate the question and the focus on protecting potential victims. I 29 would say that any system for receiving complaints and investigating allegations of misconduct has to 30 balance multiple competing interests. You have the rights and the needs of potential complainants and 31 potential victims. You have employment laws that govern how complaints, how employment 32 complaints, need to be handled under state law, you have due process rights of persons who are accused 33 of misconduct. And, so, for a system to be functional, all of those kind of issues need to be addressed in 34 the architecture and the structure of the system, and none of them excludes the other. You can have a 35 system that is focused on victims while also maintaining due process protections for people who are 36 accused of misconduct. You can do that. I don't know that there's an easy way to do it. I think I would 37 suggest, if you haven't had testimony from people who've experienced misconduct in the department or 38 have attempted to file complaints, or have feared retaliation or faced retaliation, they might be sources of 39 insight and information into what might have made them more comfortable coming forward, or how 40 would they have felt safe if they didn't feel safe before, what could have been done by the institution to

1 help them feel safe in coming forward? Sometimes people who have actually had the lived experience 2 have, you know, a great deal of insight into how, into what fixes are necessary. So, I might make that as 3 a process suggestion. If you haven't had that testimony yet, it might be very productive.

4

5 Sen. Gonzales

6 Thank you.

7

8 Rep. Carver

9 All done, Senator, any other questions?

10

11 Sen. Lee

12 Seeing no other questions. I guess the final comment I would like to make is one of you made a 13 comment about the light of day being the best disinfectant. Maybe the silver lining that we can take out 14 of this is that all of this nonfeasance, misfeasance, malfeasance that's gone on in that department has 15 been exposed to everyone, and that there now is motivation and incentive to fix it. I think there's a 16 recognition that it can't go on the way it has gone on. So, from that standpoint, it's worthwhile to have 17 the report and your investigation has contributed to that disinfecting process. So, thanks very much from 18 the committee and the people of Colorado for doing it.

19

20 Nick Mitchell

21 Thank you very much.

22

23 Robert Troyer

24 Thank you.

Appendix 27(s)(ii)(7)

Logistics and Next Steps;

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline— July 12, 2022 Hearing: Logistics and Next Steps

1 Sen. Lee

2 Sure. Okay, that concludes our substantive presentations. The agenda says logistics and next steps. Ms.
3 Jenson, what are our logistics and next steps?

4

5 Juliann Jenson

6 I put that on there in case you wanted to discuss the next meeting and your expectations.

7

8 Sen. Lee

9 Okay, very good. I'll take the lead on that. First, any of the committee members, if you have people that 10 you think we should invite to testify to this committee, to inform these proceedings, get a hold of the 11 Vice Chair or myself. And tell us who they are and why you think they'd be helpful to the committee. I 12 think experts can help inform our discussions. We also want to get input from bar associations and other 13 affiliated lawyers per the mandate in Senate Bill 201. So, to the extent that you have contacts with any 14 of those folks, tell them to submit their information to us in writing, and we will look forward to their 15 testimony. If they want to testify live, they can get a hold of Ms. Jenson to make that happen. Madam 16 Vice Chair.

17

18 Rep. Carver

19 Thank you, Mr. Chair. And just to follow up on that point and for reminder and clarification. We do 20 have August 10 to hear input from all of you on the ILG report. But also, we would invite all of those 21 interested in the committee's work to look at documents that are filed on the website. The Commission 22 has recommendations, whatever discussion that comes out of looking at the recommendations by 23 Judicial and the Commission. Our hope is that will be filed with the committee by the first. We also very 24 much want, now that the ILG report has come out for, the CBA and the bar sections and the affinity bars 25 and others, to read that report. Look again at the areas spelled out in 201, and where possible, get us 26 your written comments by August 1. August 17 is when this committee has to be in a position to put 27 forward requests for bills to be drafted covering our work in these 18 areas. So, to the maximum extent 28 possible, when you're testifying on the 10th, if you intend to do so, that is your opportunity to look at 29 everything that has been submitted by other stakeholders in response to ILG or anybody else on 30 proposed changes. What needs to be changed, what needs to be put in the request for legislation on the 31 17th. And so, I appreciate the Chair's indulgence in letting me go into that a little bit deeper. But we are 32 on a very, very compressed timeline, and so we appreciate all of the participation and input of 33 everybody we've heard from and that we expect to hear from and value your input. Thank you.

34

35 Sen. Lee

36 Any comments from the committee? Okay? Thank you, Madam Vice Chair.

Appendix 27(s)(ii)(8)

Public Testimony (Afternoon) and Adjournment;

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline—
July 12, 2022 Hearing:
Afternoon Public Testimony and Adjournment

1 Sen. Lee

2 Next on our agenda is public testimony. I believe we have some people signed up and ready to present.
3 Is there anyone in the chamber who would like to present? If so, please come forward. Come on up.
4 Have you signed up perchance?

5

6 Marty Powers

7 I have not. I was listening at my computer this morning, and then I came in for the afternoon.

8

9 Sen. Lee

10 Okay, there should be a sign-up sheet in the back of the room do it on the way out the door.

11

12 Marty Powers

13 Perfect. Thanks.

14

15 Sen. Lee

16 So, thank you for being here. Thanks for paying attention to our committee. And the protocol is just to 17 identify yourself and tell us any organization that you may represent and provide us with your 18 testimony. You'll have three minutes to tell us what you think we need to know, and the lights will go 19 green to start you, yellow when I think 30 seconds, and red when you've reached your time limit.
20 Obviously, you can finish the sentence, but please adhere to that schedule, if you would, And there may 21 be questions, so don't run off after you've spoken. Thank you.

22

23 Marty Powers

24 Okay, I have a gray button?

25

26 Sen. Lee

27 It's on the microphone.

28

29 Marty Powers

30 Okay, I got it. Okay. Thank you for the opportunity to speak. My name is Marty Powers. I had an 31 opportunity to speak at the conservatorship and guardian issues that you guys were discussing in a 32 different committee with Ms. Ransom and her bill, and a little unfortunate that that has not progressed in 33 terms of just notification process. My name is Marty Powers, I'm just a person that has been in the 34 probate process for six years, being destroyed by the judges and by the Attorney Regulatory Counsel 35 and by the elder law community. And, so, it's good timing in the sense that yesterday, I filed a 26

1 approximately $26 million claim against the Attorney Regulatory Counsel and the Supreme Court and 2 the 18th Judicial District, the Denver probate court, and some other organizations relating to the justice
3 malfeasance and the malfeasance of the Attorney Regulatory Counsel. Briefly, my case resulted in a 4 conspiracy and long story short, back in 2016 11,500 documents were not shared with me by the 5 personal representative and the elder law attorneys during the course of the proceedings. I did not know 6 this at the time, but one of the attorneys for my sister was a member of the Attorney Regulatory Counsel 7 Committee for judicial review, not judicial review, but attorney review. I did not find that out until six 8 years later, January of this year, and that was the basis of this claim. So, there's approximately, and I'll 9 leave a copy with Ms. Jenson. I believe that's who the person would take this for you if you want to 10 review. But, over the course of six years, there's about 30 attorneys, three Assistant Attorneys General 11 came on to the case. I think there's list of 45 attorneys, 20 administrators. My father's estate was worth 12 $300,000. He had real estate worth 4 million. They ran up a $3 million bill and legal fees. I had a 13 $500,00-600,000 bill. I've had to go pro se for the last two years because I don't have any more money.
14 There's a million and a half dollars sitting in our account. The judge won't release it because, for the last 15 four years, we've been on a fees hearing for a corrupt personal representative who's also the deputy 16 probate officer for Denver County. They interfered with another judicial. They did, I believe jury 17 tampering on another case of mine, and so what I'm what I'm here today, is not to discuss my case, but I 18 have thought a lot about the opportunities of what to do. And there's a PPP program that you could do 19 where you institute financial, the court records, all the activities that are associated with the probate 20 process and the judicial review process. And you make it a statistical machine, or everything in the 21 background. So, like the NFL, when you watch the NFL and football, they have all the statistics. You do 22 the same thing with the court system is that you have who has been in front of who? How all these 23 attorneys interact because the probate system and the elder law is so corrupt that they're all. It's basically 24 one team. And I know personally my attorneys are conspiring or coordinating with the personal 25 representative and the opposite attorneys.

26

27 Sen. Lee

28 Could you wrap it up Sir?

29

30 Marty Powers

31 Sure. So, I'll give you this document. My information is on it. I'd be happy to discuss it with any of you 32 in the terms of the greater aspects of it. And I do have ideas and concepts that I think would be 33 beneficial to your programs. And once you see this, I mean it addresses. Oh, one last comment, someone 34 made the comment about the light of day, you know, putting light to splash on the judicial system. They 35 are, they are not afraid of the light. They are stealing in the open. So, if I had a way to fix this, I would 36 walk this up to the Governor and tell him to pay this and then the next time it happens that it's coming 37 out of the judicial or the pensions or the or their paychecks, because this type of corruption must be 38 stopped. But I appreciate your time. Thank you.

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Sure. Thanks for testifying. Who's next?

3

4 David Wells

5 Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My name is David Wells. I'm self employed. I'm part of the judicial system, 6 the corrupt probate system. I have a power of attorney that was contested in the criminal courts. We 7 found that power of attorney to be validated in the criminal courts, and also in a different court in 8 Jefferson County. The probate system has completely wiped out $5 million of assets in the last four 9 years. They completely wiped away the power of attorney and the trust, as Greg, my brother, we are the 10 trustees of the estate. So every time we come on up. We, you know, we get a little bit of money, and we 11 say, Okay, we're going to hire Steinberg. We're going to hire these guys. Well, we get it, we get an order 12 from the judge, okay, we can move Sharon Wells to a different facility, or we can move her out of state.
13 And then once we get into a different state or judicial process, the Bar Association, which should run 14 this office, the Bar Association should not run this office. Come up with an idea the run us out of 15 money, and where you don't have enough assets to save my mother. So, basically, this is about saving 16 the assets of my mother and putting her into a different place. And then when we come and make a 17 complaint to the ARC or, you know, Attorney Regulatory Commission, it turns out that they're in bed 18 with the probate system. So we, even if we do, even if we get into the Court of Appeals, which we've 19 done constantly, into the Court of Appeals, they believe the probate system. The probate system, is 20 corrupt and it's not good for. We have four children willing to take care of our mother, take her to 21 California, live at her own property. They decide, no, we'd rather sell. We'd rather spend $150,000 a 22 year, not including the care of her. The last thing they ever mentioned is the care of Sharon Wells, or the 23 best interest of Sharon Wells. We're here for the best interest of the ward. Now, she's a ward of the State, 24 and we can't even get any progress. And it seems like the corruption runs on down from the ARC, to the 25 judge, to Colorado state Court of Appeals. Thank you very much your time, Mr. Chairman. My name is 26 David Wells, if you have any questions, I'll be available here.

27

28 Sen. Lee

29 Okay, thank you, sir. Again, you need to sign up so we can get your information.

30

31 David Wells

32 Thank you.

33

34 Sen. Lee

35 Sure.

36

37 Gregory Wells

38 Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Same stories, these guys. I'm not a lawyer. My family.

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 Please state your name.

3

4 Gregory Wells

5 Gregory Wells, Denver, Colorado. I have my own business, an auto bass company. I have the same 6 stories these guys. My mom was kidnapped in the middle of the night. No due process was handled 7 towards our case. We proved our case. They called it frivolous power of attorney and trust and will, and 8 they proceeded not to follow the criminal case. Instead, went and afforded Marcy McCormick and her 9 office proceeded become conservators over my mother's estate and domestic terrorism is what I call it.
10 We get terrorized every day by hate mail, threatening letters of bodily harm to my family, my family 11 members. I have proof of it in paperwork. Just I want to see that it starts with the Governor. The 12 Governor appoints the Supreme Court Justice. The Supreme Court Justice appoints the public 13 administrator and the judge that is on this case. And, we're just trying to fight for truth, justice, and the 14 American way. Sorry, I'm just winging it here. Usually I have something written down. I had something 15 written down for the state representatives. Phil something I forget. But anyways, all I would like to see 16 is some action taking care of the way this system and the corrupt system has been portrayed. We have 17 been on the news four or five times. We do have a show Wednesday nights. And if I could sum it up so 18 you could wrap your head around it, you watch the movie, "I Care a Lot," and that's how you could wrap 19 your head around it and see how everybody's in bed with everybody else. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

20

21 Sen. Lee

22 Thank you for your testimony. So, let me just say that, you know, the mission of this committee today is 23 to look into Colorado's judicial discipline system. It's a system that's in place that has specific powers to 24 address certain forms of misconduct by judges. It doesn't deal with lawyers the way OARC does. The 25 Office Attorney Regulation Counsel is the body that deals with misconduct by lawyers. So, I'm not sure 26 that, you're certainly welcome, and we appreciate you sharing your stories. And, as senators and 27 representatives, we want to know the issues being faced by members of the community. I'm not sure that 28 we're the forum that is just and appropriate to provide any redress.

29

30 David Wells

31 To that point is that the problem is the familiarity. And one of the people brought it up in the beginning, 32 is the conspiracy of silence. The woman said earlier, is that everyone knows each other in this state, if 33 you. It is almost impossible to get an attorney because you have so many conflicts of interest. So, one of 34 the concepts that I thought on the way down here is that if you co-op this process to four states, let's just 35 say the four corner states and judicial review was the same for all four states. You could have people in 36 Utah or New Mexico that would handle a Colorado case, because then there's not a bias. It is extremely 37 difficult to find an unbiased situation, because they all know each other. They all socialize with each 38 other. And so a concept is to regulate it on a co-op basis, if you will, of multiple states, so that the 39 review process isn't done by people in your own backyard.

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 I get it. Okay. Thank you, gentlemen.

3

4 David Wells

5 If I could go one more, the judge my case, Elizabeth Dembard Leith, she acts as judge, jury and 6 prosecution. No jury trial, no witnesses, a closed door ceremony, and then she acts as if that. I asked her 7 about the Constitution, I read the Constitution to her, and she says, we don't recognize that book in our, 8 in this courtroom. I said, Well, that's capital felony treason. And she and she goes, well, not in this court.
9 And I said, Do you have an oath of office? You're here to defend this Constitution, foreign and 10 domestically, against all enemies.

11

12 Sen. Lee

13 Thank you. Mr. Wells.

14

15 David Wells

16 You're welcome. Case in point when we . . .

17

18 Sen. Lee

19 I'm sorry, gentlemen.

20

21 David Wells

22 Thank you very much.

23

24 Sen. Lee

25 We've given you the opportunity and testimony, and I can't let it keep going on. So, thanks very much.

26

27 David Wells

28 Thank you for your time. Mr. Chairman,

29

30 Marty Powers

31 Thank you.

32

33 Sen. Lee

34 Who's up on the screen? Jerry? Is that Jerry Greene?

35

36 Jerry Greene

37 Hello, yes it is. Can you hear me?

38

39

40

1 Sen. Lee

2 We can hear you. Welcome to the Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline. You'll have three minutes 3 to present your testimony, and please give us your name and any affiliation. Go right ahead, sir.

4

5 Jerry Greene

6 Jerry Greene, I have no affiliation. I've had a lot of experience with dealing with the officials of 7 judiciary. So recently, I filed a judicial discipline complaint about a Denver District Judge making false 8 statements in her order and taking six months to rule on an issue that could have been decided in 20 9 minutes. I filed this to Chris Gregory, and he, of course, dismissed it, and the only statement he made 10 was actually false. So, I requested to the discipline commission to have a hearing, you know, no more 11 than say 40 minutes where I can address both the false statement by Chris Gregory and the false 12 statements by the Denver District Judge, and they haven't replied to that request. I've also contacted the 13 Office of Brian Boatright, and he said he has no authority over that. So, that's the Chief Justice of the 14 Colorado Supreme Court, who's the Supreme Court Chair of the judicial discipline commission, who's 15 pledged to your general assembly that he's going to do what he can to increase transparency and 16 accountability. Who's refusing to comment or refusing to take any action. So, what I would like is a 17 hearing before the judicial discipline commission to address the false statements by both their Director 18 and the Judge in question. That's my request.

19

20 Rep. Carver

21 Thank you for your testimony. Any questions? Thank you so much for giving us your input. We 22 appreciate it.

23

24 Jerry Greene

25 So, who on your committee would be interested in advocating for me to actually have a hearing before 26 the discipline commission, in line with the pledges of Brian Boatright for more transparency and 27 accountability?

28

29 Rep. Carver

30 Sir, that would not be within the scope of the Interim Committee. We're looking at the different parts of 31 the judicial discipline system, but not specific ongoing cases or disputes.

32

33 Jerry Greene

34 So, does it concern you that the discipline commission won't allow me a hearing? And apparently, 35 would not allow anyone with a hearing?

36

37 Rep. Carver

38 We are not chartered to intervene in active, ongoing cases. That's not within the scope of the Interim 39 Committee. We're looking at what possible changes in the law may be necessary with regards to the 40 judicial discipline system, but not individual cases.

1 Jerry Greene

2 So, if Chris Gregory won't comment, or the only comment he's made is a false statement, and Brian 3 Boatr likewise won't comment, what's my avenue? What do you think my Avenue should be?

4

5 Rep. Carver

6 Sir, I don't know that. Sir, your time is up, and we don't have any further Q and A, as I've described.

7 Your specific dispute is not something that is within the scope of the committee. Thank you so much for 8 your testimony. Next witness. Next witness. Any more witness? Witnesses online, anybody else in the 9 committee room that wishes to testify? Then, subject to any additional comments by the Chair. First of 10 all, any comments by members of the committee? I think we have covered logistics and next steps. So, 11 with that, the committee is adjourned. Unless Mr. Chair has anything further.

12

13 Sen. Lee

14 Are there any other witnesses?

15

16 Rep. Carver

17 No.

18

19 Sen. Lee

20 Okay, we're done.

21

22 Rep. Carver

23 Committee is adjourned. Thank you.

Judicial Conduct Commissions

Introduction

The establishment of judicial conduct commissions (JCC) was to maintain and restore public confidence in the integrity, independence, and impartiality of their judiciary. Beginning in 1960, California became the first state to establish such an organization. Now all fifty states have some form of a JCC. They have different names in different states, such as commission, board, council, court, or committee. For a broad overview and historical comparison, please see Cynthia Gray's work entitled How Judicial Conduct Commissions Work from 2007. Her work, although dated now, covered JCC membership, grounds for discipline, bifurcated systems, and supreme court review. Table 1 from Cynthia Gray's work provides the authority in each state to establish a JCC. For links to each States' JCC, please see here. The American Bar Association has published their 2018 Model Rules for Judicial Disciplinary Enforcement, which covers JCC organization and authority.

JCC Membership

Although the composition of JCCs are unique in each state, there are some commonalities. The National Center for State Courts continues to track the membership of state JCCs with their most recent chart being revised August 2019. Most states have term limits between 3 and 6 years. Many include members such as judges, attorneys, justices of the peace, public members, or clerks of court. Many states choose to further break down the membership of judges by the type of court they are in. For example, Tennessee requires 2 trial judges, 1 general sessions court judge, 1 municipal court judge, 1 juvenile court judge, 1 court of appeals or court of criminal appeals judge, and 2 additional judges.

Available Sanctions

Depending on the conduct being disciplined, JCCs use plethora of private and public disciplinary sanctions. NCSL has continued to track this information most recently in their 2019 document, Available Sanctions in Judicial Discipline Proceedings. When making public disciplinary sanctions, JCCs will either be subject to supreme court review for their actions or be limited to making recommendations for public sanctions to the supreme court to approve or deny.

Confidentiality

Confidentiality of the work JCCs oversee has continued to be a discussion of debate. For example, in Robert Tembeckjian’s 2007 work Judicial Disciplinary Hearings Should Be Open, he argued “citizens have a right to know when a judge’s integrity has been seriously questioned, and opening the process to public scrutiny would help to ensure that the process is and appears to be honest, which is a special concern whenever a profession polices itself.” As of 2007, thirty-five states had already adopted sunshine laws or rules regarding formal judicial disciplinary hearings. Table 1 from Robert’s work provides when confidentiality ceases.

Colorado needs judicial reform. Support The Judicial Integrity Project.

Published by The Judicial Integrity Project on 28th Jul 2017

Colorado's judicial branch lacks accountability and transparency. It is filled with conflicts of interest.

Colorado's Commission on Judicial Discipline dismisses 97% of complaints against judges. The rate is so incredibly high because Colorado's Supreme Court writes the rules for the commission, and the executive director of the commission reports to the Supreme Court. The proceedings before the commission are confidential. Proceedings before a commission that disciplines judges should be public in Colorado like they are in 35 other states.

Voters receive insufficient information about judges. The commissions on judicial performance that make recommendations to voters about judges don't know whether the judges they're recommending have been disciplined. The commissions have no investigative power and do not receive background checks on the judges. The commissions are not required to hold public hearings. And judges do not receive annual reviews by the commissions. The infrequency of reviews and the commissions' lack of information ultimately turns into the public's lack of information regarding judges.

We, the undersigned, call on the Colorado government to make the judicial branch more transparent and accountable. We demand that conflicts of interest in the judicial branch be removed.

Judges are public servants. The public has the right to know about proceedings regarding the discipline of judges. Judicial discipline proceedings must be public. Judges should not write the rules for the judicial discipline commission. The executive director of the judicial discipline commission should not report to a judge.

Voters need more information about judges. Background checks of judges should regularly be performed and include motor vehicle histories, criminal histories and a review of the financial disclosures filed by a judge. No rules should be made limiting the information a judicial performance commission can receive about a judge. Performance commission members should be free to vote their conscience. Performance commissions should hold public hearings where the public can comment about a judge. Reviews of judges should be more frequent and made public at the time the review is complete. The state performance commission, which makes the rules for all performance commissions to follow, should be representational and include one member of each judicial district.

We support the efforts of The Judicial Integrity Project to increase transparency, enhance accountability and remove the conflicts of interest in the judicial branch. Colorado needs judicial reform.

IF SUCH CHIEF JUDGE IS THE SUBJECT OF A COMPLAINT FILED WITH THE COMMISSION, OR BELIEVES HE OR SHE MUST RECUSE FROM THE CASE, THEN THE CHIEF JUDGE OF THE NEXT JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN THE NUMERICAL SEQUENCE SHALL SERVE AS THE CONSULTANT ON SUCH COMPLAINT.

(b) Each VOTING member shall be appointed to a four-year term; except that one-half of the initial membership in each category shall be appointed to two-year terms, for the purpose of staggering terms. Whenever a commission membership prematurely terminates or a member no longer possesses the specific qualifications for the category from which he was selected, his position shall be deemed vacant, and his successor shall be appointed in the same manner as the original appointment for the remainder of his term. A member shall be deemed to have resigned if that member is absent from three consecutive commission meetings without the commission having entered an approval for additional absences upon its minutes. If any member of the commission is disqualified to act in any matter pending before the commission, the commission may appoint a special member to sit on the commission solely for the purpose of deciding that matter. THE NON-VOTING, CONSULTING CHIEF JUDGE OF A DISTRICT COURT SHALL SERVE A ONE-YEAR TERM.

(c) No member of the commission shall receive any compensation for his services but shall be allowed his necessary expenses for travel, board, and lodging and any other expenses incurred in the performance of his duties, to be paid by the supreme court from its budget to be appropriated by the general assembly.

(d) A justice or judge of any court of record of this state, in accordance with the procedure set forth in this subsection (3), may be removed or disciplined for ~~willful~~ misconduct in office, ~~willful or persistent~~ failure to perform his duties, intemperance, or ANY violation of ~~any canon~~ of the Colorado code of judicial conduct, or he OR SHE may be retired for disability interfering with the performance of his OR HER duties which is, or is likely to become, of a permanent character.

The commission may also recommend that the costs of its investigation and hearing be assessed against such justice or judge.

(f) ~~Following receipt of a recommendation from the commission,~~ ANY JUDGE WHO HAS RECEIVED AN ORDER OF REMOVAL, RETIREMENT, SUSPENSION, CENSURE, REPRIMAND, OR DISCIPLINE FROM THE COMMISSION MAY APPEAL THE ORDER TO THE SUPREME COURT. THE ~~the~~ supreme court shall review the record of the proceedings on the law and facts and in its discretion may permit the introduction of additional evidence and shall order removal, retirement, suspension, censure, reprimand, or discipline, as it finds just and proper, or IF THE ORDER OF THE COMMISSION IS NOT SUPPORTED BY THE LAW OR BY SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE, ~~wholly reject~~ REVERSE the recommendation AND DISMISS THE MATTER OR IMPOSE DISCIPLINE IT DEEMS MORE APPROPRIATE. Upon an order for retirement, the justice or judge shall thereby be retired with the same rights and privileges as if he retired pursuant to statute. Upon an order for removal, the justice or judge shall thereby be removed from office, and his salary shall cease from the date of such order. On the entry of an order for retirement or for removal of a judge, his office shall be deemed vacant.

(g) ~~Prior to the filing of a recommendation to the supreme court by the commission against any justice or judge,~~ all ALL papers filed with and proceedings before the commission on judicial discipline ~~or masters appointed by the supreme court,~~ pursuant to this subsection (3), shall be ~~confidential~~ PUBLIC UNLESS, AT THE REQUEST OF THE COMPLAINANT, THE COMPLAINANT WANTS HIS OR HER NAME TO NOT BE DISCLOSED. (L) THE BUDGET OF THE COMMISSION SHALL BE PUBLIC AND SHALL BE SEPARATE FROM THE BUDGET OF ANY OTHER STATE AGENCY OR COURT.

(M) THE COMMISSION SHALL MAINTAIN AN OFFICE TO SUPPORT THE EXERCISE OF ITS DUTIES. THE OFFICE MAY INCLUDE INVESTIGATORS, ATTORNEYS, AND OTHER SUPPORT STAFF NECESSARY TO RECEIVE AND INVESTIGATE COMPLAINTS FILED AGAINST JUDGES.

(N) THE COMMISSION MUST REVIEW ALL COMPLAINTS FILED AND VOTE ON WHETHER TO PROCEED ON ANY COMPLAINT. THE COMMISSION MAY NOT DELEGATE ITS DECISION MAKING ON ANY COMPLAINT TO A STAFF MEMBER.

(O) THE CODE OF JUDICIAL CONDUCT MAY NOT BE AMENDED BY THE SUPREME COURT WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF THE SENATE.

In the Colorado Revised Statutes, REPEAL section 24-72-401 as follows:

Anonymous complaints to judicial conduct commissions

July 2022

Most judicial conduct commissions have the authority to initiate a complaint on their “own motion.” For example, Rule 12 of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline provides: “The commission on its own motion may initiate a complaint against a judge.” Commissions interpret that provision to allow them to investigate anonymous complaints.

In addition, some states have rules, policies, or internal operating procedures that specifically address anonymous complaints. Those provisions are copied below.

Arkansas

Rule 8A

<https://www.jddc.arkansas.gov/wp-content/uploads/2020/05/Rule-8.-Procedures-Of-Commission-Regarding-Conduct-Of-A-Judge.pdf>

A. Initiation of Inquiry. In accordance with these rules, any sworn or verified complaint brought to the attention of the Commission stating facts that, if true, would be grounds for discipline, shall be good cause to initiate an inquiry relating to the conduct of a judge. The Commission on its own motion may make inquiry with respect to the conduct of a judge. All complaints shall bear the name of the complainant, unless anonymous or based upon media reports. If the complaint is anonymous or based upon a media report, it shall be signed by the Executive Director, but not sworn. If the Executive Director, an individual staff member, Commissioner member or Alternate files, solicits, or initiates a complaint, he or she shall sign the sworn complaint. All contacts with potential witnesses shall be in accordance with these Rules.

Operating procedure

<https://www.jddc.arkansas.gov/operating-procedure/>

When after initial investigation and inquiry it appears that there is sufficient cause to proceed, the complainant is asked to file a sworn complaint. If a sworn complaint is not received, the inquiry is regarded as closed unless the Executive Director determines that the matter nevertheless warrants Commission attention. A complaint may also be triggered by an anonymous contact, a media report, or a referral from another agency. The Commission does not accept oral complaints. If an individual comes to the Commission offices and needs assistance to file a complaint, appropriate assistance will be provided. The Commission reviews all the closed inquiries to insure that they have been properly handled by the staff.

1.1 Anonymous Complaints

Staff will evaluate anonymous complaints for merit; if a complaint is deemed sufficiently meritorious, it will be placed on the oversight agenda for consideration by the commission as to whether or not it should be docketed.

Rule 17, Comment [2]

The term “complaint” includes information received by telephone, news items, and any other source and includes complaints initiated by either the Director or the Investigative Panel or the Director on their own motions. See the definition of “Complaint” in the Terminology Section. The Director and the Investigative Panel may consider complaints submitted anonymously or confidentially in the same manner as other complaints in order to ensure that lawyers, court personnel, or litigants can bring misconduct and incapacity to the attention of the Commission without the fear of retaliation.

Terminology

Complaint means information in any form from any source received by the Investigative Panel that alleges or from which a reasonable inference can be drawn that a judge committed misconduct or is incapacitated. If there is no written complaint from another person, the Director’s written statement of the allegations constitutes the complaint.

(2) An anonymous complaint is a complaint submitted without a name and contact information. An anonymous complaint may not be the subject of a preliminary inquiry unless it states facts, not mere conclusions, that can be independently verified and the Chair authorizes a preliminary inquiry to be made. If the Chair declines to authorize a preliminary inquiry, the complaint is processed pursuant to the Commission’s internal rules.

RULE III. FORM OF COMPLAINTS AND SELF-REPORTED MISCONDUCT.

Complaints made to the Commission concerning the misconduct or disability of a judge shall be in writing, or reduced to writing, and shall specify the misconduct or disability complained of, and should be signed by the complainant. A judge may self-report potential misconduct, which may serve as mitigating evidence if the Commission later determines that conduct was unethical. If a judge chooses to self-report, to qualify as a “self-report” the information must (1) be communicated in writing, (2) specifically identify conduct that the judge suspects is potential misconduct, and (3) be sent to the Commission’s Chief Executive Officer, Commission Counsel, or Special Counsel.

The Commission, however, may consider alleged misconduct or disability of any judge from whatever source, including anonymous complaints and news reports, and may do so on its own motion.

F. Anonymous complaints

Following the docketing of an anonymous complaint pursuant to Rule 6(C)(2), the Executive Director shall not conduct any inquiry or investigation of it unless the Commission, upon the recommendation of the Executive Director, determines by majority vote that the allegations of the anonymous complaint would, if true, constitute misconduct or disability within the jurisdiction of the Commission, and the seriousness or the notoriety of the misconduct alleged outweighs the potential prejudicial effect of an investigation into the merits of the complaint. If the Commission does not make such a determination, the complaint shall be dismissed, and the Executive Director shall promptly notify the judge of both the complaint and its dismissal. If the Commission does make such a determination, except as provided in Rule 6(G), the Executive Director shall promptly notify the judge of the anonymous complaint in accordance with Rule 6(C)(3).

Similarly, if a matter has been reported in the media, that item may be circulated among the Commissioners, who may then place the item on the next agenda for discussion. OP 3.01 – OPENING A COMPLAINT

Except when acting on its own initiative or at the written request of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, or the State Court Administrator, the Board shall not initiate any preliminary inquiry or investigation without having first received a complaint. Use of the prescribed Confidential Request for Investigation (CRI) form is the preferred method of receiving complaints and allows for the prompt communication of facts relevant to the investigation. However, anonymous complaints shall not be barred. All complaints shall be entered into the case management system.

OP 3.02 – ANONYMOUS COMPLAINTS

Anonymous complaints in whatever form shall be entered into the case management system. All such anonymous complaints received must be presented to the Board at its next regularly scheduled meeting for review and approval in advance of either opening a file or initiating a preliminary inquiry or investigation. If the source of the anonymous complaint is known, such information shall be recorded by Chief Counsel for purposes of any ensuing preliminary inquiry or investigation as well as for advising the complainant of the ultimate disposition of the Board. If the Board approves the opening of a file based on an anonymous complaint, Chief Counsel will open a file and assign it to counsel, who will conduct a preliminary inquiry. If the preliminary inquiry reveals facts that corroborate the anonymous complaint, it will remain open and investigation will move forward in its normal course to final disposition by the Board. If the preliminary inquiry does not reveal facts that corroborate the anonymous complaint, the anonymous complaint will be presented to the Board for dismissal with a notation that the preliminary inquiry did not corroborate the complaint.

General. An investigative officer employed by the commission will conduct the investigation aided by disciplinary counsel if deemed appropriate by the commission.

Screening.

Any named or anonymous organization, association, or person, including a member of the commission or staff, may make a complaint of judicial misconduct or incapacity to the commission. A complaint may be made orally or in writing.

The investigative officer shall evaluate all complaints to determine whether:

The person against whom the allegations are made is a judge subject to the disciplinary authority of the commission; and either

The facts alleged, if true, would constitute misconduct or incapacity; or

The investigative officer has grounds to believe that upon further inquiry such facts might be discovered. If not, the investigative officer shall recommend to the commission to dismiss the matter or, if appropriate, refer the complainant to another agency.

DISCIPLINE SYSTEMS, July 12, 2022;

Bifurcated judicial discipline systems

Prepared by Cynthia Gray, Director
Center for Judicial Ethics, National Center for State Courts

<https://www.ncsc.org/cje>

July 2022

Judges frequently argue that state judicial discipline systems violate their constitutional due process rights if the commission both investigates and prosecutes complaints and makes the decisions. Based on the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Withrow v. Larkin, 421 U.S. 35 (1975), that argument has been rejected by every state supreme court that has considered it for over 50 years, including as recently as 2022. See, e.g., In re Hanson, 532 P.2d 303 (Alaska 1975); In the Matter of Flournoy, 990 P.2d 642 (Arizona 1999); Adams v. Commission on Judicial Performance, 897 P.2d 544 (California 1995); In re Zoarski, 632 A.2d 1114 (Connecticut 1993); In re Kelly, 238 So. 2d 565 (Florida 1970); In the Matter of Vaughn, 462 S.E.2d 728 (Georgia 1995); In the Matter of Holien, 612 N.W.2d 789 (Iowa 2000); In re Rome, 542 P.2d 676 (Kansas 1975); Allred v. Judicial Conduct Commission, 395 S.W.3d 417 (Kentucky 2012); In re Bowers, 721 So. 2d 875 (Louisiana 1998); In re Diener, 304 A.2d 587 (Maryland 1973); In re Morrow (Michigan Supreme Court January 13, 2022); Commission on Judicial Performance v. Russell, 691 So. 2d 929 (Mississippi 1997); In re Elliston, 789 S.W.2d 469 (Missouri 1990); Mosley v. Commission on Judicial Discipline, 22 P.3d 655 (Nevada 2001); Friedman v. State of New York, 249 N.E.2d 369 (New York 1969); In re Nowell, 237 S.E.2d 246 (North Carolina 1977); In re Schenck, 870 P.2d 185 (Oregon 1993); In re Pirraglia, 916 A.2d 746 (Rhode Island 2007); In re Brown, 512 S.W.2d 317 (Texas 1974); In re O'Dea, 622 A.2d 507 (Vermont 1993); In re Deming, 736 P.2d 639, as amended by 744 P.2d 340 (Washington 1987).

Although bifurcation of investigative and adjudicative functions is not required by due process, some states have adopted it as a matter of policy.

For purposes of this memorandum, a judicial discipline system is "bifurcated" if (1) the group that decides to investigate a complaint and to file formal charges has different members than (2) the group that makes findings of facts and conclusions of law and sanctions a judge or makes a recommendation to the state supreme court.

Judicial discipline systems may be bifurcated in a variety of ways. This memo divides the systems into 2 categories: 2-tiered states and 2-panel states. Even within a category, the method for bifurcation varies as described below.

2-tiered states. There are 8 two-tier states – Alabama, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia. In those states, complaints against judges are investigated by one body (the first tier), and that tier decides whether to file formal charges; the formal charges are heard by a second body that has a different membership (the second tier). The exact structures and procedures vary considerably from state-to-state among those 8 states.

2-panel states: 9 states – Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Kansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, and Wyoming – have bifurcated commission functions so that investigative and adjudicative roles are handled by different panels of the commission. This “2-panel” structure differs from the “2-tier” structure because members may play different roles in different cases depending on whether they are assigned to an investigative or an adjudicative panel for that case. The use of 2 panels is based on the American Bar Association Model Rules for Judicial Disciplinary Enforcement adopted in 1994, although no state has adopted the precise structure suggested by the model rules and each state’s system is different. The model rules propose a commission comprised of an equal number of judge, attorney, and public members (4 each), divided into a 3-member investigative panel and a 9-member hearing panel with rotating membership with an equal number of judge, attorney, and public members on each panel. Under the model rules, Disciplinary Counsel screens complaints, conducts preliminary investigations, and makes recommendations to the investigative panel. The investigative panel authorizes Disciplinary Counsel to conduct full investigations and file formal charges that are heard by the hearing panel, which makes a report and recommendation to the state supreme court.

- Note that, depending on the state, procedures may be different in cases in which the judge receives a private sanction, in which the judge consents to discipline, in which there are allegations of a disability, or in which the charges are against a supreme court justice.
- Note that in most states, there is also supreme court review so there are more than 2 levels.
- Note that the list does not include states in which the commission has a unitary structure, but the supreme court review may be de novo or allow for the admission of additional evidence, which could be considered a second level.
- Note that in some states, oversight of the investigation is delegated to one commission member (called a presenter in Colorado, for example) or a separate body (the Judicial Inquiry Board in Maryland, for example), but the decision whether to file formal proceedings and, subsequently, whether to sanction or recommend a sanction following a hearing remains with the entire commission and, therefore, the structure is not bifurcated as defined by this memo.
- Note that this list does not include states that bifurcate proceedings by having 1 or more masters, who are not members of the commission, appointed to conduct the hearing each time formal proceedings are commenced against a different judge; following the hearing, the masters file a report with the supreme court, and the commission and judge can file objections to the report with the court, which makes the final decision.
- Note that this list does not include several states where proceedings are bifurcated in some circumstances in a way that does not fit within any of the other categories or is similar to any other state.

2-tier states

Alabama

The Judicial Inquiry Commission has 9 members: 4 judges, 2 attorneys, and 3 public members. The Commission investigates complaints and, if “a reasonable basis exists,” files a formal complaint that is heard and decided by the Court of the Judiciary. The Court of the Judiciary has 9 members: 4 judges, 2 attorneys, 3 public members. Following a public hearing, the Court of the Judiciary may remove, suspend with or without pay, or censure a judge. Decisions of the Court of the Judiciary are final unless appealed to the Alabama Supreme Court, which “review[s] the record of the proceedings on the law and the facts.” Under its precedent, if the Supreme Court concludes that misconduct was proven by clear and convincing evidence, it will not change the sanction imposed by the Court of the Judiciary. The Judicial Inquiry Commission and the Court of the Judiciary were created by an amendment to the constitution in 1973.

Delaware

The Court on the Judiciary has 10 members, all judicial officers: the Chief Justice, the 4 other justices of the Supreme Court, the Chancellor, the President Judge of the Superior Court, the Chief Judge of the Family Court, the Chief Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Chief Magistrate of the Justice of the Peace Court. The Court on the Judiciary designates a Clerk, who reviews each complaint and provides the Chief Justice with those that comply with the rules. The Chief Justice, with the unanimous agreement of a panel of the Supreme Court, may dismiss any complaint that is frivolous, is not filed in good faith, is based on a litigant’s disagreement with the ruling of a judge, or is a matter subject to appellate review. If a complaint is not dismissed, the Chief Justice refers the complaint to a panel of the Preliminary Investigatory Committee. The Committee has 12 members who are appointed by the Chief Justice with the concurrence of a majority of the members of the Court. 8 members are attorneys, and 4 members are non-lawyers. The Chief Justice refers a complaint to a panel of 1, 2, or 3 members; if the panel has 2 or 3 members, at least 1 person must be a non-lawyer. If after a preliminary investigation the panel finds that there is probable cause to believe that the judicial officer may be subject to sanction or if the Chief Justice sua sponte determines that there is probable cause, the Court on the Judiciary appoints a Board of Examining Officers with 1 or more members who are active or retired judge. The Board issues a “show cause order why the judicial officer should not be sanctioned or retired” and appoints a presenting counsel who conducts an investigation and presents evidence on the formal charges at a non-public hearing. If the Board finds no misconduct, the matter is concluded, and the complaint is dismissed unless the Court on the Judiciary, sua sponte, requires further proceedings. If the Board finds misconduct or if the Court on the Judiciary requires further proceedings, the Court on the Judiciary designates an attorney to uphold the report or the Court’s determination to proceed sua sponte. The Court on the Judiciary holds a non-public hearing, takes evidence, and disposes of the case. The Court on the Judiciary may censure, remove, or retire a judge. All proceedings are confidential except a final order of removal or retirement. The Court on the Judiciary was created by the state constitution in 1979; the Preliminary Investigatory Committee and the Board of Examining Officers were created by rules adopted by the Court on the Judiciary.

Georgia

The Judicial Qualifications Commission has a 7-member investigative panel comprised of 2 judges, 3 attorneys, and 2 citizen members and a separate 3-member hearing panel that consists of 1 judge, 1 attorney, and 1 citizen member. If the Executive Director of the Commission determines that information in a complaint or from other sources would constitute judicial misconduct if true, the Director conducts a preliminary investigation and makes a recommendation to the investigative panel. The investigative panel may dismiss the complaint or authorize a full investigation by the Executive Director. After a full investigation, if the investigative panel finds that there is reasonable cause to believe the judge committed misconduct, it may, with the judge's consent, privately admonish the judge, implement a deferred discipline agreement or an agreement to resign or retire, direct the Director to dismiss the complaint, or direct the Director to file formal charges. If formal charges are filed, a public hearing is conducted by the hearing panel, and that panel decides whether to dismiss the charges or file a recommendation with the Supreme Court. The Court may accept, reject, or modify in whole or in part the findings and conclusions of the hearing panel, dismissing the case or reprimanding, censuring, suspending without pay, or removing the judge. The bifurcation was established by statute in 2017 after a constitutional amendment abolished the commission then in place and gave the legislature the authority to create a new commission.

Illinois

The Judicial Inquiry Board has 9 members: 2 judges, 3 attorneys, and 4 public members. The Board investigates complaints against judges and, if it determines a reasonable basis exists, files and prosecutes complaints with the Courts Commission. The Commission has 5 judge members (including a supreme court justice) and 2 citizen members. The Commission holds a public hearing on a complaint filed by the Board and has the authority to remove, suspend with or without pay, censure, or reprimand a judge. The decision of the Commission is final. The Board and the Commission were created by the state constitution in 1971.

Ohio

Grievances against judges can be filed with either the Disciplinary Counsel or Certified Grievance Committees organized by the state bar or local bar associations. If either Disciplinary Counsel or a committee determines that there is substantial credible evidence of misconduct by a judge, a draft formal complaint is presented to a probable cause panel of the Board of Professional Conduct. The Board has 28-members (7 judges, 17 attorneys, and 4 public members). The Board has 2 probable cause panels with 3 members each, designated by the chair. If the panel determines that there is probable cause, the formal complaint becomes public and is filed with the Board. Hearings are then conducted by a 3-member hearing panel of the Board selected at random. If the hearing panel finds a violation, it makes a recommendation to the Ohio Supreme Court, which makes the final decision regarding misconduct and issues the sanction. The same procedures are used for grievances against attorneys. The Board of Commissioners on Grievances and Discipline was established by court rule in 1957 and renamed the Board of Professional Conduct in 2014.

Oklahoma

The Council on Judicial Complaints has 3 members: 2 attorneys and 1 public member. If the Council finds that a complaint should be the subject of proceedings, the Council forwards its findings and all information to the Supreme Court, the Chief Justice, the governor, the attorney general, the board of directors of the Oklahoma Bar Association, or the House of Representatives. That person or entity, in its discretion, may file a petition invoking the jurisdiction of the Court on the Judiciary. The Court on the Judiciary has both a trial and an appellate division. The Trial Division has 9 members: 8 judges and 1 attorney. The Trial Division conducts a hearing on the petition. The Trial Division's judgement can be appealed by the judge or the prosecutor to the 9-member Appellate Division (8 judges and 1 attorney). The decision of the Appellate Division is final. The only sanctions available to the Court on the Judiciary are removal or permanent retirement. However, if the Council on Judicial Complaints finds evidence of misconduct that does not warrant removal or retirement, it may refer the matter to the Chief Justice who may forward the investigative report to the other members of the Supreme Court, and, after considering the complaint and judge's response, the Court may impose appropriate discipline. The Council was created by statute in 1974, following a scandal in the Oklahoma Supreme Court. Originally, the Council was an office within the judicial branch, but it became an executive branch agency in 1999.

Pennsylvania

The Judicial Conduct Board has 12 members: 3 judges, 3 attorneys, and 6 public members. If the Board finds probable cause, it files formal charges with the Court of Judicial Discipline. The Court of Judicial Discipline has 8 members: 4 judges, 2 attorneys, and 2 public members. The Court holds a public trial and renders a decision. The Court may dismiss the charges or reprimand the judge, suspend the judge with or without pay, or remove the judge from office. A judge may appeal a decision to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court; "on the law, the scope of review is plenary; on the facts, the scope of review is clearly erroneous; and, as to sanctions, the scope of review is whether the sanctions imposed were lawful." The Board may appeal the dismissal of charges to the Supreme Court, but the appeal is limited to questions of law. The Board and the Court of Judicial Discipline were created by an amendment to the state constitution in 1993, succeeding the Judicial Inquiry and Review Board.

West Virginia

The Judicial Investigation Commission has 9 members: 6 judges and 3 public members. Complaints filed with the Commission are referred to Judicial Disciplinary Counsel, who initially reviews each complaint and refers the matter to an investigator, asks the judge to respond, or sends it directly to the Commission for consideration. If the Commission determines that there is probable cause but that formal discipline is not appropriate, the Commission publicly admonishes the judge unless the judge timely objects. If the Commission determines that there is probable cause and formal discipline is appropriate or if the judge objects to the notice of public admonishment, the Commission files formal charges with the Judicial Hearing Board. The Board has 9 members: 6 judges and 3 public members. Following a public hearing, the Board files findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a recommended disposition with the Supreme Court of Appeals. The Court can admonish, reprimand, censure, suspend without pay for up to 1 year, fine up to $5,000, or involuntarily retire a judge. The Commission and the Board were created by court rule in 1976.

2-panel states

Arizona

The Commission on Judicial Conduct has 11 members: 6 judges, 2 attorneys, and 3 public members. After a preliminary investigation, a 3-member investigative panel appointed by the chair determines whether to conduct a full investigation; the panel is “whenever possible” comprised of 1 judge member of the Commission, 1 attorney member, and 1 public member. If the investigative panel authorizes formal charges after a full investigation, the public hearing is held before a hearing panel comprised of the 8 members of the Commission who were not on the investigative panel or before a hearing officer. The hearing panel can impose an informal sanction; recommend censure, which is final unless the judge or disciplinary counsel files a petition; or recommend other formal sanctions that are subject to review by the Arizona Supreme Court, by petition or on the Court’s own motion. The Commission was created by the state constitution in 1970; the bifurcation was accomplished by rule amendments adopted by the Court effective 2002.

Arkansas

The Commission on Judicial Discipline and Disability has 9 members: 3 judges, 3 attorneys, and 3 public members; each member also has an alternate. The Commission chair appoints 3 investigation panels from the 9 members and 9 alternates; each investigation panel has 1 judicial member, 1 attorney member, and 1 public member. All complaints that are not summarily dismissed by the executive director are presented to an investigation panel; the investigation panel dismisses a complaint or directs the staff to investigate. After an investigation, the investigation panel dismisses a complaint or directs the filing of a formal statement of allegations. The hearing on the formal charges is before a 9-member hearing panel comprised of the members of the Commission – 3 judges, 3 attorneys, and 3 public members – who did not serve on the investigation panel for the complaint. If the hearing panel finds misconduct, it may admonish the judge, direct professional treatment, counseling, or assistance, or impose conditions on the judge or recommend to the Arkansas Supreme Court that the judge be reprimanded, censured, suspended, or removed. The Commission was created by constitution in 1989; bifurcation was accomplished when the Court amended the Commission’s procedural rules in 2008.

Florida

The Judicial Qualifications Commission has 15 members: 6 judges, 4 attorneys, and 5 public members. Each year, Commission members are assigned to either a 9-member investigative panel (composed of 4 judges, 2 attorneys, and 3 public members) or a 6-member hearing panel (2 judges, 2 attorneys, and 2 public members). The investigative panel conducts investigations and then dismisses the complaint or submits formal charges to the hearing panel. The hearing panel holds a public hearing on the formal charges and makes a recommendation to the Florida

Supreme Court. The Commission was created in 1966 by the state constitution; the bifurcation was accomplished through a constitutional amendment effective in 1996.

Kansas

The Commission on Judicial Conduct has 14 members: 6 judges, 4 attorneys, and 4 public members. The Commission is divided into two 7-member panels (designated Panel A and Panel B), each consisting of 3 judges, 2 attorneys, and 2 public members. Complaints are assigned to either Panel A or Panel B for initial review and inquiry. Sitting as an inquiry panel, a panel may dismiss complaints, issue letters of caution or informal advice, issue a cease-and-desist order to a judge, or refer the complaint for formal proceedings. If one panel refers a complaint for formal proceedings, the other panel sits as the hearing panel. Following a public hearing, the hearing panel may terminate the proceedings, admonish the judge, issue a cease-and-desist order, or recommend that the Kansas Supreme Court censure, suspend, remove, or retire the judge. The Commission was created by Court rule in 1974; the bifurcation was accomplished by a court rule effective 1999.

North Carolina

The Judicial Standards Commission has 13 members: 5 judges, 4 attorneys, and 4 non-public members. The chair (who is the court of appeals member of the Commission) divides the members into two 6-member panels (designated Panel A and Panel B), each comprised of 2 judges, 2 attorneys, and 2 citizens. The panels meet in alternating months. The Commission chair chairs both panels. Complaints are assigned to either Panel A or Panel B for initial review and investigation. The assigned panel may dismiss the complaint or authorize a preliminary or formal investigation. After an investigation, the panel may dismiss a complaint, issue a private letter of caution, or file a statement of charges if it finds that there is probable cause to believe that the judge engaged in conduct that warrants public reprimand, censure, suspension, or removal. A non-public hearing is held before the panel that did not act as the investigation panel. After the hearing, the hearing panel can dismiss the charges (which may include a private letter of caution) or recommend that the North Carolina Supreme Court reprimand, censure, suspend, or remove the judge. The Court independently reviews whether the Commission's findings of fact are supported by clear and convincing evidence and whether the findings support the conclusions of law and exercises its independent judgment about the sanction. The Commission was created by statute in 1973; bifurcation was accomplished by rules adopted by the Commission in 2007. In 2013, the statute was amended to make all proceedings confidential unless and until the Supreme Court publicly sanctions, suspends, or removes the judge; prior to that amendment, hearings on statements of charges were public.

South Carolina

The Commission on Judicial Conduct has 26 members: 14 judges, 4 attorneys, and 8 public members. The chair divides members (other than the chair, the vice chair, and the public members) into 4 panels with 6 members each (3 judges, 1 attorney, 2 public members). The chair designates whether a panel will serve as an investigative panel or a hearing panel; if the panel is assigned to serve as an investigative panel, the chair adds either the chair or the vice chair to increase its membership to 7. Disciplinary Counsel screens complaints. After an investigation, if Disciplinary Counsel believes there is evidence supporting the allegations against a judge, Disciplinary Counsel may propose an agreement for discipline by consent to the judge; recommend to an investigative panel that the matter be concluded with a letter of caution or a confidential admonition; or recommend to an investigative panel that formal charges be filed. If the investigative panel directs Disciplinary Counsel to file formal charges, a public hearing is held before a panel designated as a hearing panel. The hearing panel submits a report to the South Carolina Supreme Court, which can accept, reject, or modify in whole or in part the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of the hearing panel and dismiss the case, issue a letter of caution, publicly reprimand or admonish a judge, or remove or suspend a judge. The Commission was created by court rule in 1976; bifurcation was accomplished by a court rule effective 1997.

Tennessee

The Board on Judicial Conduct has 16 members: 8 current or former judges, 2 attorneys, and 6 public members. The presiding judge divides the court into 3-member investigative panels and 5-member hearing panels. After Disciplinary Counsel conducts a preliminary investigation, an investigative panel reviews their recommendation and dismisses the complaint or authorizes a full investigation. After a full investigation, the investigative panel reviews Disciplinary Counsel's recommendation and may direct the filing of formal charges or propose to the judge a private reprimand, a deferred discipline agreement, a public reprimand, suspension with pay, or imposition of limitations and conditions on the performance of judicial duties, including a cease-and-desist order. If the judge does not consent, the investigative panel may direct the Disciplinary Counsel to dismiss the complaint or file formal charges. If formal charges are filed, a public hearing is held by one of the hearing panels. After the hearing, the hearing panel may dismiss the charges, publicly reprimand or censure the judge, or recommend removal. The judge may appeal a decision to impose a sanction to the Tennessee Supreme Court where the review is de novo on the record with no presumption of correctness of the judgment or the findings of the hearing panel. If the Court affirms a removal, the matter is referred to the legislature for removal proceedings; neither the Court of the Judiciary nor the Supreme Court may remove a judge. The Judicial Standards Commission was created by statute in 1971 and replaced by the Court of the Judiciary in 1978; the statute was amended to bifurcate proceedings in 1995. The Court of the Judiciary was replaced by the Board on Judicial Conduct in 2012.

Vermont

The Judicial Conduct Board has 9 members: 3 judges, 3 attorneys, and 3 lay persons. Following a preliminary investigation, a recommendation is presented either to the Board or to a 3-member investigative panel consisting of 1 judge, 1 attorney, and 1 lay member, appointed by the chair. If the Board or the investigative panel believes that there is probable cause, a formal complaint is filed, and a public hearing is held before a hearing panel of at least 5 members of the Board, at least 1 of whom is a lay member. The hearing panel may impose limitations or conditions on the performance of judicial duties, issue a public reprimand, or suspend a judge. If no appeal from a hearing panel order is filed within 30 days, and the Vermont Supreme Court does not order review on its own motion, an order of the panel other than an order imposing a suspension becomes final; even if no appeal is filed, an order of suspension becomes final only upon issuance of an order of the Court. Neither the Board nor the Court may remove a judge. The Board was created by a court rule in 1978; the bifurcation was accomplished by an amendment to the rule effective 2002.

Wyoming

The Commission on Judicial Conduct and Ethics has 12 members: 3 judges, 3 attorneys, and 6 public members. The executive director establishes investigatory panels of 3-5 members and adjudicatory panels of 3-5 members, with each panel including members from each category of membership. Membership rotates between the 2 types of panels, but no member may sit on both the investigatory and adjudicatory panel in the same proceeding. If after an investigation, an investigatory panel finds reasonable cause to support a finding that the judge engaged in misconduct, the investigatory panel may issue a letter of correction, enter a deferred disciplinary agreement, issue a stipulated private censure, or institute formal proceedings before an adjudicatory panel. Following a non-public hearing, if the adjudicatory panel finds misconduct, it submits its findings to the disciplinary panel, that is, “all members of the Commission with the exception of the investigatory panel on any proceeding.” The disciplinary panel imposes private discipline or makes a recommendation of censure, removal, or retirement to the Wyoming Supreme Court. The Commission was created by the state constitution in 1973; the bifurcation was accomplished in a constitutional amendment adopted in 1996.

Judicial discipline proceedings involving state supreme court justices

July 2022

In most states, at least absent an agreement, the supreme court makes the final decision regarding whether a judicial officer will be publicly disciplined, reviewing a recommendation of the judicial conduct commission or a commission decision at the judge's request.

If a supreme court justice is the respondent in a judicial discipline case, in at least 13 states, the provisions governing judicial discipline provide for the creation of a substitute court comprised of temporary justices to hear the case. Depending on the state, the substitute court is comprised of appellate court judges, trial court judges, or both, chosen by seniority, randomly, and/or by position (chief or presiding judge). Some states use the same procedure for choosing pro tempore justices in discipline proceedings that would be used to replace justices disqualified from any type of case.

1. In Alaska, when the commission recommends a sanction for a supreme court justice, the chief justice appoints "a panel from among the court of appeals and superior court judges as justices pro tempore to review the proceedings."
2. In California, the review is "by a tribunal of 7 court of appeal judges selected by lot."
3. In Florida, a recommendation involving a supreme court justice is reviewed by the 7 "chief judges of the judicial circuits of the state of Florida most senior in tenure of judicial office as circuit judge."
4. In Georgia, a 9-judge special supreme court is "selected from the list of judges maintained by the Supreme Court and routinely used to select replacement Justices when a Justice is disqualified from or not participating in a case."
5. In Indiana, all supreme court justices except the chief justice are required to recuse from review of a discipline case involving a justice; the clerk of the supreme court and court of appeals randomly select 6 members of the court of appeals to join the chief justice on the panel, and the commission and the respondent justice each strike 1 judge from that selection, so the final panel consists of the chief justice plus 4 judges. If the commission or the justice does not strike a judge, the clerk strikes 1 "at random in their stead."
6. In Massachusetts, the substitute supreme court is comprised of "the chief justice and the six most senior justices of the appeals court."
7. In Minnesota, review is "heard by a panel consisting of the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals or designee and six others chosen at random from among the judges of the Court of Appeals by the Chief Judge or designee."

8. In Mississippi, a commission recommendation involving a supreme court justice is considered by a tribunal of 7 “judges selected by lot from a list consisting of all the circuit and chancery judges at a public drawing by the Secretary of State.”
9. In Ohio, the proceedings for grievances against supreme court justices are handled differently from the beginning, with the chief judge of the court of appeals appointing a 3-judge panel to review the grievance, a special disciplinary counsel, and a special probable cause panel comprised of 3 former members of the Board of Professional Conduct. A special hearing panel of 3 full-time trial court judges is selected by lot. If, following a hearing, the hearing panel determines that the justice committed misconduct and a disciplinary sanction is merited, a 13-member adjudicatory panel comprised of the chief judge and the presiding judge of each appellate district holds a hearing on any objections to the hearing panel’s report and issues a final order, with no review by the supreme court.
10. In Pennsylvania, an appeal from a decision involving a supreme court justice by the Court of Judicial Discipline is heard by “a special tribunal composed of seven judges, other than senior judges, chosen by lot from the judges of the Superior Court and Commonwealth Court who do not sit on the Court of Judicial Discipline or the [judicial conduct] board, in a manner consistent with rules adopted by the Supreme Court.”
11. In Vermont, 5 judges are appointed to a special supreme court “by the Administrative Judge for Trial Courts, or the next senior trial judge if the Administrative Judge is unavailable, under the process established by the Administrative Judge for the appointment of pro tempore judges to the Supreme Court in cases where a justice of the Court is disqualified.”
12. In Washington, there is a substitute panel of 9 judges comprised of the presiding chief judge of the court of appeals and 8 justices pro tempore chosen by the supreme court clerk “by lot from all remaining active Court of Appeals judges.”
13. In Wyoming, the supreme court designates 5 “district judges who are not members of the Commission to act in the place of the supreme court”

If the proceedings involve the chief justice, the justice having the longest tenure on the supreme court who has not participated in the proceedings shall appoint the panel.

For purposes of determining seniority of such circuit judges in the event there be judges of equal tenure in judicial office as circuit judge the judge or judges from the lower numbered circuit or circuits shall be deemed senior. In the event any such chief circuit judge is under investigation by the judicial qualifications commission or is otherwise disqualified or unable to serve on the panel, the next most senior chief circuit judge or judges shall serve in place of such disqualified or disabled chief circuit judge.

Rule 26. Complaint Against a Justice of the Supreme Court

A. Proceedings Generally. A complaint against a Justice of the Supreme Court, including a complaint alleging incapacity, shall proceed in the same manner as a complaint against any other judge, except as set forth in this Rule.

B. Special Supreme Court. Upon either a motion by the Director or the Supreme Court's own motion for interim suspension of a Justice pursuant to Rule 15.A, or a finding of reasonable cause to believe a Justice committed misconduct or has an incapacity by the Investigative Panel under Rule 17.B (2), a special supreme court shall be constituted. The special supreme court shall consist of nine judges selected from the list of judges maintained by the Supreme Court and routinely used to select replacement Justices when a Justice is disqualified from or not participating in a case. See Supreme Court Rule 57.

Commentary

[1] The Supreme Court is a collegial body. Granting it the authority to discipline its own members would create appearances of impropriety and of conflicts of interest. This Rule provides for the selection of a special supreme court to serve in this situation, comprised of judges who have been deemed qualified to decide other Supreme Court cases when Justices are disqualified.

[2] As in other cases, the Investigative Panel and the Justice may agree to a deferred discipline agreement, private admonition, or agreement to resign or retire. See Rule 17.D.

[3] Nothing in these Rules is intended to preclude the General Assembly from initiating impeachment proceedings against a Justice under its constitutional authority.

Rule 25, §VIII(4)

4) In the event the notice [of formal proceedings] filed under Rule VIII(1) is directed toward a member of the Supreme Court, the provisions of this paragraph shall apply.

(a) At the time the notice is filed, all Justices of the Supreme Court, except the Chief Justice, shall recuse themselves from the proceedings. Should the Chief Justice, for any reason, be unable to participate in such proceedings, the most senior member of the Supreme Court, not otherwise disqualified, shall continue to serve. The Chief Justice or the member of the Supreme Court continuing to serve under this provision shall be the presiding member of the Supreme Court for all proceedings relating to the notice.

(b) The vacancies on the Supreme Court created by the above procedure shall be filled for the limited purpose of the judicial disciplinary proceedings by members of the Indiana Court of Appeals chosen pursuant to this provision. Six Judges of the Court of Appeals shall be randomly selected by the Clerk of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals. Advisement of the members of the Court of Appeals selected under this procedure shall be given to the Commission and the judicial officer. Within seven days after advisement of the selection is issued, the Commission shall strike one judge selected and within seven days after the judge is stricken by the Commission, the judicial officer shall strike one judge. If the Commission or the judicial officer fails to strike a judge under this procedure, the Clerk of the Supreme Court shall strike at random in their stead.

(c) In the event all members of the Supreme Court are unable to participate in a judicial disciplinary proceeding, the Clerk of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals shall randomly select seven members of the Indiana Court of Appeals to serve in such proceedings and each side shall strike one judge under the procedure set forth in Rule VIII(4)(b) above.

Rule II, §4

Section 4. Grievances Against Supreme Court Justices.

(A) Initial review.

(1) Upon receipt of a grievance from disciplinary counsel, the Chief Judge of the Courts of Appeals shall select, by lot, a three-member review panel from among the judges designated pursuant to division (A)(3) of this section. The review panel shall contact the justice named in the grievance for a written response within fourteen days to the allegations contained in the grievance. Upon request, the review panel may grant a reasonable extension of time for the justice to provide a response.

(2) Upon receipt of the response, or if no response is received, the review panel shall review the grievance and any response to determine whether good cause exists for further investigation of the grievance. Within thirty days of the receipt of the response or expiration of the fourteen-day response time if no response is received, the review panel shall report its determination in writing to the Chief Judge. Upon request of the review panel and for good cause shown, the Chief Judge may extend the time for reporting its determination. If the review panel determines that good cause does not exist for further investigation, the Chief Judge shall notify the justice named in the grievance and the grievant of the determination and of the dismissal of the grievance.

(3) In January each year, the administrative judge of each appellate district shall designate the appellate judge senior in service and one additional appellate judge from the district, neither of whom shall be the presiding judge of that district or the Chief Judge, to be eligible for service on a review panel pursuant to division (A)(1) of this section. The administrative judge shall advise the Chief Judge, in writing, of the designation. Appointments shall be for a calendar year, and a judge may be reappointed to subsequent terms on the review panels.

(B) Appointment of special disciplinary counsel; time limits.

(1)(a)(i) If the review panel determines that good cause exists for further investigation, the Chief Judge shall appoint a special disciplinary counsel to conduct further investigation of the allegations contained in the grievance and any other misconduct discovered during the course of investigating the grievance. The special disciplinary counsel shall possess the qualifications set forth in division (B)(3)(a) of this section and shall be appointed from the list maintained by disciplinary counsel pursuant to division (B)(3)(c) of this section.

(ii) When appointing a special disciplinary counsel, the Chief Judge may communicate with the prior Chief Judge to determine whether special disciplinary counsel has been appointed to investigate another grievance against the same justice. If special disciplinary counsel has been appointed, the Chief Judge may appoint the same special counsel to investigate the new grievance.

(b) The investigation of a grievance by special disciplinary counsel shall be concluded within sixty days from the date the grievance is transmitted to special disciplinary counsel, and a decision on disposition of the grievance shall be made within thirty days after the conclusion of the investigation. The Chief Judge may extend the time to complete an investigation, not to exceed one hundred fifty days in total, in the event of pending litigation or appeals, an unusually complex investigation, including the investigation of multiple grievances, time delays in obtaining evidence or testimony of witnesses, or for other good cause shown. No investigation shall extend more than one hundred fifty days from the date the grievance is transmitted to special disciplinary counsel.

(c) The time limits set forth in this rule are not jurisdictional. No investigation or complaint shall be dismissed unless it appears that there has been an unreasonable delay and that the rights of the respondent to a fair hearing have been violated. An investigation that extends beyond one hundred fifty days from the date the grievance is transmitted to special disciplinary counsel is prima facie evidence of unreasonable delay.

(2)(a) Upon completion of the investigation, special disciplinary counsel shall either report to the Chief Judge that the grievance should be dismissed or prepare and file a formal complaint with the Chief Judge, in the name of special disciplinary counsel as relator, alleging that substantial, credible evidence exists to believe that the justice named in the grievance engaged in misconduct. The complaint shall be submitted with investigatory materials sufficient to demonstrate the existence of substantial, credible evidence to support the allegations of the complaint. The materials shall include any response filed by or on behalf of the respondent and may include other reports, summaries, depositions, statements, exhibits, or any other relevant material.

(b) If the special disciplinary counsel recommends the grievance be dismissed, the Chief Judge shall notify the grievant and the justice named in the grievance of such determination in writing.

(c) Unless the justice against whom the grievance has been filed agrees otherwise, the matter shall remain private unless and until a formal complaint is filed. Nothing shall prohibit a special disciplinary counsel from communicating with another special disciplinary counsel who has been appointed to investigate a grievance against the same justice.

(3)(a) The special disciplinary counsel shall be an attorney admitted to the practice of law in Ohio, or an attorney licensed and in good standing in any other state and admitted pro hac vice by the Chief Judge. The special disciplinary counsel shall not be an employee or appointee of the Supreme Court or have any interest in a case pending before the Supreme Court while serving as the special disciplinary counsel. The special disciplinary counsel shall have the power to issue subpoenas and cause testimony to be taken under oath.

(b) The special disciplinary counsel shall be paid expenses and reasonable compensation, upon approval of the Chief Judge, from the Attorney Services Fund. The rate and method of compensation, including the payment of compensation while the investigation is ongoing, shall be established by the Chief Judge in the appointment letter or order. The Chief Judge may authorize the special disciplinary counsel to employ support staff as necessary to assist in the investigation and any subsequent proceedings and may authorize payment of fees, compensation, and expenses from the Fund.

(c) Disciplinary counsel shall maintain and provide to the Chief Judge in January each year a list of attorneys who satisfy the qualifications for appointment as special disciplinary counsel and who are otherwise available to accept such appointment. Disciplinary counsel may supplement the list with additional special disciplinary counsel, as necessary.

(C) Proceedings on the formal complaint; probable cause review; appointment of hearing panel.

(1) Upon receipt of a formal complaint filed by the special disciplinary counsel, the Chief Judge shall appoint a probable cause panel, unless the justice named in the complaint has executed a written waiver of an independent probable cause determination. The probable cause panel shall consist of three former commissioners of the Board of Professional Conduct, none of whom was appointed or reappointed to the Board by the justice named in the complaint. Upon review solely of the complaint and the investigatory materials submitted pursuant to division (B)(2)(a) of this section, the probable cause panel shall make an independent determination whether probable cause exists for the filing of the complaint. Within thirty days of the appointment of the probable cause panel, the panel shall issue an order to the Chief Judge certifying the complaint, in whole or in part, or dismissing the complaint and investigation in its entirety.

(2) If the order dismisses the complaint and investigation in its entirety, the Chief Judge shall notify the grievant, justice, and special disciplinary counsel. If the order certifies the complaint in part, the Chief Judge shall provide a copy of the order to the special disciplinary counsel with instructions to prepare and file a new complaint that conforms to the determination of the probable cause panel. If the order certifies the complaint in its entirety, or upon receipt of a new complaint prepared as a result of a partial certification of the probable cause panel, the Chief Judge shall do both of the following:

(a) Appoint a hearing panel of three fulltime trial court judges selected, by lot, from the list of judges developed and maintained pursuant to division (C)(6) of this section. The judges chosen shall be from separate appellate districts and shall not be from the district in which the respondent resides. The Chief Judge shall designate one of the judges to serve as the chair of the hearing panel.

(b) Immediately forward the formal complaint to the director of the Board of Professional Conduct, who shall send a copy of the formal complaint by electronic service address or certified mail to the respondent. The complaint shall be accompanied by a notice requiring the respondent to file, within twenty days after the mailing of the complaint, the respondent's answer and serve copies of the answer on special disciplinary counsel and the Chief Judge. For good cause shown, the Chief Judge may grant an extension of time to file the answer.

(3) With reasonable notice to the parties, the hearing panel shall hold a hearing on the complaint. The hearing panel chair may grant requests for continuances for good cause shown. All hearings shall be recorded by a court reporter and a transcript included in the record of the proceedings.

(4) If at the end of the evidence presented by the relator, a unanimous hearing panel finds that the evidence is insufficient to support a charge or count of misconduct or a finding of disability, the panel may order the complaint or count be dismissed. If at the end of all evidence, a majority of the hearing panel finds that the evidence is insufficient to support a charge or count of misconduct, the panel may order the complaint or count be dismissed. The hearing panel chair shall give written notice of the action taken to the director who shall notify the Chief Judge, relator, and respondent. There shall be no appeal from an order dismissing the complaint or count of misconduct.

(5) If a majority of the hearing panel determines, by clear and convincing evidence, that the respondent is guilty of misconduct and a disciplinary sanction is merited or that the respondent has a mental or physical disability that makes the respondent unable to discharge the duties of office, the hearing panel shall file a certified report of the proceedings, its findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommended sanction with the director. The report shall include the transcript of testimony taken and an itemized statement of the actual and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the proceedings. The director shall send a copy of the hearing panel's report and recommendations to the Chief Judge and serve a copy of the report and recommendations, by electronic service address or certified mail, on the relator and respondent. At the conclusion of all proceedings before the hearing panel, the director shall file the record of such proceedings with the Clerk of the Supreme Court as provided in division (E)(1) of this section.

(6) In January each year, the administrative judge of each appellate district shall designate two fulltime trial judges from within the appellate district to be eligible to serve on a hearing panel appointed pursuant to division (C)(2)(a) of this section. In selecting the trial judges who shall be eligible for appointment to hearing panels, the administrative judge shall consider legal and judicial experience, gender, race, ethnicity, and other relevant factors. Before designating a judge as eligible for selection to serve on a hearing panel, the administrative judge shall contact the judge to determine the judge's availability for potential service. The administrative judge shall advise the Chief Judge, in writing, of the designations.

(D) Appointment of adjudicatory panel; proceedings before the panel.

(1) Upon receipt of the hearing panel's report and recommendations, the Chief Judge shall convene an adjudicatory panel of thirteen appellate judges to review the report and recommendations. The adjudicatory panel shall consist of the Chief Judge, who shall serve as chair of the panel, and the presiding judge of each appellate district. If a presiding judge of an appellate district is unavailable to serve on the adjudicatory panel, the appellate judge of the district who is senior in service on the court of appeals shall replace the presiding judge.

(2) The adjudicatory panel shall issue the respondent an order to show cause why the report and recommendation of the hearing panel shall not be confirmed and a disciplinary order entered. The Clerk shall serve notice of the show cause order by electronic service address or certified mail on relator and respondent.

(3) Within twenty days after issuance of the show cause order, the respondent or relator may file objections to the report or recommendations of the hearing panel with the Clerk. The objections shall be accompanied by a brief in support of the objections and proof of service of copies of the objections and the brief on all counsel of record. Twelve copies of the objections and brief in support shall be filed. Answer briefs and proof of service shall be filed within fifteen days after briefs in support of objections have been filed. Twelve copies of the answer briefs shall be filed.

(4) If objections are filed, the adjudicatory panel shall promptly schedule oral argument on objections. After the hearing on objections, or if no objections are filed, the adjudicatory panel shall issue an order as it finds proper. Unless otherwise ordered, any disciplinary order or order related to the respondent's mental or physical disability shall be effective on the date the order is announced. The order may provide for reimbursement to the Attorney Services Fund of costs and expenses incurred by special disciplinary counsel, the panels appointed pursuant to this section, or the Secretary.

(5) The Clerk shall mail certified copies of the order to the parties. The Supreme Court Reporter shall publish the disciplinary order in the Ohio Official Reports.

(E) Miscellaneous provisions.

(1) Upon the filing of a formal complaint, the director of the Board of Professional Conduct shall serve as clerk for the Chief Judge and the hearing panel. The relator and respondent shall file all pleadings, motions, documents, and other material with the director, who shall transmit the documents and materials to the Chief Judge and the appropriate panel. The Chief Judge and panels shall transmit all orders, opinions, and other materials to the director for service on or distribution to the parties. The director shall maintain a complete record of the proceedings and, upon conclusion of the proceedings before the hearing panel, certify the record, including exhibits, to the Clerk of the Supreme Court who shall maintain the certified record. The Clerk shall serve as clerk for any adjudicatory panel appointed pursuant to division (D) of this section, and all proceedings before the adjudicatory panel shall be conducted as provided in this section and the Rules of Practice of the Supreme Court of Ohio. Upon request, the director and Clerk shall assist the Chief Judge, hearing panel, and adjudicatory panel with ministerial matters such as scheduling a location for hearings and securing a court reporter.

(2) Any matter, a procedure for which is not specifically set forth in this rule, shall be handled in the manner set forth in Gov. Bar. R. V.

(3) If a judge selected to serve on any panel appointed pursuant to Section 4 of this rule is unable to serve because of the existence of a disqualifying factor, the judge shall notify the Chief Judge and provide written justification of the grounds for disqualification.

(4) The Chief Judge and any judge appointed to serve in any capacity pursuant to Section 4 of this rule shall continue to serve in the appointed capacity until the conclusion of the matter as long as the judge continues to hold judicial office. If the Chief Judge leaves judicial office while a matter commenced under this rule during the Chief Judge's tenure remains pending, the successor Chief Judge shall assume responsibility for that matter. If a judge appointed to serve in any capacity under this rule leaves judicial office while a matter to which the judge was assigned under this rule remains pending, the Chief Judge shall designate a judge to replace the former judge in the same manner as the original appointment was made.

(5) A party may allege the existence of bias, prejudice, or other disqualifying factor on the part of a judge appointed to serve on a panel pursuant to Section 4 of this rule by filing a timely motion with the Chief Judge. If the Chief Judge finds the existence of bias, prejudice, or other disqualifying factor, the judge named in the motion shall be disqualified, and the Chief Judge shall designate a judge to replace the disqualified judge in the same manner as the original appointment was made.

(6) Any judge selected to serve on any panel appointed pursuant to Section 4 of this rule shall be reimbursed from the Attorney Services Fund for travel expenses incurred in association with the judge's service on the panel. Reimbursement for travel expenses shall be made as provided in the Supreme Court Guidelines for Travel by Court Appointees. A judge shall request reimbursement by submitting a signed Travel Expense Report form and required receipts to the Chief Judge. The Chief Judge shall indicate approval of the reimbursement and submit the approved form to the Administrative Director of the Supreme Court.

(7)(a) The Chief Judge, any former commissioner of the Board of Professional Conduct, or any judge appointed to serve on a panel pursuant to Section 4 of this rule may contact the director of the Board of Professional Conduct for procedural guidance relative to responsibilities set forth in this rule. Special disciplinary counsel may contact disciplinary counsel for procedural guidance relative to responsibilities set forth in this rule.

(b) To assist in the execution of these responsibilities, the director and disciplinary counsel shall prepare and make available education materials that provide general procedural guidance to the individuals identified in division (E)(7)(a) of this section. The education materials may include written guidance, sample correspondence, orders, and entries, and information regarding the retention of records pursuant to Section 8 of this rule.

PERSPECTIVE: Colorado's judicial integrity in question

Dennis Maes and Frances Koncilja

Jul 2, 2022

The justices on the Colorado Supreme Court and all the judges in the state of Colorado are the beneficiaries of battles decades ago to create a merit system for the selection of judges as opposed to a partisan political system in which judges would be elected. Our judges can focus on their jobs as opposed to raising money and campaigning. Our judges do not have to fear that an unhappy litigant might fund a judge's opponent in an election.

This fight for merit selection of judges in Colorado started in 1945. In 1966, when the General Assembly once again refused to put merit selection on the ballot, the League of Women Voters, the Colorado Bar Association, the Colorado Medical Association, and numerous citizens gathered over 47,000 signatures to place merit selection of judges on the ballot and then worked for its adoption. Finally, in November 1966, Colorado voters approved adding Article VI to the Colorado Constitution. The late Colorado Supreme Court Justice Gregory Hobbs compiled a detailed history of these efforts which was published in The Colorado Lawyer in April 2006 titled "Colorado Judicial Merit Selection — a Well-Deserved 40th Anniversary Celebration".

Article VI also created the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“Discipline Commission”) — a commission of 10; four judges, two lawyers and four non-attorney citizens — that has the responsibility and authority to investigate and discipline judges, including Supreme Court justices.

In 1994, there was another attack on merit selection with Amendment 12 that would have destroyed the independence of judges and put them back into politics with recall elections. Once again, the Colorado Bar was at the forefront in defeating Amendment 12.

Merit selection and independence of judges, balanced with the authority of the Discipline Commission to investigate and discipline judges, have served the public interest of all Coloradans for over 50 years.

Commission subverted

We are concerned that Chief Justice Brian Boatright and Justice Monica Marquez, who appear to be the faces of the current leadership at the Supreme Court, are in the process of torching and burning down the merit selection system by their stubborn and misguided refusal to allow the Discipline Commission to do its work. The commission has been attempting to investigate a scandal swirling around the Supreme Court since 2019: Did then-Chief Justice Coats encourage, authorize and or approve a $2.75 million contract for Mindy Masais, the former chief of staff of the Supreme Court Administrative Office (“SCAO”), to keep her from going public with “dirt” she allegedly had on some Colorado judges and the Colorado Judicial Department?

Rather than allowing the Discipline Commission to do its work, Justice Boatright has insisted that the Supreme Court should hire the investigators and control the scope of the investigation. The court waited over two years after this scandal went public to hire investigators, which effectively prohibited the Discipline Commission from doing its work. In October 2021, the court hired a company set up by former United States Attorney Robert Troyer to conduct the investigation into whether Coats was willing to take $2.75 million in funds from the Judicial Department to essentially buy the silence of Masais (“Troyer Report”). Judge Boatright, we assume with the blessing of the other justices, at the same time hired another company and will pay them $225,000 to investigate the culture at the Judicial Department. That investigation was supposed to be concluded in June but has been delayed because of the voluminous number of employees who have asked to be interviewed.

The effect of these late and expensive investigations — remember, the complaints occurred back in 2019 — is that there still is no accountability and there likely will be none. Instead, the delays, caused primarily by, we are reluctant to say it, Justice Boatright, have had the effect of insuring there will be no criminal charges against anyone because the statute of limitations has run. It is mind-boggling that the Colorado Supreme Court, the attorney general and the Denver district attorney allowed the statute of limitations to expire in a matter of such importance.

The state auditor has already investigated many of these items that Troyer investigated and made recommendations in her performance audit dated November 2020. The state auditor commenced the audit because of the media reports in 2019 that there was wasteful spending, excessive use of paid leave and potential fraud at the Judicial Department. In addition, the state auditor had received an anonymous complaint on April 15, 2019, through the fraud hotline alleging fraud at the Judicial Department.

Undue delays

The state auditor’s report on the fraud hotline complaint came out last Feb. 4 and recommended criminal investigations. One might ask why the report took so long. It appears that the Judicial Department, under the leadership of Justices Boatright and Marquez, made the process burdensome by insisting on controlling access to the data and evidence; asserting confidentiality over many of the documents, and providing the information under an “access” agreement, meaning it would be kept confidential.

The state auditor's executive summary of the fraud hotline investigation recommended a criminal referral to investigate possible crimes committed by Masias, Eric Brown (the administrator of the SCOA) and Chris Ryan the head of Human Services at SCOA). The full investigation contained so many redactions when it was given to the Denver district attorney, and came so close to the expiration of the statute of limitations, that the Denver DA said she could not prosecute anyone for anything.

The Troyer Report issued last week paints a picture of Coats as incompetent and ignorant of the facts and therefore concludes, wrongly, in our opinion, that Coats did not commit any acts of official misconduct and this mess is not his fault. The Troyer Report ignores numerous uncomfortable facts; fawns over the justices as being very co-operative and forthcoming, and ignores the auditor's report and the recent report of the Discipline Commission to the interim legislative committee looking into these issues. The deficiencies in the Troyer Report are perfect examples of why this investigation should have been conducted by the Discipline Commission.

Dubious report

The Troyer Report concludes that Coats was not made aware of the memo with the dirt in it until sometime in 2019, and that he could not have agreed to it to cover up this memo with the $2.75 million contract because — are you ready for this? — Coats wanted to fire Masias in the fall of 2018 for financial improprieties and was considering giving her a “leadership training” contract to encourage her to resign. Why would anyone, let alone the chief judge, even consider a multimillion-dollar “leadership training” contract for someone accused of financial improprieties at the court unless Coats was trying to buy her silence? The Troyer Report concluded that the financial services division of the SCAO was refusing to sign a management representation letter required for the completion of statewide audit unless Masias was fired. The Troyer Report states at page 12:

“Ryan and Coats were reluctant to terminate Masias but believed that their options were limited because the department needed a signed management Representation Letter. They were also concerned about the optics of terminating the highest-ranking female employee at the SCAO, who had also recently been denied the SCAO position. Masias was well-regarded in many of the department's 24 judicial districts. Both Ryan and Coats therefore preferred demoting Masias for her dishonesty, placing her in a position to oversee leadership training and removing her spending and signature authorities."

The Troyer Report further concludes that Coats never read or even allowed the memo with the "dirt" to be read to him and so Coats could not have been involved in any cover up because he did not know the details. The Troyer Report also states that Coats failed to review the leadership contract for $2.75 million; never asked about its terms, including the duration (five years) or the amount to be paid, and therefore there was no coverup by Coats because he did not know the details. (These leaps of "logic" make one's head hurt.)

The Troyer Report then goes on to make the jaw-dropping allegation that somehow this mess is not the fault of Coats, because no one trained him to be the chief justice; there were no manuals or training material, and he had no experience managing an organization, especially a large organization such as the Judicial Department that has almost 4,000 employees and a budget of over a half billion dollars a year. In its desperate search for another "reason" to exonerate Coats, the Troyer Report concludes that this mess was also caused by the other justices of the Supreme Court because they did not offer to assist Coats in his supervisory duties as well as the design of that stunning new Supreme Court building that cost taxpayers over $750 million — because the employees of the Judicial Department were in the office tower next to the courts, and Coats was not aware of the toxic environment among the employees. We guess Coats was not trained to walk over to the next building to meet with the actual people who work for the Judicial Department, and he needed a manual to instruct him to do that.

Absurd findings

If this sounds like rubbish to you, you are correct. Assuming for the sake of argument, as we lawyers say, that it is true that Coats was worried about the gender bias claim and that is why he agreed to a "leadership training" contract for Masias, how is that a defense to a charge of official misconduct? There was still a quid pro quo — no public complaint, no lawsuit and you get a multimillion-dollar contract.

The Troyer Report does not even mention, let alone analyze, the criminal statutes that Coats might have violated: conspiracy to commit bribery and or official misconduct under CRS18-8-404 and 405 if a public servant “refrains from performing a duty imposed upon him by law.”

There is no legal analysis in this $75,000 report other than to a reference to the state procurement code. There is no legal analysis of what obligations the other six justices had under the Code of Judicial Conduct if it is true that Coats was incompetent. There is no reference, let alone analysis of Coats’ obligations under the Code of Judicial Conduct, 2.5, 2.12 or 21.5 or Disciplinary Rules 4 and 5, which prohibit a judge from handling a matter he is not competent to handle and require a judge to discharge his supervisory duties diligently. There is no mention or analysis of the obligation of Coats or the other justices to turn over to the Discipline Commission claims of wrongdoing by a judge.

While heaping praise on the court for its open and transparent co-operation with the Troyer group, the report does not even mention that the delay of Chief Justice Boatright in hiring Troyer means the statute of limitations has run and there can be no criminal prosecution.

No one held a gun to Coats’ head to force him to be the chief justice. His colleagues voted for him, most likely after he lobbied for the position. He had been a judge on that court for 18 years before he became the chief. What did he think being the chief involved? Just giving speeches and acting important? He was elected to be the chief executive officer of the Colorado Judicial Department, which has almost 4,000 employees and a budget of over a half billion dollars. If he did not think he was qualified, he should not have asked for the job.

Justice Boatright has taken the incredible position at the legislature that the reason he has not provided access to all the documents and data involving this mess is because he is protecting the court from financial liability. We guess the evidence must be pretty damning, but that is what evidence is about — establishing liability. If either of us made an argument to a federal judge in a discovery dispute with that kind of “logic,” we would be cooling our heels in the holding cells of the federal marshal and stripped of our privileges to practice law. How can the Supreme Court have any credibility in decisions involving discovery disputes when it applies a different standard to itself? The Troyer Report omits any of this in fawning over the court’s transparency and co-operation.

Credibility in question

In summary, the Troyer Report is rubbish and clearly establishes why the court should have turned this mess over to the Discipline Commission three years ago.

The leadership of the court, Justices Boatright and Marquez have, in our opinion, lost all credibility and legitimacy.

Colorado owes a huge debt to the courage and independence of the Discipline Commission for standing up to the unprincipled refusal of the Supreme Court to allow the commission to do its job. To force a vote on another constitutional amendment will encourage someone to put election of judges on the ballot at the same time.

We have no confidence in Justice Boatright and Marquez as the leaders of the court and request that they resign and that the rest of the justices rethink this dangerous and improper fight with the Discipline Commission.

Forcing the Discipline Commission to request amendments to the constitution to “clarify” what is already clear — the commission is independent and has the authority and obligation to investigate complaints concerning judge — is outrageous and dangerous and could burn the whole place down.

Dennis Maes served for 24 years as a judge in Colorado's 10th Judicial District in Pueblo — and as the district's chief judge for 17 of those years — before retiring from the bench in 2012. He also served on the state's Judicial Discipline Commission. Frances Koncilja is an attorney who served on the Colorado Supreme Court and Court of Appeals Nominating Commission and was the Tenth Circuit's representative on the American Bar Association Judicial Review Committee. She also served on the judicial advisory committees recommending federal judge candidates for U.S. Sens. Ken Salazar, Michael Bennet and John Hickenlooper. Koncilja also is a former commissioner on Colorado's Public Utilities Commission.

Interim Committee On Judicial Discipline
Of The Colorado General Assembly

July 12, 2022

GOOD MORNING. MY NAME IS DENNIS MAES AND I APPRECIATE THE OPPORTUNITY TO SHARE A FEW OBSERVATIONS SURROUNDING THE INTERIM COMMITTEE'S HEARINGS ON JUDICIAL REFORM.

I RETIRED MAY 31, 2012, AFTER 24 YEARS AS A DISTRICT JUDGE IN PUEBLO. I SERVED AS THE CHIEF DISTRICT JUDGE THE LAST 17 YEARS OF THAT TERM.

BEFORE I BEGIN PLEASE ALLOW ME THE OPPORTUNITY TO ACKNOWLEDGE THE OUTSTANDING PULITZER LEVEL REPORTING BY DAVID MIGOYA FROM THE DENVER GAZETTE CONCERNING THIS DARK MOMENT IN THE HISTORY OF THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT. HE RELENTLESSLY PURSUED THE TRUTH DESPITE THE FORMIDABLE ROADBLOCKS PLACED IN HIS WAY BY SEVERAL STATE AGENCIES INCLUDING THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT. HIS WORK IS A STARK REMINDER OF THE IMPORTANCE OF THE PRESS IN A FREE DEMOCRATIC SOCIETY.

FOR ABOUT A YEAR BEFORE I WAS APPOINTED TO THE DISTRICT BENCH BY GOVERNOR ROY ROMER, I HAD THE PRIVILEGE OF SERVING ON THE COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE. THE CEO AT THE TIME WAS RICK WEHMHOEFER. I WAS IMPRESSED WITH THE WORK AND THE EFFICIENCY OF THE COMMISSION. IT SATISFIED ITS RESPONSIBILITIES PURSUANT TO THE COLORADO CONSTITUTION. THE COMMISSION ON SEVERAL OCCASIONS DURING THE ANNUAL JUDICIAL CONFERENCE, PROVIDED TRAINING SESSIONS TO THE SPOUSES OF THE JUDGES TO EDUCATE THEM WITH THE WORKINGS OF THE COMMISSION IN THE INTEREST OF TRANSPARENCY. I WOULD SUGGEST THAT THE COMMISSION ARRANGE SIMILAR EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR THE PUBLIC TO INFORM THEM OF THE IMPORTANT WORK THE COMMISSION UNDERTAKES TO ENSURE JUDICIAL ACCOUNTABILITY.

I WILL SAY THERE HAS ALWAYS BEEN SOMEWHAT OF A TENSION BETWEEN THE JUDGES AND THE COMMISSION BECAUSE OF THE VERY NATURE OF THE COMMISSION'S CHARGE. HOWEVER, I NEVER OBSERVED ANYTHING OUT OF THE ORDINARY THAT OFFERED CONCERN ABOUT THE PROCESS. I AND MY COLLEAGUES RECOGNIZED THE IMPORTANCE OF THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION AND ITS CREDIBLE OVERSIGHT OF US IN THE MERIT SELECTION SYSTEM OF COLORADO JUDGES. IT HAS WORKED WELL IN THE PAST AND DESERVES TO CONTINUE ITS WORK IN THE FUTURE WITHOUT UNDUE INFLUENCE FROM OTHERS, INCLUDING THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

WHILE I AGREE THAT SYSTEMS SHOULD CONTINUALLY BE REVIEWED, AND REFORMED, WHEN NECESSARY, I WOULD STRONGLY SUBMIT THAT IT IS JUST AS IMPORTANT TO RELY ON THOSE PROCESSES THAT HAVE SERVED US WELL IN THE PAST.

IN PARTICULAR, I WOULD POINT TO THE SINGLE MOST IMPORTANT PRINCIPLE THAT HAS PROVIDED THE GUIDING LIGHT FOR THE UNITED STATES JUDICIAL SYSTEM SINCE ITS INCEPTION...A DEEP AND ABIDING COMMITMENT TO AND BELIEF IN THE RULE OF LAW WHICH HOLDS THAT NO PERSON OR ENTITY IS ABOVE THE LAW. IT IS THAT PRINCIPLE THAT GUIDES EVERY JUDGE EVERY SINGLE DAY IN THE EXERCISE OF THEIR JUDICIAL RESPONSIBILITIES.

IT IS MY BELIEF THAT THE BOATRIGHT COURT LOST ITS WAY CONCERNING THIS SAD AND EMBARRASSING MOMENT IN THE HISTORY OF THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT WHEN IT DISREGARDED AND DISRESPECTED LONG ESTABLISHED PRINCIPLES, RULES, PROCESSES AND ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS THAT JUDGES TAKE AN OATH TO OBEY.

AS THE INTERIM COMMITTEE IS WELL AWARE, THE JUDICIAL COMMISSION HAS JURISDICTION OVER ALL COLORADO STATE JUDGES, INCLUDING THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT. GROUNDS FOR JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE ARE FOUND IN RULE 5 OF THE COLORADO RULES OF JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE.

IT IS NECESSARY TO IDENTIFY SPECIFIC INSTANCES WHEN THE SUPREME COURT CHOSE TO CIRCLE THE WAGONS TO PROTECT THE FEW RATHER THAN TO COMPLY WITH ESTABLISHED PROTOCOL TO ILLUSTRATE THE CONTEMPT IT HAD FOR ITS OWN PROCESSES.

FUNDAMENTAL TO THE AMERICAN COMMITMENT TO THE RULE OF LAW IS THAT CASES BE DECIDED BY NEUTRAL DECISION-MAKERS, THE JUDGE AND JURY. ALL CONFIDENCE IN THE SYSTEM IS LOST IF THE PUBLIC BELIEVES AN OUTCOME HAS BEEN DETERMINED PRIOR TO THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CASE. SIMILARLY, ALL CONFIDENCE WOULD BE LOST IF THE PUBLIC BELIEVES THE GUILT OR INNOCENCE OF AN INDIVIDUAL IS DETERMINED BEFORE THE PRESENTATION OF EVIDENCE. THE SAME RESULT OCCURS IF THE COURT DETERMINES THE CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES PRIOR TO TRIAL. THAT IS WHAT THE BOATRIGHT COURT DID HERE.

AS EARLY AS FEBRUARY 4, 2021, CHIEF JUSTICE BOATRIGHT ISSUED A STATEMENT CONCERNING AN ARTICLE THAT APPEARED IN THE DENVER POST ON FEBRUARY 3, 2021, DENYING THE CENTRAL FACTUAL ALLEGATION THAT CHIEF JUSTICE COATS AND HIS COUNSEL, ANDREW ROTTMAN, WHOM HE DESCRIBED AS “BOTH DEDICATED PUBLIC SERVANTS” WOULD EVER AUTHORIZE COURT RESOURCES TO SILENCE A BLACKMAILER. CHIEF JUSTICE BOATRIGHT WENT ON TO BACK COATS AND ROTTMAN WITH THE WEIGHT OF THE CREDIBILITY OF THE ENTIRE SUPREME COURT BY DECLARING THAT ANY STATEMENT TO THE CONTRARY WAS “SIMPLY FALSE.” ALL OF THIS BEFORE ANY INVESTIGATION OR TRIAL.

AT THE OUTSET, THE COLORADO CONSTITUTION DIRECTS THAT ANY ALLEGATION OF JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT SHOULD HAVE BEEN REFERRED TO THE JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE COMMISSION BUT BOATRIGHT FAILED TO DO SO AND, INSTEAD, DECLARED THE OUTCOME PRIOR TO THE ONSET OF AN INVESTIGATION.

SECONDLY, BOATRIGHT IGNORED RULE 2.10 OF THE COLORADO CODE OF JUDICIAL CONDUCT WHICH PROHIBITS ISSUING JUDICIAL STATEMENTS ON PENDING OR IMPENDING CASES OR ISSUES THAT MIGHT COME BEFORE THE COURT. MIND YOU, THESE COMMENTS WERE MADE PRIOR TO THE AWARDED OF THE TROYER CONTRACT. BOATRIGHT VIOLATED RULE 2.11(A)(4) BY REACHING A CONCLUSION ON THE ISSUE BEFORE THE RECEIPT OF ANY EVIDENCE.

AGAIN, PLEASE KEEP IN MIND THAT IT WAS DISTINCTLY POSSIBLE THE SUPREME COURT MIGHT BE CALLED UPON TO REVIEW THE MATTERS WHETHER IN A CIVIL SETTING, THROUGH A REFERRAL TO THE JUDICIAL COMMISSION OR A CRIMINAL PROCEEDING AGAINST CERTAIN OF THE PRINCIPALS INVOLVED IN THE INVESTIGATION.

YET, IT APPEARS THE COURT HAD LITTLE OR NO CONCERN COMMENTING ON INFORMATION THAT WAS BEING PROVIDED TO IT IN AN EX PARTE FASHION CONTRARY TO RULE 2.9 OF THE CODE. BOATRIGHT REAFFIRMED THIS STANDARD OF BEHAVIOR ON FEBRUARY 16, 2021, WHEN HE ANNOUNCED HE WOULD BE BRIEFED ON A WEEKLY BASIS ON ALL “MISCONDUCT COMPLAINTS ACROSS THE DEPARTMENT TO ENSURE EACH INCIDENT IS FULLY INVESTIGATED AND ACTED ON AS APPROPRIATE WITHOUT DELAY.” PRESUMABLY, HE WAS ALSO REFERRING TO COMPLAINTS OF JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT THAT SHOULD RIGHTFULLY BE

REFERRED DIRECTLY TO THE JUDICIAL COMMISSION, AND, UNDER THE PRESENT SYSTEM, MIGHT BE SUBJECT TO REVIEW BY THE SUPREME COURT. DOES THIS PROCESS SEEM FAIR TO THE PERSON OR PERSONS BEING INVESTIGATED? I TRUST THE ANSWER IS NO.

SUCH A PROCESS WOULD LIKELY REQUIRE JUSTICE BOATRIGHT AND ANY OTHER JUSTICE WHO MIGHT BE PRIVY TO THE INFORMATION TO DISQUALIFY HIMSELF OR HERSELF PURSUANT TO RULE 2.11(A) BECAUSE THE JUDGE WOULD HAVE PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS IN DISPUTE IN THE PROCEEDING. YET, ANOTHER SOLID REASON WHY ANY JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT CONCERNS SHOULD BE REFERRED TO THE JUDICIAL COMMISSION AS REQUIRED.

BOATRIGHT'S DECISION TO COMMENT ON THE VERACITY OF CERTAIN WITNESSES AND/OR PARTICIPANTS COMPROMISED ANY INVESTIGATION AND/OR PROCEEDING THAT MIGHT ENSUE. HE DESCRIBED CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS AS "DEDICATED PUBLIC SERVANTS" AND THAT THE JUSTICES HAD "FULL CONFIDENCE" IN A NAMED JUDGE ALLEGED TO HAVE COMMITTED ACTS OF JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT.

ON WHAT DID THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND OTHER JUSTICES BASE THEIR CONCLUSIONS? HAD THEY CONDUCTED THEIR OWN INVESTIGATION CONTRARY TO COMMISSION RULES? DID THEY BASE THEIR CONCLUSIONS ON EX PARTE COMMUNICATIONS? WERE THEY SENDING A SUBTLE MESSAGE TO THOSE WHO MIGHT DISAGREE WITH THE COURT THAT THEIR OBSERVATIONS WOULD NOT RECEIVE THE SAME CONSIDERATION AS THOSE WHO APPEARED TO BE IN LOCK STEP WITH THE SUPREME COURT? WHATEVER THE PERCEPTION, IT WAS CLEAR THAT CERTAIN DECISIONS HAD ALREADY BEEN MADE BY THE COURT IN DETERMINING TO HIRE PRIVATE COUNSEL TO CONDUCT AN "INDEPENDENT" INVESTIGATION TO "CLEAR THOSE WRONGLY ACCUSED."

ONE ASPECT OF THE TROYER REPORT THAT RINGS TRUE IS THE DISCONNECT BETWEEN THE SUPREME COURT AND THE ACTUAL OPERATION OF THE COURT SYSTEM AND THE MANY DEDICATED EMPLOYEES THAT ASSURE THAT THE COURTS RUN SMOOTHLY. THE NOW INFAMOUS MEMO CLEARLY ILLUSTRATES THAT THE RANK AND FILE BELIEVED THERE WERE TWO SEPARATE TRACKS FOR DISCIPLINE...THOSE FOR HIGHER LEVEL ADMINISTRATORS, THEIR CRONIES AND THE JUDGES AND ANOTHER FOR THOSE LESS SITUATED.

ANY REFORM MUST ALSO ADDRESS THE BEHAVIOR OF THOSE AGENCIES WHICH MIGHT BE BEHOLDING TO THE SUPREME COURT. FOR EXAMPLE, THE OFFICE OF ATTORNEY REGULATION AT ONE TIME HELD CERTAIN AUTHORITY OVER THE JUDICIAL COMMISSION. THE OARC HAD AUTHORITY TO DETERMINE THE OFFICE SPACE OF THE COMMISSION AND FUNDING FOR CERTAIN PROJECTS. IN BOTH INSTANCES, THE OARC MADE IT DIFFICULT FOR THE COMMISSION PRESUMABLY SIDING ON BEHALF OF AN EMBATTLED SUPREME COURT. IT IS ALLEGED THAT THE OARC VACILLATED BETWEEN RECUSING ITSELF FROM THE FRAY ONLY TO DECIDE AT A LATER TIME TO REASSERT ITSELF USUALLY TO THE DETRIMENT OF THE JUDICIAL COMMISSION.

IT APPEARS IT MIGHT BE APPROPRIATE TO CODIFY THAT ONCE A RECUSAL IS DECLARED THAT THE RECUSING PARTY MUST WITHDRAW FROM ANY FURTHER INVOLVEMENT IN THE PROCEEDINGS.

ALTHOUGH IT APPEARS THE FUNDING OF THE JUDICIAL COMMISSION HAS BEEN RESOLVED THROUGH RECENT LEGISLATION, IT WOULD BE APPROPRIATE TO PROHIBIT AN ARM OF THE SUPREME COURT FROM ANY SUPERVISORY AUTHORITY OVER THE COMMISSION AS WAS THE CASE WITH THE OARC.

I AM AWARE OF THE RECOMMENDATIONS SUBMITTED BY THE COLORADO COMMISSION TO THE INTERIM COMMITTEE AS WELL AS THE RECOMMENDATIONS IN THE TROYER REPORT.

I AM ACUTELY AWARE THAT REFORM MIGHT REQUIRE AMENDMENTS TO THE COLORADO CONSTITUTION AND THE COMPLEXITY, COST AND PERILS INHERENT IN OFFERING CONNSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS BUT BELIEVE CERTAIN RECOMMMENTATIONS ARE ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY.

FIRST AND FOREMOST, THE COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE MUST BE COMPLETELY FREE FROM INTERFERENCE FROM OUTSIDE SOURCES, INCLUDING THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

THE COMMISSION SHOULD BE INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED AND REQUIRED TO FOLLOW ESTABLISHED STANDARDS OF FINANCIAL ACCOUNTABILITY.

THE COMMISSION SHOULD HAVE FULL SUBPOENA POWER WHICH IS GOVERNED BY EXISTING LAW. ANY DISPUTES INVOLVING THE SUBPOENA POWER AND DISCOVERY MATTERS INCLUDED THEREIN SHOULD BE RESOLVED BY AN ENTITY

OTHER THAN THE COLORADO SUPREME COURT. IT HAS BEEN SUGGESTED THAT A BODY CONSISTING OF ATTORNEYS, JUDGES, CITIZENS AND OTHER DISCIPLINES MIGHT BE CONSIDERED.

THE COMMISSION HAS PERFORMED ADMIRABLY DESPITE THE ROADBLOCKS IT HAS ENCOUNTERED. THERE NEEDS TO BE A LEVEL OF STABILITY FOR THE COMMISSION TO CARRY OUT ANY REFORM THAT MIGHT BE ADOPTED. CONSISTENT WITH THE RULES SURROUNDING THE APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS TO THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE, ALL ELIGIBLE MEMBERS WHO ARE SUBJECT TO REAPPOINTMENT SHOULD BE REAPPOINTED. I AM DISAPPOINTED TO SAY THAT I AM CONCERNED THAT JUDGES PRESENTLY SERVING ON THE COMMISSION MIGHT NOT BE REAPPOINTED BY THE SUPREME COURT BECAUSE OF THE STRENGTH AND COURAGE THEY HAVE EXHIBITED IN ADDRESSING THIS TURMOIL. SUCH REFUSAL TO REAPPOINT WOULD REFLECT POORLY ON THE SUPREME COURT.

THE COMMISSION SHOULD HAVE RULE MAKING AUTHORITY SIMILAR TO THAT ENJOYED BY THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL PERFORMANCE.

I HAVE PREVIOUSLY JOINED IN AN OP-ED EXPRESSING VARIOUS CONCERNS ABOUT THE TROYER REPORT AND WILL NOT REPEAT THEM HERE EXCEPT TO ADDRESS ITS CONCLUSION THAT A MAJOR PORTION OF THE REPORT FAULTED THE COLORADO JUDICIARY FOR NOT PROPERLY PREPARING CHIEF JUSTICE COATS FOR THE JOB.

I WAS ASTOUNDED TO HEAR THIS EXCUSE AS IT HAD BEEN MY EXPERIENCE THAT COLORADO, AT THE TIME COATS WAS APPOINTED, ENJOYED AN OUTSTANDING REPUTATION THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY FOR THE QUALITY OF TRAINING IT PROVIDED ITS JUDGES. COLORADO WAS ONE OF THE FEW STATES THAT ACTUALLY HAD LEADERSHIP TRAINING FOR CHIEF JUDGES WHICH INCLUDED THE CHIEF JUSTICE. IRONICALLY, THE MASIAS CONTRACT WHICH HAS BEEN AT THE CENTER OF THIS MESS WAS A CONTRACT TO PROVIDE LEADERSHIP TRAINING BECAUSE THE TWO OUTSIDE PROFESSIONALS WHO HAD PREVIOUSLY PROVIDED THE TRAINING WERE RETIRING.

I PERSONALLY HAD THE PRIVILEGE OF BEING APPOINTED AND SERVING AS CHIEF JUDGE OF THE TENTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT UNDER THE LEADERSHIP OF CHIEF JUSTICES ANTHONY VOLLACK, MARY MULLARKEY AND MICHAEL BENDER. EACH

PROVIDED OUTSTANDING ADMINISTRATIVE AND ETHICAL LEADERSHIP AND WERE PROGRESSIVE IN MOVING THE COLORADO JUDICIARY TO DEEP RESPECT THROUGHOUT THE JUDICIAL COMMUNITY IN THE NATION.

I AM UNAWARE OF ANY CONCERNS THE JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT MIGHT HAVE HAD CONCERNING THE LEADERSHIP ABILITIES OF FORMER CHIEF JUSTICES TO SERVE UNTIL THE REVELATIONS CONTAINED IN THE TROYER REPORT AND ONLY AS THEY IMPLICATED COATS. IT IS JUST ONE OF THE MANY QUESTIONS LEFT UNANSWERED IN THE REPORT. MORE SPECIFIC DETAILS CONCERNING THE SPECIFIC KNOWLEDGE OF THE THEN SERVING JUSTICES OF WHAT THEY KNEW AND WHEN THEY LEARNED IT SHOULD HAVE BEEN ADDRESSED INCLUDING THE SPECIFIC KNOWLEDGE OF EACH INDIVIDUAL JUSTICE.

THANK YOU FOR THIS ENORMOUS UNDERTAKING. WHILE MUCH DAMAGE HAS BEEN DONE TO THE INTEGRITY OF A ONCE PROUD STATE JUDICIAL SYSTEM, I AM CONVINCED THAT THE RESOLVE OF THIS COMMITTEE AND THE DEEP RESPECT OUR STATE HAS FOR THE RULE OF LAW WILL RESTORE IT TO THE STATUS IT DESERVES.

ADDENDUM TO TESTIMONY BY DENNIS MAES ON JULY 12, 2022.

REPRESENTATIVE TERRI CARVER REQUESTED THAT I PROVIDE MY THOUGHTS CONCERNING THE RECOMMENDATIONS CONTAINED IN THE TROYER REPORT IN PARAGRAPH 10, PAGES 61 AND 62, IMPROVING THE JUDICIAL-OFFICER COMPLAINT PROCESS. THE FOLLOWING ARE MY SUGGESTIONS:

IT IS NECESSARY TO HAVE AN ADEQUATELY FUNDED STAFF TO ENSURE THAT THE COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE IS PERFORMING ITS RESPONSIBILITIES PURSUANT TO THE COLORADO CONSTITUTION AND THE RULES GUIDING ITS DELIBERATIONS.

EVERY COMPLAINT/ALLEGATION OF JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT SHALL BE REFERRED DIRECTLY TO THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE COMMISSION.

EVERY COMPLAINT/ALLEGATION OF JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT SHALL BE REVIEWED BY 3 STAFF MEMBERS.

IF AT LEAST 2 STAFF MEMBERS BELIEVE THERE IS "PROBABLE CAUSE" TO BELIEVE JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT HAS OCCURRED BASED ON THE CODE, THE COMPLAINT/ALLEGATION SHALL BE REFERRED TO THE COMMISSION FOR A FORMAL INVESTIGATION. ALL INVESTIGATIONS SHALL BE CONDUCTED AND CONCLUDED WITHIN A REASONABLE TIME BASED ON THE COMPLEXITY OF THE ALLEGATION(S) BEING INVESTIGATED.

IF 2 OR MORE STAFF MEMBERS FIND THAT "PROBABLE CAUSE" DOES NOT EXIST TO BELIEVE JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT HAS OCCURRED, THE COMPLAINT/ALLEGATION SHALL BE DISMISSED WITH AN EXPLANATION WHY IT WAS DISMISSED. THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR SHALL BE PROVIDED WITH THE FINDINGS AND DULY DOCUMENT SAID FINDINGS.

THE COMPLAINANT SHALL BE PROVIDED WITH A WRITTEN REPORT CONCERNING THE COMMISSION'S DETERMINATION WITHIN 30 DAYS OF THE COMMISSION'S FINDINGS. THE REPORT SHALL BE SUBMITTED UNDER THE SIGNATURES OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR AND THE CHAIR OF THE COMMISSION AND/OR HER/HIS DESIGNEE.

THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE SHALL MAKE ANNUAL VISITS TO EACH JUDICIAL DISTRICT, THE COLORADO COURT OF APPEALS AND THE COLORADO SUPREME TO PROVIDE AN UPDATE AND/OR OTHER INFORMATION CONCERNING THE OPERATIONS OF THE COMMISSION. MULTI DISTRICT TRAININGS SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED FOR CONVENIENCE AND EFFICIENCY. THE REPORTING SYSTEM SHALL BE A PART OF EVERY EMPLOYEE'S INITIAL TRAINING AND ORIENTATION.

THE JUDICIAL WEBSITE SHALL BE AVAILABLE TO ALL DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL PROVIDING BASIC INFORMATION ON THE JUDICIAL MISCONDUCT COMPLAINT PROCESS. THE WEBSITE SHALL INCLUDE AN OPTION TO FILE AN ANONYMOUS COMPLAINT.

THE ENTIRE JUDICIARY SHALL BE REQUIRED TO ATTEND A TRAINING SESSION BY THE COMMISSION AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STATE JUDGES.

THE COMMISSION SHALL ATTEMPT TO PROVIDE PUBLIC SERVICE INFORMATION TO THE COLORADO CITIZENRY CONCERNING THE OPERATION OF THE COMMISSION.

THE COMMISSION SHALL ENGAGE THE SERVICES OF A DATA COLLECTING ENTITY TO THOROUGHLY DOCUMENT THE ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMISSION AND PROVIDE AN ANNUAL REPORT TO THE STATE.

SB22-201 SHALL BE STRICTLY ENFORCED.

Members of the Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline,

Based upon the materials provided to the Interim Committee and the discussions that took place in its first meeting on June 14, 2022, the Judicial Department feels compelled to respond to a number of issues that were raised.

The situation that has developed over the past year and a half is novel and unprecedented. We are working to navigate some very difficult issues in areas that are uncharted. We have done our best to balance many competing interests and proceed deliberately and thoughtfully to minimize unintended consequences and liability to the state. We are all learning as we go through this. I want to make this clear up front – the Judicial Department and the Supreme Court want each investigator to have all the information and resources necessary to do their job.

While a back and forth between the Department and the Judicial Discipline Commission is something that we have tried to avoid, we must respond to some of the comments from the Commission and statements in the report it provided to the Interim Committee on June 14. Many of the Commission's statements about recent events are missing important background and context and are not consistent with the Department's understanding of events. Up to now, the Department has viewed these matters as confidential under the Constitution and related state law and has felt unable to respond. The Commission clearly interprets the law differently, and it is now a disservice to the Department, the supreme court, the bar, and the public to not address some of the Commission's statements. We will not comment on the nature or substance of any investigation, but we feel obligated to provide procedural details to inform this Committee's work. We have worked to develop and improve the Department's relationship with the Commission over the past few months. My intent in providing these responses is not to attack the Commission or say who is right or wrong in these matters. However, to the extent that the Interim Committee is identifying problems in the system that need to be fixed, it is important to present additional context and explanation.

Subpoena and Document Production

Not surprisingly, the investigations related to the public accusations of misconduct involve requests for privileged and confidential information of the Judicial Department. Depending on the investigation, this may include information that is confidential pursuant to federal law, state law, and the Department's binding legal agreements, and can include privileged discussions with internal and external legal counsel. In the course of producing documents for the various investigations, the Department has two basic options. First, the Department can produce documents without regard to whether doing so violates the law or a contract, or waives a privilege, thus potentially subjecting the state to financial liability. Alternatively, the Department can work with the investigators to produce the same documents in a manner that renders the documents protected, thus minimizing potential liability to the state. We have chosen the latter.

Perhaps there is some fair criticism that I and the supreme court have cared too much about compliance with the law and protection of privileges. However, in my view, if the Department can provide the same information to investigators and at the same time protect the state, that is the right decision. Through the course of the various investigations, the Department has developed an understanding that two things allow the Department to provide external investigators with access to privileged and confidential information while minimizing potential liability for the state: 1) a subpoena, and 2) an agreement under Colorado Rule of Evidence (“C.R.E.”) 502 or its federal counterpart, which we have called an Access Agreement or Access and Confidentiality Agreement. The need for a subpoena stems from prior agreements of the Department that do not permit disclosure of information to any third party “absent a valid subpoena or court order.” With a subpoena, that information can be shared more freely while minimizing liability to the state. Similarly, C.R.E. 502 allows, in some circumstances, attorney-client privileged information to be shared among governmental agencies without waiving the protections of the privilege. An agreement under C.R.E. 502 memorializes the parties’ understanding of how privileged and confidential information will be treated in the investigation process. The basic provisions of the Department’s C.R.E. 502 agreements are:

- A recitation of the purpose and scope of the investigation;
- A recognition by the parties that the Department is producing privileged and confidential information;
- A commitment by the parties to treat the information as privileged and confidential;
- A process for the Department to assert its privileges in subsequent proceedings; and
- A process to resolve disputes arising under the agreement.

Although C.R.E. 502 agreements can take different forms, it requires more than just a promise or requirement of confidentiality for the entity receiving the privileged information. The provisions of an agreement look slightly different for the different investigations, and the Department has been open to negotiating the provisions of the agreement to address individual concerns of the investigators.

Here is how that has played out with the other external investigations.

For the investigation by the external investigators hired by the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel, the Department requested a subpoena and worked with the investigators to enter into a C.R.E. 502 agreement that was acceptable to both parties. The investigators then received the Department’s confidential and internally privileged documents that were responsive to their subpoena.

For the investigation by the F.B.I., the Department again requested a subpoena and worked with investigators to enter into a C.R.E. 502 agreement that acceptable to both parties. The F.B.I. and U.S. Department of Justice very quickly acknowledged the Department’s concerns. In the span of just a few brief conversations, the agreement was finalized and document production began immediately.

For the investigation by the Denver District Attorney’s Office arising out of the State Auditor’s Fraud Hotline Investigation, the State Auditor provided the D.A. with a report that had attorney-client privileged information redacted. When we were contacted by the D.A.'s investigator, we responded the same day, explaining both the redactions and proposing a process for the D.A.'s office to obtain an unredacted report and all relevant documents. Our attorneys drafted a C.R.E. 502 agreement that same day and the D.A.'s office indicated they understood the need for and purpose of the agreement. The next day, the D.A.'s office notified us that they had decided not to pursue the case. We remained ready and willing to work with the D.A. to provide complete information. I will discuss the Office of the State Auditor's ("OSA's") investigation separately and in more detail below.

In contrast to the above, discussions with the Judicial Discipline Commission have been more challenging. Last summer, the Department produced a large number of documents to the Commission and identified some documents that could be produced only with a subpoena. To protect the state from financial liability in the form of a lawsuit from former employees and to honor the Department's preexisting agreements, in June 2021 we asked the Commission to issue a subpoena for those records we could not immediately produce. As the Commission stated, we invited a subpoena. Similarly, in August 2021, we proposed that the Department and the Commission enter into an Access and Confidentiality Agreement so that the Department could produce privileged and confidential records. We made it clear at that point that an access agreement could not circumvent the agreements to which the Department is bound, so some records may still require a subpoena. We urged the Commission to speak with the Attorney General's Office if it needed assistance in drafting a subpoena. I do not know whether that discussion occurred, but the Commission did not respond initially to the Department's suggestion of an Access and Confidentiality Agreement. Throughout this process, the Department asked that the Commission work cooperatively to address legal concerns so that the requested documents and information could be shared thoughtfully and responsibly.

In November 2021, the Department proactively sent the Commission a proposed C.R.E. 502 agreement so that it could provide privileged records to the Commission. The Department made clear that it was open to discussing any of the Commission's concerns with the proposed agreement. Without first receiving a response to the draft agreement, the Department received a subpoena from the Commission in January 2022. The Department immediately accepted and waived service of the subpoena, began discussions with the Commission's counsel regarding the manner and timing of production, and sought clarification of date ranges for the subpoena requests. At the same time, the Commission and the Department agreed that the production of any privileged documents under the subpoena would be stayed pending the approval and signing of a C.R.E. 502 agreement. The Department received a response to its November draft C.R.E. 502 in February 2022.

Within two weeks of receiving a subpoena, the Department produced nearly 1,600 records and continued to supplement the production of documents through May. These records are in addition to the numerous records produced in 2021 prior to any subpoena. The Department also had queued up many hundreds more records that could be immediately produced upon execution of a C.R.E. 502 agreement.

The Department tried numerous times, and through numerous channels, to develop a C.R.E. 502 agreement acceptable to the Commission. We exchanged around 10 different drafts of a C.R.E. 502 agreement with the Commission between November 2021 and June 2022, sometimes through counsel and at other times directly between the Chief Justice and the Commission's Executive Director.

Throughout these discussions, the Department emphasized the critical components of the agreement, which are reflected in S.B. 201's requirements for a C.R.E. 502 agreement.

On June 29, the Department and the Commission signed an acceptable C.R.E. 502 agreement, and the Department immediately produced over 1300 additional records. The Department is now producing additional documents requested by the Commission. Just as it has always done, the Department will continue to honor its obligations to provide the Commission with information relevant to its evaluations of potential judicial misconduct.

Contrary to the Commission's Report and testimony, the Department is not aware of any discussion or communication in which the Department questioned or challenged the Commission's subpoena authority or indicated it would not comply with a subpoena. I'm perplexed by the Commission's statement to this Committee on June 14 that the Department did not "feel the need to comply with the subpoena." This statement and the resulting media reports clearly left the Committee and the public with the impression that the Department directly ignored a subpoena from the Commission. Arguably, that's not what the Commission stated, but the media reports that the Department ignored a subpoena are wholly inaccurate, as indicated above. If the Commission believes more clarification is necessary in the Rules regarding its subpoena authority and an enforcement mechanism, the Court is more than willing to discuss those topics directly with the Commission.

Funding

S.B. 22-201 thankfully provides independent funding for the Commission. We have supported this idea since late last year and fully agree it is appropriate for the Commission to manage its own budget independent of the Judicial Department.

Last summer, the Commission raised concerns about resources. Chief Justice Boatright offered the Department's assistance in resolving questions about resources, and I met personally with the executive director of the Commission in August of 2021 to discuss the resource needs of the Commission. At that time, I was told that the Commission had the resources it needed and did not need the Department's assistance. Subsequently, the Commission decided to enter into a contract with a private law firm to serve as special counsel. Without delving too deeply into details regarding the funding for special counsel, what I will say is that the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel's ("OARC") concerns raised with the Commission's hiring of special counsel had nothing to do with an intent to interfere with or impede an investigation. OARC harbored legitimate concerns with the Commission's failure to follow defensible procurement processes and the Commission obligating an unknown (and unbudgeted) amount of attorney registration fee revenue at hourly rates nearly double the reduced government rates typically used, without any cap or other cost containment measures. OARC's concerns were borne solely from its fiduciary obligation over attorney registration fees, not any intent to control the Commission's investigation. Indeed, it would make no sense for OARC, which had commissioned its own independent investigation into the same public allegations of misconduct (and which is being paid from the same pool of attorney registration fee revenue), to impede the Commission's investigation. Earlier this spring, the Department and the Commission agreed on interim funding for the remainder of FY 22 and delegated fiscal oversight to the Executive Director of the Commission over expenditures of special counsel, with the OSA having ultimate oversight over these Commission expenditures.

The Commission has asserted that the Department limited or attempted to limit the scope of special counsel assignments. Again, this is not accurate. OARC, which has a fiduciary obligation over attorney registration funds, raised concerns that the scope of engagement with the Commission's special counsel extended to undefined recommendations for process improvements. This undefined and unlimited engagement exceeded the purpose of special counsel in Commission investigations and created the potential for a conflict of interest in special counsel's recommendations. None of these discussions implicated the scope of an investigation.

In light of the untenable position the Court was in related to approving Commission's expenditures on special counsel, the Department, through the Chief Justice, reached out to the Commission and expressed support for independent funding through the legislature. In the SMART hearing in January, we emphasized the need for the Commission to have its own funding. We have continued to fully support independent funding, and I appreciate the funding created by S.B. 22-201.

The 2010 Memorandum of Understanding ("MOU")

In 2010, the Commission and the SCAO's Human Resources Division entered into a MOU that provided for the Department to conduct investigations and to refer judicial misconduct to the Commission. The 2010 MOU requires the HR Division of the SCAO to provide the Commission the HR Division's "investigatory notes and findings" related to the alleged misconduct. The documents requested by the Commission go well beyond what is contemplated in the 2010 MOU, and we are aware of no other investigations by the Commission that have requested information subject to privilege or confidentiality concerns (whether statutory or contractual). That is why we have asked to work with the Commission on a subpoena and C.R.E. 502 agreement. In every other investigation by the Commission, these steps have simply not been necessary. So in that sense, this investigation has proceeded differently than others.

The Role of the Supreme Court in Judicial Discipline Proceedings

A number of statements in the last hearing overstated the Supreme Court's current role in judicial discipline proceedings. For all but a very few complaints, the Court never sees them or knows anything about them. The Commission, comprised of a majority of non-judges, evaluates the complaint and decides whether action on the complaint is warranted. The Court has no role in this evaluation process. Only if the Commission itself determines to institute formal proceedings and requests the appointment of special masters does the Court, through the Chief Justice, become involved. The Chief Justice alone selects three conflict-free judges to serve as special masters in the case. The Chief has only very limited information about the allegations and the subject judge. The special masters then hold a hearing, similar to a trial, and make a recommendation to the Commission itself. The Commission then decides whether to follow that recommendation, make a different recommendation, or dismiss the complaint. Again, the Supreme Court has no involvement in these decisions. It is only when the Commission recommends formal, public discipline, or when the Commission recommends a temporary suspension pending an investigation, that pleadings are filed with the court. The vast majority of disciplinary proceedings never make it to this stage. And the court is not aware of any public discipline recommended by the Commission that the Court rejected as being too harsh.

More specifically, in the last interim committee hearing, the Commission stated that the Supreme Court is briefed often on the proceedings pending before the Commission. That is inaccurate. In Chief Justice Boatright's State of the Judiciary Address, he stated that he had requested all allegations of harassment or discrimination to be brought to his attention. This statement was made to assure the Department and the public that allegations would be taken seriously and properly handled or referred. When a complaint involves a judicial officer, the Chief Justice is briefed on the situation, the HR response, and whether the proper referrals have been made. After a matter is referred to the Commission, the Chief Justice has no more information or control over the disciplinary proceedings and does not brief the full Supreme Court on these matters. The rest of the Court learns of these allegations only if a recommendation from the Commission for public discipline or request for temporary suspension is filed with the Court.

Supreme Court Recusal

The Supreme Court believes that its recusal obligations under the Code of Judicial Conduct applies in judicial discipline proceedings and understands that one or more of the justices may need to recuse in any given case. The Court has acknowledged its recusal obligation to the Commission on multiple occasions and on June 28 proposed a rule amendment to the Commission to address this issue now. The Commission asked for more time to respond to the proposed rule change; to accommodate the Commission's request, the Court has delayed publication of the proposed rule.

OSA Fraud Hotline Investigation

In the previous Interim Committee hearing, questions were raised about the timeline for the OSA's Fraud Hotline Investigation. The Committee's questioning suggested that the Department delayed the investigation so that the statute of limitations would run on any potential criminal charges arising from the investigation. I can say unequivocally that is false. At the start of the investigation, the OSA and the Department agreed that the OSA would conduct onsite review of privileged documents and not retain custody of them. We worked with the AG's office to establish multiple workstations for onsite review and accommodated the OSA's schedule for reviewing documents. Onsite review was proceeding until the COVID-19 pandemic began, at which point onsite review became much more difficult, but we worked with the OSA to provide an isolated workstation for onsite review. When Chief Justice Boatright took over as Chief Justice, he agreed with the previous State Auditor to hold weekly status meetings to move the investigation along as quickly as possible. Through those discussions, we prioritized document production, modified how the OSA could access privileged documents offsite, and responded promptly to any request from the State Auditor or her staff.

There was never any discussion between the Department and the OSA about what potential charges might be brought, any statute of limitations, or when a referral to law enforcement should be made. The Department was not even aware of which law enforcement agency the matter would be referred to. Prior to the referral to law enforcement, the Department was provided an opportunity by the OSA to propose redactions of privileged information as well as information protected by federal law that was not part of the law enforcement referral. My understanding was that once the matter was referred, we would be able to quickly enter into a C.R.E. 502 agreement with the law enforcement agency receiving the referral and provide all requested information. As stated above, when we were contacted by the Denver District Attorney's Office, we responded immediately and provided a quick path for the D.A. to receive complete information.

In the category of "lessons learned," I will note that the process the Department and the OSA agreed to at the start the Fraud Hotline Investigation turned out to be clunky and largely unworkable. During the early stages of the investigation, we engaged with the legislature, identified the privilege concerns, and spoke of the need for a statutory fix that would allow full production of privileged information without the risk of waiving privilege. Our understanding is that those discussions progressed at the legislature when we raised this issue years ago, but work on a statutory fix was later abandoned.

Even with this context and explanation, I have no doubt the Department and OSA would handle the investigation, production, and review issues quite differently if they were presented today.

Commission Recommendations

Aside from the Commission's characterization of events, the Department believes that the Commission's recommendations to the Interim Committee are important and should be thoroughly discussed. The Commission's recommendations are in bullet points and the Department's initial thoughts follow.

- Subpoena Authority: Codify subpoena authority for the Discipline Commission to investigate judicial misconduct allegations akin to other investigative bodies and grand juries.

Department Response: The Department supports the Commission's subpoena authority and, as stated above, has not challenged the Commission's authority to issue subpoenas. If subpoena authority is codified, the legislation should also clarify the forum for dispute resolution so as to preserve due process for any subpoena disputes or issues. If the Commission has specific suggestions for a rule change related to a subpoena that could become effective more quickly than legislation, the Court is certainly open to them.

- Disclosure/Discovery Enforcement Mechanism: Codify a conflict free mechanism for addressing disputes with the Colorado Judiciary over claims of privilege or confidentiality as well as compliance with the statutory duties to document and disclose complaints of judicial misconduct.

Department Response: The Department supports an independent dispute resolution mechanism that provides due process.

- Rulemaking Authority: Grant the Discipline Commission rulemaking authority over judicial discipline on the model of the Colorado Commissions on Judicial Performance.

Department Response: In reviewing the rules for Judicial Discipline in other states, the rules are remarkably similar regardless of which entity holds rulemaking authority. The Department is in the process of reaching out to other states with varying rulemaking authorities to understand the benefits and detriments of moving rulemaking authority away from the Supreme Court. The Department does not have a position on this recommendation at this point.

- Special Masters: By rule or statute, create a continuing pool of judges that are qualified to act as special masters in judicial discipline matters to foster institutional expertise.

Department Response: The Department is concerned that a pool of special masters will be too small to handle the workload involved in these cases, which is on top of the judges' other responsibilities. The Department sees value in maintaining the ability to ensure geographic, gender, and racial diversity depending on the nature of the proceeding. The Department further sees merit in ensuring that the judges serving as special masters are familiar with the work of the judge being investigated. For example, an appellate judge may not be the best choice for evaluating the conduct of a part-time rural county court judge. The considerations at play for selecting special masters lend themselves to a broader pool of judges who can effectively and impartially evaluate the case. The Department is open to more discussions about the issue attempting to be addressed with this recommendation.

- Commission Member Terms: Extend the current four year terms of Commission members to provide greater subject matter expertise and greater insulation for political influence. For similar reasons, District Court Judges serve six year terms and appellate judges serve ten year terms.

Department Response: Commission members can already serve for a period of eight years on the Commission. These are volunteer assignments, and it can be difficult to convince potential appointees to commit to longer terms. It is unclear whether the Commission is seeking to extend the terms of the current Commissioners through this proposal. The Department does not understand the basis for concerns about the current term length, but it is open to further discussions on this issue.

- Conflict Free Final Decision Makers: Maintain the current two-tier judicial discipline system but change the final decision-maker to a conflict free, multi-perspective, citizen involved entity with representatives from the bench, bar, and citizenry. Address appointment power and term lengths to assure insulation from undue influences.

Department Response: The Department and the supreme court are mindful that conflicts can and will arise with special masters or with the supreme court itself. It recently submitted a proposal to the Commission for a rule change that would address conflicts of the supreme court. The Department believes strongly that judges are an integral voice in the disciplinary process and are trained to act impartially and objectively in applying facts to the law and ensuring appropriate burdens are met and legal standards are clearly applied. The Department agrees that the final decision-making body should be free of real or perceived conflicts. However, the Department believes further discussion is necessary about the appropriate final decisionmaker and has concerns if constitutional violations by a new decision-making entity would need to be resolved by additional proceedings in the supreme court. Any changes to the system must include appropriate checks and balances

- Disqualification Standards: Codify clear, uniform, and consistent disqualification standards for all decision-makers involved in judicial discipline. Apply same standards that have been previously established for judge disqualification and define meaning of disqualification.

Department Response: The standards in the Code of Judicial Conduct already apply equally in judicial discipline matters, whether a judge is serving as a special master or a judge. A conflicted judge has a duty and obligation to disqualify in a matter. If the disqualification rules need to be clarified to explicitly state that the Code of Judicial Conduct applies in judicial discipline proceedings, the court and Department are open to that.

- Transparency: Evaluate the policy considerations and determine whether the border between confidentiality and transparency in Colorado's judicial discipline system should be altered.

Department Response: This decision involves significant policy decisions that have to be made thoughtfully to balance accountability, transparency, and to ensure that the discipline process is not used as a political or retaliatory tool. The Department is open to discussions about how to make the current process more transparent, the various points in the process where transparency can be increased, and the information that is shared between judicial oversight entities.

- Funding: Evaluate the viability of funding the judicial discipline system through a source that is insulated from politics and variations in the economy consistent with the model used for the Colorado Commissions on Judicial Performance.

Department Response: There is no funding source that is insulated completely from an economic downturn or the checks and balances experienced by any state agency. The Department supports fully independent funding for the Commission, with no ties to the Department, as with any other agency of the state. The Department does not have a position on where this funding should come from, other than that if it comes from the Department's budget in any way, it will renew arguments that the Commission is dependent on the Department for its operations.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'S. Vasconcellos', with a stylized flourish at the end.

Sen. Van Winkle

Here.

Juliann Jenson

Carver.

Here.

Juliann Jenson

Mr. Chair.

Rep. Weissman

Here.

Rep. Weissman

All right. Quorum is present. Members and those present and listening online. We have a robust agenda in front of us today for anybody listening online that is posted to the website for you to review. If you haven't already had a chance to see that. We have invited a number of folks to speak with us today on a variety of matters pertinent to the charge of the committee, and out of respect for their time, I'll do my best with the assistance of the Vice Chair to keep us on schedule. And then we'll have some logistical updates for next steps near the bottom of our agenda. The record can note we are joined by Rep. Bacon. To the first point on the agenda, concerning introductory statements, the only thing I wanted to say was just to remind everybody that we are in meeting three of the five that we are authorized for. This is our last sort of wide-open meeting, at which we'll be hearing a variety of perspectives as we are today. One week from today, is a meeting where we have to vote to approve concepts to be drafted, and then we have the time between 8/17 and 9/30 to work on those and 9/30 is when we have to send things forward to Leg Council for final review prior to the commencement of the 23 regular session. As a reminder, we are approved for three measures, bills or concurrent resolutions. Thus, we are allowed to draft not more than six that multiple of two is to cause us to contain our ambition. And to be fair to our nonpartisan staff, who have a lot of drafting work in the summer, sometimes. Senator Van Winkle, I know that you have another committee also meeting today. Sometimes unavoidable, if you wanted to just say anything briefly about that.

Sen. Van Winkle

Thank you, Mr. Chair, and just for the listening audience, I maybe in and out, at least during the morning session. It's not that I'm being lazy. I'm deploying double duty in the Capitol today.

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Thank you. So, with that, I'll just see if the Vice Chair wanted to add anything by introductory way 3 before we commence?

4

5 Rep. Carver

6 No, Mr. Chair, you covered it.

7

8 Rep. Weissman

9 All right. Thank you. Okay. With that, the first item on our agenda is to hear from Professor Geyh with 10 Indiana University, who will provide kind of a comparative perspective on things. We appreciate the 11 work of the Vice Chair in reaching out and others in reaching out to line up this presentation. Give it a 12 sec for the Professor to get connected.

13

14 Rep. Weissman

15 All right, members, Ms. Jenson is trying to contact the Professor. In the interest of keeping us moving, 16 we may have to proceed a little bit out of order. We'll see if we can raise the Professor, and maybe come 17 back to that segment of our agenda. I think, since they are here waiting for us, we will go right to the 18 10:15, segment, which is to hear from the Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System, 19 or IAALS. Ms. Kauffman, Justice Kourlis, if you'd like to join us up front.

Appendix 27(s)(iii)(2)

Presentation by Professor Charles Geyh;

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline—
August 10, 2022 Hearing: Testimony of Professor Charles Geyh

1 Rep. Weissman

2 Please reserve some time at the end, I imagine members will have questions for you. Please go ahead.

3

4 Charles Geyh

5 Okay, sure, and I'm sorry to get in the way of, was that Becky Kourlis who was there ahead of me? Her 6 organization is terrific, and I pay a lot of attention to what they have to say. My name is Charlie Geyh.
7 I'm on the faculty of the law school at the Indiana University, Maurer School of Law, my work on 8 judicial ethics and discipline began in the late 1980s when I served as counsel to the House Judiciary 9 Committee and then continued in my role as consultant to the National Commission on Judicial 10 Discipline and Removal, then special counsel to the impeachment and removal of a Pennsylvania 11 Supreme Court Justice, an expert witness at the Senate impeachment trial of a federal district judge, 12 reporter to the American Bar Association Commission that promulgated the 2007 Model Code of 13 Judicial Conduct, which Colorado has adopted, and the author of the treatise Judicial Conduct and 14 Ethics, which is widely used by judicial conduct commissions as a desk reference. Now, I am reminded 15 of New Jersey Chief Justice Arthur Vanderbilt, who once wrote that judicial reform is no sport for the 16 short-winded and sitting through days of testimony to the end of improving Colorado system of judicial 17 discipline requires an abiding commitment to the administration of justice, an open mind, and an iron 18 butt. And I salute you for all of those now. Cindy Gray, who chatted with you folks before, supplied this 19 committee with some detailed information concerning systems of discipline employed by different 20 states, and I take her information to the bank. Her Judicial Conduct Reporter is extraordinary and is a 21 primary resource for my colleagues and I when we were writing our treatise on Judicial Conduct and 22 Ethics. My role in distinction to Cindy's is just to step back and supply a framework within which to 23 situate the details that Cindy supplied.

24

25 And, so, I want to sort of do a quick, sort of three-minute dog and pony show, sort of setting the stage 26 for where Colorado finds itself. 100 years ago, judicial misconduct was regulated informally, if at all.
27 There were literally no codes of judicial conduct. There were no disciplinary processes. Impeachment 28 was and remains a more or less dead letter because of the difficulties associated with ginning up the 29 mechanism. And while elections were out there and available, they really were only suited to addressing 30 misconduct that rose to the level of highly publicized scandal. And then, of all things, what made things 31 change was the 1919 World Series, when the Chicago White Sox, known colloquially as the Black Sox, 32 threw the World Series. Major League Baseball, got thrown into a crisis and decided what we need is a 33 Commissioner of Baseball. And they decided to select the guy with the best name in the history of 34 judges, Kennesaw Mountain Landis, who was not only a federal district judge, but happened also to be a 35 minor league ball player in his youth. And, so, all good, except that the salary they were proposing to 36 pay him as Commissioner was $45,000. His salary as a full-time federal judge was $5,000 and from

1 Landis's perspective, the combined total yielded a nice round figure of 50,000. And, so, he decided that 2 he would retain his job as a full-time judge whilst moonlighting as Commissioner of Baseball, which 3 didn't sit well with Congress. And, so, they ginned up the impeachment mechanism and investigated and 4 really struggled to come to a resolution, because what they discovered was, yeah, it's bad behavior, but it 5 really doesn't rise to the level of an impeachable crime. And, so, really what we need is something else, 6 something besides impeachment, to deal with problems like this. And, so, they tapped Chief Justice 7 William Howard Taft to chair a commission that the ABA created, that developed the Canons of Judicial 8 Ethics that were promulgated in 1924. Now, the good news is that most state supreme courts adopted 9 those. But the problem is that they were bound for obscurity, because they were advisory only. They 10 were basically there to appeal to the hearts and minds of individual judges, things for them to keep in 11 mind and were otherwise, toothless. And, so, they pattered along for decades, and were occasionally 12 referenced in case law, but otherwise ignored.

13
14 And then, you know, things start changing in 1960 when California establishes the first judicial conduct 15 commission. And then later, in the 60s, all hell starts to break loose. Justice Fortas, Justice Douglas, and 16 Chief Justice Warren were all called the task for alleged ethical lapses. And in the Supreme Court 17 nomination proceedings of Judge Clement Haynsworth, he was rejected in part over presiding in cases 18 involving conflicts of interest. And, so, with this newfound sort of concern in place, in 1972 the ABA 19 went back to the chalkboard and promulgated the first Model Code of Judicial Conduct. That was 20 formulated for the express purpose of creating standards of conduct suitable in disciplinary proceedings 21 instituted by these judicial conduct organizations that by this point, were popping up all over the 22 country. And, so, by 1980, all 50 states had judicial conduct organizations in place. In 1990, the ABA 23 overhauled its Code of Conduct, replacing all of the shoulds in the Code with shalls. And in 2007, the 24 Code project I was involved with, the ABA revised its Code, again. Reorienting its focus from Canons 25 to Rules to emulate the Model Rules of Professional Conduct applicable to lawyers, which further aided 26 judicial conduct organizations in regulating judicial misconduct. So, by 2008, all 50 states have adopted 27 codes of conduct that judicial conduct organizations relied upon to varying degrees when investigating 28 judicial conduct. Now, what I'm describing here, and that's the end of my little summation.

29
30 What I'm describing here are developments that are sort of a one-way ratchet, that have served to make 31 state judicial systems increasingly accountable for misconduct. Now at the same time, state constitutions 32 have tended to be quite respectful of the Judiciary's institutional independence, and so these 33 developments increasing judicial accountability have happened alongside state constitutions that really 34 are seeking to preserve an independent judiciary that gives the judiciary, oftentimes exclusive authority 35 to regulate court practice, procedure, and administration. And because the supreme court is on top of the 36 judiciary's organizational chart, responsibility for judicial self-administration has fallen largely to the 37 state's high courts. So accordingly, codes of conduct have been promulgated by the supreme courts 38 themselves. Judicial conduct organizations have been situated within the judicial branch, and in the vast 39 majority of states, the supreme court has had the final word on whether to discipline a judge within the 40 jurisdiction. In this way, states have struck a balance between the institutional independence of the 1 judiciary and the accountability of judges to a disciplinary process. And, on the whole, I'm pretty 2 comfortable with these structural arrangements as they have evolved. In a government comprised of 3 separate and independent branches, it strikes me as appropriate for each branch of government to be in 4 charge with regulating the conduct of its own members, subject to limited checks and balances. Thus, 5 there's nothing intrinsically problematic about judges judging judges any more than there is with 6 legislators judging legislators for purposes of censure or expulsion from a general assembly. I'm 7 therefore at peace with retaining the state supreme court at the apex of the disciplinary process, as is 8 done in almost every state.

9 10 Now, I've read the combined memorandum of the Commission and the Judicial Branch, which you've 11 received. The Commission appears to be less sanguine than I about retaining the Supreme Court's 12 traditional role, owing, I am guessing, to recent developments in which the Supreme Court stands 13 accused of mishandling a disciplinary matter involving a member of that court. The Commission 14 proposes a model that takes the Supreme Court out of the equation and vests final adjudicative authority 15 over disciplinary matters in a separate tribunal. The Commission proposal is loosely based on the Illinois 16 model, which is an outlier among the states, but the proposal honestly goes further than Illinois does. In 17 Illinois, the Supreme Court retains an important role in relation to the Illinois Courts Commission that 18 adjudicates misconduct cases. It selects three of that Commission's seven members, one of whom is a 19 Supreme Court justice, whereas the Colorado Commission proposal excludes Supreme Court 20 participation altogether. I understand and sympathize with the concern that is driving the Commission's 21 proposal, but I worry that it may be a bit of an overreaction to recent developments. In the vast majority 22 of cases, retaining final Supreme Court review over the conduct of lower court judges, as almost every 23 state does, strikes me as a sensible approach that respects the traditional hierarchy of the independent 24 Judicial Branch.

25
26 When a member of the Court is the target of an investigation, however, the analysis has got to change.
27 Putting the Supreme Court in the position of disciplining, and if warranted, removing a colleague on the 28 collegial court with whom the Justices share the bench and work on a daily basis, calls the impartiality 29 of the Court and the legitimacy of its rulings into question. I mean, in my way, the way I'm 30 conceptualizing it, it's the difference between having the Supreme Court preside over the misconduct of 31 lower court judges but not preside over their own fellow Justice. This is akin to the difference between a 32 small-town judge presiding over the cases of people he happens to meet or know in passing, which is 33 inevitable and okay, and presiding over the case involving his next-door neighbor, which raises 34 concerns. And, so, I take issue with the Judicial Department's statement that, "No investigation has 35 revealed that this basic structure of Colorado's current system is deficient." The scandal that resulted in 36 the establishment of this committee could have been avoided if Colorado's disciplinary process were 37 structured to disqualify members of the Supreme Court from any involvement in that process when a 38 fellow member was under investigation.

1 Other states have likewise encountered problems when the supreme court is given the final word on 2 regulating the conduct of its own justices. I really do want to emphasize that Colorado is hardly alone 3 here, and I do want you to consider the example of Wisconsin, and when you do, it might be worth your 4 time to pause and grab some buttered popcorn, because Wisconsin is quite a rocket. In 2008, Justice
5 Annette Ziegler on the Wisconsin Supreme Court was reprimanded for presiding over cases as a Court 6 of Appeals Judge in which her husband had an interest. Which court critics characterized as a slap on the 7 wrist. An ethics complaint against Justice Michael Gableman charged him with running misleading 8 campaign commercials. And Justice David Prosser was investigated for allegedly trying to choke Justice 9 Rebecca Bradley during a meeting of the Justices in chambers. On a related front, the campaign support 10 that the Justices received, the alleged bias manifested in Judge Gableman's campaign commercials and 11 other purported conflicts formed the basis for a flurry of disqualification requests over succeeding years, 12 all of which the members of the Court denied. With this series of events came a debilitating and divisive 13 devolution of collegiality. I'm reading here. This is a dramatic reading from one of my books, and I'm 14 just going to get through it rather than extemporizing. "Justice Prosser called Chief Justice Shirley 15 Abramson 'a bitch' amid the deliberations over Gableman's ethics complaint, and later accused his 16 colleagues of leaking the incident to embarrass him. When Justice Bradley dissented from the Court's 17 revised disqualification rule, it drew a sharp rebuke from the majority for being announced prematurely.
18 The press reported that Justices Abramson and Bradley were fearful of Justice Prosser and had received 19 additional security, while Justice Patience Roggensack dismissed such reports and the underlying 20 concerns as unfounded. Resolution of the disciplinary action arising out of the Prosser-Bradley bout was 21 thwarted by mass recusals that left the Court without a quorum. As collegiality norms collapsed, 22 members of the Court retreated to ideologically assigned camps and split along ideological lines over the 23 Court's disqualification standards, whether Justice Gableman's campaign commercials warranted 24 discipline, whether Justice Prosser put Justice Bradley in a chokehold or was defending himself when 25 Bradley charged at him with her fists balled, and whether the court should seek professional help to 26 overcome its dysfunction." So, you got that.

27
28 In Pennsylvania, where I served as special counsel to the first impeachment and removal of a state 29 supreme court justice in 200 years, our group was activated because the State Judiciary was simply 30 failing in its efforts to discipline Justice Larson via the existing disciplinary process. The failure of that 31 process resulted in constitutional reform in Pennsylvania that I would encourage this body to at least 32 consider as a possible template. In Pennsylvania, the state situates the investigatory function in one 33 body. It then situates the adjudicatory function in a separate body, and finally, it authorizes final appeals 34 from the adjudicatory body to the state supreme court except when a supreme court justice is under 35 investigation. In which case, a specially constituted court is created to hear the appeal. Two things worth 36 at least considering about this that I like about it. First, it relieves the high court of responsibility to 37 discipline its own members. And second, I kind of like the two-tier structure, so that you don't have the 38 prosecutor and the adjudicative roles being occupied by the same body. And about eight or so 39 jurisdictions employ that system. Now, that's really what I've got to say about basic structure.

40

1 Just a couple more points, and then I will subside. Apart from the issues of basic structure, I did want to 2 comment briefly on transparency. Now, at one level, I'm a little jaded in the sense that transparency is 3 like puppies and rainbows, and nobody can be against it without looking like a jerk. But you know, I 4 think in the context of judicial discipline, there can be too much of a good thing in the sense that most 5 disciplinary complaints are filed by disgruntled litigants with bad dreams, and going public with 6 groundless complaints threatens to undermine court legitimacy, unjustifiably, by creating the 7 misimpression that the Judiciary is more trouble than it is. And, so, to that extent, I think transparency 8 should not be complete or absolute. Conversely, and this is the more important point, waiting until 9 discipline is imposed, as Colorado has done, has can have the opposite effect. By understating the extent 10 of the enforcement activity, discouraging complaints from being filed. Because it looks like you're 11 throwing things down, down the well and by creating the suspicion that the Judiciary is protecting its 12 own by keeping the public in the dark. In 2020, Reuters reporters wrote a multi-part series on judicial 13 misconduct and discipline across the states, looking at 1,500 cases. To the end of showing that 14 widespread judicial misconduct was either ignored or treated to leniently by judicial conduct 15 organizations across the states. The reporters' work was complicated by the fact that so much of the 16 disciplinary process is in a black box, which led them to assume the worst. Which, I think, is oftentimes 17 unfair. In other words, they just simply pointed out that so few judges were removed from office. You 18 know, when having looked at a lot of these situations, many times the infraction does not warrant 19 removal, it warrants a serious reprimand, and only something more serious if the conduct is repeated. In 20 other words, there are reasons, but unless those are explained and clear and evident, you're left to assume 21 the worst. And Colorado, I think, relative to the rest of the nation, is behind the curve. Most jurisdictions 22 disclose disciplinary activity earlier in the process, and so I would support a change endorsed by the 23 Commission, and I think the Judicial Branch, and most jurisdictions around the country, that requires 24 meaningful disclosure of judicial conduct investigations at the point where formal proceedings are filed.
25 And I agree with the Commission that identifying the respondent judge, and offering a brief but 26 meaningful recitation of the alleged misconduct without naming victims or witnesses, is the appropriate 27 tack. Now, I've not had a chance to look at what information the states present to the public after 28 discipline is imposed, but including a brief explanation for the sanction and why the sanction was 29 deemed appropriate under the circumstances strikes me as desirable in order to essentially take 30 advantage of the good work that the Commission is doing, and to convey the impression that someone is 31 watching, is minding the shop and is imposing discipline that makes sense for reasons given.

32
33 My final thought, and this is just a thought in passing, because I'm offering it out of an abundance of 34 caution. Final thought relates to the role of non-lawyers and what role they should play in the 35 disciplinary process. I am 100% behind including non-lawyer participation in the disciplinary process.
36 Doing so helps to keep that process honest, and doing so helps to promote public confidence in the 37 integrity of the disciplinary process. But in deciding how extensive non-lawyer participation should be, I 38 did want to drop one asterisk. The Colorado Constitution declares that discipline is imposed with 39 reference to violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct. Rule 1.2 of the Colorado Code of Judicial 40 Conduct characterizes the Code itself as a body of law that judges must follow. The Code then in turn,

1 includes rules that courts around the country interpret, which give rise to a body of precedent that Cindy 2 Gray synthesizes in her Judicial Conduct Reporter, and that Jim Alfini, Jane Sample, and I analyze in 3 our Judicial Conduct treatise. The task of applying the law reflected in a body of rules and interpretive 4 precedent to the facts of specific cases is a task that lawyers are specially trained to undertake. And 5 research by a political science colleague here at Indiana University has shown that lawyers and non-6 lawyers think about legal issues differently, with lawyers acculturated to justify their conclusions with 7 greater resort to text and precedent. And, so, I support non-lawyer participation in the process, but urge 8 the Commission to be mindful of the central role that law does indeed play in the disciplinary process. It 9 is not all about perspective when addressing what level of non-lawyer participation is optimal. And with 10 that, I genuinely appreciate your willingness to juggle the schedule, and I am sorry to Judge Kourlis for 11 treading on her toes and sort of cutting her off in order for you to accommodate me. Happy to take any 12 questions that you folks may have.

13

14 Rep. Weissman

15 All right, Professor, thank you, and we apologize for maybe getting zoom links mixed up and not being 16 able to connect you at the time that we had initially promised. Committee, are there questions for 17 Professor Geyh? Madam Vice Chair.

18

19 Rep. Carver

20 Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have two questions. Professor, you referenced Illinois and that, in your opinion, 21 the Colorado Commission that their proposal goes further than Illinois. And this is something you know, 22 if you wanted to provide the information offline, that would be great. Could you go into a little more 23 detail on why you think. Let me just throw in, I am not aware, and if you are, I would greatly appreciate 24 it. Is any state doing what the Commission is proposing, as far as no role for the supreme court in 25 deciding discipline. I have heard Illinois referenced and, also, in another article Oklahoma, but that's 26 why your comment that Illinois system is actually different than what the Commission's proposal is 27 piqued my interest. So, could you speak to that please?

28

29 Charles Geyh

30 Sure can. And I think one of the things I want to be careful about is that I really found both the 31 Commission's position and the Judicial Department's response to be thoughtful. They are both. They 32 disagree. But what we're really engaging in is a Goldilocks exercise here between judicial independence 33 and accountability. And we're trying to reach something that's just right. When there isn't really a just 34 right answer. There are varying gradations of good to okay. The short answer your question is this.
35 Illinois is unusual in that it takes final disposition of all judicial disciplinary matters out of the hands of 36 the Supreme Court and assigns it to a specially created tribunal. What it does do there is give the 37 Supreme Court the opportunity to have one of the seven members be a member of the Supreme Court 38 and two other members being named by the Supreme Court, itself. In addition, there are two other lower 39 court judges involved, but for purposes of my point, three of the seven members are selected by the 40 Supreme Court itself. And, so, while they don't have final control, they have meaningful say over the 1 selection of the tribunal and include in their numbers a member. The Illinois proposal, as I understand it, 2 does not include the Supreme Court in that way. I mean, it is. It keeps them out of the loop. And my 3 only point, honestly, is that I think that keeping the Supreme Court out of the loop makes a lot of sense 4 when the Supreme Court is investigating its own folk and that's why I kind of like the Pennsylvania 5 model. But I'm not sure that starting from the traditional notion, the traditional hierarchy is justified in 6 other situations. Unless we have and if you acquire a lot more information suggesting bungling by the 7 Supreme Court of cases involving lower court judges, that would certainly affect, influence my thinking.

8 As far as what other jurisdictions are doing, I am not aware of other jurisdictions that go as far as 9 Illinois. As I was sort of saying, most jurisdictions have a judiciary that is institutionally independent, 10 more so than the federal system. What's one of the interesting things is that the state judiciaries are less 11 independent in decisional independence, because most of them are subject to election or re-election.
12 Whereas the federal system doesn't have that. But the federal system, Congress can regulate court 13 jurisdiction. They can regulate court administration. They can regulate court practice and procedure.
14 Whereas in many states, that's not the case. That the tradition and the sort of center of gravity is, we let 15 them regulate their own affairs. And, so, to my way of thinking, having the Supreme Court at the apex 16 of that system is the default. It's an appropriate default. And you should move off of it only if you have 17 good reason to do so.

18

19 Rep. Weissman

20 Professor.

21

22 Rep. Weissman

23 Madam Vice Chair.

24

25 Rep. Carver

26 Thank you for that. That's helpful. And most of the references that I've seen analogous to the 27 Commission proposal in some regard has been Illinois. There's one reference I saw to Oklahoma. Do 28 you have knowledge of Oklahoma's situation with regards to the role of the Supreme Court?

29

30 Rep. Weissman

31 Professor.

32

33 Charles Geyh

34 I wish I did, and this is where I think Cindy Gray is the encyclopedia. I am kind of the style guide, and, 35 so, I would encourage folks to reach out to her with Oklahoma based information. My work does not 36 take me in the direction of looking in a granular way at what individual commissions are doing around 37 the country.

38

39

40

1 Rep. Carver

2 Thank you, Professor and the sterling Ms. Gray did provide us with a list of 13 states that create a 3 separate special tribunal when there is alleged misconduct by a supreme court member. So, she did 4 provide us that. Thank you so much.

5

6 Rep. Weissman

7 I'm impressed with your very metallic pun there, Madam Vice Chair. Rep. Bacon, did you have a 8 question or was that already answered?

9

10 Rep. Bacon

11 It was answered. I had very similar questions. Thank you.

12

13 Rep. Weissman

14 Okay, I have one more. Professor, about midway through your comments. And you know, you've 15 spoken to this again just now. It sounds like you were advocating to the question of what should be the 16 final decision-making entity, where lower judges, county court, district court, even court of appeals 17 judges are implicated. Then, I believe that you support the idea that the state high court, our Supreme 18 Court, would be the final decision-making entity there. However, I believe I also heard you strongly 19 urge that where a Supreme Court justice is implicated, then there should be a different final deciding 20 structure. You've spoken favorably about, or somewhat favorably, at least. I don't mean to put words in 21 your mouth. About the Illinois model, where you have seven of whom the Supreme Court has some role 22 in choosing. What from your style guide, research. How might you advise this committee as to 23 structuring an alternate decider, specifically where supreme court justices are implicated?

24

25 Charles Geyh

26 Terrific. And what I can do after this is send a copy. My closest experience is with Pennsylvania. We 27 just heard from someone else that Cindy has 13 options in play, and I'd be happy to send you the one 28 that I have the most familiarity with. I mean, essentially, what it comes down to is that it is a body of lay 29 folk, lawyers, and judges that are selected by different constituencies. And is it that far different from the 30 one that Illinois is using? I should say that my hesitation with Illinois is that I worry a little bit about 31 taking all power out of the Supreme Court's hands when that is sort of the standard operating procedure 32 without good reason to move off of it. And that reflects my own institutional conservatism. When the 33 Supreme Court is misbehaving, when it is self-dealing, we got to do something. And on the other hand, 34 when we are talking about rank-and-file discipline of lower court members, having the high court 35 involved doesn't bother me. And, so, going to what I would regard as the extreme of taking things away 36 from them and putting it in a separate body, strikes me as unnecessary. That said, if the Illinois model. It 37 is not a bad model in terms of identifying who all would be on this body, with the exception that I don't 38 think. Yeah, I think the Illinois model is perfectly fine in the sense that it does not include any supreme 39 court involvement, which I think would be good if we're talking about limiting that body's role to ruling 40 in cases where the supreme court is involved. And note that it would be an ad hoc thing. I don't think

1 you'd have a standing group of people tapping their toes for years at a time, waiting for a supreme court
2 justice to get in trouble. That you would constitute it ad hoc, specially when you had one of those cases 3 coming up. And I think using Illinois' method of selection strikes me as perfectly sensible. I just 4 wouldn't go as far as Illinois to extend it, not only to Supreme Court cases, but to cases involving lower 5 court judges.

6
7 Rep. Weissman

8 Okay, Professor, appreciate that. So, one bright line I'm hearing is that, provided we're constituting an 9 alternative panel, if you will. Specifically, to pass on supreme court justices, you would have, unlike 10 Illinois now, you would have the Supreme Court have zero role into the constitution or composition of 11 such a panel. I wonder, if you wanted to offer any further thoughts on what is an upper and lower bound 12 on size, of how many people should be on such a panel, what different mix of entities would be making 13 appointments to this panel.

14
15 Charles Geyh

16 Sure, I think that, first of all, I want to just reiterate that that I am on board with, I'm not on board with 17 Illinois creating a separate panel independent of the Supreme Court for purposes of regulating the 18 behavior of judges off the Supreme Court. But, when it comes to Supreme Court justices, I'm cool with 19 that. As far as membership numbers go, the only thing I'm tapping into is analogous data, where it looks 20 as though the smaller the number. Cat here. This is the problem with home Zoom. The smaller the 21 number. Let's put it this way. There comes a point when you reach a number that is so high that each 22 person sort of feels as though they can hide behind the votes of their colleagues, and they are more 23 inclined to sort of go further than they might otherwise. So that, for example, larger courts are more 24 likely to overturn their own precedent than smaller ones. So that I think that if you're looking at a body 25 of somewhere in the neighborhood of seven people, the same kinds of considerations you would be 26 looking at in constituting a high court, 5-7-9. Somewhere in that zone and where you want judges 27 represented, you want lawyers represented. You do want lay representation on that group. And whether 28 you have, and I can, again, follow up with some suggestions on who should be doing the appointing. But 29 I think you are looking at a diverse group of people appointing, a diverse group of people who are I 30 would say 5-7-9, is kind of the zone. Nine strikes me as a little high for this kind of purpose.

31
32 Rep. Weissman

33 All right, Professor, thank you. I believe that you have the email address from Ms. Jenson on our staff 34 here. We would certainly invite you to send anything else that you think would be relevant for our 35 consideration subsequent to today's discussion, and Ms Jenson can get that to all members of the 36 committee and the public as well. Senator Gonzales had a question.

37
38 Sen. Gonzales

39 Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you, Professor for your presentation. I am curious if in your scan of the 40 structures of the judicial discipline processes across the country, if you have insight to share with us

1 regarding whether and when the complaints or the rulings around judicial discipline of a particular judge 2 become public or not, or whether they remain confidential throughout.

3
4 Rep. Weissman

5 Professor.

6
7 Charles Geyh

8 Yeah, I mean, I did sort of poke at that in my prepared remarks, in the sense that from where I sit, I join 9 both the Commission and the Judicial Branch, in the view that at the point where a decision is made to 10 proceed with an adjudication. At the point where an indictment in effect is made, that is the magic 11 moment when the name of the judge and a description of their conduct goes public. Prior to that point, 12 my concern is that as much as I like transparency, 90% of these cases are nonsense. They're unhappy 13 litigants, who are basically envisioning corruption that isn't there. There's not a shred of anything. And 14 we don't want those just polluting the pool, because it creates the misimpression that the judiciary is 15 peopled with corrupt folk, when that is simply not the case. That wait until you reach a magic moment 16 where the commission has investigated and concluded that proceeding is necessary, and that is the point 17 at which the proceedings, from that point forward, really, I think, need to be a matter of public record.
18 And I should say that part of the reason is, part of it is, if this works the way it should, you're going to 19 see some more disciplinary activity and some more legitimate complaints filed. And that isn't a sign of a 20 problem. That's the sign of a system in good repair. People who point to a deficit of disciplinary activity 21 may try to turn that into a good thing, but it really, really isn't. And, so, I think that you will see a 22 healthy and modest change that way, and the legitimacy of the Judiciary will be improved. Because you 23 won't have people muttering to themselves about private reprimands and knowing nothing or public 24 reprimands and knowing nothing about why. Why didn't you suspend him? Why didn't you remove 25 him? And I think that's where becoming increasingly transparent, beginning with the moment that you 26 proceed from the commission deciding to go forward, is where I would draw that line.

27
28 Rep. Weissman

29 Senator.

30
31 Sen. Gonzales

32 Thank you. And, so, you would, thank you for that, Professor. And, so, the line that you're drawing 33 would be at the point when the complaint is found to be grounded and not at the conclusion of the 34 discipline process. You're saying a bit earlier than that. Thank you.

35
36 Charles Geyh

37 Absolutely. And again, just to be clear, I think I'm joining the . . . I was really heartened by the fact that I 38 think the Commission and the Judicial Branch are on board with that, that they're on board with moving 39 it up. Colorado is an outlier. The majority rule is to open the door up a little earlier in the process. And, 40 so, I think that's a wise thing.

1 Sen. Gonzales

2 Thank you.

3

4 Rep. Weissman

5 Okay, Professor, one more question, at the risk of going a little bit into the weeds. In sorting out what is 6 a grounded complaint to use Senator Gonzales's term, what is substantiated and thus, what would 7 proceed to formal proceedings? Access by our judicial discipline commission to relevant information is 8 important, and how that's going has been the subject of rather a bit of contention around here. Do you 9 have any sort of guideposts from your looking at other states? What we need to make sure . . . Sorry, I 10 was just to finish that thought real quick, anything that you think is particularly important in terms of 11 making sure that the Commission on Judicial discipline, or whatever other name it goes by in other 12 states, can get the information that it needs, including by subpoena if necessary.

13

14 Charles Geyh

15 Right. It seems to me that when you're in the middle of an adjudication, once you reach the point of 16 saying yes, there is reason to proceed, and we're now in front of a special master or an adjudicatory 17 body, that body ought to have the power to enforce discovery rules as needed. Where it gets dicey, I 18 think, and I think this is what you're referring to, is prior to that point where the commission is trying to 19 investigate whether there is something there. Now, and to which I have sort of two partial answers, none 20 of them satisfactory. Because again, this may be worth a consultation with Cindy to see whether she is 21 aware of specifics. But there are two points I do want to make. One, is that the Code itself makes it a 22 violation of the Code not to cooperate in the disciplinary process. And to some extent, I think 23 sandbagging discovery when you are under investigation is itself a Code problem, and so I would not 24 hesitate to wield that provision as a way to extract a little bit of cooperation when it comes to gathering 25 information from the target of an investigation. If that is unavailing, I do think that it is going to be 26 necessary to explore options of consulting or of having the adjudicative bodies, be it special masters or 27 otherwise, who are ordinarily hearing formal proceedings, also be available to resolve discovery 28 disputes at pre-litigation. I mean subpoenas, in other words, I'm reminded here less of the civil litigation 29 process than I am of the January 6 Commission and its efforts to subpoena folks to gather information, 30 to see whether there's any there, there, and having to go to courts in order to resolve unwillingness to 31 comply with that kind of discovery at the earliest stage. So, part of it, I think, is the stick of saying 32 uncooperative behavior is itself a Code problem, and, then, if it's legitimate, discovery disputes, finding, 33 creating a mechanism whereby the special masters or the adjudicative body, even though they haven't 34 been activated yet, is available to manage subpoena questions, for example. It would strike me as being 35 one avenue worth exploring subject to what Cindy can tell you, off the top of her head.

36

37 Rep. Weissman

38 All right, thank you, committee. We have time for maybe one more question for the Professor before we 39 ought to get back to IAALS. All right, seeing none. Professor, thank you for your time. This has been

- 1 very helpful. Again, feel free to send us anything by way of follow-up you would like to sort of
- 2 supplement the record, and we might possibly reach out to you.

Presentation by the Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System (IAALS);

Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline—
August 10, 2022 Hearing: Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System Presentation

1 Rebecca Love Kourlis

2 Is he available?

3

4 Rep. Weissman

5 I think, since they are here waiting for us, we will go right to the 10:15, segment, which is to hear from 6 the Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System, or IAALS. Ms. Kauffman, Justice
7 Kourlis, if you'd like to join us up front and please go ahead as though we're at 10:15. Yeah, Justice, I 8 apologize.

9

10 Rebecca Love Kourlis

11 Thank you, Chairman Weissman, if you would like to interrupt us at any point in time in order for 12 Professor Geyh to chime in, we can certainly step back and he can take the floor. We are here for the 13 morning, at your disposal. So, whatever is convenient for you. So, did you want to hand those out when 14 it's your turn? Okay. Chairman Weissman and members of the committee, thank you very much for the 15 opportunity to testify today, and most importantly, thank you for the time and attention you are devoting 16 to this matter.

17

18 Once I started to dig into your website, I realized the volume of materials that are being submitted to you 19 and the depth of the testimony. So, thank you for taking this as seriously as you obviously are. Let me 20 introduce myself a bit. My name is Rebecca Love Kourlis. I'm a former judge, both a trial court judge 21 and a member of the Colorado Supreme Court. In 2006, I left the Supreme Court to found IAALS, the 22 place with the terrible acronym, which stands for the Institute for the Advancement of the American 23 Legal System at the University of Denver. The mission of IAALS is to improve the legal system and to 24 develop through a process of research, convening of experts and stakeholders, practical implementable 25 solutions to real problems.

26

27 And you will hear more about the process that was used for the development of the IAALS 28 recommendations as they relate to judicial discipline. In 2017 and 18, and I was still at IAALS at the 29 time. I have since left IAALS and Ms. Kauffman has taken over. IAALS turned its attention to judicial 30 discipline systems around the nation and developed some pretty robust recommendations. You have 31 heard mention of those recommendations in some other testimony, and they've shown up in attachments 32 to some other materials that have been submitted to you. But Ms. Kauffman will speak to them in detail 33 in just a moment. So, for four decades, I have been in and around the Colorado justice system and justice 34 systems around the nation, actually. And I have some observations that I would like to offer for your

1 consideration before we dig into the specifics of the recommendations for change in our particular 2 discipline system.

3
4 First, I want to tell you with every bit of my heart that I continue to believe that the Colorado Judiciary
5 is peopled with really good judges and good people whose intent is to serve the law and the public. I 6 hope you do not take from this inquiry a sense that the system has persistent, pervasive, and corrosive 7 problems. I don't believe that. I do think that the merit selection system works beautifully, that the 8 judicial performance evaluation system works, and that most judges behave appropriately. On the other 9 hand, I also believe that even one instance of serious misconduct is too many, and that accountability 10 and transparency are very, very important. To that end, there are indeed changes that can and should be 11 made in the discipline process. In service of those goals and in furtherance of public trust and 12 confidence. Ms. Kauffman will talk to you about some of those specific recommendations as they line 13 up with IAALS's work. I would also commend to you what I think is an excellent summary of possible 14 changes, which is the summary presented by the Colorado Women's Bar Association. It's a one-and-a-15 half-page summary of their more fulsome filing with you, but I think it captures many of the things that 16 both appear in the IAALS work and that have come from other portions of the testimony here. But I 17 want to offer a slightly broader take on these questions before we hone in on specifics.

18
19 It seems to me that your inquiry has touched on three categories of conduct that have become the subject 20 of various reports and testimony and that have caused you to begin this deep dive examination of the 21 discipline system. The first category of conduct is workplace misconduct by non-judges, such as 22 employees of the Judicial Branch, in the State Court Administrator's Office, or otherwise. There have 23 been references in some of the materials to conduct by non-judges and a culture that discourages 24 complaints and permits bystanders to do nothing, perhaps. I don't think that conduct, no matter how 25 isolated or how prevalent is your primary focus here today, and I think sometimes it gets swept in with 26 the balance of the inquiry or focus. The second category is workplace misconduct by judges with 27 employees of the Judicial Branch. This seems to be the nub of the issue, and I will come back to it in just 28 a moment. The third is misconduct of judges in their official capacity, on the bench, or in their 29 adjudicative capacity, or in the community with members of the public. Some of the comments that I 30 have read that have been submitted to you come from people, for example, involved in family cases.
31 They refer to the misconduct of judges in actual pending litigation, judges acting in their formal 32 capacity. Those, for the most part, and certainly not all, but for the most part, those are the kinds of 33 complaints that may well be more properly appellate in nature that need to be raised through the court 34 system with an appeal to the Court of Appeals. There are differences between the second and third 35 categories. That is judges who are acting in the workplace and judges who are acting in their 36 adjudicative capacity. This category over here, which is the workplace misconduct, has historically been 37 looked at as more of a human resources issue, an employment issue. The third has been looked at as an 38 issue falling more clearly under the Code of Judicial Conduct and the jurisdiction of the discipline 39 commission. It's arguable that the discipline commission process is currently better suited for that 40 category. And part of the struggle here is in adapting it appropriately also to cover workplace

1 misconduct. For example, the nature of the complaint and the identity of the complainant are different 2 between categories two and three, and the solutions may be different. When a complainant is a Judicial 3 Department employee complaining about a judge, that person may have a greater interest in anonymity 4 and quick resolution of the matter than in transparency. When the complainant is a litigant, the balance 5 may well shift. You have to balance all of that as you wend your way through these recommendations.
6 Additionally, in the third category, as I just mentioned, complaints against judges in their official 7 capacity are disproportionately about issues that are properly the subject of appeal and not of discipline.
8 And that complicates things too, because it can make the numbers skew in a way that looks very 9 suspicious, but may not be.

10 11 When we turn our attention to the workplace conduct of judges with judicial employees, I want to 12 remind you that there are some emerging themes across the country which extend beyond the discipline 13 system. Discipline system changes may be necessary, but not ultimately sufficient. As I'm sure you 14 know, this question of workplace misconduct by judges has sprung into the national consciousness in the 15 last few years, partially in relationship to the MeToo movement, primarily in the context of sexual 16 harassment allegations. To that end, there have been various study groups and a number of reports, chief 17 among them being a report or two reports, actually, to Chief Justice Roberts on the United States 18 Supreme Court about the federal judiciary. There's also a pending piece of [legislation] in Congress 19 called the Judiciary Accountability Act. I want to tell you a little bit about what those recommendations 20 embrace, because I think it informs the kinds of issues you are looking at.

21
22 In response to the reports, the Judicial Conference of the Federal Judiciary created a new national Office 23 of Judicial Integrity. The national office, "Serves as a resource outside of the court's chain of command, 24 providing confidential help, information and referral, answering questions and providing guidance on 25 informal and formal complaint options for addressing workplace harassment, abusive conduct or other 26 wrongful conduct." The model employment dispute resolution plan for the Federal Judiciary was also 27 updated in 2019 to include different pathways for resolving employment disputes and very enhanced 28 training requirements, among other components. You will see, I assume, some parallel lines here 29 between those actions and recommendations and some of the recommendations of the report by the 30 Investigative Law Group to the Judiciary, The report by Rita and McCord. That Report recommends the 31 creation of an Office of People and Culture in the Judicial Branch charged with developing the structure 32 and programs necessary to improve the workplace culture throughout the Branch. Those 33 recommendations include an impartial ombudsman.

34
35 Rep. Weissman

36 We may take you up on your offer after all.

37
38 Rebecca Love Kourlis

39 Absolutely. I will pick right back up again when you're ready for us.

40

1 Rep. Weissman

2 All right, thanks for understanding as we work out the kinks here.

* * *

3 Rep. Weissman

4 All right. Justice Kourlis, Ms. Kauffman, please rejoin us and resume where you were sorry for the 5 bifurcation.

6

7 Rebecca Love Kourlis

8 It was definitely worth it. Let me stand on Professor Geyh's shoulders a little bit in terms of what he was 9 just talking about, and try to pull some threads together from my presentation.

10

11 First of all, I think there is a great deal of consensus around the notion that transparency is an issue in the 12 Colorado judicial discipline system and that proceeding should be transparent when the formal 13 complaint is filed. The problem that has always haunted the Judiciary, and parenthetically I have taken 14 this position for a very long time, but it's constitutional. So, that the roadblock that you all run up against 15 is the extent to which you choose to tangle with the Constitution. I think it is worth it, but it has its own 16 Pandora's Box implications, of course.

18 The two-tiered system, investigative and adjudicative. I think those themes run throughout all of the 19 recommendations that have come before you. Brittany will speak to that, and that's very well grounded 20 in the research. And then having a separate system when a Supreme Court justice is at issue also flows 21 through almost all of the recommendations, and I agree with Professor Geyh that taking the process 22 entirely out from under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court because of the possibility of that kind of 23 case is actually not warranted and will cause more problems than it solves over the long run. The points
