PER CURIAM

CHIEF JUSTICE BOATRIGHT, JUSTICE MÁRQUEZ, JUSTICE HOOD, JUSTICE GABRIEL, JUSTICE HART, JUSTICE SAMOUR, and JUSTICE BERKENKOTTER did not participate.

¶ 1 Former Chief Justice Nathan B. Coats, you appear before the Special Tribunal of the Colorado Supreme Court (“the Special Tribunal”) for imposition of discipline based on violations of the duties of your office as a Justice of the Colorado Supreme Court. The Special Tribunal was convened because the Supreme Court was required to recuse itself in this matter under Rule 41(b) of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (“RJD”).

¶ 2 The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission”) recommends approval of the Amended Stipulation for Public Censure (“the Amended Stipulation”), which you and the Commission executed pursuant to RJD 37(e).

¶ 3 Consistent with the Amended Stipulation, the Commission recommends that the Special Tribunal issue a public censure. The Special Tribunal adopts this recommendation.

I. Stipulated Facts

¶ 4 In the Amended Stipulation, you and the Commission agreed to the following facts:

1. In 2000, Justice Coats was appointed to the Colorado Supreme Court, where he served as an Associate Justice until he became the Chief Justice on June 30, 2018. As provided by the Colorado Constitution, “the supreme court select(s) a chief justice from its own membership to serve at the pleasure of a majority of the court, who shall be the executive head of the judicial system.” Colo. Const. Art. VI, sec. 5(2).

2. Also by constitutional mandate, the Supreme Court appoints a State Court Administrator, Colo. Const. Art. VI, sec. 5(3), who by statute is responsible to the supreme court and who, in addition to the other duties dictated by the legislature, is directed to perform the duties assigned to him by the chief justice and the supreme court. Sec. 13-3-101(1), C.R.S. The State Court Administrator is also directed by statute to employ such other personnel as the Supreme Court deems necessary to aid the administration of the courts. Sec. 13-3-101(2), C. R. S.

3. In or around August of 2018, Justice Coats was briefed by Christopher T. Ryan, the State Court Administrator, of allegations that Mindy Masias, the Chief of Staff and second in command of the State Court Administrator's Office ("SCAO"), who had narrowly failed in her bid to be appointed State Court Administrator in the previous year, had falsified the date of an invoice in connection with a request for reimbursement for two chairs purchased for the Judicial Department rather than simply refiling her request on forms for the next fiscal year, as ordered by the SCAO Controller. Justice Coats also learned there was no apparent financial gain in Masias's decision to falsify the date of the invoice, given that she would have been entitled to the reimbursement with or without falsification.

4. Around the same time, Justice Coats, Ryan, and Andrew J. Rottman, Counsel to the Chief Justice, determined that if the allegations were true, appropriate discipline could depend upon whether this was an isolated incident of dishonesty or part of a pattern of misconduct. To that end, they decided that an independent employment investigator should be retained to determine whether Masias had actually falsified the date of the invoice, and that Masias's past requests for reimbursement should be audited to determine whether this was an isolated case of dishonesty or part of a pattern of misconduct.

5. David Powell of the law firm of Ogletree Deakins was retained to conduct the independent investigation regarding the falsified invoice and ultimately concluded that, in the absence of direct evidence, he could not find that Masias altered the invoice in question. At the same time, however, he could not find any evidence to support her account of initially returning the items and therefore having received multiple invoices. Notwithstanding Powell's findings, Justice Coats personally concluded that it appeared likely that Masias had in fact falsified the invoice and then continued lying to Powell and SCAO officials to avoid admitting her earlier dishonesty.

6. Tracey Griffith, a member of the SCAO's internal audit staff, produced a memorandum summarizing a broader audit of select requests for reimbursement by Masias, which identified a number of irregularities in Masias's past requests for reimbursement. When expressly queried by Justice Coats, Ryan represented to him and Rottman that the audit had revealed nothing beyond minor errors. Justice Coats asserts that he only learned of the existence of the Griffith memo much later, well after Ryan had resigned.

7. However, on October 5, 2018, Ryan forwarded Justice Coats an email describing the significant negative impact of Masias's conduct on the financial controls of the Judicial Department. The email referenced Griffith's memo as evidence. Justice Coats made no further inquiry into the email or Griffith's memo, an inquiry which may have resulted in his or Rottman's review of additional findings regarding Masias. Indeed, when shown the email much later, Justice Coats acknowledged receiving it but recalled nothing of its contents. Justice Coats stated that had he seen Griffith's memo earlier, he likely would have decided that Masias would be unfit to work for the Judicial Department in any capacity.

8. Justice Coats recalls that, weighing in favor of Masias's fitness to continue work for the Judicial Department, Ryan made clear that Masias was very important to his ability to function as State Court Administrator, in large part because of her experience and long-standing relationships with the chief judges and leadership teams throughout the state. According to Justice Coats, although not typical of personnel matters, considering Masias's high rank in the SCAO, various disciplinary remedies were discussed with Justice Coats, who kept the full Supreme Court apprised of the investigation and options under consideration.

9. During this same period, the SCAO was undergoing the Annual Financial and Compliance Audit conducted by the Office of the State Auditor ("OSA"). While discussions continued concerning appropriate discipline for Masias, Ryan reported to Justice Coats that the Financial Services Division would refuse to sign off on the audit unless Masias's employment was terminated. Ryan also discussed with Justice Coats the enmity between members of the Financial Services Division and Masias. Representing that Masias's continued employment with the SCAO would therefore place him in an untenable position, Ryan nevertheless suggested that Masias could still serve an important role with the Judicial Department as an independent contractor serving in a teaching and coordinating capacity. In response, and after consultation with the full Supreme Court, Justice Coats indicated that if no misconduct by Masias beyond the falsification of the invoice came to light, the Court would consider such a role – Justice Coats understood that if other misconduct by Masias did come to light, the Supreme Court had the authority to foreclose consideration of Masias for any such contract. If the Supreme Court objected to any such contract, and Ryan disregarded the Supreme Court's direction, the Supreme Court would be constitutionally empowered to remove Ryan from office.

10. On November 7, 2018, with Justice Coats's knowledge and approval, Ryan therefore presented Masias with a Notice of Disciplinary Decision. The Notice described Masias's falsification of records and subsequent dishonesty as having "created a lack of trust" and as having jeopardized "Judicial's financial records and systems” during the OSA Annual Audit. The Notice gave Masias an ultimatum to resign by November 15, 2018 or be terminated. Rather than choose either course of action, Masias requested and was granted leave by Ryan under the Family Medical Leave Act for a period of 12 weeks, and later extended through March of 2019.

11. As part of the OSA’s Annual Audit, Justice Coats signed off on a management representation letter dated December 7, 2018, attesting to the Judicial Department’s financial controls. Justice Coats did not require that this compliance letter be amended, or take any other action, to indicate to the OSA that the Judicial Department might consider a post-resignation contract with Masias.

12. On December 14, 2018, at an unscheduled meeting with Justice Coats attended by Rottman, Ryan, and Eric Brown, the Director of Human Resources for SCAO, Brown indicated that Masias felt her termination was unfair and that she could raise prior incidents of misconduct or discrimination by judges and staff resulting in lesser or no punishment, which could put the Judicial Department in an unfavorable light. Justice Coats recalled that, after reciting three or four such allegations, which Justice Coats asserts he discounted as obviously false or inconsequential, Brown asked whether Justice Coats wanted to hear any more. Justice Coats also recalled that when Ryan failed to respond to Justice Coats’s inquiry whether there was any reason for him to hear more, Justice Coats simply told Brown he did not need to hear more because such information would not affect his evaluation of Masias. In conjunction with Masias’s apparent complaint regarding unfair treatment and her medical issues, Justice Coats recalls directing that Masias be reassured that “nobody’s trying to hurt [Masias].” Others recall these events differently. Justice Coats asserts that he was not aware of the notes Brown was using at the meeting, what the press later called the “Brown Memo,” which referenced other allegations of discrimination or undisciplined misconduct spanning more than 20 years.

Justice Coats further asserts that he and the rest of the [Supreme] Court did not learn of the Brown Memo until much later, after Ryan's departure from the SCAO.

13. At that meeting, Brown subsequently raised the question whether a training contract with Masias might still be a possibility. Justice Coats again agreed that he and the Supreme Court would consider approving such a contract, so long as no additional misconduct by Masias came to light.

14. Following that meeting, Justice Coats states that he was concerned that Brown might proceed with Masias on his own regarding a post-resignation contract. As a result, Justice Coats left Rottman a voice message, which was saved, instructing him to emphasize to Brown that he could make no representations to Masias, and Justice Coats recalls having similarly emphasized to Ryan in a phone call that any future contract with Masias could be entered into, if at all, only after she had resigned and only if the contract could be executed in strict compliance with all applicable statutes, rules, and departmental policies.

15. Justice Coats agreed to a recommendation from SCAO staff that any contract to replace the fast-expiring existing leadership training contract should be put out for bid via a Request for Proposal ("RFP"). Justice Coats reports that as Chief Justice, he had no role in the RFP and only later was informed by Ryan that it had produced no bids and therefore a sole source determination for a contract to Masias was permissible. Several investigations have uncovered improprieties underlying this RFP which are beyond the scope of this [Amended] Stipulation.

16. On March 1, 2019, prior to Masias's resignation, Justice Coats was made aware that the hard drive on a M[ac] laptop, for which Masias had received authorization to conduct office business, had been corrupted such that no information on it was recoverable. Although it was explained to him that this could result from various causes, and Justice Coats ordered further analysis, the actual cause remains unexplained. Justice Coats believed it possible that Masias, or someone acting on her behalf, intentionally wiped the laptop to destroy evidence of misconduct – but this belief did not cause Justice Coats to reconsider contracting with Masias.

17. Throughout March of 2019, the SCAO legal staff negotiated Masias’s separation agreement with Masias’s attorney. Justice Coats asserts that as Chief Justice he was not involved in these negotiations, did not see the executed separation agreement until after Ryan’s resignation, was not aware that Masias’s attorney had unsuccessfully sought the promise of a training contract as part of that agreement, and was not aware that Masias’s attorney had successfully sought the promise of a post-resignation meeting with Justice Coats regarding the training contract as part of those negotiations. Masias’s resignation became effective March 19, 2019. Had Justice Coats personally reviewed the executed separation agreement, he likely would have learned of Masias’s surreptitious recording of former Chief Justice Nancy Rice, information which would have (and eventually did) cause him and the full Supreme Court to determine that a contract with Masias was inappropriate.

18. On March 21, 2019, Justice Coats met with Masias, Ryan, and Rottman in his chambers for discussion of Justice Coats’s vision of the kind of training he considered necessary for the different job categories in the Judicial Department and a briefing on what kind of training Masias was prepared to provide. After this meeting, Justice Coats understood that the State Court Administrator, acting on behalf of the Judicial Department, would negotiate a contract with Masias.

19. On April 15, 2019, a month after signing her separation agreement, Masias emailed the entire Judicial Department that she was resigning as Chief of Staff due to a very serious health condition. On the same day, Justice Coats and the rest of the Supreme Court received an anonymous letter alleging all manner of misconduct by Masias, as well as Ryan, Brown, and David Kribs, Chief Financial Officer of the SCAO. Justice Coats and the Supreme Court had particular concerns about one allegation regarding a separation agreement with an SCAO employee, which included a lengthy period of administrative leave with pay, as to which Justice Coats asserts neither he nor anyone else on the Supreme Court had been made aware. This employee had been accused of conducting improper surveillance of personnel in the Carr Center, including Masias and Brown. Specifically, the letter stated: “[This employee] disappeared one day because she was watching Mindy Masias and Eric Brown. She has been paid for months to not disclose what she had.”

20. After discussing this letter with the Supreme Court, Justice Coats therefore convened a meeting with Rottman, Ryan, Brown, as well as Terri Morrison and Beth Robinson, two members of the SCAO legal staff. Justice Coats learned that Masias had structured and negotiated the separation agreement with the employee, which was then approved by Ryan. The separation agreement included a non-disclosure provision. Justice Coats considered the agreement outrageous, said it was one of the “stupidest” things he had ever heard of, and was outraged that the Supreme Court had not been informed. Justice Coats demanded that in the future he be informed of all but the most mundane personnel actions. Justice Coats recalls that shortly after convening the meeting with SCAO staff, there were additional concerns about the allegation when Attorney General Phil Weiser called Justice Coats to say that the Controller was raising a similar allegation among employees in his office, that the allegation appeared very serious, and that the allegation warranted special attention. In response to direct questioning, however, Justice Coats recalls Ryan assuring him that the separation agreement may have been an overly cautious attempt to prevent a lawsuit but was not improper in any way. Justice Coats also recalls Morrison advising him that the separation agreement itself did not violate any applicable laws. Justice Coats therefore did not consider these anonymous allegations sufficient to foreclose consideration of Masias for the post-resignation contract.

21. On May 16, 2018, Justice Coats received a written notice from the OSA triggered by the April 15 anonymous letter. The OSA's notice advised Justice Coats that it had received the anonymous letter and, by statute, all tips concerning employment fraud require formal investigation, which could be conducted either by the OSA or the State Court Administrator. By letter dated May 29, 2019, Justice Coats advised the OSA that he and the Supreme Court had received the anonymous letter, looked into the allegations, and consulted with the Attorney General. Justice Coats requested that the OSA conduct the formal investigation.

22. Even though there existed allegations of serious misconduct by Masias, the veracity of which were subject to a barely begun formal OSA investigation, neither Justice Coats nor the Supreme Court ordered a halt to the consideration of Masias for a contract. Relatedly, when responding to the OSA inquiry whether it or the SCAO should conduct the investigation, Justice Coats did not mention that the Judicial Department was also close to finalizing a post-resignation contract with Masias.

23. Undisputed evidence reveals that Ryan, on behalf of the Judicial Department, entered into a contract with Masias on April 11, 2019, before the Judicial Department received the anonymous letter. Justice Coats asserts he had no knowledge of Ryan's execution of the contract in April. However, on June 3, 2019, with Justice Coats's and the Supreme Court's knowledge, Ryan publicly signed the same training contract on behalf of the Judicial Department with Masias. The contract contemplated a five-year arrangement with the Judicial Department paying Masias between $2,660,000 and $2,750,000 with an allowance for Masias to seek additional reimbursement for pre-approved travel and other expenses. Because the contract, however, provided duties for only a single year, Justice Coats was assured by the SCAO legal staff, in writing, that the contract committed the Judicial Department to pay for Masias's services for no more than that single year and was therefore a one-year contract.

24. On July 15, 2019, Justice Coats personally learned for the first time that Masias had surreptitiously recorded a conversation with former Chief Justice Rice concerning the reasons she had not been chosen to be the State Court Administrator. In March 2019, Justice Coats was aware that Masias had signed a separation agreement with the Judicial Department. Had Justice Coats exercised due diligence by obtaining and reviewing the final separation agreement, he could have learned of the recording earlier, prior to the execution of the contract with Masias. After Justice Coats discussed the matter with the Supreme Court in July 2019, consensus was reached that a contract to teach judges could not be fulfilled by someone known to surreptitiously record them and that the Court no longer had confidence in Ryan. It was therefore agreed that the Judicial Department should withdraw from the contract and that Ryan should resign, both of which occurred in subsequent days.

II. Stipulated Admissions to Judicial Misconduct

¶ 5 Former Chief Justice Coats failed to “perform judicial and administrative duties competently and diligently,” as required by Canon Rule 2.5(A) of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. By allowing the Judicial Department to contract with the former Chief of Staff after she had resigned in lieu of termination from the SCAO, former Chief Justice Coats undermined the public's confidence in the integrity of the judiciary and failed to exercise diligence in the performance of his administrative duties.

¶ 6 That is, former Chief Justice Coats allowed the potentially multimillion-dollar contract to be awarded to an employee the Judicial Department had earlier been willing to terminate for falsifying an invoice, despite having set a standard that the contract would not go forward if additional causes for concern arose and having subsequently learned of strong circumstantial evidence of misconduct on Masias's part that demonstrated dishonesty while she was still employed with the SCAO. That circumstantial evidence included the meeting about Masias's "knowing some bad stuff" about the Judicial Department, Masias's corrupted laptop, and Masias's role in the surveillance-related separation agreement that Justice Coats considered outrageous and by which Masias was alleged to have used state funds to silence a witness to her own conduct. Particularly concerning is that former Chief Justice Coats was separately contacted by the Attorney General and the State Auditor to advise him of the need to investigate the April 15 letter's allegations, which included Masias, but he did not notify the Attorney General or the OSA about the contemplated contract with a subject of the allegations. Nor did he await the results of the OSA's formal investigation before approving the post-resignation contract with the person being investigated. Although former Chief Justice Coats authorized withdrawal from the contract immediately upon his learning of Masias's surreptitious recording of former Chief Justice Rice, compliance with the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct required that former Chief Justice Coats prevent the Judicial Department from entering the contract prior to its public execution in June 2019.

¶ 7 By way of mitigation, the Commission acknowledged that former Chief Justice Coats made many of these decisions with, or based on the representations and recommendations of, the State Court Administrator, fellow judicial officers, non-lawyer professionals, and lawyers.

III. Stipulated Resolution of Formal Proceedings

¶ 8 RJD 37(e), titled “Stipulated Resolution of Formal Proceedings,” allows the Commission to file a “stipulated resolution” as a recommendation to the Special Tribunal in a disciplinary proceeding. In filing such a stipulation, the Commission has authority to recommend, among other possible sanctions, that the Special Tribunal “censure the [Justice] publicly . . . by written order.” RJD 36(e); accord Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(e).

¶ 9 Under RJD 40, after considering the evidence and the law, the Special Tribunal is required to issue a decision concerning the Commission’s recommendations. If the Commission recommends adoption of a stipulated resolution, “the [Special Tribunal] shall order it to become effective and issue any sanction provided in the stipulated resolution, unless the [Special Tribunal] determines that its terms do not comply with Rule 37(e) or are not supported by the record of proceedings.” RJD 40.

¶ 10 By the Amended Stipulation, former Chief Justice Coats waived his right to a hearing in formal proceedings and review by the Special Tribunal and agreed with the Commission’s recommendations that he be publicly censured. (Pursuant to RJD 6.5(a) and RJD 37(e), the Amended Stipulation, the Commission’s recommendations, and the record of proceedings became public when the Commission filed its recommendations with the Special Tribunal.)

¶ 11 The Commission noted that it often seeks an award of fees and costs in disciplinary matters. The Commission also noted that the expenses of this investigation were unusually high due to obstacles it encountered. But the Commission found that former Chief Justice Coats was cooperative in the investigation, and it did not attribute the obstacles to him. In light of his cooperation, the Commission does not seek fees or costs in this case.

¶ 12 Upon consideration of the law, the evidence, the record of proceedings, the Amended Stipulation, and the Commission’s recommendations, and being sufficiently advised in the premises, the Special Tribunal concludes that the terms of the Amended Stipulation comply with RJD 37(e) and are supported by the record of proceedings. Therefore, the Special Tribunal orders the Amended Stipulation to become effective and issues the agreed-upon sanction.

¶ 13 The Special Tribunal hereby publicly censures you, former Chief Justice Nathan B. Coats, for violating Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct Canon Rule 2.5(A).

The Masias Memo

Even the investigator stated in his report that he couldn't prove Mindy fabricated any document.

The reason for the termination is potentially debunked. Also, Mindy has a significant number of examples where "tone at the top" was not applied equally.

Instances where Judges were NOT held to the "tone at the top" but who have violated policy significantly:

- No investigation was held when the anonymous allegations of sexism and harassment were made against the Chief Justice and Chad. She was told to destroy the letter.
- Judge sends pornographic video over judicial email; nothing happened to him; he was appointed Chief Judge less than two years later. Judge sent a video over Judicial Branch email to another Judge. The video depicts a woman performing sexual acts on a bald man's head. The Judge suffered no repercussions for sending the video, and in fact, was promoted to Chief Judge a few months later. Turned the matter over to the Chief Justice who took no action.
- Negotiated a release agreement with a law clerk who accused her COA Judge of harassment in order to keep the COA Judge "safe" during the selection Supreme Court Justice selection process per the chief justice.
- Judge exposed and rubbed his hairy chest on a female employee's back; no action taken against the judge; judge is currently being considered for the senior judge program.
- Current pending EEOC complaint against two Justices.
- Mindy recommended to Chief Judge Kuenhold it was in the best interest of the branch to terminate Mr. Duarte due to the sexual relationships he had with his staff. Chief Judge Kuenhold stated that Mindy needed "to leave the courthouse and drive slowly out of town."

Instances where top level Managers in and outside SCAO (including two in Finance) were NOT held to the "tone at the top" level of accountability.

- Evidence a Financial manager accessed personal information on various leaders throughout the state using Accurint for no business reason; no discipline taken on him and he was promoted less than two years later to deputy director.
- Financial manager investigated twice for harassing behavior. Receives more staff and a better office. No mention of the complaints in his 2017 performance appraisal.
- Director of FSD complained about not working "even banker's hours" by staff. Staff of other division follow him to his bar and home and track that he does not place time in PTO system and is seen at home at 3:00 pm often or at bar.
- CPO takes picture of penis and sends to vendor; no disciplinary action taken.
- CPO has sex with a vendor on state time and on state property who later complains she felt she had to in order to keep her job; no disciplinary action taken.
- Court Administrator accused of asking an employee to backdate a document, no disciplinary action taken.
- Director of Court Services and FSD Director

- CPO directing all staff to swat a female on the backside, no disciplinary action taken.

Systemic examples of harassment

- Female employees in the room snapping fingers in unison asking when opportunities for women will ever be provided.
- Requested to convert part of the access to justice position to address diversity and inclusion; request ignored and thereby denied.
- Mindy's the only female Division Director out of 7.
- Data shows 73% of all terminated employees are female.
- Data shows females are promoted at a slower rate than men but performance on average is higher.
- After attempting to create a diversity and inclusion committee was told creating a diversity committee would never fly with the court and we aren't going to create an affirmative action plan.
- Was told by Chief Judges she needed to seek their permission to conduct harassment and discrimination investigations in districts, and seek their permission to visit districts before coming after an intense investigation of a Judge and Court Administrator for sexual harassment. This directive was given in order to suppress complaints. Recollection of this event occurred in the 2018 Judicial Conference by a Chief Judge in the audience who was questioning if that matter ever resolved and recognizing that this was wrong.

Report from a Justice about why MM wasn't selected for the position:

Insinuates the entire Supreme Court made the decision she didn't get the SCA position based on her gender by the following comments to Mindy after she didn't get the job:

- "You have to get inside these guys minds' when their thinking about picking a boss."
- "You don't look the part."
- "You're a small woman; you don't look the part."
- "There's sexism out there still, even in the government. If you don't think there is, you're wrong."
- "Need to dress less like a woman and more like an attorney on 17th street."
- When she ask if there was anything she could do to better position herself in the future, she was told, "Outside of running out and getting your law degree, there's not much you can do." The position only required a bachelor's degree and is currently occupied by a non-holding JD.

Transcribed recording of a conversation between Chief Justice Nancy Rice and SCAO
Chief of Staff Mindy Masias (2017).

Masias-Rice Recording--2017

1 Mindy Masias

2 Okay. Yeah, we will definitely get to the bottom of that, because when he left DPS, I thought that meant
3 Denver Public Safety, yeah, I'm sure most schools use a contractor.

5 Chief Justice Rice

6 Why is Carol so irritated?

8 Mindy Masias

9 I don't know. I suppose because she was turned down for a senior job.

10

12 She understood why, didn't she?

13

14 Mindy Masias

15 She did. I think she just wants to make sure. Yeah, and I do as well, but it is just how Carol is. You 16 know, equality is a big piece for her.

18 Chief Justice Rice

19 Yeah, I sort of have shown you favoritism to Alex.

20

23

24 Chief Justice Rice

25 I don't know how any of that works, to tell you the truth. I thought once you retired, you could work for 26 a certain number of hours,

28 Mindy Masias

29 110 days.

30

31 Chief Justice Rice

32 What does that 110 days?

33

35 110 days out of the calendar year, you can work 110 days.

38 For a PERA employer?

1 Mindy Masias

2 And beyond that, it'll reduce your benefit.

4 Chief Justice Rice

5 That's what Alex did.

7 Mindy Masias

8 Right. [Shuffling noises].

10 Chief Justice Rice

11 So, why do you think you didn't get it?

12

13 Mindy Masias

14 You know, I've thought a lot about it. And I'm assuming that part of the reason is, you know, I was in 15 place at the time. That the Office is not running at its most optimal.

17 Chief Justice Rice

18 Yeah, I think it's a little more than that, which is. Well, there's a lot of that. Which is that, you know, I
19 think Jerry, did you no favors. That the Office is not running well. But a lot of it has to do with sort of 20 this bigger concept of whether what the State Court needs is, you know, a really good manager or more
21 of visionary leader. And I think that people still see you as very much a day-to-day manager. Which is 22 not bad at all. Of course, it's really quite wonderful. But I think someone at work wanted something
23 beyond that. So, but it wasn't Mark who was nothing but ideas, and didn't really have any idea. So, it's a 24 tricky thing, particularly when you think back over sort of the history, just my limited history, there's a
25 person who was nothing but a D-kind of manager, really. Nobody liked him and didn't we didn't hire 26 him. Thinking that a guy from Langham.

28 Mindy Masias

29 Oh, Greg Langham.

30

31 Chief Justice Rice

32 Nor did we hire Dan Hall.

33

37 Chief Justice Rice

38 I don't think people were articulating it very well, but they wanted Jerry because he was a judge and 39 lawyer. But that was kind of a different thing. You need to understand that this group of Justices has no 40 experience with any of it. You know, I was the only person who was around.

1 Mindy Masias

2 Yeah, that's right, when Jerry was hired.

4 Chief Justice Rice

5 Yeah. So, Jerry is sort of what they think of. And almost in a way I don't know. But I have some sort of 6 specific ideas which may or may not be helpful. One is, I think you should have absolutely nothing to do
7 with HR. You should not identify yourself with HR in the least.

10 Okay.

11

12 Chief Justice Rice

13 If, and that's not because you do a bad job. It's because you've done over the years too good of a job and 14 you are identified with that. You should not go out to the courts and do HR. You should not, if 15 somebody calls you with an HR question, you should immediately forward it to Eric, you have to be 16 something other than Mindy, who used to be in HR.

20

21 Chief Justice Rice

22 I've said that before to you. In know its a real [indiscernible] area, but you do it really, really well. Eric 23 has to develop a new Eric. He needs to develop . . . Who's his second? I don't even know.

25 Mindy Masias

26 Her name is Dawn, and she's fantastic.

27

28 Chief Justice Rice

29 Yeah, and I didn't know that. You see what I am saying? So, if I don't know it, probably nobody on the 30 Court does. I mean, so that all has to happen. You have to not have line up anything to do at all, because 31 you are branded with that HR. Cut that, cut that umbilical cord right away. And second, I think and I
32 don't know what Chris is going to do. I mean, I'm not giving him much direction at all, because he's 33 really doing us a favor. But I think you and Chris need to have to talk about what it is you want to 34 accomplish with these next models.

36 Mindy Masias

38

39

40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 And if what you want to accomplish is to put yourself in a whole lot better position, really, just a little
3 bit better position, to get to be the State Court Administrator, I think you have to have some fairly firm

6 Mindy Masias

7 Okay.

9 Chief Justice Rice

10 And objectives that you can articulate and meet, other than just managing the Branch.

11

13 Okay, it's helpful.

15 Chief Justice Rice

16 Yeah, real specific kinds of stuff. And, then, I think it would also be very, very helpful if you could let 17 me give you another example. I mean, the difference between you and Eric at the Judicial Performance
18 Awards was basically nothing, right? You were both doing sort of the same thing. You were even taking 19 turns doing exactly the same thing. That, you can't do that anymore.

23

24 Chief Justice Rice

25 And I don't think you even. You mean it in only the best way. It's just sort of [indiscernible], but if you
26 want to be the State Court Administrator, you're not the Director of Human Relations. Does that make 27 sense?

28

29 Mindy Masias

30 Yeah, it totally makes sense.

31

32 Chief Justice Rice

33 So, Eric has to do that. Maybe with Dawn. You may have to welcome people to be silly like I am, or 34 whatever, but you have to be . . .

36 Mindy Masias

37 Different. Okay, which I always felt like Jerry should be a part of the Award Ceremony, but I hear what 38 you're saying that I need to somehow differentiate myself.

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 But if you're taking the place of Jerry, then you aren't equal to Jerry. You're not taking turns with him
3 reading from the script. If you have to do it, you have to be welcome, goodbye, or not at all.

8 Chief Justice Rice

9 We're happy to have an [indiscernible]. You have to be different.

10

13

14 Chief Justice Rice

15 Does that make sense?

16

17 Mindy Masias

18 It does. It does. So, here's where I'm at. I kind of struggle with whether or not I should try to put myself
19 in the position of, you know, going after the State Court Administrator position, or if I should just be 20 satisfied with being the Chief of Staff and be really good at it.

22 Chief Justice Rice

23 I would really recommend that the Chief of Staff position go away. And, then, we either have a deputy 24 or nothing.

27 Okay.

28

29 Chief Justice Rice

30 Because the way it's set up right now doesn't make any sense, and everybody gets that it doesn't make 31 any sense. I'll talk to Chris about that.

33 Chief Justice Rice

34 I'm giving him, I mean, he's got the authority come July 1. It is interim, and it will, but I'm not going to 35 say here's how you have to do it.

38 Okay.

40

1 Mindy Masias

4 Chief Justice Rice

5 That position doesn't make sense. It never did. It was set up wrong from the beginning. If I had really
6 understood it, I might have suddenly learned or, I mean, I tried in the beginning. I think of being Chief
7 to not mess around without Jerry [indiscernible]. I thought it was a very good choice, but it didn't work
8 to your benefit. Jerry has done nobody any favors. I hope that he just stays away, frankly. I saw that his 9 car was here, but I don't want to have meetings with him. I don't want to pretend it doesn't go down like 10 [indiscernible], right? Right, you know what I mean. I don't want him coming. He's gone. I just think 11 pre-Jerry was a really good guy. Did nice things. But post my film is, Jerry, screwed this up, and I don't 12 want him back.

14 Chief Justice Rice

15 [Indiscernible]. So, I guess what I would say is you're gonna have to really work something out with 16 Chris and do so not What do you want me to do, Chris? But more. Here's what I want to accomplish, 17 and here's where I want to be after these seven months. And you are going to have to decide. I want to 18 be the State Court Administrator. I want to be the Deputy. But, depending upon where you want to go, 19 you need to kind of take control of it and say, And so, help me.

23

24 Mindy Masias

25 Okay.

26

27 Chief Justice Rice

28 You know, how can you help me do this? Because you're in the best position to recreate yourself. Better 29 than anybody else. And that's also the most challenging position, right?

31 Mindy Masias

32 Mm hum, It is.

33

34 Chief Justice Rice

35 The Division Directors are just going to be hunkering down trying to keep their jobs and do as well as 36 they can.

38 Mindy Masias

39 Yeah, I think we're all feeling that way. Actually, I think we're all feeling that way.

40

2 [Indiscernible].

4 Mindy Masias

5 You know. At least not yet.

7 Chief Justice Rice

8 But you are the one who has the opportunity to re-define, so you need to. I would do something . . .

9 thinking about it.

11 Mindy Masias

12 Chief, yeah, trust me, I thought all weekend about it.

15 Yeah.

16

17 Mindy Masias

18 What would you think about talking to Chris about the supervision of the Directors. I have always felt 19 like . . .

21 Chief Justice Rice

22 No, I mean, that's the big, big problem. I've talked to Chris. I want to continue to talk to Chris.

23

25 Okay.

26

27 Chief Justice Rice

28 But that's still thinking a little bit too small. You need to, you need to talk with Chris about whether you 29 supervise the Directors.

31 Mindy Masias

32 That's what I mean. Yeah, that I feel like I should supervise the Directors and there, if any real change is 33 going to occur, then I feel like I need to have that leverage.

35 Chief Justice Rice

36 Yeah, and I think Chris is going to evaluate whether there needs to be any real change. So, over this

37 period of time, he's going to be. He's not going to be delegating a lot. So, that's why I think your position 38 is going to be kind of the trickiest to figure out.

1 Mindy Masias

2 Okay.

4 Chief Justice Rice

5 So, the only thing you can do, I think, is to say to Chris, You know, in eight months, I'm going to be the 6 State Court Administrator. Will you please help me accomplish that? Or, in eight months, I'm going to 7 be very happy to be the Deputy, and I'm here to help him in any way I can. Because, I think. I don't
8 know. I mean, it's so hard to predict, but I think there might be other people that apply. I mean, I think 9 this. Maybe not. Maybe yes. Maybe no. I mean, the Court is all over the place. So, . . .

13

14 Chief Justice Rice

15 It's really hard.

16

17 Mindy Masias

18 Okay, did you get any specific feedback other than I'm specifically seen as in the mold of HR? Did you 19 get any other feedback that I should consider?

21 Chief Justice Rice

22 No, I guess what I would say is this, I mean, do you have any familiarity with the military?

23

25 Um hum.

26

27 Chief Justice Rice

28 So, do you know what like a Master Sergeant would be?

29

30 Mindy Masias

31 Yeah.

32

33 Chief Justice Rice

34 Or even a Chief Master Sergeant, how the Army really could not run without that person?

35

38

39

40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 But that the leaders of the Army are nonetheless the officers, the generals, the colonels. Well, I think that
3 you are seen as the best, in some ways, the best Chief Master Sergeant there ever was. But that, maybe 4 not as a general.

6 Mindy Masias

7 Because they're not seeing the visionary piece that I have.

9 Chief Justice Rice

10 Yeah, so.

11

14

15 Chief Justice Rice

16 Which is why sometimes I think the Court felt pretty confused about everything. So, part of it is sort of a 17 classist. I don't want to use the word classist. Sort of a stereotypical warrior-judge thing, which is 18 interesting historically, since Jerry was the first State Court Administrator who was a lawyer-judge. But 19 nonetheless, as I told you, that's kind of in their heads. There may be a tendency among some to think 20 that we need a lawyer, we need a judge. Because that's the person who is able to communicate, as 21 opposed to meeting somebody who just [indiscernible]. You know, I sort of think the stronger the Chief,
22 the more that person should run things. But I do think that you need a State Court Administrator who 23 can run interference to the Chief, who can be over in the Capitol talking.

25 Chief Justice Rice

26 Whereas others are seen as sort of bad generals who couldn't function without you.

27

29 Okay.

30

31 Mindy Masias

32 I agree.

33

34 Chief Justice Rice

35 Somebody else who can talk to the Bar and say things that the Chief wants to.

36

37 Chief Justice Rice

38 And totally they got none of that from Jerry. [Indiscernible]. Which is one of the things which I actually 39 do recite. So, a strong Chief equals a, makes in my mind, means that we really need the ultimate 40 Administrator. A weaker Chief needs a stronger Administrator, right? So, one of the issues used to be,

1 well, when am I going to quit? And everybody's very concerned about it, since I think that I'm now sort
2 of perceived as a stronger Chief. Would you agree with that?

4 Chief Justice Rice

5 Yeah. So, people are really positioning around all of that, and looks like Allison's going to go over to the 6 Feds. So, there's a lot of that sort of playing into it.

8 Mindy Masias

9 I would.

10

11 Mindy Masias

12 Mum Hum. I'm sure.

13

14 Chief Justice Rice

15 And these guys are the next crowd. I mean, think about the Court. There's me, there's Coats whose never 16 been Chief, there's Allison, who will probably go to the Feds. Then, there's Gabriel, Hood, Boatright, 17 Marquez. That's all of them within a couple of years of each other. All of them are about, you know, the 18 same age. [Indiscernible]. So, who knows if Allison is going to be here when the next State Court
19 Administrator is chosen. I think that, I mean absent, running out and getting yourself a law degree, 20 there's nothing you can much do about that.

23 Mm hum, yeah.

24

25 Chief Justice Rice

26 And you're not necessarily different than Chris. He doesn't have a law degree, either. But in some ways, 27 has more credibility because he worked in the courts.

29 Mindy Masias

30 Sure. And he works side by side with all of the Justices.

31

32 Chief Justice Rice

33 Well, and because he is good at law. So, I mean, there's, it's like, weird. So, I don't know. I mean, I
34 think, I think there's a good chance you'll get it this next [time], but I think it's equally a chance that you
35 won't. Depending almost entirely on who applies. You know, what you could do with if this is your 36 lifelong ambition is probably go be a District Administrator some place. Which would probably kill you.

38 Mindy Masias

39 [Laughter]. I would probably want to change the role of the District Administrator. I don't want to be the 40 person who signs off on the bills. And I mean, I want to be the person who's pushing . . .

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 You made your choices.

4 Mindy Masias

5 I want to be the person who's pushing the envelope to make things different. I don't see our 6 administrators doing that, but . . .

8 Chief Justice Rice

9 No, we don't. You can't go get a law degree, so you're going to have to figure out something. So, in 10 general, another way to look at that. And, once again, sort of another Army is, sort of what we call, used 11 to call it, line and staff. You remember that? [Indiscernible] attorney's office? I always think that the 12 closer you are to being a real line officer. And I guess I should always model my career this way. The 13 more chance, particularly as a woman, you have of advancement in that whenever possible you want to 14 have a really good staff. So why? I mean budget, legislation. Some to help with the hard stuff. How are 15 we paying for this? What are the bills? Who documents making the deals? And it's a little different in 16 every environment, but you need to be line. And I was line at the U.S. Attorney's Office. I was line when 17 I was the Chief of Civil at the U.S. Attorney's Office. I wasn't the woman appointed to the HR
18 committee or the woman to the diversity committee. I was paying people and giving raises and firings.
19 You know, making decisions that affected settling cases. I had all the settlement part. So, I had the 20 power. That's what I think you and Chris need to negotiate. You don't want to be . . . Do you know what 21 I mean by staff? Which is, it makes the operation move more smoothly, but it doesn't make it move. So, 22 on the what more I could say, I guess that's what it is.

24 Mindy Masias

25 Okay.

26

27 Chief Justice Rice

28 Does any of that make sense to you?

29

30 Chief Justice Rice

31 It does. Yeah.

32

33 Chief Justice Rice

34 But its not easy to hear, though. Right?

35

36 Mindy Masias

37 Well, I think a lot of this is going to depend on my conversations with Chris and how amenable . . .

40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 And I haven't actually talked with him. Because I was so busy. Except I talked with [indiscernible] all
3 the time. We had a real deep conversation. He's trying to figure out what he's going to do with the Court
4 of Appeals. Frankly, I just wish Jerry would leave so he could start.

6 Mindy Masias

7 Well, I think nonetheless, Chris and I probably need to get started before Jerry leaves.

9 Chief Justice Rice

10 Everybody needs to act as if Jerry's no longer there. So, I cancelled the staff meeting. Because I do not 11 want to go through that.

12

15

16 Chief Justice Rice

17 Give me a day or two.

18

19 Mindy Masias

20 So, yeah, yeah, I would like to sit down and talk with Chris.

22 Chief Justice Rice

23 But you see what I mean, this is also a real opportunity, which Jerry never gave you, for you for you to 24 absolutely define yourself.

26 Mindy Masias

27 Mm hum. Because as soon as I would start defining myself,

28

29 Chief Justice Rice

30 You'd get pushback.

31

32 Mindy Masias

33 Mm hum. And it's really, I have to be honest with you, Chief. It's really hard to define yourself and 34 make headway when you aren't the supervisor, because people cling to and they will, particularly now, 35 cling to their authority.

37 Chief Justice Rice

38 Yeah, no I agree. I think you have the single hardest position. Nobody wants you to lay low, if you're 39 even thinking about that. But I would understand that if you did, actually. Because I think this is a 40 difficult situation for you. Where you go exactly to enhance your credentials, and frankly, maybe

1 whether you would want to move. I mean, I'm not even suggesting that it would be more [indiscernible]
2 if you left, but sometimes you have to leave to be appreciated.

4 Mindy Masias

5 Yeah, true. I'm also very strong and I hope people see that.

7 Chief Justice Rice

8 I think people know that. I think you can maybe do this, without having to do that. You can get it, 9 depending upon who applies.

11 Mindy Masias

12 And I'll see how I feel in six months. I mean.

14 Chief Justice Rice

15 Yeah, yeah. But I understand that this is far and away, the most, truly, the toughest position of 16 everybody. So, you have to, I mean, I'm sorry.

18 Mindy Masias

19 Yeah, I just think that it'll be easier to react and have a better grasp on what the future is after Chris and I 20 sit down and have a conversation.

22 Chief Justice Rice

23 Yeah, what I would do is probably ask for one later in the week. And I need to talk to Chris. I'll probably 24 try to do that tomorrow.

26 Mindy Masias

27 I have a funeral to go to at the end of the week.

28

29 Chief Justice Rice

30 I'm sorry.

31

32 Mindy Masias

33 So, maybe the beginning.

34

35 Chief Justice Rice

36 I don't think there is any particular rush. Yeah, maybe next week.

37

39 Yeah.

40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 Everybody likes you. I mean, you, you are the most popular.

4 Mindy Masias

5 Won the popular vote [laughs].

7 Chief Justice Rice

8 Right, but the thing is that. I mean, as I kept telling you over and over and over. You let the dust settle,
9 you get Jerry out of the way. Really, truly out of the way. And I think a lot of things will be a lot clearer.

10 And particularly with Chris running things over there, there's not going to be any excuses. Chris will 11 have some, Chris will have many, many good thoughts. He'll get us through the budget, but you need to 12 be two inches from him at all times. If you want, if you're willing.

15 Okay.

16

17 Chief Justice Rice

18 I mean, the hard stuff, don't worry. I'm sorry. Tell whoever.

19

20 Mindy Masias

21 Yeah, he's a supporter, so I'm too concerned about that.

22

23 Chief Justice Rice

24 And Eric's has got to do what people call you about this. And they do say, refer them to him. They'll go 25 out to the courts. Don't let the courts identify you as the HR person.

27 Mindy Masias

28 Oh, you mean, go out on, on any kind of HR business. I see what you're saying. I'm just gonna say I 29 don't, as a State Court Administrator, I think you have to be . . .

31 Chief Justice Rice

32 Nothing with HR.

33

34 Mindy Masias

35 Okay, yeah, I think we do need to be out and about in Districts.

37 Chief Justice Rice

38 I didn't mean to do that, I just . . . This Dawn person needs, she needs to become a face. I need to know 39 who she is.

40

1 Mindy Masias

2 Okay. Okay.

4 Chief Justice Rice

5 So, I hope you won't leave us. That sounds so lame, but I mean, I know this is kind of a blow. I wish
6 that you would give it a little bit of time to see how it seems to be working out.

9 Yeah.

10

11 Chief Justice Rice

12 Because I do think it might work out really, really well. But I'm not in a position to guarantee that.

13

15 No, of course not.

16

17 Chief Justice Rice

18 And it might be the same judges voting. [Excepting Allison Eid].

19

20 Mindy Masias

21 I'm sure it probably won't be in six months that things could change significantly with Justice Eid. And I 22 heard that Justice Coats might retire soon or no?

24 Chief Justice Rice

25 Not that I am aware of.

26

27 Mindy Masias

28 Okay.

29

30 Chief Justice Rice

31 I suspect that I'll be the next person retiring.

32

34 Oh, okay.

35

36 Chief Justice Rice

37 But I won't retire, you know, to affect this whole situation. I'll see this through.

38

39 Mindy Masias

40 Well, I appreciate you taking the time.

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 I just hope that what I said kind of made sense.

4 Mindy Masias

5 It makes sense. I mean, I think I have a lot to think about.

7 Chief Justice Rice

8 You know, we can certainly talk more. But I guess it's more than just Jerry's sins being laid at your 9 footsteps. So, I think it is also you being able to, not being able to because of Jerry.

12 Well, yeah, there's probably a whole.

14 Chief Justice Rice

15 Maybe the . . . will all do their jobs, like for example, another example. You know, the CJI wants to talk 16 to me. Well, make Rob set that up.

20

21 Chief Justice Rice

22 You don't have to do that. Rob, this needs to be set up for the Chief. Thank you.

23

24 Mindy Masias

25 Okay.

26

27 Chief Justice Rice

28 I mean, that's another example. That's his job. Make him do it.

29

30 Mindy Masias

31 Okay. I wasn't sure if that was something that you wanted to . . .

32

33 Chief Justice Rice

34 No, that's what I am saying. Rob can deal with some of them.

35

37 Okay.

38

39

40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 What I'm saying is just, don't. The men in particular, really appreciate the person who is sort of 3 secretarial and helpful and executive assistant-ish, but that's not the person who's going to hear from 4 them.

6 Mindy Masias

7 Right. Yeah, it's very true.

9 Chief Justice Rice

10 So, don't make some man be that.

11

14

15 Chief Justice Rice

17

18 Mindy Masias

19 I appreciate that advice.

20

22 Yeah.

23

24 Mindy Masias

25 Because I've never been a secretary. It's not what I went to school for.

26

27 Chief Justice Rice

28 No, you're not. But I'm saying, now you need to be the general.

29

30 Mindy Masias

31 Okay.

32

33 Chief Justice Rice

34 Chris. And Chris is going to be, Do you want to be the general? You don't have time to do that. You pay 35 people to do that.

37 Mindy Masias

38 Yeah. And Chris shared with me that he. That, you know, he doesn't want the position. But nonetheless,
39 we need to be successful. No matter what I choose to do or what he chooses to do in the future, there's a 40 lot of work to be done, and we need to be successful.

1 Chief Justice Rice
2 The situation with Terri. She now is involving Andy and you and me, and there was one question to be 3 answered, which is, why don't you retire?
5 Mindy Masias
6 Yeah, why [indiscernible] retire?
8 Chief Justice Rice
9 That's not your problem, that's Terri's problem. Terri comes to you. You say she wants to know that 10 answer. Thank you.
11
12 Mindy Masias
13 Okay.
14
15 Chief Justice Rice
16 It's not yours to find out that incidence. It's hers.
17
18 Mindy Masias
19 Yeah.
20
21 Chief Justice Rice
22 Do you see what I am saying?
23
24 Mindy Masias
25 I totally see what you're saying, and it's really . . .
26
27 Chief Justice Rice
28 You want me to keep? I can keep giving you examples, but I think you get it now.
29
30 Mindy Masias
31 I get it.
32
33 Chief Justice Rice
34 I'll keep saying,
35
36 Mindy Masias
37 Yeah, you're doing it again Mindy [laughing].
38
39 Chief Justice Rice
40 No, okay?

1 Mindy Masias
2 I appreciate it, because I've been . . .
4 Chief Justice Rice
5 It's your habit to . . .
7 Mindy Masias
8 Fill in the blanks.
10 Chief Justice Rice
11 Not only fill in the blanks, but to be a little bit of a caretaker. A lot of that is you, some of them just 12 being a woman, but . . .
14 Mindy Masias
15 I'm feeling an obligation to make things happen. You know, I've felt an obligation.
16
17 Chief Justice Rice
18 That your tricky part is not down. Your tricky part is up. Chris, I think Chris truly. I suspect 98% that he 19 will not change his mind. So, he doesn't want it. His wife makes plenty of money, more than he does.
20 He's got kids who need him to attend all sorts of games. His life is a lot more fragile. I mean, I think he 21 needs not to have that [indiscernible].
22
23 Mindy Masias
24 Well, and I'll just leave you with this Chief. I would like to be able to work more closely with you, and I
25 feel like I haven't been able to do that as much as I would like to, you know, working on budget and 26 legislative issues.
27
28 Chief Justice Rice
29 Always remember it's why and why and why. If something feels easy to you, change.
30
31 Mindy Masias
32 Okay.
33
34 Chief Justice Rice
35 Don't do judgment, don't do, you know, management theory. Do management. I don't know. That's all I 36 can say. Tell Chris the job you want, and then he can say, yes, no. But you decide what you want.
37
38 Mindy Masias
39 Okay. I know how I would design it.
40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 Don't.

4 Mindy Masias

5 I know exactly how, because I spent three years thinking about it.

7 Chief Justice Rice

8 You might see it as something different.

11 Yeah, absolutely.

12

13 Chief Justice Rice

14 But don't say that, don't tell him.

15

17 Okay.

18

19 Chief Justice Rice

20 I mean, Chris is just Chris, you know.

21

22 Mindy Masias

23 Yeah. But you know, like I said, I would like to be able to work more closely with you, and I have 24 oftentimes felt like if I either asked for it or I did it, it would look like I was stepping on Jerry's toes.

25 And I think I just need to have a really frank conversation with Chris.

27 Chief Justice Rice

28 Everybody knows you were in an impossible position.

29

30 Mindy Masias

31 And I just need to have . . .

32

33 Chief Justice Rice

34 And there is nobody who doesn't totally get that. But, nonetheless, the dust has . . .

35

36 Mindy Masias

37 Yeah, it settled, the more where we're at. And I just, I'm probably going to be really straightforward with 38 Chris, because things need to change. I don't want them to be where they're at right now and continue to 39 see this dysfunction. Because there's a lot of dysfunction.

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 I had a very frank talk of all the Chiefs about all of this. It was really nice of them to start including me
3 in their things. You know, I think, from my perspective, a lot of things. We have a lot of opportunity to 4 turn stuff around. But in my head, Jerry is gone, and I'm not gonna and you need to put that in your 5 head. You need to put that in your head. And if Jerry acts like he's still here.

7 Mindy Masias

8 Okay, well, he's not acting like he's still here. I'll be honest with you, and that's why I feel like it'd be 9 better for Chris and I to get started before he leaves.

12 Yes, absolutely.

13

14 Mindy Masias

15 Like it doesn't need to be tomorrow, but.

17 Chief Justice Rice

18 The decision is made. So, the only reason I'm saying is give Chris a little time to work things out with 19 the Court and things.

21 Mindy Masias

22 Yeah, I get he's in a tough position.

23

24 Chief Justice Rice

25 He's got the Supreme Court all worked out and I've talked with Loeb. Everything is in place. Things are 26 organized. We'll be fine. But like that Terri situation was a real chance to fix it. It doesn't need to involve 27 you and Andy. If I were you guys, stop your stupid meetings, just like I have. I mean, it's a different 28 world.

30 Mindy Masias

31 Okay. Stop which meetings?

32

33 Chief Justice Rice

34 Both Director meetings and the [indiscernible]. I'm not gonna micromanage to that extent. I'm gonna try 35 to tell you how I'm gonna handle things over here. Which is somebody wants to talk about something, 36 we'll talk about. We're not gonna have those meetings, because that's no longer our leadership.

40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 Just very straightforward. Jerry's gone.

4 Mindy Masias

5 All right. Do you want me to convey that to him?

7 Chief Justice Rice

8 No. Andy and I are going to do it, roll it out in our own way.

11 Okay, all right.

13 Chief Justice Rice

14 You know I don't do those meetings in the Summer, anyways.

15

17 Yeah, that's true. That's true.

18

19 Chief Justice Rice

20 I don't know what we also capture next. I mean, it's a problem. We should probably ultimately just let it
21 take care of itself. I'll also try to give you a couple of analogies. There are a couple ways to think about 22 it. You know the difference between the most competent Chief Master Sergeant versus the General.

23 What really mine versus staff? I remember when I was in the District Court, we always used to think.

24 Some of the justices still think this way. That if you weren't a judge or a lawyer, you really couldn't

25 understand. And some will even take the position that if your not a judge, you can't understand. And

26 that, on occasion, HR takes over judging. I've told you this before, that it's better to have a bad judicial 27 decision sometimes than a good HR decision. Judges just really need to own it, they need to screw up.

28 You sort of have to impress upon people that you [indiscernible]. Whatever you can do to think, at least,
29 to convince people that you have internalized leaders to be like a judge. And Chris I think gets that more 30 from having worked . . .

32 Mindy Masias

33 Directly for a judge.

35 Chief Justice Rice

36 Even though she was a jerk.

37

38 Mindy Masias

39 Didn't he work for Hufnagle?

40

1 Mindy Masias
2 He worked for Connie Peterson.
4 Mindy Masias
5 Peterson, that's right.
7 Chief Justice Rice
8 [Indiscernible; mutual laughter].
10 Mindy Masias
11 Yeah, ah, sometimes those experiences are the best ones, though.
12
13 Chief Justice Rice
14 That was a long time ago, but I think . . .
15
16 Mindy Masias
17 It shapes who you are. It really does.
18
19 Chief Justice Rice
20 People think of me as a trial attorney and I haven't tried a case in 35 years. But I have it. It is in my 21 pocket. The trial judge thing gets me so far. It's been 20 years. So, I mean, all I'm saying is I don't know 22 what you can do, but if you can identify with the judge, do so. I don't know how else to say it exactly.
23
24 Mindy Masias
25 Okay.
26
27 Chief Justice Rice
28 I mean I'm glad to sort of mentor along the way on a deal.
29
30 Mindy Masias
31 Yeah, any, any advice you take, I take it seriously. And I don't take advice from everybody, only people 32 that I trust.
33
34 Chief Justice Rice
35 Nor do I. And please, I can't, I cannot tell you what's going to happen. I have no idea.
36
37 Mindy Masias
38 Yeah, I understand that.
40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 I am one vote.

4 Mindy Masias

5 I understand that.

7 Chief Justice Rice

8 And I stress to the court, this is you guys's choice, really, because I'm going to be gone. Sooner or later, 9 you guys are going to have to own this one.

10

12 Like 10 years from now, you'll leave.

14 Chief Justice Rice

15 Way before it's time, way before retention, which is 70, I'm going to be 68 so you can sort of figure out 16 the parameters. 67, sorry. But in the next . . .

18 Mindy Masias

19 In a few days.

20

21 Chief Justice Rice

22 No, no, I think it is like next month. I mean it is in June.

23

25 June 2. I remember.

26

27 Chief Justice Rice

28 I mean, I don't think about it too much. All these birthdays, about the same time. Yeah. So that's what 29 I've been thinking.

31 Mindy Masias

32 Okay.

33

34 Chief Justice Rice

35 Sorry.

36

37 Mindy Masias

38 Well, there's no need to apologize. This is not a situation that anyone needs to apologize for. We're at 39 where we're at and continue to move forward.

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 No pauses with the Directors and trying to find. Try to be in a position to find as clearly as you can with 3 Chris. Your objectives set out. Your goals set out as clearly as possible, coming from you. Not 4 necessarily, what's best for the system.

7 Okay.

9 Chief Justice Rice

10 What's best for you, I think, versus the certainty, what's best for the system. But the mindset should be,
11 here's what I want.

12

15

16 Chief Justice Rice

17 And how can we work together to make this happen. And let Chris quantify it.

18

19 Mindy Masias

20 And you know, I do look forward to working with Chris.

21

23 Chris is very, very, very sharp.

24

26 He is.

27

28 Chief Justice Rice

29 I noticed in the way the two of you guys worked on my [indiscernible] 13 pay things really, was really.
30 It was really good the way you guys put that together.

32 Chief Justice Rice

33 I never in my life would have come up with that. That was unbelievably creative. It got us all sorts of 34 kudos, and all I had to do was give it a name and people like it, you know.

37 Yeah.

38

39 Mindy Masias

40 Yeah, I do think it's going to be the best thing for the system and for a whole variety of reasons.

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 The Justices, I told them. I said this is really, really good. You should have seen them work together.
3 So.

5 Mindy Masias

6 Good, thank you.

8 Chief Justice Rice

9 Nobody is selling you short. It's just.

10

11 Mindy Masias

12 Yeah, well, I'm used to being underestimated. I think my whole life I have been kind of underestimated, 13 and people need to see me do what I do, and then they realize.

15 Chief Justice Rice

16 Why do you think that you have been underestimated?

17

18 Mindy Masias

19 I think. One, I'm not pushy. Two, I come in with a positive attitude. I never come in angry or forceful
20 about anything, and so I think that is part of the package. It's part of what I bring that is a benefit. But it's 21 also a part that I think has people underestimate me initially, until they can see what I can do.

24 You are a small woman.

25

27 Small in stature, yes.

28

29 Chief Justice Rice

30 You don't look the part of. You don't look like the women partners on 17th Street.

31

33 Yeah.

34

35 Chief Justice Rice

36 You don't look like Allison or me or Monica or even the women on the Court of Appeals.

37

38 Mindy Masias

39 Should I change my hair?

40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 You might think about it. You need to do something to make yourself not be underestimated. You know,
3 Allison gets underestimated. And I'm sure people say the same about me, but Allison gets
4 underestimated a little bit sometimes. Because I've read, that she's told me, people say that, you know,
5 she doesn't dress nicely enough, or she doesn't. You know, when I decided that I wanted to be Chief, I
6 started dressing differently since almost every day, and not much I can do with my hair, because it's just 7 so naturally curly. But you know, it's still trying to be, you know that old dress for your next job
8 business? You might think about it a little bit. It's way too personal on my part, I suppose.

10 Mindy Masias

11 No, I appreciate that.

12

13 Chief Justice Rice

14 I don't want you not to be attractive. Yeah. So, so think of those guys. Think of that generation. They're 15 used to women. But they're used to women who are the partners at the law firms, or older women, from 16 their point of view, like me, who sort of, they've grown up with me being kind of their law
17 [indiscernible]. Do you know what I mean?

20 Mm hum.

21

22 Chief Justice Rice

23 Just think of, just put yourself in that position.

24

25 Mindy Masias

26 Okay.

27

28 Chief Justice Rice

29 And then, I always go back to it at some certain point. I don't know if they can adjust to me. And I think
30 that that sort of has worked for me in some ways, because I've been pretty lucky, but I don't think it 31 always works.

33 Mindy Masias

34 Yeah, well, and sometimes you don't have that much time to have them adjust to me.

35

36 Chief Justice Rice

37 You know, there's, there's sexism out there still. And I think to pretend like there isn't even in the 38 government is. . .

40

1 Mindy Masias
2 We're crazy to think there isn't. Yeah, no. I see it.
4 Chief Justice Rice
5 About the only way you can make the sexism go away, I've noticed, is to be the boss.
6
7 Mindy Masias
8 Yeah, okay.
10 Chief Justice Rice
11 Well.
12
13 Mindy Masias
14 Yeah, thank you, Chief. I really appreciate it. I have . . .
15
16 Chief Justice Rice
17 Thank you for being so [indiscernible].
18
19 Mindy Masias
20 Yeah, of course I do.
21
22 Chief Justice Rice
23 Why do you bring these to me as opposed to anybody else?
24
25 Mindy Masias
26 Oh, well, I just always pick up the basket of stuff that needs to be signed.
27
28 Chief Justice Rice
29 Well, then, maybe you should assign somebody to do that.
30
31 Mindy Masias
32 I will, but then I wouldn't get to come over and see you.
33
34 Chief Justice Rice
35 Well, if that's your goal, and that's actually not a bad goal. I mean, I agree, but what I'm saying is, don't 36 let people assume, oh Mindy will do it.
37
38 Mindy Masias
39 Yeah, I hear that. I hear that and it's not something that I have given tons of thought to. But, I will. I will.
40

1 Chief Justice Rice

2 Go back and tell Terri, research this, or get somebody to research it.

4 Chief Justice Rice

5 And have the answers. And, then, based upon [indiscernible]. You don't need to do it.

8 Okay.

10 Mindy Masias

11 Okay, I will go [indiscernible]. You want change.

12

13 Chief Justice Rice

14 No, I want people to do their job. Not rely on me quite so much.

15

16 Chief Justice Rice

17 It can be crazy.

18

19 Mindy Masias

20 Yeah.

21

22 Mindy Masias

23 Yeah, and I'm sure it is. All right. Thanks, Chief.

24

25 Mindy Masias

26 Thank you , Mindy. You're doing great. I'm very glad you're [indiscernible].

27

28 [Indiscernible conversation that includes a male voice, possibly Andrew Rottman; recording ends].

Appendix 5

Colorado Judicial Department Agreement for Services by Independent Contractor (the Masias Contract), dually executed April 11, 2019 and June 3, 2019.

COLORADO JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT
AGREEMENT FOR SERVICES
BY INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR

1. PARTIES. This Agreement is made between the COLORADO JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT ("Department"), by and through the OFFICE OF THE STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR, and THE LEADERSHIP PRACTICE, LLC ("Contractor"), an independent contractor doing business as a Colorado limited liability company. Department and Contractor may individually be referred to as "Party" or collectively as "Parties." In consideration of their mutual promises and for their mutual benefit, the Parties agree as follows:
2. RECITALS AND PURPOSE.
 - A. The Department needs a highly experienced vendor with extensive court and probation experience who understands the Department's unique leadership organizational structure to partner with the Department to develop and facilitate a sustainable leadership strategy that addresses the continued development of formal and informal leaders at various levels throughout the Department.
 - B. Contractor is qualified, willing, and able to meet the Department's needs.
3. AUTHORITY.
 - A. The Department has determined in its sole discretion to award Contractor the opportunity to provide the services described in this Agreement for a period not to exceed five years.
 - B. Authority exists in the law and funds have been budgeted, appropriated, and otherwise made available, and a sufficient uncommitted balance thereof remains available for encumbering and subsequent payment for purposes of this Agreement.
4. EFFECTIVE DATE. This Agreement shall not be valid or enforceable until it is fully executed by both Parties (the "Effective Date"). The Department shall not be bound by any provision of this Agreement before the Effective Date, and shall have no obligation to pay Contractor for any work performed or expense incurred before the Effective Date.
5. TERM OF THE AGREEMENT.
 - A. Initial Term; Work Commencement. The Parties' respective performances under this Agreement shall commence on the latter of the Effective Date or April 1, 2019 and shall terminate on March 31, 2024 ("Initial Term") unless sooner terminated or renewed in accordance with the terms of this Agreement.
 - B. End of Term Extension. In the event this Agreement approaches the end of its Initial Term, the Department, at its discretion, upon written notice to Contractor as provided in §36, may unilaterally extend the Initial Term for a period not to exceed three months (an "End of Term Extension"). The provisions of this Agreement in effect when such notice is given shall remain in effect during the End of Term Extension. The End of Term Extension shall automatically terminate upon execution of a replacement contract or modification extending the total term of the Agreement.
 - C. Survival of Certain Terms. Any provision of this Agreement that imposes an obligation after termination or expiration of the Agreement shall survive the termination or expiration of the Agreement.
6. SCOPE OF WORK. The Contractor shall complete the services described in Exhibit A in accordance with the terms and conditions of this Agreement. The Department shall have no liability to compensate Contractor in connection with any services performed outside the scope of Exhibit A.

7. FEE AND PAYMENT.

- A. Fee. The Department shall compensate Contractor for services performed under this Agreement. The Department shall pay the Contractor in the amounts and in accordance with the schedule and other conditions set forth in Exhibit B.
- B. Not a Wage or Salary. It is specifically agreed that the fees paid under this Agreement are neither salary nor hourly wage, and any computation of fees based on performance time is for convenience of the Parties in determining value of service and not as salary or hourly wage.
- C. Method of Payment. Contractor shall initiate payment requests by submitting invoices to the Department on the schedule set forth in Exhibit B. Upon approval of the charges, Department shall promptly pay through its normal payment procedures. The Department's acceptance of an invoice does not constitute acceptance of services performed under this Agreement.
- D. Disputes. If the Contractor disputes any calculation, determination or amount of any payment, the Contractor shall notify the Department of its dispute within 30 days following the Contractor's receipt of the payment or notification of the determination or calculation of the payment by the Department, as appropriate. The Department will review the information presented by the Contractor and may make changes to its determination based on this review. The calculation, determination or payment amount that results from the Department's review shall be final. No payment that is subject to a dispute under this subsection shall be due until after the Department has concluded its review.
- E. Erroneous Payments. The Department may recover, at the Department's discretion, payments made to Contractor in error for any reason, including, but not limited to, overpayments or improper payments, and unexpended or excess funds received by Contractor. The Department may recover such payments by deduction from subsequent payments under this Contract, deduction from any payment due under any other contracts, grants or agreements between the Department and Contractor, or by any other appropriate method for collecting debt.

8. STATUS AS INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. This Agreement does not constitute a hiring by either Party. It is the Parties' intention that Contractor shall be an independent contractor and not Department's employee for all purposes, including, but not limited to, the Federal Insurance Contribution Act, the Social Security Act, the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, the Colorado Workers' Compensation Act, the Colorado Unemployment Insurance Act, and the Public Employees Retirement Association. Accordingly, no federal, state or local income tax or payroll tax of any kind, and no retirement contribution shall be withheld or paid by Department on behalf of Contractor or the employees of Contractor, if any.

9. PERFORMANCE SPECIFICATIONS. Department shall not exercise control over Contractor by overseeing the actual work or instructing Contractor as to how the work will be performed; however the parties agree that Contractor shall perform the services in accordance with recognized industry standards of care, skill and diligence for the type of services to be performed.

10. LICENSES, PERMITS, AND OTHER AUTHORIZATIONS. Contractor shall secure and maintain at all times during the term of this Agreement, at its sole expense, all licenses, permits, and other authorizations required by federal, state, and local laws and regulations to perform its obligations under this Agreement.

11. TRAINING. Department shall provide no training to Contractor, inasmuch as Contractor already possesses the skills needed to perform the work required under this Agreement.

12. CRIMINAL BACKGROUND CHECK.

- A. Background Check. The Department requires that all persons who perform services under this Agreement must pass a criminal background check before working under the Agreement, which background check shall be valid for two (2) years. All such background checks will be carried out, at no charge to the Contractor or the worker, by the Department's Human Resources Division under standards developed by the Department. In order to request a new or renewal background check, the Contractor should provide to the worker an "Authorization and Consent for Release of Information" form, in the form to be provided by the Department, and deliver the completed form to the Department's Representative, who will process the request and inform the Contractor of the result. No person shall perform any work under this Agreement without having in place a valid criminal background check. The decision as to whether the worker passes the criminal background check will be in the sole discretion of the Department.

- B. Notification. Contractor shall notify the Department in writing immediately upon discovering that any person performing services under this Agreement pleads guilty to, or is convicted of, a petty, misdemeanor, or felony offense during the term of this Agreement. The Contractor's report shall be accompanied by a newly completed "Authorization and Consent for Release of Information" form authorizing a new background check for the person who pled guilty or was convicted. The person who is subject of the report shall immediately cease performing services under this Agreement until otherwise informed by the Department.

13. VERIFICATION OF LEGAL STATUS.

- A. Business Entities. Contractor shall comply with C.R.S. §§ 8-17.5-101 et seq. Contractor certifies, warrants, and agrees that it does not knowingly employ or contract with an illegal alien to perform work under this Agreement and that it shall not knowingly contract with a subcontractor that fails to certify to Contractor that subcontractor shall not knowingly employ or contract with an illegal alien to perform work under this Agreement. Contractor shall confirm eligibility of all employees who are newly hired for employment in the United States to perform work under this Agreement through participation in either (i) the "E-verify Program," jointly administered by the Department of Homeland Security and the Social Security Administration or (ii) the "Department Program" administered by the Colorado Department of Labor and Employment ("DOL"). If Contractor elects to use the Department Program, Contractor must promptly provide copies of its "Notice of Participation" to the Department and to DOL.  - ii. Contractor must notify the Department in writing immediately if Contractor is no longer lawfully present in the United States pursuant to federal law, and/or if there is any change to Contractor's status that may impact Contractor's ability to lawfully perform the duties contained in this Agreement, including the expiration of any visa or authorization or change in policy if Contractor is the recipient of any deferred status.

14. PERA STATUS. At all times during the term of this Agreement, Contractor shall have a duty to notify the Department of the existence of any person, including Contractor himself/herself if doing business as an individual or sole proprietor, who is providing services to the Department under this Agreement who is a service retiree from the Public Employee Retirement Association (PERA) of Colorado, and who is also an owner or operator, or is related to an owner or operator, of the Contractor business entity. If the retiree has in the past worked as a government employee in a position covered by PERA, but will not be receiving retirement benefits from PERA during the term of this Agreement, Contractor shall also notify the Department in the event the retiree's status changes to that of PERA benefit recipient during the term of this Agreement. If the retiree is currently receiving retirement benefits from PERA, Contractor understands and agrees, and shall also notify said retiree, that in the event the retiree experiences any reduction or loss of PERA retirement benefits due to work under this Agreement, the Department shall not be liable for reimbursement of any such reduction or loss.
15. INCOME TAXES. Contractor understands and agrees that Contractor is responsible to pay, according to law, Contractor's federal, state and local income taxes. If Contractor is not a corporation, Contractor further understands and agrees to pay any self-employment (social security) tax that may be required by law.
16. UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION. Contractor shall not be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits for work performed under this Agreement, unless unemployment compensation coverage is provided by Contractor or by some entity other than Department.
17. WORKERS' COMPENSATION. No workers' compensation insurance shall be obtained by Department concerning Contractor or the employees of Contractor, if any. Contractor shall comply with workers' compensation law concerning Contractor and the employees of Contractor, if any.
18. FRINGE BENEFITS. Because Contractor is engaged in Contractor's own independent business, Contractor is not eligible for, and shall not participate in, any employer pension, health, or other fringe benefit plan of the Department.
19. VENDOR OFFSET. Pursuant to §24-30-202.4, as amended, C.R.S., the State Controller may withhold payment under the State's vendor offset intercept system for debts owed to State agencies for: (a) unpaid child support debt or child support arrearages; (b) unpaid balance of tax, accrued interest, or other charges specified in Article 21, Title 39, as amended, C.R.S.; (c) unpaid loans due to the Student Loan Division of the Department of Higher Education; (d) owed amounts required to be paid to the Unemployment Compensation Fund; and (e) any other unpaid debts owing to the State of any agency thereof, the amount of which is found to be owing as a result of final agency determination or reduced to judgment as certified by the Controller.
20. INSURANCE REQUIREMENTS.
 - A. Contractor shall obtain, and maintain at all times during the term of this Agreement, insurance in the following kinds and amounts:
 - (i) Workers' Compensation Insurance as required by state statute, and Employer's Liability Insurance covering all of contractor's employees acting within the course and scope of their employment.
 - (ii) Commercial General Liability Insurance written on an ISO occurrence form, covering premises operations, fire damage, independent contractors, products and completed operations, blanket contractual liability, personal injury, and advertising liability with minimum limits as follows:

- a. $1,000,000 each occurrence;
- b. $1,000,000 general aggregate;
- c. $1,000,000 products and completed operations aggregate; and
- d. $50,000 any one fire.

If any aggregate limit is reduced below $1,000,000 because of claims made or paid, Contractor shall immediately obtain additional insurance to restore the full aggregate limit and furnish to the Department a certificate or other document satisfactory to the Department showing compliance with this provision.

- (iii) Automobile Liability Insurance covering any auto used in performance of this Agreement (including owned, hired and non-owned autos) with a minimum limit of $1,000,000 each accident combined single limit.
 - (iv) Professional liability insurance with an aggregate limit of at least $1,000,000. For policies written on a claims-made basis, the policy shall include an endorsement, certificate or other evidence that coverage extends two years beyond the performance period of the Agreement. The insurance policy shall not contain a sexual misconduct exclusion.
- B. The State of Colorado shall be named as additional insured on the Commercial General Liability and Automobile Liability policies. Coverage required by this Agreement shall be primary over any insurance or self-insurance program carried by the State of Colorado.
 - C. The above insurance policies shall include provisions preventing cancellation or non-renewal without at least 30 days prior notice to Contractor, and Contractor shall notify the Department by certified mail, personal delivery with receipt or email of any such imminent cancellation or non-renewal within seven (7) days after Contractor's receipt of such notice.
 - D. Contractor shall require all insurance policies in any way related to this Agreement and secured and maintained by Contractor to include clauses stating that each carrier shall waive all rights of recovery, under subrogation or otherwise, against the State of Colorado, its agencies, institutions, organizations, officers, agents, employees and volunteers.
 - E. All policies evidencing the insurance coverage required hereunder shall be issued by insurance companies satisfactory to the State.
 - F. Contractor shall provide certificates showing insurance coverage required by this Agreement to the Department within 7 business days of the Effective Date of this Agreement, if not previously provided, but in no event later than the commencement of the services or delivery of the goods under this Agreement. No later than 15 days prior to the expiration date of any such coverage, Contractor shall deliver to the Department certificates of insurance evidencing renewals thereof. At any time during the term of this Agreement, the Department may request in writing, and Contractor shall thereupon within 10 days supply to the Department, evidence satisfactory to the Department of compliance with the provisions of this section.
21. CONFIDENTIALITY. In the event that Contractor obtains access to any records or files of the Department in connection with this Agreement, or in connection with the performance of its obligations under this Agreement, Contractor shall keep such records and information confidential and shall comply with all laws and regulations concerning the confidentiality of such records to the same extent as such laws and regulations apply to the Department. Contractor shall notify its employees and agents, if any, that they are subject to the confidentiality requirements as set forth above, and shall provide each employee or agent with a written explanation of the confidentiality requirements before the employee or agent is permitted access to confidential data.

22. COPYRIGHT/OWNERSHIP OF MATERIALS. By virtue of the compensation paid by the Department for services rendered by the Contractor and its employees or agents under this Agreement, Contractor acknowledges that adequate compensation will have been paid for any data, materials, or work products produced or created by the Contractor as a result of this Agreement. Contractor grants to the Department all right, title and interest in and to all such data, materials, or work products. Further, all copyrights, patents and royalties, if any, arising from the distribution of such data, materials or work products shall become the property of the Department or its assigns. To the extent required by the Department, Contractor shall place a notice of the Department's copyright on any or all materials produced under this Agreement.
23. PUBLICITY RELEASES. Contractor agrees not to refer to this Agreement or the services provided pursuant to this Agreement in commercial advertising in such a manner as to state or imply that the services provided are endorsed or preferred by the Department.
24. COMPLIANCE WITH LAW. The Parties shall comply with the letter and spirit of all applicable federal, state and local laws and regulations related to performance under this Agreement, including but not limited to the Colorado Antidiscrimination Act of 1957, as amended, (Section 24-34-401 et seq., C.R.S.) and other applicable law respecting discrimination and unfair employment practices.
25. CHOICE OF LAW; VENUE. The construction, interpretation and performance of this Agreement shall be governed by the laws of the State of Colorado, and any claim arising out of or relating to this Agreement or breach thereof shall be brought exclusively in the state courts of Colorado.
26. INDEMNIFICATION. To the maximum extent allowable by law, Contractor shall indemnify, save and hold harmless the Department, its employees and agents, against any and all claims, damages, liability and court awards including costs, expenses, and attorney fees incurred as a result of any act or omission by Contractor, or its employees, agents, subcontractors, or assignees pursuant to the terms of this Agreement.
27. LITIGATION REPORTING. If Contractor is served with a pleading or other document in connection with an action before a court or other administrative decision making body, and such pleading or document relates to this Agreement or may affect Contractor's ability to perform its obligations under this Agreement, Contractor shall, within 10 days after being served, notify the Department of such action and deliver copies of such pleading or document to the Department's principal representative.
28. TAX EXEMPTION. The Department is exempt from the payment of federal, state, and/or local government tax assessments. Contractor shall collect no tax from the Department, and the Department shall have no liability to Contractor for such taxes regardless of whether any political subdivision of the state imposes such taxes on the Contractor.
29. SEVERABILITY. If any part of this Agreement shall be held unenforceable, the rest of this Agreement will nevertheless remain in full force and effect provided that the Parties can continue to perform their obligations under this Agreement in accordance with its intent.
30. NON-WAIVER. The failure of either Party to exercise any of its rights under this Agreement for a breach thereof shall not be deemed to be a waiver of such rights or a waiver of any subsequent breach.
31. ENTIRE AGREEMENT; MODIFICATIONS. This Agreement, including all exhibits and attachments, is the complete integration of all understandings between the Parties. No prior or contemporaneous addition, deletion, or other amendment hereto shall have any force or effect whatsoever, unless contained in this writing. No subsequent novation, renewal, addition, deletion, or other amendment hereto shall have any force or effect unless embodied in a written contract executed by both Parties to this Agreement.

32. ORDER OF PRECEDENCE. In the event of a conflict or inconsistency between this Agreement and any Exhibit or attachment such conflict or inconsistency shall be resolved by reference to the documents in the following order of priority:
- A. The provisions of the main body of this Agreement.
 - B. Exhibit A, Scope of Work.
 - C. Exhibit B, Pricing.
33. ASSIGNMENT; SUBCONTRACTING. Contractor's rights and obligations hereunder are personal and may not be transferred, assigned or subcontracted without the prior, written consent of the Department. Any attempt at transfer, assignment, or subcontracting without such consent shall be void. All assignments, subcontracts, or Subcontractors approved by the Department are subject to all of the provisions of this Agreement. Contractor shall be solely responsible for all aspects of subcontracting arrangements and performance.
34. THIRD PARTY BENEFICIARIES. Except for the Parties' respective successors and assigns described in Paragraph 33, this Agreement does not and is not intended to confer any rights or remedies upon any person or entity other than the Parties.
35. TERMINATION
- A. Default. Either Party may terminate this Agreement upon default by the other Party, effective upon receipt of notice or at such other time as may be stated in the notice. "Default" is defined as the failure of a Party to fulfill any of its duties and obligations under this Agreement. The non-defaulting Party may in its discretion permit the other Party a period of up to two weeks to cure the default.
 - B. Loss of Funds. The Department is prohibited by law from making commitments beyond the term of the current Department Fiscal Year. Payment to Contractor beyond the current Department Fiscal Year is contingent on the appropriation and continuing availability of funding in any subsequent year. In the event that funding for any activity established by this Agreement is discontinued or decreased by the State of Colorado, or any federal funding source, Department may terminate this Agreement or reduce its scope effective immediately upon receipt of notice without penalty.
 - C. Public Interest. The Department is entering into this Agreement for the purpose of carrying out the public policy of the Colorado Judicial Branch. If this Agreement ceases to further such public policy, the Department may terminate this Agreement, in whole or in part, for convenience of the Department, when the interests of the Department so require. The Department shall give at least thirty (30) days written notice of such termination, specifying the part of the Agreement terminated and when the termination becomes effective.
 - D. Force Majeure. If acts of God or government authorities, natural disasters, or other emergencies beyond a party's reasonable control make it illegal or impossible for such Party to perform its obligations under this Agreement, such Party may terminate this Agreement upon written notice to the other Party without liability.
 - E. Final Payment. In the event of termination for any reason, Contractor shall be compensated for the value of services actually performed prior to the effective date of the termination.

Re: Disclosure of Employee Reimbursement Issue

We have information that leads us to believe that on July 15, 2018, Mindy Masias, the current Chief of Staff for the Colorado Judicial Department and an employee of the Colorado Judicial Department for more than 20 years, signed a personal reimbursement request form that included a receipt from Amazon.com Inc. that appears to have been altered. This was discovered on July 19, 2018 when Myra Dukes (Controller) retrieved the submitted reimbursement request from the accounting unit. David Kribs (CFO) and Marty Galvin (Sr. Finance Manager) brought this to my attention on July 19, 2018. Ms. Masias was subsequently provided numerous opportunities to explain the altered document, or to provide documentation showing that the Amazon receipt in question was in fact a valid receipt. Ms. Masias has not been able to do so. Rather, all additional information we have received has confirmed the altered nature of the receipt.

Management within the Office of the State Court Administrator has serious concerns with Ms. Masias' submission of what we believe to be an altered Amazon invoice because her conduct violates Colorado Judicial Department policy. Chief Justice Directive 04-02 states that all Judicial Department personnel shall comply with the fiscal policies and procedures established by the State Court Administrator. The Colorado Judicial Department Fiscal Rules and Procedures Chapter 1-2 states that funds shall not be disbursed without appropriate documentation and authorization of the goods purchased. Ms. Masias attempted to circumvent the policy and procedure control process by submitting altered documents for the reimbursement and has likely violated Colorado law.

The Judicial Department has developed and implemented an internal control framework that provides management of the organization with reasonable assurance that the financial records, transactions, and activity are accurate and in compliance with established general accounting principles. The organization depends on this framework to function as it is developed and intended. The control environment includes both hard controls (automated systems) and soft controls (policies and procedures).

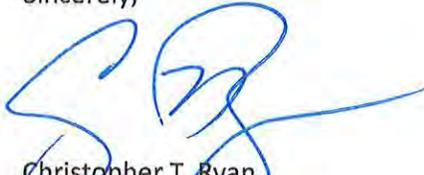

When an employee attempts to circumvent the established framework, the integrity of the system must be maintained, and appropriate steps taken to discourage this conduct. On Friday, August 17th, I informed Ms. Masias that, due to concerns about the integrity of the Colorado Judicial Department's financial systems, the following actions will be taken:

1. The Office of the State Auditor will be notified as part of the disclosures related to the statewide audit currently being performed. In addition, the Office of the State Auditor will be informed of the actions that have been taken internally to address the concerns raised by the altered Amazon receipt.
2. The Department will no longer reimburse Ms. Masias for out-of-pocket and travel-related expenditures.
3. Ms. Masias will no longer be allowed to approve any expenditures from any budget, including providing authorization for expenditures as a supervisor or budget manager.
4. Ms. Masias will no longer be allowed to be an authorized signer for Colorado Judicial Department documents, including contracts, intent-to-apply for grant forms, grant applications, and grant awards.

The Department may take other actions as necessary and required by Department policies and rules. Attached are copies of the emails and supporting documents, including the Amazon invoice, as well as any additional records pertaining to Ms. Masias. Enclosed with the letter is a copy of a timeline with supporting background information detailing how the altered Amazon receipt came to light. Also enclosed are relevant fiscal rules informing the decisions related to Ms. Masias.

Correspondence between Colorado State
Auditor Dianne Ray and Chief Justice
Nathan Coats with letters dated May 16, 2019 and May 29, 2019.

CONFIDENTIAL

VIA HAND DELIVERY

May 16, 2019

The Honorable Nathan B. Coats, Chief Justice
Colorado Supreme Court
2 East 14th Avenue
Denver CO 80203

Dear Chief Justice Coats:

The Office of the State Auditor (OSA) received an anonymous report to its Fraud Hotline concerning individuals and activities at the State Court Administrator's Office. We have conducted an initial screening of the report and determined that certain aspects of the report constitute allegations of occupational fraud (i.e., misappropriation of assets) that fall within the scope and jurisdiction of the Hotline.

Therefore, as required by Section 2-3-110.5(3)(b), C.R.S., we are referring this Hotline report to the Judicial Department, which has the responsibility for determining and taking appropriate action on the referred allegation. Due the nature of the complaint and the named individuals involved, we determined it was appropriate to address this referral directly to your attention. We have attached the workpapers related to the OSA's intake and screening of the Hotline report.

As the affected state agency, the Judicial Department may:

- Conduct an investigation internally with no involvement by the OSA.
- Conduct an investigation internally, but request the assistance of the OSA.
- Request that the OSA conduct an investigation.

Please contact me or Greg Fugate (greg.fugate@state.co.us, 303.869.2839) with any questions you have related to this Hotline referral, or if the Judicial Department is requesting that the

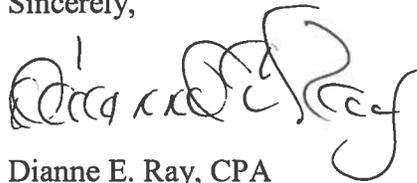

We Set the Standard for Good Government

OSA either conduct or assist with an investigation of this referred allegation. This referral has been assigned Ticket #20180081 for tracking purposes.

Section 2-3-110.5(4), C.R.S., requires the Judicial Department to report to the OSA by August 14, 2019 (i.e., within 90 days) on the disposition of this referral, including actions taken to respond to the fraud allegation and the results of any subsequent investigation. If a disposition has not been reached within 90 days, the Judicial Department must report to the OSA by August 8, 2019 on the status of the referral and then every 90 days thereafter until a disposition is reached. This disposition reporting requirement does not apply if the Judicial Department requests that the OSA conduct or assist with an investigation of the referred allegation.

Thank you for your assistance as we work together to fight occupational fraud and improve Colorado state government.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "Dianne E. Ray". The signature is stylized and cursive, with a large initial "D" and "R".

Attachment: Intake and Screening Report – Ticket #20190081

Mr. Governor and Chief Justice.

The moral of the employees at the State Court Administrator's Office is horrible as everyone is living in fear. Chris Ryan and senior staff have destroyed what used to be a positive environment. Nobody trusts anything they say as it has been a series of lies and deception. They all went to Virginia last year for a rowing class that cost thousands of dollars. This was a huge waste of money that did nothing for the good of the office. They have also had two women teach hundreds of judicial employees management skills for millions of dollars. They have also spent millions of dollars on consultants for ITS. This has caused everyone in ITS to believe they will be fired because the consultant doesn't like them. Management of the office believes it's ok to have retreats and meetings at resorts in the mountains. Most employees can't even afford to go these places.

Besides wasting money, Chris Ryan has continued to pay senior staff who are not working. Jane Hood, Mindy Masias and David Kribs are all still being paid but have not worked in months. Jane Hood disappeared one day because she was watching Mindy Masias and Eric Brown. She has been paid for months to not disclose what she had. Mindy Masias committed fraud and threatened to sue Chris Ryan, so she was put on FMLA. Chris Ryan, Eric Brown and Mindy Masias are part of a cover up of FMLA fraud. David Kribs was not showing up for work and is still being paid. Mindy Masias and Eric Brown travel together and speak at conferences for the National Center of State Courts. They earn consulting and speaking fees as judicial employees on state time. Eric doesn't use a state computer so there is no way to see how much consulting work he does during the day. They both speak on ethics and management eventhough they are covering up fraud. Mindy and Eric spoke at the NACM conference in Arkansas while Mindy was still on FMLA or 2 days after it was done.

There is so much more to write and so many more details, but everyone is terrified and sick of the corruption and coverups. Some simple questions and open records requests will make people answer questions about the management of the judicial department and bring about changes.

Denver, Colorado 80203

Dear Ms. Ray:

Thank you for your referral from the Fraud Hotline, ticketed #20180081. My colleagues and I, along with the Attorney General, were also copied on this anonymous letter, and I have therefore already had a chance to look into these allegations myself and have been in consultation with the Attorney General about them. After further consultation with my own and the Attorney General's staff about your letter, there is consensus, with which I am in accord, that it makes the most sense for the OSA to simply conduct the investigation, with which we will of course fully cooperate.

In large part, my decision in this regard flows from my earnest desire to have these allegations resolved as thoroughly and expeditiously as feasible. To that end, I am anxious for my counsel, Andrew Rottman (andrew.rottman@judicial.state.co.us), to coordinate with the appropriate members of your staff concerning how your office will plan to proceed and how we may best assist with your investigation.

Thanks again.

Sincerely,

State Court Administrator

Re: Notice of Disciplinary Decision

I have evaluated the information from the investigation into the circumstances surrounding your use of an invoice from Amazon.com, Inc. with an order date of June 19, 2018 to support a reimbursement request you signed on July 15, 2018 and submitted to the accounting department for reimbursement on that same date, in light of the Colorado Judicial Department Code of Conduct, Chief Justice Directive 04-02, and the Colorado Judicial System Fiscal Rules and Procedures. In light of the information gleaned from the investigation, I have made a decision regarding appropriate discipline, as outlined below.

On August 22, 2018, I provided you with written notice of the investigation into the circumstances surrounding your July 15th reimbursement request. In the August 22nd memo, I encouraged you to submit relevant and helpful information, and requested that you make yourself available to meet and answer questions related to the support for the July 15th reimbursement request. You did so. The specific facts and events that were investigated are as follows:

- On July 15, 2018, you emailed a reimbursement request to Myra Dukes that included an invoice from Amazon.com for “2 Big Joe Lux Milano in Shag, Ivory” bean bag chairs. The Amazon invoice stated June 30, 2018 as the order date, and July 3, 2018 as the shipment and billing date. Ms. Dukes did not process the reimbursement request because it was unsigned. She also noted that because of the shipping date on the invoice, the expenditure should have been billed to FY19 and required a separate reimbursement form.
- A second reimbursement, signed by you on July 15, 2018, was sent to the Accounts Payable team, and included an Amazon invoice that was identical to the invoice sent to Ms. Dukes (including order number, product description and color), but with a new order date of June 19, 2018, billing date of June 19, 2018, and shipping date of June 20, 2018, that would allow payment in FY18.
- On July 26, 2018, I met with you to discuss concerns regarding the June 19th Amazon invoice, and that it appeared to be altered. You responded via email as follows to me and to Ms. Dukes:

Hi there. Chris just asked me about the receipt attached to this request for reimbursement. My apologies for the confusion. I printed one copy from the website and was sent a receipt with the chairs, which didn't match. I am assuming this is because I had to reorder the chairs on June 30 since the original color I chose was no longer available. In the end, and as I think I mentioned to you Myra, this should hit the FY19 budget since I didn't receive the products until after July 1. The correct receipt is attached.

- With your July 26, 2018 email, you included the Amazon invoice you sent to Ms. Dukes on July 15th.
- On August 8, 2018, I again brought to your attention that we had not resolved the issue with discrepancies on the June 19th invoice, and you responded:

I just looked through my account. When I originally received the chairs, I sent them back because they were white and I wanted gray, they no longer had gray and sent me white again. But the documentation isn't capturing all of that. In fact, I don't even have a copy of the receipt I originally submitted because it came from the original box. My best guess is that the sender changed my order color in order to fulfill the request.

I request to pay for it myself and withdraw my request for reimbursement. I don't see how there could have been any benefit to change the date on the invoice. The administrators gave me a budget for this and next year knowing there could be some overlap. This was a one time budget for employee appreciation of staff, which is now complete.

- On August 13, 2018, you and I met with David Kribs in another effort to resolve the concerns raised by the June 19th Amazon invoice. You showed us your Amazon account, and we noted that the only transaction listed for the time period was a transaction matching the June 30th invoice. You then stated your Amazon account was “messed up” because you had been billed three times on your Capital One credit card for the same transaction, including on June 19th. You showed us documentation supporting the alleged triple billing, but declined to provide us with a copy.
- On August 17, 2018, a review of your Capital One credit card statement confirmed that you were in fact billed only once in the amount of $161.92 for the Amazon.com purchase at issue, on July 3, 2018, which is consistent with the invoice emailed to Ms. Dukes on July 15th.

During the investigation, you and the investigator made a call to Amazon together regarding the June 19th Amazon invoice. Amazon had no record of the June 19th Amazon invoice. Amazon also had no record of any return related to the June 19th Amazon invoice. The report from the independent third-party investigator, which is attached to this notice, indicated that all of the information and evidence shows the June 19th Amazon invoice was fabricated and is not legitimate. The information obtained during the investigation and summarized in the investigation report directly undermined all of the representations you made to support the validity of the June 19th Amazon invoice, including your assertion that you had returned the chairs listed in the invoice because they were the wrong color. The emails you provided to the investigator confirmed the delivery of the chairs on one date, July 9, 2018. You confirmed for the investigator that your credit charge statement only reflects one charge for the purchase of the chairs, not multiple charges as you first claimed. The investigator, in his report, stated that he was unable to find any evidence to support that the transaction listed in the June 19th Amazon invoice ever occurred.

Having completed the investigation and after review of the investigation report, I have concluded that you were dishonest with me, other Judicial Department employees, and the investigator regarding the June 19th Amazon invoice you submitted in support of your July 15th reimbursement request. I also have determined that your actions related to the July 15th reimbursement request are in violation of the Colorado Judicial Department Code of Conduct, Chief Justice Directive 04-02, and the Colorado Judicial System Fiscal Rules and Procedures.

As the Chief of Staff for the Office of the State Court Administrator, you are expected to behave in a manner that exemplifies compliance with the rules and policies of the Judicial Department, and demonstrate integrity in your conduct. Your failure to act with integrity, your refusal to acknowledge the impact of your actions, and your continued dishonesty throughout the investigation is seriously concerning. Your dishonest conduct with a routine reimbursement request has created a lack of trust that is impossible to overcome. Further, the timing of your dishonesty coincided with an audit of the State of Colorado's financial records and systems, and your conduct had to be disclosed to the independent auditors. Your dishonesty caused third parties to question the integrity of Judicial's financial records and systems. Because of the ongoing audit, failure to address this situation appropriately could have resulted in this information being specifically referenced in the opinion letter of the State of Colorado Comprehensive Annual Financial Report, resulting in mistrust of the Judicial Department among other agencies. To that end, I have made the decision that termination is appropriate given the nature of your conduct, and the concerns your conduct raises.

As the Chief of Staff for the Office of the State Court Administrator, and the Division Director for the Executive Division, you are an at-will employee. Colorado Judicial System Personnel Rules ("C.J.S.P.R."), Rule 35.A.(5). As an at-will employee, you are not subject to the procedures for corrective or disciplinary action, as established in the C.J.S.P.R., Rule 29.A.1. My decision to terminate your employment is not subject to appeal or review through the C.J.S.P.R.

Your termination will be effective on November 15, 2018. You may elect to resign at any point prior to 12:00 p.m. on November 15, 2018, but after that time your separation will be considered a termination. On November 15, 2018, you will receive your final paycheck for wages through November 15, 2018 and accrued paid time off. The State utilizes a COBRA (continuation of health and dental plans) third-party administrator (TPA). The TPA will send you information regarding COBRA and you will also receive information regarding state life insurance portability.

If you have any questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to contact me. |

Re: Policy Regarding Judicial Branch Employees Conducting Work for the Judicial Branch as Independent Contractors

BACKGROUND: The Colorado Judicial Branch has been monitoring the use of Independent Contractors to ensure compliance with all state and federal laws including but not limited to Fair Labor Standards, Section 530 of the Internal Revenue Service Revenue Act, and state unemployment regulations.

In the past, the Judicial Branch made Employee/Independent Contractor decisions independently of the Executive Branch by conducting a thorough analysis of each case. A technological advancement by the Executive Branch allowing the Payroll System and CORE payment system to share data has created a flag system that “catches” current or previously employed state employees that share an employee and independent contractor status. This has necessitated coordination with the Executive Branch to compel the release of vendor holds on workers identified as Independent Contractors for both current and past employees of the Judicial Branch and other Colorado state agencies.

Of additional concern is the potential for an appearance of conflict of interest that may arise when employees are conducting independent contractor work that is closely related to programs managed by the Judicial Branch. Public trust in the impartiality of the Judicial Branch is of the utmost importance in conducting the business of the courts and probation.

POLICY: In order to resolve the concerns regarding our current practices, beginning in FY16 (July 1, 2015) Colorado Judicial Branch personnel may not serve concurrently as independent contractors for the Judicial Branch. Independent contracts for current Judicial personnel that are set to expire on June 30, 2015 will not be renewed, and all other such contracts crossing over the fiscal year end shall be terminated no later than Dec 31, 2015. This policy applies to judges, classified employees and contract employees.

Former judges or employees who seek to engage in independent contract work with the Judicial Branch must meet the IRS and Department of Labor factor tests set out to determine independent contract or employee status in order to be approved for such work. Specific information utilized to make such determinations can be found on the IRS website or by accessing the following link: IRS website. The Human Resources Division, in consultation with the Executive Division, will review prospective contractor arrangements prior to execution of an independent contract to ensure compliance with all applicable laws and regulations and will make final determination as to appropriate status.

In accordance with Colorado Judicial System Personnel Rule 22.B.(4), Judicial employees who seek to provide services as an independent contractor for other Colorado State government entities must obtain written approval from their Administrative Authority before engaging in secondary employment. If secondary employment is approved, Judicial employees should be encouraged to notify the government entity receiving the services of their status as a State of Colorado employee. The receiving entity is responsible for determining whether the worker is an employee or an independent contractor for purposes of providing payment for any services performed.

Colorado Revised Statutes 13-4-104.5 addresses the temporary appointment of retired judges, thus this policy does not impact the Senior Judge Program.

Colorado Judicial Department Financial Services Division

Purchasing Fiscal Rules

Nancy E. Rice, Chief Justice
Gerald A. Marroney, State Court Administrator
David Kribs, Chief Financial Officer
Nancy Allen, Purchasing Manager

Chief Justice Directive 04-02

The Colorado Supreme Court approves the fiscal policies and procedures, and subsequent amendments, established by the State Court Administrator, pursuant to the requirements of Section 13-3-106 (2), C.R.S. Each court of record, including judicial officers, probation departments, and Judicial Department personnel, shall comply with the fiscal policies and procedures established by the State Court Administrator. Upon a showing that extraordinary circumstances prevent a court or probation office from complying with a fiscal policy or procedure, the director of the financial services division may waive the application of the policy or procedure and may require a compensating control

This document prescribes the fiscal rules for purchasing and related activities of the Colorado Judicial Department. As a separate branch of government, the Judicial Department is not bound by the Colorado Procurement Code (Section 24-101-101 et. seq., C.R.S.), and/or the associated Procurement Rules. Accordingly, this document has been prepared for the following purposes:

- To establish a set of policies, procedures, and guidelines the Judicial Department will use to conduct its purchases of products and service.
- To ensure the fair and equitable treatment of all persons who deal with the Department's purchasing system.
- To foster effective broad-based competition.

These Purchasing Fiscal Rules, hereafter referred to as the "Rules," apply to all acquisitions, including purchases, leases and rentals, that result in a disbursement of public funds by Colorado appellate and trial courts, state probation offices, and the State Court Administrator's Office. Public funds include all state moneys received by the Department, as well as all federal, local and private moneys, grants, gifts, or donations, except to the extent that another government jurisdiction's or grantor's requirements specify the purchasing rules and procedures to be followed. These Rules do not apply to the expenditure of public funds for construction services as defined by the Department of Personnel and Administration, State Buildings.

These Rules do not apply to the Denver County Court, Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel, Office of Judicial Discipline, Board of Continuing Legal and Judicial Education, Board of Law Examiners, Office of Attorney Registration, Office of the Alternate Defense Counsel, Office of the Child's Representative, and Office of the Public Defender.

These Rules do not apply to acquisitions for which no funds are expended or where the transaction is revenue-producing. However, even in such circumstances the Department should strive to maximize its return and to ensure fair and open competition by competitive bidding.

Unless displaced by the particular provisions of this document, the principles of law and equity, including the "Uniform Commercial Code," the law merchant, and any law relative to capacity to contract or to agency fraud, misrepresentation, duress, coercion, or mistake shall supplement the provisions of this document.

To the extent these Rules fail to provide adequate guidance in addressing or resolving a specific problem or question, the State Court Administrator, through the Director of Financial Services, will establish the fiscal rules to be followed.

 4. Influence or attempt to influence an official decision of the Judicial Department that may result in a monetary gain or other benefit to the employee; the employee's family member; or a person, business, organization, or entity with which the employee is associated.
 5. Obtain a contract in which the employee; an employee's family member; or a person, business, organization, or entity with which the employee is associated; has an interest, monetary or otherwise.

4. When, for any reason, collusion or other anti-competitive practices are suspected among any Department employees and/or vendors, a written notice of the relevant facts shall be transmitted to the Purchasing Manager.

1.2 Competition and Purchasing Value

1. Every effort shall be made to assure that all persons who desire to do business with the Department will have a fair and equal opportunity to compete in fulfilling the Department's needs.
2. The Department shall seek competition in an orderly and defined manner, where the choice of vendor is determined primarily by the price of the acquisition and, as appropriate, by taking into account product functionality, delivery conditions, payment terms, vendor performance and capabilities, and other factors as described in the solicitation.
3. All Department employees to whom purchasing responsibilities are delegated shall strive to maximize to the fullest extent practicable the purchasing value of the Department's funds.

1.3 Preferences

1. The Department does not afford preferences to resident bidders unless specified in the solicitation document.
2. The Department may afford a preference for environmentally preferable products, as defined in Section 24-103-207.5, C.R.S., if specified in the solicitation document.

1.4 Purchasing Administration

1. The State Court Administrator (SCA), consistent with statutory authority and responsibility, shall:
 1. Consider and implement, with approval of the Chief Justice, matters of policy related to purchasing by the Judicial Department.
 2. Be the final authority on matters relating to the application or interpretation of the rules, except as it may relate to a protest of any aspect of the solicitation and award process pursuant to Protests of Award (Section 6).

areas of responsibility. Such delegation may include signature authority for purchase orders and, in limited circumstances, contracts.

3. The Purchasing Manager, to whom the Director has delegated the responsibility for the day-to-day administration of the Department's purchasing program, has the following responsibilities:
 1. Act as the principal contact and primary source of information and assistance for all Purchasing Officials.
 2. Maintain and update the Purchasing Fiscal Rules.
 3. Develop and carry out a Department-wide program of assistance and training for Purchasing Officials, Project Managers, and other staff with purchasing responsibilities.
 4. Assign a solicitation number for every request for bid or proposal and every request for documented quote (DQ), regardless of whether or not the DQ is subsequently posted on Colorado VSS).
 5. Post solicitations.

3. To have a thorough understanding of the overall requirements of their purchasing project(s). With assistance from the Purchasing Manager as may be requested and, as appropriate, Judicial Business and Integrated Technology Services (JBITS) staff, Purchasing Officials' responsibilities include conducting market research, determining specifications (see Section 4.2), developing the solicitation document and evaluation criteria, and maintaining vendor relations during and after the solicitation process.
4. To maintain a file of purchasing records, identified by solicitation number, that shall include all requests for quotes, proposals and bids and the responses to same, including documents relating to any modifications or withdrawals, correspondence, determinations, justifications, evaluation materials, email, internal memoranda, contracts, and any and all other supporting documents and information pertaining to the purchase.
5. To retain all purchasing records and documents in accordance with the Colorado Judicial Department Retention and Disposition Schedules & Imaging Procedures for Designated Records.
5. Chief Judges and the Presiding Judge of the Denver Probate Court have the authority and responsibility for all fiscal matters within their jurisdictions, including the signing of contracts for district acquisitions, except contracts with Executive Branch agencies.

1.5 Public Access to Purchasing Records

1. After award, purchasing records and information are public records that shall be open to public inspection upon request as required by law, except as otherwise provided for below.
2. Prior to evaluation, a vendor may request nondisclosure of trade secrets and other proprietary data contained in a bid, or proposal.
 1. Any such request shall be made in writing to the Purchasing Official.
 2. The Purchasing Official shall consult with the Purchasing Manager to determine the validity of any written requests for nondisclosure.
 3. The Purchasing Official shall inform the vendor in writing what portions of the bid or proposal will be subject to disclosure and allow the vendor the opportunity to withdraw such information or data. If withdrawn, the vendor shall be advised in writing that the withdrawn information will not be included in the evaluation of their bid or proposal.

3. An entire bid or proposal, or the pricing portion of a bid or proposal, shall not be considered confidential or proprietary.
4. If the Department has approved a vendor's request that trade secrets or other proprietary data be held confidential, any material so designated must be readily identifiable and separable from the rest of the bid or proposal to facilitate public inspection of the non-confidential portion.
5. Information that may subsequently become a material part of any issued contract between the Department and the vendor shall not be considered confidential or proprietary.

1.6 Posting of Requests for Proposals and Bids

1. The Colorado VSS (Vendor Self Serve) System is a web site designed to notify interested vendors of the State of Colorado Executive Branch's intent to purchase goods or services competitively. The Colorado Judicial Branch may also post to this site along with other sites to ensure full vendor participation.
2. Requests by vendors indicating a desire to compete for the Department's business does not guarantee they will be notified of the Department's solicitations. Enrollment in Colorado VSS is the best way for vendors to gain access to the Department's solicitations.
3. The Purchasing Manager shall review and post all Judicial Department Requests for Bids (RFB) and Requests for Proposals (RFP). Posting of Requests for Documented Quotes (RDQ) is recommended but not required. If a solicitation posted on Colorado VSS receives no responses, or if the Purchasing Official and/or the Purchasing Manager determines that a posting on Colorado VSS will not yield adequate competition, the Purchasing Official in consultation with the Purchasing Manager, may use other notification methods as may be necessary to seek competition.
 1. Such methods may include, but are not limited to, advertisements in newspapers and trade magazines or through direct contact via various transmittal methods (email, letters, etc) with vendors that may provide the needed product or service.
 2. The method(s) chosen and any contacts made shall be documented in writing by the Purchasing Official.
4. When an award is made, the Purchasing Manager, upon written notification from the Purchasing Official, will promptly create and publish the appropriate award notice after the letters of award and non-award are sent electronically to the submitting vendors.

1.7 Purchase of United States Flags

United States flags purchased for display at any State court or probation facility shall be made in the United States, pursuant to State statute.

2.2 Determination of Method

1. The purchasing method to be used shall be based primarily on the cost of the required product or service, the ease or difficulty in determining and describing product or service specifications (see Section 4.2), and the need (or lack thereof) for formal evaluation procedures, as further described in this document.
2. A purchase that would otherwise require competition, by virtue of the anticipated cost, shall not be broken into separate smaller purchases.
 1. A purchase shall not be defined as a sole source purchase unless it specifically meets all the criteria of such purchases as defined in Section 2.3.2.
 2. A purchase shall not be defined as an emergency purchase unless it specifically meets all the criteria of such purchases as defined in Section 2.3.3.
3. Rental and lease agreements, lease purchases, and information technology purchases require special treatment. See Section 2.6 and Section 2.7.

2.3 Purchases Not Requiring Competition

1. Discretionary Purchases. No form of competition is required for purchases up to and including $10,000 for products and $25,000 for services; nonetheless, price competition may be advantageous. If so, it may be obtained by the use of a Request for Documented Quotes.
2. Sole Source Purchases. A sole source purchase shall be used when there is only one product or service that will meet the Department's need and there is only one vendor to provide that product or service. A requirement for a particular proprietary item (i.e., a brand name specification) does not justify a sole source purchase if there is more than one potential vendor for that item.
 1. The Purchasing Official shall prepare a written document that justifies a sole source purchase of any product over $10,000 or service over $25,000. This justification shall include sufficient facts, circumstances, and reasoning to substantiate that there is only one specific product or service that will meet the Department's need, that there is only one provider of that product or service, and an explanation as to why there are no other vendors suitable or acceptable to meet the need.
 2. The written justification for a sole source purchase of a product or service over $25,000 shall be approved by the State Court Administrator prior to any commitments being made. In cases of reasonable doubt, competition shall be solicited.

3. If a sole source purchase is approved, the Purchasing Official and/or the Purchasing Manager shall conduct, and document in writing, negotiations with the vendor to obtain the best possible conditions for the Department with regard to price, delivery, and terms.
3. Emergency Purchases. An emergency purchase may be required when the Department is faced with a situation that threatens or obstructs its functioning.
 1. Emergency purchases shall only be made when the existence of such a situation creates an immediate and serious need for products and/or services that cannot be met through normal purchasing methods, and the lack of which would seriously jeopardize the operation of the courts, probation departments, or other programs of the Department; the conduct of required and essential business; the preservation or protection of property; or the health or safety of any person or persons.
 2. Even in emergency situations, as much competition as is reasonable under the circumstances shall be obtained.
 3. Emergency purchases shall be limited to only the products and services specifically needed for resolving the emergency.
 4. The Purchasing Official shall promptly notify the Purchasing Manager if an emergency purchase is necessary.
 5. Upon resolution of the emergency, the Purchasing Official shall prepare a written document to justify the emergency purchase, which shall describe the facts and circumstances of the emergency and the reasoning for the services, products, and selection of the vendor(s) chosen to meet the emergency need.

2.4 Purchases Requiring Competition

1. Purchases estimated to range in price from $10,001 to $150,000 for products and from $25,001 to $150,000 for services shall be competitively bid through Documented Quotes (Section 3) or Competitive Sealed Proposals and Bids (Section 4) as appropriate.
2. Purchases of products and services estimated to exceed $150,000 shall be made only through Competitive Sealed Proposals and Bids (Section 4).

2.5 State Awards and Cooperative Purchasing Agreements

The Judicial Department, in lieu of conducting its own competitive solicitations, may utilize competitively bid price agreements negotiated by the State Executive Branch or by other governmental entities or public purchasing units or consortiums when it is in the Department's best interest to do so.

State Executive Branch awards are competitively bid price agreements that are established by the State Purchasing Office in the Executive Branch. The Executive Branch price agreements are available to the Judicial Department, however, the Procurement Rules that rule the Executive Branch do not apply to the Judicial Branch. Rather, it is this document, the Colorado Judicial Department Purchasing Fiscal Rules, which prescribes the policies and procedures for purchasing and related activities of the Colorado Judicial Department.

1. Cooperative purchasing agreements are competitively bid price agreements that are established by other governmental purchasing units or public purchasing consortiums. Cooperative purchasing may also include entering into ("tagging onto") a contract that resulted from a competitive purchasing process conducted by another governmental entity. Purchasing Officials may participate in cooperative purchasing agreements for the purchase of any products or services. To do so, contact the Purchasing Manager.
2. As time, requirements, and the quantities needed are considered, Purchasing Officials are strongly encouraged to utilize the Department's competitive process to obtain prices better than state awards and cooperative purchasing agreements.

2.6 Rental Agreements, Leases, and Lease Purchases

Rental agreements, leases, and lease purchases require special budget and accounting treatment. Therefore:

1. All rental agreements, leases, and lease purchase contracts and associated invoice payments shall be handled by the State Court Administrator's Office, unless otherwise authorized by the Judicial Department Controller and/or the Purchasing Manager.
2. Rental agreements, leases, and lease purchase contracts shall not to be entered into by the courts or probation departments.
3. Contact the Controller or Purchasing Manager if you need assistance in this area.

2.7 Information Technology (IT) Purchases

In addition to the requirements outlined in this document, all IT purchases (i.e., computers and computer equipment) are subject to all requirements established by the Judicial Business Integrated Technology Services (JBITS) Division. In addition, IT purchases of $25,000 or more shall be approved by the governor's office, pursuant to statutory requirements.

2.8 Request for Information (RFI)

An RFI is used to gather information about a product, service, industry, or vendor when there is not enough information readily available to write adequate specifications. An RFI may ask for vendor input to assist the Department in preparing specifications and estimating cost or pricing for a subsequent solicitation. It may also be used to pre-determine the capabilities or qualifications of vendors to meet a certain need. This process is also known as a Request for Qualifications (RFQ).

1. An RFI shall not result in vendor selection or award. This shall be clearly stated in the RFI.
2. When it is desirable to issue an RFI, contact the Purchasing Manager for assistance.

3. DOCUMENTED QUOTES

1. A Request for Documented Quotes (RDQ) shall be used for purchases estimated to range in price from $10,001 to $150,000 for products or $25,001 to $150,000 for services, and when product or service specifications are known, easy to define, and subject to an informal evaluation process based primarily on cost/price.
2. An RDQ shall only be issued when there is a valid purchasing need. RDQs shall not be issued to obtain estimates or to "test the water." If such action is necessary, see Section 2.8.
3. The RDQ shall be prepared by the Purchasing Official, with assistance from the Purchasing Manager as may be desired.
4. An RDQ shall include specifications (see Section 4.2), a delivery or performance schedule, payment and billing requirements, bid submission and other pertinent deadlines, evaluation factors in addition to price (if any), and other applicable terms, conditions, and requirements.

5. Posting of RDQs on Colorado VSS is recommended but not required.

1. If posted on Colorado VSS, the RDQ shall be posted for at least three (3) business days.
 2. If Colorado VSS is not used, the Purchasing Official shall solicit and obtain quotes from a minimum of three (3) or more vendors. A District may use its own web site or the State Courts main web site to solicit competitive quotes.
6. A written reply (or "documented quote") via email, postal mail, or fax, that addresses the requirements stated in the RDQ must be received in accordance with submission deadline.
1. Documented quotes via telephone shall not be accepted.
 2. Hand-written replies shall not be accepted.
7. After the submission deadline, the Purchasing Official may negotiate with vendors that have submitted a quote. The purpose of these negotiations shall be to promote understanding of the Department's requirements and the quotes, so as to make the quotes acceptable and more advantageous to the Department.

8. The Purchasing Official may determine whether or not a vendor's response is acceptable, and may compare the relative value of competing quotes, considering price and, as may be applicable, other factors.
9. Award shall be made to the vendor whose quote is determined by the Purchasing Official to be most advantageous to the Department, with price/cost being the primary (though not necessarily the sole) consideration.
10. No formal evaluation process is required; however, the Purchasing Official shall document in writing the facts, circumstances, and reasoning to substantiate the award decision and, if applicable, to explain any factors other than price that led to the decision.
11. The Purchasing Official shall inform, in writing via email, all vendors who submitted documented quotes of the award decision.
12. As may be required, the Purchasing Official and the successful vendor shall cooperate with the Judicial Department Legal counsel and the Purchasing Manager to develop a written contract.

4. COMPETITIVE SEALED PROPOSALS AND BIDS

Sealed competitive proposals and bids are solicited, respectively, through Requests for Proposals (RFPs) and Requests for Bids (RFBs). “Sealed” refers to the fact that the proposal or bid (that is, a vendor’s response to the RFP or RFB) is kept sealed in an envelope or package until an official “opening” all of responses. As described in this section, many requirements for RFPs and RFBs are substantially the same; however, there is a significant difference with regard to how the responses are evaluated and, subsequently, how the winning vendor is chosen. See Evaluation of Proposals and Bids (Section 5).

4.1 General Requirements

1. A Request for Bid (RFB) shall be used for purchases of products or services estimated to cost over $150,000 and when specifications and other criteria are known and can be objectively stated and evaluated with no, or a minimal, degree of subjectivity.
2. A Request for Proposal (RFP) shall be used when purchasing services or products estimated to cost over $150,000 and when one or more of the factors below exist.
 1. Exact specifications and other criteria are not known.
 2. It is in the Department’s best interest to provide for a subjective evaluation of offers.
 3. The primary considerations in determining the award may be factors other than price alone.
 4. It may be necessary to conduct oral or written discussions with responding vendors concerning technical and price aspects of their proposals.
 5. It may be necessary to afford responding vendors the opportunity to revise their proposal.
 6. It is advantageous to the Department to revise proposals after discussions with responding vendors.

7. It may be necessary to base an award on comparative evaluation of differing price, quality, and contractual factors to determine the most advantageous offering to the Department.
3. RFPs and RFBs, from here forward referred to as “solicitations,” shall only be issued when there is a valid purchasing need. Solicitations shall not be issued to obtain estimates or to “test the water.” If such action is necessary, see Section 2.8.
4. Solicitations may be cancelled if there are valid and compelling reasons to believe that the cancellation of the solicitation is in the Department's best interest. Each solicitation issued by the Department shall contain language stating that the solicitations may be cancelled as provided in this document. See Section 4.11.
5. The solicitation is prepared by the Purchasing Official, with assistance from the Purchasing Manager as desired.
6. The solicitation shall include a specifications (see Section 4.2); delivery or performance schedule; payment and billing requirements; bid submission deadline; date, time and place of opening; evaluation factors; other pertinent requirements, which may include, but are not limited to, product samples, descriptive literature, testing and inspection, and technical data; and all applicable terms and conditions.
7. The solicitation shall include directions for the vendors as to the format of their response, pricing information, and other forms as may be required to ensure that consistent information is received for each response.
8. A written bid or proposal (the vendor’s “response”), prepared in the required format and upon the provided forms, that addresses all requirements stated in the solicitation and that contains the original signature of the vendor or the vendor’s authorized official, shall be received in accordance with the submission deadline.
 1. Responses prepared in formats or on forms other than those provided shall not be accepted, except as provided in Section 4.10.
 2. Responses shall be hand-delivered or mailed in sealed envelopes or packages.
 1. The outside of the envelope or package shall clearly show the solicitation number, submission deadline date, and vendor’s name and address.
 2. Telephone, fax, or e-mail responses shall not be accepted.

3. Late responses shall not be accepted, except as provided in Section 4.8.
4. Responses that lack the original signature of the vendor or the vendor's authorized official shall not be accepted, except as provided in Section 4.10.
5. Hand-written responses shall not be accepted.
9. The Purchasing Official shall ensure that all responses are date/time-stamped immediately upon receipt, left unopened and sealed, and stored in a secure location until the specified opening date and time.
10. The Purchasing Official shall maintain any and all documents related to the purchasing project, including a copy of the solicitation, amendments, questions and answers, and all responses; along with determinations, summaries, score sheets, evaluation materials, disclosures, explanations, and any other written materials and place them in the purchasing file.
11. After award, all solicitation documents and the complete purchasing file shall be open to public inspection pursuant to Section 1.6.

4.2 Specifications

The purpose of specifications is to describe to the vendors the product or service that the Department needs and all related requirements. Thoughtful and well-prepared specifications are critical to the success of a purchasing project.

1. To the extent practicable, specifications shall provide an accurate, thorough, detailed, measureable description of the physical or functional characteristics, the essential and technical requirements, the nature, and/or the desired results of the product or service to be purchased.
2. For an RFB, specifications shall be such that responses can be assessed as either meeting or not meeting the requirement.
3. For an RFP, specifications may allow for subjectivity, that is the level or degree to which the requirement is met.
4. Specifications shall permit maximum competition. They shall not be unduly restrictive.
5. To the extent possible, accepted commercial standards shall be used and unique requirements shall be avoided.

6. When appropriate, specifications issued or used by other public purchasing entities or professional organizations may be referenced. Vendors may be required to certify that the standardized specifications have been met.
7. "Brand name or equal" specifications (specifications that use one or more manufacturer's names or catalog numbers) may be used when the item to be purchased is best described by the use of such a specification.
 1. Brand name of equal specifications shall only be used for the purpose of describing the characteristics, standard of quality, and performance of the product or service required, and shall not, in any way, limit or restrict competition.
 2. Where brand name or equal specifications are used, the solicitation shall clearly state that the use of a brand name is only for the purpose of describing the product or service required, and that it is not to limit or restrict competition.
 3. The solicitation shall further state that substantially equivalent products to those designated will be considered for award.

4.3 Evaluation Factors

Evaluation factors are the criteria against which a bid or proposal is measured. The development of these factors is critically important because it is the subsequent evaluation of these factors that leads to the winning bid or proposal.

1. In a Request for Bid, the factors shall be subject to an objective evaluation; the requirement is either met or not met. See Evaluation of Proposals and Bids (Section 5).
2. In a Request for Proposal, the factors may be subject to a subjective evaluation; the level or degree to which the requirement is met may be considered. See Evaluation of Proposals and Bids (Section 5).
3. All solicitations shall include all evaluation factors necessary to determine whether all required specifications have been met. Factors that do not lend themselves to such determinations shall not be included.
4. All solicitations shall include factors to evaluate whether the vendor has:
 1. The appropriate financial, material, equipment, facility, and personnel resources and expertise necessary to meet all requirements of the purchase.
 2. A satisfactory record of performance.

3. Responded to all requirements of the solicitation and supplied all required information.
5. Factors not specified in the solicitation shall not be considered in the evaluation.
6. Factors may be prioritized or “weighted” to identify the relative importance of each factor.
7. By way of example and not limitation, evaluation factors shall include pricing/cost and may include (in no particular order) the following:
 1. Delivery date after receipt of order
 2. Cash discounts
 3. Type and length of warranties
 4. Cost of maintenance agreements
 5. Cost of operations
 6. Future availability
 7. Future trade-in value
 8. Availability of local service
 9. Results of site visits, demonstrations, or product testing
 10. Availability of training courses
 11. Esthetics
 12. Adaptability to environment
 13. Space limitations
 14. Safety and health features relating to codes, regulations, or policies
 15. Life cycle costs (see Section 5.2.5)

4.4 Notification and Clarification

1. Posting of solicitations on the Colorado VSS system is encouraged.
 1. An RFP shall be posted for at least twenty-one (21) calendar days.
 2. A RFB shall be posted for at least fourteen (14) calendar days.
 3. If special circumstances or conditions exist, the Purchasing Manager, in consultation with the Purchasing Official, may lengthen or shorten the posting time. The Purchasing Official shall document in writing why a reduced period is required. Under no circumstances shall the length of time be shortened to reduce competition.
2. Pre-proposal conferences may be conducted to explain the purchasing requirements.

1. The place, date, and time of the conference shall be contained in the solicitation.
2. Nothing stated at the conference shall change the solicitation unless by written amendment (see Section 4.5).
3. Vendors may ask questions to clarify their understanding of the Department's needs and other pertinent matters but only during the timeframe specified in the solicitation.
 1. All questions shall be collected by the Purchasing Official.
 2. Responses to all questions shall be prepared by the Purchasing Official and submitted to the Purchasing Manager for review and posting in accordance with the timeframe specified in the solicitation.

4.5 Amendments to Solicitations

1. After posting, changes to a solicitation are discouraged but, when required, any and all changes shall be made by written amendment.
 1. Any such amendments shall be prepared by the Purchasing Official and review by the Purchasing Manager.
 2. The amendment shall reference what specific part(s) of the solicitation is being amended.
2. Amendments shall be identified as such and posted with sufficient time for vendors to review the changes, contemplate any consequences, and consider the content for inclusion in their proposals.
 1. This may require an extension of bid submission, opening dates, and award dates.
 2. Any such date changes shall also be confirmed in the amendment.
3. If changes or amendments are not posted, the solicitation shall be considered unchanged, regardless of any exchanges that may have occurred between the Department and any vendor(s).

4.6 Responsibility of Vendors

1. Vendors are solely responsible for frequently checking COLORADOVSS and availing themselves of all applicable instructions, amendments, and other information related to any solicitation that is posted thereon.
2. To be considered acceptable, a vendor's response to a solicitation shall fully address any and all requirements stated in the solicitation, and shall be prepared in accordance with required formats and upon any forms provided.
3. Responses shall contain the original signature of the vendor or the vendor's authorized official.
4. It is the vendors' responsibility to ensure that their response is properly identified and received by the Department prior to the submission deadline specified in the solicitation.
5. Situations such as a flat tire, slow traffic, accidents, parking problems, and other similar circumstances, shall not be cause for acceptance of late bids or proposals. (See also Section 4.8 regarding late delivery of responses.)
6. Hand-written, telephone, faxed, or e-mailed responses shall not be accepted.
7. Vendors shall be legally qualified to contract with the Department and shall cooperate with the Department in fulfilling or resolving all legal and contractual matters as may be required by the Judicial Department and Colorado state statutes, including requirements to verify the legal status of their employees and contractors.

4.7 Receipt and Opening of Responses

1. All responses received shall be opened by the Purchasing Official, or designee, in the presence of one or more witnesses on the date, time, and at the place specified in the solicitation.
2. The name of each vendor shall be read aloud. Other pertinent information, such as pricing, may be read aloud at the discretion of the Purchasing Official, except that information determined by the Department to be proprietary, pursuant to Section 1.5, shall not be read or otherwise disclosed.
3. Each vendor's name, any other information announced at the opening, and the names of all witnesses to the opening shall be recorded in writing and such record shall be open for public inspection.
4. Information that is not presented at the opening may be withheld from public inspection until after the award is announced.

5. Under no circumstances shall any vendor's response be opened prior to the public "opening."
6. Any interested parties shall be allowed to attend.
7. Responses shall be opened in a manner that avoids disclosure of contents to competing vendors.

4.8 Late Delivery of Responses

1. If, prior to the specified opening time and date, no mail has been delivered either directly by the post office or through the internal distribution system, any response received by the first, next scheduled delivery shall be accepted if it is reasonable to believe the response was in the delivery process.
2. In the event of a labor unrest (strike, work slow-down, etc.) that affects mail delivery, the Purchasing Official shall amend the submission deadline or develop alternate methods of receiving responses. Any and all such changes shall be posted on Colorado VSS.
3. The Purchasing Official shall consult with the Purchasing Manager regarding situations (other than those above) that are beyond the control of the Department or the vendors to determine the acceptability of late responses, except as otherwise specified in Section 4.6.5.

4.9 Withdrawal of Responses

1. A vendor may withdraw its response to any solicitation at any time prior to opening date and time set forth in the solicitation by written notice (mail, email or fax) to the Purchasing Official. In such circumstance, the Purchasing Official shall return the unopened response to the vendor.
2. The Purchasing Official may allow a bid or proposal to be withdrawn, if requested by the vendor in writing, after opening but prior to award, under the following circumstances:
 1. The vendor provides proof that clearly and convincingly demonstrates to the Purchasing Official that a mistake was made in the costs or other material matter provided in the response.
 2. The Purchasing Official finds it unreasonable to allow the bid or proposal to proceed.

3. Any decision to permit or deny withdrawal of a response shall be supported by a written determination prepared by the Purchasing Official in consultation with the Purchasing Manager.
4. If a proposal or bid is withdrawn in accordance with this section, any bid or performance bond (see Section 4.12.2) shall be returned to the vendor in a timely manner.

4.10 Minor Informalities and Mistakes Discovered After Opening

1. Minor informalities are matters of form rather than substance evident from the bid or proposal document, or insignificant mistakes that can be waived or corrected without prejudice to other bidders; that is, the effect on price, quantity, quality, delivery, or contractual conditions is negligible.
2. The Purchasing Official, in consultation with the Purchasing Manager, may waive minor informalities or allow the vendor to correct them, if it is determined to be in the best interests of the Department. Examples include, but are not limited to, the failure of a bidder to:
 1. Return the number of signed bids or proposals required by the solicitation.
 2. Sign the bid or proposal, but only if the unsigned bid or proposal is accompanied by other material indicating the bidder's intent to be bound.
 3. Use a format or forms other than those specified in the solicitation instructions, but only if all requested information is provided.
3. Any decision to waive a minor informality or permit or deny correction of a response shall be supported by a written determination, prepared by the Purchasing Official in consultation with the Purchasing Manager, that such action is in the best interests of the Department.
4. If a response contains an obvious, material error(s), is unreasonably lower than the other responses, or otherwise appears to the Evaluation Committee that a substantive mistake has been made:
 1. The vendor shall be requested to confirm their response.
 2. If, after such confirmation, the vendor alleges mistake, the vendor shall be permitted to withdraw the response in accordance with Section 4.9.

4.11 Cancellation of Solicitation and Rejection of Responses

1. Prior to opening, a solicitation may be cancelled if such action is necessary to serve the best interests of the Department, for reasons including but not limited to the following:
 1. The Department no longer requires the products or services.
 2. The Department no longer can reasonably expect to fund the purchase.
 3. The solicitation is in violation of Department policy.
 4. Amendments to the solicitation would be of such magnitude that a new solicitation is desirable.
2. After opening but prior to award, any or all responses may be rejected when the Purchasing Official, in consultation with the Purchasing Manager, determines in writing that such action is in the Department's best interest for reasons including but not limited to the following:
 1. The products or services being purchased are no longer required.
 2. Ambiguous or otherwise inadequate specifications were part of the solicitation.
 3. The solicitation did not provide for consideration of all factors of significance to the Department.
 4. All otherwise acceptable responses are at unexpectedly high or clearly unreasonable prices.
 5. Prices exceed available funds. In such case:
 1. The Purchasing Official may attempt to negotiate an adjustment of quantities, quality, scope, and/or price with the apparent winner to bring the proposal or bid within the amount of available funds.
 2. If it is not feasible to make such adjustments, the solicitation shall be cancelled.
 6. There is reason to believe that the bids or proposals may not have been independently arrived at in open competition, may have been collusive, or may have been submitted in bad faith.
3. If a solicitation is cancelled, notice of the cancellation shall be posted. Such notice shall:

1. Identify the solicitation.
2. Explain the reason for cancellation.
3. As applicable, explain that an opportunity will be given to compete on any re-solicitation or any future purchases of similar products or services.
4. The Purchasing Official shall prepare a written explanation of the reasons for cancellation or rejection.
5. When a solicitation is cancelled, responses received prior to the opening shall remain unopened and shall be returned to the vendors. If a cancellation occurs after the opening, all responses shall be retained in the purchasing file.

4.12 Additional Performance Requirements

Additional performance requirements may be called for if a purchase is of particular importance or criticality to the Department that such requirements are warranted.

1. Insurance - In cases where a vendor performs work on the Department's premises, or is required to travel in a vehicle while performing the Department's requirements, it is in the Department's best interest to require the vendor to demonstrate adequate insurance and/or to name the Department as an insured party. In such circumstances, the Purchasing Official should follow the prescribed procedures recommended by the Department of Personnel and Administration, Division of Risk Management.
2. Bonds –
 1. Bid bonds are used to ensure a bidder's price will be valid for a specified period of time. Such bonds are frequently used in purchase of products that are subject to rapid price fluctuations. The amount of the bond should be adequate to deter a bidder from failing to honor a bid.
 2. Performance bonds are used to ensure a vendor's performance as to both quality and timeliness. The amount of the bond should be adequate to cover the Department's losses and costs should the vendor fail to perform as required or agreed.
3. Liquidated Damages – Liquidated damages clauses may included in solicitations (and subsequent contracts) where there are critical time sensitive milestones to which the Department and vendor agree. Should the vendor fail to meet one of more of these requirements, the vendor may be required to reimburse the Department for actual losses and/or costs incurred. These damages are limited to the amount of reasonable actual demonstrable losses/costs.

5. EVALUATION OF PROPOSALS AND BIDS

Though the requirements for Requests for Proposals (RFPs) and Requests for Bids (RFBs) are substantially similar, see Competitive Sealed Proposals and Bids (Section 4), there is a significant difference with regard to how the responses are evaluated and, subsequently, how the winning vendor is chosen.

5.1 General Requirements

1. The Purchasing Office shall establish an Evaluation Committee (see Section 5.5) and forms upon which to conduct the evaluation.
2. All products and services shall be evaluated against the specifications put forth in the solicitation.
 1. All bids shall be evaluated on the same criteria; no factors shall be added or omitted.
 2. If desired, a system to prioritize or “weight” the scores for each factor may be established if none was previously set forth in the solicitation.
3. Factors to be considered shall include whether the vendor has:
 1. The appropriate financial, material, equipment, facility, and personnel resources and expertise necessary to meet all requirements of the purchase.
 2. A satisfactory record of performance.
 3. Supplied all required information.
4. Vendors may demonstrate the availability of necessary financing, equipment, facilities, expertise, and personnel by submitting:
 1. Evidence that the vendor possesses such necessary items.
 2. Acceptable plans to subcontract for such necessary items.
 3. A documented commitment from, or explicit arrangement with, a satisfactory source to provide the necessary items.
5. Inspection and testing may be included as part of the evaluation to determine acceptability, workmanship, and suitability of the product or service being purchased.

6. Bids or proposals that do not meet all requirements, specifications, and criteria put forth in the solicitation or that fail inspection and/or testing shall be rejected.
7. The Purchasing Official shall maintain all evaluation documents, score sheets, and other related documents.

5.2 Evaluation of Bids

1. The purpose of an evaluation of bids is to determine if a vendor's bid does or does not meet the Department's need as specified in the RFB and to select the winning bid. The evaluation shall be pass/fail only; with no or minimal level or degree of satisfaction.
2. If inspection and testing is included as part of the evaluation, it shall only be conducted, on a pass/fail basis, to determine whether a proposal is in accordance with the specifications and criteria specifically set forth in the RFB.
 1. Vendors shall be accorded fair and equal treatment with respect to any opportunity for demonstrations and/or site visits.
 2. Inspection and testing shall not be conducted to determine if one vendor's product or service is superior to another.
3. Bids that meet all specifications and criteria and that pass inspection and/or testing, as applicable, shall be considered for award.
4. Of the bids considered, award shall be made to the vendor offering the lowest price.
5. In addition to the actual cost of a product, life cycle cost factors may be considered, when applicable, to determine lowest price. Life cycle costs are reasonable estimates of the costs of ownership and operation (such as repair costs, licenses, and particular supplies) and/or trade-in value at the end of a product's useful life. If such factors are used, they shall be objectively measurable.
6. Award shall not be made to a bidder submitting a higher quality item than that designated in the RFB unless such bidder also offered the lowest bid (considering actual cost and any applicable life cycle cost factors).

5.3 Evaluation of Proposals

1. The purpose of an evaluation of proposals is to determine the extent, level or degree to which a vendor's proposal meets the Department's need as specified in the RFP and to select the proposal most advantageous to the Department.
2. The Evaluation Committee may engage in formal discussions with vendors, require and attend demonstrations, and/or conduct inspections or site visits to promote understanding of the Department's requirements and the vendors' proposals.
 1. Vendors shall be accorded fair and equal treatment with respect to any opportunity for discussion of proposals, inspections, demonstrations, and/or site visits.
 2. Revisions to proposals may be permitted prior to award for the purpose of obtaining proposals more advantageous to the Department.
 3. In conducting discussions, there shall be no disclosure of any information contained in or derived from proposals submitted by competing vendors.
 4. The Purchasing Official shall prepare a written summary of any and all negotiations with vendors.
3. The Purchasing Official shall establish a numerical rating system and develop a score sheet to be used by the Evaluation Committee to rate each proposal.
4. To promote consistency in the application of the rating system among the evaluators, each numerical rating shall be defined. See example in Appendix A.
5. Some evaluation factors may not be subject to a numerical system. For such factors, a "pass/fail" or "yes/no" shall be utilized, where "pass" or "yes" is worth a set number of points (for example, three (3) points in a scale of 1 – 5) and "fail" or "no" equals zero (0) points.
6. Award shall be made to the vendor whose proposal is determined by the Evaluation Committee, subject to final approval by the Purchasing Official, to be most advantageous to the Department, considering price and other factors.

5.4 Evaluation Committee Members

1. Any number of members may serve on the Committee at the discretion of the Purchasing Official; however; all members shall have experience or familiarity with the product or service being purchased.

2. If any committee member has any existing or previous relationship, connection, association, or involvement with any vendor whose bid or proposal is being evaluated; or if any committee member may, or may appear to, gain privately – financial or otherwise – from the award, that committee member shall disclose any such information in writing to the Purchasing Official prior to service.
 1. The Purchasing Official shall determine, in consideration of the disclosure, whether such committee member shall participate on the committee. If the Purchasing Official is the committee member making the disclosure, the Purchasing Manager shall determine participation.
 2. The facts and circumstances leading to the decision shall be documented in writing.

5.5 Notification and Award of Contract

1. Once the award decision is made, the Purchasing Official shall inform the Purchasing Manager, who shall post the results.
2. The Purchasing Official shall issue a Notice of Intent to Make Award letter to the successful vendor.
3. The Purchasing Official shall cooperate with the Purchasing Manager and the Judicial Department Legal counsel to develop a written contract for the successful vendor in accordance with the terms of the solicitation. However, a contract is not awarded until any protest which may have been made in connection with the award decision has been resolved. See Protests of Award (Section 6).
4. No property interest of any nature shall accrue until the contract is awarded and signed by both parties.

6. PROTESTS OF AWARD

6.1 Resolution by Mutual Agreement

1. The Purchasing Official, in consultation with the Purchasing Manager, shall attempt to settle and resolve, by mutual agreement through informal discussions, any questions, concerns, or controversies regarding the solicitation and the award of contract.
2. If a controversy cannot be resolved by mutual agreement, the vendor may file a protest.

6.2 Filing a Protest

1. Any vendor who is aggrieved in connection with a solicitation or the award of a contract may protest directly to the Director of the Financial Services Division (the "Director"). The protest shall be submitted in writing no later than ten (10) working days from the issuance date of the award or non-award letter where a solicitation was issued.
2. Any vendor who is aggrieved in connection with a purchase or acquisition that was not competitively bid may protest directly to the Director within thirty (30) days after such aggrieved vendor knows or should have known of the facts giving rise thereto.
3. Vendors may file a protest regarding any perceived failure of the Department to follow the requirements of the Purchasing Fiscal Rules, or to act unfairly arbitrarily, or unethically during any phase of solicitation or award process.
4. Protests shall be type-written, may be delivered either via postal mail or email, and shall include, as a minimum, the following:
 1. The name and address of the protestor.
 2. A statement of the reasons for the protest, which shall detail the unfair, arbitrary, or unethical actions of the Department, and shall cite, as applicable, the specific Purchasing Fiscal Rules that the Department failed to follow.
 3. Evidence of the failures and/or documents substantiating the protest.
 4. The vendor's requested relief or resolution.

6.3 Review of Protests and Director's Decision

1. The Director shall have the sole authority to settle and resolve a protest of an aggrieved vendor.
2. The Director shall render a decision regarding the protest within fifteen (15) working days after the Director, himself or herself, receives the written protest.
 1. The decision shall be based on and limited to a review of the issues raised by the aggrieved vendor.
 2. The Director shall promptly gather and review relevant information.
 1. The Purchasing Official and Purchasing Manager shall provide all information, materials, and documents as may be requested by the Director.
 2. The Director may also request additional information from the vendor.
 3. If any party fails to comply expeditiously with any request for information by the Director, the Director shall resolve the protest without such information.
3. The Director shall issue an objective, written decision based upon the facts of his or her review.
 1. Each issue brought forth by the aggrieved vendor shall be addressed.
 2. The Director shall state the reasons for his or her decision.
4. The Director shall issue his/her decision to the vendor post-marked within the timeframe allowed.
5. The Director's decision shall be final and conclusive.

6.4 Stay of Award

In the case of a protest of any award, the award will be stayed until the protest decision is issued.

7. UNAUTHORIZED PURCHASES

For the purposes of this section, an “unauthorized purchase” is a purchase of any product or service that is made in violation of any of the provisions of the Purchasing Fiscal Rules herein.

7.1 Decision to Ratify an Unauthorized Purchase

1. If any Judicial Department employee purchases any products or services contrary to the provisions of the Rules contained in this document, the Purchasing Official shall need to determine whether or not to ratify (post-authorize) the purchase.
2. In making such determination, the Purchasing Official shall consider all factors related to the purchase including but not limited to the following:

A harassment accusation made nearly eight years ago against Colorado Supreme Court Justice Richard Gabriel, then a judge on the state Court of Appeals, by a newly hired law clerk was settled quickly and quietly, according to two people with knowledge of the agreement, essentially ensuring it would not sully his shot at the high court.

To safeguard that secrecy, the Colorado Judicial Department had the female appellate law clerk who made the accusation in September 2013 – then a 34-year-old who was a year out of an Ivy League law school – sign a non-disclosure agreement that kept her on the payroll for a year in return for her promise not to sue, the sources confirmed for The Denver Post.

The woman claimed the judge and a male law clerk in the court created an uncomfortable work environment for her shortly after her arrival in August 2013, the sources said.

In an email to The Post, Gabriel said that “any suggestion that I engaged in any form of harassment of anyone at any time is false.”

At the time Gabriel hired the woman to work for him as a judicial clerk, he was an applicant for an opening on the state Supreme Court.

An internal department investigation was inconclusive about the woman’s allegations. The release agreement she signed was allegedly approved by a chief justice and kept from reaching the Supreme Court Nominating Commission.

The allegation that the release agreement was crafted to keep Gabriel “safe” during the Supreme Court nomination process is part of a two-page memo at the center of a scandal over a $2.5 million contract awarded to a former department official. That official, Mindy Masias, was prepared to file a tell-all sex discrimination lawsuit if she was fired over financial irregularities.

Who conducted the investigation into the woman’s complaint is unclear. Masias was the department’s director of human resources at the time.

The woman left the department before her one-year contract was completed but continued to be paid for the full term, according to the sources, who refused to be identified because they could be disciplined for discussing the confidential matter publicly. Another female law clerk replaced the woman on Gabriel’s staff in December 2013, she told The Post in an interview and one of the sources confirmed.

The Judicial Department has refused repeated Denver Post requests for a copy of the agreement under the judiciary’s open records rules, saying internal personnel investigations and sexual harassment complaints and investigations are protected from disclosure.

Steven Zansberg, a 1st Amendment attorney for The Post, argued that settlement agreements between former public employees, in all branches of government, and their former government employers are routinely declared to be public records — even in cases where sexual harassment allegations are at issue.

The former clerk was paid about $50,400 in all, payroll records confirm, the standard annual salary for an appellate law clerk at the state’s Court of Appeals.

Details of the conduct that led the woman to complain are unclear, but one of the sources described the alleged harassment as “a 2 on a scale of 1 to 10,” and, at its heart, a misunderstanding over what was said.

The agreement was intended to “not ruin her career, to put this behind her and (allow her) to move on,” the person said, refusing to offer specifics. “Basically it wasn’t what she had signed up for. It wasn’t a good fit. It was a very uncomfortable situation for her.”

The former law clerk, now an attorney specializing in employment law outside of Colorado, did not respond to repeated telephone and email messages from The Post. The newspaper does not name the alleged victims of harassment without their permission, but sources confirmed her identity and judicial department records confirm her employment.

The male law clerk involved, now an attorney in private practice, confirmed a department investigation was conducted.

“I was interviewed as part of an internal investigation and during that process I was specifically told by the investigator that no allegations of inappropriate conduct had been made against me,” he told The Post in an email. “I have never been made aware of any allegations of misconduct against me by (the woman) or anyone else during my time at the Judicial Department. I never engaged in any misconduct.”

The memo, authored by then-Human Resources Director Eric Brown, highlighted a number of situations in the department in which alleged gender discrimination and sexually explicit misdeeds by male judges and other high-ranking officials dating back nearly a decade were ignored or covered up to protect them.

Brown was Masias’ deputy when the law clerk’s allegations were investigated.

The decision to negotiate the settlement with the law clerk was “per the chief justice,” the memo said, though it did not name the judge. Chief Justice Michael Bender was retiring at the time and Chief Justice Nancy Rice was to replace him.

“Negotiated a release agreement with a law clerk who accused her COA (Court of Appeals) judge of harassment in order to keep the COA judge ‘safe’ during the ... Supreme Court Justice selection process per the chief justice,” the memo says.

At the request of the Supreme Court, a panel of eight people was named last week by Gov. Jared Polis, Attorney General Phil Weiser and the Legislature to hire and monitor an independent investigator to look into the memo's allegations. Simultaneously, Colorado Auditor Dianne Ray's office is investigating the assertion that the $2.5 million contract was given to Masias, the department's former chief of staff, to avoid the tell-all lawsuit.

Responding to an email from The Post seeking comment on the circumstances and details of the negotiated settlement with the former clerk, Gabriel said: "Your recitation of the facts of this matter is incorrect," but he declined to elaborate.

Gabriel also said he welcomed the inquiry.

"I will cooperate fully with the forthcoming independent investigation and will be fully vindicated," he said in the email. "Pending completion of that investigation, I will have no further comment."

While Gabriel was not among three Supreme Court finalists named in October 2013 to replace the retiring Bender – Justice William Hood eventually received the appointment – the release agreement ensured Gabriel's hopes for the state's highest court would not be marred.

Bender told The Denver Post he was not aware of any harassment complaint against any Court of Appeals judge applicant to the Supreme Court at the time. As an ex-officio chairman of the nominating commission, Bender said he would have been duty-bound to report any such incident to them, no matter how slight.

Then-incoming Chief Justice Rice has told The Post she was aware of the harassment complaint as detailed in the memo, but didn't say when she knew of it. She said she knew a department investigation had ensued and that there was a resolution.

She would not say whether the complaint was founded or not, or what the resolution was.

The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline has said none of the incidents listed in the memo was sent to them despite a department directive that requires the referral of all harassment complaints. The commission must disclose any founded complaint to a judicial nominating commission.

Several members of the 15-person Supreme Court nominating commission from that time have told The Post they recall Gabriel was an applicant for Bender's slot. They said they do not recall learning of any negative issues regarding anyone who applied for the court's open seat, and that such information would likely have had a material impact on whether an applicant would get nominated to the governor.

The commission fans out to conduct extensive interviews of the applicants, as well as associates and colleagues, then conducts multiple votes before deciding on three names to be forwarded to the governor.

Gov. John Hickenlooper appointed Gabriel to the Supreme Court in June 2015, replacing retiring Justice Gregory Hobbs Jr. Gabriel had been an appellate judge for eight years.

In a recent public hearing in which the Supreme Court heard comments regarding increased transparency in the attorney discipline process, Gabriel said there should be some limitation on what complaints become public.

"I am concerned with this, unlimited, everything is open to the world (approach) because I fear the damage, reputationally, that it could do to very fine lawyers who did nothing wrong, and clients using it as a weapon against a lawyer," Gabriel said.

He has also emailed others to say initial Denver Post stories that revealed the existence of the memo, the judicial department's refusal to release it, and former State Court Administrator Christopher Ryan's assertions of a quid-pro-quo contract were "simply not true."

"As in (The Post's) past articles on the branch, which are uniformly negative, in this one, (The Post) found an unhappy ex-employee and (The Post) ran with the one-sided, sensationalist narrative (The Post) was told," Gabriel emailed his staff on Feb. 3, the morning The Post's first story appeared, according to a copy obtained by the newspaper via an open records request.

The court released the memo five days later after the justices said they read it for the first time, and Chief Justice Brian Boatright called for an independent investigation into its contents and the auditor's inquiry into Ryan's claims.

Report determines harassment accusation unfounded

By THE DENVER POST | newsroom@denverpost.com | The Denver Post
PUBLISHED: February 26, 2021 at 6:00 a.m. | UPDATED: July 29, 2022 at 1:50 p.m.

The original story and headline have been removed from The Denver Post website under guidelines meant to ensure our published archive is an accurate reflection of events. The original story detailed a harassment allegation against a sitting judge and an agreement with the accuser. It included sources who said the agreement was reached quickly and quietly, essentially ensuring it would not harm the judge's ability to obtain a seat on the high court. In the story, the judge said he had never engaged in harassment. The Judicial Department refused to release a copy of the agreement, saying internal personnel investigations and sexual harassment complaints and investigations are protected from disclosure.

However, a subsequent report by Investigations Law Group, which was hired by the Colorado Judicial Department to investigate allegations of sexual harassment and gender discrimination within the branch, showed the harassment complaint was never substantiated. While an agreement was reached with the woman who accused the judge, the report determined that was linked to "later complaints from the clerk, implicating retaliation concerns" that stemmed from a job reassignment.

The report did say her complaints about retaliation and her job reassignment were not handled properly.

The full report can be found here. The information relevant to this allegation begins on Page 20.

Judicial branch mum on details of alleged settlement

BY CHRISTOPHER OSHER
The Denver Gazette

Colorado's judicial branch will neither confirm nor deny whether it has any additional records on the allegation that a Court of Appeals judge negotiated an agreement with a law clerk to prevent the clerk from disclosing sexual harassment claims, citing a provision of its rules that requires confidentiality for all investigations it conducts into sexual harassment claims against judges.

Terri Morrison, the legal counsel for Colorado's Judicial Department, denied a records request from The Gazette seeking details about the alleged release agreement, which was one of nearly two dozen misconduct allegations listed in a recent memo The Gazette and The Denver Post obtained.

"Without confirming or denying the factual assumptions in your request, any record responsive to your request necessarily would be required to be withheld," she said, citing a portion of the court system's rules for governing public access to information and records.

The section she cited states that a records custodian "must deny" public inspection of "any records of sexual harassment complaints and investigations, whether or not such records are maintained as part of a personnel file."

"Disclosure of all or a part of any records of sexual harassment complaints and investigations to the person in interest is permissible to the extent that the disclosure can be made without permitting the identification, as a result of the disclosure, of any individual involved," the section further states.

That section also states that harassment complaints and any investigation into those complaints can be made public by a "a person of interest" when such "record supports the contention that a publicly reported, written, printed or spoken allegation of sexual harassment against such a person is false."

Jeffrey Roberts, executive director of the Colorado Freedom of Information Coalition, said details about the release agreement should be made public.

"The fact that there appears there was a settlement, which involved compensation to this law clerk, it's hard to see how that fits the definition of a sexual harassment complaint or investigation into such a complaint," Roberts said. "There could be details in this agreement that would have to be redacted, but the fact of the agreement and the exchange of money or payment of money, that would be seen to be something that would not be covered by that rule."

He added: "The public needs to know if this happened. If the allegation is true that there was a negotiated agreement to protect a Court of Appeals judge, that has to come out at some point."

Last week, the alleged release agreement between the law clerk and the Appeals Court judge was mentioned in a memo that became public detailing nearly two dozen instances of misconduct involving judges and court administrators. The memo stated that the release agreement was negotiated to settle allegations of harassment, and that the settlement preserved the judge's chances for potential selection to the Colorado Supreme Court.

The memo contained no further details about the settlement and did not reveal whether any money was paid as part of the settlement or detail any names involved in the settlement.

The release agreement was one of nearly two dozen instances of misconduct involving judges and administrators in the court system. The memo also states that Mindy Masias, the former chief of staff to the Colorado Supreme Court, was told to destroy an anonymous complaint alleging sexism and harassment by a former chief justice of the Colorado Supreme Court, who also was not identified.

The memo further alleged that two lower court judges were promoted to chief judge status in their judicial districts despite sending pornographic emails on their judicial emails and details instances involving court administrators, including one who allegedly was having sex with his staff.

The Colorado Supreme Court made the memo public after The Denver Post reported its existence. Christopher Ryan, Colorado's former state court administrator, told The Post he took the memo to Nathan "Ben" Coats, who at that time was chief justice of the Colorado Supreme Court.

Ryan alleges that Coats agreed with Ryan's suggestion that they give Masias a sole source training contract worth up to $2.72 million to prevent her from filing a lawsuit that would make the misconduct detailed in the memo public.

The Colorado Supreme Court has denied that the contract, which later was terminated, was given to Masias to keep her allegations from becoming public. Brian Boatright, the current chief justice of the Colorado Supreme Court, announced this week that he will have the governor, Legislature and Colorado Attorney General's Office convene a panel that will select an independent counsel to investigate the allegations in the memo and release the results of that investigation to the public.

Women's Bar seeks meeting with high court on sexual harassment

BY MICHAEL KARLIK
The Denver Gazette

The Colorado Women's Bar Association has requested a meeting with the state's Supreme Court justices to discuss sexual harassment within the judiciary.

"Recent revelations regarding complaints of sexual harassment within the judicial system, and their nontransparent handling, have been profoundly demoralizing to our members," wrote Miranda K. Hawkins, the president of the association which represents approximately 1,500 attorneys and other legal professionals.

Earlier this month, reports emerged of a multimillion dollar contract awarded to a former Judicial Department employee in exchange for her silence on a slew of misconduct allegations, including harassment and sexism.

"In keeping with our mission, we request an immediate meeting to discuss the following preliminary recommendations for systemic reform," Hawkins added. "We value the independence of the judiciary along with safety for women, and offer our expertise to help build solutions that respect your independence but create sorely needed accountability."

Among the possible reforms to the judiciary, the CWBA proposed allowing judicial staff to anonymously review judges, soliciting any experiences of discrimination, harassment or bias.

The bar association also suggested including statistics about those types of complaints in judges' retention evaluations. The judicial retention process accounts for such factors as demeanor or knowledge of the law in a judge's public work, but may not describe the totality of complaints against judges for voters.

Finally, CWBA asked for the hiring of an independent investigator within the judiciary specifically for discrimination and harassment complaints.

State confidentiality agreements cost millions, silence whistleblowers

BY DAVID MIGOYA
The Denver Gazette

With increasing frequency, Colorado is mandating its employees — some of them whistleblowers calling out misconduct or malfeasance — sign nondisclosure clauses in any financial settlement they make with the state, effectively silencing them from ever letting anyone know what happened in their cases, according to interviews and dozens of records reviewed by The Denver Gazette.

The Denver Gazette's investigative team

In other instances over the past three years, records show state employees who faced discipline for alleged misconduct were instead given lucrative send-offs and assurances of the government's silence through similar nondisclosure deals.

Confidentiality agreements have the potential to bury evidence and prevent investigations of crimes, discrimination, sexual harassment and wage inequality, leading to a growing chorus of lawmakers and advocacy groups calling for them to be abolished.

The Denver Gazette also uncovered dozens more examples where state employees agreed to the nondisclosure clauses, sometimes for a payment of as little as $2,000, with little public record available to explain why.

Since 2019, there have been more than 80 settlement agreements with state employees totaling more than $4 million in taxpayer payouts, each with a nondisclosure clause preventing them from discussing it with anyone, records show.

Critics say the agreements are little more than government efforts to prevent the airing of its dirty laundry. The few proponents of the practice say it's an effective method of trimming the number of potential claims that would be filed if word of the settlements and their dollar amounts were to easily become public.

"I absolutely hate them. They are so hypocritical," said attorney Diane King, whose clients have signed some of the deals. "Public policy is that the public should know this stuff, but those who know what happened aren't allowed to talk about it. That's just muzzling and it's offensive. But we routinely have to agree to it if they want to settle."

Public records laws stop a government agency from hiding the amount of a settlement or with whom, but do not extend to the reasons or underlying complaints behind a settlement unless they are already in a public record such as a lawsuit or official complaint.

The Denver Gazette was often forced to track down those other public records, sometimes via open-records requests when the documents could be found, to unravel the details behind taxpayer-funded financial settlements. Those settlements have included:

- A $50,000 payment — $26,000 of it for his own "emotional distress" — to the state's former Parks and Wildlife determined he bullied and retaliated against his ballplayers.

- A Department of Education finance official who was paid nearly $183,000 to resign after complaining about internal control problems that he claimed involved the misuse of public funds.

- A $750,000 settlement to seven women in the education department who each received more than $64,000 — and their attorney another $300,000 — to not sue the state after a male co-worker was convicted of a felony for taking up-skirt photos of them on the job.

- A Department of Human Services supervising nurse was paid nearly $384,000 to resign after being disciplined for disclosing unlicensed pharmacy technicians at Wheat Ridge Regional Center were dispensing medications without supervision.

- More than $160,000 was paid to an attorney at the Department of Public Health and Environment to resign after she claimed the lack of enforcement actions against some assisted-living facilities were the result of political connections.

- A $100,000 settlement to a Department of Corrections prison guard who repeatedly complained of harassment that included being handcuffed to a pipe by his bosses, having a firearm pointed at him, being arrested on ginned-up criminal charges, and being tasered while sitting at a prison computer.

"Public policy is that the public should know this stuff, but those who know what happened aren't allowed to talk about it. That's just muzzling and it's offensive. But we routinely have to agree to it if they want to settle."

Attorney Mark Zaid of Washington said governments can make it appear employees need to sign nondisclosure agreements "when it's known that no such legal prohibitions actually exist."

Deals would be illegal

Nearly all the agreements would be illegal if they were with federal employees under federal law, legal experts say. Colorado has a law banning retaliation against an employee who properly discloses information to a whistleblower agency, but not a prohibition on silencing them with cash payments.

"There are over-breadth steps taken by government — state and federal — to make it appear to employees that they are legally bound to maintain silence when it's known that no such legal prohibitions actually exist," said Mark

Zaid, a Washington, D.C., attorney and national expert on nondisclosure deals. "Most people would think that if they want to settle they need to sign and won't believe anything to the contrary. Few would think to challenge it."

And the state is steadily increasing its mandate on requiring ND clauses in employee settlements, according to attorneys familiar with the practice who would only confirm the trend anonymously for fear of affecting negotiations with their clients.

Attorney General Phil Weiser's office, which largely negotiates every settlement agreement with a state employee, denied coercing anyone into signing an ND clause.

"The Department of Law represents state agencies in state employee/employer disputes. In settlement negotiations, the department attorneys discourage the use of nondisclosure or nondisparagement clauses," AG spokesman Lawrence Pacheco told The Denver Gazette. "Some agencies opt to use them anyway depending on the extenuating circumstances."

Attorneys who represent state workers, however, say that's not accurate.

"In cases where I have represented state employees, the Attorney General's office routinely not only encourages but requires the employee to agree to a nondisclosure provision in exchange for a settlement," Denver attorney Casey Leier said. "We used to have some ability to negotiate the exact scope of the nondisclosure, but this year, the state has changed its position and appears to be requiring a complete and total ban on any speech by the employee about their case and what they went through."

Several employees interviewed by The Denver Gazette say they frequently felt pressured to sign the documents while others said being silenced should not be allowed.

"They just make you feel as if you have to, that it's part of the deal, that everybody does it," said a state employee who refused to sign an NDA and agreed to discuss it only if their name was not used for fear of additional retaliation. "If I feel like they're doing something wrong, I should be able to say something, otherwise nothing will ever get fixed."

Said another: "I was just done with all the hassle, all the problems, all the threats. Signing was the easiest way for it to all go away and I could just get on with my life."

Efforts by Colorado's legislature to pass a law prohibiting all nondisclosure clauses with state employees have been unsuccessful as recently as two years ago. Colorado is among a majority of states that allow nondisclosure settlements with public employees.

Three states — Oregon, Washington and California — recently joined a growing number of others prohibiting the practice, largely the result of the #MeToo movement. After a wave of sexual misconduct allegations were made against powerful men such as movie mogul Harvey Weinstein, nondisclosure agreements that bar victims from discussing past claims of harassment or abuse came under fire nationally, with calls from politicians and advocacy groups to abolish them.

"This is concerning, particularly in cases of discrimination, harassment, and wage inequality, because the public deserves to know when this illegal conduct is occurring," Leier said. "For instance, we know that when one woman has been harassed, we often later learn that there were many other women who were victims of the same treatment. The state can silence individual employees one by one, but the only way to stop discrimination in the long run is to bring the root cause to light."

Nondisparagement deals common

The Denver Gazette even found nondisparagement agreements in which both the employees and the state agreed not to say bad things about each other. One of them, involving Secretary of State Jena Griswold, even restricted the employee, then-deputy Secretary of State Jenny Flanagan, from saying anything outside of a list of specific talking points outlined in the agreement.

Before joining Griswold's staff, Flanagan was vice president of state operations for Common Cause, a group that touts its efforts at keeping government transparent and accountable.

Neither Flanagan nor Griswold responded to efforts to reach them.

A similar nondisparagement and nondisclosure agreement exists between Erin Mewhinney, the former director of early care and learning at the Office of Early Childhood for the Colorado Department of Human Services, and her supervisors in that division.

Mewhinney was paid about $40,000 to resign in May 2021. There is no available document to explain why.

Yet her agreement appears to have been so cavalierly written that it restricts Michelle Barnes, the executive director of DHS, Mary Alice Cohen, the deputy executive director of the Colorado Office of Early Childhood, and Anne-Marie Braga, the deputy executive director of community partnerships at DHS, from saying anything bad about each other, but not about Mewhinney.

Mewhinney did not respond to efforts to reach her.

And when Christopher Castilian left the Great Outdoors Colorado Trust Fund (GoCo) in June 2021 after a four-year tenure as its executive director, he pocketed $52,000 and both sides agreed not to mention the agreement or even its existence to anyone. In exchange, Castilian agreed not to disparage anyone, including Gov. Jared Polis and his staff — and everyone at any level of state government in any department is barred from talking badly about Castilian.

Unlike the other settlements reviewed by The Denver Gazette, however, Castilian's does not carry a provision that the document is accessible under the Colorado Open Records Act. That's because it did not go through the state controller's office, which routinely ensures that language is contained in any separation agreement.

"As far as we are concerned, and as a matter of practice, settlement agreements don't require an NDA, but must have a CORA clause," said Doug Platt, spokesman for the Department of Personnel and Administration, which houses the Office of the State Controller. "The other sides of an agreement might require the NDA, but that's not our business."

Pacheco at the AG's office told The Denver Gazette that while other state agencies have agreed to the ND clauses, "The Department of Law has not asked any employees separating from the DOL to sign a settlement with a nondisclosure clause, and no DOL employee has signed one" while Weiser has been at the helm.

That's sort of true.

The department in April finalized a $15,000 settlement with paralegal Tatiana Smith in which she agreed not to publicize any aspect of the agreement.

Smith had sued the department in U.S. District Court in Denver in 2020 claiming she was fired in retaliation for racial and religious discrimination she experienced in the department in the short five months she'd worked there beginning in March 2019.

Earlier claims she filed with the state's Civil Rights Division over alleged racism and discrimination were dismissed.

The AG's office said in the settlement document Smith was fired because of poor performance.

"This was actually to settle a lawsuit filed against the state, so it's not really a separation agreement," Pacheco said. "It's a bit of a different application of the settlement agreement."

Colorado's effort quickly died

Sen. Barbara Kirkmeyer in 2021 sponsored Senate Bill 21-23, which would have prohibited state agencies from restricting employees from disclosing factual circumstances concerning their jobs. The only limits would be when disclosure would breach any privacy laws or reveal matters that were required to remain confidential, such as trade secrets, grand jury testimony or the like.

During committee hearings, Kirkmeyer said it was the ongoing judiciary scandal in which a number of high-ranking Judicial Department employees had signed nondisclosure settlements that had prompted her proposed legislation. One of them, former Chief of Staff Mindy Masias, landed a multi-million-dollar training contract with the state just after signing her settlement.

Masias was to be fired when she allegedly threatened a tell-all sex-discrimination lawsuit in which she would reveal years of judicial misconduct that went undisciplined or was handled quietly. That threat included a two-page memo that outlined the alleged misconduct.

The author of the memo, then-operations chief Eric Brown, similarly signed a nondisclosure settlement when he resigned after news of the Masias deal became public in the summer of 2019.

Kirkmeyer at the time said the Masias story and ensuing scandal was partly responsible for why she drafted the bill.

"State government employees are public servants. They're hired to serve the public. They're paid with public funds. Non-disclosure agreements raise both ethical and legal implications," Kirkmeyer, a Weld County Republican, told the Senate Judiciary Committee in the bill's lone hearing before the legislature in March 2021. "A government employee should not be allowed to have their speech silenced, to be muzzled. The public is entitled to know what public employees are doing and what their government is doing."

Miller Hudson, the former president of the Colorado Association of Public Employees, testified that state agencies will insist on a nondisclosure clause in a settlement agreement "when there's something they're trying to hide."

"By enforcing the nondisclosure deal, you essentially muzzle the employee and you put them in a position, even if they get a financially satisfactory settlement, they're left in a kind of PTSD position about what really happened," Hudson testified. "I'm aware of some employees who carried it to their grave, bitterness about the way that they were dealt with, signing their voice away."

Hudson said that at the CAPE he frequently witnessed the AG's office ramp up the state's settlement offer with an employee's refusal to sign the nondisclosure clause.

"The employee refused to sign at $180,000, so they were asked if they'd sign at $250,000 or $300,000," Hudson said. "This is not any way anyone wants to see government operate."

The bill ultimately died in committee in a 3-2 vote that followed party lines, Democrat over Republican. The committee chairman, Sen. Pete Lee, D-Colorado Springs, told The Denver Gazette recently that he felt the bill was "simply too broad, too sweeping, covered too much ground."

Hudson today said he's not changed his mind, that nondisclosure deals are bad news.

"They're simply done to the employees you want to go away," he said. "They work their magic, asking what do we have to give you to make you leave and shut up."

Several states enact prohibitions

At least 16 states have laws that deal with confidentiality agreements, largely in the private sector, although they would apply to government employees. Some are restricted only to the type of nondisclosure, such as ensuring names of victims in sexual misconduct cases are protected.

In Oregon, state law allows anyone to sue their employer for violating any confidentiality agreement and Illinois offers protection to whistleblowers who sign confidentiality agreements, preventing them from being enforced.

Maine this year banned employers from using confidentiality agreements that would stop workers from reporting misconduct to law enforcement.

Washington passed the "Silence No More" Act that bans confidentiality agreements in all workplace discrimination cases, as well wage claims and workplace conduct that are "against a clear mandate of public policy."

In Colorado, the prohibition is on re-

9. NON-DISCLOSURE. The parties agree that they shall not affirmatively disclose to or discuss with any third party any aspect of the claims or allegations that form the basis for this agreement, the contents of the settlement negotiations among the parties, and the terms of the settlement among the parties, except (a) to the extent disclosure is required for tax, retirement, benefits, insurance or banking purposes, or in response to a valid subpoena, and (b) Employer may disclose the claims or allegations, the contents of the settlement negotiations among the parties, and the terms of the settlement to its Controller. Without violating the terms of this Agreement, the parties may disclose, if asked by a third party, that the matter has been resolved by settlement.

10. RESIGNATION. Employee agrees that Employee will voluntarily resign effective July 29, 2022. Employee will submit a letter of resignation when this Agreement is signed and will complete all applicable separation documents. The University agrees to accept the voluntary resignation effective July 29, 2022 and will place the resignation letter in Employee's official personnel file.

11. SETTLEMENT PAYMENT. The University will provide Employee with a settlement payment of $62,513.32, which represents disputed wages. The University will issue employee a W-2 on the payment.

The women's softball coach at Adams State University was found to have bullied and retaliated against his ballplayers. The state gave him more than a year's salary to resign as long as he did not disclose the deal or reason to anyone.

taliating against any public employee for having disclosed information, leaving some to wonder if confidentiality agreements are even enforceable.

"These agreements seek to waive the rights of that statute," said Steve Zansberg, a First Amendment attorney in Denver who represents a number of news organizations including The Denver Gazette. "Aside from the First Amendment issues, one way to challenge any contract that includes a confidentiality clause is it's unenforceable and void since it is against public policy."

Agreements that prevent a public employee from speaking about them "are one-way deals, meaning the parties are in such an unfair bargaining position, the courts could call them unenforceable," he said.

That Colorado even allows confidentiality clauses in separation agreements with state employees, even in matters that settle litigation, "significantly reduces transparency and government accountability," according to Defend Colorado, a political group that funds conservative causes.

"If whistleblowers are silenced through government-funded payouts, it diminishes accountability, protects poorly functioning agencies, and hides systemic workplace problems," the group said in a statement. "Equally troubling, there are no standards or uniformity to dictate when an NDA should be offered or what terms should be included. As a result, state officials have enormous discretion to determine who should be silenced with taxpayer dollars."

John Ramsey says pain remains after 26 years

9News

It's been 26 years since the body of six-year-old JonBenet Ramsey was found inside her Boulder home. It was December 26, 1996.

"You know, Christmas Day, for several years we just didn't have Christmas anymore, it was just too difficult," said John Ramsey, JonBenet's father.

Ramsey said the pain of JonBenet's still-unsolved murder remains, as does the anger.

"Boulder police has never contacted me, nor has the DA's office," Ramsey said.

Earlier this week, Boulder police issued a news release updating the investigation into JonBenet's murder. There was actually no new information, just a recap of the number of leads they've pursued, people they've interviewed and agencies with whom they've worked.

"It's like what they put out before, we're doing everything we can, we're trying really hard," Ramsey said.

The one aspect of the news release that Ramsey said drew his attention was its mention of DNA testing. According to Boulder police, the amount of DNA evidence available for analysis is extremely small and could be destroyed by testing. As a result, there are apparently no plans to test that evidence, which Ramsey said is a big mistake.

"Why aren't those being tested? They should be. Right now, waiting for the next generation of DNA technology is silly," Ramsey said. "Why in the world you wouldn't test them now, given that the technology has advanced dramatically in 25 years, I don't understand that."

Ramsey said he sent a letter to Governor Jared Polis about a month ago asking him to ensure that the remaining DNA evidence in the case is tested by a private lab with the latest technology. So far, Ramsey said, he has not heard back from the Governor's Office.

When asked if he thought the case will ever be solved, Ramsey responded, "Not if it stays in the hands of the Boulder police, no, I don't, I really don't," Ramsey said.

Case No. 22-226

Confidential Legal Mail

To: Judge Dennis Maes
From: Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline Via Email:

Dear Judge Maes:

On behalf of the Commission on Judicial Discipline, I write to inform you of the outcome of your Request for Evaluation (RFE) related to the Supreme Court's conduct in the wake of the Masias contract controversy. As a threshold matter, the Commission voted to recognize your RFE as a complaint only as to Chief Justice Boatright, per Colo. RJD 13(b).

Regarding your allegations against Chief Justice Boatright, your RFE claims that he violated (a) Canon Rule 2.9 related to ex parte communications; (b) Canon Rule 2.10(A) related to public comments on pending or impending cases; (c) Canon Rule 2.10(B) related to promises on the outcome of cases; (d) Canon Rule 2.11(A) related to judicial disqualification; and (e) Canon Rule 2.15(A) related to reporting known judicial misconduct.

After a thorough review of this matter, including Chief Justice Boatright's response to your RFE, the Commission has dismissed the allegations that Chief Justice Boatright violated Canon Rules 2.9, 2.10(B), 2.11(A), and 2.15(A).

Your allegation that Chief Justice Boatright violated Canon Rule 2.10(A) (regarding alleged inappropriate public comments) has also been dismissed, but with an expression of concern, per Colo. RJD 35(a). In short, the Commission has determined that the allegations in the complaint did not warrant discipline.

This matter is now closed, and pursuant to Colo. RJD 6.5, it must remain confidential.

Please accept this letter as a Request for Evaluation of the current members of the Colorado Supreme Court concerning its behavior surrounding the Mindy Masias contract matter and its aftermath. Should the Commission desire more detail please so advise.

The foundation of our government was built on a deep and abiding respect for the Rule of Law and the belief that no person or entity is above the law. Our judicial system is guided by long established principles, rules, processes and ethical considerations that all judges take an oath to obey. As the commission is well aware, it has jurisdiction over all Colorado state judges, including the Colorado Supreme Court. Rule 5 of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline provides the grounds for judicial discipline.

The Colorado Constitution requires that any allegation of judicial misconduct must be referred to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline.

Fundamental to the American commitment to the Rule of Law is that judicial disputes be decided by neutral decision-makers. Confidence in the system is severely undermined if the public believes an outcome has been determined prior to the commencement of an action or during the course of a proceeding and prior to a thorough inquiry of the contested matter. Similarly, all confidence would be lost if the public believes the guilt or innocence of an individual is determined before the presentation of evidence. The same result occurs if the court determines the credibility of witnesses prior to a court proceeding. The Colorado Supreme Court failed to respect these established principles during the Masias inquiry.

Rule 2.10(A) provides that a judge “shall not make any public statement that might reasonably be expected to affect the outcome or impair the fairness of a matter pending or impending in any court, or make any nonpublic statement that might interfere with a fair trial or hearing.” It was distinctly possible the Supreme Court might be called upon to review matters concerning the Masias contract through litigation involving civil, criminal or judicial misconduct proceedings.

As early as February 4, 2021, Chief Justice Boatright issued a statement concerning an article that appeared in the Denver Post alleging that the judicial department entered into a contract with Masias to keep her from divulging judicial misconduct that occurred during the tenure of Chief Justice Nathan Coats. Boatright allegedly denied in the article that Chief Justice Coats and his counsel, Andrew Rottman, would ever authorize court resources to silence a blackmailer and any statement to the contrary was “simply false”. The allegation was not referred to the Judicial Discipline Commission.

The denial was issued without a full investigation and failed to follow the Constitutional requirement that any allegation of judicial misconduct be referred to the Judicial Discipline Commission. Boatright's failure to comply with the Constitution and alleged violation of Rule 2.10(A) are grounds for discipline.

Boatright violated Rule 2.10(B) which provides a "judge shall not, in connection with any cases, controversies, or issues that are likely to come before the court, make pledges, promises, or commitments that are inconsistent with the impartial performance of the adjudicative duties of judicial office." Yet, Boatright announced that the court would be hiring private counsel to investigate the allegations and "clear those wrongly accused." It would be reasonable to believe that a pledge or promise was made prior to an investigation and ensured an outcome that would absolve the court of any misconduct. He referred to Coats and Rottman as "dedicated public servants." Opined that he and the other justices have "full confidence" in a judge who was alleged to have committed acts of judicial misconduct. Clearly, these statements indicate the Chief Justice and the other justices determined the credibility of witnesses prior to a thorough and fair investigation and, presumably, through the receipt of ex parte communications as prohibited by Rule 2.9.

Chief Justice Boatright violated Rule 2.10(A) and 2.10(B) of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct by commenting on an impending matter and making promises that could reasonably be expected to affect the outcome of the dispute and are inconsistent with the impartial performance of the adjudicative duties of judicial office.

Rule 2.9. Ex Parte Communications (A) provides "A judge shall not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications made to the judge outside the presence of the other parties or their lawyers concerning a pending or impending matter...". Rule 2.9(C) provides, "A judge shall not investigate facts in a matter independently, and shall consider only the evidence presented and any facts that may properly be judicially noticed." Boatright announced on February 16, 2021, that he would be briefed weekly on all "misconduct complaints across the department to ensure each incident is fully investigated and acted upon as appropriate without delay." If he did so, Boatright violated Rule 2.9 by presumably receiving ex parte communications. Not only did it appear he was requiring and receiving ex parte communications, but failing to require that the judicial misconduct complaints be referred to the Commission on Judicial Discipline pursuant to the Constitution. I submit this fiat placed a cloud over the person, persons, or entities that might be the subject(s) of the investigation concerning the impartiality of the court system as prohibited by Rule 2.10(B).

Rule 2.11(A) provides that a "judge shall disqualify himself or herself in any proceeding which the judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned, including but not limited to the following circumstances: (1) The judge has a personal bias or prejudice concerning a party or a party's lawyer, or personal knowledge of facts that are in dispute in the proceeding;" (2)(d) "The judge knows that the judge ..is likely to be a material witness in the proceeding;" (4) "The judge... has made a public statement, other than in a court proceeding, judicial decision, or opinion, that commits or appears to commit the judge to reach a particular result or rule in a particular way in the proceeding or controversy;" (5)(c) "The judge was a material witness concerning the matter."

The Supreme Court must disqualify itself pursuant to Rule 2.11. I submit the Supreme Court has a personal bias against those who disagree with its position concerning the Masias controversy by vouching for the credibility of certain witnesses as previously discussed. At the very least, the Chief Justice appears to have personal knowledge of facts that are in dispute. In order to determine the validity of the dispute it will be necessary to determine the role and knowledge of each justice as the situation unfolded which means each justice is likely to be a material witness. The Chief Justice has made public statements concerning the credibility of certain witnesses, commented on the validity of certain claims and their resolution and has indicated on at least one occasion that he and the other justices have “full confidence” in a judge who was alleged to have committed acts of judicial misconduct. Any justice who has any knowledge of this matter from within the court would be a material witness. For example, it has been reported that one justice indicated she learned about circumstances concerning Masias’ retirement and/or future job sources from others.

I strongly request that the Commission thoroughly investigate these allegations and reach the appropriate decisions including the need for the Colorado Supreme Court to recuse from further proceedings in this matter and to forthwith comply with the rules concerning judicial discipline. I would further suggest that the Commission review other reports of judicial misconduct documented in the ILG report that may have not been thoroughly investigated and may have provided misleading conclusions.

I would appreciate being informed about the progress and conclusion(s) of the request to the extent permitted by the rules.

Respectfully submitted,

Dennis Maes

REPORT HIGHLIGHTS

STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE
PERFORMANCE AUDIT, NOVEMBER 2020

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT

CONCERN

Overall, we found that the State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO) should improve its administrative framework to increase accountability and cultivate public trust in its operations, including improvement to controls over awarding voluntary separation incentives and sole source contracts, staff use of paid administrative leave and procurement cards, and human resources document retention.

KEY FINDINGS

- The SCAO awarded $518,000 in voluntary separation incentives to nine staff without all of the required approvals, without targeting the specific positions to receive incentives, and without knowing what the maximum payout amounts would be.
- For 3,600 of the 13,710 hours (27 percent) of administrative leave granted by delegated discretion, there were no records of the reasons the leave was granted.
- We identified 102 instances of staff who were granted, in total more than 1,060 hours of paid administrative leave above the "normal" amount that most staff received, including two staff who received more than 300 of these hours.
- The SCAO did not maintain documentation required to support decisions and actions taken in 10 Family Medical Leave Act cases and two disciplinary actions.
- We found that 6 of 10 sole source contracts awarded during the audit period, totaling up to $3.87 million, did not include sufficient documentation to support the decisions to award the contracts. One contract was awarded to a former SCAO employee who had resigned 6 days before the sole source justification was signed.
- We identified issues with the approvals for 30 of the 100 procurement card purchases (30 percent) we reviewed totaling $49,500.
- We identified problems with the SCAO's oversight of and accountability for its human resources and financial services functions that raise questions about the efficacy of the SCAO's system of internal control, including, in particular, its culture of accountability.

BACKGROUND

- The Chief Justice of the Colorado Supreme Court appoints a State Court Administrator who heads the SCAO, which had 260 FTE and about $47 million in expenditures in Fiscal Year 2020.
- The SCAO provides administrative services, including financial (e.g. budgeting, procurement), human resources, and IT management services to the Judicial Department. It also provides policy guidance on Supreme Court rules and directives to the district courts.

KEY RECOMMENDATIONS

The SCAO should implement written rules, policies, and procedures for:

- Offering voluntary separation agreements that specify who must approve the incentives, what strategic goals the incentives will serve, and what types and maximum amounts will be paid out.
- Defining the appropriate uses for paid administrative leave, requiring documentation and oversight of its usage, and establishing limits on its uses for certain purposes.
- Properly securing and storing all human resources documentation.
- Sole source contracting, including establishing required approvals and identifying required justification information, and prohibiting contracting with former employees within a specified time after resignation.
- Improving controls over the use of procurement cards, including who may serve as a "budget authority," that take into account the proper segregation of duties.

The SCAO should implement an effective system of internal control that fosters a culture of integrity, including implementing policies and monitoring activities to ensure that controls are working properly and staff adhere to Rules.

The SCAO agreed with these recommendations.

OVERVIEW OF THE STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE

The State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO), established in the Colorado Constitution and state statutes, provides centralized administrative support for the Colorado Judicial Department (Department), which includes more than 300 judges and 3,500 staff who work in trial courts (county, district, and water), appellate courts, and probation services. The SCAO operates directly under the Colorado Supreme Court (Supreme Court) and the Chief Justice, who is the executive head of Colorado's judicial branch of state government.

SCAO ORGANIZATION AND OPERATIONS

The SCAO consists of approximately 260 full-time equivalent (FTE) employees. These employees are overseen by the State Court Administrator, who is appointed by the justices of the Supreme Court and is ultimately responsible for ensuring that all duties, whether assigned by the Supreme Court or established in statutes, are accomplished [Section 13-3-101(1), C.R.S.]. These duties include, in general, providing administrative and technical support and centralized guidance to court staff and judges; developing and implementing operating standards and guidelines; and reporting information, statistics, and recommendations to the Supreme Court and General Assembly on operations (e.g., case management statistics for judges, court docket information, and annual operating budgets). Consistent with previous years, the current State Court Administrator, who was appointed in October 2019, has organized the SCAO into six divisions:

- ▶ EXECUTIVE DIVISION—headed by the State Court Administrator and includes the SCAO’s legal team; oversees all SCAO operations to support the courts as well as all SCAO employees.
- ▶ FINANCIAL SERVICES—oversees the financial management of the Department, including developing and managing budgets; establishing fiscal rules, policies, and procedures; overseeing procurement; and executing internal audits.
- ▶ HUMAN RESOURCES—develops and manages the personnel system for the Department, including maintaining and interpreting judicial personnel rules and establishing related procedures; facilitating and retaining documentation for Family and Medical Leave requests, disciplinary actions, and employee settlements; overseeing the Department’s record of employee timekeeping and leave, the Judicial Employee Time Recording System (JETRS); and coordinating SCAO staff benefits, trainings, and conference attendance.

- ▶ INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY SERVICES—provides technical support, engineers and maintains system and network infrastructure, and manages information security for all court buildings and Department offices.
- ▶ COURT SERVICES—oversees administrative processes and logistics for all parties who participate in court proceedings, including coordinating various services for internal and external court programs, such as assisting self-represented parties navigate court processes and scheduling; providing language access as needed; and implementing the statutory “Family Friendly” court program [Section 13-3-113(4), C.R.S.], which provides, in part, child care services as needed.
- ▶ PROBATION SERVICES—oversees probation policy and program development, facilitates collaboration across state departments involved with probation services, educates parties on probation as an alternative to incarceration, and coordinates trainings for and evaluations of probation staff.

Under Section 13-3-106, C.R.S., the State Court Administrator is responsible for preparing the Department’s annual operating budget for approval by the Chief Justice and for disbursing funds that are appropriated by the General Assembly to administer the Department. Exhibit 1.1 shows the total annual expenditures of the SCAO, as well as the administration expenditures of the Department that the SCAO oversees.

¹The SCAO has minimal oversight of approximately 50 percent of these expenditures, as certain funds in this category are distributed to judicial districts based on formulas, such as staffing models.

AUDIT PURPOSE, SCOPE, AND METHODOLOGY

We conducted this performance audit pursuant to Section 2-3-103, C.R.S., which authorizes the State Auditor to conduct audits of all departments, institutions, and agencies of the state government, and Section 2-7-204(5), C.R.S., the State Measurement for Accountable, Responsive, and Transparent (SMART) Government Act. The SCAO received public attention in July 2019, when media reports cited concerns with wasteful spending, excessive use of paid administrative leave, and potential fraud.

Audit work was performed from March 2020 through November 2020. We appreciate the cooperation and assistance provided by the SCAO management and staff during the audit.

We conducted this audit in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain sufficient, appropriate evidence to provide a reasonable basis for our findings and conclusions based on our audit objectives. We believe that the evidence obtained provides a reasonable basis for our findings and conclusions based on our audit objectives.

The key objectives of the audit were to determine if the SCAO had controls in place to ensure responsible stewardship of state resources through its (1) personnel leave policies and practices and (2) purchasing policies and practices. This included evaluating the SCAO's use of paid administrative leave, Family and Medical Leave, disciplinary investigations, employee separation agreements, and administrative expenditures made through the SCAO's procurement process, purchasing cards, and staff reimbursements.

The scope of the audit did not include a review of court operations or the various independent agencies within the Judicial Branch (e.g., the Office of the Child Representative, Alternate Defense Counsel, and the Public Defender), which are not supported by the SCAO and are not subject to the Supreme Court rules implemented by the SCAO.

To accomplish our audit objectives, we performed the following audit work:

- Reviewed applicable state and federal laws and rules, Chief Justice Directives, Department rules, and SCAO guidance. Interviewed SCAO executive management and legal, human resources, financial, and procurement staff to gain an understanding of SCAO operations and application of criteria.
- Reviewed all available documentation regarding the SCAO reorganization and voluntary separation incentive program and contracts, enacted in Fiscal Year 2019. This included a review of payroll and benefits data for each employee who received incentives to calculate total costs.
- Analyzed paid administrative leave data recorded in JETRS, and reviewed other available documentation maintained for instances when an individual employee was awarded a large amount of leave, to assess compliance with Department requirements; compared SCAO leave usage and approval to leave provided to executive branch agencies; and identified statistically normal ranges of approved administrative leave and outliers for Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020. This included a review of all available documentation regarding disciplinary investigations (e.g., complaints, investigative work, outcomes) for employees placed on paid administrative leave during these investigations.

- Reviewed all available Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) documentation (e.g., medical certificates, designation notices, notice of eligibility and rights, workers compensation first report of injury) and related employee leave usage for FMLA requests approved during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020.
- Reviewed all available documentation for the 10 sole source contracts that the SCAO awarded during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020 (e.g., executed contracts, justification letters, records of negotiations with the vendor) to assess compliance with Department procurement rules, and compared the SCAO's practices with respect to sole source contracts to those required of executive branch agencies.
- Tested a sample of 100 procurement card (P-card) transactions from Citibank data for adherence to Department administrative accounting rules regarding required supporting documentation and authorizing signatures.
- Reviewed travel reimbursement and P-card documentation to identify and assess the reasonableness of out-of-state travel purchases (e.g., conference registration fees, flights, meals, mileage) made by executive leadership.

We relied on sampling to support our audit work. We selected a random statistical sample of 100 of the 9,975 purchases made using SCAO-issued P-cards from July 2017 through April 2020. The purpose of the sample was to determine whether the funds spent on purchases were appropriate and for the benefit of the Department.

Our sample was selected using the Monetary Unit Sampling (MUS) method. MUS focuses on the monetary units, such as individual dollars, and randomly selects individual monetary units for the sample. Because we used MUS, our sample represents the distribution of dollars spent on purchases; therefore, those purchases that had more associated dollars had a greater likelihood of being selected.

As required by auditing standards, we planned our audit work to assess the effectiveness of those internal controls that were significant to our audit objectives. Specifically, our work related to internal control included the following components and underlying principles based on guidance issued by the U.S. Government Accountability Office:

EXHIBIT 1.2. SIGNIFICANT INTERNAL CONTROL COMPONENTS AND UNDERLYING PRINCIPLES REVIEWED DURING THE AUDIT

Our conclusions on the effectiveness of those controls that were significant to our audit objectives, as well as specific details about the audit work supporting our findings, conclusions, and recommendations, are described in the remainder of this report.

A draft of this report was reviewed by the SCAO and the Chief Justice. We have incorporated the SCAO's and the Chief Justice's comments into the report where relevant. The written responses to the recommendations and the related implementation dates are the sole responsibility of the SCAO.

STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE OPERATIONS

The Colorado trial and appellate courts, probation, and other services administered by the Judicial Department (Department) function, in large part, due to the administrative direction and support provided by the State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO). This includes providing all human resources, financial, and information technology services that the courts and Department staff require, as well as support for parties to court proceedings who need services such as language access, child care, and self-representation assistance. The SCAO's responsibilities vary widely, but are all overseen by the SCAO's executive head, the State Court Administrator, who is appointed by the justices of the Colorado Supreme Court (Supreme Court) and provided broad decision-making authority. The State Court Administrator oversees the day-to-day administration of the courts and makes recommendations to the Supreme Court on rules to promulgate to effectively administer the courts, ensure that the Department operates with professionalism, and maintain public confidence and trust in the integrity of the judicial system. The State Court Administrator facilitates the establishment and implementation of the Judicial Department's Personnel, Fiscal, and Procurement Rules. This includes responsibility for establishing related policies, procedures, and other controls to, in part, set a tone for the Department that aligns with the Supreme Court's Code of Conduct, Chief Justice Directives, and the SCAO's published goal, "to cultivate public trust through the thoughtful stewardship of state resources."

Our audit work evaluated the SCAO's oversight and accountability of its human resources and financial services functions for Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020, including its practices for offering voluntary separation incentives to SCAO staff, providing SCAO staff paid administrative leave, retaining and securing personnel records, purchasing, and procurement. This chapter discusses our findings and recommendations regarding problems we identified in each of these areas. In addition, when applicable, we compared the SCAO's practices to what State Personnel Rules for executive branch agencies allow.

This chapter also discusses the overall impact of the deficiencies we found in the SCAO's system of controls and the tone the former State Court Administrator set for the organization, which, collectively, result in concerns about whether the SCAO has operated in a manner to foster a culture of integrity, ethical values, and accountability; maintain public confidence in the Department; and demonstrate good stewardship of state funds.

VOLUNTARY SEPARATION INCENTIVES

A voluntary separation incentive (VSI), often referred to as a buyout, is generally a lump-sum payment made to eligible employees who separate from employment through their voluntary resignation. According to the SCAO, although VSI programs are not explicitly addressed in the Judicial Department's Personnel Rules (Judicial Personnel Rules), the authority to enact a VSI program is included within the broader authority that the State Court Administrator has to reorganize staffing.

In Fiscal Year 2019, the former State Court Administrator, after presenting a reorganization plan to the Supreme Court, notified staff that to minimize the impact of potential layoffs because of the reorganization, a VSI Program was being established. All SCAO staff who were certified, classified employees were allowed to apply for a VSI that included receiving paid "administrative leave," which is discretionary leave the Department grants to individual staff, generally on a case-by-case basis. The former State Court Administrator approved all 10 employees who applied for the VSI Program. These employees then entered into a contract with the SCAO to voluntarily end their employment for a specified amount of paid administrative leave based on their years of service, as shown in Exhibit 2.1. One of the 10 employees received a VSI contract through a separate settlement agreement in consultation with the SCAO legal team, after the nine other contracts were executed by the former State Court Administrator.

During the paid administrative leave period, each of the 10 employees continued to occupy their position and receive compensation, but they did not report to work. For example, if an employee entered into a VSI contract in July 2019 and had been with the SCAO for 10 years, they would have received 3 months of paid administrative leave and their official date of termination would have been October 2019. During this 3-month period, the employee would have stopped reporting for work as of the July contract date, but the SCAO would have continued to list the individual as a current employee, which meant they would have received their regular monthly paycheck as well as all health, retirement, and other benefits. In addition, the employee would have continued to accrue leave hours based on their years of service, which the Department provides to all SCAO staff. In October, the SCAO would have changed the employee's status to separated and, at that point, paid out any leave the employee had accrued and did not use during their time with the SCAO.

HOW WERE THE RESULTS OF THE AUDIT WORK MEASURED?

We reviewed the contracts executed for the VSI Program, which state [clause 16] that the agreement “shall not be valid until it has been approved by the Colorado State Court Administrator, the Administrative Authority [generally an SCAO Division Director or the employee's supervisor], the Director of the Division of Human Resources and the Employer's Chief Financial Officer.”

We also reviewed the plan for the reorganization that the former State Court Administrator presented to the Supreme Court in February 2019, which included, in part, positions to be eliminated or reclassified, a timeline for implementation, and the processes the SCAO would implement for the VSI Program. In an April 2019 email to staff, the former State Court Administrator announced the VSI Program, stating that there would be a 30-day comment period and, if approved by the Chief Justice, the VSI Program would be finalized in August 2019.

Additionally, although the SCAO does not have formal written rules, policies, or procedures for designing a VSI program or entering into VSI agreements, statute [Section 13-3-105, C.R.S.] states that “To the end that all state employees are treated generally in a similar manner, the [S]upreme [C]ourt, in promulgating rules as set forth in this section, shall take into consideration the compensation and classification plans, vacation and sick leave provisions, and other conditions of employment applicable to employees of the executive and legislative departments.” As such, we also reviewed the requirements established for employees working in the Executive Branch, under the authority granted to the State Personnel Director by Section 24-50-208, C.R.S. Specifically, when executive branch agencies reorganize staffing using payout incentives, State Personnel Rule 4 CCR 801-1 requires them to establish a strategic plan for why staffing changes are needed and how incentives will be used. The strategic plan is defined by State Personnel Rules and, in part, must include an incentive plan with eligibility criteria, the types of incentives allowed, cash amounts or limits and payment methods, and a communication plan. These plans must be developed with the input of employees and managers.

State Personnel Rules allows for different types of financial incentive payments to be offered, including payment towards the continuation of health benefits, tuition or educational training, a portion of salary, or placement on a reemployment list, but states that the “total post employment compensation payment and other benefits shall not exceed an amount equal to one week of an employee’s salary for every year of his or her service, up to 18 weeks” [State Personnel Rules 3-51 and 52].

Additionally, the employee and department “must execute a written contract before payment of any post employment compensation” that must be provided to the state personnel director, and “must include...acknowledgement that no payment will be made until after the last day of work and compliance with other provisions of the contract,” as well as the employee’s agreement to waive any and all claims they may have or assert against the employer [State Personnel Rule 3-54].

WHAT PROBLEMS DID THE AUDIT WORK IDENTIFY?

Overall, we found that the SCAO cannot demonstrate that its VSI contracts received the required approvals or that the positions approved for incentives were consistent with the SCAO reorganization plan. Additionally, the total incentives the SCAO provided were not known prior to or at the time of enactment and appear to be overly generous when compared with the Executive Branch. Specifically, we found:

LACK OF REQUIRED APPROVALS. We reviewed each of the nine VSI contracts executed by the former State Court Administrator and found that none of them had received all of the required levels of approval. In all instances, the VSI contracts had been approved by only the former State Court Administrator and were not signed by the other three parties required by the contract terms (the employee’s Division Director, the Director of the Division of Human Resources, and the Chief Financial Officer). The SCAO informed us that the one other VSI contract went through a different review process because it was also part of a settlement agreement and it did not contain a requirement that other parties approve it. Additionally, each VSI contract was finalized prior to the approval of the Chief Justice, as detailed in the announcement of the VSI Program.

THE POSITIONS APPROVED FOR INCENTIVES WERE NOT SUPPORTED BY THE SCAO REORGANIZATION PLAN. We requested and reviewed all of the documentation the SCAO maintained related to the VSIs, including planning information presented to the Supreme Court on the positions to be eliminated or reclassified and associated costs and anticipated savings. The SCAO provided planning information prepared by the former State Court Administrator that specified that two FTE positions, overall, would be eliminated. However, the former State Court Administrator did not target specific positions to receive the incentives when announcing the VSI Program to staff, but instead offered incentives to all certified, classified, non-contract staff. Had more than 10 people volunteered for the VSI Program, it is not clear how many voluntary separations the former State Court Administrator would have approved. According to current SCAO staff, they do not know the former State Court Administrator's rationale for offering the VSIs to all staff or how the 10 eliminated positions fit into the planned reorganization. Ultimately, the SCAO reorganization did not occur; however, all 10 VSI contracts were executed prior to the decision not to proceed with the reorganization.

TOTAL VOLUNTARY SEPARATION PAYOUT AMOUNTS WERE NOT KNOWN PRIOR TO ENACTMENT AND WERE MORE GENEROUS THAN WOULD HAVE BEEN PROVIDED BY THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH. We found that none of the 10 VSI contracts, including the one that was part of a separate settlement agreement, included a total or maximum incentive payout amount. Further, the executed VSI contracts did not specify any dollar amounts, either to establish a maximum or to identify salary amounts paid directly to the separating staff. SCAO staff confirmed that the SCAO did not calculate the total amounts of all payments made on behalf of any of the 10 employees prior to execution of the VSI contracts.

Although Judicial Personnel Rules are silent on the maximum payout amounts that staff may be offered under incentives, in contrast, the State Personnel Rules for executive branch agencies prohibit payouts in excess of the equivalent of 18 weeks salary, regardless of the type of financial incentive being used. As such, we compared the incentive provided by the SCAO to what executive branch agencies are authorized to offer their staff under State Personnel Rules.

We confirmed that the amount that the SCAO paid out to the 10 employees in salaries was comparable to the salary amounts that would have been paid out by executive branch agencies; however, we found that the SCAO incentives also included full benefits during the paid administrative leave period. Specifically, the SCAO paid employees between 1 and 4 months of salary, depending on years of service, as an incentive. In comparison, the State Personnel Rules allow executive branch agencies to pay an amount equal to 1 week of an employee's salary for every year of service, capped at 18 weeks. The salary amount that all but two of the employees received from the SCAO was less than the salary amount that they would have received from an executive branch agency; however, the SCAO also paid for each employee's full benefits for the 1- to 4-month period, including retirement and healthcare benefits. For example, during the 1- to 4-month period after each of these VSI contracts was executed by the former State Court Administrator, these employees were eligible to continue using their full medical benefits for scheduling appointments, surgeries and other procedures, and emergency care, for which the Department paid a portion of the monthly cost to retain medical insurance.

In response to concerns raised in this audit, the SCAO calculated its monthly share of employee benefits costs to be between $8,500 and $28,072 per person, based on salaries and the monthly plan premiums paid for all staff. EXHIBIT 2.2 shows benefits offered by the SCAO to employees and their associated costs to the State.

Further, since the SCAO delayed the separation date for the 10 employees with VSI contracts, they continued to accrue between 14 and 22 hours per month of "paid time off" that the Department provides to all staff to use for vacation and sick leave, and ultimately pays out to staff upon their separation. In comparison, for the Executive Branch, State Personnel Rules do not allow voluntary separation agreements to include delayed separation dates and continued leave accrual.

WHY DID THESE PROBLEMS OCCUR?

The SCAO has not established controls, such as formal written rules, policies, or procedures, around offering voluntary separation incentives to employees. Specifically:

THE SCAO ENTERED INTO VOLUNTARY SEPARATION AGREEMENTS PRIOR TO RECEIVING ALL APPROVALS. While the announcement provided to staff about the VSI Program stated that the former State Court Administrator would seek the input of staff and final approval from the Supreme Court with respect to the reorganization, with a finalization date of August 2019, the first VSI contract was signed in May 2019 and the last in June 2019, prior to receiving Supreme Court approval. In addition, although the terms of the VSI contracts required approval from the employees' Division Director, the Director of Human Resources, and the Chief Financial Officer, only the former State Court Administrator signed the VSI contracts. There is no documentation to show that these other individuals reviewed or approved the VSI contracts. Further, the SCAO has a legal team to review contracts for procurement purposes and states that it generally obtains legal review for all contracts. However, according to SCAO staff, the VSI contracts were not drafted or reviewed by the SCAO's legal team prior to enactment or payout.

Current SCAO staff stated that the former State Court Administrator's rationale for not obtaining any legal or other review or input on the nine VSI contracts is unknown. As mentioned previously, one VSI contract was pulled into a larger settlement agreement with a former employee and this agreement was reviewed by the SCAO legal team. In contrast, for the Executive Branch, the State Personnel Director must receive all voluntary separation agreement contracts prior to their enactment, in addition to any other reviews that occur at agency executive directors' direction.

THE SCAO DID NOT TARGET STAFF IN THE POSITIONS IDENTIFIED FOR RECLASSIFICATION OR ELIMINATION IN THE REORGANIZATION PLAN. The employees in the specific positions designated for elimination, as reported in the documentation provided by the SCAO, were not targeted for voluntary separation, and only one of these employees actually accepted a voluntary separation.

THE SCAO DID NOT APPEAR TO CONSIDER RULES ESTABLISHED FOR THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH'S VSI PROGRAM OFFERINGS AND PRACTICES. State Personnel Rules have established parameters around the use of incentive payouts to safeguard state funds (e.g., limitations on any form of payout, a requirement that agreements include a maximum payout amount, a requirement that employees separate from employment prior to receiving any benefit). However, the SCAO did not include any of these or other types of provisions when creating its own VSI Program and agreements.

WHY DO THESE PROBLEMS MATTER?

The SCAO's VSI contracts amounted to costs of more than $518,000 paid to employees, which is more than 50 percent higher than the maximum costs allowed ($343,000) for executive branch agencies. Additionally, because the employees who took the incentives were not targeted with the goals of the SCAO Reorganization Plan in mind, it is unclear whether any of the incentives paid to employees through the VSI Program were spent appropriately or were in the best interest of the State. Ultimately, because the SCAO reorganization never occurred, only three of the 10 staff positions that received voluntary separation incentives were abolished. The other vacated positions have since been staffed or are open to be filled.

Further, the SCAO identified five Principle Strategies and Goals in its Fiscal Year 2020 Strategic Plan, one of which is to “[c]ultivate public trust and confidence through the thoughtful stewardship of public resources.” The VSI contracts we reviewed challenge this principle because they lacked reviews and approvals, are not supported by information detailing how they would help meet reorganizational goals, hid total costs to the State in unknown benefit amounts, and did not reflect requirements established for employees in other branches of state government. As a result, it appears that the interests of the State may not have been protected and the SCAO's actions may not have encouraged public trust or demonstrated thoughtful stewardship of state resources. In particular, when senior management takes actions that are not transparent and appear contrary to established practices, they set a tone at the top and encourage an organizational culture that has disregard for establishing and adhering to controls that help ensure state funds are spent transparently and with integrity.

RECOMMENDATION 1

The State Court Administrator's Office should establish and implement formal written rules, policies, and procedures related to voluntary separation incentives that:

- A Specify who has to approve voluntary incentives prior to offering them to staff and who must sign any voluntary separation agreements prior to execution.
- B Ensure that separation incentives are only executed with employees whose separation would further the strategic goals of any reorganization.
- C Consider the types of incentives provided in the Executive Branch, detail the types of incentives that can be offered, and specify the total and/or maximum amount that will be paid out in incentives.

RESPONSE

STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE

- A AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and will work with the Supreme Court to develop and implement rules within the Colorado Judicial System Personnel Rules about Voluntary Separation Incentives. These Rules apply to all employees of the Judicial Department whose positions are within the job classification and compensation plan established pursuant to Section 13-3-105, C.R.S., and Section 5(3) of Article VI of the Colorado Constitution.

The rules will specify the required approvals for offering incentives, as well as the necessary approvals for individual separation incentive agreements.

B AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and will ensure that separation incentives are executed in a manner that furthers the goals of the Judicial Department.

C AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The State Court Administrator's Office will consider the guidance provided in the executive branch when reviewing potential new policies and procedures related to Voluntary Separation Incentives, will detail the types of incentives that can be offered, and will require that agreements include a total or maximum amount that will be paid out in incentives.

PAID ADMINISTRATIVE LEAVE

The Department provides employees with different types of paid leave as a benefit of employment. For example, the Department offers staff “paid time off” (PTO), which is paid leave that can be used for any purpose, such as vacations, illness, or any other personal reason. Staff accrue PTO at a rate ranging from 14 hours to 22 hours per month, depending on how long they have been with the State. In addition, the Department provides staff with 4 hours per month of extended sick leave that can be used for certified medical events. Finally, the Department provides staff with paid “administrative leave” on an ad hoc basis.

Under the Judicial Personnel Rules, “administrative authorities” are authorized to grant paid administrative leave to employees “for reasons determined to be for the good of the [S]tate.” The State Court Administrator is the administrative authority for the SCAO, but delegates the authority to grant leave to other staff, typically division directors, some human resources staff, and supervisors. Administrative leave may also be granted in instances when an individual employee is being investigated for possible wrong-doing or poor job performance and it is in the SCAO’s best interest to not have the employee present in the office while the investigation is occurring. Finally, the SCAO has also used administrative leave as part of staff separation agreements and settlements.

Administrative leave, like all time-keeping at the SCAO, is tracked in the Department’s database, Judicial Employee Time Reporting System (JETRS). Staff are required to enter their time, including any leave time, into JETRS, and supervisors are responsible for overseeing their employees’ timesheets and leave usage.

During Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020, SCAO staff recorded a total of 25,520 hours of paid administrative leave in JETRS. Of these 25,520 hours, the SCAO reported that 13,710 hours were approved under Judicial Personnel Rules governing administrative or delegated authority's discretion to grant paid administrative leave, 3,070 hours were approved for disciplinary investigations, and about 2,650 hours were approved as part of settlement agreements. The remaining 6,090 hours were approved as part of voluntary separation agreements, which we discuss in the first finding.

WHAT PROBLEMS DID THE AUDIT WORK IDENTIFY AND HOW WERE THE RESULTS MEASURED?

Overall, we found that the SCAO's use of paid administrative leave is not transparent and may not demonstrate good stewardship of public funds. We reviewed all of the documentation that the SCAO maintained related to the 19,430 hours of paid administrative leave taken by SCAO staff during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020 as a result of: (1) delegated discretion to grant leave (13,710 hours), (2) active disciplinary investigations (3,070 hours), and (3) settlement agreements (2,650 hours). We assessed the SCAO's use of leave against requirements established in the Judicial Personnel Rules and compared the SCAO's practices regarding paid administrative leave to what State Personnel Rules for executive branch agencies allow. We identified the following concerns:

DISCRETIONARY ADMINISTRATIVE LEAVE

UNKNOWN OR QUESTIONABLE REASONS FOR GRANTING LEAVE. First, for 3,600 of the 13,710 hours (26 percent) of administrative leave granted by delegated discretion, we found that there were no records of the reasons the staff members were granted the leave. Judicial Personnel Rules [Rule 26.F.] allow administrative authorities to grant paid administrative leave to employees using their discretion for "reasons determined to be for the good of the [S]tate, including, but not limited to, participate in community volunteer activities, and to participate in official activities of employee organizations.” In some cases, paid administrative leave is granted to individual employees, but the Chief Justice and State Court Administrator can also grant leave on a Department- or office-wide basis, such as for holidays. The SCAO confirmed that there was no documentation to show the reasons that these 3,600 hours of administrative leave were granted, but contended that they were allowable because of the broad discretion to grant administrative leave allowed under Judicial Personnel Rules.

Second, for the remaining 10,100 hours (74 percent) of administrative leave recorded in JETRS that had a reason for the leave noted, we saw instances where it was not apparent how the leave would be “for the good of the State,” based on the reasons provided. For example, we saw that paid administrative leave was taken for a “pre-operative appointment” and “family reunion,” both of which are also examples of activities for which all staff members could reasonably be expected to use their PTO accruals. Without further information, we could not determine if administrative leave was appropriate for these purposes. The SCAO confirmed that it had no further information on the rationale used by the approvers as to how these purposes were for the good of the State, or why in the examples we pointed out, those employees were given additional leave.

NUMBER OF HOURS APPROVED FOR SOME STAFF APPEAR DISPROPORTIONATE. The Judicial Personnel Rules do not limit the number of paid administrative leave hours that may be granted to individuals based on delegated discretion. Therefore, we reviewed the total number of hours every employee received to determine if any employees were granted a disproportionate number of hours compared to other employees. Specifically, we calculated a statistically normal range of paid administrative leave the SCAO granted per staff person for each fiscal year we reviewed, based on the amounts of paid administrative leave recorded in JETRS. Based on this analysis, we determined that, depending on the year, between 8 and 48 hours of paid administrative leave per year, per person would be considered “normal” for all SCAO staff. This includes time provided for events such as weather closures and extra holiday leave granted to all staff.

Through our analysis, we identified 102 instances of staff who were granted, in total, more than 1,060 hours of paid administrative leave above the “normal” amount that most staff received. Two employees accounted for more than 300 of the 1,060 hours. EXHIBIT 2.4 shows these 102 instances grouped by the number of hours of paid administrative leave granted above the normal range in each of the years we reviewed.

EXHIBIT 2.4. PAID ADMINISTRATIVE LEAVE TAKEN MORE THAN THE NORMAL RANGE¹ FISCAL YEARS 2017 THROUGH 2020

¹ The normal ranges varied by years as follows: 2017—48 hours; 2018—8 hours; 2019—15.5 hours; 2020—27.5 hours.

As shown, two employees—one in Fiscal Year 2017 and one in Fiscal Year 2018—each received 152 hours above the normal range. According to the SCAO, there is no information to explain why these employees were granted this amount of administrative leave, and both employees are no longer with the SCAO. Other employees received between 8 and 41 hours of leave more than the normal range in each of the 4 fiscal years we reviewed.

The SCAO stated that it believes there are good reasons for many of the hours these employees received above the normal range, such as incentive awards for top performers, granting leave for individuals to do volunteer work, or weather closures that affect some employees more than others.

It would be reasonable and expected that some employees may warrant receiving additional leave awards above the normal range for reasons that the SCAO indicated. However, the SCAO could not articulate what amounts of leave would be appropriate for these types of reasons and reasonably meet the Department's requirement that discretionary leave awards must be for the good of the State. For example, it is not apparent that granting an individual 56 hours of leave to conduct volunteer work within a 6-month period, in addition to the established salary, benefits, and monthly accrued PTO that all staff receive, would be for the good of the State.

ADMINISTRATIVE LEAVE HOURS ALLOWED IN EXCESS OF STANDARD WORK DAY OR WEEK. We identified seven instances when employees used either 9 or 10 hours of administrative leave for Department holidays granted to all staff by the Chief Justice, rather than the Department's standard 8-hour working day or standard 8-hour holiday leave for statewide and national holidays (e.g., Memorial Day). According to the SCAO, it would have been appropriate for staff to take the extra hours of leave if they normally work a 9- or 10-hour day because, when the Chief Justice announces these types of holidays, the announcement states it is for the day and does not specify a limit on the number of hours granted.

We also identified five instances where employees used paid administrative leave in conjunction with time worked to accrue compensatory time, which the SCAO awards at time-and-a-half for any hours over 40 hours in a week. Specifically, five employees received a total of 9 hours of compensatory time during weeks where the paid administrative leave they recorded during the week caused them to exceed 40 hours for the week.

LEAVE USED FOR DISCIPLINARY INVESTIGATIONS

We identified nine cases in which the SCAO granted a total of about 3,070 hours of paid administrative leave to employees for disciplinary investigations. Judicial Personnel Rules [Rule 29.E.2] allow for an employee to be put on paid administrative leave during an investigation of the employee's conduct; relative to a pending disciplinary action when there is reason to believe that the employee's continued presence may endanger the safety or welfare of the public or the Department's employees, facilities, or property; or when there is reason to believe that the employee's presence may impair the investigation. The SCAO reported that these staff members had been placed on leave for disciplinary investigations; however, JETRS did not include any information on the reason for the leave, and the SCAO was not able to provide information to verify that two of the disciplinary investigations actually occurred. All of these employees did ultimately separate from the organization.

We found that the Judicial Personnel Rules do not limit the number of paid administrative leave hours that can be used for these investigations, nor do they establish any requirements for monitoring the time it takes to complete an investigation. The amount the SCAO granted for these nine cases averaged 341 hours, or 43 working days, per investigation. As shown in EXHIBIT 2.5, the nine SCAO investigations ranged from 27 days for the shortest investigation to 60 days for the longest.

For agencies within the Executive Branch, the State Personnel Rules require reporting to an agency executive director and the State Personnel Director for any paid administrative leave exceeding 20 consecutive working days (160 hours). This reporting includes the reason for the leave, start of the leave, end of the leave, and the final disposition of the case.

LEAVE GRANTED UNDER SETTLEMENT AGREEMENTS

During our review period, the SCAO also granted two staff members nearly 2,650 hours (331 working days) of paid administrative leave, as shown in Exhibit 2.6. The SCAO reported that these two staff members had been granted the leave as part of settlement agreements; however, JETRS did not include any information on the reason for the leave.

Judicial Personnel Rules are silent on the use of paid administrative leave for settlement agreements, although staff reported that it is common practice at the SCAO to use the leave for this purpose.

WHY DID THESE PROBLEMS OCCUR?

The problems we identified occurred primarily because the SCAO has minimal rules and policies governing the use of paid administrative leave.

First, Judicial Personnel Rules provide limited guidance on the appropriate uses of paid administrative leave, and the SCAO has not elaborated on the rules in policies and procedures to further define the reasons that discretionary leave can be approved, including whether it can be used for settlement agreements. According to the SCAO, the Judicial Personnel Rules provide broad discretion to the State Court Administrator and those staff delegated discretionary authority to grant paid administrative leave for any reason they determine to be for the good of the State.

Second, the SCAO does not require staff to document the reason for paid administrative leave in JETRS. For example, the reason that the two employees who were each granted 152 hours of discretionary paid administrative leave in excess of the normal range in one year was not documented in JETRS or in any other known place, and all of the individuals involved are no longer with the SCAO. As a result, the SCAO could not provide an explanation for why this leave was granted.

Third, the SCAO does not have policies or procedures for monitoring the overall use of paid administrative leave across the organization, nor does it require supervisory oversight of leave use. For example:

- The SCAO does not run routine reports from JETRS to determine how much administrative leave has been used in total and for what purpose, if certain staff members are receiving a disproportionate amount of administrative leave, or if certain delegated authorities tend to approve large amounts of leave.
- Although supervisors are responsible for overseeing staff work and leave time, they have not been given any guidance as to what they should take into account when determining how much administrative leave would be appropriate for an individual to receive.
- If an employee requests administrative leave and their request is not approved in JETRS before the month-end posting, the leave will still be processed and paid even though it has not been approved. Any leave processed in this manner will also not have a record of any approval given after the fact. We found that 119 of 352 individuals employed by the SCAO during our testing period (34 percent) entered more than 6,500 hours of administrative leave in JETRS, which were processed without an approval.
- According to SCAO staff, some divisions and supervisors monitor that employees have recorded leave type and amounts accurately in JETRS, but not all divisions and supervisors do so. The SCAO does not have procedures in place to ensure that this monitoring is performed uniformly and consistently across the organization.

Fourth, the SCAO has not established any limits on the total amount of paid administrative leave that can be (1) granted for discretionary purposes, (2) used while conducting disciplinary investigations, or (3) included in a settlement agreement, nor does the SCAO require reporting of leave over a certain amount. According to the SCAO, there are a variety of circumstances that might lead to utilizing administrative leave for an employee, and each case is reviewed individually based on the conditions involved.

In contrast, State Personnel Rules include specific requirements and guidance governing the use of paid administrative leave, including appropriate uses, documentation, supervisory review and approval, and limits on the amount of leave that can be used for certain purposes. EXHIBIT 2.7 compares SCAO rules and practices regarding paid administrative leave and State Personnel Rules for the Executive Branch.

EXHIBIT 2.7. SCAO AND EXECUTIVE BRANCH ADMINISTRATIVE LEAVE POLICY AND RULE COMPARISON

Category of Rule	SCAO	Executive Branch
Allowable uses of paid administrative leave	Broad authority to grant leave determined to be for the good of the State.	An appointing authority ¹ must consider prudent use of taxpayer and personal services dollars and the business needs of the department.
Tracking reason for leave	No requirement.	Departments must track, within time keeping systems, detailed reasons for administrative leave (e.g., community volunteer activity, incentive, investigation, parental academic leave).
Maximum hours that can be authorized	No limits.	Weather– typically no more than 2 hours National emergencies – 15 days Local emergencies – 5 days Military service – not to exceed 90 days Elections – 2 hours Transplant/bone donations – 2 days Election judge – 1 day
Paid administrative leave for investigations	No limits.	Any paid administrative leave that exceeds 20 consecutive working days must be reported to both the agency executive director and the State Personnel Director.
Use of excess hours in a workday for holidays	8-hour limit for state holidays. No limitation on taking leave for 9 or 10 hours for holidays granted by the Chief Justice.	Full-time employees may charge 8 hours of holiday time. If the employee typically works a longer day (e.g., 9- or 10-hour day), the additional hours must be worked during the week and/or personal leave or annual leave must be taken to backfill the difference.
Accrual of compensatory time	No rules prohibiting administrative leave as part of total time worked to accrue compensatory time.	Employees cannot earn compensatory time through the use of paid administrative leave.

WHY DO THESE PROBLEMS MATTER?

The SCAO does not demonstrate good stewardship of state funds when it (1) grants large amounts of paid administrative leave to employees, specifically costing more than $476,000 in state funds during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020; and (2) is not always clear why the administrative leave was granted and whether it was for the benefit of the State. For example:

DISCRETIONARY LEAVE. The 3,600 hours of discretionary administrative leave where there was no record of why the leave was granted cost the State an estimated $156,300. Further, since employees were allowed to use administrative leave and not PTO for at least some activities, employees retained more PTO for other uses or retained the PTO to be paid out upon job severance. One of the employees who was granted 152 hours of administrative leave over the normal range, which amounted to $12,400 in salary during the leave, also left the SCAO while on leave. As a result, the employee was paid out nearly $34,800 for unused PTO when they left, which was the maximum allowable for employees.

DISCIPLINARY INVESTIGATIONS. The nine cases where paid administrative leave was granted for disciplinary investigations used about 3,070 hours, or 383 days, of leave, which amounted to more than $158,900 in salary costs to the SCAO. These employees also accrued PTO and received benefits during the time they were out on leave. Each of the employees separated from the organization at the end of their administrative leave and received the full payout of all PTO they had accrued.

SETTLEMENTS. The 2,650 hours of paid administrative leave granted for the two settlement agreements cost the SCAO more than $160,800 in salaries, plus $22,600 in PTO accrued during the time the staff were on leave. Using paid administrative leave instead of a lump-sum payment for settlements is not transparent and conceals the true costs of the settlements to the State. During our review of the financial records the SCAO maintained for the audit review period, there was no indication the SCAO had made settlement payments to employees because the cost of the payments was absorbed in salaries. Only when we discovered large amounts of leave taken with no notation for why the leave was granted did the SCAO indicate that administrative leave hours were used for settlements. Therefore, within the SCAO financials, payments made for employee settlement agreements appear as normal payments, combined with other salary and leave payments to all employees. Additionally, at the time of the agreements, the full cost of the settlements was unknown because the SCAO was still paying benefits (e.g., healthcare and retirement) while the employees were on leave and the value of those benefits was not quantified in the settlement agreements.

The State Court Administrator's Office should ensure that it is using paid administrative leave responsibly and as a good steward of state funds by implementing policies and procedures that:

- A Define the appropriate uses of paid administrative leave, including whether it can be used for settlement agreements.
- B Require that employees record the reason that paid administrative leave was granted in the timekeeping system.
- C Require oversight of paid administrative leave use, both at the organizational level and by supervisors, to verify that it is being used appropriately and the amounts used are reasonable. This may include running organization-level reports on the amount of administrative leave used to determine standards and identify outliers and providing guidelines on how to monitor that the amounts of leave approved for individual staff are appropriate.
- D Establish limits on the amount of paid administrative leave that can be used for certain purposes. This could also include establishing threshold administrative leave amounts that would need to be reported to the State Court Administrator.

RESPONSE

STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE

- A AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and will work with the Supreme Court to develop and implement rules within the Colorado Judicial System Personnel

Rules covering the use of paid administrative leave. These Rules apply to all employees of the Judicial Department whose positions are within the job classification and compensation plan established pursuant to Section 13-3-105, C.R.S., and Section 5(3) of Article VI of the Colorado Constitution.

B AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The Judicial Department is in the process of implementing a new timekeeping and leave system that will enhance the overall functionality and reporting of time and leave for all Department employees. Some of the issues identified in the audit report are the result of the inadequacies of the legacy system used by the Department. The Department will utilize the enhanced features of the new system to require a documented reason for the use of paid administrative leave.

C AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The Judicial Department is in the process of implementing a new timekeeping and leave system that will enhance the overall functionality and reporting of time and leave for all Department employees. Some of the issues identified in the audit report are the result of the inadequacies of the legacy system used by the Department. The Department will utilize the new timekeeping and leave system to design reports for use by Administrative Authorities and for Department-wide monitoring.

D AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and will work with the Supreme Court to develop and implement rules within the Colorado Judicial System Personnel Rules covering the use of paid administrative leave, including limits on the amount of administrative leave that can be used for certain purposes. These Rules apply to all employees of the Judicial Department whose positions are within the job classification and compensation plan established pursuant to Section 13-3-105, C.R.S., and Section 5(3) of Article VI of the Colorado Constitution.

HUMAN RESOURCES RECORDS RETENTION

Within the SCAO, the Human Resources Division is responsible for retaining and securing all personnel records. Proper maintenance and retention of personnel records helps to protect any organization, for example, in cases of wrongful termination, disgruntled employees, and other litigation threats in employment law. Some of the most important records of this regard include Family and Medical Leave (FML) case files, which include employee medical records and disciplinary investigation and action records.

FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE ACT (FMLA). For employee FMLA requests, which allow all eligible employees of covered employers to take unpaid, job-protected leave for specified family and medical reasons, a variety of information must be submitted to the employer, including a completed medical certificate and medical status reports; Notice of Eligibility and Rights & Responsibilities paperwork; and a First Report of Injury for any FMLA event involving workers' compensation. Between Fiscal Years 2017 and 2020, the SCAO approved 135 of the approximately 170 FMLA requests it received from employees. The SCAO's approved FMLA requests resulted in about 24,500 hours of leave taken, of which about 21,700 hours (89 percent) were paid through employees' accrual of extended sick leave and/or PTO. The remaining 2,800 hours were taken as unpaid leave.

DISCIPLINARY INVESTIGATIONS. Disciplinary investigations and actions are initiated by an employee's supervisor and can begin at any time when an employee is suspected of infringing on rules or failing to perform their duties as assigned, including, but not limited to, misconduct, violation of the law, or fraud. In instances when the employee's continued presence may endanger the safety or welfare of other staff, or impair the investigation, they can be put on paid administrative leave while their supervisor works with the Human Resources Division to conduct the investigation. In the event that disciplinary or corrective action results, including termination, the Human Resources Division is responsible for maintaining records in the employee's personnel files, in part to defend the SCAO should the employee object to or appeal the results. For example, if an employee is terminated for cause, they can appeal the termination and a hearing officer adjudicates the matter. A final appeal to the Personnel Board of Review, consisting of eight members appointed by the Chief Justice, is allowed.

HOW WERE THE RESULTS OF THE AUDIT WORK MEASURED?

We requested all SCAO personnel records for FMLA cases and employee disciplinary investigations and actions for Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020 and reviewed the information provided against the following document retention requirements:

- FEDERAL LAW. Federal law requires the retention of personnel and employment records, including FMLA files, as well as termination and separation documentation.
 - ▶ FMLA records must be kept for no less than 3 years [29 CFR 852.500 (b)].
 - ▶ Personnel and employment records shall be preserved by government agencies for 2 years [29 CFR 1602.31].

- JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT. The Judicial Department's Records Management Manual requires the Department to maintain certain human resources documentation for all employees, including documentation related to FMLA, for 10 years after separation. Given federal requirements for FMLA documentation, this would include documents such as:
 - ▶ Medical certificates
 - ▶ Notice of Eligibility and Rights & Responsibilities

- ▶ Designation Notice
- ▶ Workers' Compensation First Report of Injury
- ▶ Workers' Compensation Medical Status Report

For disciplinary investigations, documentation could include:

- ▶ Corrective Actions
- ▶ Disciplinary Actions
- ▶ Personnel Actions

WHAT PROBLEMS DID THE AUDIT WORK IDENTIFY AND WHY DO THEY MATTER?

Overall, we found that the SCAO has not maintained sufficient documentation to support decisions and actions taken in FMLA cases and disciplinary actions. Specifically, we found:

- FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE. We found that for 10 of the 135 FMLA cases (7 percent) approved during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020, the SCAO could not demonstrate that the employees were eligible for the amount of FML approved or, in some cases, that the employees were eligible for FML at all. All 10 cases were missing at least one of the required forms, and some cases were missing multiple forms. EXHIBIT 2.8 shows the required documents missing for these 10 cases.

EXHIBIT 2.8. FMLA CASES MISSING REQUIRED DOCUMENTATION FISCAL YEARS 2017 THROUGH 2020

SOURCE: Office of the State Auditor analysis of SCAO FMLA documents and data from Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020.

¹ Workers' compensation documentation is only required if the FMLA event also involves a workers' compensation claim.

The SCAO confirmed that it did not know what became of these required documents and, as such, cannot demonstrate whether these 10 employees qualified for their use of FML, which totaled more than 1,800 hours. These employees were paid for 935 of these 1,800 hours through extended sick leave, at a cost of about $40,500.

Further, under the Department's rules governing leave usage, the extended sick leave that employees accrue can only be used in FML cases and for medically certified events and, unlike PTO, is not paid out upon termination. If these employees were not actually eligible for FML, then this leave should not have been used. Instead, the employees would have had to use their accrued PTO, reducing any final payout or time that could be used for vacation. Thus, the SCAO may be providing an incentive for employees to request FML more frequently—accessing their accrued extended sick leave and allowing their PTO to accrue for greater payouts upon separation.

- DISCIPLINARY INVESTIGATIONS. We identified two of 11 cases during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020 that the SCAO reports were disciplinary investigations, but it does not have documentation related to these cases, such as the allegations, complaints, outcomes, or any actions taken as a result of the investigations. The SCAO provided documentation to show that these two employees were placed on a total of more than 800 hours of paid administrative leave during these investigations. According to the SCAO, the human resources staff who would have conducted these investigations are no longer with the SCAO and there is no record of what occurred. Both employees resigned from the SCAO subsequent to the investigations.

According to the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), when an employer takes disciplinary actions against an employee, the employer can be subject to employee claims alleging discrimination or retaliation. If the SCAO does not have documentation to support why a disciplinary investigation occurred, the outcome of the investigation, and the justification for any actions taken, it could be difficult for the SCAO to defend itself against these types of claims, which could potentially result in a substantial monetary loss to the State.

The EEOC charges employers with the responsibility for securing and retaining sensitive employee information. Failure to do so can result in sanctions, civil monetary penalties and, in some cases, individual and criminal liabilities. In addition, employers can face sanctions and be sued for wrongful destruction of employment records. In 2019, the EEOC reported 36 recordkeeping and 237 breach of confidentiality violations nationally, resulting in charges filed against employers. Because the SCAO does not know what happened to the missing FMLA and disciplinary investigation documentation, it cannot show that personnel information was properly destroyed or secured and, therefore, could be at risk for such claims.

WHY DID THIS PROBLEM OCCUR?

SCAO policies and procedures do not require that staff maintain human resources information in a central, secure, location within the organization, or require contingency plans for retaining information in cases of sudden personnel changes. The SCAO reports that staff responsible for processing FMLA requests and maintaining the related documentation did not consistently store the documents, and there was limited oversight to ensure that the SCAO's decisions on FMLA requests were supported and complied with applicable FMLA requirements. When staff left the SCAO, remaining staff discovered that FMLA records were incomplete and there was no way to obtain the information.

Additionally, some documentation related to disciplinary investigations was not backed up to an SCAO shared drive and hard copies were not maintained. The SCAO reported that one former employee used their personal MacBook and associated Apple account and another used an SCAO MacBook, but with their personal Apple account, even after being asked not to do so. Because these employees used their personal accounts, they were not connected to the SCAO shared drive or IT system, which stores and backs up information. The information was lost upon these employees' departure from the SCAO.

Also, according to the SCAO, an employee took records related to other employees' disciplinary investigations upon leaving the SCAO because the records were not secured. The Standards for Internal Control in the Federal Government (Green Book), issued by the U.S. Government Accountability Office and adopted by the Executive Branch by the State Controller, provide that employers should implement policies related to retention of records and continuity of business, including placing limitations on access to sensitive records, properly maintaining documentation, and developing a contingency plan to respond to sudden personnel changes.

The SCAO stated that it has not conducted any reviews, including through its internal audit division, of its record retention policies, practices, or controls and risks as they relate to FMLA and disciplinary investigations.

RECOMMENDATION 3

The State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO) should ensure that it properly secures and documents all human resources information by:

- A Establishing policies and procedures requiring that all human resources documentation be stored in a secure shared file and training staff on these policies.
- B Developing a contingency plan to respond to sudden personnel changes.
- C Implementing a review process, including regular reviews by internal audit, to ensure that all required documentation is maintained in the appropriate files and the SCAO's policies and controls are adequate.

RESPONSE

STATE COURT ADMINISTRATOR'S OFFICE

- A AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and will implement policies and procedures to require that all documentation is stored in a secure shared location and that staff are trained on those policies.

- B AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The State Court Administrator's Office will ensure there is a contingency plan to respond to personnel changes so that personnel records and documentation are secured and accessible.

C AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and will implement processes to ensure that required human resources documentation is maintained and secured in accordance with Judicial Department policies. Furthermore, the internal audit unit will begin conducting regular reviews of the documentation requirements.

SOLE SOURCE PROCUREMENTS

Between Fiscal Years 2017 and 2020, the SCAO awarded a total of 163 contracts from a competitive solicitation process and 10 additional contracts that were established using sole source procurement. Government agencies use sole source contracting to procure goods and services from a single vendor, without competition, when only one vendor is capable of meeting the agency's needs. This method bypasses the bidding and vendor evaluation processes of competitive procurements. As such, sole source procurements present a greater risk that the agency may pay a higher price than could be obtained through competitive procurements and can create the appearance of providing preferential treatment to a contractor. Agencies often enact rules to help minimize sole source procurement risks by requiring documentation of the justifying circumstances.

The Department's Purchasing Fiscal Rules (Judicial Fiscal Rules), which the SCAO operates under, specify that the State Court Administrator is the final authority on and must authorize all procurements, including sole source procurements, but may delegate purchasing responsibilities. The State Court Administrator has delegated most purchasing responsibilities to the Purchasing Manager, who oversees day-to-day administration of the Department's purchasing program by acting as the principle contact for all staff with purchasing responsibilities; posting all solicitations; maintaining and updating the Judicial Fiscal Rules related to procurement; and establishing price agreements for products or services, where appropriate.

HOW WERE THE RESULTS OF THE AUDIT WORK MEASURED?

The Judicial Code of Conduct states that employees shall “[p]erform all duties without favoritism and without improper influence by family, social or other relationships,” and shall “[a]void impropriety or any activity that gives the appearance of impropriety.”

Judicial Fiscal Rules establish the following requirements for all SCAO procurements, including sole source procurements:

- Every effort must be made to “assure that all persons who desire to do business with the Department...have a fair and equal opportunity to compete in fulfilling the Department’s needs” [Section 1.2.1].
- Employees with purchasing responsibilities must strive to maximize the purchasing value of the Department’s funds [Section 1.2.3].
- Purchasing Officials must maintain a file of purchasing records that includes all documentation related to the purchase, including contracts [Section 1.4.4.4].

Judicial Fiscal Rules also set the following requirements specifically for sole source procurements:

- All sole source procurements must be accompanied by a written justification that includes “sufficient facts, circumstances, and reasoning to substantiate that there is only one specific product or service that will meet the Department’s need, that there is only one provider of that product or service, and an explanation as to why there are no other vendors suitable or acceptable to meet that need” [Section 2.3.2.1].

- The State Court Administrator must sign the written justification prior to any commitments being made (e.g., signing a contract with the vendor) [Section 2.3.2.2] and must authorize all sole source purchases [Sections 1.4.1.2–1.4.1.4].
- The Purchasing Official and/or Purchasing Manager must engage in and document negotiations with the identified sole source vendor regarding the price, delivery, and terms of the contract [Section 2.3.2.3].

WHAT PROBLEMS DID THE AUDIT WORK IDENTIFY?

The 10 sole source contracts awarded by the SCAO between Fiscal Years 2017 and 2020 totaled $8.14 million. We reviewed all 10 sole source contracts against Judicial Fiscal Rules and identified issues with six contracts (60 percent) worth a total of up to $3.87 million, and on which $1.12 million was spent. Some contracts had multiple issues.

- In Fiscal Year 2019, the former State Court Administrator executed a sole source contract with a former employee for an internal leadership training program at an annual cost of $530,000 for up to 5 years and not to exceed a total of $2.75 million. The former employee had created their leadership training company while still employed by the SCAO. The employee submitted their resignation to the SCAO on March 15, 2019, with an effective date of March 19, 2020. On March 20, 2019, the former Director of Human Resources submitted a sole source justification to the former State Court Administrator to contract with the former employee's leadership training company. On March 25, 2019, the former State Court Administrator emailed the former employee with the signed sole source justification and indicated that the SCAO was moving forward with the contracting process. The former State Court Administrator executed the contract 11 weeks later, but at the direction of the Supreme Court, the contract was canceled 6 weeks after it was executed. The proximity of dates between when the employee resigned and when the sole source justification was drafted and signed by the former State Court Administrator gives the appearance of impropriety and appears to be a violation of the Judicial Code of Conduct.

- For one contract worth about $244,700 for court reporting software and services, the SCAO did not maintain the executed contract, as required by Judicial Fiscal Rules.
- For four contracts, we found deficiencies in the SCAO's justification for using sole source procurement. Specifically:
 - ▶ One contract worth $44,800 for the creation of an "interactive learning exhibit" did not contain any written justification for using the sole source method. The SCAO confirmed that they did not write a justification for this contract.
 - ▶ Two contracts contained written justifications that were missing required statements to explain why there was only one service or one provider that could meet the Judicial Department's needs. In one of these contracts, worth $73,650 and for a specialized recidivism prevention program, the written justification lacked a statement to explain why other recidivism prevention programs were incapable of meeting the Department's needs. In the second contract, which was also the contract with the former SCAO employee, worth $530,000 per year for up to 5 years and not to exceed a total of $2.75 million, the written justification lacked a statement to explain why the vendor's leadership program was the only program capable of meeting the Department's needs.
 - ▶ One contract worth $54,700 for mental health, substance abuse, and domestic violence treatment services for juvenile probationers contained a written justification for the sole source procurement, but it was signed by the former State Court Administrator several weeks after the contract itself was executed. Judicial Fiscal Rules require that the State Court Administrator sign the written justification prior to any commitments being made.

- For four contracts, with a total value of up to $3.55 million, the SCAO did not negotiate the price, delivery, or terms of the contracts with the vendors. Rather, the SCAO accepted the price, delivery, and terms proposed by the vendors.

EXHIBIT 2.9 shows the distribution of issues found across the six sole source procurements.

¹ This contract was for $530,000 per year, for up to 5 years and not to exceed a total of $2.75 million. The SCAO canceled this contract prior to expending any funds.

WHY DID THESE PROBLEMS OCCUR?

INSUFFICIENT PROVISIONS IN JUDICIAL FISCAL RULES. The Judicial Fiscal Rules do not explicitly prohibit former employees from pursuing a contract with the Department within a specified period after their resignation. Conversely, ethics statutes that govern the General Assembly, public officers, local government officials, and state employees prohibit former employees from contracting within 6 months of separation from state employment with a state agency, involving matters with which they were directly involved during their employment [Section 24-18-201(1), C.R.S.]. The former employee awarded the contract for leadership training had been directly involved in leadership training during their employment with the SCAO.

LACK OF SCAO POLICIES AND PROCEDURES. The SCAO did not establish sufficient written policies or procedures detailing how staff should comply with the Judicial Fiscal Rules related to sole source procurements. Specifically, although the Judicial Fiscal Rules state that the State Court Administrator is the final authority on and must authorize all procurements, including sole source procurements, the SCAO did not establish a clear internal review process to ensure that these contracts are complete and meet all of the Judicial Fiscal Rules, such as through ensuring that documented reviews are completed by other key staff prior to execution (e.g., Director of the Financial Services Division, the Purchasing Manager, fiscal staff, and legal team). Without specific policies and procedures to conduct and document review, it is not clear that these key staff were involved in the review process in six of the 10 sole source procurements made between Fiscal Years 2017 and 2020.

Further, while the Judicial Fiscal Rules that were in place during the period we reviewed stated that there must be a written justification and documentation of negotiations, they did not indicate what should be included in that documentation to justify the sole source procurement and contract terms.

Additionally, the SCAO did not establish written policies for staff to use when deciding whether a sole source procurement is appropriate and in the best interest of the Department. For example, the SCAO did not require that sole source solicitations be posted publicly to identify potential competing vendors and help the SCAO determine if other vendors can provide the goods or services they are seeking or if a sole source is the only means of procurement. Statutes governing executive branch agencies require a sole source notification be posted on the State's bid notification web site for at least 3 days to identify potential competing vendors [Section 24-106-103(5), C.R.S.].

In May 2020, after our audit review period ended, the SCAO implemented revised Judicial Fiscal Rules that it states address the deficiencies we identified in the policies and procedures that were in place during the period we reviewed (July 2017 through April 2020).

WHY DO THESE PROBLEMS MATTER?

The SCAO expended a total of $1.12 million on the six sole source procurements for which we identified issues. One of the five Principle Strategies and Goals the SCAO identified in its strategic plan is to “[c]ultivate public trust and confidence through the thoughtful stewardship of public resources.” When the SCAO does not follow established fiscal rules when using the sole source solicitation process, it is not demonstrating “thoughtful stewardship of public resources.”

RECOMMENDATION 4

The State Court Administrator's Office should establish and implement written rules, policies, and procedures related to the sole source procurement process to help ensure that it is used appropriately by:

- A Updating procurement rules to prohibit former employees from contracting with the Department within a specified period after their resignation.
- B Establishing internal reviews and approvals for all phases of the sole source contracting process that includes identifying all parties required to review the contract documentation.
- C Identifying information required to support the written justification and negotiations for the sole source procurement and contract terms.
- D Requiring public sole source notifications be posted prior to awarding sole source contracts.

RESPONSE

- A AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: NOVEMBER 2020.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and has implemented new fiscal rules and procedures covering the use of independent contractors by the Department. These new Fiscal Rules and Procedures were approved by the Chief Justice in November 2020 and apply to all employees in the Department. The Rules include a mandatory waiting period of six months between an employee's date of separation from employment and the date when a former employee is eligible to begin providing services as an independent contractor with the Judicial Department.

B AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: MAY 2020.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and had been working to revise the Procurement Fiscal Rules and Procedures earlier this year. The revised Rules were approved by the Chief Justice on May 1, 2020 and apply to all employees in the Department. The revised Rules, at Section 16, require all sole source procurements above the discretionary purchasing thresholds in the Rule to be coordinated by the Procurement Unit in the Financial Services Division.

The Procurement Unit is further required to provide an opinion on the sole source request to the State Court Administrator. The authority to approve or deny a sole source procurement request rests with the State Court Administrator. The revised Rules also require the State Court Administrator to report all approved sole source procurements to the Chief Justice on a quarterly basis.

C AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: MAY 2020.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and revised the Procurement Fiscal Rules and Procedures earlier this year. The revised Rules were approved by the Chief Justice with an effective date of May 1, 2020 and apply to all employees in the Department. The revised Rules, at Section 16, outline the required information that shall be required in a sole source procurement request to support the justification. The Rules further require the request to include: (1) a summary of information detailing the costs of using an alternative good or service or of not making the purchase, and (2) a cost analysis explaining why the price offered from the vendor is fair and equitable. The Rules require the Procurement Unit to negotiate the most favorable price, terms, and conditions for the sole source procurement.

D AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: MAY 2020.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and revised the Procurement Fiscal Rules and Procedures earlier this year. The revised Rules were approved by the Chief Justice with an effective date of May 1, 2020 and apply to all employees in the Department. The revised Rules, at Section 16, require the Procurement Unit to publish the sole source procurement on the electronic bid system for review by the public for 14 calendar days. The Rules further require that if one or more responses are received from qualified and responsible vendors who can meet the specifications identified in the notice, and who are not otherwise prohibited from bidding on the contract, the sole source procurement method shall not be used.

PROCUREMENT CARDS

Staff at the SCAO are allowed to use procurement cards (P-cards) to make purchases that do not require a formal procurement process (i.e., generally goods under $10,000 and services under $25,000). This can include expenses such as:

- Office supplies and equipment
- Travel expenses, such as hotels
- Registration fees for conferences and trainings
- Reserving rooms and catering services for hosting conferences and trainings

During our audit, there were a total of 90 P-cards that were active for at least part of the audit review period. Of these cards, 67 were issued to specific staff for their own individual use, while 23 were issued to a work unit (e.g., Human Resources P-card, Information Technology P-card) for use by various staff within that work unit. The SCAO reported that, in Fiscal Year 2018, it began to increase the number of P-cards issued to specific individuals, citing that this would ease administrative burdens and hold purchasers more accountable because all cards will be tied directly to one person, as opposed to a group of people or work unit. For Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020, SCAO staff made almost 10,000 P-card purchases totaling about $3.5 million, as shown in EXHIBIT 2.10.

HOW WERE THE RESULTS OF THE AUDIT WORK MEASURED?

The Green Book [Principle 10.12-14] states that management should consider segregation of duties as part of its internal control design to prevent fraud, waste, and abuse. Segregation of duties involves the separation of activities including authority, custody, and accounting operations. Practically, this means that separate positions should be responsible for making, approving, and recording purchases. Although the SCAO is not governed by the Green Book, it is considered to be a best practice for establishing internal controls and has been adopted by the Executive Branch at the state level.

Section 2.2 of the Judicial Fiscal Rules requires staff, including SCAO staff, to maintain a detailed receipt or merchant/vendor invoice for each purchase on the credit card statement. The budget authority, a position that varies by division or budget, from the administrative assistant to the division director, is required by rules to review, date, and sign the disbursement documentation (i.e., credit card statement) for compliance with Judicial Fiscal Rules, Chief Justice Directives, contractual agreements, invoice terms, budgetary guidelines, and applicable statutes.

WHAT PROBLEM DID THE AUDIT WORK IDENTIFY AND WHY DOES IT MATTER?

We tested a statistically valid random sample of 100 SCAO P-card purchases made during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020 and totaling almost $405,000 (12 percent of the total amount spent on P-cards during this period) to determine if these purchases complied with Judicial Fiscal Rules and were consistent with best practices related to internal control.

Overall, we identified issues with the approvals for 30 of the 100 purchases (30 percent) we reviewed; these 30 purchases totaled more than $49,500. Specifically, we found:

- 23 P-card purchases (23 percent) totaling more than $45,600 were approved by the same individuals whose cards were used for the purchases. Although these individuals were “Budget Authorities” who, under Judicial Fiscal Rules are authorized to approve purchases, approving one’s own purchase is not consistent with best practices or an appropriate segregation of duties. Based on the information from our sample, we can estimate with 95 percent confidence with the most likely statistical projection that the total amount of purchases approved by the same individual who made them is about $807,100.
- 5 P-card purchases (5 percent) totaling more than $3,200 where it was not clear whether the purchases had been approved. For all five purchases, the SCAO pointed to markings on one of the related documents, such as a receipt, and stated the markings were the approving signature. However, these markings were not legible and there was no date on four of them to indicate that the markings were intended to be an approval signature. Based on the information from our sample, we can estimate with 95 percent confidence with the most likely statistical projection that the total amount of purchases made without a legible indication of approval is about $175,500.

- 2 P-card purchases (2 percent) totaling about $600 that did not include any signature from the budget authority. Therefore, it appears these purchases were not reviewed and approved for appropriateness. Based on the information from our sample, we can estimate with 95 percent confidence with the most likely statistical projection that the total amount of purchases made without indication of approval is about $70,200.

In total, we estimate using the most likely error rate, with 95 percent confidence, that about $1,052,700 in purchases made during our audit period were both made and approved by the same individual, or the documentation to indicate approval was neither legible nor present. When there is no segregation of duties or when review procedures are not followed, we cannot be certain that the controls the SCAO has put in place are functioning as intended and lowering the risk of unnecessary or unreasonable purchases.

WHY DID THESE PROBLEMS OCCUR?

Although Judicial Fiscal Rules require that all P-card purchases be approved by the budget authority, which is demonstrated by a signature and date on the monthly credit card statement, the SCAO has not established written policies or provided consistent direction to staff for how this rule should be implemented within the office. Specifically, although the accounting and budget teams maintain a list of budgetary authorities, the SCAO has not specified which positions across the organization should be considered “budget authorities” and, therefore, are responsible for approving purchases, nor has it specified that an individual cannot approve their own purchases. In addition, the SCAO has not provided guidance on how and where approvals should be documented to ensure consistency across the organization. Instead, each division and unit within the SCAO has different practices for reviewing and approving purchases made on P-cards. For example, in one division, the administrative assistant makes purchases and the division director reviews and approves the P-card statement. However, in another division, the administrative assistant has been told by the division director to make purchases, but the administrative assistant is also responsible for reviewing and approving the P-card purchases.

The State Court Administrator's Office should improve controls over the use of procurement cards by establishing written policies on which positions can serve as a "budget authority" and are authorized to approve procurement card purchases, taking into consideration the appropriate segregation of duties and how and where approvals should be documented.

RESPONSE

AGREE. IMPLEMENTATION DATE: JULY 2021.

The State Court Administrator's Office agrees with the recommendation and has developed Fiscal Rules and Procedures covering Commercial Cards that were approved by the Chief Justice in November 2020 and apply to all employees in the Department. The Rules, at Section 4, require the Administrative Authority (Division Directors at the State Court Administrator's Office) to review, sign, and date the statement for each cardholder and card custodian indicating approval of transactions.

Furthermore, the State Court Administrator's Office will develop clear guidance regarding budget management to include who can serve as a budget authority.

SCAO ADMINISTRATIVE FRAMEWORK

The Colorado Constitution establishes the Supreme Court, led by the Chief Justice, as the executive head of Colorado's judicial system and provides it with the authority to appoint a court administrator and any other personnel necessary to administer the courts [Colorado Const., Art. VI, Sec. 5(2 and 3)]. To assist in administering the operations of the courts, the Supreme Court has established, within the Department, the SCAO, headed by a State Court Administrator [Section 13-3-101, C.R.S.].

The SCAO operates within a governance framework established in rules promulgated by the Supreme Court, including Judicial Department Personnel Rules and Judicial Fiscal Rules, as well as written Chief Justice Directives, such as a Code of Conduct that all Department employees must follow.

The SCAO, under the authority of the State Court Administrator, is responsible for providing centralized policy guidance to courts on Supreme Court requirements and developing and implementing standards and guidelines for Department staff to facilitate operations under those requirements. In particular, Chief Justice Directive 04-02 (effective as of September 2007) states that, generally, all Department personnel shall comply with the fiscal policies and procedures established by the State Court Administrator.

HOW WERE THE RESULTS OF THE AUDIT WORK MEASURED?

The Code of Conduct implemented by the Supreme Court for the Department states, "It is essential to the proper functioning of the State that all employees of the Judicial Department observe high standards of conduct to maintain professionalism in the workplace and public confidence in the integrity and independence of the judicial system" and “[a]void impropriety or any activity that gives the appearance of impropriety.” In addition, the Code of Conduct provides that staff should demonstrate high standards of integrity and honesty, and should always use state resources, time, property, and funds prudently.

Judicial Fiscal Rules state that, “All parties involved in the negotiation, performance, or administration of the Judicial Department’s purchases, acquisitions, and contracts shall act in good faith and in accordance with the Colorado Judicial Branch Code of Conduct” [Section 1.1] and that employees shall not “[u]se state time, property, equipment, or resources for private gain, monetary or otherwise” [Section 1.1.2.3].

The Green Book defines internal control, in part, as a process implemented by an agency’s management to provide reasonable assurance that the objectives of the agency will be achieved, including the objectives of operating efficiently and effectively and with accountability. Although the SCAO is not required to follow the standards established in the Green Book, they are considered a best practice for establishing internal controls and include principles and components that, if enacted by an entity’s oversight body, management, and other personnel, provide “reasonable assurance that the objectives of an entity will be achieved” [OV1.01]. The Green Book notes that an entity’s internal controls comprise “the plans, methods, policies, and procedures used to fulfill the mission, strategic plan, goals, and objectives of the entity,” serve as “the first line of defense in safeguarding assets,” and help the entity “achieve desired results through effective stewardship of public resources” [OV1.03]. Key Green Book principles relevant to the issues identified in this audit include:

- DEMONSTRATE COMMITMENT TO INTEGRITY AND ETHICAL VALUES (PRINCIPLE 1). “The oversight body and management should demonstrate a commitment to integrity and ethical values” [1.01]. This includes setting a tone at the top and throughout the organization that stresses the importance of these values through management’s directives, attitudes, and behavior [1.02], and establishing and adhering to standards of conduct that communicate expectations for all levels of the organization [1.06 and 1.09].

- ESTABLISH STRUCTURE, RESPONSIBILITY, AND AUTHORITY (PRINCIPLE 3). “Management should establish an organizational structure, assign responsibility, and delegate authority to achieve the entity’s objectives” [3.01]. This includes developing and assigning responsibilities in a manner that addresses risks [3.02] and ensuring that lines of authority are defined and communication flows down, across, and up all levels of authority [3.04].
- DESIGN AND IMPLEMENT CONTROL ACTIVITIES (PRINCIPLES 10 AND 12). Management should “design control activities to achieve objectives and respond to risks” [10.01], and “implement control activities through policies” [12.01]. This includes assigning control activities at the proper levels [10.07], as well as establishing adequate segregation of duties [10.13]. Responsibilities should also be documented [12.02], and the organization should conduct periodic reviews of control activities [12.05].

Statute [Section 13-3-105(4), C.R.S.] states that, “To the end that all state employees are treated generally in a similar manner, the [S]upreme [C]ourt, in promulgating rules as set forth in this section, shall take into consideration the compensation and classification plans, vacation and sick leave provisions, and other conditions of employment applicable to employees of the executive and legislative departments.”

WHAT PROBLEMS DID THE AUDIT WORK IDENTIFY?

Throughout this audit, we identified problems with the SCAO's oversight of and accountability for its human resources and financial services functions that raise questions about the efficacy of the SCAO's system of internal control, including, in particular, its culture of accountability. These problems also raise questions as to whether the SCAO has acted in a way to maintain public confidence in the Department and demonstrate good stewardship of state funds. We applied relevant provisions of the Judicial Code of Conduct, Department rules, and the Green Book's Principles of Internal Control to actions taken by the SCAO during our audit review period and identified numerous instances where the SCAO's actions were not consistent with these provisions. Specifically, we found:

APPEARANCE OF IMPROPRIETY. The former State Court Administrator began the process of entering into a sole source contract with a former SCAO employee within days of the former employee's resignation. The contract, worth $530,000 per year for up to 5 years and not to exceed a total of $2.75 million, was to provide internal leadership training for the Department. This former employee created their leadership training company while still employed by the SCAO. Further, at the time this employee tendered their resignation, the SCAO had paid at least $21,800 during Fiscal Years 2017 and 2019 to send this individual to four leadership conferences and trainings, which provided the former employee with knowledge valuable to their company, using state funds. Contracting with an employee who had recently resigned to provide services developed by training paid for by the SCAO has the appearance of impropriety, which is prohibited by the Judicial Code of Conduct. This matter is discussed further in the fourth finding.

FAILURE TO ESTABLISH STRUCTURE, RESPONSIBILITY, AND AUTHORITY. We identified several areas during the audit where SCAO management had not assigned responsibility or delegated authority in a manner that appeared appropriate to achieve its objectives. Specifically:

- CONTRACTS. Judicial Fiscal Rules require the State Court Administrator to be the signature authority for all SCAO contracts [Section 1.4.1.3]. However, we found that the former SCAO Chief of Staff signed on behalf of the State Court Administrator for nearly half of the contracts we sampled. Specifically, the former SCAO Chief of Staff signed five contracts on behalf of the State Court Administrator between April 2017 and February 2018. Judicial Fiscal Rules permit the State Court Administrator to delegate the authority to sign contracts “in limited circumstances” [Section 1.4.1.5]; however, the SCAO has not established those circumstances when such delegation would be appropriate.

- APPROVALS. First, although Judicial Fiscal Rules require the “budget authority” to review, date, and sign disbursement documentation, the SCAO has not defined which positions should be considered a “budget authority.” As a result, we found wide variation between divisions as to which staff had been designated as the “budget authority.” For example, in one division, the Division Director was considered the budget authority. However, in another division, an administrative assistant had been appointed as the budget authority, and was tasked with approving the purchases for that division, including purchases made by their supervisor.

Second, during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020, the SCAO granted 25,520 hours of paid administrative leave to employees. Of this amount, 6,090 hours were approved as part of VSI contracts the SCAO entered into with 10 employees as part of a staffing reorganization announced by the former State Court Administrator. These agreements cost the SCAO more than $518,000 in salaries and benefits paid out to these individuals. We found, however, that these agreements were not prepared or reviewed by the SCAO’s legal team or other members of SCAO senior management who were listed as required signatories on the contracts. The VSI contracts were signed only by the former State Court Administrator. Ultimately, the SCAO refilled seven of the 10 positions when the reorganization did not occur, indicating the money spent on these VSI contracts may not have been a prudent use of state funds. This matter is discussed further in the first finding.

Finally, the SCAO has not established any limits or guidelines for approving staff use of paid administrative leave, and administrative authorities or delegates at all levels of the organization are allowed to grant administrative leave with limited oversight. This matter is discussed further in the second finding.

FAILURE TO DESIGN AND IMPLEMENT CONTROL ACTIVITIES. We identified several areas during the audit where the SCAO had not designed or implemented sufficient control activities (i.e., the policies, procedures, and mechanisms that enforce management's directives and mitigate risks) that are commonly established as part of an effective control system. Specifically:

- SEGREGATION OF DUTIES. We found that 23 of the 100 purchases (23 percent) in our sample totaling over $45,600 were approved by the same individual who made the purchase. The SCAO had not established policies or procedures requiring that purchases be approved by someone other than the individual making the purchases. This matter is discussed further in the fifth finding.
- DOCUMENT RETENTION. We found that the SCAO did not retain documentation regarding personnel records and paid administrative leave awards. Specifically:
 - ▶ For four employees who had been granted a large amount of administrative leave, the SCAO had to change how it had categorized the reason for the leave after they were unable to locate documentation to support the original categorization. That is, the SCAO had originally reported that the leave was granted for employee settlements, but later changed its response and said that, instead, the leave was granted for either disciplinary investigations (2 instances) or discretionary reasons (2 instances).

- ▶ For 10 cases where large amounts of leave were granted, the SCAO could not clearly categorize the leave without more research. For instance, two cases initially listed as “Workers’ Compensation” cases, were subsequently re-labeled as “medical leave” and leave taken under the Families First Coronavirus Response Act, but not certified FMLA cases.
- ▶ For two disciplinary investigation cases, the SCAO does not have any documentation related to these cases, such as the allegations, complaints, outcomes, or any actions taken as a result of the investigations. This matter is discussed further in the third finding.
- ▶ During Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020, the SCAO granted 25,520 hours of paid administrative leave. Of this paid leave:
 - 2,650 hours were approved as part of settlement agreements with two former SCAO employees. The SCAO lacked transparency in the documentation of these settlements because the contracts did not contain the dollar amounts for the settlement (i.e., pay and benefits received for this leave), and Judicial Personnel Rules are silent on the use of paid administrative leave for settlements. These 2,650 hours equated to $160,000 in salaries and $22,600 in paid time off. This matter is discussed further in the second finding.
 - 13,710 hours were approved under Judicial Personnel Rules governing discretion to grant paid administrative leave. For 3,600 of these hours (26 percent), there were no records of the reasons the staff members were awarded the leave. More than 100 instances occurred where employees received 1,060 hours above the calculated normal amount granted to staff.

This included one employee who received a total of 200 hours of paid administrative leave in Fiscal Year 2017 and another who received 160 hours in Fiscal Year 2018—there was no documentation to explain why these employees were granted the large amounts of leave. This matter is discussed further in the second finding.

- 3,070 hours were approved for disciplinary investigations related to nine employees. For two of the nine employees, the SCAO could not provide any documentation to verify that the more than 800 hours of paid administrative leave granted to these employees was due to investigations, although the SCAO did have documentation indicating that these employees separated from the SCAO to forego disciplinary proceedings. Therefore, we could not determine if these hours were spent appropriately. This matter is discussed further in the second finding.

- ▶ At least two SCAO employees used computers for work that were not approved by the IT division and were not connected to the SCAO network, after being asked not to do so. One of the individuals continued to use a MacBook that was not connected to the network, even though it was the property of the SCAO. When this employee left the SCAO, their MacBook hard drive was wiped clean and the SCAO no longer had the records that had been on it. The other employee used a personal MacBook that was also not connected to the SCAO network. When this employee left the SCAO, they took their MacBook and all of the information that it contained with them. As a result, information related to settlements and disciplinary investigations may have been lost.

- ▶ Employees responsible for the retention of documents related to Family and Medical Leave cases stored documents on their local drives that were not backed up to the SCAO network. As a result, for 10 of the 135 FMLA cases (7 percent) approved during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020, the SCAO could not demonstrate that the employees were eligible for the 1,800 hours of FML approved, or in some cases, that the employees were eligible for FML at all. These employees were allowed to use extended sick leave, rather than PTO, for the time they were out. Extended sick leave can only be used in FML cases and if these employees were not actually eligible for FML, then it should not have been used. Instead, the employees would have had to use their accrued PTO rather than allowing them to retain the PTO for other uses or have it paid out upon separation. This matter is discussed further in the third finding.

- ▶ For 12 FMLA cases, the SCAO was eventually able to provide all required supporting documentation that we requested. However, it took the SCAO 6 weeks to locate the necessary information because it was not maintained in a central location and the employees who knew where the documents could be found no longer worked at the SCAO.
- ▶ The SCAO spent about $91,900 on leadership trainings during Fiscal Years 2017 through 2020, but did not have sufficient documentation to indicate how these expenses benefitted the SCAO or to show that they were reasonable or an appropriate use of state resources. Further, only two of the employees who were identified as having attended these trainings were still with the SCAO as of September 2020. Specifically, the SCAO spent:
 - $55,000 for seven employees on the executive team to attend a leadership course at the University of Virginia. The only documentation the SCAO had related to this course were emails between staff and the course administrator clarifying details on amenities. There was no documentation justifying how this leadership course would benefit the SCAO.
 - $27,700 for two employees to attend three leadership conferences in New York City over three consecutive years. The only documentation the SCAO had related to these charges was the receipt for the conference registration.

- $5,000 for a 1-day leadership training session for the “executive team.” Neither the receipt for the registration nor the statement detail indicate exactly what the training was for or how many people attended.
- $4,200 for an employee to receive leadership coaching. The only documentation the SCAO had related to this charge was a credit card receipt for the registration.

In total, all of these examples show a lack consistency with internal control principles related to the importance of management demonstrating a commitment to integrity and ethical values and setting a tone at the top and throughout the organization that stresses the importance of these values.

WHY DID THESE PROBLEMS OCCUR?

Judicial Personnel Rules [Rule 6.A.3] provides the State Court Administrator with broad decision-making authority for the SCAO, which includes the responsibility for setting the tone for the organization. During this audit, we identified multiple actions taken by the former State Court Administrator that were problematic. They were able to take those actions, in part, because of a lack of an effective system of controls governing SCAO operations, including:

JUDICIAL RULES, POLICIES, AND PROCEDURES. Although there are Judicial rules related to human resources and financial services, these rules are generally broad and as of October 2020, the SCAO had not developed sufficient policies and procedures detailing how to implement these rules within the organization. For example, Judicial rules allow “administrative authorities” to grant paid administrative leave to employees “for reasons determined to be for the good of the [S]tate.” However, the rules do not specify, and the SCAO has not established any policies and procedures to provide additional guidance to staff on which employees are considered “administrative authorities” and, therefore, who would be authorized to grant administrative leave. In addition, rules do not specify, and the SCAO has not established any guidelines on, appropriate reasons for granting administrative leave or limits on the amount that can be granted.

Similarly, Judicial Fiscal Rules require that a “budget authority” must approve purchases, but they do not define, and the SCAO has not specified, which positions should be considered a “budget authority.” SCAO staff informed us that the position responsible for these approvals can vary from the division director to an administrative assistant. Further, the Judicial Fiscal Rules do not indicate the manner in which purchases should be approved by the budget authority; some purchases have initials and dates on each receipt, some on the P-Card statement, and there is not always an indication that the signature is granting approval.

Either providing more detail in Judicial rules, or developing policies and procedures with guidance on how to implement the rules would help provide the SCAO with reasonable assurance that the objectives of the agency will be achieved. This includes the objectives of operating efficiently and effectively, with accountability, and helping ensure consistent application of the rules across the organization. The Executive Branch has established State Fiscal and Personnel Rules that all state agencies must follow. State agencies are also responsible for establishing their own policies and procedures to provide guidance to staff on how to implement the rules. In Fiscal Year 2020, the SCAO began updating Judicial rules and establishing procedures related to procurement, travel, and P-cards. Our review of the revised Judicial Procurement Rules showed changes that would improve controls for sole source procurements. These changes included detailing what information must be provided in the written justification (e.g., price-cost analysis), requiring review by the procurement unit before a sole source request is reviewed by the State Court Administrator, and publishing the sole source request on a public website for 14 days. As of May 2020, the revised Judicial Procurement Rules had been finalized, while as of October 2020, revisions to the Judicial Fiscal Rules related to P-cards were still awaiting final approval by the Chief Justice.

MONITORING ACTIVITIES. The SCAO has not implemented sufficient monitoring activities to ensure that controls within the organization are working properly. Specifically, the SCAO has not established clear expectations for staff related to supervisory review of key administrative functions, such as expenditures and administrative leave use. For example, the SCAO does not have a process for periodically reviewing expenditures to ensure that all of the necessary information and approvals related to the expenditure have been documented. In addition, the SCAO does not track the amount of administrative leave that is being used within each division and across the organization, nor does it review personnel files to ensure that required documentation has been properly retained. Principle 16 in the Green Book states that “[m]anagement should establish and operate monitoring activities to monitor the internal control system and evaluate the results” [16.01]. This includes establishing a baseline from the current state of the system, continuously monitoring, and then evaluating results. Because the SCAO has not implemented key controls discussed previously, it does not have a baseline from which to monitor how it is operating.

Additionally, the SCAO has not routinely used its internal audit function to help monitor control activities within the SCAO. Instead, the internal audit division primarily conducts audits at the judicial districts and only looks at SCAO functions if directed by management. According to the SCAO, the only internal audits conducted on SCAO operations within the past 4 years were specific to the travel and spending of a single employee that were called into question.

WHY DO THESE PROBLEMS MATTER?

Because the SCAO has not established an effective system of internal controls, it has not been transparent in some of its activities and cannot always demonstrate good stewardship of public funds. For example:

- By approving the justification for a sole source contract that could be worth as much as $2.75 million for an employee who had resigned only days before the approval, the SCAO degrades the public trust in an open and equitable solicitation process.
- By granting large amounts of administrative leave for employees, the SCAO is not demonstrating good stewardship in its use of public funds. Employees are being paid for not working while still accruing the leave they receive as an employment benefit. Further, this is compounded by the fact that Department employees accrue, on average, 25 percent more PTO and extended sick leave each month than leave accrued by employees in the Executive Branch. On average, Department employees are authorized to retain a maximum accrual amount that is 14 percent higher than the Executive Branch allows. In an effort to treat all state employees in a similar manner, statute requires the Chief Justice to take into consideration what the Executive and Legislative Branches offer their employees with respect to compensation and leave.
- Leaving administrative leave to the discretion of the State Court Administrator or delegated authorities without any limitations on the amount of leave that can be approved or for what purposes can lead to excessive use of administrative leave across the organization. In addition, employees who use administrative leave in place of their accrued PTO will receive a larger payout for their unused PTO upon separation.
- There is a lack of transparency when the SCAO uses administrative leave to compensate employees under voluntary separations and settlements, which can lessen the public trust. The cost of these agreements is hidden to the public, as there is no dollar value directly stated in these agreements. In our audit work, in order to calculate the cost of these agreements, we had to request and review payroll and benefit information that would not be accessible to the public.

- A lack of segregation of duties results in staff approving their own purchases, which creates a risk of purchases not being made for the benefit of the organization and possibly for personal gain.

RECOMMENDATION 6

The State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO) should implement an effective system of internal control that fosters a culture of integrity, ethical values, and accountability by:

- A Implementing policies and procedures and continuing to update Judicial Rules as necessary, to ensure that collectively, they provide sufficient direction to staff on the human resources and financial services functions discussed throughout this report, and detail how staff are to implement Judicial rules within the organization.
- B Implementing monitoring activities to ensure that controls within the organization are working properly, which should include conducting routine supervisory reviews of key administrative functions, such as expenditures and administrative leave use, and routinely using its internal audit function to monitor controls within the SCAO itself.

BRIAN D. BOATRIGHT
CHIEF JUSTICE

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE

February 7, 2022

Justices, Judges, and Judicial Department Personnel,

I want you all to hear directly from me regarding the results of the Office of the State Auditor's ("OSA") Fraud Hotline Investigation. The OSA concluded its investigation last Friday and provided me with an Investigation Report and an Executive Summary. I have summarized the process and conclusions below.

In April 2019, the OSA received an anonymous letter alleging that the State Court Administrator's Office ("SCAO") was misusing public funds, that certain SCAO employees were committing FMLA fraud, abusing paid time off, and that certain SCAO employees were being paid but not working. The OSA referred the allegations to former Chief Justice Coats, who was provided the option of having the Judicial Department investigate the allegations on its own, conducting a joint investigation with the OSA, or requesting that the OSA conduct the investigation independently. Chief Justice Coats asked the OSA to conduct the investigation independently and committed the Judicial Department to fully cooperate with the investigation, which it did.

In July 2019, a news media investigation raised questions about the training contract awarded to The Leadership Practice, LLC, a company owned by former Chief of Staff Mindy Masias. Based upon information learned at that time, Chief Justice Coats authorized the OSA to expand its investigation into the procurement process and this contract award.

While the COVID pandemic certainly delayed the investigation, the people of Colorado have been well-served by the OSA's careful and deliberative approach. The OSA reviewed over 16,000 documents and interviewed 11 current and former Judicial Department employees, including former State Court Administrator Chris Ryan and former Chief Justice Coats. Every current Judicial Department employee who was asked to cooperate with the investigation did so.

As a result of the investigation, the OSA is referring four former SCAO employees to law enforcement for additional investigation to determine whether or not criminal charges should be filed against them. The decision to refer matters to law enforcement was made by the OSA, not the Judicial Department. The OSA is not referring any current Judicial Department employee or any current or former judicial officer to law enforcement.

THREE IDENTIFIED ISSUES

The OSA determined that three issues required a report to law enforcement under its Fraud Hotline statute. § 2-3-110.5(3)(c)(IV), C.R.S. I must emphasize that this is not a determination that laws were broken, nor does it mean that criminal charges will be filed. It means only that under Colorado's Fraud Hotline statute, the OSA determined the evidence it found in the investigation required the agency to submit a report to law enforcement.

First, the OSA found evidence that two former SCAO employees, Mindy Masias and Eric Brown, were conducting paid work for an outside employer while not appropriately accounting for Paid Time Off in our leave system. The OSA found evidence that this resulted in both employees receiving state compensation while being paid for work by an outside employer. The OSA concluded that "there is at least some evidence of occupational fraud and/or misuse of public funds that would require a report to law enforcement in connection with outside employment activities conducted by both Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown."

Second, the OSA found evidence that the settlement agreement for a former SCAO employee – referred to anonymously in the agency's Executive Summary as "SCAO Employee #1" – warranted a referral to law enforcement. Chris Ryan, Mindy Masias, and Eric Brown negotiated the settlement agreement with this former SCAO employee. Former Chief Justice Coats was not informed or consulted regarding the settlement. The OSA concluded that "there is at least some evidence of occupational fraud, apparently illegal transactions, and/or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property in connection with SCAO Employee #1's settlement agreement, which would require a report to law enforcement as it concerns SCAO Employee #1, Mr. Brown, Ms. Masias, and Mr. Ryan."

Third, the OSA investigated the procurement and contracting process for the leadership training contract that was awarded to Ms. Masias's company, The Leadership Practice. In relation to the allegations that the contract was a "quid pro quo" arrangement in which Ms. Masias was promised a contract in exchange for her signing a resignation agreement that ensured her silence on alleged misconduct by judges and staff in the Department, the OSA "found some evidence that Ms. Masias requested the promise of a contract before resigning. However, the OSA did not obtain evidence that Ms. Masias was promised a contract for such services prior to her signing a Resignation Agreement and Release of Claims." The OSA found evidence that Mr. Brown and Ms. Masias attempted "to influence the [Request for Proposals], sole source contract, and related processes in favor of Ms. Masias, and ultimately resulting in the award of a sole source contract to Ms. Masias.” The OSA determined that this evidence requires a report to law enforcement with respect to Mr. Brown and Ms. Masias. This referral does not include any current Judicial Department employee or any current or former judicial officer. The OSA did not take a position on whether fiscal rules were violated in the contracting process or whether there were any ethical or code of conduct violations.

The Department terminated the leadership training contract at the direction of Chief Justice Coats less than two days after he first learned of information that Mr. Ryan and others withheld from him, and the Department made no payments under it.

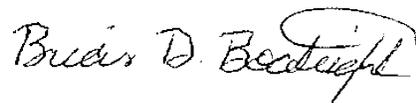

Regarding the other issues investigated, the OSA did not find evidence of FMLA fraud or misuse of state funds in the form of paid administrative leave other than what I’ve identified above.

GOING FORWARD

The Executive Summary, which omits confidential and privileged information, is available on the Judicial Department’s website to anyone who wants to review it directly. We are working to provide the full Investigation Report to the investigators for other pending investigations. Please understand that I will not be able to comment further on the OSA’s report or the issues that have been referred to law enforcement, but we will continue to cooperate fully with any further investigation.

The OSA’s investigation and report are helpful in continuing to improve the Department’s policies regarding leave and contracting, and the Department has, since 2019, implemented several changes to the personnel and fiscal rules to improve operations. We continue to look for ways to improve further.

Sincerely,

OFFICE OF THE STATE AUDITOR
KERRI L. HUNTER, CPA - STATE AUDITOR

State Auditor
Colorado Office of the State Auditor

Executive Summary of Fraud Hotline Investigation Report

On April 15, 2019, the Office of the State Auditor's (OSA) Fraud Hotline (Hotline) received an anonymous letter alleging fraud involving employees of the State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO), within the Colorado Judicial Branch. The Hotline's statutes define fraud as "occupational fraud or the use of one's occupation for personal enrichment through the deliberate misuse or misapplication of the employing organization's resources or assets" [Section 2-3-110.5(1)(d), C.R.S.]. When the OSA refers an occupational fraud allegation, the affected agency has the option to conduct its own investigation, request the State Auditor's participation in an investigation, or request that the State Auditor conduct the entire investigation [Section 2-3-110.5(3)(b), C.R.S.]. On May 29, 2019, Chief Justice Coats sent a letter to State Auditor Dianne Ray requesting that the OSA conduct an investigation of the allegations and stating that the Judicial Branch would fully cooperate.

Scope and Approach

The objective of the OSA's investigation was to determine whether there was evidence of occupational fraud, apparently illegal transactions, and/or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property, and whether a report to law enforcement would be required [Section 2-3-110.5(3)(c)(IV), C.R.S.]. The OSA's investigation was not a criminal investigation [Section 2-3-110.5(1)(g), C.R.S.].

The OSA investigated occupational fraud allegations related to:

- Job protection obtained as a result of FMLA fraud.
- State compensation paid to Eric Brown (former Director, Human Resources Division), and Mindy Masias (former Chief of Staff), while they were SCAO employees earning outside consulting and speaking fees on state time.

- Payments to senior SCAO staff who were not working.
- A sole source contract awarded to Ms. Masias (dba The Leadership Practice) to provide leadership training after she left her SCAO employment.

Under the OSA's Fraud Hotline statutes, "the state auditor has access at all times to all of the books, accounts, reports, vouchers, or other records or information maintained by the agency that are directly related to the scope of the investigation" [Section 2-3-110.5(3)(c)(I), C.R.S.]. After the entrance conference on July 8, 2019, the OSA began requesting documents related to the occupational fraud allegations. The Judicial Branch initially provided documents that they determined to be relevant to the scope of the investigation. On July 24, 2019, the Judicial Branch requested, and the OSA agreed to, an access agreement to "facilitate the OSA's access to all records and information directly related to the scope of the investigation while still preserving and protecting any confidentiality, privilege, or other protection applicable to the records and information." The access agreement was executed on August 23, 2019.

After the access agreement was executed, at the request of attorneys for the Judicial Branch, the OSA provided search terms related to the scope of our investigation; the OSA and the Judicial Branch then discussed the final list of terms and agreed on the terms that would be used to query emails and some other documents and information. Based on this list, Judicial Branch staff and their attorneys then used software to identify and review the emails and some other documents and information before providing them to the OSA.

Throughout the OSA's investigation, the Judicial Branch and its attorneys were concerned about protecting their attorney-client and other privileges. Documentation that the Judicial Branch and its attorneys considered to be subject to attorney-client or other protections was not provided to the OSA, but rather the OSA was allowed to view the documentation. The Judicial Branch also provided the OSA with a log of emails and some other documents and information that the Judicial Branch (1) determined to be not relevant to the scope of the investigation and withheld on the basis of confidentiality and privilege protections, or (2) determined in consultation with the OSA to be outside the scope of our investigation. The OSA made an independent assessment of the information that the Judicial Branch provided and allowed the OSA to review. Since the OSA's intention is not to inadvertently waive the Judicial Branch's privileges, the Judicial Branch and its attorneys were granted multiple opportunities to review the report and executive summary and redact information they identified as privileged, attorney work product, or subject to other legal protections.

Through the OSA's investigation, the investigation team obtained and reviewed more than 16,000 Judicial Branch documents, including emails; obtained, reviewed, and analyzed documentation from the National Center for State Courts; obtained and reviewed public information accessible online; interviewed various Judicial Branch staff; and requested information from leadership training vendors that expressed interest in the Judicial Branch's 2019 Request for Proposals (RFP) for leadership training but did not submit a proposal.

This Executive Summary summarizes the results of the OSA's investigation but does not reference all evidence supporting the OSA's conclusions.

Summary of Findings & Conclusions

Based on an examination and analysis of the information obtained and reviewed during the OSA's investigation, and based on the totality of the circumstances, the OSA made the findings and reached the conclusions summarized below.

FMLA Job Protection

In response to the Judicial Branch's assertion that information related to SCAO employees' FMLA job protection is subject to confidentiality protections under law, the OSA is not providing details in this executive summary about the FMLA-related evidence we obtained.

Based on the totality of the circumstances, the OSA did not find evidence of occupational fraud, apparently illegal transactions, and/or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property that would require a report to law enforcement related to FMLA job protection.

Outside Employment

Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown were approved to perform outside employment work for the National Center for State Courts (NCSC) so long as it was conducted on personal time. Nevertheless, in 2018 and 2019, Ms. Masias earned at least $17,200 and Mr. Brown earned at least $26,800 in state salary while also conducting outside employment activities. The following table shows a breakout of hours that Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown devoted to outside employment activities while also getting paid their state salary.

Mindy Masias's Outside Employment Hours Conducted on State Time		Eric Brown's Outside Employment Hours Conducted on State Time
Leave Type	Number of Outside Employment Hours	Leave Type	Number of Outside Employment Hours
No paid leave used ¹	21	No paid leave used ¹	643
Med-Cert Paid Time Off/Admin and other leave ²	184	Other leave	42
		Paid Time Off	1
Total	205	Total	686

Source: Investigation team analysis of SCAO leave, payroll, and human resources records and NCSC time sheets.

¹ Our assumption was that the employee could reasonably work up to 12 hours in the same day (i.e., 8 hours at SCAO job plus up to 4 more hours in the evening on outside employment), so numbers only include time in excess of 4 hours that the employee charged to outside employment activities on normal state business days.

² Med-Cert refers to leave for employees who do not qualify for FMLA but have a medical certification. This allows employees to use extended sick leave.

Based on the totality of the circumstances, the OSA concludes that there is at least some evidence of occupational fraud, apparently illegal transactions, and/or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property that would require a report to law enforcement in connection with outside employment activities conducted by both Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown.

SCAO Employee #1¹

On April 12, 2018, SCAO Employee #1 was notified that they were the subject of a disciplinary investigation related to inappropriate use of information they obtained through their position and was placed on paid administrative leave.

SCAO Employee #1 allegedly had access to information that SCAO Employee #1 could have used against Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown.

SCAO Employee #1 eventually separated from the SCAO and received 15 months of paid administrative leave and severance based their annual salary, for a total of $143,000. Based on settlement data the Judicial Branch provided for eight employees who received settlement agreements from 2000 through 2017, SCAO Employee #1 received the highest amount the Judicial Branch paid in administrative leave and severance.

Mr. Ryan was involved with the negotiation of SCAO Employee #1's settlement and ultimately approved the agreement. In addition, Mr. Brown and Ms. Masias handled certain aspects of SCAO Employee #1's disciplinary investigation and settlement themselves and without always involving legal counsel, even though they had actual or potential conflicts of interest since they were targets of SCAO Employee #1's alleged misconduct. Mr. Brown acknowledged the potential conflict by recusing himself from the SCAO's disciplinary investigation of SCAO Employee #1's alleged conduct, and there is evidence that Ms. Masias was concerned about information that SCAO Employee #1 might have had in their possession. During the negotiations, Mr. Brown and Ms. Masias acted contrary to the advice of the SCAO's legal counsel. Mr. Ryan's involvement could have neutralized any influence from Ms. Masias and/or Mr. Brown, but there is evidence that Mr. Ryan was a personal friend of SCAO Employee #1, and that he disregarded the SCAO counsel's perspective that a lower settlement amount would have been appropriate.

Based on the totality of the circumstances, the OSA concludes that there is at least some evidence of occupational fraud, apparently illegal transactions, and/or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property in connection with SCAO Employee #1's settlement agreement that would require a report to law enforcement as it concerns SCAO Employee #1, Mr. Brown, Ms. Masias, and Mr. Ryan.

Mindy Masias

In August 2018, Ms. Masias became the subject of an SCAO investigation that resulted in her negotiating a resignation agreement, through which she received $19,400 in paid administrative leave based on her annual salary and stayed employed through March 19, 2019. Although witnesses provided differing versions of how the agreement was reached and what influencing factors may have been present, the total amount paid under the agreement does not appear to be outside the bounds of reasonableness. Based on the totality of the circumstances, the OSA did not find evidence of occupational fraud, apparently illegal transactions, and/or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property that would require a report to law enforcement on the issue of paid administrative leave for Ms. Masias.

¹ The Judicial Branch reported to us that it is not authorized to disclose the name of the employee and/or the circumstances of the employee's separation from the Branch.

David Kribs

In March 2019, Mr. Kribs became the subject of an SCAO investigation and was placed on paid administrative leave. Mr. Kribs chose to participate in the SCAO's Voluntary Separation Incentive Program and negotiated an Agreement for Voluntary Layoff and Release of Claims. According to this agreement, Mr. Kribs received $87,400 in paid administrative leave through September 30, 2019. Sources speculated that the timing of the SCAO's investigation of Mr. Kribs in relation to Ms. Masias's departure from SCAO employment created an impression that the two events could have been connected, but the OSA did not find evidence to corroborate this theory. Based on the totality of the circumstances, the OSA did not find evidence of occupational fraud, apparently illegal transactions, and/or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property that would require a report to law enforcement on the issue of paid administrative leave for Mr. Kribs.

Leadership Training Contract

Ms. Masias ended her employment with the SCAO on March 19, 2019. Twenty days later, Ms. Masias signed a contract between the Judicial Branch and her company, The Leadership Practice, to provide leadership training. The OSA reviewed evidence associated with each phase of the procurement and contracting process that resulted in this contract.

First, the OSA found that Ms. Masias had access to potentially damaging information about the Judicial Branch. This information included notes about alleged sexual misconduct, discrimination, and other misconduct by Judicial Branch staff and judges. Additionally, there is evidence that Ms. Masias secretly recorded her conversation with former Chief Justice Nancy Rice, which included a discussion about why Ms. Masias was not selected to be State Court Administrator when she applied for that job.

Second, the OSA found evidence that before Ms. Masias resigned, and while Ms. Masias was the subject of an SCAO investigation, Mr. Ryan reviewed proposed revisions to Ms. Masias's job description that would have made her head of the Judicial Branch's leadership training. In addition, multiple sources described two meetings in December 2018 and/or January 2019 (before Ms. Masias resigned) during which Judicial Branch staff discussed the possibility of contracting with Ms. Masias to provide leadership training.

Third, the OSA found some evidence that Ms. Masias requested the promise of a contract before resigning. However, the OSA did not obtain evidence that Ms. Masias was promised a contract for such services prior to her signing a Resignation Agreement and Release of Claims. Further, the contract has since been terminated, and as of the date this report was published, Ms. Masias had not received any public funds for services rendered under the contract. Additionally, the Judicial Branch has taken the position that it will not voluntarily pay any outstanding invoices.

Still, the process by which Ms. Masias was awarded the sole source contract for leadership training appears to have been flawed in several respects.

Solicitation Phase

The SCAO prepared an RFP to secure leadership training services. There is evidence that Mr. Brown was initially involved with drafting an RFP for leadership training services despite having a potential conflict of interest because of a personal relationship he had with Ms. Masias. In addition, there is some evidence that Mr. Brown sought to influence the RFP process in a way that would ensure Ms. Masias would receive the leadership training contract, including by inserting experience requirements that were restrictive enough to preclude any other vendors from submitting bids. There is also evidence that Mr. Brown shared information with Ms. Masias that may have conferred an advantage to her and that she may have used to inform the proposal she submitted in March 2019 to provide leadership training. Additionally, there appear to be lapses in the process, sufficient to suggest that Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown were attempting to influence the process in Ms. Masias's favor.

Although 24 prospective bidders viewed the solicitation summary online and eight vendors downloaded the solicitation documents, the Judicial Branch did not receive any proposals in response to its RFP. Three of the vendors reported that they did not submit proposals because the experience requirements were too restrictive, and two vendors reported that they did not submit proposals because the RFP seemed to be tailored for another firm.

Award Phase & Sole Source Justification

The Judicial Branch never reissued the RFP after it closed without bids. Instead, the Judicial Branch proceeded with a sole source contract to Ms. Masias.

Judicial Branch Purchasing Fiscal Rule 2.3 allows sole source purchases “when there is only one product or service that will meet the Department’s need and there is only one vendor to provide that product or service.” However, there is evidence that Mr. Brown began contemplating and discussing the idea of entering into a sole source contract with Ms. Masias before the RFP was issued. The sole source justification, which Mr. Brown drafted, and Mr. Ryan approved, did not address why only Ms. Masias could meet the Judicial Branch’s needs, nor did it explain why other available training vendors were not suitable to provide that service.

Further, Ms. Masias signed a contract to provide leadership training services 20 days after her resignation. Shortly thereafter she began providing services under the contract, which had an initial term of 5 years (June 3, 2019 through March 31, 2024) and was valued at $2.75 million (up to $550,000 per year).

Post-Award and Administration Phase

The evidence indicates that, although Chief Justice Coats participated in an earlier meeting to discuss preparing an RFP for leadership training services, it was not until July 2019 that he learned of Ms. Masias's secret recording of former Chief Justice Rice, and of the conversations about a possible sole source contract with Ms. Masias. At that point, after consulting with the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Coats recommended that the Judicial Branch withdraw from the sole source contract.

Soon thereafter, the Judicial Branch notified Ms. Masias that it was terminating her contract. The termination was effective August 19, 2019. By then, Ms. Masias had already submitted two invoices totaling $133,000. The first invoice was for services rendered April 15, 2019 through June 30, 2019. The second invoice was for services rendered July 1, 2019 through July 15, 2019. The Judicial Branch provided two signed versions of the same contract, one that Mr. Ryan signed on April 11, 2019, and a second that Mr. Ryan signed on June 3, 2019. A legal analysis as to the Judicial Branch's contractual obligations and resulting liability was beyond the scope of the OSA's investigation and report, but if the April 11, 2019 contract is operable and binding, the Judicial Branch may have some outstanding liability for services rendered.

Based on the totality of the circumstances, there is at least some evidence of occupational fraud, apparently illegal transactions, and/or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property in connection with Mr. Brown's and Ms. Masias's apparent attempt to influence the RFP, sole source contract, and related processes in favor of Ms. Masias, and ultimately resulting in the award of a sole source contract to Ms. Masias. The evidence requires a report to law enforcement with respect to Mr. Brown and Ms. Masias. The OSA does not take a position on whether any fiscal or procurement rules were violated in connection with the RFP and/or contract. Additionally, the OSA does not take a position with respect to any ethical or code of conduct issues raised by the facts uncovered during the OSA's investigation. Instead, the OSA considered only whether a report to law enforcement would be required under the circumstances.

Law Enforcement Report

Section, 2-3-110.5(3)(c)(IV), C.R.S., states that if an investigation of a Hotline allegation "finds evidence of apparently illegal transactions or misuse or embezzlement of public funds or property," the State Auditor is required to report the matter to a law enforcement agency, a district attorney, or the Attorney General, as appropriate. Based on the evidence we obtained, the OSA has concluded that a report to law enforcement is required.

INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION INTO THE LEADERSHIP SERVICES CONTRACT AWARDED BY THE COLORADO JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT TO THE LEADERSHIP PRACTICE LLC,
June 22, 2022.

STATEMENT FROM CHIEF JUSTICE BRIAN D. BOATRIGHT REGARDING INVESTIGATION INTO LEADERSHIP SERVICES CONTRACT

Last year, the Colorado Supreme Court initiated an independent investigation into highly-publicized allegations that a training services contract was improperly awarded to former senior administrator Mindy Masias to prevent her from disclosing alleged misconduct within the Colorado Judicial Department.

A special committee of leaders from the executive and legislative branches selected RCT, Ltd. to conduct this investigation. No one from the Judicial Department participated in the selection of RCT, which is led by former U.S. Attorney for the District of Colorado Robert Troyer. RCT operated independently of the Department, and the Department did not have any say or control in the investigation process or in the findings of the investigation.

Today, we make public RCT's full, unredacted investigation report. The report is available here. <https://www.courts.state.co.us/announcements/LeadershipServicesContract.cfm>

(A separate independent investigation into allegations of harassment and discrimination is forthcoming, and we look forward to also sharing those results soon.)

Below I have spotlighted the investigation's most important findings relative to the public allegations, controversies, and speculations that have revolved around these events for more than a year. But I urge everyone with an interest in the Department's future to read the report in full.

What the RCT Investigation Found: The Contract Was Not Awarded to Prevent Disclosure of Allegations of Judicial Misconduct

Contrary to allegations made and repeated in news media coverage, Troyer and his investigators concluded that the contract was not a "payoff" to silence Masias from filing a discrimination lawsuit or revealing supposed evidence of judicial misconduct:

From Report Page 43: "Of all the evidence we obtained, only one witness ([former State Court Administrator Chris] Ryan) asserts that the Contract was approved to hide misconduct. Yet, there is overwhelming countervailing evidence, and Ryan's assertions are internally inconsistent and contrary to his own behavior. Most importantly, [former Chief Justice]

Coats had already tentatively agreed with the proposal to contract with Masias at least three months before [former Human Resources Director Eric] Brown presented the alleged “dirt” in his talking-points list. Therefore, we conclude that the “dirt” did not motivate Coats’s thinking at that time.”

The report also provides important clarity to the nature and role of the alleged “memo” outlining Masias’ purported knowledge of misconduct:

From Report Page 19 – “Further, at no time did Brown or Ryan provide or even suggest that they possessed a document purporting to detail “dirt” about the Department. In fact, both Brown and Ryan did possess such a document. Indeed, Brown authored that document prior to the meeting [with Coats] at Ryan’s request. The document is not truly a ‘memo,’ as it has been publicly characterized. It is better characterized as a list of talking points... Neither Morrison, Coats, nor Rottman ever saw a copy of Brown’s talking points until July 2019 [after Ryan’s resignation].”

That said, the report is appropriately critical of the Leadership Services Contract, the environment that facilitated it, and the process by which it was awarded. We acknowledge and accept those findings. It is important to note here that the contract was cancelled in July 2019, and the Department made no payments under the contract.

The report concludes that the awarding of the contract was driven by three key factors:

From Report Page 6 – “... First, the internal culture of SCAO was characterized by toxic relationships, factionalism, and a lack of accountability for key leaders in the Department. Second, the Department’s procurement rules were overly permissive and did not sufficiently deter procurement misconduct, including the unethical behavior demonstrated (as we explain below) in the approval of the Contract. Third, several Department leaders made critical errors in judgment or engaged in outright misconduct.”

Of former Chief Justice Coats, the report finds:

From Report Page 46 – “Coats was misled, and his judgment failed him on other fronts, but he did not approve the Contract to silence Masias.”

Regarding Ryan's actions related to Masias and the Contract, RCT finds:

From Report Page 48-49 – “Ryan was liked and trusted in his former position at the Department. But he was relatively new to the SCA job, felt he had no alliances at the SCAO, and had no past leadership experience in this environment under these pressures. He recognized the deep cultural flaws he inherited at the SCAO. He also likely felt alone, vulnerable, and ill-equipped to fix the underlying problems with SCAO personnel and culture. Justices detached from administrative and personnel matters had selected him without a fair process and left him to deal with managing Masias. He misjudged that a contract with Masias would solve the problem, and he chose the worst of the tactics common in that culture to get the Contract approved.

Specifically, over the next nine months, Ryan adopted a “keep your friends close and your enemies closer” relationship with Brown. He [Ryan] controlled information. He lied to Coats about Masias’s history of reimbursement misconduct. He lied to Coats about the justification for a sole-source contract. He helped remove the Director of Financial Services because he was an obstacle to [the Masias] Contract approval. He lied about signing the Contract in April 2019. He hid Masias’s surreptitious recording of [former Chief Justice] Rice from Coats and [the Chief Justice’s counsel, Andrew] Rottman. He lied to SCAO legal staff about Coats’s knowledge of that recording, telling one lawyer he had told Coats about the recording and telling another he had not told Coats because Coats did not want to know. He intimidated [SCAO Chief Legal Counsel, Terri] Morrison so she would not interfere with his plans. Ryan thus gradually built an increasingly fragile edifice of deceptions that eventually imploded.”

As for Masias and Brown, the investigation report states:

From Report Page 49 – “Masias and Brown made their own misjudgments and engaged in their own misconduct. Their misconduct, though, was more clearly driven by self-interest than was Ryan’s.”

There is no way to sugarcoat the uncomfortable findings of RCT's investigation. However, with new leadership throughout the SCAO since these events, I believe that we have made significant progress in addressing many of the issues that the report identifies.

But we obviously still have plenty of work to do.

Where Do We Go From Here?

Noting that the Judicial Branch has already made substantial improvements over the last year, RCT provides 14 “actionable recommendations,” divided into six categories:

From Report Page 54 -- “(1) Changing the SCAO’s Organizational Culture, (2) Enhancing Oversight of the SCAO, (3) Properly Preparing the Chief Justice, (4) Improving the Complaint Process for Judicial Officers, (5) Procurement Reform, and (6) Ongoing Transparency and Accountability.”

We are already evaluating how best to implement these recommendations to ensure an organizational culture of professionalism, accountability and transparency worthy of the thousands of hard-working and dedicated people of our Branch who serve the public so effectively on a daily basis.

One recommendation to “improve the legitimacy of the process for handling complaints” is not uniquely specific to the Masias contract award investigation, but certainly underscores a key aspect of the culture that allowed this fraud and abuse at SCAO to occur:

From Report Page 61 -- “While the Court now has internal rules that address complaint handling, they are vague, and to this day insufficiently specific about how complaints are received, triaged, investigated, tracked, and when complaints are referred to other investigative entities (or not).”

In February 2021, I told the legislature that the Branch faces a crisis of confidence in leadership, and I committed to changing the culture for the better. We know now that just having the processes to hold institutions and people accountable, including at the highest levels, isn’t enough.

Our judges and their staff, probation departments, the broader legal community, elected officials, regulators and Coloradans who rely on our system of justice must know — or be able to know — how the Judicial Branch ensures accountability to its mission and deals with misconduct. This is a critical priority going forward.

To these ends, I want to summarize some of the key governance, oversight, and accountability initiatives that we have begun to implement over the last year:

- We have put in place and continue to enhance new channels for Judicial Department employees to share complaints and report misconduct.
- We changed how we hire the State Court Administrator (SCA) by engaging in a much more transparent process, including town hall meetings and soliciting feedback from all employees throughout the state.
- We are working with the Colorado legislature to evaluate and support effective, efficient reforms in the judicial disciplinary system.
- We've changed our internal processes so that the Colorado Supreme Court functions more as a Judicial Branch "Board of Directors," rather than continuing the previously longstanding practice of having the Chief Justice alone involved in helping to administer the entire Judicial Department, while still discharging the ordinary responsibilities of a member of the state's highest court.
 - In this regard, each justice is now assigned to a major operational area of the Department (Financial Services, Court Services, Probation Services, HR, IT, etc.), with the justice sitting on the advisory committee for that operational area. Through this direct engagement with SCAO staff, the full court now collaborates on many critical administrative issues.
- We are developing a formal executive management and administration training plan for the incoming Chief Justice.
- In May and November 2020, we updated Judicial Department rules to address independent contractor and sole-source contracting challenges. Key changes included:
 - A mandatory six-month waiting period between an employee's date of separation from the Judicial Department and the date when the former employee is eligible to provide services as an independent contractor (a period of time that we are prepared to lengthen).

- Increased rigor around the use of sole-source contracts.
 - All sole-source procurements above discretionary purchasing thresholds must be coordinated by the Financial Services Division at SCAO.
 - The Financial Services Division's procurement team is required to analyze sole-source procurement requests and provide recommendations to the SCA.
 - Potential sole-source procurements are now required to be posted on a public electronic bid system utilized by the state. If a qualified vendor, other than the intended sole source provider, responds, then the procurement team will recommend a competitive procurement process be used.
 - Quarterly reporting of sole-source contracts by the SCA to the Chief Justice is now required.
- Procurement rules have been overhauled to be more in line with executive-branch procurement procedures.
- The SCA now reports monthly to the Chief Justice on every contract executed by the SCA.

We recognize that these initiatives are just the beginning and that we have much more to do.

As I said in my State of the Judiciary Address, we are fully committed to getting this right, and with your help, I am confident that we will do so. I will certainly keep you apprised of our ongoing efforts.

In the meantime, we thank RCT for its hard work and professionalism in conducting its comprehensive investigation.

Introduction

The Colorado Judicial Department (“Department”) is one of three branches of Colorado’s government. The Department administers state courts in 24 judicial districts spread across Colorado. Each year, those courts resolve tens of thousands of small-scale controversies that affect individual litigants, as well as large-scale, precedent-setting disputes that deeply impact residents across the entire state.

The Department’s mission is to provide a “fair and impartial system of justice.” As such, its greatest asset is its credibility. The collective trust of Colorado residents is premised on our belief that the courts, and the Department as a whole, are administered with fairness and the public good as their highest goals. Thus, while allegations of corruption, self-dealing, and cover-up are problematic in any organ of government, they are particularly damaging when they arise within the Department.

Mindy Masias worked for the Department for many years, ultimately serving as Chief of Staff in the State Court Administrator’s Office (“SCAO”), which administers the state courts. In March 2019, Masias resigned under threat of termination for dishonesty and financial misconduct, which we discuss more fully below. Within three weeks thereafter, she received a sole-source, five-year contract from the Department to provide training to Judicial employees statewide at a cost of $532,000 per year (“Contract”).

Initially, only insiders were aware of the Contract, but soon residents of Colorado learned about it through a series of news reports. These reports alleged, in summary, that the Department awarded the Contract to Masias in exchange for her agreement not to reveal information that might damage the Department, including allegations of sexual harassment and other rule violations by judges and senior Department staff. Following those reports, public officials, including the Chief Justice of the Colorado Supreme Court, as well as Colorado's Governor, its Attorney General, and members of its legislature, called for or supported an independent investigation. In October 2021, we were retained to conduct that investigation. Specifically, we were asked to determine "whether the contract was awarded to prevent disclosure of alleged misconduct at the Department." Further, we were asked to review "management practices that were used to inform the handling of these events, including, but not limited to, procurement processes and oversight."

Today, through this report, we share our conclusions. First, the internal culture of the SCAO was characterized by toxic relationships, factionalism, and a lack of accountability for key leaders. Second, the Department's procurement rules were overly permissive and did not sufficiently deter procurement misconduct, including the unethical behavior demonstrated (as we explain below) in the approval of the Contract. Third, several Department leaders made critical errors in judgment or engaged in outright misconduct. However, the evidence also demonstrates that the Contract was not awarded to prevent the disclosure of allegations of judicial misconduct, as has been publicly alleged.

The Department has already taken steps to address some of these issues. But there is much more work to be done. At the conclusion of this Report, we provide fourteen actionable recommendations for changes the Department should make to correct the conditions discussed herein. We also strongly recommend that the Department commit to regular public reporting about the specific steps it takes and its progress in implementing these recommendations. Only through purposeful and transparent leadership from the Colorado Supreme Court can the Department -- a vital component of our state government -- regain the public trust.

Methodology

During this investigation, we interviewed 27 current and former employees of the Department, including all sitting (and some retired) Justices of the Colorado Supreme Court, as well as Department leaders and subordinate employees. We also sought, received, and reviewed over ten thousand records from Department officials. The Department was transparent and open throughout this process, and it produced the information we sought.

Most individuals willingly cooperated with the investigation. However, in February 2022, the Office of the Colorado State Auditor (“OSA”) released the results of its own audit. Among other things, the OSA referred three former Department employees -- Chris Ryan (former State Court Administrator), Mindy Masias (former Chief of Staff), and Eric Brown (former Director of Human Resources) -- for criminal investigation. Although Ryan had twice given extensive accounts to the press concerning the Contract and had been interviewed by the OSA about the same subject, after the OSA released its report Ryan declined our request for an interview. Nonetheless, we have reviewed all of his statements to the media and his interviews with the OSA. Masias and Brown also declined to cooperate with this investigation. We were therefore not able to obtain their first-hand accounts or question them about their roles in approving or obtaining the Contract.

The thousands of documents we reviewed included internal and external emails, policies and procedures, procurement and budget records, notes and memoranda, employment records, and other related material. During our investigation, however, we learned that Masias’s laptop, which she used for her work on behalf of the Department, was “wiped” (likely by Masias or Brown) when she went on leave from the Department. Thus, data previously stored there was inaccessible to us despite forensic attempts to recover it. As discussed below, we also discovered that Masias and Brown commonly used personal email accounts to avoid Department scrutiny of their communications. We did not have access to those personal email accounts.

Despite these limitations, we have full confidence in our core conclusions and the recommendations set forth herein for the simple reason that they are supported by numerous and diverse sources of corroborating and uncontroverted evidence, both testimonial and documentary.

Factual Summary

We begin with an overview of key facts regarding the Department, its relevant employees, and the circumstances surrounding approval of the Contract. The powers of Colorado’s government are divided into three distinct departments: legislative, executive, and judicial. The Judicial Department employs over 4,000 people. The Colorado Supreme Court has “general superintending control” over all the Department courts, and the Chief Justice of the Colorado Supreme Court is “the executive head of the judicial system.” (Colo. Const. art. VI, §5(2) (1876).) The Justices of the Colorado Supreme Court appoint one from among their ranks to serve as Chief Justice. (Id.) The Chief Justice has a Counsel to the Chief Justice, a Department employee who serves as an advisor and executive strategist to the Chief Justice on legal, policy, and administrative matters. The Justices also appoint a State Court Administrator (“SCA”) to aid the administration “of all courts within the Judicial Department.” (Id. at §5(3); §13-3-101, C.R.S. (2021).) The SCA is responsible to the Colorado Supreme Court and serves at its pleasure. (§13-3-101, C.R.S.) The SCA leads the SCAO, which resides within and provides central administrative infrastructure services to the Department.

The SCA oversees all administrative responsibilities associated with the courts and probation for the Department. In other words, the SCA is responsible for implementing and enforcing the rules and policies of the Colorado Supreme Court as they apply to court administration. In 2018, the SCA had a Chief of Staff, who was the second-in-command at the SCAO.

The SCAO is organized into five Divisions, each of which is headed by a Director: Court Services, Financial Services, Information Technology Services, Probation Services, and Human Resources. The SCAO also has a “Legal Counsel Unit” staffed by seven attorneys. That unit reviews and drafts contracts, handles personnel matters, provides counsel on legislative issues, and generally provides legal advice to Department personnel. The Legal Counsel Unit is led by the Judicial Legal Counsel, who serves as in-house counsel to the Department and reports directly to the SCA. The Judicial Legal Counsel is not a “Division Director” but is a member of the SCAO’s senior management team and provides legal advice to Department personnel.

Ryan’s Selection as SCA

In late 2016, the then-SCA, Jerry Marroney, announced his intent to retire in June 2017; therefore, in March 2017 the Colorado Supreme Court began the process of selecting a new SCA. The Court engaged the National Center for State Courts to conduct a nationwide search. Applicants identified and screened in that search were interviewed by a selection committee comprised of Department personnel. That committee narrowed applicants to a group of four finalists who would be interviewed by the Supreme Court. Eric Brown, who was the SCAO’s Director of Human Resources, was a member of that selection committee. Chris Ryan, who at the time was the Clerk of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals, was a member of that selection committee. Ryan was not an applicant for the SCA job. Mindy Masias, who at the time was the SCA’s Chief of Staff, did apply for the SCA job, and she was chosen as a finalist.¹

Masias had been a Judicial Department employee since 1995. She rose to Director of Human Resources in 2004, and in June 2014 Marroney promoted her to Chief of Staff. In May 2017, the Supreme Court Justices decided not to select any of the four finalists for the SCA job and instead appointed Ryan as interim SCA. Several months later, in September 2017, the Justices decided to advance Ryan from interim to permanent SCA without engaging in another selection process. Masias remained in her SCA Chief of Staff position but now served under Ryan, her new boss. At least one Justice emphasized to Ryan that establishing a good working relationship with Masias should be one of his top priorities as new SCA because she likely would be stung by his selection for the SCA job outside the open hiring process she had endured -- and because she was an important leader within the SCAO and the Department.

Ten months later, on July 18, 2018, Justice Nathan “Ben” Coats was appointed by his colleagues to serve as Chief Justice. Numerous Department personnel have shared that at the time of his appointment a dysfunctional organizational culture existed within the SCAO that involved feuding, secrecy, retaliation, and fear, particularly between the Human Resources and Financial Services Divisions. Moreover, the Supreme Court did not actively supervise the SCAO and generally relied upon the SCA to oversee the SCAO. As a result, the Justices, including newly appointed Chief Justice Coats, were unaware of the toxic organizational culture within the SCAO.

Shortly after his appointment as Chief Justice, Coats attended a multi-day leadership training program provided by a vendor (who had been under contract to provide such training to Department employees since 2009). This training did not address the administrative responsibilities of a Chief Justice, such as managing a large budget or staff. In fact, Coats did not receive any training to handle his new administrative responsibilities as Chief Justice, the “executive head of the judicial system.” (Colo. Const. art. IV, §5(2).) Ryan had participated in this leadership training several times before, and he attended it again alongside Coats. During and after the training, Ryan and Coats began to discuss their visions for a different, revamped leadership training program more tailored to the specific needs of the Department once the existing training contracts ended in about a year.

Masias's Falsified Reimbursement Request

The same week Coats was appointed Chief Justice, a dispute arose over a $161.82 reimbursement request Masias had submitted for two shag bean-bag chairs she had been approved to purchase as employee-appreciation gifts. Masias was entitled to reimbursement, but she submitted her request for the wrong fiscal year. Instead of correcting her error when it was pointed out to her, Masias falsified the date on the supporting paperwork and resubmitted it. When the Financial Services Division caught the falsification, Masias was repeatedly dishonest with Department personnel and an independent investigator who was hired by the Department. This reimbursement matter caused longstanding rancor between Masias and certain personnel in the Financial Services Division to boil to the surface.

Also at this time, the OSA was conducting its statewide audit, which included a routine audit of financial operations and controls within the Department. Top Financial Services Division personnel insisted to Ryan and Coats that unless Masias were terminated for her misconduct, they could not sign the Management Representation Letter required to pass that audit. Financial Services Division personnel also told Ryan and Coats that without that Management Representation Letter certifying the Department's financial controls as sound, the high bond rating for the entire State of Colorado could be jeopardized.

Ryan and Coats were reluctant to terminate Masias but believed that their options were limited because the Department needed a signed Management Representation Letter. They were also concerned about the optics of terminating the highest-ranking female employee at the SCAO, who had also recently been denied the SCA position. Masias was well-regarded in many of the Department's 24 judicial districts. Both Ryan and Coats therefore preferred demoting Masias for her dishonesty, placing her in a position to oversee leadership training, and removing her spending and signature authorities. They sought guidance from the OSA to determine if this approach would satisfy the auditors. But the OSA would not provide such advice, and the SCAO's Financial Services Division leaders remained adamant that Masias must be terminated for her intentionally deceptive behavior, which violated the Department's fiscal and personnel rules.

Therefore, in October 2018, Coats and Ryan began to discuss allowing Masias to resign or terminating her if she chose not to. Ryan also suggested that if Masias chose to resign they might be able to bring her back to the Department on a contract to create a new leadership training program. Coats indicated that if Ryan investigated and found no other misconduct by Masias, and she resigned, the Department would consider contracting with her to perform leadership training. Coats explained this approach to the other Justices, and none objected.

To determine whether Masias had engaged in any other misconduct, Coats directed Ryan to audit the reimbursement compliance histories of all the SCAO Directors and compare them to Masias's history. Ryan agreed to do so and also mentioned to Coats the possibility of doing a "sole-source" contract with Masias, meaning that the Department would not publicly solicit bids but instead contract with Masias without first considering other possible vendors. Coats did not accept or reject this idea at that time. Instead, he simply directed Ryan to ensure that any contract with Masias would be done "above board," and "by the book," in full compliance with Department rules.

After Coats and Ryan discussed the "resignation and contract" idea, on November 7, 2018, Ryan notified Masias that she could voluntarily resign from the Department before November 14th or she would be terminated on November 15th. On November 9th, Masias instead filed for leave and protection under the Family Medical Leave Act. On November 12th, Ryan approved her for 12 weeks of leave. Once Ryan approved her leave, Masias was paid her salary and protected from termination until February 2019. In November 2018, SCAO legal staff began to arrange for termination or negotiate a resignation agreement with Masias's counsel. But they received no meaningful response from Masias's counsel until February 2019. The day after delivering Masias's termination/resignation notice to her, Ryan notified the Director of Financial Services to "watch out because HR will be coming for you."

The Existing Leadership Training Contracts

The Department began developing its leadership training program in 2006, and in 2009 two vendors began delivering leadership training. From 2012 to 2015, their contracts were entered on a sole-source basis, without any public bidding. The 2012 "Sole Source Determination" memo documenting this decision was superficial and provided no basis for doing these contracts with a sole source; instead, it simply stated that the vendors were qualified. In 2015, the Department engaged in a public-bidding process for leadership trainers, received three bids, and selected the same vendors the Department had been using since 2009. Without another public-bidding process, the Department continued to enter into one-year contracts with those same vendors for several more years. In the spring and summer of 2018, before the Masias reimbursement dispute and before Coats was appointed Chief Justice, Brown, Masias, and Ryan were already discussing the need to revitalize the Department's leadership training and to conduct a public-bidding process to find new vendors. Subsequent actions and discussions regarding a training contract with Masias unfolded against that historical backdrop.

Initial Efforts by Brown to Secure a Contract for Masias

On November 30, 2018, Brown obtained data from his staff about past and current training-vendor costs and Department budgets for training. That same day, he also sent to Ryan, "per our discussion," the Sole Source Determination memo from 2012 related to the Department's current training vendors. These are among the first of many actions Brown took to help secure a sole-source contract for Masias. The exact nature of Masias and Brown's relationship is beyond the scope of this investigation except to the extent it damaged Department culture, shaped various parties' motivations and intentions regarding the Contract, and informs our recommendations for necessary improvements. Their relationship was viewed universally at the Department as blatantly and inappropriately close for professional colleagues. Brown prioritized Masias's interests over those of the Department itself. He was considered untrustworthy and even dishonest when it came to matters involving Masias. For example, during the SCA hiring process in the spring of 2017, Department personnel involved in the interviews chose not to share draft interview questions with Brown (a selection committee member) for fear he would share them with Masias before her interview.

In addition, while employed by the Department and with Department approval, Masias and Brown had for years worked together providing outside, paid consulting services for other entities. They also regularly discussed their future plans to work together as consultants after leaving the Department. Moreover, from the time Masias left, Brown repeatedly told others at the SCAO that he was making every effort to get Masias back working with the Department. One interviewee observed that Brown remained "obsessed" with that goal from November 2018 until March 2019.

It is noteworthy that Brown sent Masias information about current and past training vendor costs on November 5th, two days before she received her termination/resignation notice. And on December 3, 2018, Brown emailed the training cost and budget information he had obtained from staff to his personal email account.

Department Meetings about a Potential Contract with Masias

On December 14, 2018, Coats, Andy Rottman (Counsel to the Chief Justice), Ryan, and Brown met and discussed the possibility of contracting with Masias if she decided to resign at the end of her leave. Brown claimed that Masias was being treated unfairly, and Ryan or Brown suggested that she could be a sole-source contractor to handle the Department's leadership training program. Coats reiterated that any contracting process must be done in full compliance with Department rules. Ryan told Coats that he would work with SCAO legal and procurement staff to ensure compliance.

During this meeting, Ryan also assured Coats that a review of Masias's reimbursement compliance history revealed only a few minor irregularities, nothing more than other SCAO Directors had. This was false. Ryan never had the reimbursement histories of the Directors audited. Instead, Ryan had requested and received a written report from SCAO audit staff examining Masias's reimbursement requests only. Contrary to what Ryan told Coats, that audit revealed that from 2016 to 2018, Masias had failed to comply with the Department's reimbursement rules in 100% of her requests. The audit showed 44 errors or irregularities in her requests, and a conclusive pattern of Masias disregarding the Department's fiscal rules and (as a result) receiving overpayments totaling $726. Ryan did not tell Coats or Rottman any of this. Nor did he inform either of them there was a written audit report documenting these irregularities.

Based on Brown's singular advocacy for Masias at this December 14th meeting, Coats and Rottman were concerned that he was communicating with Masias; therefore, later that day Coats called Ryan and directed him to instruct Brown not to talk to Masias about her separation or make any commitments to her about a contract with the Department. Ryan agreed to do so.

On approximately December 22, 2018, Brown called Ryan to tell him that Masias was very angry and was threatening to sue the Department because her separation was not being handled as it would be for a male employee. Brown also told Ryan that Masias was threatening to make public over 20 years of “dirt” on the Department. In response, Ryan convened a meeting on December 26, 2018, with Brown and the Department’s Judicial Legal Counsel, Terri Morrison, to discuss Masias’s alleged threats. Before that meeting, Ryan instructed Brown to document what Masias had told him. At the meeting Brown described some of the “dirt” to Morrison and Ryan, including past allegations of sexual harassment by judges and Department staff. Brown also told them that in May of 2017 Masias had surreptitiously recorded a conversation she had with then-Chief Justice Nancy Rice in which Rice appeared to confirm Masias did not get the SCA job, at least in part, because of her gender.

Brown claimed that Masias intended to sue the Department for discrimination. Brown and Ryan told Morrison that in order to avoid a lawsuit and prevent the public revelation of this “dirt,” the Department needed to secure a leadership training contract for Masias. Morrison objected and was shocked to learn that Masias had breached the Department’s trust by surreptitiously recording Rice. But she was adamant that none of this was a proper reason to contract with Masias. After the meeting Morrison also told Ryan that for several reasons Masias’s threat was empty and she did not have a valid gender-discrimination claim. Ryan appeared to ignore Morrison’s advice.

Numerous times over the ensuing months, Morrison implored Ryan to tell Coats about Masias’s surreptitious recording of Rice. Each time, without further explanation or patience for discussion of the topic, Ryan told Morrison that “the Chief doesn’t want to know.” Morrison deliberated about whether to tell Coats herself, but she feared that Ryan would fire her for “going over his head.” Ryan also lied about this issue to other Legal Counsel Unit staff, stating that he had informed Coats about the surreptitious recording. He had done no such thing.

Soon after the December 26th meeting, sometime in late December 2018 or early January 2019, Ryan and Brown went to meet with Coats and Rottman. Ryan has asserted that he convened the meeting to inform Coats and Rottman about Masias's threat to sue and reveal "dirt." Coats and Rottman did not know this was the meeting's purpose; they understood only that Ryan and Brown would report on the status of "the Mindy situation." There was no written agenda, and no documents were distributed. Instead, Brown simply launched into a description of long-past incidents of alleged misconduct within the Department of which Masias was aware. Brown did not present these as issues that needed attention, just as information Masias possessed. It was not clear whether Brown was reading from a document when he presented this information.

Rottman and Coats were unsure what Brown's point was in describing these incidents, and they grew impatient. After several minutes, Brown stopped and asked Coats if he should continue. Coats turned to Ryan and asked, "Do I need to hear more of this?" Ryan simply looked sheepish, shrugged, and may have said something akin to, "Up to you, Chief," whereupon Coats told Brown to stop. Coats then asked where they were with the Masias contract idea that had been under discussion for almost three months. He also asked about Masias's health. In addition, Coats stated that (1) he did not care what "dirt" Masias had about the Department, (2) the Department was not going to make any concessions to her about the termination, and (3) neither he nor the Department was trying to do anything to harm Masias.

Ryan reiterated that a training contract with Masias was in the best interests of the Department, and that it was essential to the SCAO's success and his plans to reorganize the SCAO. Coats authorized Ryan to pursue a contract. As he had done earlier, Coats told Ryan to proceed "by the book." At no time during this meeting did Brown or Ryan tell Coats or Rottman that Masias had surreptitiously recorded Rice. At no time did they indicate Masias was threatening to sue, claiming discrimination, making any other claim or demand, seeking a settlement, or demanding a contract (which had already been in discussion for months) in exchange for an agreement not to reveal “dirt” about the Department. After Ryan and Brown left the meeting, Coats told Rottman that if they were going to explore a contract with Masias they were not going to consider any of the information that Brown had detailed.

Further, at no time did Brown or Ryan provide or even suggest that they possessed a document purporting to detail “dirt” about the Department. In fact, both Brown and Ryan did possess such a document. Indeed, Brown authored that document prior to the meeting at Ryan’s request. The document is not truly a “memo,” as it has been publicly described. It is better characterized as a list of talking points. It is undated, has no subject line, and is not to or from anyone. Without organization or introduction, it begins midstream with an incomplete sentence defending Masias in the reimbursement dispute. Then, under headings that do not always match the contents, it purports to list past examples of standards and rules not being applied to judges and senior staff at the Department, past examples of alleged harassment at the Department, and unattributed quotes that suggest Masias was not chosen for the SCA job because she was a woman. Neither Morrison, Coats, nor Rottman ever saw a copy of Brown’s talking points until July 2019.²

The RFP for Leadership Training

After this meeting, from January to April 2019, Ryan, Brown, and Morrison took steps to secure a training contract with Masias. At the end of the day on January 18, 2019, Brown summoned the SCAO's Procurement Manager, John Kane, into Brown's office. When Kane arrived, Brown began by telling him that Coats and Ryan no longer wanted to work with the Department's current leadership training vendors and instead wanted to contract for leadership training with a retired judge. This was false; Coats had never said this. Brown also told Kane that they wanted to do a sole-source contract and that Ryan wanted Kane's approval before proceeding. Brown also instructed Kane not to tell either of his supervisors about this project. In response, Kane explained to Brown that leadership training was not appropriate for a sole-source contract.

It is important to note here that the Department is not bound by the Colorado Procurement Code (§24-101-101, et seq., C.R.S.) or the state's associated Procurement Rules. The Department's own Purchasing Fiscal Rules from April 2015 (the "Purchasing Rules") were applicable in 2018 and 2019. In accordance with the Department's Purchasing Rules, the Department was not permitted to enter into a sole-source contract unless there was only one product or service to meet the Department's need and only one vendor to provide that product or service.

Kane explained that a contract for such training could only be properly entered after publicly soliciting bids through a formal Request for Proposals ("RFP") process and selecting the best vendor from the bidders. Brown pushed back, complained, and disagreed. For example, Brown asserted they could not publish an RFP because the "retired judge" was not tech savvy and would never respond. Kane explained that this was not a proper justification for circumventing the RFP requirement. Brown eventually relented and agreed to proceed with an RFP if it were open for only three to five days. When Kane informed Brown that this would require a fiscal-rule waiver from the Director of Financial Services, Brown acquiesced to posting the RFP for the minimum period allowed without a waiver (21 days). During this discussion, Brown asked Kane to explain the Department's sole-source and RFP rules, Kane did so, and Brown appeared to understand. Kane found it unusual that Brown had instructed him to keep all this secret. Kane therefore documented the meeting and immediately informed his supervisors.

Shortly thereafter, Brown sent Kane draft language for an RFP. Morrison and Kane both reviewed Brown's draft and concluded it was far too restrictive. In particular, Brown's draft required bidders to have at least 20 years of experience with the Department. Yet, the Department's Purchasing Rules explicitly seek to foster broad-based competition, and overly restrictive qualifications in an RFP do not align with this purpose. Kane changed various parts of the draft and sent his edits to Brown. Kane was concerned that even with his changes, the RFP might still be considered too restrictive; however, he believed it would at least be similar to the RFP used in 2015 to select the existing trainers. Kane also believed that if the RFP proved too restrictive to draw bids, the Department could modify it and extend or republish it. Notably, he also knew potential bidders had the right to protest any RFP requirements they believed were unreasonable or too restrictive. (See Purchasing Rules §6.2.)

On January 28, 2019, Kane was summoned to a meeting about the RFP with Brown, Ryan, and Morrison in Ryan's office. During the meeting, Brown resisted Kane's advice to reduce the years-of-experience requirement in the RFP. Brown also argued to retain the requirement that a bidder's experience must be with the Colorado Judicial Department specifically. Kane explained why both of those requirements needed to be loosened. He specifically noted that the process would appear inept or even corrupt if those requirements were not relaxed. In other words, Kane made clear that those requirements would be the kind of bar to open bidding that the Department's Purchasing Rules prohibited.

At this meeting, Ryan listened to both Kane and Brown before directing that the RFP requirements be modified to require only five years of experience in any judicial setting. Notably, during this meeting with Brown, Ryan, and Morrison, Kane mentioned that he knew their intent was to contract with a retired judge, and no one corrected him. During this meeting, Ryan also asked Kane whether a sole-source contract had ever previously been awarded after a posted RFP failed to attract any bidders. Kane responded that this had occurred but only when a sole-source contract was independently justified. He emphasized to Ryan that a failed solicitation did not automatically justify awarding a sole-source contract.

Consistent with the agreements reached at this meeting, and with the Financial Services' Director's approval, on January 31, 2019, Kane publicly posted the RFP. The deadline for submitting bids was 22 days later. The RFP did not state a price, price range, or price cap for the training services it solicited. The RFP was indeed sharply more restrictive than the Department's 2015 RFP for leadership training. For example, the 2015 RFP stated a preference for judicial experience or experience with similar organizations. The 2019 RFP stated a requirement for judicial experience only. The 2019 RFP also contained requirements that likely would exclude the Department's longtime training vendors, and a former SCAO employee interested in bidding, from consideration. For example, bidders were required to submit three references in support of their proposals, but they were prohibited from using references from the Department itself. Further, the RFP sought only bidders who would "break from work of the past" vendors.

During the RFP's open period, Brown instructed one of his supervisees to check with Kane periodically to see if any bids were coming in, and he directed that she would be in charge of the review and selection group if any bids were to come in. By the RFP deadline, 24 individuals or companies had reviewed the solicitation, only 14 (not all of which were in the training industry) had downloaded the RFP documents, and none had submitted a bid (not even the Department's longtime training contractors). Several of those who downloaded the RFP documents did not bid because the experience requirements were too restrictive and the RFP appeared to be tailored for a specific company. Another potential bidder did not bid because the Department appeared to already have a specific contract partner in mind and a number of the RFP's requirements were too restrictive. Masias herself was prohibited from bidding because, though on leave, she was still a Department employee.

Sole-Source Contract and Resignation Negotiations

Ryan had informed Coats that the Department was going through the RFP process. When no bids were submitted, Ryan told Coats (contrary to what Kane had told Ryan) that the Department was now allowed to pursue a sole-source contract with Masias. Ryan also informed Coats that there was no prohibition on contracting with a former Department employee immediately after her resignation. This was true. Coats had no experience with RFPs, procurement, or sole-source contracting. No one at the Department, including Ryan, advised Coats or Rottman that they should review the RFP, the sole-source documents, or the decision to sole-source the Contract. Coats believed the review of these documents and decision were properly the purview of Ryan and Morrison.

After the RFP bidding closed, Morrison and Masias's attorney began to negotiate the terms of a Resignation and Release of Claims Agreement for Masias ("Resignation Agreement"). When Masias went on leave in November 2018, an SCAO attorney was assigned to handle the legal side of her resignation or termination. However, Ryan directed Morrison to personally handle the matter going forward. In Morrison's first contact with Masias's attorney, the latter expressly stated that Masias wanted a training contract in return for her agreement to resign.

Morrison made it clear that a contract would not and could not be the consideration for Masias's resignation. Thereafter, Masias's attorney dropped this request. Next Masias's attorney proposed that if Coats would meet with Masias to discuss a contract, she would sign the Resignation Agreement. Morrison rejected this proposal as well, reiterating that the Department would not offer Masias a contract in return for resigning or signing a release.

Morrison knew, however, that Ryan and Brown's goal was to secure a training contract with Masias. In fact, Ryan not only expressed that goal, he also told Morrison not to talk to anyone else about it. But Morrison also knew that a contract was not the consideration for the Resignation Agreement. So she and Masias's attorney agreed that as long as Masias signed the Resignation Agreement first, Masias could meet with Coats to make her pitch for a contract. On March 14, 2019, Brown expressed his excitement about this to Ryan, stating that they were "so close" to "getting this thing over the top!"

Masias signed the Resignation Agreement on March 15, 2019 (to take effect on March 19th), only after her contract-proposal meeting with Ryan and Coats had been agreed to and calendared for March 21, 2019, at 1pm. The primary consideration Masias received for signing the Resignation Agreement was six weeks of paid leave. Masias's attorney never once indicated to Morrison that she was threatening to file a lawsuit. In fact, though SCAO lawyers had requested one, Masias's attorney never sent them a demand letter setting forth legal claims. Nor did the Department itself proceed in a manner indicating it was settling a threatened lawsuit. The Department never received a demand letter, and the Legal Counsel Unit had concluded back in December 2018 that Masias had no valid legal claims. Tellingly, SCAO lawyers had already commenced work on a Resignation Agreement for Masias a month before Brown described to Coats and Rottman the alleged "dirt" Masias possessed. It was not until December 2020 that Coats or Rottman heard, through the media, any assertion that the Contract's purpose was to suppress a lawsuit or silence Masias.

Morrison included in the Resignation Agreement a term explicitly requiring Masias to "provide [to the Department] a copy of the recording she made of communication between herself and [former Chief Justice Rice]." Neither Ryan nor Morrison ever shared the Resignation Agreement with either Coats or Rottman.

On March 14th, the day before Masias signed the Resignation Agreement, Brown sent Ryan a draft Sole-Source Determination memo for Ryan's signature. That memo purported to set forth the justification for a sole-source contract with Masias and would, once Ryan signed it, constitute the Department's approval for entering a sole-source contract with her. That same day, March 14th, Masias formed a limited liability company ("The Leadership Practice LLC").

On March 18, 2019, three days after Masias signed the Resignation Agreement, Ryan signed it on behalf of the Department. The day after the Resignation Agreement became effective (March 19th), Brown sent a revised Sole-Source Determination memo to Ryan. The day after that, on March 21st, Masias met in person with Ryan, Rottman, and Coats and presented them with her training contract proposal. The proposal seemed to Coats to be consistent with what the Department would want from a training contractor, and he again asked Ryan if he thought this training contract was in the best interest of the Department. Ryan said that it was. Neither before, during, or after that meeting did Coats and Ryan discuss the specific price for the Contract. Coats simply (and repeatedly) instructed Ryan that the price must be "no more than we pay our current trainers." After the proposal meeting with Masias, and Ryan's affirmation that he believed the Contract was in the best interest of the Department, Coats directed Ryan to proceed with the Contract. Four days later, Ryan signed the Sole-Source Determination memo approving the Contract with Masias. In the meantime, Coats advised the other Justices that Masias had resigned and informed them of her leadership training proposal.

The Sole-Source Determination memo, though, did not comply with the Department's Purchasing Rules. The statements in the memo about Masias's qualifications were not relevant to the rules' requirements for entering a sole-source contract, and no facts satisfying those requirements were included in the memo. Rather, the memo contained the irrelevant statement that no bidders had responded to an RFP, and the conclusory claim that Masias was "the most capable" vendor available. The memo did not establish that this was the only training available to meet the needs of the Department and that Masias was the only vendor who could provide it. Based on a typo in the date of the final Sole-Source Determination memo (March 25, 2018) and the date of a prior draft (November 2018), it also appears that the memo was actually drafted months earlier, soon after Masias went on leave. Notably, the Sole-Source Determination memo also asserted that the Department had "conducted a sole-source selection process" to choose Masias for the Contract. This was false; there was no such process. Nor could there have been: only one business day elapsed between Masias's proposal meeting and Ryan signing the memo.

In addition, it appears that Brown helped Masias prepare her March 21st proposal and pitch for the Contract, which violated the spirit, if not the letter, of the Purchasing Rules section on Good Faith and Ethical Conduct. Specifically, on March 9, 2019, Brown obtained Department training-budget information for 2019 and 2020. That same day he forwarded from his Department email account to his personal email account, and then on to Masias's personal email account, extensive information about the Department's future training budgets, costs paid to the Department's longtime training contractors, and the scope of work performed by those contractors. It also appears unlikely Masias prepared her lengthy, thorough, detailed proposal and pitch for the Contract in the one business day between her resignation and the proposal meeting; therefore, it appears she prepared those materials while still a Department employee on the payroll.

The Signing of the Sole-Source Contract and its Key Terms

After signing the Sole-Source Determination memo on March 25th, Ryan emailed a copy to Masias. Within a day or two, Ryan instructed one of the SCAO lawyers to draft the Contract for Masias. Ryan also instructed that SCAO attorney to keep it secret from the Financial Services Division.

Over an eight-day period from March 29 to April 5, 2019, the SCAO attorney drafted and revised the Contract, with input from Ryan, Masias, and Rottman. There was no negotiation of the Contract price; Masias presented her price and Ryan simply accepted it. Rottman thought her price seemed high. Coats's only instruction was that it be no higher than the Department's current training vendors' price. Coats told Rottman it was Ryan's budget decision, the legislature had long before approved a large training budget for the Department, and Masias undoubtedly would have to hire and pay others to perform under the Contract. Ryan assured Coats and Rottman that Masias's price was less than the current training vendors' price. That was false; Masias's price was higher. Brown had sent Masias the current trainers' pricing information, and it appears she used that as a guide for her own pricing. But the price she chose, $532,000 per year, was slightly higher than what the Department paid its vendors in 2017 and $148,000 higher than the Department paid them in 2018. Masias's price was also $88,000 per year higher than the average annual price the Department had paid those trainers since 2015.

The SCAO staff attorney who drafted the Contract thought it was unusual that this would be done as a sole-source contract because the price was high and there were many leadership training companies in the market. The Director of Financial Services noted that sole-source contracts were unusual for the Department and that one of this size and type was unprecedented. But when he asked Ryan to discuss it with him, Ryan told him not to worry about it. Morrison did not express any concerns.

On April 8, 2019, Ryan sent the Contract to Masias, and she signed it. Ryan then signed it on April 11, 2019. On that day, Ryan had an opportunity to tell Coats that the Contract had been signed by both parties, but he instead kept that information from Coats. Specifically, on April 10th, Justice Hart told Coats that she learned Masias had applied for a judicial-department job in Utah (a Utah Justice had sent her an email inquiring about Masias). Coats suggested to Hart that when responding she should stay within the bounds of the Resignation Agreement, which limited what they could say about Masias's separation from the Department. Coats also called Ryan to say that he just learned Masias had applied for a job in Utah. Ryan responded by text, telling Coats he knew Masias had applied for that job but that she was no longer interested in it. He did not tell Coats that Masias had, in fact, already signed the Contract and that Ryan had too.

The Contract required Masias to deliver leadership training and related services to the Department for a period of five years, five times longer than the Department's contracts with prior training vendors. But it only detailed the scope of work for Masias to perform in the Contract's first year. Despite providing no scope of work for years two through five, it required the Department to pay Masias "$532,000 each year for up to 5 years." The SCAO's legal staff described it to Coats and Rottman as a "one-year contract;" however, the Contract expressly stated in its "TERM OF THE AGREEMENT" section on its first page that "the parties' respective performances under this Agreement shall commence on ... April 1, 2019 and shall terminate on March 31, 2024.” The Contract further allowed the parties, by separate agreement, to contract for additional services at certain rates up to a total of $550,000 per year. Finally, by further “separate written agreement,” the Department could agree to pay Masias even more than $550,000 per year, without monetary limitation. Unlike its prior training-vendor contracts, the Department’s contract with Masias did not contain prices for each category of work to be performed; rather, it simply set an annual lump-sum price.

The Department’s Purchasing Rules required Ryan to conduct, and document in writing, negotiations with Masias “to obtain the best possible conditions for the Department with regard to [Contract] price, delivery, and terms.” (Purchasing Rules §2.3.) Ryan failed to comply with this requirement.

Revelation of the Secret Recording, Resignations, and the Cancellation of the Contract

On April 15, 2019, the OSA received an anonymous letter alleging three instances of occupational fraud at the Department.³ When Coats and Rottman reviewed this letter, they learned for the first time that the Department had settled with a former employee for over $140,000. That employee had been placed on leave and investigated in 2017 for monitoring the activities of senior SCAO staff (including Brown and Masias). The employee indicated that Ryan knew about and authorized that surveillance. Ryan represented to SCAO legal staff that he had informed Coats about this settlement. This was false. Coats and Rottman first learned about it when they read the anonymous letter to the OSA in April 2019. Astonished that they had not been informed, Coats called a meeting in April 2019 with Ryan, Brown, and Morrison and vehemently instructed them to keep him fully informed on all similar personnel matters. He also repeated this instruction to them several times after this meeting. Despite these commands, Coats was not informed about Masias's surreptitious recording of Rice until July 2019.

³ The OSA commenced its investigation of those allegations in July 2019. The investigation included the Masias Contract award. In February 2022, the OSA released an executive summary of its findings, which included its conclusion that “there is at least some evidence of occupational fraud” in the award of the Masias Contract. The OSA found that the Contract was awarded “under an apparently flawed process.” The OSA did not examine whether that process violated the Department’s procurement rules, any criminal law, or any ethics or code-of-conduct standards, but it did refer three former employees (Brown, Ryan, and Masias) to law enforcement authorities.

Masias began performing work under the Contract on April 15, 2019. Though he had signed the contract on April 11th and sent the signed copy to Masias, Ryan did not tell Coats, Rottman, or Morrison that he had done so.⁴ Instead, he indicated that he intended to wait to sign until the two Financial Services Division employees who had originally demanded Masias's termination for reimbursement misconduct left the Department. Indeed, Ryan and Brown had discussed their concern that the Financial Services Director would not approve the Contract, and their need to form a plan to get around him. Consistent with such a plan, and likely also in retaliation for his role in Masias's separation from the Department, Brown and Ryan placed the Financial Services Director on leave on March 22, 2019, the day after Masias's contract-proposal meeting with Coats. And they waited for the SCAO's Controller to retire. She did so on May 31, 2019, and one business day later, on June 3rd, Ryan signed another copy of the Contract.

Ryan did not route the Contract through the Department's required final approval process before either of his signings; neither the SCAO legal staff, nor the Human Resources or Financial Services Divisions, reviewed or provided final approval for the Contract. Ryan communicated his June 3rd signing to Coats, Rottman, and Morrison, and on June 14th Coats emailed all Department staff to announce that Masias was now under contract to provide leadership training to the Department.

⁴ On two other occasions, Ryan intentionally concealed the Masias Contract he had signed on April 11, 2019. In response to an open-records request in June, he did not provide the Contract he signed on April 11th, and he did not disclose it during the OSA investigation. He also lied to Morrison when he told her in late April 2019 that he had not yet signed the Contract.

One month later, after some initial media reporting and requests for information about allegations of misconduct at the Department, Ryan, Morrison, Rottman, Coats, another SCAO attorney, and the SCAO's Public Information Manager met to discuss a media request for a copy of Masias's recording of Rice. At this meeting, on July 15, 2019, Ryan directed Morrison to tell Coats and Rottman about that recording. This was the first time that Coats or Rottman were told of the recording even though Ryan, Brown, and Morrison had known about it for at least seven months. During that time, Ryan had taken numerous steps to prevent Coats and Rottman from finding out about the recording. Particularly disturbing is the fact that in May 2019, Morrison, the Department's top in-house legal counsel, prevented the Colorado Attorney General's Office from finding out about the recording. Specifically, when the Attorney General's Office requested a copy of the Resignation Agreement that expressly referred to the surreptitious recording, Morrison initially ignored the request and, when pressed, she asserted that the Resignation Agreement's confidentiality provision barred her from sharing it. That was false.

Coats and Rottman were stunned and furious that so many senior personnel had withheld this critical information from them for so long. Ryan offered to resign. After much deliberation and with the approval of the other Justices, Coats met with Ryan on July 17th and accepted his resignation (effective July 18th). At that meeting, Ryan told Coats he never mentioned the recording because he did not think Coats would want to know about it and believed it was in the best interest of the Department to withhold it from Coats. Ryan spoke with Rottman that day too. He did not tell Rottman that he thought Coats did not want to know about the surreptitious recording. Instead, Ryan told Rottman, "I really stepped in it. I made some bad decisions." Before leaving, Ryan gave his copy of Brown's talking points to Morrison, who gave it to the Attorney General's Office. On July 18, 2019, the Department terminated the Contract, and on July 19, 2019, Brown resigned. The Department never paid Masias for any work performed under the Contract, though the damage to the Department's credibility from these events has been profound.

Analysis

There were numerous organizational and individual failures that contributed to the decision to approve the Contract. These include a toxic Department culture under which certain senior leaders, principally Ryan, Masias, and Brown, were able to act with minimal oversight and no accountability. They also include overly permissive procurement rules adopted by the Department, as well as errors in judgment by several individuals, including Coats and Morrison. Notwithstanding these issues, the evidence establishes that the Contract was not approved to prevent the disclosure of alleged misconduct within the Department. Below we examine the issues identified during this investigation, and we make a series of recommendations aimed at enabling the Department to improve its internal culture, avoid repeating these mistakes, and begin the hard work of regaining the public trust.

The Judicial Department was Poorly Administered at the Time of the Masias Reimbursement Dispute

The Judicial Department is a large and complex organization with thousands of employees spread across 24 judicial districts. It has an annual budget of over $600 million. While each judicial district has its own judges, administrators, and support staff, the administration of the Department is centralized within the SCAO in Denver. The SCA leads the SCAO and thus has tremendous authority to direct the policies and operations of the entire Department. The SCA is chosen by the Justices of the Supreme Court. However, given the amount of power concentrated in the SCA position, as well as the diverse body of stakeholders over whom the SCA has authority, a thorough, fair, and transparent process for selecting the SCA is essential. When Ryan was appointed SCA in 2017, however, the process was anything but thorough and transparent, which exacerbated tension and dysfunction in the Department's senior leadership.

Ryan's Ascension to the SCA Position was not Transparent or Arms-Length, Which Created Tension Between Ryan and Masias

The process for selecting the SCA was deficient in several ways. First, Ryan was promoted to be interim SCA despite not going through the formal selection process and never interviewing for the job. Although he had a generally positive reputation in the Department, he was never specifically evaluated to determine his suitability for the role of SCA. His prior job (Clerk of the Court of Appeals and Supreme Court) involved a much smaller scope of administrative duties and authorities. It involved docket management and activity coordination, a smaller staff, and implementation—rather than creation—of SCAO policy and culture. In that job, Ryan was responsible for two courts, not 26. Most problematic, Ryan had been on the SCA selection committee, and his promotion to SCA created an appearance of bias and illegitimacy that tainted the entire SCA selection process.

To make matters worse, the Justices promoted Ryan over Masias, who had been one of the finalists for SCA. When none of the finalists was selected, Masias was assured that a new selection process would soon commence. It never did, and Ryan was instead appointed SCA by fiat. Unsurprisingly, this compromised Ryan's working relationship with Masias, who was well-liked in many of the judicial districts. Masias was alienated by Ryan's appointment and suspicious that she was rejected because of her gender -- indeed, her later surreptitious recording of Rice was an attempt to confirm that suspicion. She also suspected that Financial Services Division leadership had backed Ryan over her for the SCA job, which fed her rage and obstinance when those leaders discovered her reimbursement error and pressed for her termination.

The deficiencies in the process of promoting Ryan to SCA created significant tension among SCAO senior leadership. Ryan understood that Masias did not want him in the SCA position; she wanted his job herself. He believed that he could not afford to have her and Brown as enemies. He also was quiet and reserved and came from outside the SCAO, without alliances of his own there, and he was taking charge of an office that was riven by factionalism and office politics. As a result, Ryan believed he needed Masias to succeed as SCA, and he knew he had to repair his relationship with her. This gave her certain leverage over Ryan once her falsified reimbursement request came to light.

Chief Justice Coats did not have the Support of the other Justices in Handling Administrative Matters, and he was not Trained or Equipped to Handle them Alone

While tensions were increasing in the SCAO's senior leadership, the Justices were largely unaware of them. Many employees we interviewed explained that the Justices had little contact with SCAO employees and only provided the most cursory oversight of Department administration. As such, when Masias's defective reimbursement request came to light, the Court did not have an understanding of the fractured relationships among SCAO senior staff and did not step in to help Coats determine how the reimbursement matter should be resolved. Nor did they understand how much tension it would create within SCAO leadership to select Ryan as SCA without a transparent or fair process. Worse yet, having created the problem for him, the Justices left it to Ryan to resolve.

Coats was the only member of the Court who had administrative duties with respect to the SCAO. The other Justices focused exclusively on resolving the cases on the Court's docket and were detached from administrative matters pursuant to the Court's long-standing practice. They did not know the SCAO culture, serve on its internal committees, or fully understand its functions. As a group, the Justices met weekly with the Chief Justice, but the Court did not function as a collaborative decision-making body on administrative and personnel matters. Members of the Court followed the Court's long-observed custom of remaining walled-off from such decisions in order to avoid potential recusal if litigation about those matters later arose. As a result, Coats was forced to act alone, or to rely only on Ryan (and to a lesser extent Rottman), when handling problematic administrative or personnel matters within the SCAO.

Further, Coats was not trained as an administrator, and managerial skill is not a selection criterion for appointment to the Colorado Supreme Court. Upon his appointment as Chief Justice, Coats received no training, orientation, or instruction on running a large, complicated organization like the Department. Nor was he given briefing materials or operational documents for the SCAO, instructional presentations from the SCA, or tutorials about the specialized functions of each SCAO Division. From the outset of his tenure, there was a wide gap between the new Chief Justice and the SCAO, which was mirrored -- and reinforced by -- the physical distance between the Court and the SCAO. Coats and other members of the Court were housed in one office tower while the administrative staff were housed in another. This prevented incidental contact between SCAO personnel and Coats, and the casual sharing of information that often happens in office environments. This further isolated Coats from the SCAO, forcing him to rely almost exclusively on Ryan (or Rottman) for information about its operations. Yet, as explained above, Ryan was actively concealing critical information from Coats and, in some cases, providing him with false information.

Ryan Administered the Department with Minimal Oversight from the Court and was not Held Accountable for his Performance

Ryan administered the Department, and its $600 million budget and thousands of employees, with only minimal oversight from Coats. Coats met with Ryan, but while these briefings were detailed about the annual budget, they were often shallow and devoid of detail about SCAO operations. When Coats was told, for example, that the SCAO had fired hundreds of employees in 2018, or that certain employees were receiving large payouts of taxpayer dollars at the time of their separations from the Department, he was shocked.

Ryan did not report to a board of directors who could hold him accountable for his decisions, as many chief executive or chief operating officers do. Although Ryan ostensibly reported to Coats, Coats did not have consistent, independent sources of information about the SCAO's operations to use in evaluating Ryan's decision-making as SCA. Moreover, there was no process to solicit feedback from Ryan's subordinates. Nor did the Court even conduct annual performance reviews to allow for periodic and formal reflections on the quality of Ryan's work. While strong organizations routinely evaluate all employees, including senior leaders, Ryan was allowed to run the SCAO with little oversight of his decision-making.

As we make this observation, we recognize that the Chief Justice had myriad duties and only limited time and bandwidth to focus on the SCAO's operations. His primary function was judicial rather than administrative; as Chief Justice, he continued to write opinions, conference with his colleagues, and participate in the ongoing back-and-forth necessary to resolve the cases on the Court's docket. He also had managerial duties of a judicial nature -- he oversaw the distribution of cases among his colleagues. Further, he served as the face of the Department to the public, making appearances, for example, before the Colorado General Assembly and the Colorado Bar Association. He also shouldered time-consuming duties related to the 24 judicial districts, administering the nomination and selection of all District Court Chief Judges, attending investiture ceremonies, and serving as the principal point of contact for all those chief judges.

Meanwhile, Ryan's nearly unchecked authority to run the SCAO became increasingly problematic over time, as the Court had no formal mechanisms to hold him accountable -- or even assess his performance.

The SCAO's Internal Culture was Toxic, Which Deterred Employees from Coming Forward with their Concerns About the Contract

There were multiple Department employees who could have come forward to raise concerns about the Contract before it was approved. This includes Legal Counsel Unit personnel like Morrison, and others who were concerned but failed to act. They did not act because the Department's internal culture was toxic, and there was a pervasive fear of opposing Masias, Brown, or Ryan in any way. The fear-based culture deterred reliable information-sharing, rewarded silence and self-protection, led to lax enforcement of Court rules, and minimized accountability within the SCAO.

A Culture of Fear and Intimidation Pervaded the SCAO

It was well-known within the SCAO that the Directors of the Human Resources and Financial Services Divisions despised one another. Financial Services Division personnel, as a result, felt defensive, fearful, and vulnerable given the extremely close relationship between Brown and Masias. It was enormously corrosive throughout the entire SCAO that the SCAO's second-in-command and the Director in charge of enforcing all Human Resources rules -- who had unilateral firing authority -- openly flaunted their inappropriate personal relationship. This relationship destroyed staff confidence in their leaders' reliability and fairness, and it undermined any trust that they would be protected if they spoke up about misconduct.

Consistent with the brazenness of that relationship, Brown was known to disregard Department rules when it suited him, and to target and retaliate against those who sought to enforce rules against him, including the Financial Services and Information Technology Directors. Masias herself was often dictatorial and vindictive toward other SCAO senior leaders. For example, she proclaimed that “heads would roll” if personnel communicated with any Justice without her permission. Similarly, she demanded that even authorized contacts with Justices had to be documented in writing and reported to her. Ironically, she also forced SCAO employees to sign a document she created barring them from surveilling or collecting compromising information about the Department. Masias’s prohibition on communicating with Justices deepened the sentiment held by many at the SCAO that the Justices were aloof, disengaged, controlled by Masias on administrative matters, and therefore also to be feared.

In addition, Masias and Brown were perceived to have unilateral discretion to receive, investigate, and resolve complaints against judges and Justices. This perpetuated the belief that the judges and Justices were themselves shielded from accountability, and that Masias and Brown had leverage over them, which strengthened the perception that it would be dangerous to come forward about the Contract.

Compounding this climate of fear, employees were frequently investigated and terminated by the Human Resources Division without that Division reporting those terminations to the Chief Justice. Unsurprisingly given this environment, employees often stayed silent about misconduct and “kept book” on the activities of others in order to acquire compromising information to use as leverage in case of potential discipline. Remarkably, this strategy seemed to work, the behavior was rewarded, such employees were often granted paid leave as compensation upon termination, and non-disclosure terms were inserted into their termination agreements. This practice masked the financial impact of these terminations on the Department's budget, it shielded the terminations from scrutiny by the SCAO Legal Counsel Unit and the Attorney General's Office, and it rewarded silence.

In addition, fear of retaliation caused employees to disregard their duties to the Department in favor of self-protection. It caused behavior like sending anonymous tips to outside oversight agencies, or making open-records requests for documents, rather than raising concerns up-the-chain to Department leadership. Even the Judicial Legal Counsel herself (Morrison) was disempowered, disrespected, intimidated, and fearful. As a result, she did not report Ryan's misconduct, or Masias's surreptitious recording of Rice, to Coats or his counsel. Morrison advised Ryan not to pursue the Contract and pressed him to report the recording of Rice to Coats. Ryan ignored her, and she had seen him be vindictive when crossed. Thus, she was cowed into obeying the SCA, though her duty was to the Department.

There was a Lack of Accountability for Certain Senior Leaders

The SCAO's culture was also tainted by the fact that rules were not always enforced against senior leadership. For example, Masias and Brown openly disregarded Department rules, especially Financial Services Division and Information Technology Division rules, without consequence. Masias failed to follow the SCAO's reimbursement rules 100% of the time. Ryan allowed Brown's open and persistent use of his personal laptop for Department business despite repeated complaints from the Information Technology Services Director that the practice compromised Court security. Moreover, the SCA had broad discretion to act without oversight. For example, Ryan had the authority under the Department's permissive procurement rules to sign sole-source contracts without consulting the Procurement Manager.

The Department's Purchasing Rules did not Sufficiently Protect it from Risks of Procurement Misconduct

The Department's Purchasing Rules diverged from the state procurement code and were overly permissive in ways that contributed to the approval of the Contract. The State of Colorado has adopted a body of procurement rules, enshrined in statute, that bind executive branch agencies ("State Procurement Code"). Those rules, however, do not apply to procurements by the Department. See §24-101-105, C.R.S. (promulgating a procurement code that applies to all "publicly funded contracts entered into by all governmental bodies of the executive branch of this state"). Thus, the Department created its own set of purchasing and fiscal rules. At the time of the Contract, the Purchasing Rules explicitly recognized that the Department was exempted from the state's procurement code ("as a separate branch of government, the Judicial Department is not bound by the Colorado Procurement Code §24-101-101, et seq., C.R.S"). Yet, there were several notable weaknesses in the Purchasing Rules at the time the Contract was signed.

First, the Purchasing Rules did not establish consequences, such as disciplinary penalties, for violations. In contrast, the State Procurement Code articulates steep penalties for any violations, including personal civil liability for employees. See §24-109-404, C.R.S. (if any government entity violates the State Procurement Code, "the head of such governmental body and the public employee, which for the purposes of this section includes elected officials, actually making such purchase shall be personally liable for the costs of such supplies, services, or construction"). An articulation of stiff consequences for violations might have deterred the procurement misconduct committed in this case.

Second, the Purchasing Rules did not establish a time bar on former employees seeking to do business with the Department. Many government entities impose a time bar (often called a "revolving door" rule) on former employees before they are permitted to contract with their former employer. This helps to ensure that government employees are not using their authority in government to create new business opportunities for themselves. The Purchasing Rules were silent on this important issue, and Masias was allowed to sign the Contract just three weeks after she separated from the Department.

Third, there was neither an internal audit process, nor external audits, of the Department's purchasing activities that would have helped ensure Department employees, including the SCA, complied with relevant purchasing rules. A routine audit process is an important safeguard and deterrent to procurement misconduct, but none existed within the Department at the time of the Contract.

The Process for Handling Complaints Against Judges was not Fair or Transparent, Which Gave Masias Additional Leverage over the Department

Masias was perceived to have leverage over the Department because she and Brown had nearly unilateral authority to receive, investigate, and handle complaints against judges. A transparent complaint process, with clearly articulated rules and standards, protects employees, the organization, and those accused of misconduct. That is, employees and others must be made aware of how to file complaints of misconduct and the standards that will be used to investigate and resolve such complaints. This is particularly important when the accused are extremely powerful, like judges, which creates strong incentives for employees to avoid coming forward.

During our investigation, employees, including Justices, were unable to describe the complaint-handling process and relevant standards for handling complaints against judges. They often noted, generally, that "HR handled complaints against judges" or that complaints were "referred to the Judicial Discipline Commission" without being able to describe how such complaints were received, by whom, when they would be referred, how they would be tracked, and what steps would be taken to make sure that complainants were protected against retaliation.

In fact, Masias and Brown had broad discretion (subject to a 2010 Memorandum of Understanding between the Department and Colorado's Commission on Judicial Discipline) to determine how such complaints would be handled. They kept minimal records reflecting the investigations they conducted and when complaints were referred to the Commission on Judicial Discipline (or not). There was no central complaints registry, nor a formal process for notifying complainants of the outcomes of any investigation. This created the perception for some that Masias was serving as a "fixer" for the Court who had the power to make complaints against judges disappear if it served her interests. And it further caused to employees to fear coming forward with their concerns about the Contract.

The Contract would have been an Abuse of Taxpayer Resources, but it was not Awarded to Cover up Allegations of Judicial Misconduct

As set forth above, we conclude that the Department's toxic culture, permissive procurement rules, and deficient oversight of the SCA contributed to an environment in which the Contract was approved. However, we do not conclude that it was a payoff to silence Masias from revealing evidence of judicial misconduct. Why not?

Of all the evidence we obtained, only one witness (Ryan) asserts that the Contract was approved to hide misconduct. Yet there is overwhelming countervailing evidence, and Ryan's assertions are internally inconsistent and contrary to his own behavior. Most importantly, Coats had already tentatively agreed with the proposal to contract with Masias at least three months before Brown presented the alleged "dirt" in his talking-points list. Therefore, we conclude that the "dirt" did not motivate Coats's thinking at that time.

In fact, Brown, Ryan, and Masias herself had been propelling the Department toward a new training vendor as far back as the Spring of 2018. Ryan and many other witnesses acknowledge this. The documentary evidence also confirms the Contract did not arise as a strategy to conceal the alleged misconduct Brown brought to Coats's attention in late December 2018/early January 2019. It was in the works long before then. Several other key facts support this conclusion:

- No one involved, including Brown and Ryan, appears to have considered the alleged misconduct genuinely threatening to the Department. Certainly no one acted as if it were, and the Department's in-house counsel (and her staff) told them explicitly that it was not. The information in the Brown talking-points list appeared to Coats and Rottman to be exaggerated, "old news" already addressed by Brown or Masias back when the incidents occurred.
- It appears from the talking-points list that Brown and Masias considered her recording of Rice to be powerful leverage. Ryan and others went to great lengths to hide this information from Coats for over seven months. Coats did not learn of it until more than three months after he had approved the Contract. Thus, he could not have been -- and was not -- motivated by it when he approved the Contract. The fact that Ryan hid this information from Coats also indicates Ryan knew Coats was not, and was not going to be, motivated to cover up damaging information. If Ryan had really thought that Coats would approve the Contract to contain political damage to the Court, he would have told Coats about the surreptitious recording.

- On numerous occasions, Coats told Rottman and Ryan that he expected the Contract to be publicly criticized because it would be with a recently-resigned, high-ranking former employee. This was why Coats instructed Ryan to do it “by the book.” This was also why Coats repeatedly asked Ryan if he believed the Contract was in the best interest of the Department. Coats thus made it clear he was willing to be criticized, if necessary, for the good of the Department. This is another indication that when he approved the Contract, Coats was not motivated by fear of criticism or damage to the Department’s reputation.
- Masias’s attorney never mentioned any legal claim, let alone one grounded in the alleged misconduct. Similarly, neither Brown, Ryan, Coats, or Rottman ever referred to this “dirt” after the one meeting in which Brown partially described it. Nor did Masias’s Resignation Agreement suggest that suppressing misconduct was a focus of any party. The Resignation Agreement contained boilerplate confidentiality language, nothing more restrictive than in any standard Department release agreement. Tellingly, the Resignation Agreement also did not try to suppress the surreptitious recording itself. Rather, the Resignation Agreement actually publicly revealed its existence and required Masias to give the Department only a copy of it (not the original, or all copies).
- Deploying “dirt,” as Brown, Masias, and Ryan did here, was typical for them and a common technique in the Department, as described above. It appears that after Coats directed Ryan to proceed “by the book” in the December 14, 2018, meeting, Brown and Masias believed they needed to further motivate Coats to move ahead with a contract. Brown and Masias had had success with intimidation tactics in the past and, as Brown said, Masias was very angry about how she had been treated. Here, though, they misjudged. Ryan had already convinced Coats that the Contract was the right path. And Ryan had already convinced Coats that Masias was vital to his plans for improving the SCAO. Though Masias, Brown, and Ryan may have thought it would cement Coats's approval, the "dirt" did not motivate him. We found no credible evidence that Coats's attitude, conduct, or motive was influenced by a desire to hide the alleged misconduct.

- When Department and Attorney General's Office personnel were deciding whether to terminate the Contract in July 2019, Brown's talking-points list was not yet public. Nonetheless, Coats, Rottman, Steven Vasconcellos (the SCA who replaced Ryan), SCAO legal staff, and Attorney General's Office personnel did not give any consideration to whether terminating the Contract would cause the talking points to become public. This was because suppression of that information had never been Coats's reason for approving the Contract.

Masias, Brown, and Ryan, each for his or her own reasons, clearly and brazenly pursued approval of the Contract. They pulled all the levers they thought would further that goal. It is equally clear, though, that the "dirt" lever did not affect Coats as they thought it would. Coats was misled, and his judgment failed him on other fronts, but he did not approve the Contract to silence Masias.

If Not to Cover Up Alleged Misconduct, Why Did Coats Approve the Contract?

The Contract was ill-advised, did not serve the interests of Coloradans, and should never have been approved. Though never paid, it resulted in real harm to the credibility of the Department. The Contract and its fallout have similarly harmed the many Department employees who perform exceptional service for Coloradans. So how could top Department officials have worked for it, supported it, and approved it? The answer lies both in the personnel and their environment.

Trigger Event: The Reimbursement Dispute

Given the environment at the SCAO, the events that transpired when the Financial Services Division caught errors in Masias's reimbursement submission in July 2018 were not surprising. First, Masias helped create a culture that discouraged leaders from showing weakness. Her personal power and image of strength were essential to her. Second, she had a habit of behaving as if the rules did not apply to her, and she disdained the Financial Services Division. Third, and as a result, she could not admit her reimbursement error to a perceived enemy and instead she was steadfastly unrepentant and dishonest in her own defense when confronted. Fourth, the Department was undergoing an audit at the time, and the Financial Services Division saw this as an opportunity to vanquish Masias for good. Their bases for insisting on terminating Masias were substantially justified, though it was the culture of combat that drove them to be completely uncompromising in their insistence. Finally, as discussed above, Coats had no relevant training on administrative issues, no Counsel to the Chief Justice tasked with helping solve such problems, and no collaborative support from his colleagues. All of this meant Coats had to rely primarily on Ryan, which amplified the risk that he would exercise poor judgement. That is precisely what happened when Coats agreed to terminate Masias and simultaneously considered entering into a contract with her.

Misconduct and Misjudgment

In a different environment, experienced and collaborative leaders may have found a way to discipline Masias short of termination and in a way that assured the OSA auditors the Department still had sound financial controls. But in this environment, Ryan was at a loss as to how to solve this problem. Ryan was liked and trusted in his former position at the Department. But he was relatively new to the SCA job, felt he had no alliances at the SCAO, and had no past leadership experience in this environment under these pressures. He recognized the deep cultural flaws he inherited at the SCAO. He also likely felt alone, vulnerable, and ill-equipped to fix the underlying problems with SCAO personnel and culture. Justices detached from administrative and personnel matters had selected him without a fair process and left him to deal with managing Masias. He misjudged that a contract with Masias would solve the problem, and he chose the worst of the tactics common in that culture to get the Contract approved.

Specifically, over the next nine months, Ryan adopted a “keep your friends close and your enemies closer” relationship with Brown. He controlled information. He lied to Coats about Masias’s history of reimbursement misconduct. He lied to Coats about the justification for a sole-source contract. He helped remove the Director of Financial Services because he was an obstacle to Contract approval. He lied about signing the Contract in April 2019. He hid Masias’s surreptitious recording of Rice from Coats and Rottman. He lied to SCAO legal staff about Coats’s knowledge of that recording, telling one lawyer he had told Coats about the recording and telling another he had not told Coats because Coats did not want to know. He intimidated

Morrison so she would not interfere with his plans. Ryan thus gradually built an increasingly fragile edifice of deceptions that eventually imploded.⁵

Ryan also manipulated and tightly controlled the contract process. He rushed it along, violated the Purchasing Rule regarding sole-source determination, circumvented the requirement that legal staff and the Financial Services Division sign off on the Contract before execution, ignored the Purchasing Rule requiring him to show he had negotiated the best price terms possible for the Department, failed to investigate whether Masias was in fact the best available vendor and whether her pricing was justified, and accepted without any negotiation Masias's price and scope-of-work terms. As a result of all this misconduct, the Contract itself was sub-standard. Even the duration of the Contract was not clear. It bound the parties to a term of five years, but it only defined the work to be performed in the first year. It did not state the prices for each category of work. Yet it specifically defined the prices Masias could charge for additional work Ryan could approve above Masias's $532,000 annual fee. Inexplicably, the Contract set another annual cap -- $550,000 -- for additional work and payments and allowed Ryan to break even that higher cap without restriction.

Masias and Brown made their own misjudgments and engaged in their own misconduct. Their misconduct, though, was more clearly driven by self-interest than was Ryan's. Masias disrespected and ignored Ryan from the beginning. She disregarded rules, was dishonest with the SCAO's attorneys, ignored their advice, negotiated legal matters on her own, and cut them out of processes and decisions. While she was a hard and effective worker, outwardly upbeat and even motivational, she acted out of self-interest and favored employees who would do her bidding. For years as a leader in the SCAO, Masias had an inappropriately close relationship with Brown, perpetuating the perception by SCAO employees that she was guided by her own agenda and above reproach. She never accepted responsibility for mistakes and never apologized.

This all lent a certain irony to her training mantra that the most important thing for Department leaders was to set the right “tone at the top.” As set forth above, while she was one of those at the top, Masias disregarded reimbursement rules, surreptitiously recorded a conversation with Rice, shut down others’ communications with the Justices, and lied repeatedly when confronted about a reimbursement submission. She used Department budget information to secure a sole-source contract for herself while she was still a Department employee. She attempted to secure approval for that contract by threatening, through Brown, to publicly reveal allegedly damaging information about the Department. Her behavior both before and after she went on leave reveals that Masias acted in her own self-interest rather than the Department’s. Notably, her behavior pattern was one that was allowed to develop when Marroney was SCA. He was so busy with the Court’s building project and legislative relations during that process that he elevated Masias to Chief of Staff and, in essence, left the keys to the kingdom in Masias’s and Brown’s hands.

During the same period, Brown too elevated his and Masias’s interests over those of the Department. He fed Department information to Masias while she was on leave. He advocated on her behalf for a contract. He threatened disclosure of allegedly damaging information. He communicated with Masias after he was instructed not to. In the past they were overheard discussing future plans to work together as consultants, and they may have been planning to work together under the Contract. Brown directed the Procurement Manager to keep the RFP secret from Financial Services Division leadership. He lied to the Procurement Manager repeatedly. He took action to terminate the Director of Financial Services so he would not obstruct the Contract (and also in apparent retaliation for his role in the Masias reimbursement dispute). It was well known even before she went on leave that Masias and Brown had an inappropriately close personal relationship. It was known that he could not be trusted when it came to matters involving her. It was also well known that Brown disliked rules and considered himself above them, exploited gray areas in Department personnel rules, strategically targeted enemies for retaliation, had employee emails monitored to gain advantage, bragged about how many people he fired, hired only investigators who would produce the outcomes he wanted, and ignored and diminished legal staff.

But Brown's and Masias's misconduct had less impact on approval of the Contract than did Ryan's. And it still would not have been approved if Coats himself had exercised better judgment. His first error was not meeting with Ryan immediately after taking over as Chief Justice to learn more about Ryan's role and clearly explain Coats's expectations of him – including the expectation that Ryan would keep him fully informed. Without doing so, Coats proceeded to make many pivotal decisions relying entirely on representations from Ryan. Ryan was not trustworthy, yet Coats neither detected this himself nor even suspected it enough to task Rottman with closer oversight and verification of information they were getting from Ryan. Coats's failures in this regard likely were due to his lack of understanding of SCAO functions like procurement, and the lack of advice from Morrison or Rottman that verification might be a good backstop.

Coats's failure was also due to his own lack of intuition that it was dangerous to rely so heavily on Ryan. His own intuition also should have told him that choosing a person known for dishonesty and self-interest (Masias) as the face of the Department's leadership training program would gravely undermine trust and confidence in the Department and his own leadership. It should have told him it would erode public trust to rush a contract through with a former employee within weeks of her resignation. Finally, Coats himself could have -- but did not -- oversee or verify. He did not ask Ryan follow-up questions or do his own research as to whether the Management Representation Letter really required terminating Masias. He similarly failed to conduct his own analyses of the procurement process, Masias's reimbursement history, the Contract's pricing structure, the availability of other training vendors, or Ryan's conclusory assertion that the Contract was in the Department's best interest. Masias may have been qualified as a trainer, and her price may have been a fair market price, but Coats did not do any of his own diligence to make these determinations before approving the Contract.

The same can be said of Rottman. Coats did not instruct him to do any verifying, but Rottman also never suggested to Coats that that would be a good assignment for him. Despite signs that Ryan should be watched more closely, Rottman did not take the initiative to suggest a more active oversight role even though he knew Coats was new and untrained. As a result, Rottman missed opportunities to independently understand and assess the Management Representation Letter situation, the Contract, the sole-source determination, Masias's reimbursement history, the procurement process, and the Resignation Agreement. Like Coats, Rottman also independently failed to recognize how disastrous it would have been to have a former employee with Masias's known flaws representing the Department's leadership training program.

Morrison too made a key misjudgment. She was genuinely fearful that Ryan would fire her if she told Coats, Rottman, or the Attorney General's Office about the surreptitious recording, so she hid it from them. Apparently out of fear of Ryan and Brown, she also stood silent while they lied to the Procurement Manager repeatedly. However, her fear that Coats and others would not protect her from termination if she “went over Ryan’s head” does not appear justified. In fact, there appears to be no basis for it other than fear itself. She knew full well that Coats, Rottman, and the Attorney General’s Office all would consider Masias surreptitiously recording a Chief Justice an outrageous breach of trust and would direct their anger at Ryan for hiding it and not at her for exposing it. Thus, her fear of Ryan does not excuse Morrison’s abdication of her duty to the Department in favor of obedience to her direct supervisor (Ryan).

Conclusion

The deep cultural flaws described above bred misconduct that Coats and Rottman did not detect and that led to the Contract’s approval. Since these events, the Department has implemented a number of improvements to correct Department culture and inoculate it against individual misconduct and poor judgment. Recognizing those positive steps, we nonetheless strongly urge the Department to implement the recommendations below in order to continue advancing toward restored public trust.

Recommendations

To address the issues discussed above, we provide 14 actionable recommendations, some of which the Department has already begun to implement. But more work remains to be done.

We have divided our recommendations into six categories: (1) Changing the SCAO's Organizational Culture, (2) Enhancing Oversight of the SCAO, (3) Properly Preparing the Chief Justice, (4) Improving the Judicial-Officer Complaint Process, (5) Procurement Reform, and (6) Ongoing Transparency and Accountability.

Changing the SCAO's Organizational Culture

1) The Court Must Commit to Ending the Culture of Fear and Intimidation in the SCAO

We make several specific suggestions for improving the toxic organizational culture discussed above. This is not an exclusive list; we recommend that Department leaders continually and proactively consider other opportunities for the Department to create for its employees and the public a culture of collaboration and public service.

First, the Department should adopt rules that unequivocally and clearly protect employees who possess information about fraud, waste, abuse, harassment, or other forms of misconduct -- including judicial misconduct -- from retaliation if they bring that information to the attention of Department or state authorities. While the State of Colorado has enshrined various whistleblower protections in statute, see, e.g., Title 24, Art. 50.5e, et seq., C.R.S., specific Department rules that assure employees of the Department's commitment to these protections are critical and should be adopted immediately. The rules should be explained, supported, and easily accessible to employees on the Department's intranet site and elsewhere. The Department should also evaluate other approaches to informing employees about these protections, such as periodic trainings.

Second, Department employees must never be deterred from providing information to members of the bench. As noted in this report, Masias forbade employees from providing information to members of the Court under threat of potential discipline. That directive was improper and counter to the Department's goals of accountability and transparency. While the Court has now increased contact between the Justices and Department employees, it is essential that all employees be informed that that improper prohibition is formally denounced and rescinded.

Third, the Department must commit to holding all employees accountable no matter their status or position. Rules must be fairly and evenly applied, such that no one is above the law or exempted due to their stature within the Department.

2) The Court Must Infuse Ethics into the Department's Culture and Decision-Making

The Department is served by thousands of hard-working public servants who have the best interests of Coloradans in mind. Yet, outliers, like some of the individuals discussed above, make it necessary for the Court to take steps to further infuse ethics and public service into the culture of the Department. That is, the Court must ensure that the culture of warring fiefdoms within the SCAO is ended and replaced with a shared commitment to collaboration, public service and ethical conduct. Specifically:

First, we recommend that the Court establish a code of conduct and ethics that governs the behavior of employees in the Department. While the Colorado Constitution sets forth ethical rules for state employees generally, more specific rules should be adopted for the Department. Just as judicial officers must adhere to the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct, non-judicial Department employees should similarly adhere to a code of conduct and ethics.

Second, we recommend that the Court establish a Department-wide Ethics Officer who is an expert on the rules of conduct and ethics, and with whom Department employees can consult (confidentially, if requested) when in need of advice. The Ethics Officer should conduct annual and mandatory Department-wide trainings on the rules of conduct and ethics. Just as judicial officers may submit ethics inquiries to the Judicial Ethics Advisory Board, Department employees should have similar access to a Department official who can respond to their ethics questions. The Ethics Officer must have the authority to assure employees of confidentiality and protection from retaliation.

3) The Court Should Adopt a Two-Year Revolving Door Prohibition on Former Employees Doing Business with the Department

Many government agencies have “revolving door” rules that prohibit individuals from doing business with their former employers for a prescribed period after their separation. Had such a rule been in place during the events described in this report, the Contract could not have been awarded to Masias. We recommend that the Court establish a two-year revolving door prohibition for its former employees to ensure that Department personnel cannot create contracting opportunities for themselves while they are in government service. Moreover, the rule should permanently bar former employees from working under any contracts that they were personally involved in securing during their tenure with the Department.

Enhancing Oversight of the SCAO

4) The Court Must Require Annual Performance Evaluations for All Key Department Leaders, including the SCA

It is incomprehensible that the SCA administered the Department, a large organization -- and a co-equal branch of our state government -- without sitting for regular reviews or being held accountable for his performance. The Court must correct this significant gap by requiring that detailed, annual performance evaluations be completed for individuals in key supervisory positions, including but not limited to the SCA, Counsel to the Chief Justice, the Chief of Staff, the Judicial Legal Counsel, and the Directors of the Human Resources, Financial Services, Information Technology Services, Probation Services, and Court Services Divisions. Such evaluations, if detailed and comprehensive, will aid in holding key personnel accountable. Had there been such performance evaluations, the improper relationship between Masias and Brown, and the toxic work environment they created, would have come to light far sooner or, perhaps, would not have developed at all.

These evaluations should include not only assessments from supervisors, but also candid 360-degree feedback from subordinates. Subordinates should be encouraged to respond to questions about these leaders anonymously with assurance that there will be no retaliation for participating in the reviews. Further, these performance reviews should be grounded in specific performance standards and expectations set for each employee annually with input and agreement from both employee and supervisor.

5) The Court Should Codify the Selection Process for the SCA

One of the events that significantly contributed to approval of the Contract was the woefully deficient selection process used to appoint Ryan as SCA. The process was not fair or transparent and caused considerable tension in the SCAO's leadership ranks. To ensure that this is never repeated, the Court should clearly articulate the hiring process for its senior leaders, including the SCA, and ensure that the process is followed for future SCA appointments.

6) The Court Should Clarify the Roles, Domains, and Obligations of Each of the Three Sources of Legal Advice to the Department

The Court and SCAO draw upon three separate sources for legal advice. The Judicial Legal Counsel administers the Legal Counsel Unit and advises the Department. The Attorney General's Office provides legal advice to the Department, particularly on matters that are likely to result, or have resulted, in litigation. The Counsel to the Chief Justice also provides legal advice, but to the Chief Justice alone. The roles, domains, and purviews of each source have not been clearly articulated by the Department.

As noted in this report, the Judicial Legal Counsel (Morrison) was, at best, unclear about what duty she owed to whom. Specifically, when Coats was Chief Justice, Morrison withheld from him that Masias had secretly recorded former Chief Justice Rice. She discussed this critical fact with Ryan, head of the SCAO, but not with Coats, head of the entire Department. As a result, Coats was left unaware of the recording, which placed the Department in an untenable position. We recommend that the Department clearly delineate for its employees the roles and authorities of each of the three sources of legal advice, and clarify the circumstances under which one source, but not the others, will be used. Most importantly, we recommend the Department make plain that the Judicial Legal Counsel's duty is owed to the entire Department rather than any one administrator or subcomponent. See Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 1.13. The anti-retaliation reforms described above also should expressly empower the SCAO's entire Legal Counsel Unit to exercise that duty without fear of potential retaliation from SCAO leadership.

7) The Court Should Enact an Effective Leadership Training Program for the Department

It is somewhat ironic that we are recommending a leadership training program given the subject matter of the Contract we have investigated. Yet we are recommending it just the same because of the errors and failings displayed in this case. The Department must invest in preparing its leaders with the skills, ethics, and courage necessary to do their important work. Needless to say, any outside vendor sought to provide such training should be selected through a fair and competitive bidding process.

Properly Preparing the Chief Justice

8) The Court Must Properly Prepare and Equip Chief Justices for the Substantial Management Obligations of that Position

Coats was not well prepared to handle the crises concerning Masias' falsified reimbursement request and subsequent Contract with the Department. He was untrained as an administrator and did not have the active support of his colleagues, which he sorely needed. We make several recommendations to ensure that Chief Justices are never again placed into such a vulnerable position.

First, the Court must develop a formal training program for incoming Chief Justices. Coats described his preparation for the position as "learning on the job" that included attending a number of meetings with the departing Chief Justice. He was not informed about personnel problems in the SCAO administration and, as a result, was unprepared when those problems eventually spiraled out of control. He was given no briefing materials, performance metrics for the Divisions of the SCAO, or detailed explanations of its human resources, budget, or procurement processes. He was neither briefed by each division director nor given opportunities to inquire about their operations. In short, he was forced to learn all of the SCAO's operations on-the-fly as issues arose during his tenure. The Court must invest in equipping Chief Justices to handle such issues by providing formal training and orientation, in advance, before problems arise.

Second, the Court has now implemented what it calls a “Shadow Chief” system (perhaps, more aptly, a “Chief-in-Waiting” system). The Shadow Chief follows the current Chief Justice for a prescribed period to help enable an orderly transition. During our interviews, we learned that while the Shadow Chief system is in use now, it may or may not be used again in the future. Given our findings in this investigation, we recommend that the system be codified as an essential component of the transition between Chief Justices now and in the future.

Third, the Court has long observed a custom of walling Justices off from administrative matters in the SCAO to avoid potential recusals should litigation later arise. While we understand this rationale, our interviews with the Court suggest that the actual risks of recusal are low. Moreover, we are certain that any Chief Justice will need the support of his or her colleagues in handling sensitive administrative issues in the Department. We therefore recommend that the Court identify the very limited circumstances in which a wall between the Chief Justice and the other Justices is necessary and otherwise enroll at least a Justice or two on a case-by-case basis to assist the Chief Justice with challenging issues when necessary.

Fourth, the Court should reduce the number of opinions assigned to the Chief Justice in an amount that offsets the substantial administrative and political duties of that position. The Chief Justice has various important responsibilities, including oversight of the SCA and serving as the face of the Department to the public. Given Coats’s judicial duties, he did not have sufficient time to both handle his caseload and provide meaningful oversight of the SCA. The Court must change that to enable the Chief Justice to effectively handle the administrative duties of the position.

9) The Court Should Establish a Specific Term for the Chief Justice

There is no specific term for a sitting Chief Justice; rather, the Chief’s tenure is left to the preference of members of the Court or the passage of time and operation of the Department’s mandatory retirement rules. In recent decades, Chief Justices have served for terms ranging from just a few of years to more than a decade.

Improving the ability of the Chief Justice to oversee the SCA and SCAO will require establishing a specific term of years to ensure certainty and an orderly transition between administrations. According to Coats, it took a year for him to learn the varied and important responsibilities of the position, and we therefore recommend that the term be set for no fewer than three years—and possibly more. Should the Chief Justice wish to serve an additional term, they could seek reappointment by a vote of the majority of the members of the Court.

Improving the Judicial-Officer Complaint Process

10) The Court Must Improve the Legitimacy of the Process for Handling Complaints Against Judicial Officers

It was clear that Masias was perceived as a “fixer” by some Department employees, due, in part, to her broad discretion to determine how complaints of misconduct against judicial officers would be handled. Record-keeping regarding complaints was poor, and the rules by which Masias (and later Brown) processed and investigated them were unclear. While the Court now has internal rules that address judicial-officer complaint handling, they are vague, and to this day, insufficiently specific about how complaints are received, triaged, investigated, tracked, and referred (or not) to other investigative entities. The internal rules must be precise about these processes, and also clearly state the evidentiary standards that will govern complaint resolution.

Regarding complaint intake, since these events the SCAO has developed a portal on the Department intranet site through which employees can submit complaints (including those against judicial officers). While the SCAO provided us with statistics showing that employees have visited that portal hundreds of times, it was unable to tell us how often the portal has actually been used to file complaints or provide overall statistics about aggregate outcomes of any investigations conducted into those complaints. The Department should enhance its data collection about the complaints portal, ensure that complaints can truly be filed anonymously, and identify ways to seek employee feedback to determine whether or not the complaints portal is working as intended.

Finally, the judicial-officer complaint process is not transparent to the public. While there may be reasons for confidentiality about individual cases and open investigations, aggregate information could be provided to the public by the Department. For example, the Department's last available Annual Statistical Report for fiscal year 2021 includes various metrics about the Department's overall caseload, staffing, budget, and case dispositions, but no equivalent information about the number of complaints against judicial officers, the number referred to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline, aggregate complaint outcomes, or even the process by which complaints against judicial officers are handled. We urge the Department to include this information in its annual statistical reports for public review.

Procurement Reform

11) The Department Should Consent to be Bound by the State Procurement Code, Which Includes Civil Penalties for Violations

Pursuant to state statute, the judicial and legislative branches of government are exempt from the State Procurement Code, which applies only to executive branch agencies. The Department has adopted its own set of purchasing and fiscal rules that differ from the state code in important ways. Elected officials are also exempt from the Code but have consented, through a purchasing delegation, to comply with it. We recommend that the Department consent to be bound by the Colorado Procurement Code and associated procurement rules. This would align the Department with the rest of state government and create official oversight by the State Purchasing and Contract Office, which would help prevent the kinds of procurement misconduct demonstrated in this case.

12) The SCAO Should Regularly Engage in Self-Assessments of its Purchasing Activities and Solicit Periodic Independent Audits

We recommend that the SCAO enhance the compliance and transparency of its procurement functions by regularly assessing all purchases and procurements and evaluating whether or not they are in compliance with relevant procurement rules. This assessment and evaluation should include, but not be limited to, assessing the RFP and vendor selection process used, the adequacy and specificity of contract terms, the workflow and necessary approval processes employed, and the amounts invoiced and paid against these contracts. It should also specifically focus on sole-source contracts to determine if they were, in fact, properly entered into without competitive bidding. Moreover, the SCAO should periodically solicit an independent audit of its procurements, which will create additional accountability for, and public trust in, the Department's purchasing activities.

13) The SCAO Should Train all Employees Involved in Purchasing About Ethical Standards for Procurement Activities

Both the State Procurement Code (that did not apply to the Department at the time of the Contract) and the Department's Purchasing Rules (that did apply) include ethical standards for procurement. There were several significant ethical violations by Brown and Ryan in steering the Contract to a former employee with whom they were associated. While this Contract resulted in obvious violations, there may be other violations in the Department's purchases that could also raise significant ethical issues.

The Department must provide training about procurement ethics to all Department employees who engage in procurement activities. This training should be mandatory and documented before employees are permitted to work on procurements on behalf of the Department.

Ongoing Transparency and Accountability

14) The Chief Justice Should Commit to Regularly Reporting to the Governor, the Legislature, and the Public on the Steps Taken to Implement these Recommendations

Finally, the Department is an independent and co-equal branch of government -- and it is also accountable to the citizenry, as are all public entities. We commend the Court for commissioning this independent investigation and demonstrating openness and cooperation with us. To ensure continued momentum towards reform and transparency about the improvements implemented after these events, we urge the Department to: (1) publicly post this report on its web homepage; (2) post its public response to this report including an explanation of whether the recommendations above will be implemented and, if so, how and by when; and (3) commit to annually updating the Governor, General Assembly, and the public on the status of the Department's efforts to implement these recommendations.

APPENDIX B

Chronology

May 2017: Search conducted to select new State Court Administrator (SCA); Masias applied and was not selected; Justices appointed Ryan interim SCA.

September 2017: Justices appointed Ryan permanent SCA.

July 1, 2018: Coats appointed Chief Justice.

July 15, 2018: Masias reimbursement dispute commenced.

August 2018: Ryan informed Coats about Masias reimbursement dispute; investigation into Masias reimbursement dispute commenced.

October 2018: Reimbursement dispute investigation concluded; Coats, Rottman, and Ryan agreed that Masias engaged in reimbursement misconduct and dishonesty, and they began to discuss their options for disciplining her including the possibility she could resign and enter a contract with the Department to conduct leadership training; Financial Services Division leadership refused to sign Management Representation Letter required by the Office of State Auditor unless Masias was terminated.

November 7, 2018: Masias notified that she will be terminated on November 15, 2018, unless she resigns before that date.

November 12, 2018: Ryan granted Masias's request for Family Medical Leave until February 2019.

December 14, 2018: Coats, Rottman, Brown, and Ryan again discussed the possibility of contracting with Masias for leadership training services if she resigned.

December 22, 2018: Brown informed Ryan that Masias was angry and upset, that she was threatening to sue the Department for gender discrimination, and intended to make public compromising information she had about the Department.

December 26, 2018: Ryan convened meeting with Brown and Morrison. Brown described Masias's alleged threat to sue and release compromising information. Brown informed them Masias possessed a surreptitious recording of a conversation she had with Rice in which Rice allegedly implied the Justices did not select Masias as SCA because of her gender. Brown and Ryan informed Morrison their proposed solution was a leadership training contract with Masias. Morrison objected to that proposed solution and informed Ryan Masias did not have a valid legal claim.

Late December 2018/Early January 2019: Coats, Rottman, Brown, and Ryan met. Brown began reading from a talking-points list of past alleged misconduct by judges and Department staff. Coats asked Ryan if he needed to hear more. Ryan shrugged and may have said, "Up to you, Chief.” Coats directed Brown to stop reading, asked about Masias’s health, and where they stood on the Masias contract idea they began discussing in October.

January 2019: Ryan, Morrison, Brown, and Kane drafted and posted a Request for Proposals (RFP) for leadership training services.

February 2019: RFP closed. No one submitted a bid.

February - March 18, 2019: Morrison negotiated a resignation and release agreement with Masias’s attorney. Masias signed it on March 15th. Ryan signed it on March 18th.

March 19, 2019: Masias’s resignation became effective per her resignation and release agreement.

March 21, 2019: Masias met with Ryan, Coats, and Rottman and pitched her proposal for a leadership training contract with the Department.

March 22, 2019: Ryan placed the SCAO’s Director of Financial Services on administrative leave.

March 25, 2019: Ryan signed the Sole-Source Determination memo approving a contract with Masias.

March 29 - April 5, 2019: Ryan, Masias, and SCAO legal staff drafted a contract for Masias.

April 8, 2019: Ryan sent contract to Masias. Masias signed it.

April 11, 2019: Ryan signed the Masias contract on behalf of the Department.

April 19, 2019: Anonymous letter received by the Department and the Office of State Auditor alleging occupational fraud at the Department.

May 31, 2019: The SCAO Controller retired.

June 3, 2019: Ryan signed the Masias contract a second time.

July 15, 2019: Coats and Rottman were told for the first time that in May 2017 Masias surreptitiously recorded a conversation with Rice.

July 17, 2019: The Department terminated the Masias contract.

July 18, 2019: Ryan resigned.

July 19, 2019: Brown resigned.

BRIAN D. BOATRIGHT

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE

Statement from Chief Justice Brian D. Boatright regarding ILG investigation and assessment of Colorado Judicial Branch workplace culture

Today we make public the full independent report prepared by Investigations Law Group, LLC, an organization independently selected by leaders from the executive and legislative branches to accomplish three objectives:

First, to investigate the informal, unsigned list of talking points allegedly prepared by former Human Resources Director Eric Brown in 2019, describing alleged misconduct by judges and other Judicial Department employees.

Second, to conduct a comprehensive assessment of the Judicial Branch workplace environment, focusing especially on any issues of sexual harassment and gender discrimination.

Third, to propose improvements based on its assessments and investigations.

In February 2021, I told the legislature that the Colorado Judicial Branch faced a crisis, and I committed to changing our culture for the better. To do that, we asked for an independent, unvarnished assessment of where we stand. And we got it.

ILG's findings are simultaneously clarifying and sobering. They highlight the considerable progress we've already made, while underscoring that we still have much work to do.

To be sure, there are positives in the investigation's assessment of Branch culture:

From Report Page 77 ... "Given the nature of our project for the CJB [Colorado Judicial Branch], we expected that there would be more concerning or negative feedback provided by the voluntary interviews. As will be highlighted in the below sections, the work environment at the CJB is overall quite positive."

From Report Page 79 ... "Overall, the survey results indicated that the Colorado Judicial Branch is a positive place to work. A majority, 72% of participants, said they were satisfied with their job at CJB, with satisfaction level for Court Services at 76% and Probation Services division at 67%. Overall, satisfaction for appointed officials was higher, at 89% (47% reported being 'very satisfied' and 42% reported being 'satisfied')."

From Report Page 88 ... "We reviewed the statistics on promotions and separations for men versus women at the CJB between the years 2017 and 2021 and did not find evidence of systemic gender bias. In fact, statistics showed that women have been promoted at the same rate as men since 2019.”

But in continuing to move forward, we must also take to heart all of ILG’s findings, beginning with its thorough investigation of Brown’s list.

On the one hand, ILG’s findings clearly refute the often-reported assertion that alleged misconduct was systematically ignored or covered up by the Branch:

From Report, Page 9 ... “First, every one of these instances was responded to in some way by the Judicial Branch. In most instances, Ms. Masais and Mr. Brown were the individuals responding. They investigated many of these allegations and in some cases, recommended that actions be taken. These were not instances where misconduct was ignored without some response.”*

And ILG’s findings also place events in context, by noting the size of the Judicial Department and the period of time at issue:

From Report, Page 9 ... “Finally, it should be noted that the Eric Brown List contains allegations that span more than 20 years of history at the Judicial Branch and encompass 22 separate Judicial Districts, containing more than 4,000 employees and judicial officers. Sixteen allegations of wrongdoing over 20 years and in the context of thousands of employees is not a statistically significant number. It, on its own, does not suggest a systemic problem of harassment within the Branch.”*

At the same time, however, ILG is rightly critical of how some of these complaints were handled over those two decades. The firm’s findings echo those of the separate Troyer investigation into the Masias contract award:

From Report, Page 9 ... “...My investigations revealed some problems in how some of these matters were handled (or not handled) by the Judicial Branch. There are instances where proper investigations were not done, or discipline that was recommended was not proportionate, or that other failures of process and accountability occurred.”*

ILG’s report spans more than 130 pages. I offer here a synopsis, organized in the order that the incidents appeared on Brown’s much-publicized list. (ILG’s report instead breaks out the allegations based on their nature and origin: Judicial, Finance Department, Probation Department.)

While this synopsis provides a brief overview (with each allegation from the list in bold followed by ILG’s core conclusion), I strongly encourage you to read the entire investigation summaries contained in ILG’s report, as they provide important detail and insights to consider as we build an enhanced culture of governance throughout the Branch.

Synopsis of Investigations into the 16 Allegations on Brown's List

1. “No investigation was held when the anonymous allegations of sexism and harassment were made against the Chief Justice and [an IT leader]. She was told to destroy the letter.”

There was such a letter in 2017, but the allegations in the letter are not substantiated. Even so, the allegations should have been investigated at the time.

There is no evidence that anyone was directed to destroy the letter, but leadership either discounted or destroyed the letter.

2. “Judge sent pornographic video over judicial email”

The allegation that a judicial officer transmitted pornography in 2002 to another judicial officer over judicial email is not substantiated. There was no discipline imposed, but nothing seemed to warrant discipline.

3. “Negotiated a release agreement with a law clerk who accused her COA judge of harassment in order to keep the COA judge ‘safe’ during the Supreme Court Justice selection process per the Chief Justice.”

The allegation that a settlement agreement was negotiated to keep the judge “safe” during the nomination process is not substantiated.

The allegation that an agreement was negotiated or concealed by the Chief Justice or anyone else is also not substantiated.

HR and court administration failed to properly address other concerns raised by the clerk. Those concerns were unrelated to the unfounded allegation of harassment by the judge.

4. “Judge exposed and rubbed his hairy chest on a female employee’s back; no action taken against the judge; Judge is currently being considered for the Senior Judge Program.”

This incident occurred fifteen years ago, in 2007. It was reported to the Judicial Discipline Commission, which imposed a sanction it deemed appropriate. The judge’s conduct warranted more serious consequences.

(Note: Although the judge served in the Senior Judge Program for two years, his contract was terminated.)

5. “Current pending EEOC complaint against two justices.”

ILG was instructed not to investigate this matter because it was in litigation.

(Note: In February 2022, a federal district court judge dismissed the complaint, finding “definitively no” evidence of illegal discrimination.)

6. “Mindy recommended to [a chief judge] that it was in the best interest of the Branch to terminate [an employee] due to the sexual relationships he had with his staff. [The chief judge] stated that Mindy needed ‘to leave the courthouse and drive slowly out of town.’”

(Note: ILG concluded that this allegation is related to the next one. Therefore, ILG considered them together.)

Masias, then the SCAO HR director, investigated this matter approximately twelve years ago, when the complaint was first made.

The chief judge was extremely unhappy with how HR handled the investigation, believing the investigation took too long and was unnecessarily disruptive of court operations.

HR ultimately concluded that the underlying allegations of sexual misconduct were not substantiated. The chief judge acknowledged that he may have told Masias that she “was not welcome in [his] district,” reflecting his issues with her investigation methods.

7. “Was told by chief judges she needed to seek their permission to conduct harassment and discrimination investigations in Districts”

HR was directed to notify the judicial districts before commencing investigations there, or visiting for any other reason, but the allegation that this directive was made to dissuade proper complaints is not substantiated.

8. “Evidence a financial manager accessed personal information on various leaders . . . for no business reason; no discipline taken on him and he was promoted less than two years later to deputy director.”

ILG substantiated this allegation after considering competing statements about this twelve-year-old incident.

9. “Financial manager investigated twice for harassing behavior. Receives more staff and a better office. No mention of the complaints in his 2017 performance appraisal.”

HR investigated alleged harassing behavior by this manager in 2015, 2017, and 2021. HR found no sexual harassment, but ILG substantiated this allegation in all respects and concluded that HR and Finance Division management have been reluctant to take claims against this manager seriously.

10. “Director of FSD [Financial Services Division] complained about not working ‘even banker’s hours’ by staff. Staff of other division follow him to his bar, home, and track that he does not place time in PTO system and is seen at home at 3:00 pm often or at bar.”

These allegations were not substantiated, and ILG expressed concern that HR’s investigation of the allegations was inadequate, biased, and possibly retaliatory based on the director’s role in events culminating in Masias’s resignation.

The “bar” was run by the director’s brother, and the director received permission from the then State Court Administrator to help his brother with the books for the bar on the director’s time.

11. “CPO [Chief Probation Officer] takes picture of penis and sends to vendor; no disciplinary action taken; CPO has sex with a vendor on state time and on state property who later complains she felt she had to in order to keep her job; no disciplinary action taken.”

The probation officer in question, before his promotion to CPO, shared such a photo close in time to the dissolution of a long-term, consensual relationship with the vendor in 2012, but the allegation is misleading because this was not a workplace situation.

HR, through Masias and Brown, investigated the matter at the time. They concluded that the relationship was consensual and that the probation officer did not have a position of authority over the vendor. Therefore, no discipline was imposed.

ILG found that it is not substantiated that the probation officer had sex with the vendor on state time or on state property.

12. Consolidated into 11.

13. “Court Administrator accused of asking an employee to backdate a document, no disciplinary action taken.”

ILG tried to investigate this but found no information.

14. “Director of Court Services and FSD Director.”

ILG found this to be an incomplete statement that could not be investigated.

15. “CPO directing all staff to swat a female on the backside, no disciplinary action.”

The incident in question occurred during an all-hands meeting in 2018. The CPO joked about everyone spanking a female probation officer for leaving them to work in another district. The female probation officer said she thought it was a distasteful joke. No one swatted her.

HR investigated. There was no recommendation for discipline.

16. “Report from a Justice about why MM was not selected for the position: Insinuates the entire Supreme Court made the decision she did not get the SCA position based on her gender.”

The allegation that Masias was not selected for promotion to State Court Administrator because of her sex and/or sex stereotyping is not substantiated.

At the same time, however, the process by which Chris Ryan received the job was highly irregular.

A Path for Continued Change, Transparency & Accountability

Again, ILG’s 360-degree-view of Branch culture reiterates that the Colorado Judicial Branch is largely a good place to work, that we are all working hard to do the right thing. This is also the reality that I hear from judges and staff across the state every day.

But the findings also underscore an urgency to continue building on the improved reporting and oversight we've implemented over the last 19 months, beginning with new leadership throughout the State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO).

This investigation provides the Branch with a roadmap to remedy deficiencies:

From Report Page 120 ... "Our work in the Colorado Judicial Branch revealed several primary weaknesses in the workplace:

- The absence of shared cultural values, to which everyone is held accountable, as the driver for decisions;
- Insufficient avenues for confidential and safe reporting;
- Broadly stated fears of retaliation, and concerns that nothing is done in response to complaints of misconduct;
- A need for more transparency and accountability; and
- Insufficient (and insufficiently modern) training on workplace conduct issues.

Going forward, let me be clear about two things:

First, harassment and retaliation will not be tolerated, and everyone — appointed officials, senior executives and staff — will be held accountable. My colleagues on the Colorado Supreme Court and I, along with SCAO leadership, are totally committed to this, and we will continue to put the necessary tools in place to accomplish this.

Second, the ILG report reinforces the Troyer investigation findings that the Branch must "improve the legitimacy of the process for handling complaints."

As I said then, it isn't enough to simply have the processes of accountability in place. Our judges, their staffs, probation department, the legal community, elected officials, regulators and Coloradans who rely on our system of justice must know how we deal with allegations of misconduct.

They must have confidence that the system works, because if they don't it isn't working.

To that end, I have asked Justice Monica Marquez, who will be Colorado's next Chief Justice, and State Court Administrator Steven Vasconcellos to lead an assertive Colorado Judicial Branch Workplace Culture Initiative. While they will be leading this effort, the rest of the court and I will be laboring oars as well. Together, we will navigate the choppy waters we find ourselves in.

We will begin with a comprehensive review of the specific recommendations made by the two independent investigation teams to determine how we can further implement their suggestions.

More information will be forthcoming, and we will be involving many people across the department.

We thank ILG for conducting this investigation. And I thank all of you for your continued dedication and hard work for the people of Colorado.

OBJECTIVE & INTRODUCTION

On April 22, 2021, the Colorado Judicial Branch issued a Request for Proposal (“RFP”) seeking bids from independent investigators to examine allegations of misconduct at the Branch. These allegations included sixteen separate misconduct allegations, general allegations of a hostile work environment for women, and an allegation related to the procurement of a contract for services, awarded to former Chief of Staff, Mindy Masias. Investigations Law Group (ILG) submitted a bid in response to the RFP and was chosen on November 3, 2021, to conduct the investigation of the individually listed instances of alleged misconduct, and the allegations of a hostile work environment for women. The deadline for completing the work was initially set for April 15, 2022 but was extended to July 29, 2022 to accommodate the volume of interviews necessary to accommodate everyone who wanted to meet with us.

The scope of ILG’s work was threefold. First, ILG was commissioned to investigate each of the allegations raised in a two-page document prepared by former Human Resources Director Eric Brown and published in a Denver Post piece dated February 2021 by David Migoya.¹ These allegations included sixteen separate instances of alleged misconduct by judges, finance division employees, and probation division employees. Thirteen of these sixteen allegations were separately investigated and individual Report Summaries, corresponding to these allegation, follows in the first substantive section of this Report.²

The second component of ILG’s work was to conduct a comprehensive assessment of the workplace environment in the Judicial Branch, with a special focus on issues of hostile work environment based on sex / gender. We approached this component of the project using a holistic set of tools, including a culture survey that was sent out to each of the 4,133 employees in the Judicial Branch across Judicial Districts and Divisions. In addition to the culture survey, we conducted interviews with individuals who reached out to voluntarily share additional information relating to the workplace culture. We also gathered information about best practices in Judicial workplaces around the country and used that to inform our assessment of the judicial workplace here in Colorado.

Finally, we were asked to propose recommendations for improvement based upon the data we gathered in our culture assessment, as well as in our investigations. These recommendations, informed by our professional experience, were also to include consideration of the unique nature of the Judicial workplace as an organization. We have examined best practices in other Judicial Branches around the country and incorporated ideas from them, as well as from the many internal stakeholders we met with who expressed ideas about ways to improve the Judicial workplace in Colorado.

² Three allegations were not investigated, as described below.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

We would like to acknowledge the many members of the Judicial workplace who took the time to participate in our investigations, our survey, and our voluntary interviews. We interviewed front-line employees and staff members, directors, and employees in all but one of the Branch's 24 Judicial Districts and divisions. We interviewed Judges, Chief judges, Justices, staff, and appointed personnel. We received thoughtful feedback to our questions, and evidence that allowed us to reach firm findings in nearly all the separate investigations that were part of this project.

We would also like to thank our team at ILG who worked tirelessly to ensure that this project was done thoroughly, respectfully to all participants, and mindfully in terms of time and resources. None of this would have been possible without your assistance. We thank you.

INVESTIGATION REPORT SUMMARIES

Elizabeth R. Rita, Esq.

The individual Report Summaries of each of the separate issues we were tasked to examine follows in the next section of the report. Each investigation had elements of its own methodology – or set of steps that were followed to conduct the investigation. However, some aspects of the methodology were consistent across all of the investigations:

A. Methodology

The allegations that we investigated come from a document drafted in 2019 by former Human Resources Director, Eric Brown, containing a list of sixteen (16) distinct allegations of misconduct in the Judicial Branch (“the Eric Brown List”), as well as general allegations of a discriminatory workplace for women.³ Mr. Brown stated to colleagues at the time that the source of these allegations was former Chief of Staff, Mindy Masias. Mr. Brown verbally presented at least some of these allegations to the presiding Chief Justice and SCAO leadership in a meeting in late December 2018 or early January 2019.

Over the course of this project, one hundred sixty-eight people were interviewed, seven people submitted substantive written statement in lieu of interviewing, and at least twenty witnesses were interviewed two times (or more). Some individuals were identified as potential witnesses and were affirmatively contacted for interviews. Others reached out themselves and asked to participate in the process. We accommodated every witness who requested an interview.

I reached out to both Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown,⁴ via their counsels, to request interviews to obtain additional information on all the allegations in the Eric Brown List. Both Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown declined to meet.⁵

We collected and reviewed hundreds of documents for these investigations, specific to each individual matter. Some materials were provided by the Judicial Branch, some materials were provided by witnesses, and I searched for materials myself – both from witnesses I met with and in a database containing thousands of documents that have been gathered and produced for this and other investigations. Several allegations were decades old, making document gathering more difficult. Other allegations were well documented.

Pursuant to the contract for services, ILG committed to finishing work on all 16 investigations and the workplace assessment project no later than July 28, 2022. All investigations were completed, and all work was done prior to that deadline.

I prepared full reports, as well as Report Summaries, for 13 of the 16 separate allegations. Three allegations were not investigated for the following reasons:

³ Eric Brown List.

⁴ Where “I,” “me” or “my” is used in this section of our report, it is intended to refer to Ms. Rita.

- Allegation 5: “Current pending EEOC complaint against two Justices”: ILG was directed to remove this item from the scope of work, because the matter was in current litigation at the time we were retained. The matter was resolved during the pendency of our work.
- Allegation 13: Court Administrator accused of asking an employee to backdate a document, no disciplinary action taken”: We attempted to investigate this allegation but could find no data on it. Our work on this matter was hampered by the fact that the allegation contained little information, and no one we interviewed knew what event or events it referred to.
- Allegation 14: Director of Court Services and FSD Director”: This appears to be an incomplete statement, and as such it was not investigated.

As part of our agreement, we agreed to produce a final work product suitable for public disclosure. Accordingly, I created Report Summaries from the full reports for each investigation I conducted. These Report Summaries retain the important substantive data I relied upon in reaching my findings, but present the data without as much quotation and in a more abbreviated format. This was done to ensure that confidential information, such as material that would identify witnesses or disclose matters prohibited from disclosure by state law or privilege, could be protected. This was also done so that the results of the investigation could be more easily read and digested than would be the case with the full reports, some which exceed 20 pages in length. Any data that the Judicial Branch considers to be confidential or privileged information, and that I included in my Report Summaries, may appear below as redacted portions within my Report Summaries. The Judicial Branch was responsible for any such redactions pursuant to its independent assessment of confidentiality and/or privilege.

Consistent with my role as an impartial third-party investigator, I determined the list of witnesses, the documents, and any other data required to investigate each separate allegation. No one at the Judicial Branch attempted to, or in fact did, influence or steer the fact-finding or preparation of my full reports or Report Summaries. While the Judicial Branch was provided the opportunity to identify factual errors or typographical issues prior to reports and report summaries being finalized, this review was explicitly limited to proofing and accuracy. Matters of substance, style and ultimate conclusions were not reviewable and were not revised.

I weighed and considered evidence on both sides of each issue to reach findings in each case. Because Report Summaries are, by definition, not full reports, they do not contain all the evidence I gathered and evaluated in each case. They summarize the material evidence and contain my analysis of that evidence, and my findings.

In reaching my findings, I used a preponderance of the evidence standard. This means that an allegation was substantiated if it was more likely than not to have occurred. Conversely, an allegation was not substantiated if it was less likely than so to have occurred.

B. Overview of the investigations of the Eric Brown List of misconduct

The misconduct set forth in the Eric Brown List falls into three categories: allegations of Judicial misconduct; allegations of finance department employee misconduct; and allegations of probation department employee misconduct. I investigated each set of facts as a separate matter, and individual Report Summaries of that work follows, under these three categories. While each matter is unique, there were some important patterns that arose from this assignment.

In each of the 13 matters I individually investigated, there was at least a grain of truth in the allegation, or the allegation was substantiated on some level. In other words, these were not fictitious events that my investigation disproved.

However, in many of these matters, I also found two important additional things to be true. First, the majority of these instances was responded to in some way by the Judicial Branch. In most instances, Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown were the individuals responding. They investigated many of these allegations and in some cases, recommended actions to be taken (or in some cases recommended no personnel action). These were not generally instances where misconduct was ignored without some response. In many cases, there is significant documentation in the files about what happened. In one instance, the Colorado Commission for Judicial Discipline was notified of the situation, became involved, and acted to assess the situation and impose discipline.

Second, many of the allegations leave out important context, or misstate some facts. The allegation may say, for instance, that “no discipline occurred,” but leaves out the fact that HR did not recommend discipline or the situation did not really merit it. For this reason, the ultimate findings in most of these cases were more nuanced than simply findings that the allegation was – or was not – substantiated.

Finally, it should be noted that the Eric Brown List contains allegations that span more than 20 years of history at the Judicial Branch and encompass 24 separate Judicial Districts, containing more than 4,000 employees and judicial officers. Sixteen allegations of wrongdoing over 20 years and in the context of thousands of employees is not a statistically significant number. It, on its own, does not suggest a systemic problem of harassment within the Branch.

That said, my investigations revealed some problems in how some of these matters were handled (or not handled appropriately) by the Judicial Branch. There are instances where proper investigations were not done, or discipline that was recommended was not proportionate, or that other failures of process and accountability occurred. I point these problems out, directly, in my Report Summaries, below.

Report Summaries of Allegations

Allegations of Judicial Misconduct (1-4, 6, 7, and 16)

Allegation One: Anonymous Letter

“No investigation was held when the anonymous allegations of sexism and harassment were made against the Chief Justice and [an IT leader]. She was told to destroy the letter.”

A. Methodology

I determined that these events occurred in 2017 when an anonymous letter appeared in the mailboxes of the Justices of the Supreme Court. The letter included allegations of sexism and harassment from the Chief Justice and allegations of poor leadership by an IT leader. These allegations were not investigated by HR or anyone else. My investigation did not corroborate that Ms. Masias or any other “she” was told to destroy the letter.

I interviewed fourteen (14) people with knowledge about this situation. These included the former Chief Justice who was the subject of the letter; the IT leader whom the letter was about; other members of the Supreme Court at the time; attorneys from Judicial who had recollections of this situation; the State Court Administrator at the time of these events and his predecessor; and several people who were present at the IT Standing Committee Meeting in question.

There were almost no documents about these events. I sought out documents from SCAO’s HR department, the Judicial Legal Department, and members of the Supreme Court at the time. I also personally searched through databases of materials produced in response to subpoenas issued in related proceedings. There are no copies of “the letter,” no HR records and no investigation or other “files” on the matter. There are several records relating to IT Standing Committee Meetings, which became relevant to these allegations.

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 10, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

1. The Anonymous Letter

In August 2017,⁶ each of the sitting Justices on the Supreme Court received an anonymous letter in hard copy form. The letter was delivered to their mailboxes at the Supreme Court. According to witnesses who remember this letter, it contained allegations against the Chief Justice and a member of leadership in the IT Department. The allegations arose in large part from two IT Standing Committee Meetings in January and February 2017, both of which the Chief Justice attended. Witnesses (and perhaps the allegation) have conflated these two meetings into a single meeting, but the minutes set forth an overview of what occurred at each meeting:

[January 2017 Meeting Minutes]: . . . [during presentation on Two-Factor Authentication] The Chief Justice expressed strong concern that several judges have told her that technology has made doing their jobs more and more difficult. She added that the more complicated we make it to sign-on, the less likely that they will do it when working from home. She said she believes that productivity has reduced as these technological demands have increased.

[February 2017 Meeting Minutes]: . . . [The Chief Justice] asked what the history of the committee was and who set the priorities for ITS until now. [The State Court Administrator] answered that he worked with and set the priorities for ITS but with so many groups with opposing agendas, prioritizing projects can be difficult. The Chief Justice suggested that the members of the committee introduce themselves and share their reason for being on it.

Several of the (then) Justices had a strong recollection of the letter and what it contained. Primarily, the letter complained about the Chief Justice's remarks at both meetings. "It mentioned [the Chief Justice] being rough on IT staff." It said that she "focused her ire on the women in the room in an IT meeting where [the Chief Justice] was upset." One Justice described it as "a hostile, screaming letter."⁷

There were also allegations relating to other sex-based misconduct in the letter. It contended that the Chief Justice "appointed more men than women to chief judge spots," that she was holding women back in leadership opportunities, and that she had chosen a man instead of a woman for the State Court Administrator's position. It also alleged that a female clerk left because she felt mistreated.

Regarding the IT leader, witnesses remember that the letter complained he was a poor leader and "incompetent." However, the gist of the letter was focused on the Chief Justice.

The Chief Justice did not have a strong memory of the letter but does remember an IT meeting she described as "disruptive." At the meeting she recalled asking people "why they were there," and whether they wanted to work on the tasks the IT group was facing.

2. The IT Standing Committee Meetings and Other Concerns Noted in the Letter

Five people present at the IT Standing Committee Meetings had detailed recollections of what transpired. They remember the Chief Justice being "so angry at our team," and asking people why they were on the committee. One person remembered the Chief Justice interrupting a woman employee who was presenting on "2FA"⁸ to tell her "You are focusing on the wrong things. You need to make our judges' jobs easier, not harder."

Aside from that example regarding the 2FA presentation, none of the witnesses from the meetings stated a belief that the Chief Justice focused her frustration on the women in the group more so than the men. In fact, they all shared the Chief's frustration with the direction and leadership in the IT group. As one individual put it, “I found her frustration something that I resonated with in terms of being frustrated at not understanding, are the courts driving technology or is technology driving the courts?” This person continued, “I actually thought the meeting was useful and it really did spur some structural and leadership changes at ITS.” The Chief’s remarks “were not personal,” but were her “trying to motivate people.” When I asked one witness if they thought the Chief was focusing more on the women in the group than on the men, they said, “That is ludicrous.” Another person said, “I thought a lot of it was pointed at the [male IT leader] . . . and honestly, she was right.”

⁷ Throughout this report, I cite to some witness statements in quotations. These remarks are taken from my notes our meetings. While my notes are not verbatim transcripts, they are materially accurate records of what was said.

⁸ Two Factor Authentication.

This frustration with the performance of the IT group is corroborated by draft memoranda I found, showing that the State Court Administrator was contemplating comprehensive written performance plans for at least two leaders in the IT department later in 2017. While these lengthy memoranda are not signed and do not appear to have been finalized, they set forth four single-spaced pages of criticisms of the performance in the IT group. These criticisms included a “lack of a clear vision for the future of our case management system,” a “lack of forecasting regarding the sustainability of certain programs,” a “lack of vision and long-range plans,” and poor communication.

With respect to the other concerns in the letter, I found no corroboration for allegations that the Chief deprived women colleagues of opportunities, mistreated women colleagues specifically, or purposefully chose more men than women for chief judge roles.

No one I interviewed provided examples indicating that the Chief Justice deprived women in leadership of opportunities. Several witnesses said that she treated her women clerks well and her favorite clerks were women. I could not find evidence to corroborate this portion of the allegation.

Most of her colleagues – men and women – described the Chief Justice as difficult to work with at times. However, no one I interviewed said they observed her being hard only on women colleagues. Instead, men as well as women described receiving negative attention, from the Chief, at times. The Chief Justice was described as having extremely exacting standards, working quickly, and being tough on those who did not (or could not) act as decisively and quickly as she wanted them to. Her demeanor was described as blunt, direct, and harsh at times in expressing frustration or impatience with both men and women colleagues. Men and women gave specific examples where they felt the brunt of this kind of attention from the Chief.

With respect to her decisions to appoint chief judges, records show the Chief Justice appointed three men and one woman to chief judge positions during her tenure. As an initial matter, it should be noted that the roster of individuals who are interested in the chief judge position is relatively slim. The position is limited to those judges in a District who express an interest in serving. The position involves significant additional work – taking on responsibility for all the administration of the District, attending meetings, and being responsible for budget and personnel – for no additional pay. More than one person I interviewed identified this position as one of the hardest jobs in the entire Branch. For these reasons, people were not universally enthusiastic about being considered for this job.

In every appointment she made, the Chief Justice reached out to the Districts for feedback. She sought feedback from other judges, professional staff, and employees in each District. This feedback was a heavy component of each choice and in one instance, the Chief Justice appointed a judge who was not her pick because he was the clear preference of the District personnel.

In the available records and witness memories, I found two women candidates who were interested in chief judge roles but who were not chosen by the Chief Justice. One woman judge was described by the State Court Administrator, who assisted with the process at the time, as not having as much support from the District as the successful male candidate did. The second woman candidate was not chosen because she was under a judicial performance management plan at the time. Of the seven judges who expressed interest in the last two picks the Chief made, six were men and one was a woman. The Chief chose one man in the District where no women applied and selected the woman for the second open position she filled.

All these decisions involved a significant degree of collaboration between the Chief Justice, her administrative staff, and the Districts themselves. No appointment was made without soliciting input from the District where the new chief judge would serve. The evidence suggests that this feedback was of primary importance to the Chief Justice in these decisions.

3. Response to the Letter

At some point, Ms. Masias and the HR department were made aware of the letter, but it is not clear how this occurred. She and Mr. Brown reached out to the IT leader named in the letter to ask him about it. They “handed [him] the letter” and asked him if he knew who had written it. He had never seen it before, so answered that he did not know who wrote it. The IT leader did not have a strong memory of what the letter contained but like other witnesses, remembered that it focused on an IT Standing Committee Meeting (or Meetings) and the Chief Justice’s remarks to the IT group.

Four Justices remembered that there was some discussion of the letter among the Chief Justice and Associate Justices after the letter was received. “[The Chief] got us together to talk about it. I don’t remember very much. . . . I am pretty sure she presented this and said, ‘What do you think?’ I think it was agreement of the Court that there was not anything there.”

Ultimately, there was no investigation conducted or any other response to the letter. As one Justice recalled, “We left it with the Chief Justice to determine the response. This was consistent with our practice at the time.” Another remembered, “[A]s was typical at the time, we deferred to the Chief as to any response.”

With respect to the allegation that Ms. Masias was directed to destroy the letter, no one had any direct evidence on this point. One Justice recalled, “[The letter] went to everyone including the Chief. Mindy was made aware of it . . . [the Chief Justice] might have instructed Mindy to throw it away because the Chief Justice was dismissive of it, not that she felt there was anything to it. To the contrary. It was someone overreacting to her speaking tough with IT.” Another Justice said, “[The Chief Justice] was dismissive of the letter and may have conveyed the same to Mindy.”

An attorney in the Legal Department remembered speaking to someone at the time (they could not remember who) about a possible investigation of this matter. This attorney recommended that no investigation be conducted. “These were random allegations I heard about, and the Chief Justice was not investigated because there was nothing to investigate. I just remember it was anonymous, nothing factual, that’s all I remember. I told this person, ‘You can’t investigate a complaint with no facts.’”

I asked the Justices (both current and former) if they believed the letter ought to have been investigated. With the benefit of hindsight, many said they wished it had been managed differently. As summarized by one Justice, “In a general view, I don’t think you should ask the person who is accused to investigate themselves.” Another said, “I wish [the Chief Justice] had taken it more seriously.”

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

The Judicial Branch anti-harassment and Anti-Discrimination policy at the time of these events reads:

(4) Investigation. Reports of harassment and discrimination from employees warranting an investigation shall be referred to the Human Resources Division of the State Court Administrator’s Office for investigation. In some instances, an initial inquiry will be completed as a primary review by the Human Resources Division to determine whether there is cause to conduct a full investigation. A full investigation, at a minimum, will include conferences with the complainant, the alleged perpetrator, and any witnesses to the incident. Any party involved in a harassment complaint may submit any documentation they believe to be relevant to the matter at issue to the investigating authority.

My investigation revealed evidence that corroborates many elements of this allegation. It is corroborated that members of the Supreme Court each received a hard copy anonymous letter in their mailbox in the summer of 2017. It is substantiated that it contained allegations of sexism and harassment by the sitting Chief Justice and to a lesser extent, a leader in the IT department. It is substantiated that the complaint arose from the Chief Justice’s actions during two IT Standing Committee meetings in early 2017. At these meetings, the Chief Justice directed frustration at the group for their failure to meet the needs of their primary clients – the courts. This includes one example of the Chief stopping a presentation by a woman on 2FA. It is also substantiated that no investigation of the allegations in the letter occurred, despite Branch policy requiring one. Instead of treating this letter as a complaint that required an investigation, it was largely discounted. Matters were left to the Chief Justice—the person complained about—to manage.

Conversely, I did not find evidence to corroborate that the Chief Justice likely mistreated anyone, whether in the IT meetings or elsewhere, because of sexism or unlawful harassment. While witnesses described the Chief Justice’s frustration with IT and her brusque demeanor, no one stated a belief that her behavior was focused on anyone because of sex. The volume of evidence suggests that the Chief could be direct and brusque with men as well as women.

In addition, the evidence suggests that filling the chief judge roles is not easy and there is not a wide variety of candidates to select from. I found that the Chief Justice employed a collaborative process in making her appointments to chief judge positions, heavily weighing District feedback. There is insufficient evidence to suggest that there was any sex-based pattern to those choices.

There is likewise insufficient evidence to corroborate the allegation that Ms. Masias was told to “destroy” the letter. That said, it is likely that she received a clear message that the Chief was dismissive of the letter and what it contended. Certainly, no one told Ms. Masias to investigate this letter or treat it as a serious matter.

This dismissiveness leads to my final point. Regardless of whether the Justices found the allegations credible on first reading or not, the letter should have been investigated. It set forth an employee complaint of potentially unlawful behavior by the Chief Executive of the Branch. The Branch’s policy clearly states that such matters “shall be referred to the Human Resources Division of the State Court Administrator’s Office for investigation.” Even without such a clearly worded policy, the decision not to investigate this matter fails to meet basic standards for HR, legal, and/or investigation best practices. Complaints about any respondent, no matter how highly placed, should be independently assessed and investigated if they implicate the organization’s legal obligations to maintain a harassment free workplace for employees. This is particularly true where, as here, an organization intends to send the message that no one employee or judicial officer is above the law.

2. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The allegation that an anonymous letter stating sexism and harassment complaints against the Chief Justice and IT leader was received by the Supreme Court is Substantiated. I note that the underlying contentions in the anonymous letter, that the Chief Justice behaved in a way that implicates sexism and prohibited harassment, are Not Substantiated.
- The allegation that the letter was not investigated is Substantiated and this is problematic under the Branch’s Anti-Harassment and Anti-Discrimination policy.
- The allegation that Ms. Masias (or another “she”) was directed to destroy the complaint letter is Not Substantiated. While I found no material evidence to corroborate this contention, the letter was discounted – if not physically destroyed – by leadership.

Allegation Two: Pornographic Images

Judge sent pornographic video over judicial email; nothing happened to him; he was appointed chief judge less than two years later. Judge sent a video over Judicial Branch email to another judge. The video depicts a woman performing sexual acts on a bald man's head. The judge suffered no repercussions for sending the video, and in fact, was promoted to chief judge a few months later. Turned the matter over to the Chief Justice who took no action.

A. Methodology

I determined that between 2000 and 2002, a judge in the Branch received a 5-10 second “GIF” showing two people, large breasts, and a bald head.⁹ Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown did an initial HR inquiry into this matter. However, the evidence does not support the allegation that the judge in question sent the GIF to another judge over judicial email. Moreover, I found no evidence to show that Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown recommended that discipline occur or that they reported this situation to the Commission on Judicial Discipline, as would have been required if this had occurred as stated. I located no evidence suggesting that the Chief Justice was made aware of this matter and failed to act. The judge in question was eventually promoted to chief judge in his District.

I interviewed eight (8) people who had knowledge about this situation, including both the Judge who allegedly sent this material and the Judge who allegedly received it. I also interviewed personnel from legal, who remembered this situation, and two people from the Commission on Judicial Discipline who were able to search for records (and did not find any). I was able to determine what likely happened from these interviews.

I did not locate any documents that were relevant to the allegation. I sought out documents from the State Court Administrator’s Office (“SCAO”) HR department, Judicial’s Legal Department, the Commission on Judicial Discipline, and by personally searching through databases of materials produced in response to subpoenas issued in related proceedings. There were no copies of any investigation materials, the image(s) in question, or other records.

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 10, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

I found and interviewed the Judge who is alleged to have sent this material. He remembered this situation well:

⁹ An animated GIF is an image encoded in graphics interchange format (GIF), which contains a number of images or frames in a single file and is described by its own graphic control extension. The frames are presented in a specific order to convey animation. An animated GIF can loop endlessly or stop after a few sequences.

I remember this situation. I did receive an email with some kind of video in it, unsolicited. Because I knew the person who sent it and I thought it was just an email, I opened it and low and behold there it was. I can tell you that it did involve a man and a woman in a bathtub and that is the only thing I saw because I turned it off and deleted it. The person who sent it to me passed away this year. He did not work for Judicial.

According to the Judge, Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown came to speak to him about this material sometime after he received it. They had the video on Ms. Masias's laptop and when she showed it to the Judge, he told her he wondered how she had that material because he had deleted it. She told him, "You sent it to [another judge, same first name as me]" and the Judge replied, "That is not true... What I did do was I wrote an email to the person who sent it to me and said please don't do that again." The Judge said, "[H]e never did ever send me anything like that again. I told him I didn't appreciate him sending me stuff like that. I gave them [Masias and Brown] a copy of that email that I sent him. I assume Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown still have it. And they left." The Judge heard nothing further about this, and I could not find any investigative file, investigation report or documentation of any report to the CCRD on this matter.

I also interviewed the Judge who allegedly received this material. He shares the same first name as the judge who received this video from the outside sender. He denied receiving such material or ever talking to Ms. Masias or Mr. Brown about it:

I do not recall ever getting something like that. I would have immediately emailed the chief judge and said this is inappropriate. I don't believe I was sent that. I would have been offended. I knew Mindy she was great. We talked at judicial conference. I don't know who Eric Brown is. I never had a conversation with her about that. . . . I not only do not remember, this did not happen. I did not talk to Mindy about this.

The Judge who was accused of sending this material said that it could be possible that he accidentally forwarded this material to the judge whose name he shares. He indicated that months later, he was trying to forward some material to himself at home, and this other judge's name auto populated in his outlook message. "I thought I'll be darned, maybe that happened – and maybe I did accidentally send it to [the other judge] when what I was trying to do was send it to my home computer so I could send it back to the guy who sent it to me. I didn't want to use my judicial email to do that. I never got the email on my home computer. That is the only thing I can figure out."

The Commission on Judicial Discipline has no records of this situation. I interviewed two Executive Directors, both of whose tenure occurred after these events. The first said that the records prior to his tenure were not well kept and it was possible that a complaint came in and the documents were lost. He conducted a thorough search but could not locate any records of this situation being reported to the Commission. The second Executive Director undertook a search as well and could not locate any materials relating to this situation.

At the time of these events, there was a Memorandum of Understanding (the "MOU") between the HR department and the Commission on Judicial Discipline that imposed an obligation on HR to report such matters to the Commission. Here, it does not appear that Ms. Masias or Mr. Brown made such a report.

I found no evidence to corroborate that this matter was brought to the attention of a Chief Justice. All the former Chief Justices I interviewed were asked about this situation and none of them remembered hearing about it.

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

The evidence does not support a finding that this set of events took place as framed in the allegation. This is true for three reasons. First, the statement of the sending Judge (the alleged sender of the GIF) is credible, and he denied sending the GIF to any judicial colleague, particularly purposefully. Second, the ostensible recipient Judge denied receiving the GIF and credibly denied having any conversation with Ms. Masias about it. Third, the absence of an investigation report, or a report of misconduct to the CCJD, indicates that Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown did not see this event as necessitating a serious response. This suggests that the transmission did not occur, as alleged. The sum of this evidence does not support a substantiated finding on a preponderance of the evidence basis.

The alleged sending Judge, who retired some years ago, agreed to speak to me while under no obligation to do so. In his interview, he admitted that he received this GIF without diminishing its inappropriateness, affecting a poor memory about the event, or trying to minimize the situation. He owned that he received this material, that it was not the kind of material that should have been coming into his judicial email, and that he spoke to Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown about it. The Judge did not adamantly deny that he sent this material, and in fact acknowledged that he could have accidentally sent it because of an autofill mistake with his email. He could have denied this. Instead, he voluntarily had a difficult conversation with an investigator tasked with looking into judicial misconduct and in doing so, directly admitted somewhat embarrassing facts. He acknowledged he might have inadvertently done something problematic, while providing a believable reason why this could have occurred. The Judge demonstrated that he was not trying to evade responsibility or hide anything. The sum of this evidence strengthens his credibility.

The alleged sending Judge's credibility is further enhanced by the statement of the alleged recipient judge, who is firm that he did not receive this material and even more adamant that he never spoke to Ms. Masias about it. This suggests one of two things: the material was never sent to the alleged recipient, as the purported sending judge contends; or it was sent inadvertently and somehow HR intercepted it without the alleged recipient's knowledge. Without speaking to Ms. Masias, I cannot determine which of these is more likely to have occurred. Either way, the alleged recipient firmly denied receiving this material and this was a strong piece of evidence weighing against this allegation.

Finally, the evidence suggests that whatever information Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown gathered in looking into this situation, it was not enough to trigger a full investigation or a report of judicial misconduct to the CCRD. Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown did not interview the alleged recipient, which would have been a critical step in a full-fledged investigation into this event. They did not create an investigation report. Further, Ms. Masias knew how to report judicial misconduct to the CCRD because she had done it before, but no records were found indicating that a report was made. If Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown elected not to move forward with a full investigation or CCRD report, as evidence indicates, this suggests that they did not believe they had cause to do so. Ms. Masias was an experienced HR practitioner and investigator at the time, and she completed comprehensive reports of other misconduct allegations I am investigating. The absence of such a report here supports a finding that Ms. Masias thought this matter insufficiently significant to fully investigate or to notify the CCJD about.

2. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find

- The allegation that a Judicial Officer transmitted inappropriate material to another Judicial Officer over Judicial email is Not Substantiated.
- It is Substantiated that no discipline against the alleged sending judge ensued here but as noted above, this was not likely inappropriate. Discipline does not appear to have been recommended by HR and was likely not called for under these facts.

Allegation Three: Release Agreement with Law Clerk

“Negotiated a release agreement with a law clerk who accused her COA judge of harassment in order to keep the COA judge ‘safe’ during the selection Supreme Court Justice selection process per the Chief Justice.”

A. Methodology

My investigation determined that these events happened during the period of September 2013 to August 2014. While the investigation corroborated certain portions of the allegation, I did not find that the evidence supports a conclusion that a release agreement was signed to keep a Court of Appeals judge “safe” in a Supreme Court selection process. This allegation misstates certain facts and omits essential information.

I interviewed seventeen (17) people with knowledge about this situation and received written response to questions from an 18th individual. I interviewed the (then) Court of Appeals Judge involved in this situation, members of the Judicial Nominating Commission at this time, the Chief Justice at that time, and members of the legal and HR teams who were aware of this situation and assisted in its resolution. I met with the HR representative who interviewed the woman law clerk—on whose behalf her male co-clerk went to HR with the harassment complaint. This HR representative also interviewed the male co-clerk at the time of these events. I interviewed attorneys who weighed in on the situation and helped advise on next steps at the time.

I reached out to the woman law clerk and her male co-clerk for interviews. The woman law clerk did not respond to four attempts to reach her, including reaching out via a family member. The male co-clerk responded through his attorney and declined an interview but provided answers in writing to questions posed via email.

I sought out records relating to this situation and found a large amount of documentary evidence from both the Court of Appeals Judge this relates to and the Office of the State Court Administrator. These records included email and other communication, audio recordings of interviews with the woman law clerk as well as her male co-clerk, records from the Judicial Nominating Commission for the Supreme Court nomination process at issue, records relating to the law clerk’s leave of absence, records relating to the law clerk’s compensation, an Agreement and Release of Claims entered into between Judicial and the woman law clerk, and correspondence from Ms. Masias indicating the allegations of harassment made by the woman law clerk were “unfounded.”

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 10, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

The woman law clerk was hired on August 19, 2013. Early in her employment with the Branch, her male co-clerk invited her out socially to meet the clerk who preceded her (“her predecessor clerk”). Her male co-clerk thought it would be helpful for woman law clerk to meet the person who had held her job previously. He also knew the woman law clerk was new in Denver and did not know many people. He invited the woman law clerk out for an evening with her predecessor clerk (and his girlfriend), and she accepted. The four went out on September 11, 2013.

There is no allegation that there was any inappropriate behavior at this social event. After the social gathering, when co-clerk was dropping woman law clerk off at home, she told him she was uncomfortable with their Judge. She said he had “touched her shoulder.” Male co-clerk was concerned by this statement.

The next day, he met with the woman law clerk and told her he would go to Human Resources with her, or for her, to report her concerns. She told him she was okay with him going to HR and he did so that day, reporting the statements woman law clerk had made to him.

HR started an immediate inquiry. An HR team member interviewed the male co-clerk and the woman law clerk on September 12, 2013. The interviews were recorded, and I listened to them. In the recording, the woman law clerk said that the Judge “touched her on the arm (once) when I first met him” and sent “jokey” texts to her and her co-clerk at night. She said she could not remember what the texts said precisely but recalled there was a joking discussion about wearing shorts in the office. She said she thought her co-clerk wanted to make it seem as though they were dating, and she objected to him making their relationship more personal. The woman law clerk also said she felt a difference in behavior towards her from the Court of Appeals Judge, starting a week before, when he “stopped talking to me about the work.” She said he and the male co-clerk would speak in the mornings and “ignore” her.

Ms. Masias interviewed the Judge on September 15, 2013. She initially asked him if he had any information about the woman law clerk’s allegations regarding her co-clerk: “She said, ‘There’s been an allegation against your clerk.’ The gist was that [the co-clerk] was showing her unwarranted attention – asking her to go out to bars- asking to walk her home from clerk happy hour.” According to the Judge, “[I]t was a really short conversation, 5-10 minutes.” The Judge said, “Toward the end she then said, ‘Was there some issue of you touching her elbow, even inadvertently?’ I remember that vividly. I said ‘No.’ That was about the size of that. [The woman law clerk] is a very nice woman, a really introverted shy person, a person who needs space. I would have been extremely careful. I was certain I had not touched her elbow. She said, ‘Thank you we will let you know if we need anything.’”

According to the Judge, Ms. Masias returned the same day about two hours later, and told him that the woman law clerk had disclaimed her allegation about him. He stated Ms. Masias told him, “I just want to let you know we have talked to [the woman law clerk] and she said you have never touched her elbow.” “That was the last I heard about anything relating to my involvement in this.” He was asked about the touch on the arm, but not about “jokey” texts, discussions of wearing shorts, or the allegation that he “ignored” woman law clerk.

The woman law clerk went out on administrative leave, which started on the date she interviewed with HR. She was out on leave for one month. It is unclear who decided upon or authorized the leave.

While the woman law clerk was out on leave, the Court of Appeals Judge interviewed for a seat on the Colorado Supreme Court. He had submitted his application on September 13, 2013, two days before he was aware of this harassment complaint. He interviewed on either October 8th or 9th, a day or two before the woman law clerk returned from leave. He was not selected as a finalist. According to the Judge and the commissioners I interviewed from the Supreme Court Nominating Commission, this matter was not raised in the interviews.

I could not find any evidence that further work was done on the HR inquiry after the initial three interviews. Neither of the clerks were re-interviewed, no additional witnesses were interviewed, and the Judge was not re-interviewed after his initial meeting with Ms. Masias on September 15, 2013. There is no investigation file or report.

When the woman law clerk returned from leave on October 10, 2013, she was placed in a different assignment. A decision was made to change her work assignment in discussions with the Human Resources department, the Legal Department, and the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals. She was moved out of the chambers where she had been hired and was made the “Senior Judge Clerk.” She provided clerking assistance to all the Senior Court of Appeals judges and shared an office space with the clerk of the court.

This new assignment did not prove successful for the woman law clerk. According to the clerk of the court, she began exhibiting attendance problems. The woman law clerk reached out with concerns about her new role on April 10, 2014, and raised concerns of unlawful treatment in her reassignment:

It's actually illegal to have an incomparable job to your original one after reporting sexual harassment (even though someone reported it on my behalf), so I don't think I should have moved from being a lawyer to being a secretary when I came back from the administrative leave (which I think I probably shouldn't have been put on). I was trying to go along with everything to be agreeable, but it gave me a huge career problem that I didn't end up getting the legal experience that I had originally intended, and I have no job reference for legal work right now. I had actually been considering talking to human resources about it again recently anyway. . . . I feel like I need to straighten out my job situation again with human resources and was wondering if you think that would be the next best step.¹⁰

The recipient of this email had begun working with HR and the Chief Judge about a response when the woman law clerk sent an email two days later to Ms. Masias saying the situation “has resolved itself.”

Two months later, the woman law clerk sent several emails out over a 24-hour period referencing problems with her assignment, the previous concerns she had, and her belief this reassigned clerkship would hurt her career prospects. Among other things, she said, “I probably can't be a lawyer because I wouldn't go to bars with [my co-clerk] all year or he would throw me under the bus (to eliminate the job competition not because of attraction) by reporting himself and [the Court of Appeals judge] to human resources (I do not think this was sane behavior and therefore do not judge him for it), but I'm not completely sure what to do next.” She said, 19 minutes later, “And if being [her co-clerk's] fake girlfriend for a year was the price I needed to pay to be a lawyer, of course, it wasn't worth it." She accused HR of trying to "cover for" her male co-clerk and said that "[A]s long as anyone retaliates against me [] HR can't help me anyway."

The woman law clerk asked for the remainder of her clerkship to be served from home so she could look for another job. Two days later, the Chief Judge granted that request. He wrote a letter to the woman law clerk thanking her for her work and stating that she would be paid through the end of her agreed-upon clerkship. He also said, "Further, we will place you on paid administrative leave as of today's date to allow you time to explore future employment opportunities per your request."

On June 26, 2014, there was an exchange of emails about her photograph being sent to State Patrol and about restricting her ability to send emails to members of the Judicial Branch. On June 27, 2014, Ms. Masias asked for access to the woman law clerk's email saying it was a time sensitive situation because of safety concerns.¹¹

One member of the legal team stated they were "appalled" with how this situation "had come down":

She files a complaint and then she is penalized by putting her off in a corner. I know they thought that was a good idea, but I think that was traumatizing. Legal wasn't consulted about putting her in a different position. I was not involved until the [family member] reached out [to the Legal Department employee]

The referenced family member of hers, who is an attorney, reached out to the Judicial Branch about negotiating an agreement that would give the woman law clerk a clean reference for the year and the chance to put this experience behind her [according to the attorney for Judicial who negotiated the agreement]. A release agreement was negotiated between the family member (on behalf of the clerk) and the lawyer for the Judicial Branch. It was signed on August 4, 2014. The agreement provided the woman law clerk would be paid through the end of her clerkship year, which was scheduled to end on August 31, 2014, and would receive a good reference. Both these contingencies were fulfilled.

The attorney who negotiated the agreement on behalf of the Judicial Branch indicated that the main concerns during the creation of the release were the recent statements about retaliation by the woman law clerk, and not the earlier allegations of harassment, which Ms. Masias had determined were unfounded. They said:

In this case – I don't remember ever thinking it was a sexual harassment claim against the judge. There was some discomfort with the clerk and maybe the judge favored the male clerk. I can't remember any facts that he sexually harassed her. I may not have been told those facts.

But it was a really bad way to address her concerns – she was in a way arguably retaliated against. I don't think she actually was and I think instead that they didn't know what to do with her. But it was a bad call unless she asked for this different assignment and wanted to do something like that.

¹¹ No one else I interviewed remembered what the specific safety concerns were about.

In an email from July 2014, Ms. Masias made the following statement about her finding in the HR inquiry:

Jerry is out for the next week, so I will share my thoughts. . . . As far as the gag order, I don't think I feel comfortable giving on this either since she can discuss that she filed a complaint against the judge of sexual harassment, but she doesn't need to divulge that it was unfounded. This would be so damaging for the judge. (Emphasis added.)

Finally, the allegation states the settlement agreement with the woman law clerk was entered to “[K]eep the Court of Appeals judge ‘safe’ during the selection Supreme Court Justice selection process per the Chief Justice.” (Emphasis added.) I interviewed both the sitting Chief Justice at this time as well as the person who was poised to assume that position several months later. Neither one acknowledged any agreement or plan to settle this complaint, or otherwise keep it quiet to keep this Court of Appeals Judge “safe.” No other witness or document provided corroboration for this allegation.

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

The Judicial Branch Anti-Harassment and Anti-Discrimination Policy in effect at the time of these events reads:

(4) Investigation. Reports of harassment and discrimination from employees warranting an investigation shall be referred to the Human Resources Division of the State Court Administrator’s Office for investigation. In some instances, an initial inquiry will be completed as a primary review by the Human Resources Division to determine whether there is cause to conduct a full investigation. A full investigation, at a minimum, will include conferences with the complainant, the alleged perpetrator, and any witnesses to the incident. Any party involved in a harassment complaint may submit any documentation they believe to be relevant to the matter at issue to the investigating authority.

The credible evidence in this investigation does not support the allegation. This is so for three primary reasons. The timeline does not support a substantiated finding; the evidence does not corroborate that the harassment complaint, which was ultimately unfounded, was concealed; and the release agreement was more likely than not motivated by the later concerns the woman law clerk raised.

First, the allegation that a settlement agreement was negotiated to protect the Court of Appeals Judge in his application for a seat on the Colorado Supreme Court is refuted by the timeline. The Court of Appeals Judge applied for the Supreme Court seat on August 13, 2013, and a final decision was reached in the nomination process on October 25, 2013. The Branch began negotiating a release agreement with the clerk no earlier than June 26, 2014 – eight months after the selection process was complete. The timing is persuasive evidence that the agreement was not negotiated to protect the Court of Appeals Judge in his Supreme Court selection process.

Second, there is no credible evidence that the harassment complaint was improperly concealed during the Supreme Court nomination process. On the date the Court of Appeals Judge interviewed for the Supreme Court, he credibly did not believe there was any ongoing HR investigation involving him. He had been interviewed by HR on September 15, 2013 and was told the same day that the woman law clerk was disclaiming her allegations against him. He heard nothing further about it.

I looked to additional evidence to determine whether or not the Judge's statements here are credible. As the person accused I could not rely on his statements alone. Here, his credibility is strengthened by corroboration from other evidence. First there is no record showing that a "full investigation" took place here. There is no evidence of additional investigative work after September 15th, 2013. The Court of Appeals judge was not interviewed about several other statements the woman Law clerk made, there is no evidence that HR interviewed additional witnesses, and there is no record of an investigation report. This suggests that HR did an "initial inquiry," per Chief Justice Directive 08-06 but did not believe there was enough evidence to proceed to a full investigation. Furthermore, the timing of the woman Law clerk's return to work – the day after Supreme Court interviews – suggests the initial inquiry was likely over before the Court of Appeals judge interviewed. The sum of this evidence suggests, consistent with Ms. Masias's statement in the July 19, 2014, email, that the allegations were promptly determined to be unfounded.

Finally, the evidence suggests the release was ultimately negotiated and executed because of later complaints from the clerk, implicating retaliation concerns but not involving the Court of Appeals Judge. The timeline strongly supports this finding.

Starting in April 2014, more than seven months after the initial harassment inquiry, the clerk made a series of statements that she felt retaliated against by the new job placement she received when she came back to work after her leave. She complained about this with urgency and some hyperbole. Her statements raised retaliation concerns on their face. Upon receiving these concerns, the woman law clerk was permitted to take leave for the remainder of her term and negotiations on a Release Agreement commenced thereafter.

The lawyer for Judicial who drafted the release had these later allegations in mind when they negotiated the agreement. This attorney believed that a Release Agreement was not only necessary under these facts but also fair to the clerk. They had no recollection of any concern about sexual harassment allegations involving the Court of Appeals Judge being the motivator for the Release. Instead, they remembered the motivation being these later allegations. I found their memory of the events persuasive because it is consistent with the other evidence, which shows direct connections between these retaliation concerns and the release agreement.

Finally, I note that throughout this chronology, the woman law clerk's concerns were objectively mishandled. Initially, a decision was made to place the woman law clerk on leave after her harassment concerns were raised, with no evidence that she requested this. Neither Respondent was placed on leave from the workplace. Moreover, the woman law clerk was returned to an objectively different and arguably less prestigious job placement when she returned. When she complained about this new posting, in language clearly raising retaliation concerns, no investigation was conducted. She was placed on leave (again) while her departure was negotiated. Someone should have investigated this situation, but no one did. These decisions failed to meet the requirements of Chief Justice Directive 08-06 or best practices from an HR, legal, and/or investigative standpoint.

2. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The allegation that a settlement agreement was negotiated with a law clerk to keep a Court of Appeals Judge ‘safe’ during a Supreme Court nomination process is Not Substantiated.
- The allegation that this agreement was negotiated, and/or this situation was concealed, by the Chief Justice or anyone else is Not Substantiated.
- The processes that HR and Court Administration utilized to address the concerns raised by this clerk were not managed appropriately or consistently under applicable policy or standards for HR, legal or investigations best practices.

Allegation Four: Hairy Chest

“Judge exposed and rubbed his hairy chest on a female employee's back; no action taken against the judge; Judge is currently being considered for the Senior Judge Program.”

A. Methodology

My investigation determined that the events referenced in this allegation occurred in 2007. I substantiated that this episode of misconduct took place, however, I did not substantiate that “[N]o action [was] taken against the judge.” He was referred to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline and was privately admonished. I substantiated that this Judge was selected for participation in the Senior Judge Program. He served in that role for approximately two years until the Judicial Branch learned about the specific misconduct referenced above. Upon learning this information, the Judge’s contract was terminated.

To investigate this matter, I sought out witnesses who were likely to have evidence about this allegation and interviewed ten (10) individuals who had recollection of this incident. Most witnesses were present or former Judicial Branch employees or judges two witnesses work or worked with the Commission on Judicial Discipline, and one witness I met with has deep knowledge of the Senior Judge Program. Five witnesses provided substantial direct evidence about what took place and five had a more attenuated recollection of the events.

I also sought out any existing documentation from the State Court Administrator’s Office’s Human Resources department, the Commission on Judicial Discipline, and the Senior Judge Program. I was provided with documentation from the Commission on Judicial Discipline and the Senior Judge Program. I located other materials in the State Court Administrator’s Office’s files, which enabled me to identify the judge and the timeframe. I reviewed confidential documents from the Commission on Judicial Discipline pertaining to this matter, which were provided to me by its Executive Director under an exception to the Commission’s strict confidentiality rules.¹³

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 10, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

In late November or early December 2007, the Chief Judge of the District where this episode occurred was made aware of a complaint from an employee of the District. The Chief Judge notified the Human Resources department of the State Court Administrator’s Office (“the State Court Administrator’s Office”) and according to the Chief Judge, “they took over the investigation.” The Chief Judge had no direct conversation with either the employee or the Judge involved and “no one from State Judicial ever talked to [him] about it . . . before, during or after.”

¹³ The Colorado Constitution provides that records of proceedings before the Commission “shall be confidential,” and the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline echo this requirement. I have not included quotations from these materials, or confidential matters contained therein, because these matters must be maintained confidentially pursuant to Colorado State law.

Ms. Masias conducted an inquiry into this allegation. As noted above, the State Court Administrator's Office's Human Resources division had an MOU between itself and the Commission on Judicial Discipline, which stated that Human Resources would "inform the [Commission on Judicial Discipline] immediately if it became aware of conduct by a judge has occurred which "may have violated the Judicial Branch's Anti-Harassment Policy or otherwise engaged in conduct in violation of federal civil rights laws." The MOU also stated that if the allegations involve a Judicial Branch employee, Human Resources "will conduct an investigation" and will forward its results to the Commission on Judicial Discipline for its consideration in initiating its own proceedings.

Ms. Masias interviewed witnesses on November 28, 2007 and prepared a report to the Chief Judge of the District, dated December 5, 2007. Her key findings were that:

- The judge unbuttoned his shirt, exposed his chest hair, and touched a female employee with his chest;
- The judge made a remark to the employee to "come sit on [his] lap;" and
- The judge engaged in inappropriate adult banter in the workplace.¹⁴

In her report, Ms. Masias made the following "Intermediate Recommendations:" that the Chief Judge discuss with the Judge the severity of the complaint made against him; inform the Judge that he should not touch staff with any part of his body including, hugging, tapping, or positioning to move past in tight proximity; warn the Judge that banter that is deemed unprofessional should not continue; and require the Judge to attend Anti-Harassment training and review the Colorado Judicial Department Anti-Harassment policy. She also made the following "Recommendation:" that Human Resources would assist the Chief Judge in "drafting a letter detailing the bullet points found in this letter," which "will be sent to the [Commission on Judicial Discipline] for their review."

It is not clear whether this unsigned report was ever sent to the Chief Judge, who had no memory of receiving it. He denied speaking with Ms. Masias, speaking with the Judge, or writing a letter to the Commission on Judicial Discipline. He also denied receiving any Human Resources guidance on doing any of these things.

Ms. Masias prepared a draft letter to the Executive Director of the Commission on Judicial Discipline, dated "Decemeber [sic] the State Court Administrator's Office, 2007." It contained her findings and intermediate recommendations, set forth above. She described this letter as "an official letter of complaint." Because this is not dated or signed, it is unclear if this letter was the final transmission of the information to the Commission on Judicial Discipline.

On March 17, 2008, Ms. Masias wrote another letter to the Executive Director of the Commission on Judicial Discipline. In this communication, she informed him that the Judge in question was enrolled in an Anti-Harassment course, as directed in her report.

On March 6, 2008, the Executive Director of the Commission on Judicial Discipline brought this matter before the Commission for its consideration. He included the data from Ms. Masias's Human Resources investigation. The Commission instituted its own case pursuant to Rule 12 of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline. It conducted its own investigation, sought a response from the Judge, and deliberated upon the matter. The Commission on Judicial Discipline issued a private admonishment to the Judge in May 2008.¹⁵

On March 17, 2010, the State Court Administrator's Office drafted a notification to the Commission on Judicial Discipline that there were allegations of further misconduct by the same Judge. The letter states, "[T]hat judge [Name Redacted] has been seen kissing a female employee on the "lips" and on "top of there [sic] heads." This letter is not dated or signed, and the Executive Director of the Commission on Judicial Discipline stated that he could not find any record that it was received by the Commission. The State Court Administrator at the time has no memory of sending this letter or of the allegations it describes.

This Judge applied for the Senior Judge Program in 2018. As part of the process at the time, the State Court Administrator's Office reaches out to the Commission on Judicial Discipline, Attorney Regulation Counsel to determine if there have been any previous disciplinary matters. The Commission on Judicial Discipline disclosed the 2008 private admonishment, without detail, to the State Court Administrator's Office in response to this outreach. The Chief Justice, State Court Administrator, Senior Judge Program Administrator and Director of Court Services all signed off on this judge's application. However, none of them followed up on this notification from Commission on Judicial Discipline. None of them asked the Judge what the private admonishment related to, and none of them reached out to the Commission on Judicial Discipline for further details.¹⁶

The Judge was selected for the Senior Judge Program and served in that program for approximately two years. When the Eric Brown List was made public and personnel at the Judicial Branch realized that this Judge's behavior was described in Allegation Four, this Judge's tenure as a Senior Judge was terminated.

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

My investigation revealed straightforward facts on this issue. The credible evidence confirmed that there was a situation from 2007 involving a male judge behaving inappropriately toward women (one in particular) on his staff. The documentary and witness evidence are undisputed on that point. The behavior involved serious misconduct including displaying naked skin, the physical touching/rubbing of his chest on a woman's back, and inappropriate commentary. Moreover, it is ¹⁵ This discipline was disclosed to SCAO as part of the judge's later application for the Senior Judge Program. For that reason, I am including this data in the Report Summary as non-confidential data.

¹⁶ Recent changes to the Senior Judge Program, effective May 4, 2021, by House Bill 21-1136 render any judge who has received "private admonishment, private reprimand, private censure, public reprimand, public censure, suspension, or removal" from the Commission on Judicial Discipline, ineligible for participation in the Senior Judge Program.

corroborated that this Judge applied and was selected for the Senior Judge Program after these events transpired.

Although it is inaccurate to state that “no action was taken” as a result of this Judge’s behavior, it is accurate to conclude that insufficient action occurred.

On the one hand, the situation was investigated, and findings were reached. Ms. Masias conducted an investigation pursuant to her authority under the MOU cited above. She also reported this matter to the Commission on Judicial Discipline for their handling and the Commission on Judicial Discipline conducted its own investigation. The Commission on Judicial Discipline issued private discipline. Moreover, the Judge enrolled in Anti-Harassment training recommended by Ms. Masias.

On the other hand, the Judge was given the mildest sanction possible under the Commission on Judicial Discipline Rules and went on to serve as a Senior Judge for the Judicial Branch. The sanction this Judge received, by definition, admonishes the Judge privately for “an appearance of impropriety even though the judge’s behavior otherwise meets the minimum standards of judicial conduct.” Unbuttoning clothing to naked skin, physical contact with another person, and remarks including the solicitation “come sit on my lap,” clearly do not meet the “minimum standards of judicial conduct.” Objectively, they do not meet the conduct expected of any person in any work environment, let alone a workplace charged with effecting justice for the people of the State of Colorado.

It is important to note that there are no set of fixed rules that govern what kind of response the Commission on Judicial Discipline takes in any given matter. The Commission on Judicial Discipline has broad discretion to determine when matters should be treated as serious enough for formal proceedings, or when they necessitate more heightened private discipline. While it is reasonable to view the consequences imposed here as tepid, I cannot find that the decisions made by the Commission on Judicial Discipline violated any rule or standard requiring more rigorous treatment. Simply put— there was and is no such set of rules.¹⁷

From the perspective of Judicial administration, this Judge was allowed to serve as a Senior Judge after these events, despite at least four senior leaders at the State Court Administrator’s Office being notified that he had been the subject of a private admonition in the past. None of these four individuals investigated what had taken place before approving him for the Senior Judge Program. Although I found no evidence to suggest that any of these individuals had actual knowledge of the facts underlying the admonition, it is striking that none of them asked any questions about it. Any one of these four could have, and should have, done more to unearth the facts underlying the private admonition the Commission on Judicial Discipline disclosed.

Finally, there were failures of process at other junctures in this case. It does not appear that Human Resources notified the Chief Judge in the District of the findings or recommendations from Human Resource’s investigation. It does not appear that Human Resources told the Chief Judge to have a discussion with the Judge or to ensure he got the trainings recommended by Human Resources. It also does not appear that Human Resources or the State Court Administrator’s Office notified the ¹⁷ One of our recommendations is that there should be some written guidance around the exercise of this discretion.

Commission on Judicial Discipline about a subsequent complaint involving the same Judge. A notification was drafted to that effect but does not appear to have been sent.

On balance, this case from 15 years ago demonstrates failures in process and oversight as well as a failure to provide serious consequences on both the Commission on Judicial Discipline's and Judicial Administration's accounts. The Branch and the Commission on Judicial Discipline can and should do better to treat this kind of misbehavior seriously.

2. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The portion of Allegation Four contending that inappropriate behavior took place is Substantiated, essentially as stated in the allegation.
- The portion of the Allegation stating that no action was taken against the judge in question is Not Substantiated.
- Finally, the portion of the Allegation stating that this judge was being considered for the Senior Judge Program is Substantiated, and the judge in fact participated in this program after these events.

Allegations Six and Seven: “Leave the Courthouse and Drive Slowly Out of Town” and Requirement That HR Seek Permission from Chief Judges Prior to Investigating Misconduct in their Districts

6: “Mindy recommended to Chief Judge Kuenhold that it was in the best interest of the Branch to terminate Mr. Duarte due to the sexual relationships he had with his staff. Chief Judge Kuenhold stated that Mindy needed “to leave the courthouse and drive slowly out of town.”

7: “Was told by chief judges she needed to seek their permission to conduct harassment and discrimination investigations in Districts and seek their permission to visit Districts before coming after an intense investigation of a judge and Court Administrator for sexual harassment. This directive was given in order to suppress complaints. Recollection of this event occurred in the 2018 Judicial Conference by a chief judge in the audience who was questioning if that matter [was] ever resolved and recognizing that this was wrong.”

A. Methodology

Through my investigation, I determined that Allegations Six and Seven relate to one another and for that reason I decided to include them in a single Report Summary. I found that the events alleged in Allegation Six took place in late 2009 and early 2010 and the events described in Allegation Seven took place in 2011. I substantiated some portions of what appeared in these two allegations and did not substantiate other parts.

There were several individuals who had good memories of these events. I interviewed former Chief Judge Kuenhold, Mr. Duarte, and others about Allegation Six. I also interviewed a number of chief judges from this time who could speak to Allegation Seven. Altogether, I interviewed twelve (12) people who had knowledge about one or both situations. This included the named parties, other individuals who worked in this Judicial District, witnesses from the Legal Department, other chief judges who served at the time, two Justices with recollections of this set of events, and the State Court Administrator at the time.

I also located a number of documents relevant to Allegations Six and Seven. These included: drafts of the Human Resources investigation reports of the Allegation Six matter [one set of drafts of a report to Chief Judge Kuenhold and a separate set of drafts for the Chief Justice]; email traffic between Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown on this subject; and minutes from chief judge meetings discussing the request for notification and emails on that subject. I also found a document entitled “Talking Points re Kuenhold matter” that is undated and unsigned.

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 11, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

1. Material Evidence on the Events of Allegation Six

The evidence is clear that there was a Human Resources investigation in Chief Judge Kuenhold's District in late 2009. It is equally clear that Chief Judge Kuenhold was unhappy with the process. Ms. Masias received an anonymous letter dated December 9, 2009, contending misconduct in this Judicial District. The report describes the scope of the allegations in the anonymous letter as having two components: "sexual misconduct" and "bribery or 'hush money.'" More specifically, the letter alleges:

I am writing to complain about the fact that three staff in the 12th District are receiving taxpayer money to leave the employment for judicial. These employees don't deserve money any more than I do, unless you must consider the fact that it is payoff money for sleeping with your boss. What you don't know is that this District is so willing to approve voluntary separation incentives because our administrator has screwed almost every clerk in the District. You don't get ahead if you don't. Consider this hush money. The court report [sic] to our supposed "chief judge" is no better. It's a well-known fact that she screws the judge to keep her job. This is a culture that is only exaggerated when these programs come up. I plead for someone to recognize the overuse of power and sex to control in this District.

At some point, four additional issues were added to the investigation scope:¹⁸ religious harassment; reverse ethnic discrimination; threats of retaliation for participation in the complaint process; and creation of a quid pro quo sexual harassment environment. Ms. Masias explained these additions in the reports she wrote on this investigation: "To gain an accurate assessment of the culture in the 12th Judicial District as it is perceived by those involved, each interviewee was specifically asked to give their own personal assessment of the 'culture and workings of the 12th Judicial District.' This led to the new allegations that are reported in the bullet points above that were not alleged in the original letter."

According to Chief Judge Kuenhold and another Judicial officer who worked in the District, Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown conducted their investigation without appropriate due process and improperly from start to finish. Both Judges said that Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown pulled employees out of the workplace, which upset them, and asked some employees "if they had heard rumors" of misconduct. Chief Judge Kuenhold objected to the air of secrecy around the investigation. Moreover, according to Chief Judge Kuenhold, the investigation "dragged on for 9 months" with no communication from Human Resources.¹⁹ Chief Judge Kuenhold had to "deal with crying staff" and "a change in the culture from open doors and gathering around a coffee pot to everyone behind closed doors." He said "[I]t was a very unpleasant thing. It has negatively impacted the 12th Judicial in ways I can't describe." His colleague Judge said, "I remember being appalled" by the process.

¹⁸ It is not clear when this happened, but the addition is referenced in both the 1/7/10 and 1/14/10 report drafts.

¹⁹ I could not corroborate this timeline. According to the documents I could find, it appears that interviews in this investigation took place from December 21, 2009, through January 13, 2010 (Notes of Interviews Relativity Doc JDJD011020). The reports appear to have been in the drafting process contemporaneously with the interviews, as I found drafts dated January 7, 2010, and January 14, 2010. I do not have final signed reports or any email correspondence confirming when Chief Judge Kuenhold was summoned to Denver. Chief Judge Kuenhold feels certain that he was presented with the findings "in the Fall."

According to Chief Judge Kuenhold, several months went by after the interviews before Ms. Masias reached out to him to say she would be back in his District to provide the results of the investigation. According to Chief Judge Kuenhold, Ms. Masias told him, “[T]hey had concluded their investigation, and it showed the initial allegations were unsupported and a report would be provided to me.” However, according to Chief Judge Kuenhold, more months went by, and he expressed his dissatisfaction with the process during this time. He conveyed this to Ms. Masias: “I made it very clear that I was not happy with the harm that had been done in the District and why it had taken so long. I said that I was not pleased with the outcome. I may have said something [to Ms. Masias] like, ‘You really are not welcome here,’ because of how this was handled.”

During this time, Chief Judge Kuenhold and a Judge colleague drafted an email to members of his District, commenting negatively on the investigation process. In the draft I found, which reflects his Judicial colleague’s feedback, it says that the investigation was a “dark cloud on the horizon” for the District.²⁰ The email describes the “harm the investigation is causing to our District,” noting that employees were “interrogated” and stating that the damage done was “a direct result of the manner in which Human Resources chose to conduct this investigation.” The email asks the District to “[S]top the gossip, rumors and talking behind other people’s backs and focus on the important role our courts play in the communities we serve.”

Two months after Ms. Masias’s report to him on the investigation,²¹ Chief Judge Kuenhold was contacted to come to Denver to meet with the Chief Justice on the matter. He arrived and was given the report for the first time. He read it right before his meeting with the Chief Justice. He remembered that the report echoed “what [Ms. Masias] had told me months before – that the allegations were unproven.” However, the report also stated that, after finding the allegations were not substantiated, Human Resources found a former employee “who alleged a consensual relationship 10 years before (so approximately 1996)” with Mr. Duarte. There were no rules at the time prohibiting the relationship and Chief Judge Kuenhold was upset about this allegation being added as he felt it raised concerns about due process.

Ultimately, the Chief Justice recommended to Chief Judge Kuenhold that he terminate Mr. Duarte based on these facts. Chief Judge Kuenhold declined to do this, “because of the illegitimate process.”

An attorney in Judicial’s Legal Department expressed concerns about the recommendation of termination in this case before the reports were finalized. In this person’s view, the investigation had not substantiated conduct that violated policy and the termination recommendation had no precedent under such facts.

Several witnesses remember Chief Judge Kuenhold, and other chief judges being upset about the way this investigation was handled:

²⁰ This draft document was located (JDJD012568 in the Judicial Relativity database), but no email could be found showing that it was sent.

²¹ The timing is based on Chief Judge Kuenhold’s memory of events. I could not find any email showing dates of meetings.

That was very ugly on a lot of different plains. . . . Human Resources went down and did exactly what they are supposed to do, they went to the District and did interviews. Mindy did her investigation and she felt there was an inappropriate relationship there. She suggested to Kuenhold that they both be fired. He really didn't want to do that. Ben Duarte had been there a long time, and Kuenhold was really angry about it. He was angry that he wasn't told about investigation. Mindy was pretty heavy handed. It was like "I am in charge of this Human Resources world" and she didn't like it when people didn't agree with her. A lot of what is in this memo is about people not agreeing with her or she didn't get what she wanted.

Mr. Duarte said that he never saw any report from this investigation, and he felt "blindsided" by what happened. According to him, "[Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown] were asking about a relationship from 12 years ago. I was livid and I moved on." Mr. Duarte said that no one called him after the investigation was completed to talk to him about additional information. He said, "It was like a secret investigation. Like the Gestapo. I did Human Resources for seven years and it was not right to me."

One witness remembered hearing from Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown that Ms. Masias had been "kicked out of [Chief Judge Kuenhold's] District." Another person remembered, specifically, that Ms. Masias reported to him the statement, "[L]eave the courthouse and drive slowly out of town."

Ms. Masias prepared two reports of this investigation: a 9-page report for Chief Judge Kuenhold and a 13-page report for the Chief Justice at the time. We do not have a "Final" of either report, but have multiple drafts of each one, some dated January 7, 2010, and some dated January 14, 2010. Interviews were ongoing as of January 13, 2010, which suggests that the January 14 document was finalized after that last interview was done.

The reports corroborate that the allegations of improper behavior by Chief Judge Kuenhold and payment of "hush money" were not substantiated. Similarly, the allegation that Mr. Duarte had slept with almost all the clerks was not substantiated. They also show that Ms. Masias found that Mr. Duarte had had a relationship with an employee more than ten years before the investigation, during a time when there was no policy prohibiting such a relationship.²² There were some allegations that this relationship was "overbearing and controlling," but it does not appear that Ms. Masias asked Mr. Duarte about this aspect of the prior relationship.

Ms. Masias's reports reference rumors of other possible misbehavior in her investigation. She states that there were rumors and a perception among employees that Mr. Duarte treated young women differently/flirtatiously; that he may have promoted the person he had a relationship with despite her not having a college degree; that he helped one woman pay for college; and that he may have had other relationships with employees. Ms. Masias also states that a number of witnesses said they were afraid of retaliation and some witnesses described being interviewed by leadership in the District about what they said in the investigation. There was some contention that the Chief Judge (and possibly others) tried to find out what was said and tried to interfere in the investigation.

From the face of the reports, it does not appear that Ms. Masias sought out information that would have revealed important information on these claims. It does not appear that she asked Mr. Duarte for his side of the story on the rumors and perceptions, or about the contention that the relationship from ten years ago was coercive. It also does not appear that she asked Chief Judge Kuenhold about the allegations of interference in the investigation.²³ It does not appear that Ms. Masias sought out documentation on the promotion decision or the allegation that Mr. Duarte (or the District) helped pay for college for an employee.

The report to the Chief Justice recommends several courses of action, including that discipline be issued against Mr. Duarte because of his “efforts to isolate employees, exploit his position of authority, and his failure to promote an atmosphere of fairness.” It also recommends that “the efforts by leadership in the 12th to prevent, undermine and interfere with the investigation by Human Resources should be discussed with Chief Judge Kuenhold.”²⁴

2. Material Evidence on the Events of Allegation Seven

Multiple witnesses remembered a shift taking place in the relationship between the chief judges and Human Resources/the State Court Administrator’s Office following this investigation. Witnesses said this shift occurred primarily in response to the different vision the new Chief Justice had for the role of the SCAO vis-à-vis the trial courts. According to many, the Chief Justice wanted to move the focus away from SCAO being the compliance monitor of the Districts, to the SCAO being a service provider in support of the work of the Districts. This new approach included better communication from SCAO when employees would be out in the Districts, including for Human Resources investigations. There was concern that “SCA ‘investigations’ or involvement in Districts were happening without any notification to the chief judge about what was happening, or that they would be in the District. There was concern about that. The consensus of the chief judges was that they expect the courtesy of being notified when Human Resources was going to be in the District.”

While there was not agreement among the chief judges about whether Human Resources ought to notify them when doing investigations in their Districts, there was some consensus that Human Resources under Ms. Masias overstepped at times, and this violated the autonomy of the Districts. As Chief Judge Kuenhold put it, “[G]overnance was an issue. . . . What I would call the weaponization of Human Resources was possible because there was such deference and because Human Resources was tasked with doing things that maybe should have gone to judicial discipline.”

That said, the State Court Administrator at the time views this allegation as “a misrepresentation.” As he recalled it”

There was not a directive to seek permission to conduct investigations – this is way narrower than what the request from the Districts was. It was, anytime you come to my District I need to know you are in my District. You need to notify me for any reason that you are in my District. This goes back to 2010 when they were told to get permission to go into the District. This was after Kuenhold ²³ I do not have the witness interviews, which were apparently recorded, so I cannot be sure what questions were asked of these witnesses. There is no reference to this information, if it was gathered, in the report.

²⁴ No recommendations appeared in the draft report addressed to Chief Judge Kuenhold.

but there was also an investigation in Pueblo about a District Administrator being nasty – and Mindy and Eric went down to investigate. [The judge in Pueblo] agreed with Judge Kuenhold – we want to know what is going on. It is my District I need to know there is an investigation. It wasn't to stop harassment and discrimination investigations.

Minutes from chief judge meetings during this period, and email correspondence, corroborate that there was a focus on improving the relationship between SCAO and the Districts. There was also an emphasis on the service-provider role of SCAO and Human Resources. This included a request that Human Resources – and other Divisions – notify the Chiefs when they would be in their Districts.

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Allegation Six

This allegation states that Ms. Masias recommended termination of Mr. Duarte because of sexual relationships he had with staff and that Chief Judge Kuenhold responded by telling her to “[L]eave the courthouse and drive slowly out of town.” In part, the allegation is corroborated, but it also conflates several details and contains inaccuracies.

On the one hand, there are some portions of the allegation that are substantiated. Chief Judge Kuenhold acknowledged that he may have told Ms. Masias she was “not welcome in [his] District” because of the manner and timing of this investigation. This part of the allegation, while worded differently from “[D]rive slowly out of town,” is not in dispute. A person in a position as powerful as a Chief Judge making statements like this to Human Resources personnel investigating alleged harassment is problematic.

Moreover, the evidence suggests that Chief Judge Kuenhold may have intervened improperly in the investigation in other ways. Ms. Masias's reports state that he wanted to fire the person who wrote the anonymous complaint and that he pulled in at least one employee to ask her what questions were being asked. He may have referred to the interviews taking place as “interrogations” of his employees. For a high-level respondent in a position of leadership, particularly the top job in a Judicial District, to engage in these behaviors during an investigation is at least disruptive, if not coercive. It can dissuade people from coming forward, harm the data the investigator is trying to gather, and increase fears of retaliation. From Ms. Masias's vantage point, it was reasonable for her to conclude that Chief Judge Kuenhold was trying to obstruct a legitimate harassment investigation. This would be concerning to any competent HR investigator.

In addition, this investigation was done right in some respects. Ms. Masias followed proper protocol in not talking to a respondent about the allegations ahead of time, interviewing witnesses away from the workplace (and confidentially), and not sharing information about the investigation with the respondent during the investigation. These general rules apply in every case, even in those where powerful people are respondents. In fact, they are most important in just such cases.

That said, some aspects of the investigation were not done properly. First, Ms. Masias or the State Court Administrator could have notified the Chief Probation Officer, the Court Executive, or some other person in leadership in the District, about the investigation. It is unusual in any setting for an investigation to begin with no one being apprised, because of exactly the kind of reaction that occurred here. In a workplace like the Judicial Branch, with twenty-two independently run Districts, this sort of approach is even less acceptable. Investigations must be conducted confidentially but this does not mean in secrecy. Ms. Masias or the State Court Administrator could have discussed the process with someone in leadership within the District, to explain what was going on, answer questions, and alleviate any concerns.

Chief Judge Kuenhold and other witnesses felt that employees were surprised and stressed. They also felt the District was disrupted by this “secret” approach. From their perspective, the Chief Judge’s interventions were an effort to support his employees and provide guidance. Appropriate communication could have helped avoid what may have been inadvertent interference, as Chief Judge Kuenhold was making decisions in an information vacuum.

Second, Ms. Masias expanded the scope of her findings but did not concurrently expand the scope of her work. Expanding the scope can be a proper decision. However, when it is made, the investigator must thoroughly investigate the new allegations. Here, the report reflects that Ms. Masias took some rumor and speculation at face value without testing it. It does not appear that she gathered corroborative or countervailing evidence. For example, Ms. Masias did not ask Chief Judge Kuenhold about his obstructive behaviors and did not ask Mr. Duarte about most of the rumors and speculations about him. It does not appear that she did a credibility assessment where there was not any corroborative data. It is unclear if she sought additional documentation – like records on the promotion decision or on the allegation that District funds were used to pay for an employee’s education. None of this data appeared in the record.

Rumor and speculation sometimes play a role in investigations because they can be leads. If an investigator follows these leads, it can take them to credible evidence. An essential part of the process in following leads is giving important witnesses the opportunity to know what is being said about them and to hear, as well as test, their side of the story. It requires that the investigator do follow up interviews, credibility assessments, and additional data gathering. This comports with fairness and impartiality requirements. It helps reveal both sides of the issue and resolves conflicts in the data. Ms. Masias may have undertaken these steps and the documentation is simply lost. However, the report shows only one side of the story in evidence, so this fulsome process cannot be corroborated here.

Finally, if the timeline of this investigation was over nine months in duration as Chief Judge Kuenhold recalled, this was an objective problem. The work was done by January 2010 and the report appears to have been completed in January as well. If it took nine months to convey results to the stakeholders, this is an unacceptably long time for a single investigation in a single District.

On the evidence set forth in the report, it is unclear what the basis was for Ms. Masias’s recommendation of discipline for Mr. Duarte. This was the precise concern that the attorney for Judicial laid out in her email: “Considering that the allegations in this letter were not substantiated, I would move cautiously to impose actions based on the witness statements alone.” (Emphasis added.) There was not credible evidence identified in the report upon which to substantiate that wrongdoing implicating policy took place. From that vantage point, Chief Judge Kuenhold’s decision to not impose termination was a reasonable choice.

2. Allegation Seven

With respect to the contention that Ms. Masias was told not to travel to Districts to conduct investigations without permission, there was clearly a directive from the chief judges to Human Resources and the State Court Administrator's Office to be more communicative. This includes a request that Human Resources notify the chief judges if they were going to be in the District for any reason, including an investigation.

The evidence corroborates that there was bad blood between the Chiefs and Human Resources during this time. This stemmed in part from the Kuenhold matter and from another Human Resources investigation in Pueblo. Ms. Masias was described as "pretty heavy-handed" in doing her investigations. These investigations were described as the "weaponization of Human Resources." The Chief Judge's directive was likely based, at least in part, on dissatisfaction with Ms. Masias and her methods.

That said, the directive came from a larger discussion of cooperation and support from the State Court Administrator's Office for the operations of the Districts. This was a global concern at the time. The meeting notes, emails, and witness recollections suggest that a larger effort was being made to get the State Court Administrator's Office to begin seeing itself as a service provider to the Districts and not a compliance arm. This was in keeping with the Chief Justice's vision at the time—the movement to a more cooperative and collaborative relationship between the State Court Administrator's Office and the 22 Districts it serves. It is this focus on cooperation, evident in contemporaneous records from the time, and not an effort to suppress investigations that most persuasively explains the Chief Judge Directive.

3. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The allegation that Ms. Masias found substantiated wrongdoing in an investigation in (former) Chief Judge Kuenhold's District, and recommended termination because of that substantiated wrongdoing, is Not Substantiated.
- The allegation that Chief Judge Kuenhold told Ms. Masias, in so many words, to leave his District and that she was not welcome there is Substantiated because of Chief Judge Kuenhold's acknowledgement of what he said.
- The allegation that after the Kuenhold matter, Human Resources was directed to notify the Districts before commencing investigations there, or visiting for any other reason, is Substantiated.
- The allegation that this directive was made to dissuade proper complaints and investigations is Not Substantiated.

Allegation Sixteen: Mindy Masias Not Selected for State Court Administrator Position Because of Her Sex

“Report from a Justice about why MM was not selected for the position: Insinuates the entire Supreme Court made the decision she did not get the SCA position based on her gender.”

A. Methodology

This allegation relates to the selection process for the State Court Administrator position that took place in 2017. Ms. Masias was a candidate for the position and was not selected. Ultimately a male candidate got the job. My investigation did not substantiate that this decision happened because of sex, but it did substantiate that the person who ultimately got the job never applied, was not interviewed, and received the job via an irregular process.

I interviewed sixteen (16) witnesses who were involved in or had information about this promotion decision—seven (7) women and nine (9) men. These witnesses included members of the Supreme Court who were the decision makers on this promotion at that time, individuals from HR and the Legal Department who were involved in the process, the two prior State Court Administrators, and a representative from the organization that ran the search for this position.

There are many documents and materials related to this allegation. They include the announcements of the position and job description, the application materials for all the applicants for this position, notes on interviews, emails, references (for Ms. Masias) for the position, applicant screening spreadsheets, and a recorded meeting between Ms. Masias and the Chief Justice at the time of these events. I reviewed all these materials and considered them in reaching my finding.

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 11, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Facts

1. Chronology of Events

In February 2017, then State Court Administrator Gerald “Jerry” Marroney announced his retirement effective June 30, 2017.²⁵ This set into motion the process at issue here, to select his successor. At the time of this announcement, Ms. Masias was serving as Chief of Staff and had been, in the opinions of many, running SCAO at the end of Mr. Marroney’s tenure. From the vantage point of several witnesses interviewed, Ms. Masias was groomed by Mr. Marroney for the role of State Court Administrator. More than one person described her as the “heir apparent.”

The National Center for State Courts (“NCSC”) was retained to run the recruitment effort and promotion process. NCSC worked with Christopher Ryan as the internal contact in doing this work. Mr. Ryan ultimately received the State Court Administrator position. He was the clerk of the Colorado Supreme Court and Colorado Court of Appeals at the time recruitment began.

Ms. Masias applied for this position on April 11, 2017 and was one of nine candidates who applied. The Committee interviewed candidates and selected four to send on to the members of the Supreme Court for final interviews. One was an external male candidate, one was an external woman candidate and there were two internal candidates: Ms. Masias and a male colleague.

As part of the process, the Chief Justice asked each Division leader from SCAO to come to the Court and provide a presentation on their Division. This was done to provide the Associate Justices with some insight into SCAO and leaders that they did not frequently work with. This took place before candidates for the position were interviewed.

The four finalists were interviewed by the Justices of the Supreme Court on Monday May 15, 2017, but no successful candidate was selected at that time. In short, the Court could not reach consensus on a candidate, so the recruitment process was extended.

According to Mr. Ryan, he was first approached by the Chief Justice before the process was underway and she “implored” him to apply for the position. Moreover, he said, the Chief Justice sent other Justices to pressure him in a friendly way to consider applying. He thought about it but declined. He said, “I was interested in the work, but not in the job. I had a good job where I was.”

According to Mr. Ryan, the Chief Justice came to him after the interviews to ask what options they had. She asked him if she could put Ms. Masias in the role in an interim capacity and he said he did not think that was fair, or a good idea, if the Court was not united in favor of her as the candidate. He offered to do the job for a six-month period and the Chief Justice accepted that offer. On May 18, 2022, the Court announced it was extending its search and announced that Mr. Ryan would serve in the role in an acting capacity.

Over the summer, Mr. Ryan started the job and realized he enjoyed it. When the Court came out of recess in September, the Chief Justice asked him what his thoughts were, and he said he really enjoyed it and was interested in doing the job. The Chief Justice brought this back to the Court. According to colleagues on the Court at the time, the Chief Justice told her fellow jurists she believed it was in the best interests of the Branch to get this position settled and to go with Mr. Ryan. According to Mr. Ryan, he was appointed as the State Court Administrator the next day. There was no application or interview process for Mr. Ryan and no one else had the opportunity to apply (or re-apply) for the position.

2. Supreme Court Justices Were Split in Support of Two Candidates for the Position

According to all the Justices I spoke with about this decision, the Court was divided about the candidates for the position. No one was particularly impressed by the internal male candidate or the external female candidate. Instead, the Justices were split between Ms. Masias and the external male candidate. The support broke down around gender lines, with the women Justices (3) in favor of Ms. Masias and the men (4) favoring the external male candidate. Justices I interviewed, both men and women, expressed concern about whether Ms. Masias had “the vision to lead the whole Branch,” and indicated there was concern whether the external male candidate had “a solid grasp of what the role was going to entail.” As summarized by one Justice, “We were very divided.” The male candidate was described as having “a ton of gravitas,” but “had no idea what the job was about.”

The Justices remarked that the presentations they received from SCAO leadership were enlightening, but not in a way that was helpful for Ms. Masias’s candidacy for the State Court Administrator position. The presentations revealed “weird and bitter rivalries” between HR and other Divisions at SCAO. As one Justice put it, “[W]hat we came to learn there was a ton of dysfunction in the SCAO. The other thing we came to learn was that HR was at war with IT, finance and legal. It was very concerning to me if Mindy got the position that there would be a split down the middle in SCAO. . . . Mindy was terrific and I considered her a friend. Nonetheless I had concern about the HR piece. She never stopped being ‘HR Mindy,’ she and Eric were inseparable, and she was still considered HR.” Another Justice said, “My concerns were the infighting going on, could she rise above it and lead the Branch without dragging the HR piece into it.” Another Justice said, “There are minders, finders, and grinders . . . Mindy was a quintessential grinder. In the weeds, the worker bee. . . . That was the issue, was she ready to step into that high level policy role.”

The decision was made that, in the absence of consensus, the Court would open the position back up to more applicants and the Chief would encourage Ms. Masias to apply again. “My thinking in supporting Mindy – I was hopeful she could overcome these concerns we had. It was clear to me she had solid relationships with the Districts and that counted for a lot.” As noted by another Justice, the Court asked the Chief Justice to speak to Ms. Masias and convey, “You need to disengage HR Mindy and be Chief of Staff Mindy . . . If we could separate her [from HR and tactics] she could become a viable candidate.”

The Chief Justice mentioned Ms. Masias’s demeanor as well as gossip about her in discussing the lack of consensus around her candidacy. While she voted for Ms. Masias as the best candidate, she said there was concern because, “[S]he was a different person with different people. She was someone who was flirtatious / provocative with the men, and trial judges would gossip about that . . . From the SCAO perspective, something I do know, there were a lot of complaints about her from the other department heads. . . . There was a mini campaign against her - some gossip about some of her relationships and whatnot.” The Chief “[D]iscounted all that stuff – maybe a little more than I should have in retrospect.” She added, “[T]he weakest aspect she had, she was just much too wed to HR.” “[S]he had some real positives in my point of view . . . I wanted her to get the job.”

The Justices did not agree that sex or sex stereotyping motivated the decision. “There was certainly no discussion that she was a woman and not up to the task. I liked the idea of appointing a woman. I came into that thinking she would probably be the person for the job given all the accolades she had received, given her experience in SCAO in various roles, she seemed like a logical successor. I figured that was where we would end up landing.”

3. The Decision to Offer the Position to Mr. Ryan

Mr. Ryan indicated that it was his idea to offer to serve in the interim role when it became clear that the Court was deadlocked and could not reach a consensus. He took this suggestion to the Chief Justice, who immediately agreed with this idea.

Once he had served in the role for several months, Mr. Ryan realized he liked the job. “When the Court came out of recess in September, [the Chief Justice] asked what my thoughts were, and I said I really enjoyed it and am interested in doing it. She said, ‘Great I will talk to Court, and they will appoint you,’ and it happened the next day.”

Mr. Ryan did not apply or interview for the position. Instead, he was appointed as the Interim and then made the permanent SCA several months into his interim tenure.

A number of witnesses expressed concern about the appropriateness of appointing Mr. Ryan into this position without him participating in a competitive process. As one Justice put it, “I was really torn about that. On the one hand I was thrilled, I wish he had applied from the beginning . . . On the other hand, I was really bothered by the way this went down. He had chosen not to apply and had run the search committee. How optically weird this was, given how this all unfolded. I said as much.”

This Justice added that it was the Chief Justice who drove the ultimate decision and the Associate Justices were expected to ratify it. “So yes, technically, we all agreed and got on board. But I was deeply uncomfortable. Chris came to the court again. I said, ‘Chris, I am thrilled you are in this role, but I am uncomfortable with how this went down, I don’t feel like this was at all transparent. It feels icky how it happened.’ I was concerned at the optics.”

Others at SCAO had similar concerns. “The court handled it terribly – appointing Chris was a terrible idea. He didn’t apply for the job; he evidently didn’t want the job. . . . This violated all the rules about competitive selection.” Another witness noted, “I can tell you the way that they did that hire was not consistent with our rules. . . . So many things went wrong that created more animus than necessary. When there is an employee who was groomed and didn’t get it.”

4. The Surreptitiously Recorded Statement

At some point after the promotion decision was made, Ms. Masias met with the Chief Justice, who had agreed to give her feedback about the decision. Ms. Masias decided to surreptitiously record the meeting without the Chief Justice’s knowledge or agreement.

The meeting was approximately 47 minutes in length. During the meeting, the Chief Justice offered feedback to Ms. Masias that was primarily consistent with the feedback I received from the decision-makers quoted above. This included advice on cultivating her leadership, separating from HR, developing more of a strategic rather than a tactical mindset, and defining herself as a leader with vision. The Chief Justice asked Ms. Masias to think about the military and how Officers and Master Sergeants serve leadership versus tactical roles, respectively. She also mentioned “line” and “staff” in the military, as examples of strategic leaders and tactical “doers.” The Chief Justice discussed “classist” issues, describing some on the Court as believing the position needed to be filled with a lawyer or judge. She also talked about her own career as an example and said that she was hiring people, giving raises, firing people, settling cases, and exerting authority in an effort to be “line” and not “staff.” “I had the power, and that’s what I think you and Chris need to negotiate. You don’t want to be staff. Staff makes the operation move more smoothly but it doesn’t make it move.”

The Chief Justice attempted to end the meeting at several points over the 47 minutes. The first time was approximately 20 minutes in. “So, I don’t know Mindy what more I can say. I guess that’s sort of it. Does any of that make sense to you?” Ms. Masias responded, “It does.”

The meeting continued, and at around 28 minutes, the meeting appeared to be ending again. Ms. Masias told the Chief Justice, “I appreciate you taking the time.” Instead of ending the meeting, the Chief Justice noted that while “the men in particular appreciate the person who is sort of secretarial and helpful . . . that is not the person who is going to get promoted. So don’t be.” Ms. Masias said she appreciated that advice because she was not a secretary and had never done that job. The Chief Justice noted that Ms. Masias had a “habit of [being] a little bit of a caretaker . . . but other people can do that.”

At around 39 minutes, Ms. Masias said she had always “been underestimated” and during this last part of the meeting, the Chief Justice made additional remarks implicating sex-based stereotyping. Ms. Masias said she had been underestimated because she is not pushy and has a positive attitude. The Chief responded, “You’re a small woman [Ms. Masias: Small in stature, yes], big hair still. You don’t look the part of . . . you don’t look like the women partners on 17th Street. You don’t look like [the women on the Supreme Court] or the women on the Court of Appeals.” Ms. Masias asked, “[S]hould I change my hair?” and the Chief responded, “[Y]ou might want to think about it. I mean, I am not kidding. You need to do something to make yourself not be underestimated.” The Chief went on to reference the “generation” of men in the court who are “used to women who are the partners at the law firms or older women.” She added, “[Y]ou know there is sexism out there still and I think that to pretend like there isn’t, even in government . . . the only way you can make the sexism go away I’ve noticed is to be the boss.” The meeting ended with Ms. Masias saying, “[T]hank you Chief I really appreciate it,” and the Chief responding, “[T]hank you, Mindy. You’re doing great. I’m very glad you’re my friend.”

I asked the Chief Justice about the statements made at the end of the recording. She had not listened to the recording but shared some observations regarding the statements. She said, “[H]istorically the people that the court hires as the State Court Administrator were judges. That is who the judges really want, in that sense that they want someone who looks more like a judge than someone who doesn’t.” She said Ms. Masias was “like the opposite of that,” and sometimes dressed in “tight clothing and short skirts – the antithesis of the traditional lawyer / judge look – right wrong or indifferent.” The Chief Justice said, “I was telling her to dress for the job you want.” With respect to the statement, “[T]here is sexism – we can’t pretend that there isn’t,” the Chief Justice did not remember saying this, but noted, “[O]f course there is sexism in the world. We spend a huge amount of dollars trying to educate judges on all aspects of discrimination. Implicit bias, training on that. Oh my God, and of course I have experienced it myself in lots of ways. It is out there and to pretend that it is not is sort of silly.”

When I asked the Chief Justice if she had anything else to offer, she said, “I don’t think anyone deserves a job like that. It is a big deal job. I think Mindy thought she would get it and was kind of stunned when she didn’t. . . . I was surprised she didn’t get the four votes. I voted for her. I don’t think she was entitled to it, but I thought she was going to get it.”

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

On the one hand, there is credible evidence of sex stereotyping, and potentially a sex-based decision with respect to this promotion decision. First, there are the words used by decision makers to characterize the two leading candidates. Second, there are the words the Chief Justice used in discussing the situation with Ms. Masias.

The decision makers characterized the two leading candidates as “HR Mindy,” and the external male candidate with “gravitas.” On its face, these descriptions implicate sex stereotyping; a woman cast in a typically female job (HR) versus a male candidate’s presence described using a strong, male-oriented adjective. However, the fact is that at the time, Ms. Masias was tightly connected to the HR operation because of her history in the position and her close working relationship to Eric Brown. Moreover, the male candidate was objectively a person with professional gravitas because of his accomplishments in the bar and in the legal community. For these reasons, I did not weigh these remarks heavily in my finding.

In contrast, I closely considered the remarks that the Chief Justice made in the surreptitious recording and in her interview. The Chief Justice was the most powerful decision maker in this promotion process. She was the Chief. She wanted Mr. Ryan to apply for the position and accepted his offer to step into the role temporarily. Most importantly, she likely drove the decision to move him into the permanent role without initiating a competitive process. For these reasons, I weighed her statements carefully as they are particularly important to my analysis.

There is no dispute that the Chief Justice made remarks that implicate sexism. They include remarks that invoke sex stereotyping about Ms. Masias’s small stature, appearance, hair, and clothing. They include statements about the “type” of woman the male members of the Court are most accustomed to – women partners in 17th Street firms and judges and Justices on the highest courts of the State. They include commentary about Ms. Masias caretaking as well as advice to her to not be “secretarial.”

That said, the context and timing of these remarks is important. The Chief Justice spent most of the first 42 minutes of a 47-minute meeting giving Ms. Masias advice about how to position herself more favorably to win the State Court Administrator promotion after Mr. Ryan’s six-month acting period. In doing so, she echoed the concerns voiced by the other Justices discussed above. These centered around Ms. Masias’s perceived focus on tactics, HR, and operations rather than strategy, vision, and leadership. The Chief Justice ended the meeting two times during the recording – at minute 20 and at minute 39. In both cases, she said that was all she had to say. By these points in the meeting, she had said nothing about Ms. Masias’s stature, hair, or clothes. From a fair reading of the timing, the reasons for the decision that mattered most to the Chief Justice were the non-sex-based reasons described above. Ms. Masias needed to take on more visible leadership, distance herself from HR, and be firm in developing herself as a visionary leader. All of that had been said by minute 42 of this meeting.

Moreover, the remarks about stature, hair, and clothing happened after Ms. Masias said she had “always been underestimated” and the discussion that followed relates to that statement. In that sense, the remarks are distanced from feedback about the reasons for the decision.

Finally, one additional piece of evidence stands out as strongly persuasive against this allegation. There is compelling evidence that, according to the SCAO Directors the Court invited to present, the HR function under Ms. Masias had developed toxic relationships across SCAO. This surprised many Justices and caused credible concerns for them about what might transpire if Ms. Masias were promoted to the State Court Administrator position. This evidence of poor relationships bolsters the non-discriminatory reasons given for not awarding Ms. Masias the promotion.

Finally, it is not contested that the Chief Justice, despite her remarks, was a champion for Ms. Masias in the promotion process. She voted for her candidacy and gave the other Justices the clear impression that she wanted Ms. Masias to get the job.

On balance, the evidence of credible non-sex-based reasons for the decision outweigh the remarks of one decision maker, even the most important one. The concerns about Ms. Masias’s tactical focus, the infighting in SCAO that appeared to revolve around HR, and questions about her strategic vision were broadly shared and corroborated by the weight of the evidence in this investigation. These factors were the reasons, more likely than not, for the decision not to award Ms. Masias the position.

In closing, while I do not find that sex-based discrimination is the likely reason for this promotion decision, I do find that this process deviated in important ways from the standard SCAO promotion process. The evidence is not contested on the point that there was no competitive process for Mr. Ryan. There was no second chance for Ms. Masias, despite that being the plan. There was no application, no interview and no process required for Mr. Ryan. This was described by both attorneys and HR witnesses as violating the accepted processes within SCAO at the time, particularly for such a prominent position. This decision – to just award the job to a favored candidate – echoes a theme I found throughout this process. In a number of these cases, individuals operated as if the rules, procedures and processes just did not apply to them. If this attitude still exists, those holding it must be swiftly disabused of this notion if the public is to regain trust in the Branch.

2. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- Allegation Sixteen, contending that Ms. Masias was not selected for promotion to State Court Administrator because of her sex and/or sex stereotyping, is Not Substantiated.
- However, it is Substantiated that this promotion decision was made as the result of an irregular process that deviated significantly from SCAO standards for fair promotions within the Branch.

Allegations of Finance Department Misconduct (8-10)

Allegation Eight: Financial Manager Impermissibly Using Accurint

Evidence a financial manager accessed personal information on various leaders throughout the state using Accurint for no business reason; no discipline taken on him and he was promoted less than two years later to deputy director.

A. Methodology

As background, Accurint is a system operated by LexisNexis that allows users to access public and non-public information about individuals. It is widely used by law enforcement and other government agencies to obtain detailed personal information including assets, relatives, associates, arrest records, corrections records, and sexual offender records. It is a powerful tool with access to sensitive information.²⁶ The Colorado Judicial Branch has used Accurint since 2009 for specifically delineated and limited purposes.

My investigation determined that the events in this allegation likely occurred at some point between 2009 and 2011. This allegation was raised by Mr. Brown in 2018 before he left the Judicial Branch. According to employees at the Branch, Mr. Brown raised this allegation as an example of leadership misconduct. Mr. Brown thought was as serious as the misconduct Ms. Masias was being accused of at the time, with respect to her expense reimbursements.

I substantiated that some episode of improper access to Accurint likely took place, but I could not determine with certainty the date of that access. I substantiated that it is more likely than not that at least one target of the access was Ms. Masias, based on the financial manager's (described hereafter as "Finance Manager") recollections as conveyed to me in his interview. I corroborated that there was no discipline of this Finance Manager, but I could not corroborate that this situation was ever formally investigated or that Human Resources made any recommendation of discipline. It is true that this person was ultimately promoted to Deputy Director after these events.

I interviewed nine (9) people with knowledge about this situation. The Finance Manager did not remember any specifics but offered speculations about what this could be about. Other witnesses had recollections of his explanations at the time this instance was complained about. The people I interviewed included the Finance Manager, his supervisor at the time, members of the finance and legal teams, and an individual who is responsible for the management of the Accurint system for Judicial. This witness likely would have been aware of any formal complaint or investigation into Accurint use because of their responsibility for the program.

I attempted to locate any relevant documents, images, or records relating to this alleged complaint about Accurint use. I also requested and reviewed the Finance Manager's performance evaluations and promotion history. I reviewed the rules around Accurint use and requested a search for any complaints about this Finance Manager's use of Accurint (there are none). I reviewed audit files relating to two audits done under Finance Manager's tenure as Audit Manager because of his recollection that there may be some connection between that work and his use of Accurint to check on property records relating to Ms. Masias. Review of these records, including handwritten notes, revealed no connection. I could not locate any investigation file relating to Accurint use. If this was investigated by HR at the time, the files have not been retained.

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 23, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

The Judicial Branch obtained Accurint in 2009 and authorizes its use only in circumscribed instances:

Official Use of Databases:

All searches on the database are electronically logged along with the user conducting the search. These search logs are maintained by Accurint and are subject to review and monitoring by Accurint, the District Customer Administrator, and the Central Customer Administrator. No searches may be conducted that do not directly relate to court cases being worked by Judicial staff in their official capacity. In other words, any searches not concerning Judicial official business, such as requests for data on celebrities and other public figures, relatives, acquaintances, Judicial employees, etc., ARE PROHIBITED. Violations will result in immediate termination of access and could result in disciplinary and other action.

Keep the following rules in mind as you use Accurint:

- 1) Do not conduct person or property (or other) searches on yourself, your own social security number (SSN), last name or former name, your spouse or former spouse (incl. significant others), co-workers or other employees, friends, relatives, neighbors, acquaintances, officials, celebrities, public figures, or any other person, business, or entity (or related SSN, ID number, phone number, address, etc.) that is not directly tied to a court case and official Judicial matter that needs your attention in your official capacity. No personal use is authorized. Our contract with LexisNexis for the use of Accurint is predicated on the agreement and understanding that searches will be conducted for official Judicial business only.

(Emphasis in original.)²⁷ The Judicial Accurint Use Policy contains a written User Agreement and Acknowledgement that every user must sign. This document states that the user has read and understands the policies pertaining to Accurint use.²⁸ Finance Manager, who was Audit Manager at the time, signed his User Agreement on July 1, 2009.²⁹

The investigation revealed two possible chronologies around the alleged improper use of Accurint by Finance Manager. The first is that Finance Manager made some improper searches, using real Judicial Branch personnel, when he was testing the Accurint system in 2009. According to one employee at the Judicial Branch, they recalled that Finance Manager tested Accurint “on live people” and this caused a credit check to enter on those individuals’ credit reports:

[Finance Manager] was testing [Accurint] and he tested it on live people – I don't think he knew it would cause a credit check thing. He had to have a real person to check. He didn't know it would cause a credit hit. I don't know how he picked who to look up. . . . It was more than one person. I don't remember who it was. I remember it was completely an innocuous effort to make sure we were going to get our money's worth. . . . When that happened, we looked into it. He felt terrible it impacted anyone.

Three other witnesses remember that when they asked Finance Manager about these allegations in 2018, he speculated that “[M]aybe it was when he was testing the system” or it was when he was training on the system.

However, in his interview with me, Finance Manager speculated that he may have used Accurint to examine Ms. Masias's real estate transactions in connection with an audit he was doing in the Probation Department. According to Finance Manager, the State Court Administrator at the time raised the prospect that there may have been some connection between Ms. Masias and the subject of the audit. He said, “I might have looked on something at Accurint to find something on the two of them.” He said that there were contentions that Ms. Masias and the subject of the audit were personal friends and worked together. He also said he did this review “in talking with [the State Court Administrator]. He was aware of what I was doing in that audit.”

The State Court Administrator at the time adamantly denied this. He said, “That never happened. We did investigate issues on [the person in Probation] but there were never allegations about a connection between [them] and Mindy. . . . I never authorized any use of that tool for any judicial employee. [It was] only to be used for those defendants who owed money via fines, fees, and restitution.”

When I asked the Finance Manager why a friendship or working relationship – without any other evidence of wrongdoing – would subject a person to being searched on Accurint, he did not have a logical explanation as this exchange reflects:

Why was Mindy involved? She had a pretty close relationship with them down there. She was involved in a lot of what they were doing. Her and [the person] had been working together for a while. . . . As an auditor I have to run down a lot of different scenarios, different things you have to look at to see if there is any trail there.

How would Accurint have come in? I don't even know. Seeing if there was any sort of real estate transactions and property transactions, different things like that. Did you have a lead that they owned property together? No. That's the point you are trying to follow leads and disprove things. I don't know if I even did that or not. The whole allegation is based on something - I don't know what it is based on. . . . This came about because [the former SCA] said there was a connection. I remember a general conversation with [him] about the [Probation person] and potential collusion or corruption. With Mindy? Maybe. It might have been other people I don't recall specifically . . .

Were Mindy and this person personal friends? That is what I understood yes. What was the connection between that and what you were looking at in the audit? [The Probation person] had a consultant she had used without going thru procurement. That is a red flag.

A red flag for Mindy? I don't even remember if that is what we used that for. It was because of the relationship that they had as a possible red flag. . . . If you are looking at someone for audit purposes do you look at all the people they are friends with or work with at Judicial? Most don't get to this level. They don't have the aspects of what [the Probation person]'s position was in judicial. No I wouldn't think that is a common practice. . . . Have you done that before in other audits? I don't recall specifically.³⁰

Finance Manager provided me with a copy of the referenced audit report, and I also obtained access to the working papers relating to this audit. Neither the report, nor the work papers, mention Ms. Masias in connection with the audit issues of compliance or other misconduct.

The person who oversees Accurint use for Judicial described what this program is used for at the Judicial Branch and said they were unaware of any complaint of misuse of Accurint by Finance Manager: "I know I was never asked to look at his use. While I was Administrator of the program, prior to being the Manager, I would have been the one to do that search."

There were no records of such a complaint or any investigation. There were likewise no discipline or performance plans in this Finance Manager's personnel file on this or other matters. This person was promoted three times since being hired and was promoted to a Deputy Director position in 2013.

D. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

This investigation did not reveal hard evidence about the complaint—specifically, how Accurint was misused or who it impacted. We have no HR records, interviews, or investigation report. It does not appear that anyone sought out information from the individual responsible for Accurint and they were unaware of any complaint. While some records at Judicial have been difficult to locate during this project, I have typically unearthed some documentation in those cases where there was an HR investigation. I would expect the person responsible for the system to have been interviewed. The absence of such data here suggests that this situation was not considered serious enough at the time to justify an investigation.

Instead, I found two possible explanations from six people with some recollection that there was a complaint from Mr. Brown about this topic. Four people remembered some issue around Finance Manager testing or training on the system. One witness, who has offered credible data in other investigations, remembered this with a degree of particularity. They remembered that credit checks popped up, signaling to management that Accurint had been improperly used. In contrast, Finance Manager believes this may be about an audit he did and the State Court Administrator's request to run Ms. Masias's name as part of that audit.

Ultimately, whether Finance Manager used Accurint on "live" coworkers while testing the program or whether he used it to look at Ms. Masias's real estate transactions, it appears that the usage would have been improper under either scenario. The terms of the User Agreement he signed are clear. Finance Manager agreed not to conduct searches that did not "relate to court cases being worked by Judicial staff in their official capacity.” As clearly stated, “any searches not concerning Judicial official business, such as requests for data on . . . Judicial employees, etc., ARE PROHIBITED” (emphasis in original removed.) Whether his usage was innocent, as recalled by one employee in remembering the credit checks, or more purposefully illegitimate, as suggested by the implausible audit explanation, it was improper either way.

It should be noted that the version of events Finance Manager put forward in this investigation regarding the audit is implausible and not corroborated by any other evidence. The idea that Finance Manager would have run Ms. Masias’s name in a Probation audit because of her friendship with the subject is farfetched. Finance Manager did not satisfactorily explain why a leader in one operational group would be audited on the mere fact of a working or personal relationship - without some evidence of potential wrongdoing. There is nothing in the work papers to suggest a legitimate reason to include Ms. Masias in the audit. The person Finance Manager identified as directing this activity, the State Court Administrator, adamantly denied it. The State Court Administrator firmly stated that he gave no such direction and the audit in question had nothing to do with Ms. Masias. It is notable that Finance Manager’s statements around the audit also exhibited poor credibility because of the change from his first explanation for this situation, his audit explanation’s inherent illogic, and inconsistency with other data.

Given other data unearthed in the investigation about the toxic relationship between HR and Finance, this improbable explanation is even less credible. If anything, the bitterness between Ms. Masias and this group might suggest that the improper Accurint use had improper motives as well.

Ultimately, there is no documentation that details what the complaint was specifically about, but there is sufficient evidence under a preponderance of the evidence standard to conclude that Finance Manager engaged in some improper use of Accurint.

2. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The allegation concerning the inappropriate Accurint use is Substantiated.
- The allegation contending that Finance Manager was not disciplined is Substantiated, with the caveat that it does not appear that any formal investigation was done, or that any discipline was recommended.

Allegation Nine: Financial Manager Investigated Twice for Harassment

“Financial manager investigated twice for harassing behavior. Receives more staff and a better office. No mention of the complaints in his 2017 performance appraisal.”

A. Methodology

Through this investigation, I determined that the financial manager (described hereafter as “Finance Manager”) was investigated three times for harassing behavior. These investigations occurred in 2015, 2017, and 2021 and involved two different complainants. I also confirmed that the Finance Manager received more staff and a better office, and there was no mention of these harassment complaints in his evaluations.

I interviewed eleven (11) people with knowledge about this situation. These included Finance Manager, his present supervisor, one of the two individuals who had filed complaints about harassment, and members of the HR and Legal Department teams who were aware of and involved in this situation. People had strong recollections of what happened.

I sought out documents, images, or records relating to the alleged harassment complaints and investigations. These included Finance Manager’s performance evaluations, discipline, and trainings as well as documentation of his staffing and office situation. There was a great deal of documentation on these events, which helped the investigation proceed. This consisted of investigation interviews and reports, email communication, texts, performance evaluations and other material.

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 10, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

1. The First Complaint and Investigation - 2015

On September 30, 2015, a woman employee in the Legal Department spoke with her supervisor and made statements which the supervisor interpreted as raising a complaint of potentially discriminatory comments. She stated that Finance Manager had told her there were concerns about the quality of her work because she was “young, blond and female.” The supervisor reported these comments to her supervisor on October 1, 2015 and requested that HR assist in an investigation.

The woman employee said she did not see herself as stating a complaint of discrimination and did not want these concerns investigated. She described herself as “venting” to her supervisor. The investigation proceeded against her wishes.

The Human Resources investigator interviewed three individuals in conducting this investigation: the woman employee, her supervisor, and the Finance Manager. The investigation found that the allegations of harassment were not substantiated. This was so because the investigator found that Finance Manager was not stating his own views when he made the statement about concerns with her work being because she was “young, blond, and female.” Instead, it was determined that he was sharing his perceptions of what other male finance employees believed about this woman employee. In short, he was sharing this information with the woman attorney to help her figure out why she was feeling disrespected for her work.

The HR investigator recommended no disciplinary action or punitive consequence for Finance Manager. She recommended that he be “reminded that discussions about age, gender and other personal characteristics are unsuitable for the work environment.” Finance Manager’s supervisor said that he followed these recommendations and spoke to the Finance Manager about these topics.

2. The Second Complaint and Investigation - 2017

On April 21, 2017, an employee in the Finance organization (described hereafter as “Complainant”) met with HR to file a complaint against this same Finance Manager. She provided a written complaint on April 24, 2017. The Complainant stated that Finance Manager engaged in “public shaming and belittling on multiple occasions,” and discriminated against her based on “socioeconomic status.” She stated she was resigning because of this treatment.

The Complainant provided examples of this behavior. It included Finance Manager “shush[ing]” her in meetings, interrupting her, and becoming red in the face during meetings. The Complainant reported this behavior to Finance Manager’s supervisor. She said the behavior was not as blatant or reoccurring after this report, however Finance Manager continued to “become irate and turn[] red in the face, shake[] [h]is head and become[] real short and dismissive.”

The examples also included statements around her career progression and performance. The woman employee stated that Finance Manager dissuaded her from applying for a promotion, saying, “While I cannot tell you not to apply, I will tell you that if anyone else has more experience in either IT or procurement you will not get the job.” Further, Finance Manager told her he did not like employees who marked themselves at the top or close to the top in their self-evaluations, and “[She] should remain modest.” In the meeting on that performance evaluation, Finance Manager allegedly told her, “I lowered your scores across the board because you had displayed your frustration out loud and I do not feel that you communicate effectively.” He went on, “[Y]ou have a problem with remaining positive, but I scored you high on teamwork because you’re the first to jump in and see if anyone needs help.” At the end of the review he said, “[C]ommunication is the largest skill you need to improve on, you just want to be heard.” The Complainant responded that “[M]ay be a little unreasonable” but she could understand, adding, “a lot of millennials get a bad rap for that but we just communicate differently.” He replied, “Off the record no it is not because you’re a millennial . . . it is clear that you are from a lower socioeconomic background and you’ve had to fight to get to where you are and because of that you just want to be heard.”

These statements caused the Complainant to feel “judged, prosecuted and profiled.” She was highly upset, went home, cried, and “was truly hurt and baffled.”

Two HR investigators interviewed six additional employees and substantiated that the Finance Manager subjected the woman employee to unprofessional behavior that violated the Code of Conduct, Standards of Conduct, which stated: “[E]mployees shall ‘demonstrate high standards of professionalism in the workplace that includes interacting with the public, co-workers and management in a civil, courteous, and respectful manner.” They did not substantiate that the Finance Manager dissuaded the woman employee from applying for an open position or that he discriminated against her because of her socioeconomic status.

The HR team recommended corrective action against Finance Manager for violating the Judicial Department Code of Conduct. They also recommended that he take mandatory trainings in the Code of Conduct, Introduction to Cultural Competency, STAR workshop, HR Law, Anti-Harassment for Supervisor, Performance Management for Supervisors and My Role As: Team Leader.

However, no discipline was imposed, and Finance Manager did not do any of the training at the time. Training records show that Finance Manager failed to complete any of the recommended training within two years of the report and most of it remained incomplete until 2021:

- Code of Conduct: started in 2017 but incomplete; completed 6/14/19.
- Intro to Cultural Competency: started six times but dropped four times and incomplete two times.
- STAR Workshops: started eight times but dropped four times, incomplete three times, one time in progress.
- HR Law: started in 2018 but dropped; Completed in 2021.
- Anti-Harassment for Supervisors: Completed in 2021.
- Performance Management for Supervisors: never taken.
- My role as: Team Leader: never taken.

The cadence and lack of progress on these trainings does not suggest that there was any urgency around Finance Manager doing this training from him or from his management.

Finance Manager’s 2017 evaluation contains no direct reference to this substantiated complaint. It states, with respect to Finance Manager’s communication skills, “[Finance Manager] communicates effectively and uses acceptable language in the workplace.” It ranks him 4/6 in the category that includes “Uses Good Judgement.” It states (incorrectly) that “[Finance Manager] has completed assigned training . . .” The evaluation contains several veiled references that might relate to this investigation:

- Under “Professionalism,” for which Finance Manger received a 3/6, it states, “[Finance Manager] is quick to accept accountability for his and his department’s actions.” It goes on to say, “[Finance Manager] demonstrates the appropriate level of professionalism for [his] position.”
- Under “Teamwork,” for which he is scored 4/6, it says “[Finance Manager] can continue to improve by always fully listening to others.”
- Under “Supervision” which is ranked 3/6, it says “[Finance Manager adequately supervises the [] unit. . . . [Finance Manager] should continue to improve on listening to staff in the unit and letting them express themselves.”

Finance Manager is described as an “asset to the Judicial Department and SCAO” and he received an overall positive evaluation for 2017.

3. The Third Complaint and Investigation - 2021

The same woman employee referenced under “the first complaint” raised the third complaint. During her exit interview prior to leaving Judicial, she said that she was uncomfortable with the male Finance Manager and found herself subjected to inappropriate behaviors in the years following the first complaint. She did not come forward with these behaviors because of the negative experience of going through an investigation against her wishes the first time.

Her complaint included that:

- The Finance Manager was “creepy” to herself and others, including speaking in a sort of creepy voice.
- He made comments when she was wearing stretchy pants that they made her thighs look thinner.
- He would frequently look at the zipper on her pants and comment when it was down.
- He frequently commented about her appearance including about her nails, her earrings, the color of her shirt and her overall appearance.
- He made a comment about a string on her back pocket, which made her think he was looking at her butt.
- When they went on a run together, he talked about taking a woman friend to a movie about swingers.
- He made statements giving her the impression that his marriage was, at some point, an “open marriage.”
- He would abruptly switch directions in a professional conversation to talk about something personal.
- He frequently opened doors and invited her to walk through them before him, she suspected so he could look at her butt.
- He changed the way he interacted with her after she became more assertive, being disrespectful and demeaning.
- Following the Finance Manager’s request to the employee to “vouch” for him with respect to the “memo that was published by the Denver Post,” this woman employee decided to leave the Judicial Branch.

HR investigated these allegations. Two investigators conducted interviews with three individuals, which included the two mentioned parties and one additional witness from another department.

Finance Manager denied making comments about the woman attorney’s appearance or body and said that from his perspective, the two were friends. He provided friendly text messages the two exchanged, including one congratulatory email he sent her upon her decision to leave Judicial where she asked him to “[P]lease stay in touch!” as evidence of their collegial relationships.

The investigators found that the allegations were not substantiated. Their report, dated July 2, 2021, provides the reasons for this finding: that the woman attorney never told Finance Manager that his behavior or comments were inappropriate or made her uncomfortable; and that while the woman employee said these behaviors caused her to avoid Finance Manager, she continued to exchange friendly text messages with him, including asking him to stay in touch after she left Judicial.

The HR investigators recommended that Finance Manager’s supervisor meet with him to go over the expectations of professionalism and supervisor/Finance Manager conduct pursuant to Branch policies. They recommended that this meeting be documented, and a copy of this documentation be placed in his file. They recommended that Finance Manager immediately read and comply with policy and personnel rules and confirm that he had read these policies by email. They proposed additional training, including mandatory classes he had not completed following the second investigation such as Introduction to Cultural Competency and Basic Management STAR Workshops 1-3 and 4. They also directed him to take an Anti-harassment for Supervisors and Code of Conduct training, which he was “due to retake in 2022.”

Finance Manager’s supervisor remembered talking with Finance Manager but did not recall that he documented the discussion. He said he did not recall that discipline was considered. He said he thought that Finance Manager had completed all the training that was required.

I found that Finance Manager did receive a better office and an additional staff person in 2018 and 2017, respectively. The additional staff person joined after the first investigation but before the second one in March 2017. Finance Manager moved into his supervisor’s office in 2018. Finance Manager’s supervisor said that expanding workload explained the additional staff person Finance Manager was allocated. He also said that an office remodel resulted in him getting a better office, so Finance Manager backfilled the office his supervisor had previously occupied.

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

There were three substantiated incidents where Finance Manager was accused of inappropriate statements and conduct toward female teammates. The 2017 investigation substantiated a Code of Conduct violation not based on sex; and the 2013 and 2021 investigations did not substantiate the allegations. However, both the 2017 and 2021 investigations are problematic in terms of management’s failure to respond to them and because neither investigation appears to have been sufficiently thorough.

The 2017 investigation substantiated a Code of Conduct violation and recommended documented discussions between Finance Manager and his supervisor, policy review, and training. None of those steps were taken at the time. Two years later in 2019, one training was done and four years later in 2021, several more were completed. Some recommended training remains incomplete as of the date of this report. There is no direct mention of this substantiated finding in Finance Manager’s Performance Evaluation that year and no discipline ensued. Management apparently discounted what happened and moved on.

Moreover, the 2017 investigation data reveals some evidence of possible gender stereotyping that appears to have been missed by the investigator. Finance Manager told the female complainant not to express her frustrations “out loud,” to “remain positive,” and to “remain modest,” among other things. This kind of commentary can be coded stereotyping for asking women to “smile more” and to be more pleasant – a requirement that is often not asked of men. It does not appear that the investigators evaluated these remarks as potential indicators of gender bias.

The investigation into the third complaint was likewise not thorough. The complainant raised concerns about comments regarding her appearance, inappropriate personal commentary, and “creepy” interactions that spanned at least eleven (11) different topic areas over the course of six years. To fully investigate this set of allegations, HR should have interviewed more than just the parties and one additional witness (who does not appear to be someone who worked closely with either party). With at least eleven incidents over six years, this was a substantial investigation. The approach should have started with interviewing other coworkers who were in positions to observe behavior— particularly women who worked closely with Finance Manager.

In shortening this investigation, the investigators appeared focused on the facts that complainant never told Finance Manager that his behavior was offensive and that she continued to send him friendly texts. However, it is not an employee’s responsibility to notify a coworker when their behavior is problematic. While direct conversations are one way for workplace conflict to be resolved, they are not the only (or even the recommended) way to deal with workplace harassment. It is not a requirement that someone tell a person they are offended or to stop. Further, the friendly texting could be motivated by several things including fear of conflict, avoidance, welcomeness, or an absence of negative impact from the behavior. More data is needed to determine what was going on in this situation. The texting does not negate the alleged behaviors, which do not appear to have been fully examined.

A more robust investigation would have comported with best practices and would have addressed the fact that this was the third complaint in seven years from female employees about this male employee. Three complaints from women could suggest a pattern requiring a closer look than the investigation that was done. There may be no pattern but without a thorough investigation, there is no way to make that assessment.

Finally, it should be noted that Finance Manager was given an additional direct report and a nicer office between the second and third investigations. The explanations are innocuous and do not suggest that Finance Manager was “rewarded” for inappropriate behavior. Moreover, the additional staff person was added after a completed investigation that did not substantiate misconduct.

However, the office move happened a year after the substantiated finding in the second investigation. At the very least, the optics are not good where Finance Manager received a better office a year after he was found to have violated the Code of Conduct. This, together with the indifferent response to the finding from management, does not convey that concerns about Finance Manager’s behavior were deemed serious in the minds of management.

In conclusion, the facts suggest that HR and Finance Management should have taken a more deliberate approach to the issues raised about Finance Manager, including acting upon the findings in the second investigation, taking a closer look at Finance Manager in the most recent HR investigation, and ensuring proper training and consequences were implemented. The facts suggest that leadership in the Finance organization has been reluctant to take these kinds of claims against Finance Manager seriously.

2. Finding

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The allegation is Substantiated on all accounts.

Allegation Ten: Director of FSB Complained of “Not Working Even Banker’s Hours”

“Director of FSD complained about not working “even banker’s hours” by staff. Staff of other division follow him to his bar, home, and track that he does not place time in PTO system and is seen at home at 3:00 pm often or at bar.”

A. Methodology

My investigation did not substantiate the allegations here. There is some data to suggest that the Director of FSD (described hereafter as “Finance Manager”) worked less than some colleagues and was not in the office as much as people expected. However, the investigation into his whereabouts and performance was not appropriately thorough or impartial. Moreover, while there may have been performance areas Finance Director needed to improve upon, these were not serious enough in the eyes of his supervisor to justify termination. Finally, the timing of these events strongly suggests that there could have been a retaliatory motive for the investigations into the Finance Director and these motives were not investigated. On this record, I cannot substantiate the allegations claimed.

I interviewed ten (10) witnesses who had recollection of this incident and obtained additional information from a transcribed interview conducted in another investigation. I reached out to Finance Director, who is no longer with the Branch, several times to seek an interview. After initially agreeing to meet for an interview, he stopped responding to my requests. I was able to find his recorded interview from the investigation of this incident, which provided useful information.

While an in-person interview with Finance Director would have been ideal in my investigation, even without it, I believe I have received enough evidence to reach firm findings on this allegation under a preponderance of the evidence standard. This is particularly so because of the volume of documentation on this set of issues.

I sought out existing documentation from the Supreme Court Administrator’s Office, HR, and Legal Department. There is significant documentary data that is relevant to this allegation. Some documents were provided to me and others, I personally located by searching through databases of material that were made available to me.

The full report on this investigation was submitted to the Judicial Branch on June 9, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

1. The Timeline of Relevant Events

- Investigation into Alleged Reimbursement Misconduct by Ms. Masias

According to witnesses who were involved in this incident, as well as documents I reviewed, it is accurate that allegations were raised about the Director of the Financial Services Division in January 2019. However, the relevant chronology of events goes further back in time and is important in understanding what took place.

In July 2018, Ms. Masias submitted receipts and requests for reimbursement to the Controller of Judicial. Her receipts indicated that the expense occurred in FY19, but Ms. Masias submitted them for FY18. The Controller pointed this out to Ms. Masias and told her to resubmit the forms.

Ms. Masias did so but submitted the forms to the general accounting email and not to the Controller directly. The forms still requested reimbursement for FY19, and the invoices were altered to reflect different expense dates.

This concerned the Controller, who got the Director and other members of management involved. An investigation ensued and the external investigator concluded that the second invoice was fabricated, although he stated he could not reach a finding as to who altered the invoice.

As a result of the investigation, the State Court Administrator notified Ms. Masias on November 7, 2018, that he would be terminating her employment, effective November 15, 2018. Ms. Masias requested FMLA leave on November 12th and informed the Branch that she had retained counsel.

Initially, the State Court Administrator had not planned to terminate Ms. Masias because of this situation. However, Finance Director and Controller informed him that they refused to sign off on documents required for a pending audit unless Ms. Masias was terminated. The State Court Administrator had little choice but to proceed with termination.

According to both Finance Director and Controller, the State Court Administrator told Finance Director words to the effect of, “[W]atch your back.” Further, according to Finance Director, the State Court Administrator was instructed by the Chief Justice to get rid of both Finance Director and Controller for insubordination. The Chief Justice (from that time) has denied that he gave this instruction.

- Human Resources inquiry into alleged wrongdoing by Finance Director

Less than a month later, Human Resources Director Eric Brown began an HR inquiry into wrongdoing by Finance Director. This inquiry culminated in a January 22, 2019 memorandum from a Senior Human Resources Manager to the State Court Administrator, setting forth allegations of misconduct by Finance Director in five areas: email usage that showed Finance Director was hardly using email, suggesting he was not working at his job; time theft in that his hours at work were insufficient for a full-time executive of the Branch; a lack of appropriate leadership in the division; “sexual harassment” concerns based on Finance Director being “creepy,” asking women questions about their married life “out of the blue,” and invading the investigator’s personal space in a manner that was “unnerving”; and the fact of falling morale in the division. The investigator concluded that Finance Director was performing minimal work, stealing time, failing to engage, failing to lead, and engaging in potentially sexually harassing interactions with female staff. The memorandum, which explicitly states it is “cursory” and “not an exhaustive and complete review,” sets forth investigative efforts HR had already undertaken, starting as early as December 7, 2018, to investigate these concerns.

The State Court Administrator received this report, and nothing further appears to have happened for two months. During this timeframe between February and March 2019, negotiations occurred amongst Ms. Masias, her counsel, and SCAO regarding the terms of her departure and the leadership contract. Ms. Masias resigned on March 15, 2019.

- External Investigation into Alleged Wrongdoing by Finance Director

One week after Ms. Masias's departure, on March 22, 2019, Finance Director was placed on administrative leave while the allegations raised in the January 22nd memorandum were investigated by an outside investigator hired by HR. According to several witnesses, the investigator was previously known to, and connected with, Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown through their presentation work with the National Center for State Courts.

The investigator relied in part on the previous investigation done by HR, interviews with seven individuals including Finance Director, a review of records of activity in Finance Director's building access badge, Finance Director's email files, his performance reviews, and FSD employee satisfaction surveys. The investigator also examined Finance Director's hard drive to determine the number of working files actively being accessed and his VPN to determine how much remote access was taking place.

I listened to the one hour and 45-minute recorded interview that the investigator conducted with Finance Director. In that interview, the investigator spent the first 40 minutes asking questions about Finance Director's leadership style and practices. Following this, the investigator asked direct, and at times adversarial, questions of Finance Director about his time at work, use of email and overall professional commitment to his position.³¹ The investigator also discussed the connection that Finance Director was making between the investigation of him, and his role in the inquiry of Ms. Masias. At one point, the investigator said (inaccurately), "I don't believe your individual productivity is at issue." At the end, the investigator told Finance Director, "I'm not seeing a good strategy that leads to your continued employment, I gotta be honest with you. I think there are just things beyond repair."

The investigator gathered and reviewed documentary evidence about Finance Director's time spent in work or on work activities. He reviewed Finance Director's building access and PTO records from the period of October 1, 2018, through March 22, 2019, indicating that Finance Director's time in the office amounted to approximately 32 hours per week. When considering holidays, PTO and early closure days, the investigator concluded that 4.8 hours each week was "unaccounted for" based on a nine-hour workday (eight hours work and one hour lunch). He also reviewed Finance Director's computer files on his hard drive and found 33 work files that showed activity during this five-month timeframe. Finally, the investigator reviewed Finance Director's access to the network via VPN, which showed only one occasion where Finance Director was logged on remotely for a measurable period of time.

The investigator reviewed some slight evidence relating to Finance Director spending time on personal matters during the workday. He found evidence that Finance Director worked on volunteer boards, including one spreadsheet. His report does not reflect that he reviewed any data relating to work time allegedly spent at the bar that Finance Director and a family member owned.³²

Finally, the investigator reviewed evidence relating to leadership accountability and employee satisfaction. He cited his surprise that Finance Director, as “an individual who expressed such an enlightenment as [he] described,” would not remember the details of a personnel action memo he received directing him to engage more with his staff. However, in the interview it was the investigator who used the word “enlightenment,” not Finance Director. Investigator described the receipt of this memo as, “A pretty significant period of enlightenment . . . in your career.” He also noted that it was concerning that Finance Director did not ensure that HR’s recommendations were followed with respect to the employee in his group who had a substantiated harassment complaint. Moreover, he found that employee satisfaction was low and “unhealthy” in the division.

The investigator reached findings in his investigation report, dated April 8, 2019. These included that Finance Director’s time in the office was “substandard” for a person in his position, that his use of “state time and equipment” for personal business was problematic, that his leadership “lack[ed] accountability,” and that his organization was “unhealthy.” In his conclusion, the investigator noted Finance Director had “failed the division and SCAO.”

The State Court Administrator responded to this investigation report by drafting a termination notice to Finance Director on April 14, 2022, which he finalized and sent to Finance Director on April 24, 2019. The termination took effect on April 26, 2019.³³

- Finance Director Appealed the Termination Decision

Finance Director appealed his termination and hired counsel. Negotiations between counsel and SCAO commenced, with the parties settling upon allowing Finance Director to depart as part of a layoff instead of departing as a result of a termination of employment.

2. Witnesses’ Recollection of Events

Witnesses generally stated that it was known throughout the Branch that Finance Director did not work in the office with as much regularity as might be expected for a person in his position and that he would go to a bar owned by his family to help with the books (or do other tasks on behalf of that business). However, the previous State Court Administrator, for whom this Finance Director worked, said that this was done with his knowledge and permission, and he never found Finance Director unavailable when he needed him:

[Finance Director] had talked to me about his brother running this bar in Aurora and he needed to help with the books, they were trying to sell it. He asked me if he could go there and I said sure if it was on his time. In addition, [Finance Director] not only had permission but had the responsibility

³² It is possible that the investigator asked other witnesses about this issue but did not include it in his investigation report. I was not provided with, and could not locate, the other recorded interviews done in this investigation.

³³ Finance Director appealed his termination and hired counsel.

to meet with the Chief Justice when the Chief was meeting with budget committee members. . . . He not only had permission, but he [had] responsibility to do this. . . . The role is not just an 8-5 job. I can tell you there was never a time, I had [Finance Director]’s cell phone number, when I would ask him for documents/budget data that he didn’t answer my phone call and get me the information I needed immediately. When they are talking about bankers hours – issues that were there but I considered them all professionals.

A number of witnesses confirmed that Finance Director’s job required him to be off site to work periodically, particularly during budget season in the Colorado Legislature (which overlaps with the timeframe that the outside investigator evaluated as insufficient).

Seven (7) witnesses stated their concern that the HR investigation into Director was retaliatory, based on Director’s role in the Mindy Masias expense reimbursement situation. One person said, “[T]his looks like they just wanted to get rid of him . . . they were working toward a defined end. This was not an investigation it was a justification.” Another noted, “[W]hen the whole thing with Mindy first occurred and [Controller] and [Finance Director] said, ‘[W]e are not signing off on the audit,’ [the State Court Administrator] told me that he had told [Finance Director], ‘[Y]ou better watch your own house.’ He threatened him and then he made good on it by sic-ing Eric on him. Timing looked very suspicious.” Several employees said they heard that Ms. Masias drove by Finance Director’s house on a workday when she was out on leave and saw his car in the driveway. This surveillance was identified as the instigating factor that started the HR investigation going. The well-known animosity between Ms. Masias and Finance Director exacerbated these concerns about retaliation.

The State Court Administrator from this time contends that it was the Chief Justice who was driving the investigation of Finance Director. According to the State Court Administrator, the Chief Justice had said to him, “These two [Finance Manager and his staff person] need to go for insubordination,” for their refusal to sign off on the judicial audit. The former Chief Justice strenuously disagreed with this contention and denied being behind the investigation or ultimate personnel action.

Neither the HR inquiry nor the investigation report contains any data on what the State Court Administrator’s expectations were for Director’s time in the office or how he viewed the conduct that was being examined. The investigators did not interview the State Court Administrator or any fellow Directors about expectations. The State Court Administrator said that he “didn’t necessarily have [in-the-office] expectations for Division Directors or for Staff.” To the State Court Administrator, what was important was getting the work done, and not necessarily where it was being done. He said that his leadership team “did a lot of things outside of the office.” Directors I interviewed from that time said that there was flexibility in people’s work schedules and some people were in the office more than others.

The State Court Administrator said he that he was aware that Finance Director “had attendance issues,” but acknowledged that he did not “check[] people’s desks” to see who was in or not. He described Finance Director as responsive to him when he needed him.

With respect to Finance Director’s performance, the State Court Administrator said he told Finance Director to engage “more on a department-wide level” and stop focusing just on the budget. “His work performance was generally fine. For what it's worth, [Finance Director] is one of the most knowledgeable people about the state budget that I ever encountered over my entire career. I just didn't know until investigation got going was how little he was doing." The State Court Administrator said he was concerned when he saw how few emails the Finance Director sent and received, and also by what the investigation revealed in the way of odd personal documents on his computer.³⁴ This made the State Court Administrator concerned that he did not know what the Finance Director was doing. All the directors I met with said they would expect to be sending and receiving many dozens of emails a day, not the 5-8 emails per day that the Finance Director was handling.

With respect to the allegations of personal use of email and equipment, Judicial's Electronic Usage Policy, Chief Justice Directive 701, does not prohibit personal use, but allows for some incidental use of Judicial's electronic resources:

Limited personal use of the Department's electronic communication technologies [with some exceptions] is permissible when it does not consume more than a minimal amount of resources, interfere with employee productivity, conflict with this policies goals or any other judicial department policy, or preempt any work-related activity, in accordance with the Colorado judicial department code of conduct.³⁵

This policy, and the "limited personal use" allowed, was not discussed, or apparently considered by the investigator.

The State Court Administrator at the time did not agree with the decision to move to termination of this individual. "I would have looked at options like putting someone on a plan. A whole year of performance plans were put on IT when there were issues there. [Finance Manager] for all of the realization of what he wasn't doing, was extremely talented and was very good at what he did. He would have been someone who warranted another chance." The State Court Administrator said that the move to termination was not his call but was directed by the Chief Justice at the time, who wanted Finance Director gone. The Chief Justice denied this contention.

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

Based on these facts, there is insufficient evidence to substantiate the claim about Finance Manager's behaviors. First, the investigation into this behavior was inadequate and appears biased (based on the existing reports and records). As such it is a not reliable foundation to establish evidence of wrongdoing by Finance Director. Second, while there were likely some performance areas Finance Director needed to improve upon, they were not so serious that his supervisor agreed he should be terminated. Finally, the timeframe strongly suggests retaliatory motives for investigating Finance Director were a possibility, and this possibility was not investigated.

³⁴ The State Court Administrator mentioned spreadsheets correlating his salary to his weight, as one example. I could not confirm that this material existed as neither investigator mentioned it in their report.

³⁵ CJD 07-01 (Amended April 2014).

- The Investigation Was Not Thorough

The investigation report and materials raise many questions that ought to have been answered in the investigation. There is a large body of important data that the investigator should have gone after but did not apparently seek.

First, despite his statement in the report that Finance Director “indicated acceptance of [the attendance concern],” this is an inaccurate characterization. Finance Director indicated it would be “correctable” if there was a perception that he could not be reached. He said “If there are concerns about my behavior and practices, I will be all over it. I will correct that.” Finance Director did not acknowledge that he committed time theft or spent less than full-time in pursuing his job. He acknowledged that if there was a perception that he was not around enough, he would work to fix that.

Secondly, more specific questions would have resulted in more concrete data on Finance Director’s work activities, which was particularly important to gather in analyzing the work schedule of a salaried exempt employee. But the investigator did not ask many of the questions that could have elicited this evidence. The investigator did not ask Finance Director about his time out of the office at the Capitol for budget season. This is despite the fact that the timeframe for budget season overlaps with the timeframe the outside investigator examined. The investigator did not ask Finance Director if he stored documents in OneDrive. He did not ask about the time allegedly spent at the family bar, working on that enterprise. In fact, at one point the investigator told Finance Director, “I don’t believe your individual productivity is at issue,” when in fact, it was a central issue in the investigation. In other words, it does not appear that Finance Director was given a full opportunity to understand and answer the specific allegations against him, which is a necessary part of a thorough, impartial process.

Critically, the investigator did not interview the State Court Administrator to ask him what his expectations were for Finance Director in terms of time in the office, hours per week of computer/office work, personal use of email and computer, or work performance in general. Instead, the investigator relied on general statements like “In today’s office environment” in describing what the expectations ought to be. There is likewise no evidence that the investigator asked other SCAO executives about their time in the office, how many files they worked on in a five-month period, or whether it is prohibited to ever use state email or resources of personal reasons (even for de minimus use). It is not clear that the investigator reviewed the policies that exist on these issues.

There is no evidence showing that the “drive-bys” of Finance Director’s home, which instigated the HR inquiry, were corroborated by evidence other than an unnamed person’s word. There is no indication that either investigator confronted or tested any bias that could have been present in that person’s surveillance efforts. If, as reported, this person was Ms. Masias, the investigator ignored an inquiry into an ostensible retaliatory motive for the investigation.

Certainly, the data raised in the HR inquiry and investigation raised concerns about Finance

Director's work habits. A full investigation may or may not have borne those concerns out. The point is, only part of the necessary work was done.

- The Inquiry and Investigation Contain Indicia of Bias Against Finance Director and Others Who Were Involved in the Investigation of Ms. Masias

In addition, there are indicators of bias against Finance Director in both the HR inquiry and the investigation report. Both documents include personally pejorative statements about Finance Director, often without a factual foundation. The investigator characterized Finance Director's work schedule as constituting "egregious time theft," even though he was a salaried exempt employee, and the investigator failed to ask enough questions to understand Finance Director's work schedule, work production or work engagement. The external investigator described Finance Director as "aloof and defensive." He cited his surprise that Finance Director, as "an individual who expressed such an enlightenment as [he] described," would not remember the details of an action memo he received directing him to engage more with his staff. However, as noted above it was the investigator who used the word "enlightenment," not Finance Director. Investigator described this timeframe as, "A pretty significant period of enlightenment . . . in your career." The investigator's use of the word in the report, as though Finance Director was describing himself with this word, is inaccurate and sarcastic.

Second, the external investigator was aggressive at the end of his interview with Finance Director. He used leading questions, with significant characterization of evidence, in a confrontational manner. At the end of the interview, he said "I'm not seeing a good strategy that leads to your continued employment, I gotta be honest with you. I think there are just things beyond repair." An impartial investigator would not question in this manner and would not make a pronouncement about someone likely losing their job.

Moreover, both the HR inquiry and the investigation report include detailed data about behaviors of two of Finance Director's employees, both of whom were involved in the Mindy Masias expense reimbursement issue. The HR inquiry requests permission to do a full investigation of Finance Manager and his two staff members – in other words, of all three people primarily involved in investigating the expense reimbursement situation. These staff members are characterized pejoratively as well. One person's work cadence is described as "an embarrassment." The other was described as perpetuating "perceptions of [] hostile and discriminatory behavior towards staff," despite no investigative finding of discriminatory behavior by this person.

It is not likely an accident that these two individuals appear in a negative light in reports written by two individuals who have been described as having alliances with Ms. Masias. Their behaviors had no central relevance to the purpose of the investigations, which was to examine Finance Director's work habits. The inclusion of such tangentially relevant evidence, to the detriment of two additional people who were instrumental in the Mindy Masias matter, adds to the air of bias (and potential retaliation) permeating these investigations.

- Finance Director Was Not Disciplined, or Even Admonished Verbally, About Attendance and Work Performance Problems Prior to the Investigations

There apparently was a written discipline issued to Finance Director about his leadership and engagement with staff. I asked for but was not provided with this document, so I cannot assess how seriously these issues were treated.

I was provided with no record of verbal counseling, disciplines, performance plans or other serious disciplinary action against Finance Director for his attendance, use of email, diligence, or work task engagement. In fact, the State Court Administrator thought he was doing a decent job, was worthy of rehabilitation and would have given him another chance. The State Court Administrator was not aware of these concerns until the investigation occurred.

On this record, there does not appear to be enough factual support to sustain an action as drastic as termination, particularly on problems described in the HR inquiry as “long existing concerns.” This raises the question that, if concerns were so long-existing, why were they investigated when they were? This question was not asked, or seriously considered, by the investigator here.

- The Report Shows That the Investigation Ignored the “Elephant in the Room” – the Possibility That the Investigation Was Retaliatory

This leads to my last point. Finance Director strenuously claimed that HR’s scrutiny of his work performance was retaliation for his involvement in Ms. Masias’s fraudulent receipt investigation. He raised this with the investigator, but the investigator did not seriously investigate this possibility.

This is notable as the timing, alone, raises the possibility of a retaliatory investigation. Only one month transpired between Ms. Masias receiving her termination notice, and the HR investigation into Finance Director beginning. Only one week transpired between Ms. Masias’s resignation, and the outside investigation into Finance Director. This is close temporal proximity that would have been worth exploring in the investigations.

Moreover, the State Court Administrator contends that the investigation occurred under the direction of the (then) Chief Justice. He stated that the Chief Justice wanted to terminate Finance Director and one of his staff for “insubordination” in refusing to sign off on the agency’s audit. The investigator did not talk to the State Court Administrator or the Chief Justice to explore this possibility.

Whether either of these scenarios would have been substantiated or not, the failure of the investigator to take a serious look at them is a glaring omission of directly relevant data. It suggests that the investigator was focused on one ultimate resolution: documenting the case for termination. It makes the investigation appear to be, as one witness put it, “justification” and not investigation. Had this issue been fully vetted, it may or may not have shown a foundation for Finance Director’s claims. However, the reader of the report is left wondering because this critical issue was never considered.

In summary, the failures of this investigation render it an unreliable foundation upon which to substantiate the misconduct alleged.

2. Finding

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The allegations are Not Substantiated.

Allegations of Probation Department Misconduct (11 and 12)

Allegations Eleven and Twelve: CPO Sending Penis Pictures and CPO Having Sex on State Time and on State Property

“CPO takes picture of penis and sends to vendor; no disciplinary action taken; CPO has sex with a vendor on state time and on state property who later complains she felt she had to in order to keep her job; no disciplinary action taken.”

A. Methodology

I determined that these events pertain to the same people and sets of facts and accordingly, I am combining them into one Report Summary. These events occurred in 2012, shortly after the dissolution of a consensual relationship between this Chief Probation Officer (described hereafter as “CPO”) and a woman he was dating. The relationship began before the CPO’s promotion when he was a Probation Officer and the woman in question provided services to the Probation Division through a local vendor. He did not supervise her. While the parties disputed the chronology of events around the photo, they agreed that their relationship was consensual, non-coercive, and outside of the office. My investigation found that Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown conducted a full investigation of these allegations, and no disciplinary action was recommended.

I interviewed eight (8) people who had knowledge about this situation. This included the CPO, the female “vendor” in question, the Chief Judge of this District, an individual from the Legal Department, and coworkers in this Judicial District. People had strong recollections of what happened.

I searched for any relevant documents, images, or records relating to the incidents. I located very few documents that were relevant to the allegation. I sought out documents from SCAO’s HR department, the Judicial Legal Department, and this CPO’s chief judge in databases of materials produced in response to subpoenas issued in related proceedings. There were no copies of any investigation materials, the image, or any other records. I discovered one email sent by this CPO’s Chief Judge to the CPO after the investigation of the incident, which I will discuss below. I also located and reviewed this CPO’s evaluations during this timeframe to determine if any discipline was issued (it was not).

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 11, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

There is no dispute that the CPO in this allegation had a relationship, before his promotion, with a woman who was working for a local agency that provides probation services to the Division on a contract basis. Both the woman involved, and the CPO characterized the relationship as long-term, consensual, and happy. No one I interviewed expressed any concern about coercion or inappropriateness based on their respective roles. The (then) PO did not supervise the woman or have any impact on her employment

At some point near the end, or after the end, of the relationship (the parties disagreed on this timing), the CPO sent a penis picture to the woman. The woman recalled that he sent it to her after she had begun dating someone else and the CPO stated that he sent it to her when they were still dating. Neither party contended that the photo was sent or received at work.

Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown “showed up” at the probation office in this District and told the CPO that he was accused of “extorting” this woman “for sex.” He met and provided them with an interview. They also interviewed the woman involved. After her interview, the Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown returned to the CPO and told him, “[H]er story is the same as yours – a mutual relationship, two consenting adults.”

The woman remembered this chronology fairly consistently. She recalled getting a call from Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown and recalled meeting with them. She told them that her relationship with the CPO was consensual and not coerced.

Her version of events differs, however, with respect to the image in question. She said that the CPO sent her the penis picture after they broke up when she was dating someone else and the two had conflict about this at a local bar when they both showed up with their new partners. While she was upset that he sent the picture, she said that the workplace had nothing to do with this exchange and she never felt pressured or coerced into the relationship by the CPO’s position.

The Chief Judge in this Judicial District remembered this situation and the HR investigation by Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown. The Chief Judge reported the situation to HR, after an employee in the District brought the photo to his attention. This triggered the HR investigation. According to the Chief Judge, HR concluded that this was a consensual relationship, and the CPO was not in a position of authority or supervision over the woman. According to the Chief Judge, Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown did not write a report, but made verbal recommendations to reinstate the CPO and issue no discipline. The Chief Judge sent the CPO an email on January 11, 2013, reflecting Ms. Masias’s and Mr. Brown’s recommendations. They reviewed this email before he sent it to the CPO:

I am pleased to formally reinstate you to your position as CPO effective 1/9/2013. This outlines the expectations I have for you in light of the recent investigation conducted by HR.

First, as was suggested to you by HR, I strongly suggest that you obtain personal counseling. Although I am confident you are capable of finding your own counseling resources, you may want to contact CSEAP for finding resources. [http://www.coolorado.gov / cs/Sate 11 lte/ D PA-EO /D EO/1214905946179](http://www.coolorado.gov/cs/Sate11lte/DPA-EO/D EO/1214905946179)

I believe it is critical to impress upon you the importance of your adherence to ethical guidelines established by the Code of Conduct and other Judicial Department policies. It is my expectation that you error on the side of caution. The recent circumstances that led to the investigation into your behavior are a result of the fact that your behavior and performance are closely inspected by employees, business partners and community members. . . .

It is my concern that your recent behavior will open you to significant scrutiny. Because of this, it is my expectation that you use extreme diligence and conservative decisions personally as well as professionally. I ask that you continue to work with the Division of Human Resources and use them as a sounding board for any ethical dilemmas you encounter.

The Chief Judge said, “[T]he bottom line – it was astonishing to me to know that a memo drafted by Eric was reciting this as an example of problem culture in the Judicial Department. Everything that was done was done at Mindy’s and Eric’s direction. I am utterly exasperated.”

I found no corroborating evidence for the claim that the CPO and vendor had sex on state time or on state property. The CPO denied that the two ever had sex in the office or on state time. The woman involved was adamant that the two never had sex on state property or on state time: “I can’t think of a single time when we were even alone in the office. We were never in the office with the door shut, ever.”

The corroborated fact that Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown recommended no discipline in this matter suggests that they did not substantiate any abuse of power or position in the CPO having sex on state time, on state property, or otherwise.

Finally, I found no record that the CPO in question was disciplined for this event. His 2013 evaluation was all positive, with scores of four (primarily) and one five (for professionalism). I requested records of any discipline that was issued, and nothing was located.

C. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

The sum of this data reveals a consensual relationship and an unwanted photo that was sent. There was no inappropriate impact on the workplace and in fact, no connection to the workplace as far as the photo is concerned. Moreover, Ms. Masias’s and Mr. Brown’s investigation nine years ago appear to have found the same thing.

There is no evidence that this conduct arose out of or impacted the workplace. The (then) PO had no position of authority over his girlfriend. If this situation had, indeed, involved an abuse of power like “sex with a vendor on state time and on state property,” it is unlikely Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown would have recommended no discipline. Yet, that was what they did. If this woman later “complain[ed] she felt she had to in order to keep her job,” it would be inappropriate for them to have recommended reinstatement. But it appears that Ms. Masias and Mr. Brown recommended just that.

In fact, the woman involved in this relationship told me she felt no pressure or coercion about engaging in the relationship, and said the same thing to the HR investigators. While she did not appreciate the photo and was angry about it at the time, she was clear that this had nothing to do with the workplace. She did not report this situation to Judicial, but a coworker she showed the photo to did.

There is nothing in the evidence to suggest that the CPO should have been disciplined as stated in this allegation. This allegation of serious (and embarrassing) workplace wrongdoing, and the implication that this person got away with something, is not supported by any credible evidence.

2. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The allegation of the photo is Substantiated; however, I find that the allegation is misleading because this was not a workplace situation, and the HR investigation determined no policy violation had taken place.
- It is Not Substantiated that there were instances of sex with this vendor on state time and on state property.
- It is Substantiated that no discipline occurred; however, HR did not recommend discipline in this matter.

Allegation Fifteen: Chief Probation Officer Instructing All Staff to Swat Female on the Backside

CPO directing all staff to swat a female on the backside, no disciplinary action taken.

A. Methodology

It took significant work to find out who this allegation was about. Unlike other matters we investigated, no one at SCA had an idea about who this Chief Probation Officer (described hereafter as “CPO”) or woman Probation Officer (described hereafter as “female PO”) are. I finally located one document that referenced this matter, which had names in it. By this, I was able to identify the parties.

I determined that this event happened in 2018 when the CPO in question made a statement to the effect of directing attendees at a meeting to “spank” the female PO on her way out as she was leaving the District to work for another Judicial District. The female PO in question construed this as an awkward and unwelcome attempt at a joke but was otherwise unbothered by the comment. She liked the CPO and characterized their relationship as friendly and supportive.

I interviewed four (4) people with direct knowledge about this situation: the CPO involved, the woman about whom the remarks were allegedly made, the person who raised the complaint, and the chief judge of this District. These individuals had a strong memory of these events and together with the few documents that were located, they provided enough information for me to reach firm findings in the case.

There were only two documents located on this incident, including notes from a phone call someone in HR had taken with a team member from this probation department. These notes reflect an initial inquiry into the event. I also found an undated, unsigned draft letter from the HR Department to the Chief Judge in this District, laying out the concerns that had been raised. This letter was likely not sent. I also reviewed this CPO’s evaluations and asked for discipline records (none were located).

I submitted a full report on this investigation to counsel for the Judicial Branch on May 18, 2022. On May 24, 2022, I was directed to prepare Report Summaries on all matters for public release. I completed this Report Summary pursuant to this requirement.

B. Summary of Material Evidence

The witnesses who remembered this situation identified it happening in 2018 and identified the specific Judicial District where it took place. A woman PO was transferring to another Judicial District. The CPO called an all-staff meeting to announce her departure to the department and allegedly made remarks that were later reported to HR. As described by the woman PO:

It was at my last All Staff – and [the CPO] was saying a few words about me. He said, “Okay everyone line up behind [name redacted],” and he insinuated slapping my behind on my way out. I do not remember the date. It was the beginning of July. . . . He acted it out (witness raised her hand high up and swung it around). He didn’t actually hit my butt but he did the arm movement. I don't remember exactly what he said. Who all was there? The whole department - probably around 100 people.

She indicated that she "really liked" this CPO, and "felt I had a good relationship with him." She said, "I felt it was inappropriate for anyone, especially a chief to do. But I didn't feel I was being harassed in any way. I didn't make any type of complaint. I don't want to minimize how it made my colleagues feel. It should have been taken seriously and was. I didn't really feel that I was offended in any way." She said she did not experience any other instance of inappropriate behavior or commentary from the CPO.

The CPO did not remember this and said that no one from HR (or anywhere else) talked to him about it. He said he did not recall saying this but "it wouldn't be unlike me to tease [this woman PO]. She was a great PO and is still working in [another District]. I supported her. It would have been like me to tease her about being a traitor to our District. I was not aware of this and no one questioned me about it."

My standard joke when someone left was to say, "You're dead to me now" – I teased anyone like that, at the same time wishing them well. It doesn't always work when moving one District to another, it's a risk. I thought the world of [this woman PO]. I certainly meant no disrespect. . . . I think I would remember this. And no one came to talk to me.

The event was raised by a coworker, who went to another person in the Probation department because they were offended by the comment. This person forwarded the complaint along to HR for its handling.

The Chief Judge in this District said that he was never informed about this allegation, the inquiry, any findings, or any recommended consequences. No one from HR reached out to discuss the situation with him and he was not interviewed as part of any investigative process.

HR did a preliminary inquiry of the matter, interviewing the staff member who had been offended and the woman PO. The individual from HR drafted a letter for the Chief Judge of this District, with the data she found. It contains references to the spanking comment and another remark that was alleged by the CPO that a woman PO had a lot of experience "under the belt, I mean skirt." It also notes the allegations of poor morale and a poor work environment. This letter is not denominated an investigation report, likely because no full investigation was done. It is unsigned and undated and the chief judge in question said he never received it. He said he knew nothing about this situation at the time or thereafter.

I reviewed this CPOs performance evaluation from 2019. There was no mention of this incident as might be expected if his supervisor was unaware of the incident. There was no discipline located in the file.

D. Analyses and Finding(s)

1. Analysis

This investigation did not reveal a complicated set of facts. An all-hands meeting occurred in 2018 and the CPO in question made a remark about a female subordinate, who was leaving to work in another District. He made a remark, which she construed as an attempted joke, about everyone lining up and “spanking” her on the way out.

An initial HR inquiry took place in which the HR investigator spoke to the woman PO and a couple of other individuals. The CPO was not interviewed, there was no investigation file, and no investigation report was located. No one notified the Chief Judge in the District and no discipline was recommended.

The female PO has not been impacted by this situation and said she really liked (and likes) this CPO. She felt he was trying to be funny “in a distasteful way.”

The person who raised this complaint had some motivations that went beyond identifying wrongful behavior. He felt upset that his own actions were called into question in an investigation where he was the respondent. He felt leaders in the Probation Department were saying inappropriate things and he wanted to raise this remark when he heard about it, in part because of this disparity in his own actions being called into question versus this leader’s actions. While his motives may not have been entirely “pure” in raising the situation, the fact is that the remark was made in front of almost a hundred people, and it was objectively offensive.

The HR professional who did the initial inquiry appears to have determined, perhaps with feedback from Ms. Masias and/or Mr. Brown, that this case did not rise to the level requiring a full investigation. Without interviewing one of (or all) these witnesses, I cannot know with certainty why this decision was made. However, it does suggest that the situation was not deemed serious enough to require a full investigation. Relatedly, I found no recommendation for discipline and no discipline ultimately was issued in this case.

Moreover, no inquiry appears to have been done into the “experience under the skirt” remark. This is additional evidence suggesting that the event was not deemed important enough by HR to merit a full investigation and disciplinary recommendations.

2. Findings

For the reasons set forth above, I find:

- The allegation about the spanking comment is Substantiated.
- The allegation that no discipline was issued is Substantiated, with the caveat that the chief judge was likely not notified and there is no documentation that discipline was recommended.

ASSESSMENT OF THE WORKPLACE CULTURE IN THE COLORADO JUDICIAL BRANCH

Anne R. McCord, SPHR, SHRM-SCP, PI, AWI-CH

Report of Data on Workplace Culture

The Survey

We used a survey to solicit information from as many people in the Colorado Judicial Branch's (CJB's) workplace as possible. This was our primary tool to gather data to help us understand the present state of the Colorado Judicial Branch's culture. Our goal was to better understand the culture across the Colorado Judicial Branch as a whole and to understand the workplace culture of the specific Districts that make up the CJB. The survey was augmented by voluntary interviews from employees and appointed officials from most Districts. We then evaluated whether, and to what extent, the culture has encouraged, normalized, or failed to deter sexual harassment, sex-based discrimination, and retaliation.

Investigations Law Group (ILG) worked with Survey Design & Analysis (SDA) on the design of a climate survey as a part of the overall evaluation of the climate at the Colorado Judicial Branch. The survey went through several iterations of edits and tests to produce the final survey. We implemented two versions of the Survey— one for appointed officials and one for employees of the CJB.

The Workplace Culture Survey was designed to provide all members of the Colorado Judicial Branch an opportunity to provide anonymous feedback on the current culture in their workplace(s), observations and experiences regarding sexual harassment, sex-based discrimination, and retaliation, as well as the culture on reporting these issues, knowledge of CJB policies, and more general observations about the work environment. We collected a range of demographic data to allow detailed analysis by role, age, gender, and ethnic/racial background.³⁶ The breadth and depth of information collected from the survey provided comprehensive input to our recommendations to improve the current culture.

A five-point Likert scale was used for all satisfaction and agreement questions. For this report, "Satisfaction Level" is defined as the percent of respondents selecting "Very satisfied" or "Satisfied" to a satisfaction question; the top two boxes of the 5-point scale. Similarly, "Agreement Level" is defined as the percent of respondents selecting "Strongly agree or Agree" to an agreement question; the top two boxes of the 5-point satisfaction scale.

We sent the Workplace Culture Survey to 4,133 individuals who work in Colorado Judicial Branch workplace(s). This included administration, directors, magistrates, managers, supervisors, staff, and various other roles with the CJB. The survey was sent to participants via email and invited all employees and appointed officials within the CJB to participate in the study. The survey opened January 5, 2022 and closed at midnight on January 19, 2022.

The Colorado Judicial Branch is split up among twenty-four (24) Districts, including Districts 1 through 22, as well the State Court Administrators Office (SCAO), and the Supreme Court and Colorado Court of Appeals or SC/COA. The individual Districts operate separately, with centralized support from SCAO. As such, the survey identified that there is no centralized culture at the Colorado Judicial Branch. While we assessed the survey results for the CJB and the same two versions of the survey were sent out to every District of the CJB, the results that are most significant for this project were informed by the survey data collected from each District.

The results of our survey efforts were enlightening and offer a rich set of data to draw upon in understanding the Colorado Judicial Branch's culture as it relates to issues of sexual harassment, sex-based discrimination, and retaliation. The survey also provides information on the confidence employees have in their leadership, specifically around reporting issues related to these concerns.

Out of 4,133 survey recipients, ILG received two-thousand five-hundred and sixty-six (2,506) completed responses and one-hundred and eighteen (118) partially complete responses between January 5, 2022, and January 19, 2022. Two-hundred and sixty-three (263) appointed officials and two-thousand three-hundred and fifty-five (2,355) employees responded to the survey for a strong response rate of 63%. Seventy-five of survey participants are female, who make up 41% of appointed officials and 75% of employees. Ninety percent of participants are under sixty (60) years of age and 15% of participants are under 30 years of age. Fifty-three percent of participants work in Court Services, while 37% work in Probation Services. Seventy-four percent of participants are staff. Fifty-five percent of the appointed officials who participated in the survey have been with CJB for more than six (6) years, and 43% of employee participants have been with the CJB for more than 10 years.

The Interviews

An essential part of the information gathering process was hearing directly from voluntary stakeholders about their firsthand experiences and insights into the culture and environment at the Colorado Judicial Branch. It was important that our conversations with stakeholders encouraged open and honest dialogue. As such, we conducted one-on-one interviews in a manner that would guarantee anonymity and ensure comfort with the process.

We interviewed self-selected individuals³⁷ (voluntary interviews), who we asked a general set of questions about the working environment at the Colorado Judicial Branch. We also reached out to specific individuals for interviews (targeted witnesses) who we asked questions that were specific to allegations and / or their role and experiences while working at CJB. Below is a discussion of the interview process for the voluntary witnesses and what we learned.

³⁷ Given the nature of our project for the CJB, we expected that there would be more concerning or negative feedback provided by the voluntary interviews. As will be highlighted in below sections, the work environment at the CJB overall is quite positive. Some Districts rated lower in the survey, and it was from those Districts that the more negative and concerning voluntary interview feedback was provided.

Culture Feedback from Voluntary Interviews

One-hundred and three (103) witnesses reached out to ILG asking to be interviewed. Out of this number, six (6) witnesses provided written statements and 97 witnesses were interviewed over telephone or video conference. Voluntary interviews included witnesses from various backgrounds, roles, and Districts within the CJB. Twenty-two Districts were represented among the nearly hundred voluntary witnesses. The only District not represented was District 20 (Boulder). Districts 1, 2, 17, and 18 were the top four represented Districts among voluntary witnesses. These were also the Districts that received the most negative scores in terms of survey results. Voluntary interviewees included both current and former employees and most of the stakeholder groups at the CJB, including probation, attorneys, judges, court executives, clerks, judicial assistants, Human Resources, trainers, supervisors, and support staff.

We followed the same outline of questions in most of the interviews we conducted, although we allowed people to stray from this and direct the dialogue elsewhere if they wished. Additionally, there were certain questions we asked only if witnesses raised issues of discrimination or harassment outside of the scope of our investigation. Questions consisted of both “Yes/No” and open-ended answers. The “Yes/No” questioning allowed us to quantify answers numerically so that we could analyze answers both as a whole and broken down by stakeholder group. Interviewees were allowed and encouraged to expand upon their “Yes/No” answers to provide more explanation and deeper insight into their experience at the Colorado Judicial Branch workplace.

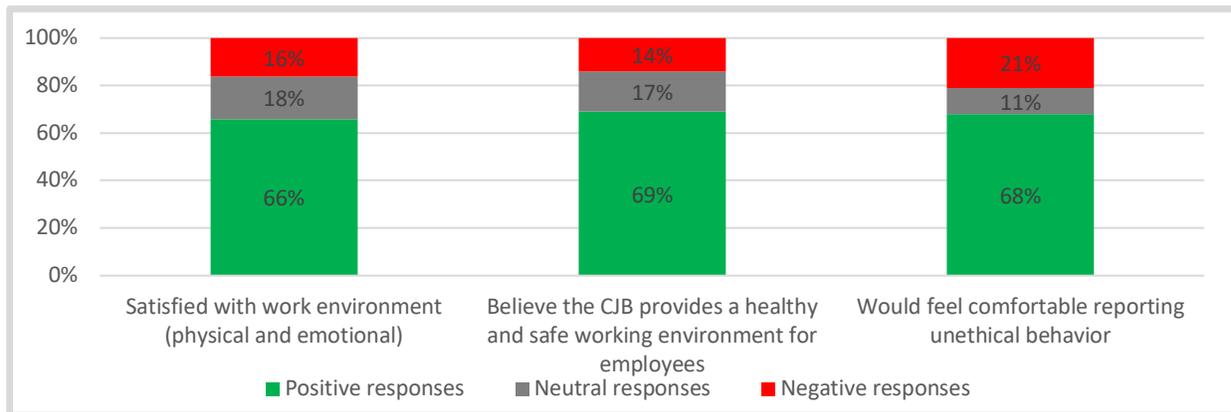

Pursuant to our contract with the Judicial Branch, we were empowered to identify other issues of discrimination or harassment – outside the matters identified in the Eric Brown List – for further investigation. Issues that were raised in the survey were done so anonymously, but witnesses in individual interviews raised additional matters that implicate the Branch’s anti-discrimination and anti-harassment policies. We asked these witnesses whether they wanted their matter investigated further. For those who answered in the affirmative, we provided their data to the Judicial Branch for further investigation. We offered to conduct this work, or provide referrals to other local investigators to do so. As of the date of this report we have not been asked to conduct any of these additional investigations, but understand that the Branch will be making determinations about these investigations following the publication of this report.

Summary of the Colorado Judicial Branch Workplace Assessment

Given that the CJB is decentralized, made up of twenty-four (24) distinct and individual workplaces, there is not one consistent, overall workplace. In this section we provide the general survey results and information we gathered from the interviews. Later, we dive into the top and bottom Districts³⁸ within the CJB, which reported substantially different results on the culture of the CJB.

Overall, the survey results indicated that the Colorado Judicial Branch is a positive place to work. A majority, 72%, of participants, said they were satisfied with their job at CJB, with satisfaction level for Court Services at 76% and Probation Services division at 67%. Overall satisfaction for appointed officials was higher, at 89% (47% reported being “very satisfied” and 42% reported being “satisfied”).

Most of the individuals who participated in the survey were satisfied with their work environment and their work relationships. Overwhelmingly, survey participants feel respected by their supervisors (86%), coworkers (89%), and appointed officials (77%). Most survey participants believe that the CJB provides a healthy and safe work environment and agree they would feel safe reporting any concerns they have about unethical behavior. However, with 14%-21% of participants giving negative responses to these questions, there is still work to be done.

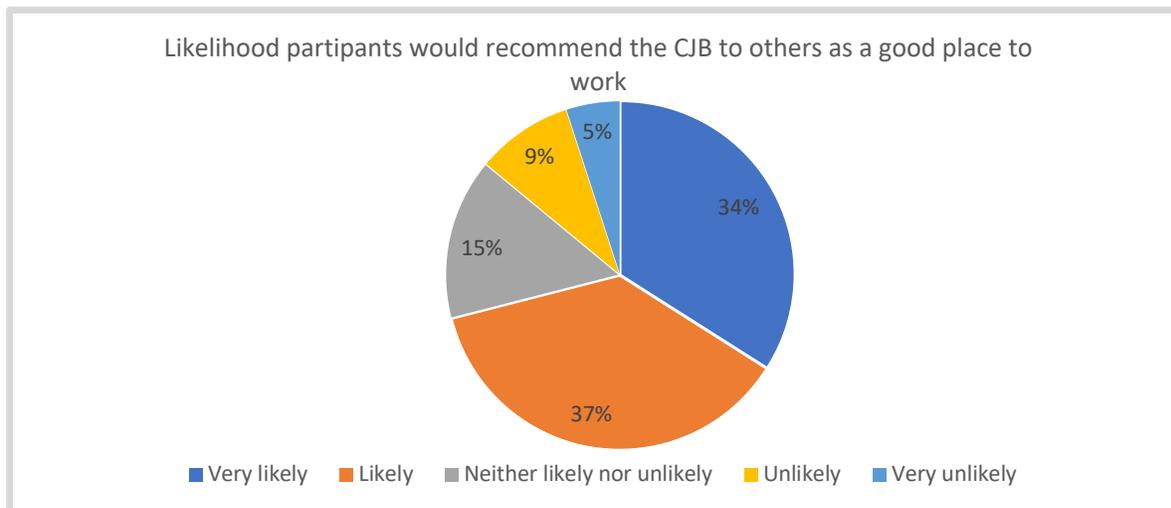

Responses are skewed by gender, with men answering more positively than women in these areas across the board.

- 77% of men are satisfied with their work environment at CJB, while 66% of women are satisfied with their work environment.
- 81% of men agree that the CJB provides a healthy and safe work environment, while 69% of women agree that that the CJB provides a healthy and safe work environment.
- 81% of men agree they would feel comfortable reporting unethical behavior, while 69% of women agree they would feel comfortable reporting unethical behavior

Seventy-one percent of participants said they would be likely to recommend the CJB to others as a good place to work, if a qualified colleague or acquaintance was interested and/or looking for a position. In the detailed section below, we will highlight how this question relates to the Districts that have fewer issues and those that have more issues with respect to gender discrimination, sexual harassment, and retaliation.

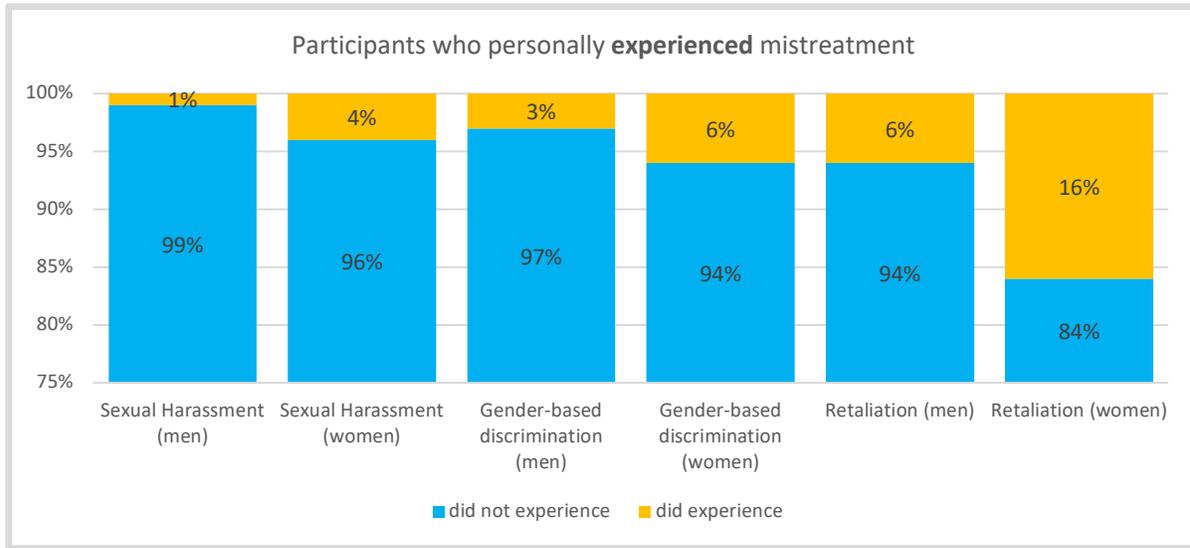

Respectful Workplace Behavior

We were tasked with understanding whether there is an environment at CJB where sexual harassment, gender discrimination and / or retaliation is prevalent. Ninety-five percent of survey participants said they understand the policies on acceptable behavior in their department. Ninety-two percent of participants said they know how to locate personnel rules and 91% had received training on anti-retaliation in the past five years. Finally, 64% indicated they know how to file a grievance against an employee while 62% stated that they know how to file a grievance against an appointed official.

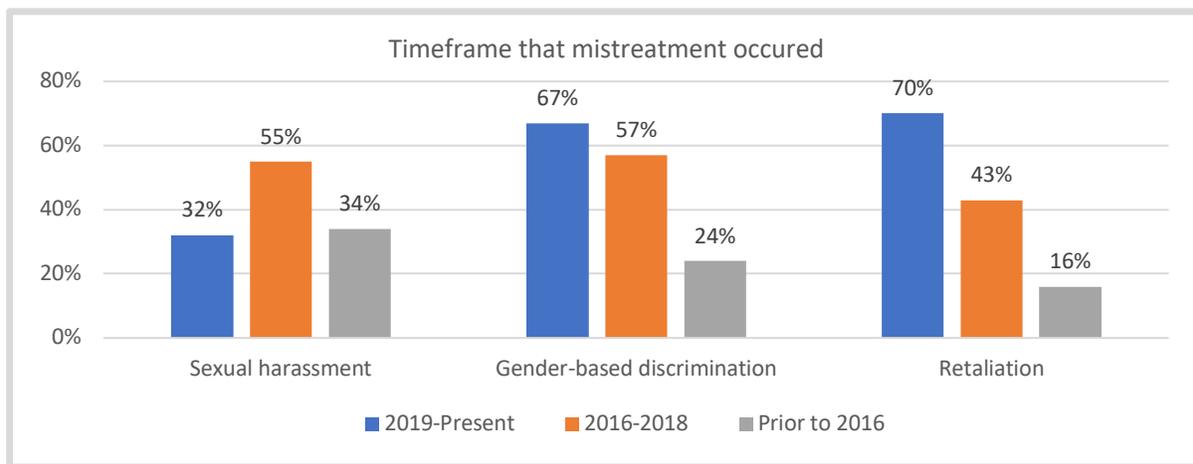

While it is positive that most participants indicated that they understand acceptable workplace behavior, there continues to be some misconduct that is witnessed and / or experienced. Overall, 17% of those who responded to the survey experienced, and 21% witnessed, one or more of the mistreatments that we assessed (gender-based discrimination, sexual harassment, or retaliation).³⁹ Those who have been with the CJB longer were more likely to have experienced or witnessed incidents of mistreatment. Only 2% of those in their first year at CJB experienced any of the three areas of mistreatment. Additionally, a greater percentage of women reported experiencing mistreatment in every area. Of the categories we surveyed, retaliation was the most frequently witnessed or experienced misconduct and we found this was consistent across most Districts.

³⁹ It is important to note that the same survey participant could answer yes to experiencing and witnessing all three types of problematic behavior. Thus, 17% does not equate to an exact number of participants in the survey.

The survey prompted participants to qualify the timeframe in which mistreatment occurred within three time periods: 2019 to present, between 2016 and 2018, and prior to 2016. In terms of gender-based discrimination and retaliation, a greater number of participants experienced incidents after 2019. Participants indicated that more incidents of sexual harassment occurred prior to 2019, particularly in the period from 2016 to 2018.⁴¹ The CJB has focused on training and education on Sexual Harassment in recent years and this data may indicate that the training has had an impact given the lower numbers 2019 to present.⁴²

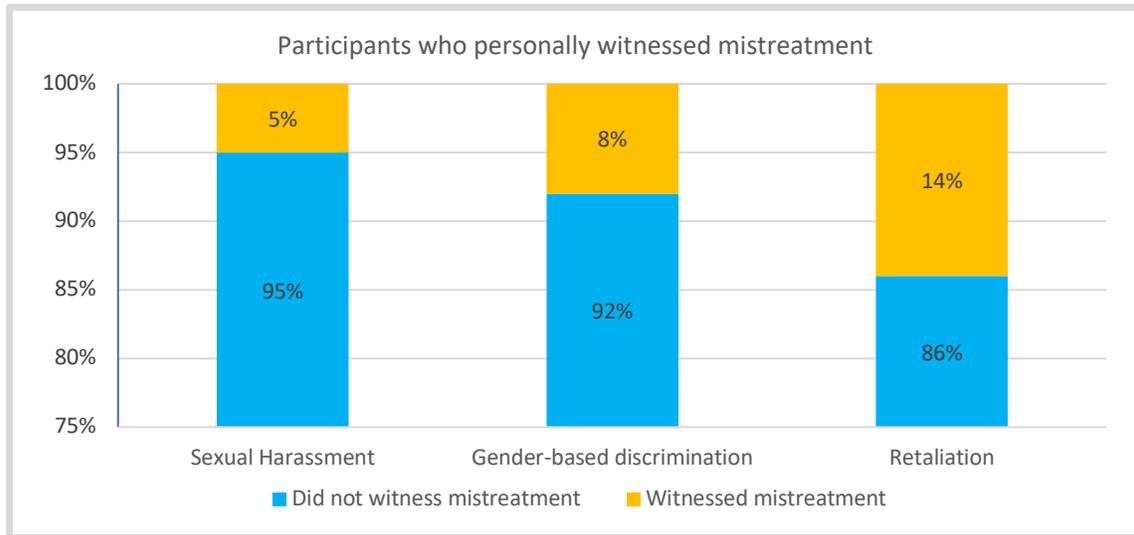

As mentioned above, 21% of participants said they observed one of the three forms of mistreatment. There was overlap between participants who said they personally experienced

⁴⁰ As stated in a previous footnote, the same participant could have answered yes to both witnessing and experiencing the misbehavior, which could give the impression that the issues are more prevalent than they are.

⁴¹ The below chart shows a percentage total that totals greater than 100%. This indicates that a number of participants reported their experiences to have occurred during multiple of these timeframes, or over a longer period.

⁴² There are also multiple societal issues that have brought sexual harassment into the forefront in that timeframe, namely the #METOO movement.

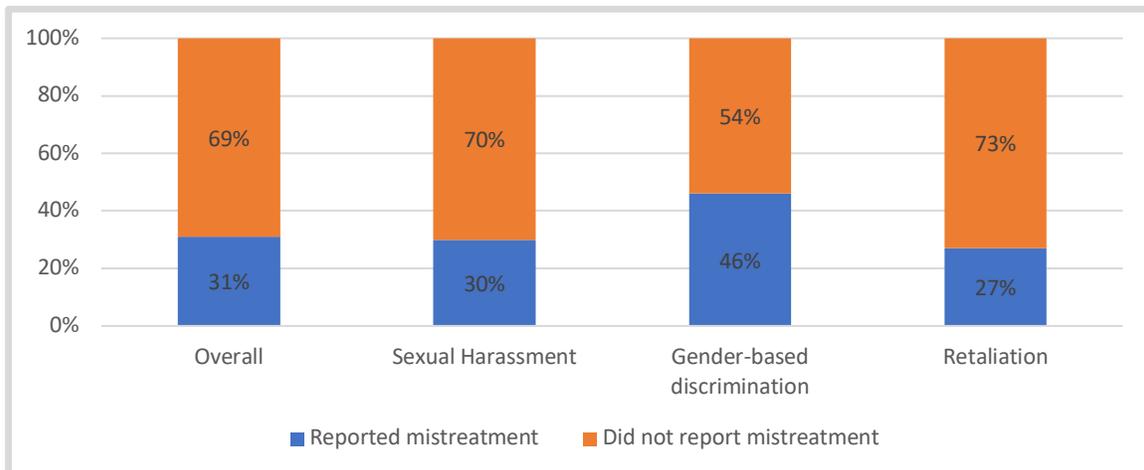

mistreatment and those who said that they observed it, but these participants did not specify whether the incidents they observed were the same as those they experienced.

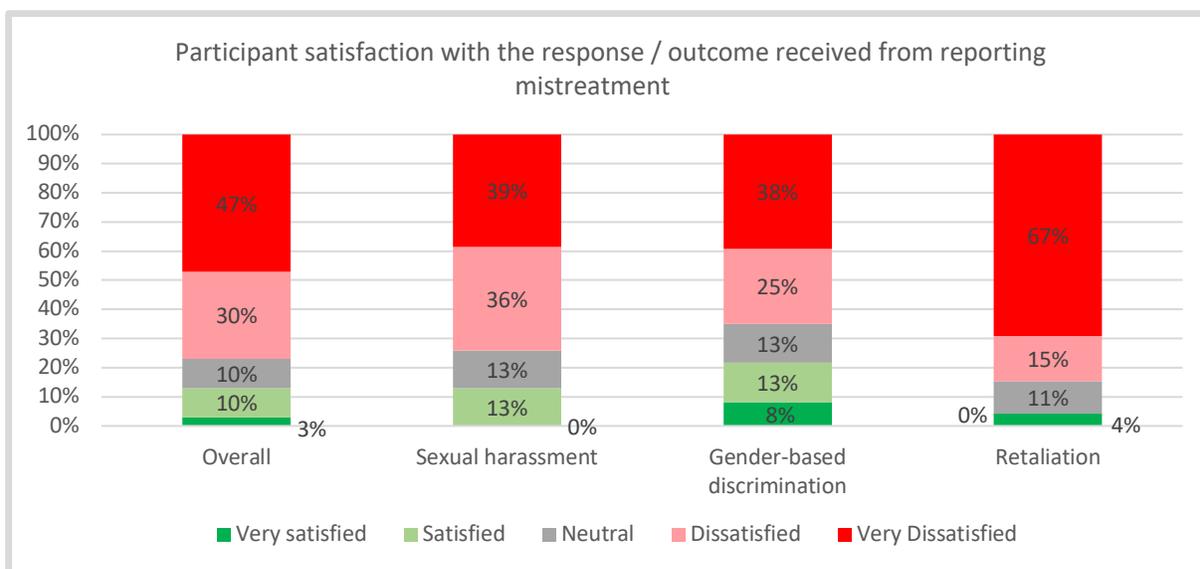

Reporting Misconduct

The survey highlights the participants' lack of confidence that anything would result from reporting mistreatment at the CJB. While 61% of participants said that leadership takes reports of sexual harassment seriously, and 63% said they would be comfortable reporting misconduct by an Appointed Official, only 39% agreed that Appointed Officials would be held accountable when allegations of sexual harassment are raised against them.

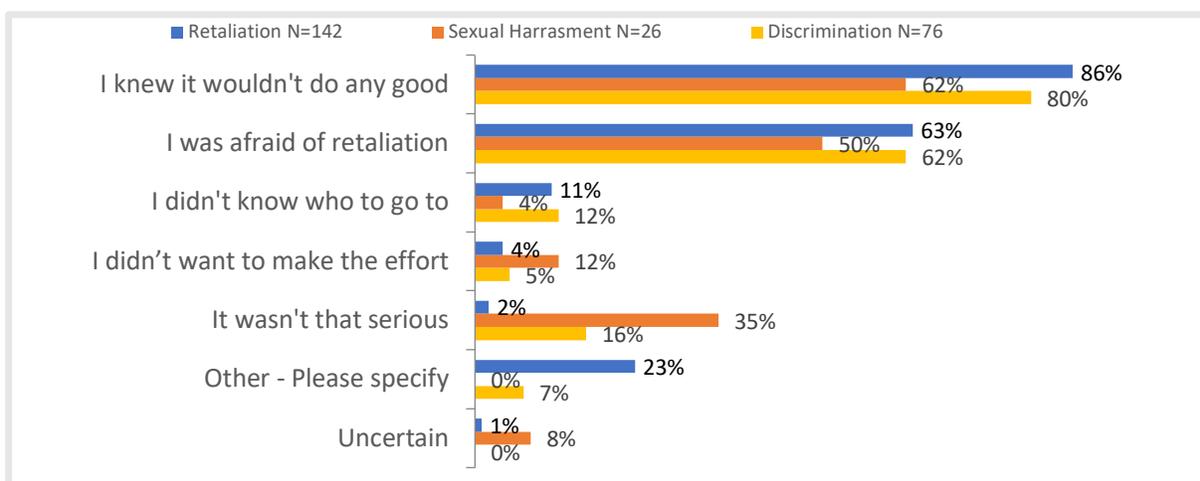

Among survey participants who experienced mistreatment, 69% did not report it.

Out of those who chose to report, 77% indicated they were not satisfied with the response or outcome they received from doing so. Those who reported retaliation were the least satisfied with the response from management.

The top reasons provided⁴³ for not reporting an incident were “I knew it wouldn’t do any good” and “I was afraid of retaliation.”

Other comments about why participants did not report included:

- “I discussed it with the person who did it but not that person’s superior.”
- “I spoke to my direct supervisor about it who told me that if I continued to talk about it, she would have to report it.”
- “HR still has bullies working there and they don’t help employees when they are being mistreated by their supervisors.”
- “It involved the chief judge.”
- “The behavior is not always “concrete” enough to report- like I notice that my male colleagues treat me differently than they treat each other.”
- “Came from the top.”

⁴³ Participants were given the opportunity to select multiple reasons for not reporting, thus the totals exceed 100%.

- “HR was friends with the chief judge so I could not go to HR.”
- “I generally experience this behavior from older male colleagues and recognize that I just have to wait until they retire and hope their spots are filled with someone who is different.”
- “It was the chief judge at the time and I knew he was known for retaliation.”

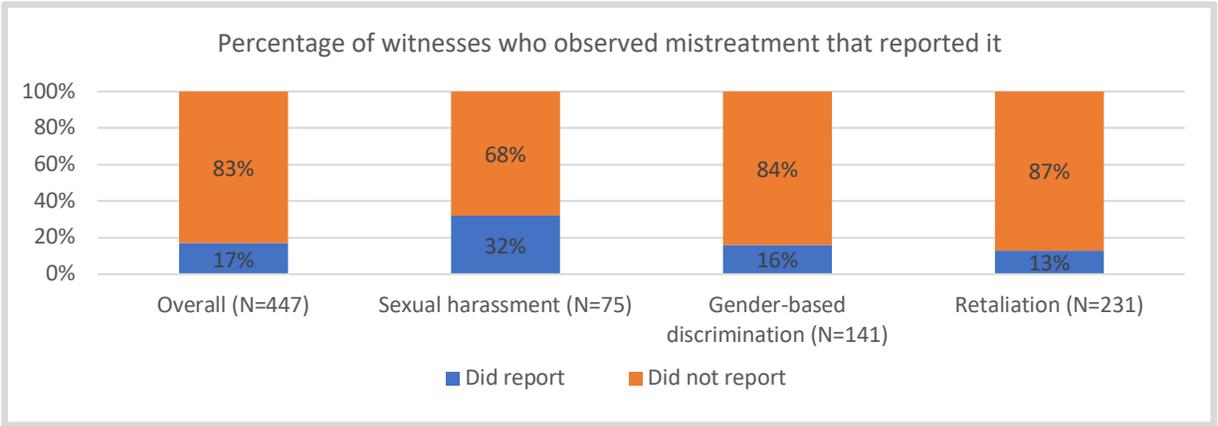

As mentioned above, 63% of total participants said they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by an appointed official. For those who said they would not feel safe doing so, the top reasons provided were “nothing would be done” and “afraid it would end my career.”

Other reasons given for not reporting misconduct by an appointed official included:

- “Administrative authorities work to protect appointed officials from Judicial Performance Evaluators to the detriment of employees (and voters).”
- “Appointed Officials (i.e., judges) have an enormous amount of power and influence in the Branch. They are often “worshipped” by many as they have worked so “hard” to get where they are at, which is demeaning to everyone else who works hard. Since they have such a strong knowledge of Law and judicial practices it would be silly for anyone to file a complaint against them. At the end of the day the Branch only cares about its judges, so what would be the point? They are not held to the same standards. They are held to lesser standards.”
- “There is zero trust with the current HR team. Further, they rarely take actionable steps with complaints.”
- “CJA’s are told to move if not happy with Judicial Officer or direct supervisor. The supervisor remains in their position, and we’re told we won’t see what if any action is taken.”
- “HR is in the same bed as officials, they don’t have loyalty beyond Administration.”
- “From past experience (more than five years ago): These incidents are kept quiet within departments/the Branch and the victim is rarely made aware of what, if any, action is taken. The secrecy of the whole process protects the perpetrators and allows them to further victimize. Additionally, once a report is filed, the victim/reporting party is directed to not speak to anyone about the matter; furthering the secrecy and often isolating the victim/reporting party to deal with what happened and their feelings about it alone.”

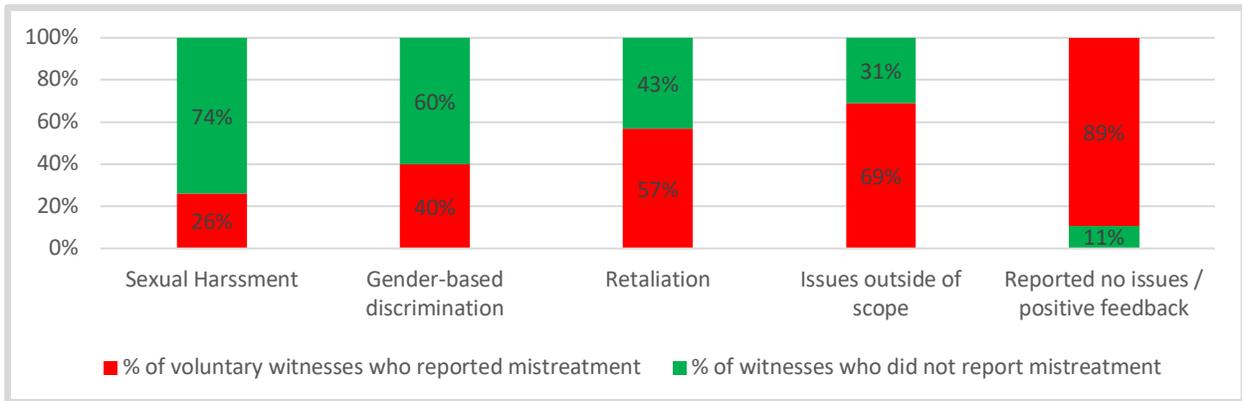

The numbers are different among appointed officials—81% of whom said they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by another appointed official.

Out of those who reported they had witnessed one of the areas of mistreatment (sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, retaliation), 83% did not report it, suggesting concern around the reporting culture at the CJB.

Fifty percent of those who reported observing sexual harassment, 91% of those who reported observing gender-based discrimination, and 78% of those who reported having observed retaliation were dissatisfied with the response they received. For those who chose not to report, the most prevalent reasons provided were “I knew it wouldn’t do any good” and “I was afraid of retaliation.”

Out of the witnesses interviewed, a significant number⁴⁴ experienced or witnessed one of the three forms of mistreatment being investigated (sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, retaliation).⁴⁵

Sexual Harassment

Seven percent (175)⁴⁶ of survey participants reported that they had either observed or witnessed sexual harassment in the CJB workplace. More women than men answered “Yes” to this question. Overall, the majority of those who participated in the survey did not indicate that sexual harassment is prevalent at the CJB or enabled by its leadership. However, 20% of participants did not agree and 42% were neutral on the statement that appointed officials are held accountable when allegations of sexual harassment are raised. Thirteen percent indicated that leadership does not take appropriate action on reports of sexual harassment where an additional 39% were neutral on this topic.

⁴⁴ Again, this is to be expected given the voluntary nature of the interviews.

Twenty-seven (27) voluntary witnesses reported experiences of sexual harassment at the CJB. This number includes witnesses subjected to sexual harassment and those who witnessed others being subjected to sexual harassment. Voluntary witnesses who reported sexual harassment included appointed officials, supervisors, and employees.

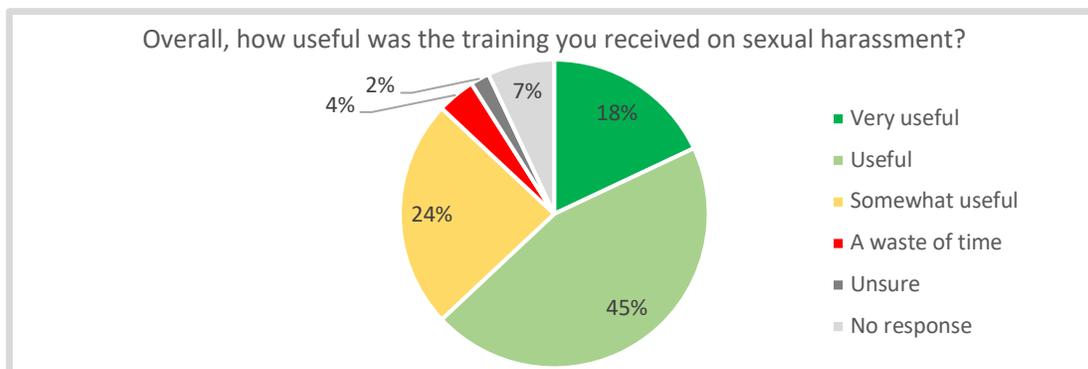

When broken down by gender, the survey results show that in terms of sexual harassment, a greater percentage of women negatively characterized the climate at the CJB.

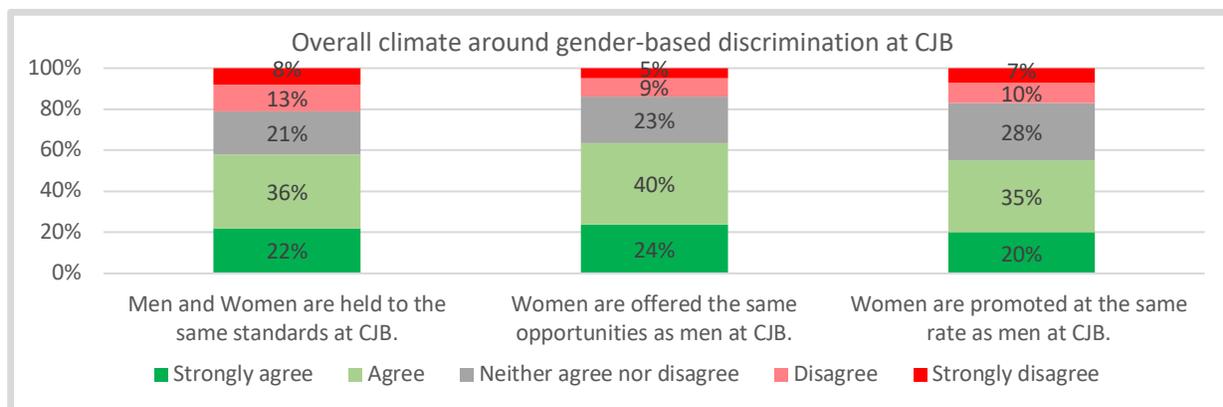

Only 3% of employees who participated in the survey reported they have been told within the past year that their style of dress was not appropriate; 70% of these participants said their supervisor told them this. Seventy-one percent of participants said it was a woman who told them their dress was not appropriate; and 27% said they heard it from a man.⁴⁷

Eighty-two percent of survey participants answered that they received training on sexual harassment at the CJB within the past 5 years; 11% of participants said they had not received this training; and 7% said they were not sure if they had received training. Out of those who received training, most found it useful.

Gender-based Discrimination

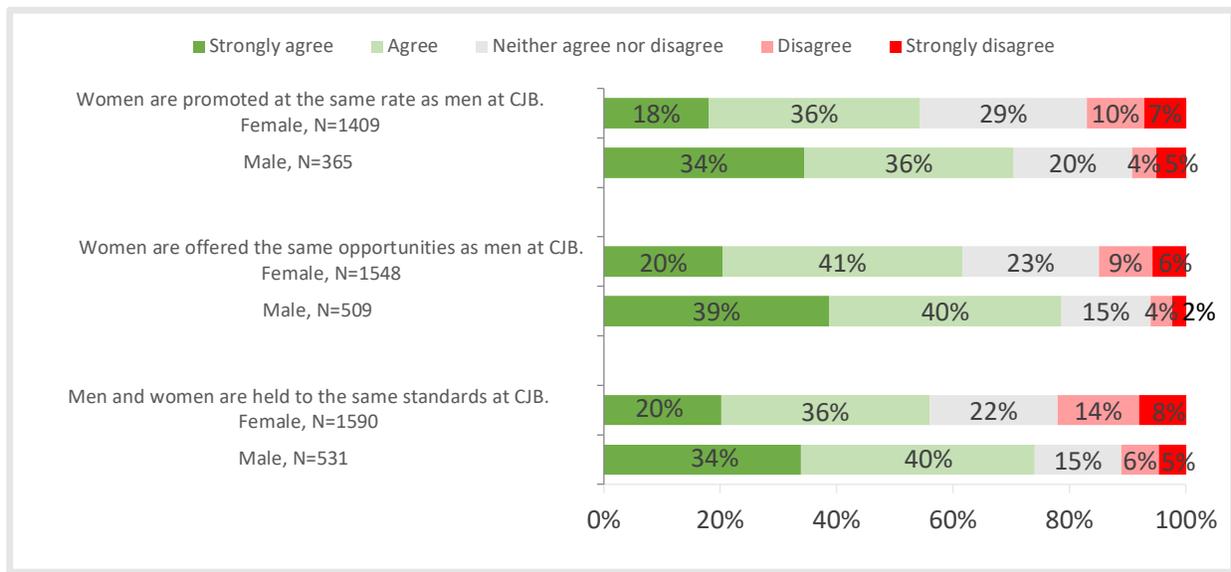

Ten percent (257) of survey participants said that within the past five years, they either experienced or observed gender-based discrimination at the Colorado Judicial Branch. Ten percent (170) of women participants reported they experienced or witnessed gender-based discrimination, whereas 7% (39) of male participants reported experiencing or observing gender-based discrimination. Overall, the belief that gender-based discrimination occurs in the CJB is more prevalent than reported experiences—personal or observed. Twenty-one percent of participants believe that women versus men are not held to the same standards at the CJB; 14% of participants believe that women are not offered the same opportunities as men at the CJB; and 17% of participants believe that women are not promoted at the same rate as men at the CJB.

⁴⁷ Two percent said they preferred not to answer whether a man or a woman had told them their dress was inappropriate.

Forty-one (41) voluntary witnesses reported gender-based discrimination at the CJB. This number included those subjected to gender-based discrimination as well as those who witnessed it more generally or described an environment in which it was prevalent.

Across the board, a greater percentage of women in the survey provided negative responses to questions on gender-based discrimination than did male participants.

More generally, a substantial number of survey participants did not agree that all employees are treated equally at the Colorado Judicial Branch. Thirty percent (568) of participants did not agree that all employees are treated equally at the CJB. Again, the responses varied between women and men; 29% (434) of female participants do not agree that all employees are treated equally at CJB, while 20% (79) male participants do not agree.

We reviewed the statistics on promotions and separations for men versus women at the CJB between the years 2017 and 2021 and did not find evidence of systemic gender bias. In fact, statistics showed that women have been promoted at the same rate as men since 2019.

The data included 2,629 separations and 676 promotions during the five-year period, 2017 to 2021.⁴⁸ The analysis looked at overall rates across the five-year period and the rates for each individual year. See the table below.

⁴⁸ Because complete data was not available for each year on the total number of employees and the total numbers of men and women within the CJB, it was assumed that 4,000 people were employed at the CJB for each of the five years in question. Further the current survey with 2,272 responses from CJB personnel, showed there to be 25% men and 75% women. This information was used to compare promotion and separation rates for men versus women.

Retaliation

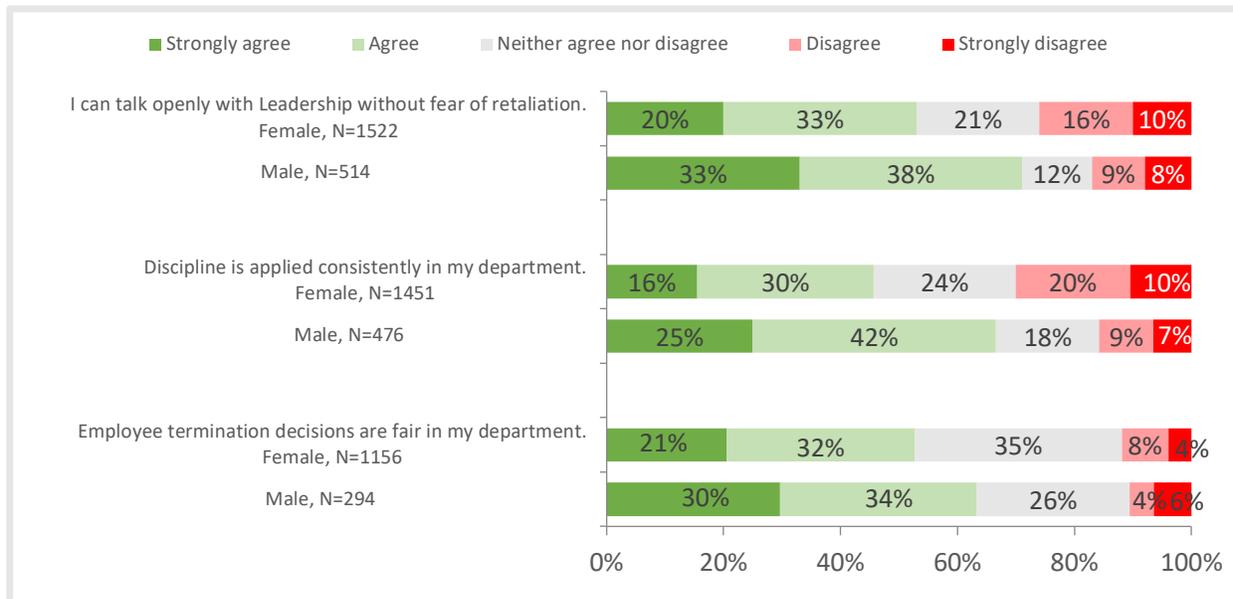

Eighteen percent (460) of survey participants reported they either witnessed or observed retaliation at the Colorado Judicial Branch within the past 5 years. This is by far the largest area of misconduct in the survey. Twenty percent (326) of female participants either witnessed or experienced retaliation at CJB; whereas 10% (54) of male participants either witnessed or experienced retaliation.⁴⁹ Twenty-five percent of survey participants do not feel they can talk openly with leadership without fear of retaliation. Twenty-nine percent of participants do not have confidence that discipline is applied consistently in their department. Thirteen percent of survey participants do not believe that employee terminations are fair in their department.

⁴⁹ The total number of participants (460) who witnessed or observed retaliation at the CJB include a majority of participants who identified as male or female, but there were also participants that provided feedback who preferred not to specify their gender and a smaller number who identified as transgender or non-binary.

Fifty-eight (58) witnesses interviewed described instances of retaliation or a fear of retaliation from leadership at the CJB. This includes both those who experienced retaliatory incidents, as well as those who witnessed retaliation or expressed a fear of retaliation for coming forward.

The trend continued in that there was a greater ratio of negative survey responses from women participants regarding retaliation. Twenty-six percent (384) of women participants did not feel they are able to talk openly with leadership without fear of retaliation, while only 17% (87) of male participants expressed the same fear of retaliation.

Given the data presented in the “Reporting Misconduct” section above, a majority of those who experienced sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, and/or retaliation did not report it. Among those who did not report sexual harassment they experienced, 50% said they did not do so because they were afraid of retaliation. Of those who did not report experiencing gender-based discrimination, 62% said fear of retaliation kept them from doing so. The numbers were highest regarding those who did not report the retaliation they experienced, with 63% not reporting due to a fear of retaliation.

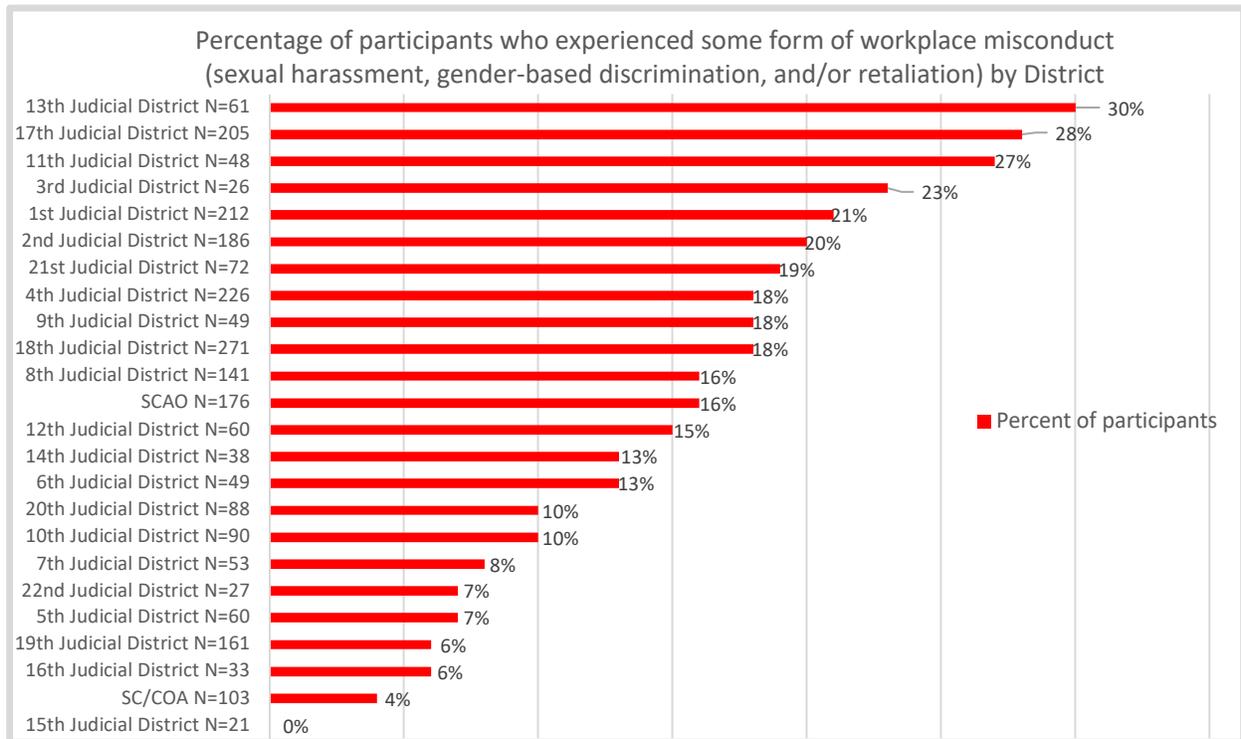

Survey Results by Judicial District

Due to the decentralized structure of the Colorado Judicial Branch, the data showed that each District had its own individual climate around employee satisfaction and the prevalence of sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, and retaliation. While data from some Districts indicated problems exist, the data for others showed healthier climates.

Out of Districts that had more than eighty survey participants,⁵⁰ we analyzed five with more positive results and four with more negative results. Data on the prevalence of sexual harassment, discrimination based on sex, and retaliation remained consistent with these top and bottom performing Districts. Districts with less reported misconduct were the Supreme Court & Court of Appeals (“SC/COA”), District 19, District 10, SCAO and District 8 in that order.⁵¹ Districts with more misconduct reported included District 17, District 2, District 1, and District 18, in that order.

Information from the voluntary interviews mirrored that of the survey in that Districts that scored lower in the survey had more voluntary interviewees who reported misconduct they had either witnessed or experienced while working there. This information is highlighted in the appropriate sections below.

The charts that follow provide a macro level view of the misconduct witnessed or experienced across all Districts. Again, to ensure a statistically sound analysis by District in the sections that follow, we focused on only those Districts with 80 or more participants.

⁵¹ Across the board, the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals ranked at number one for the most part.

The previous chart illustrates the percent of participants from each District who reported experiencing some form of misconduct (sexual harassment, gender discrimination and / or retaliation).

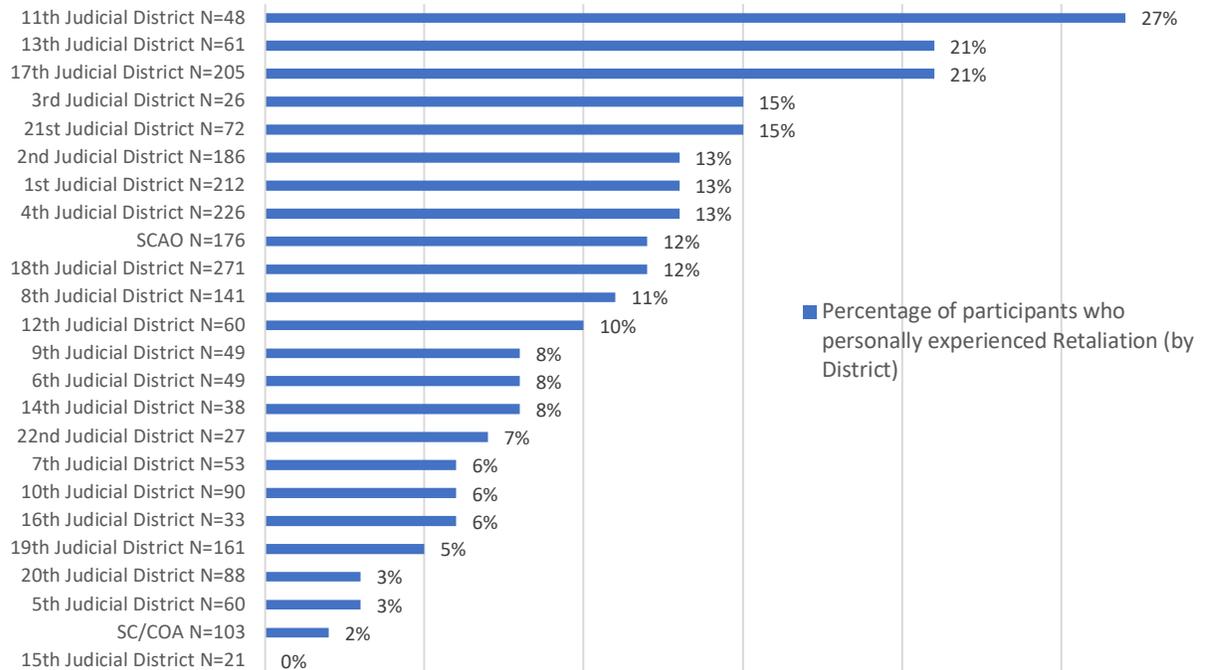

We then looked at each category of misconduct by District. This data reinforces the thesis that there were Districts that had significantly less misconduct in each category and those that had greater issues with misconduct.

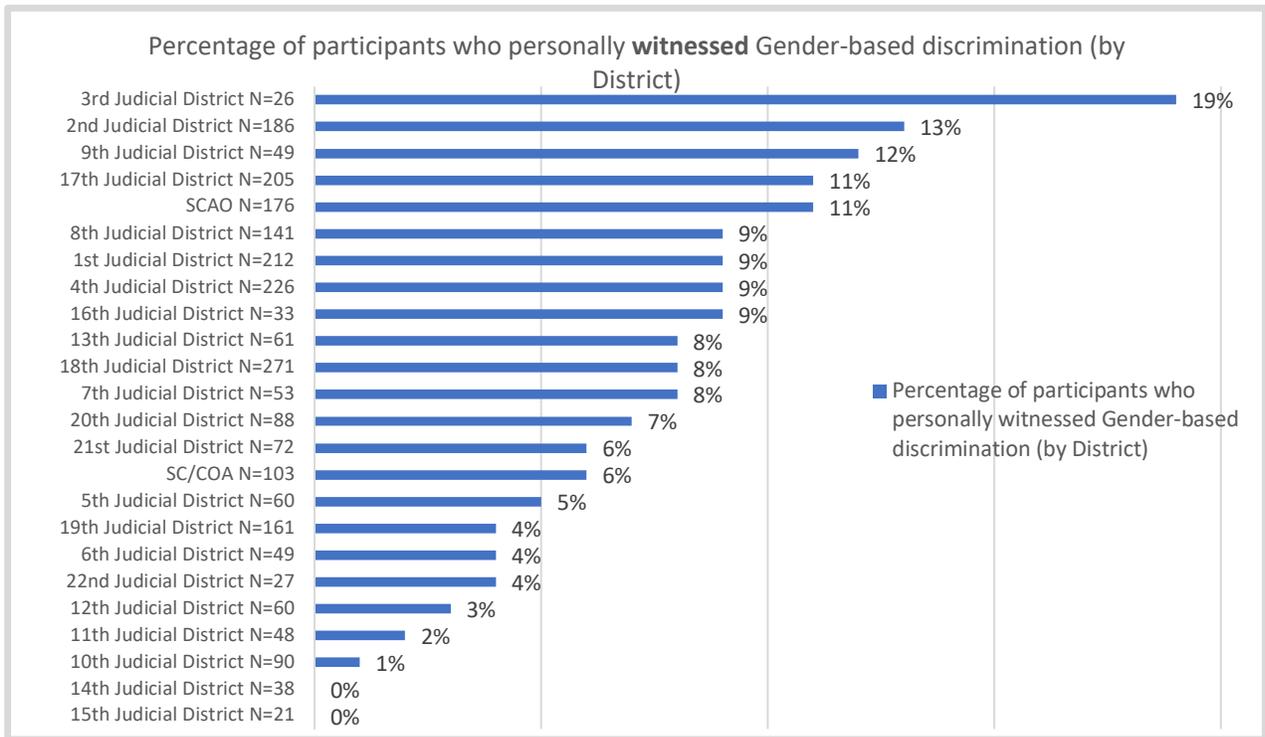

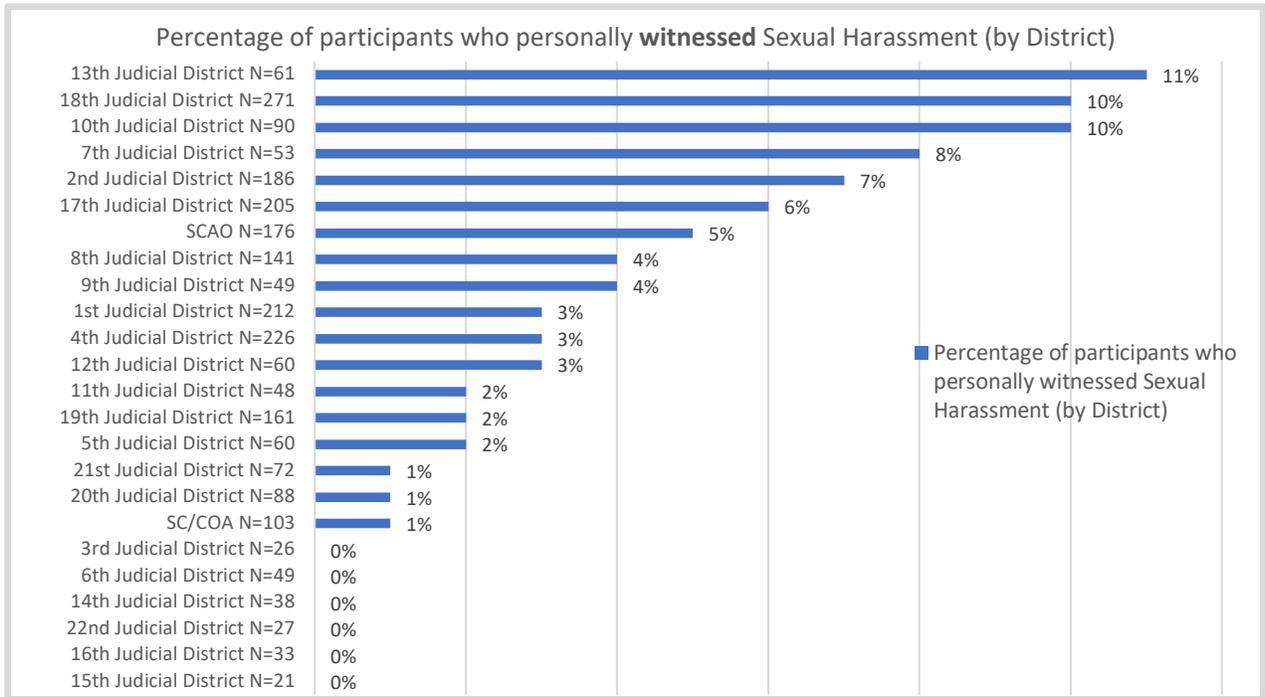

Percentage of participants who personally experienced Gender-based discrimination
(by District)

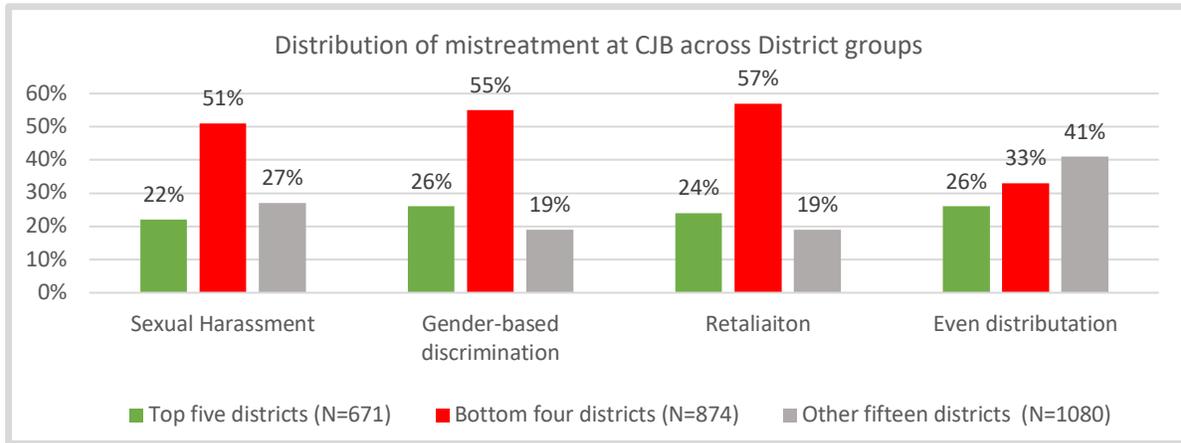

Percentage of participants who personally experienced Retaliation (by District)

Of those who participated in the survey, 60% (1,455) belonged to one of the nine Districts we analyzed (five top performing and four with more issues). Out of that number, 60% (874) participants were among those in the bottom for Districts.

The bottom four Districts accounted for 51% (88) of sexual harassment, 55% (113) of gender-based discrimination, and 57% (204) of retaliation survey participants either experienced or witnessed at the CJB. The top five Districts accounted for 22% (39) of sexual harassment, 26% (53) of gender-based discrimination, and 24% (87) of retaliation survey participants either experienced or witnessed at the CJB.

Although the bottom four Districts made up for 33% of survey participants, more than half of the instances of mistreatment (sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, retaliation) occurred in these Districts, across all three areas. The top five Districts, comprising 26% of survey participants, hit the mark or below in terms of an even distribution in incidents. Importantly, had the top five Districts included Districts with less than 90 participants, some of the larger Districts included would fall closer to the middle of the pack. Out of the other fifteen Districts, not included in the top five or bottom four with more than 80 participants, fourteen (14) had less than 90 participants take part in the survey.

Similarly, voluntary interviewees who reported misconduct tended to fall into one of the bottom Districts with 80 or more survey participants.

Further illuminating is the data collected from the survey about whether participants would recommend their District as a good place to work to others. Again, the top performing Districts tend to rank highest on this question and lower performing Districts rank lower.

⁵² The fourth set of columns in the above table shows a hypothetical set of complaints, were the complaints distributed evenly between the three groups (top five Districts, bottom four Districts, and other 15 Districts). We include this even distribution to provide a clearer picture of the actual distribution of complaints given the different number of participants from each group. As the chart shows, both the top five Districts and the other 15 Districts fall below an even distribution of complaints. The bottom four Districts were far above an even distribution, as would be expected given the nature of being the bottom four.

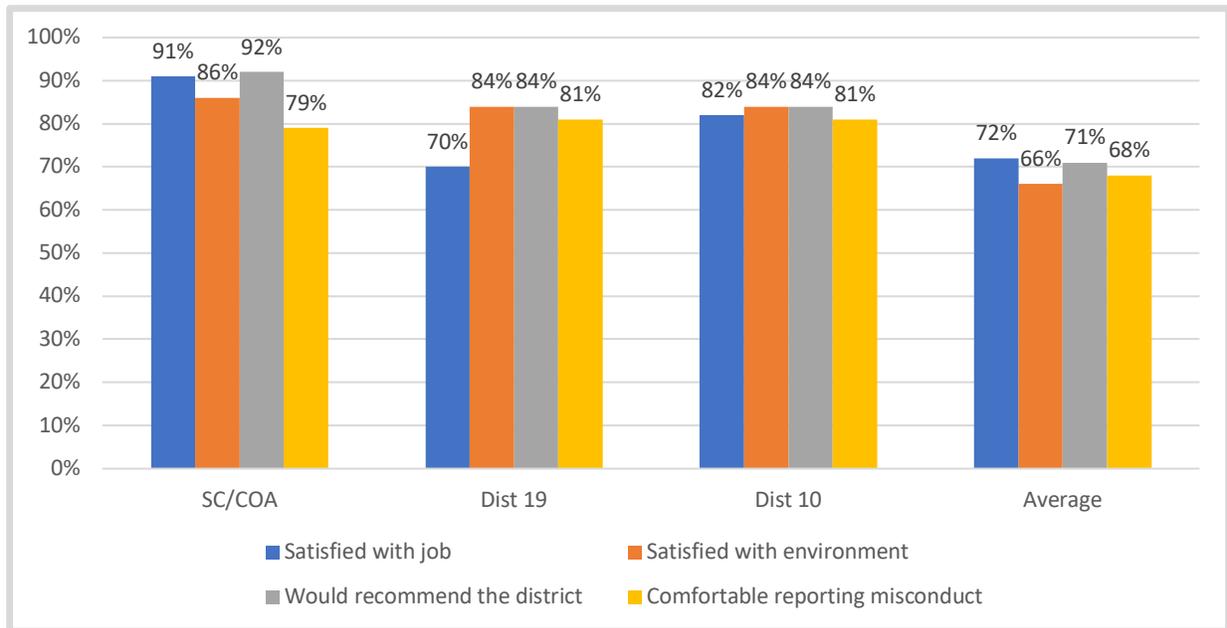

Although there is currently not a centralized system in place to build a cohesive and shared culture at CJB, the survey data highlights an opportunity to learn from the top performing Districts as to what they are doing to minimize misconduct and create an environment that supports employee engagement and happiness.

Top three Districts with over 80 participants: Supreme Court / Court of Appeals (“SC/COA”), District 19 & District 10

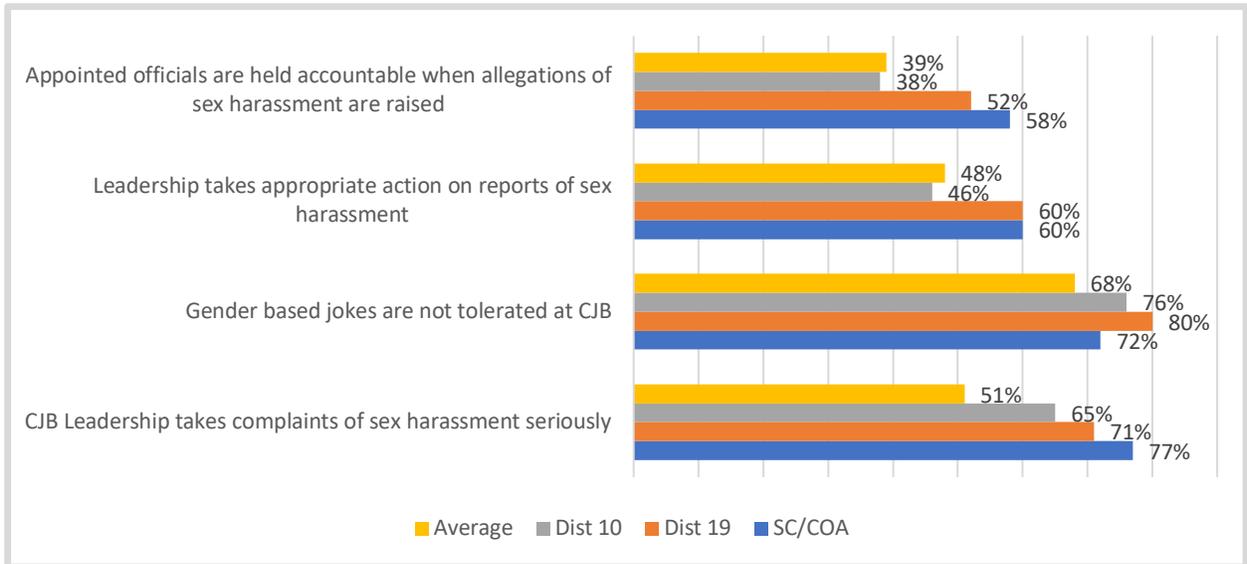

Given that SCAO and District 8 did not perform much above the average with respect to workplace satisfaction, we focused our detailed analysis on the top three performing Districts to highlight positive themes. Common subjects from the top performing Districts included employee satisfaction with their job, lesser witnessed or experienced misconduct, higher willingness to recommend the District as a good place to work, and a higher likelihood that experienced misconduct was reported. However, participants who reported misconduct were generally dissatisfied with the response. Additionally, the belief that appointed officials are held accountable was low, consistent with all other Districts.

The top three Districts had higher levels of job satisfaction and participants indicated they were more comfortable reporting misconduct than the survey average.

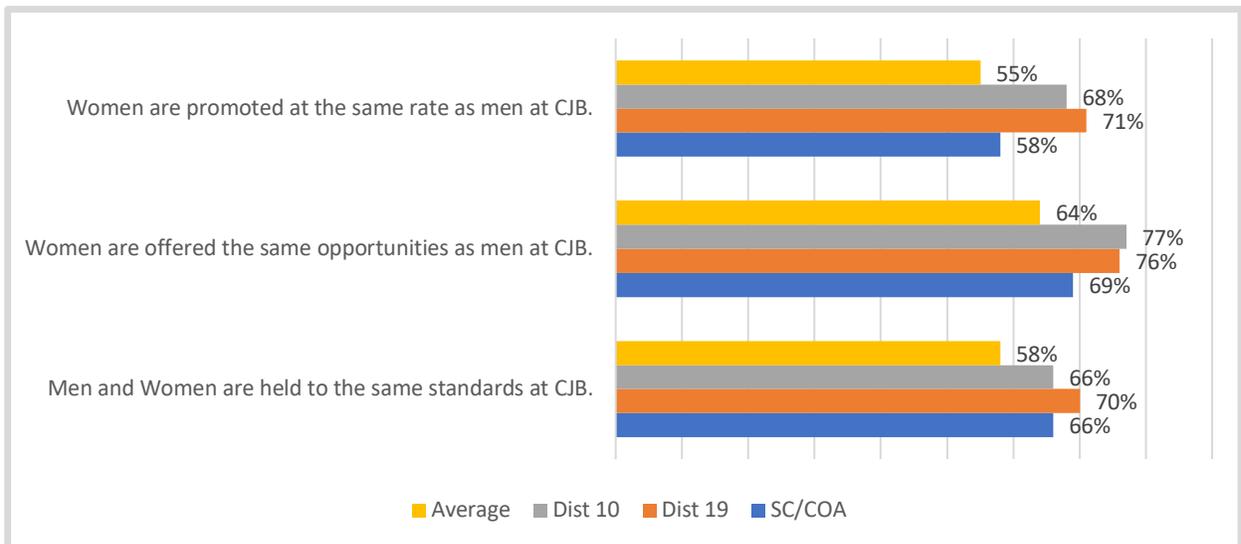

Similarly, the top three Districts were generally⁵³ more confident that leadership would take reports of sexual harassment seriously, would act on sexual harassment reports, and indicated that gender-based jokes were not tolerated. However, like the survey in general, participants in these Districts had lower scores on the statement that appointed officials would be held accountable when reports of sexual harassment are made.

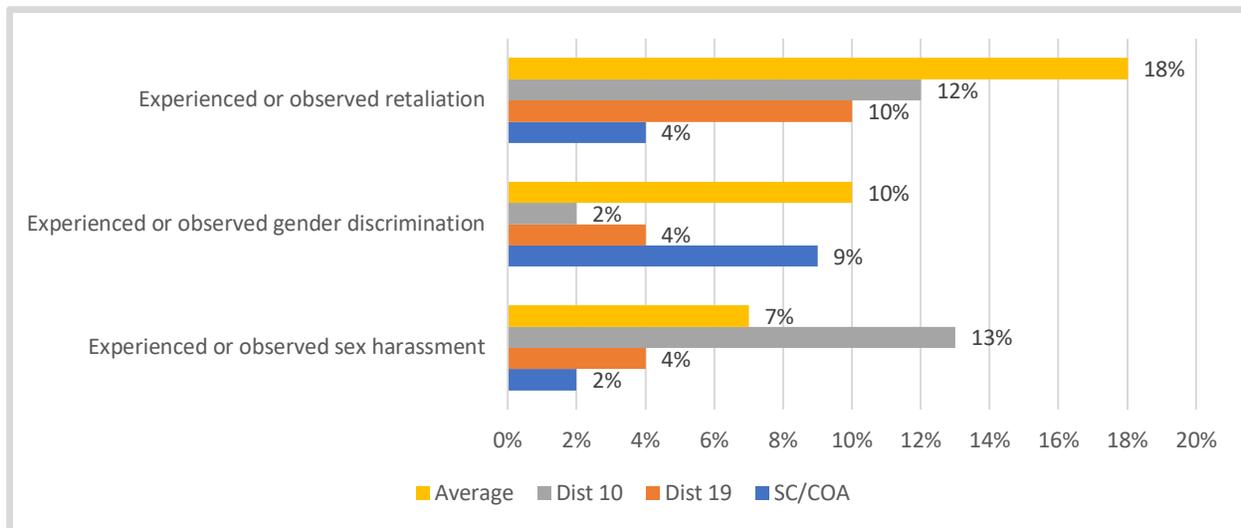

⁵³ District 10 scored just below the average for two of the questions specifically related to appointed officials.

Once again, the top three large Districts reported more favorably about the treatment of men versus women than the average found in the survey. However, in this set of questions, the SC/COA scored lower than Districts 10 and 19.

Compared to the survey average, the top three performing Districts had less witnessed and observed mistreatment, with the exception that District 10 had more incidents of experienced or witnessed sexual harassment than the survey average.

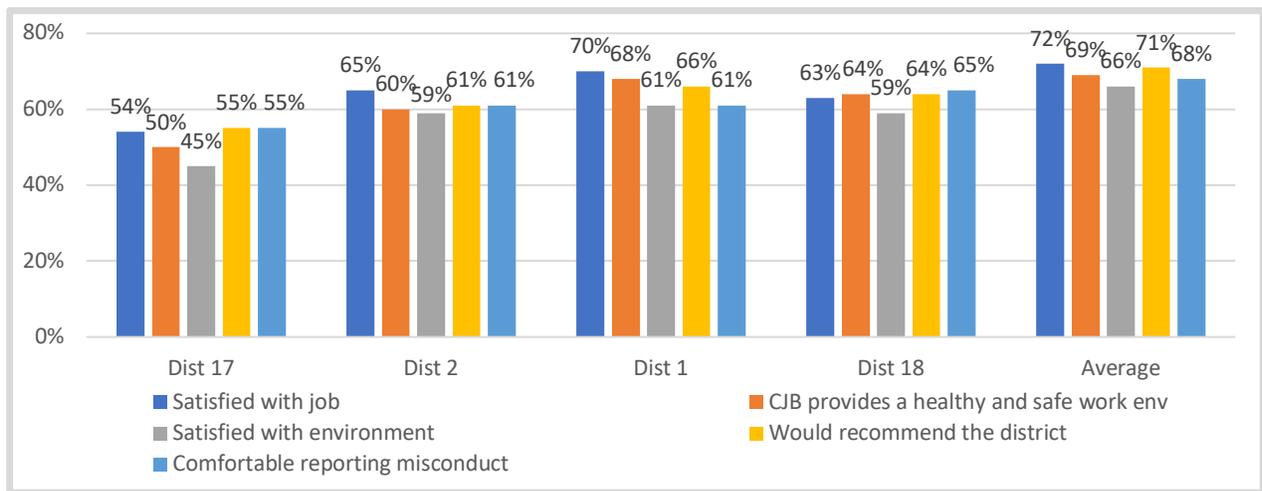

The positive data collected about SC/COA is meaningful given the power in those courts and the prominence of the roles that support them. That level of power and influence may be a contributing factor in workplace misconduct, yet the SC/COA has done well in this regard to rate at the top of the survey. Similarly, Districts 10 and 19 warrant additional evaluation by CJB to identify best practices that can be replicated across the CJB.

Even in the top performing three Districts, there were anomalies that warrant additional follow up. These include that much of the reported misconduct at SC/COA occurred since 2019 (83% of the 6 responses) and District 10 has more reports of experienced or witnessed sexual harassment than the survey average (13% or 12 affirmative responses). While more participants indicated they reported the misconduct they experienced at the SC/COA (75%), none of those who reported the misconduct were dissatisfied with the outcome. This contrasts with Districts 19 and 10 where a majority of those who reported experienced misconduct were satisfied with the outcome (75% each), yet a much lower percentage reported the experienced misconduct in these Districts (43% and 57% respectively).

The four Districts with over 80 participants that rated lowest in the survey highlight an opportunity for the CJB to focus efforts and resources. This will have an impact on the employee experience in those Districts as a first step to address workplace issues. The lower performing Districts had consistently lower employee satisfaction and more instances of experienced or witnessed misconduct.

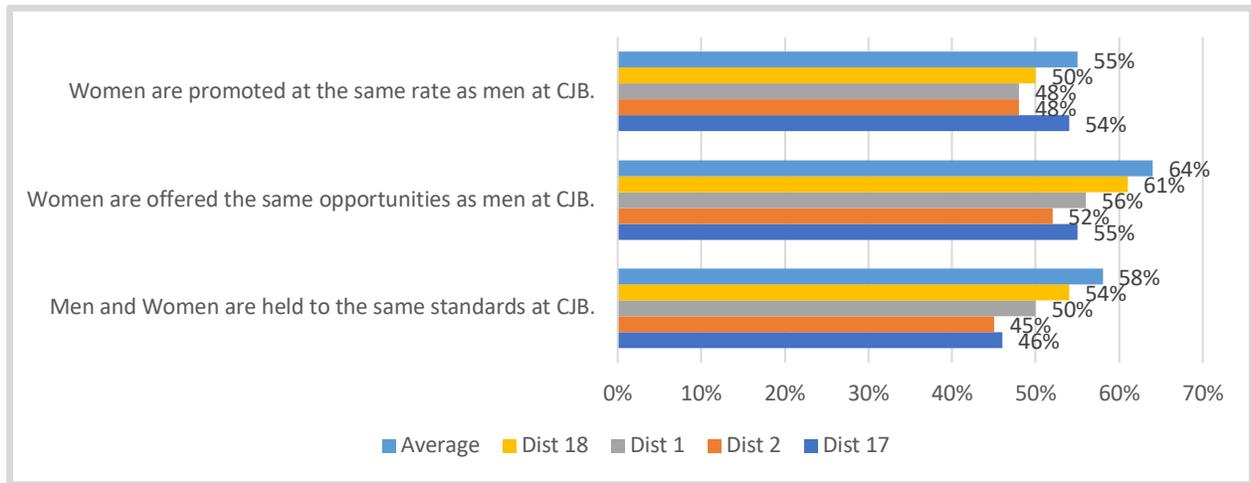

The survey statements used to assess employee engagement and satisfaction rated lower than the average in all four of these Districts. District 17 was much lower than the other three Districts evaluated in this section as well as the average of the survey.

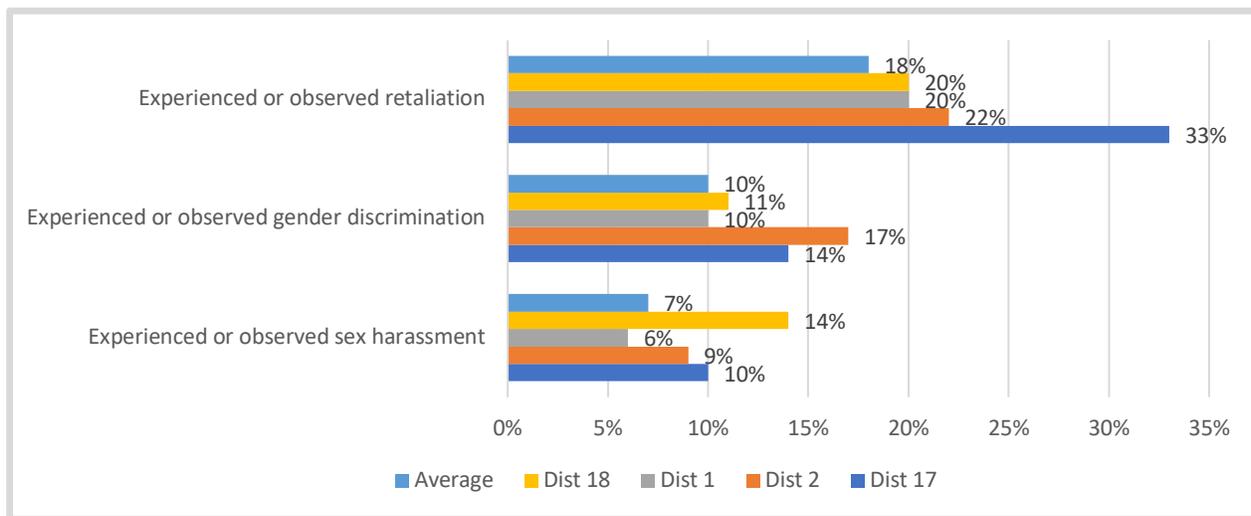

These Districts highlighted concerns about the environment to support a respectful workplace where sexual harassment and gender-based jokes occur as compared to the survey average.

Similarly, the four Districts examined showed that participants had concerns about equal treatment of men versus women, with District 2 scoring the lowest overall.

Retaliation was a big concern in these Districts, especially in District 17 where 33% of survey participants indicated they experienced or observed retaliation while working there. District 2 had more participants who experienced or observed gender discrimination (17%) and District 18 had the most experienced or observed sexual harassment (14%).

The voluntary interviews provided additional context in these four Districts. Reports of sexual harassment were most prevalent amongst witnesses from District 18, with eight (8) witnesses raising issues of sexual harassment. District 1 was second, with four (4) witnesses raising issues of sexual harassment.

With respect to gender-based discrimination, voluntary interviewees reported more issues from District 18 and District 1, with six (6) witnesses from each District raising issues of gender-based discrimination. District 2 (along with two other Districts) followed this with three (3) reports of gender-based discrimination from each. Voluntary witnesses who reported gender-based discrimination included appointed officials, supervisors, and employees. Nine (9) judges from eight (8) Districts reported concerns with gender-based discrimination.

Reports of retaliation were most prevalent among voluntary interviewees from District 18, with 11 witnesses from that workplace reporting issues of retaliation. District 17 came second, with nine (9) witnesses raising issues of retaliation. District 2 came next, with seven (7) witnesses raising issues of retaliation, followed by District 1, where six (6) witnesses raised issues of retaliation. Concerns about retaliation came from appointed officials, supervisors, and employees.

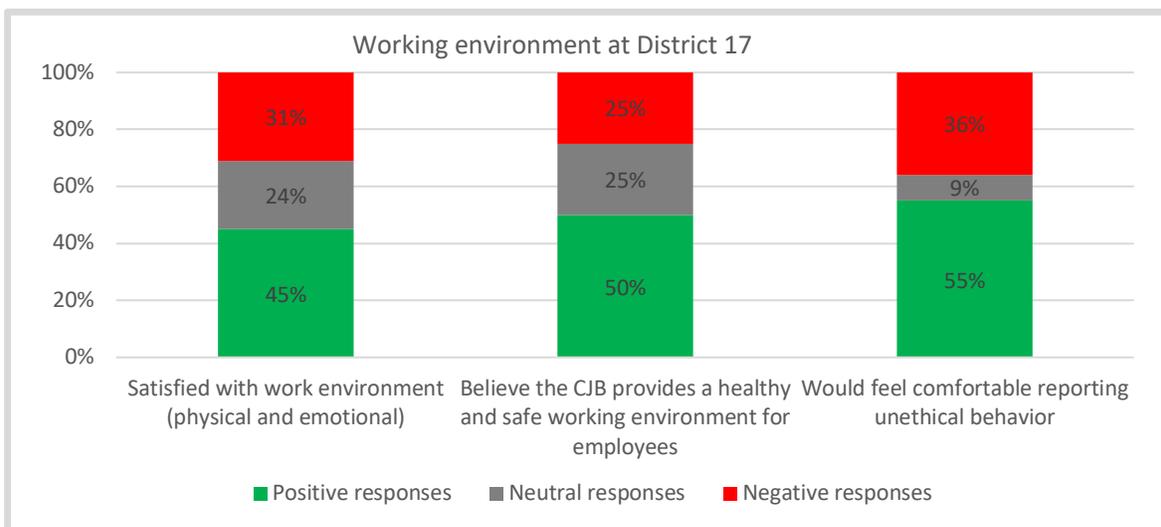

Finally, participants from these Districts all indicated that they did not feel comfortable talking openly with leadership without fear of retaliation. The survey average showed that 55% of participants answered that statement positively. District 1 was the lowest at 25%, followed by District 2 at 30%, District 17 at 38% and District 18 closer to the average at 52%. This concern likely contributes to a lack of reporting misconduct.

Detailed information about each of the lower performing Districts provides better context and information about employees’ experiences and how they differ from higher rated Districts.

1. District 17 – Adams, Broomfield

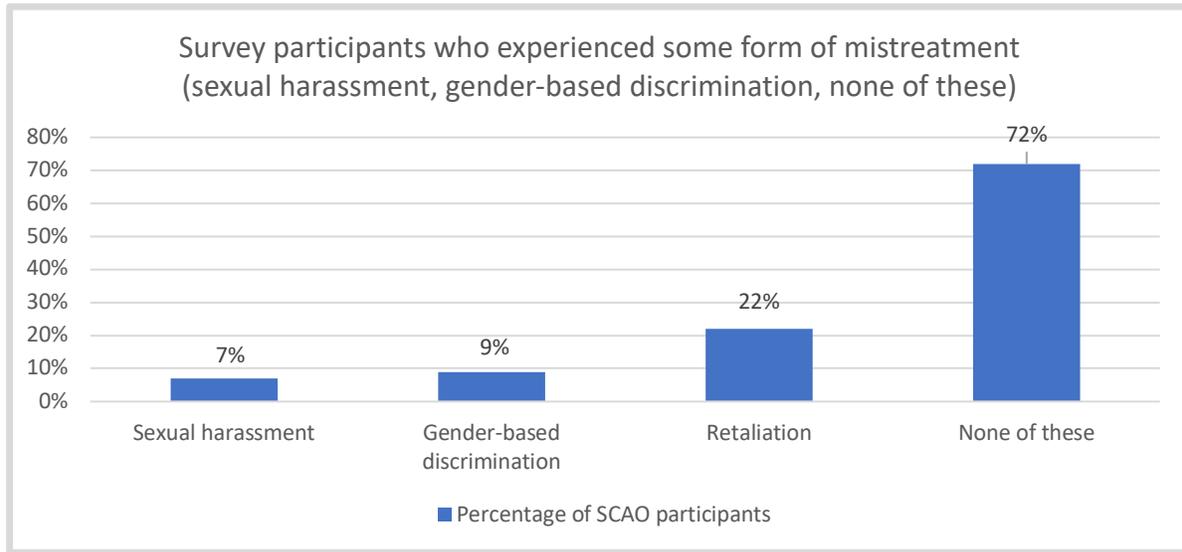

Out of three-hundred and fifty-four (354) District 17 employees who took the survey, two-hundred and five (205) participated at a rate of 58%. Ninety-one percent (186) identified themselves as employees of the Colorado Judicial Branch, while 9% (8) identified as appointed officials. Seventy-six percent (155) of participants at District 17 identified as female and 11% (22) identified as male.⁵⁴

Job satisfaction in District 17 was lower than in any other District, with 24% (28) of those who responded to the question saying they were either “Dissatisfied” or “Very dissatisfied” with their job at the CJB. Only 55% said they would be “Very likely” or “Likely” to recommend the CJB to others as a good place to work. Overall, a significant number (around a third) of participants from District 17 do not feel it is a healthy working environment.

Forty percent (83) of participants⁵⁵ from District 17 either experienced or witnessed one or more of the forms of mistreatment we assessed (gender-based discrimination, sexual harassment, or retaliation) within the past five years. Twenty-eight percent (57) of participants from District 17 experienced one or more forms of mistreatment, while 25% (71) witnessed one or more forms of mistreatment.

The survey prompted participants to qualify the timeframe in which mistreatment occurred within three time periods: 2019 to present, between 2016 and 2018, and prior to 2016. Out of the experiences of mistreatment reported by participants, 53% reported mistreatment from 2019-present, 60% reported mistreatment 2018 and 2016, and 34% reported mistreatment prior to 2016.

Reporting Misconduct

Only 30% of those participants who experienced mistreatment at District 17 reported it. The 70% of participants who did not report provided the following reasons for that decision:

- I knew it wouldn't do any good. (94%)
- I was afraid of retaliation. (65%)
- It wasn't that serious. (13%)
- I didn't know who to go to. (7%)
- I didn't want to make the effort. (3%)

Other reasons for not reporting included, "I was blackballed," "The behavior is not always concrete enough to report – like I notice that my male colleagues treat me differently than they treat each other," "I generally experience this behavior from older male colleagues and recognize that I have to wait until they retire and hope their spots are filled with someone who is different," "It was a [redacted] at the time and I knew he was known for retaliation," "Since it was the [redacted] I felt powerless,” and “Too many bad people involved in the whole process, it wouldn’t make a difference. I would probably be the one who pays the price.”

Out of those who did report, 77% were not satisfied with the response/outcome they received, while only 8% were satisfied with the response/outcome they received.

Out of those who observed mistreatment, 86% chose not to report it. Reasons provided for not reporting included:

- I knew it wouldn’t do any good (76%).
- I was afraid of retaliation. (60%)
- I didn’t know who to go to. (12%)
- It wasn’t that serious. (4%)

Other answers included, “Felt that people involved would be protected by higher ups,” “I was not involved,” “Since it was [title redacted], I felt powerless,” “Supervisors forced an employee to quit,” “Favoritism is strong in our dept. Management is ‘never wrong’,” and “People who sexually harass are in high levels of authority.”

All the participants who reported observed mistreatment were dissatisfied with the response/outcome they received.

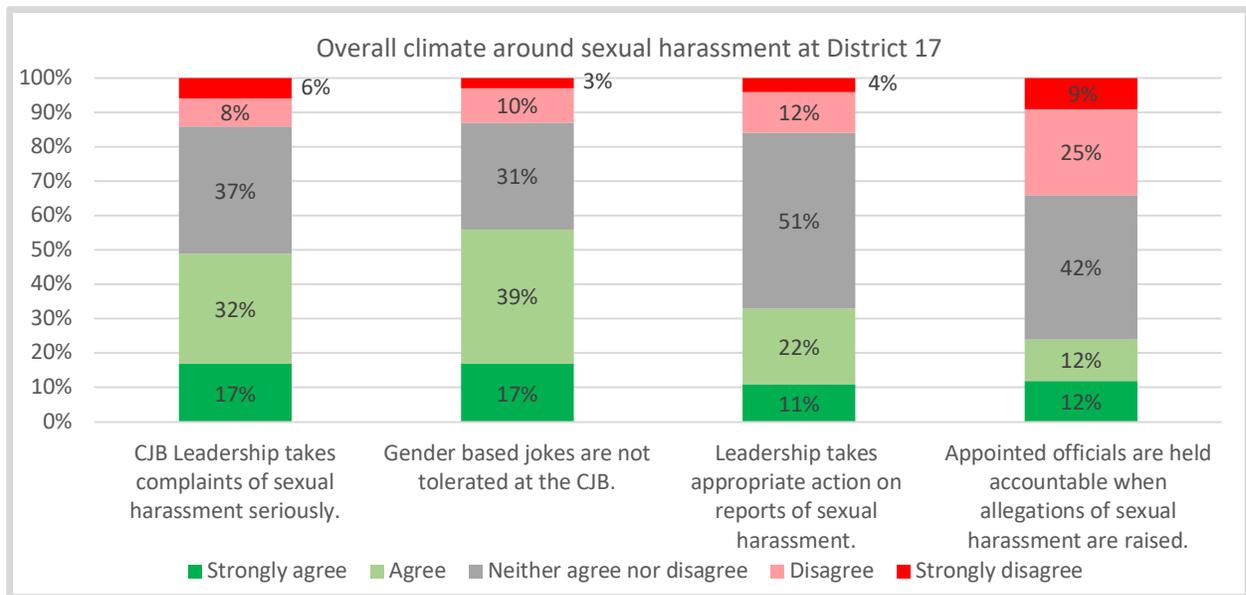

Fifty-two percent of total participants said they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by an appointed official. For the 18% who said they would not feel safe doing so, the top reasons provided were “Nothing would be done about it” (85%), “I would be afraid of retaliation at work” (85%), and “I would be afraid of losing my job.” (70%).

The numbers among participants who were appointed officials were better, with 68% reporting they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by another appointed official and 16% reporting they would not.

When asked to rate the likelihood that CJB leadership will act on the results from this assessment, 36% of participants from District 17 believe leadership is unlikely to do so.

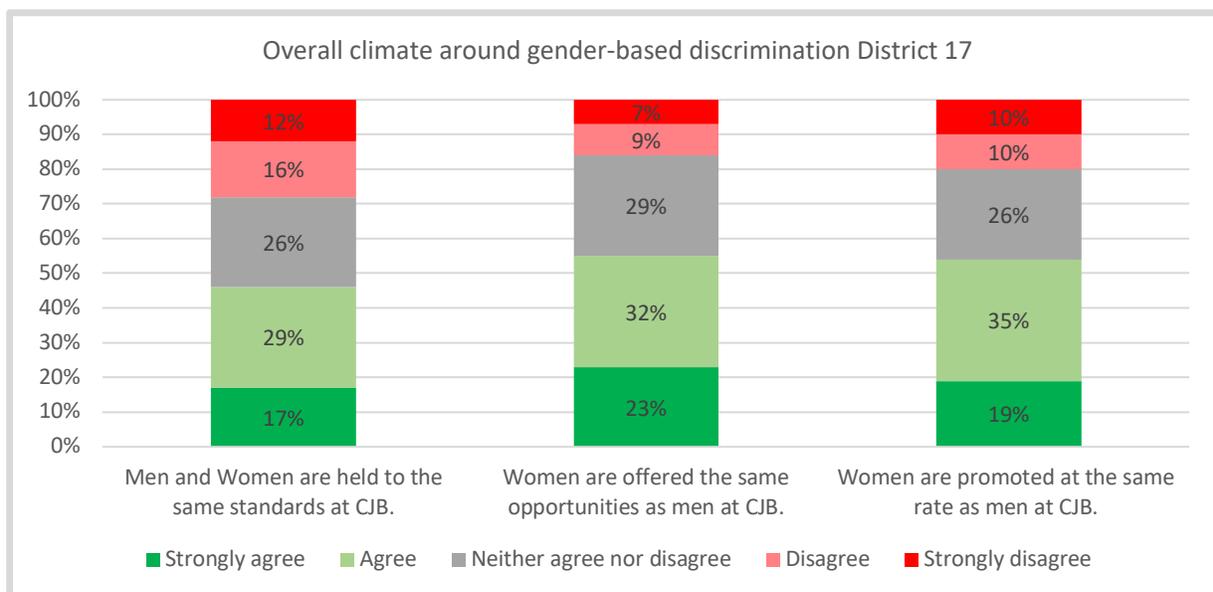

Sexual Harassment

Ten percent (21) of survey participants reported that they either observed or witnessed sexual harassment in District 17’s workplace. Survey results were mixed on the environment of sexual harassment at District 17 and a considerable number (34%) of participants expressed a lack of faith that appointed officials are held accountable when allegations of sexual harassment are raised. Sixteen percent believe that leadership does not take appropriate action on reports of sexual harassment. Fourteen percent feel that CJB leadership does not take complaints of sexual harassment seriously, and 13% said gender-based jokes are tolerated at District 17.

Gender-based Discrimination

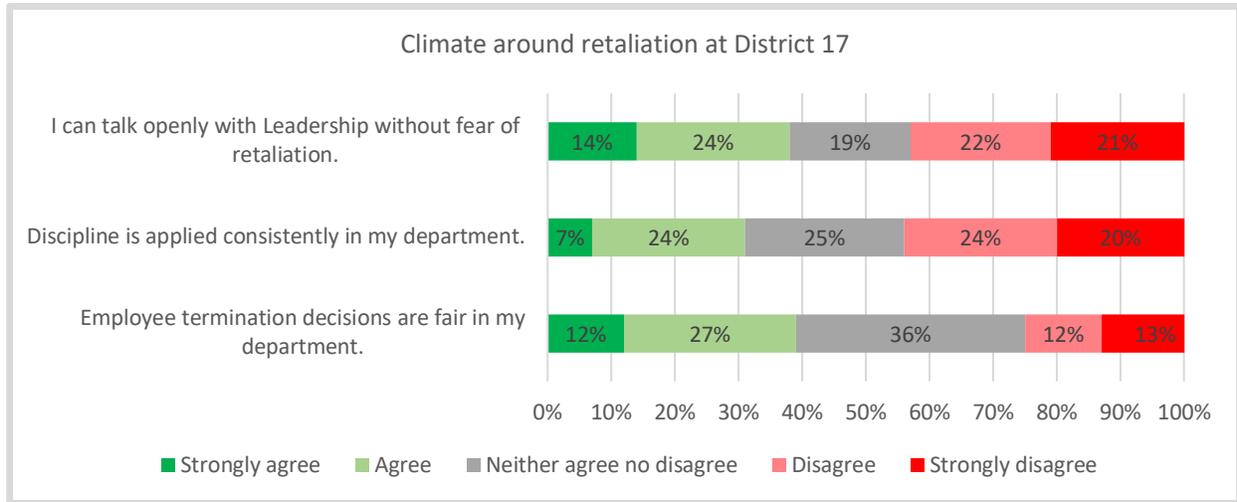

Fourteen percent (29) of survey participants said they either experienced or observed gender-based discrimination at District 17 within the past five years. Overall, the belief that gender-based discrimination is a problem at District 17 is more prevalent than reported experiences— personal or observed. Twenty-eight percent of participants believe that women versus men are not held to the same standards at the CJB; 16% of participants believe that women are not offered the same opportunities as men at the CJB; and 20% of participants believe that women are not promoted at the same rate as men at the CJB.

More generally, nearly half (48%) of survey participants from District 17 did not agree that all employees are treated equally at District 17.

Retaliation

Thirty-three percent (68) of survey participants from District 17 reported they had either witnessed or observed retaliation at District 17 within the past 5 years. At District 17, more participants fear retaliation from leadership and do not trust leadership to apply fair discipline than those who trust leadership and do not fear retaliation. Forty-three percent of survey participants do not feel they can talk openly with leadership without fear of retaliation. Forty-four percent of participants do not have faith that discipline is applied consistently in their department. Twenty-five percent of survey participants do not believe that employee termination decisions are fair in their department.

Retaliation was the biggest issue raised by voluntary interviewees from District 17. Out of twelve (12) interviews from District of 17, nine (9) raised issues of retaliation. Several comments we heard from the voluntary interviews reinforced the survey data about retaliation:

- “There is a huge concern regarding retaliation in District 17. When problems are presented to the management team, that team is “never wrong.” Instead, they will begin to focus on the person who raised the concern.”
- “I brought my concern to HR because my coworkers and I filed a complaint about a judge and nothing was happening with the Judicial Review Committee. Instead, the judge started retaliation against us.”
- “My main concern is that the Judicial system states they do not tolerate retaliation. I filed complaint against my co-worker, and instead of addressing the issue, my supervisor gave me a poor performance review.”

Voluntary witnesses from District 17 suggested that an anonymous process for victims to report misconduct would help reduce retaliation and would solicit more feedback from employees. These witnesses stressed the importance of leadership training and accountability. Witnesses said that training would help leaders address issues, better manage conflict, and improve morale.

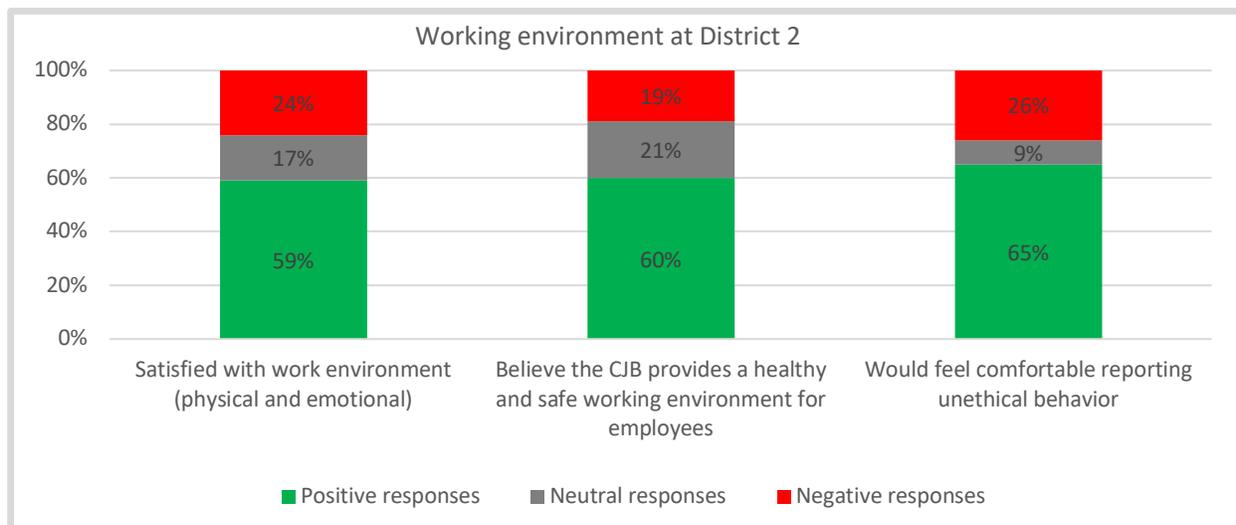

Given the data presented in the “Reporting Misconduct” section above, a majority of those who experienced sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, and/or retaliation in District 17’s workplace chose not to report it. Out of this number, 65% indicated they chose not to report the mistreatment because they were afraid of retaliation.

2. District 2 – Denver

Out of three-hundred and fifty-three (353) District 2 employees who took the survey, one-hundred and eighty-six (186) participated, at a rate of 53%. Eighty-nine percent (165) identified themselves as employees of the Colorado Judicial Branch, while 11% (21) identified as appointed officials. Sixty-five percent (121) of the participants at District 2 identified as female and 23% (43) identified as male.

Job satisfaction at District 2 was more positive than many other Districts, with 65% (77) of those who responded to the question saying they were either “Satisfied” or “Very satisfied” with their job at the CJB. Sixty-one percent (111) said they would be “Very likely” or “Likely” to recommend the CJB to others as a good place to work, whereas 22% (39) would not be likely to recommend it. Overall, a substantial number (around a quarter) of participants from District 1 did not feel it is a healthy working environment. Twenty-six percent of participants reported they would not feel comfortable reporting unethical behavior and 24% reported they were not satisfied with the physical and emotional work environment at District 2.

Thirty-two percent (59) of participants from District 2 either experienced or witnessed one or more forms of mistreatment (gender-based discrimination, sexual harassment, or retaliation) within the past five years. Twenty percent (37) of participants from District 2 experienced one or more forms of mistreatment, while 28% (52) witnessed one or more forms of mistreatment.

The survey prompted participants to qualify the timeframe in which mistreatment occurred within three time periods: 2019 to present, between 2016 and 2018, and prior to 2016. Out of the experiences of mistreatment reported by participants, 68% reported mistreatment from 2019-present, 50% reported mistreatment 2018 and 2016, and 18% reported mistreatment prior to 2016.

Reporting Misconduct

Thirty-eight percent of participants who experienced mistreatment at District 2 reported it. The 62% of participants who did not report provided the following reasons for that decision:

- I knew it wouldn't do any good. (86%)
- I was afraid of retaliation. (52%)
- It wasn't that serious. (10%)
- I didn't know who to go to. (10%)
- I didn't want to make the effort. (10%)

Other reasons for not reporting the mistreatment include, "My department knows how to use policy to protect themselves" and "It would only result in further personal scrutiny."

Out of those who did report, 100% were not satisfied with the response/outcome they received.

Out of those who observed mistreatment, 85% chose not to report it. Reasons provided for not reporting include:

- I knew it wouldn't do any good (73%).
- I was afraid of retaliation. (53%)
- I didn't know who to go to. (3%)
- It wasn't that serious. (3%)

Other answers include, "Information found out a couple of years after. Hard to prove in other instances. I spoke out years ago, was basically told to look the other way," "It was a 'disparate impact' situation, i.e., not intentional, and had to do with courtroom assignments of new judges, and has been and continues to be in the process of being resolved," "The co-worker filed multiple grievances, nothing happened to management, and the worker was further scrutinized,” and “Did not affect me and if the other person wanted to make a complaint they could. I would not start a complaint that the person involved did not want to be an issue.”

All participants who reported the mistreatment they observed were dissatisfied with the response/outcome they received.

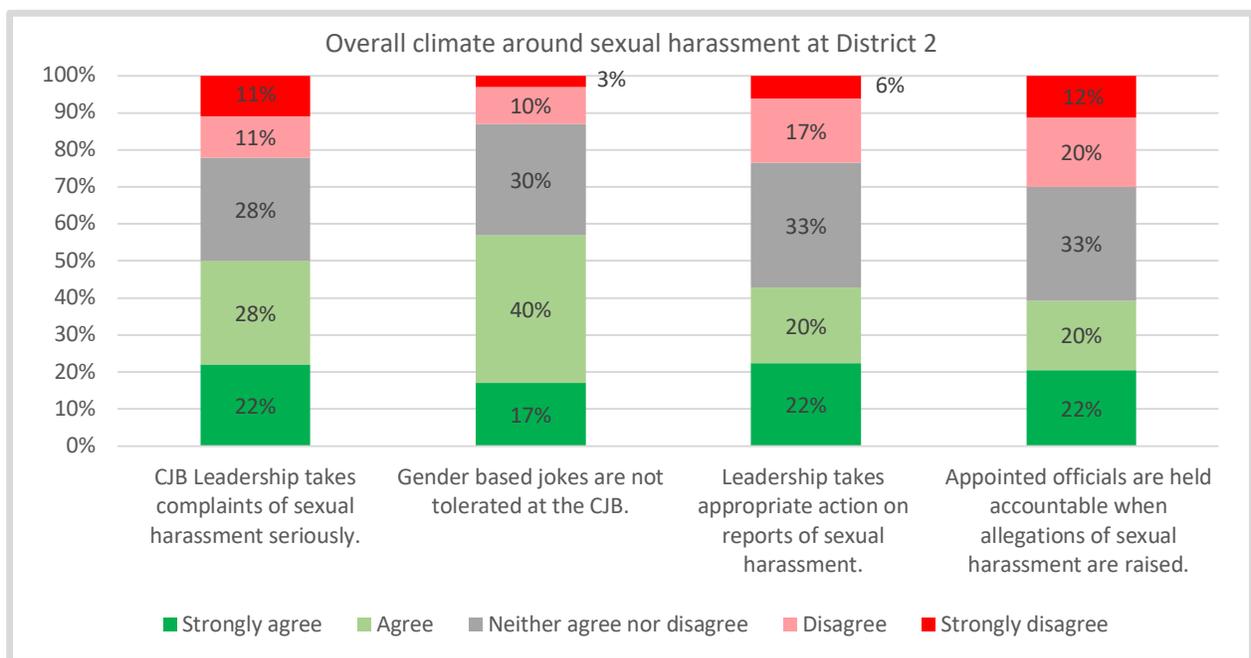

Sixty-one percent of total participants said they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by an appointed official. For the 16% who said they would not feel safe doing so, the top reasons provided were “I would be afraid of retaliation at work” (78%), “I would be afraid of losing my job” (72%), and “Nothing would be done about it” (56%).

The numbers among participants who are appointed officials were better, with 81% reporting they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by another appointed official and 10% reporting they would not.

When asked to rate the likelihood that CJB leadership will act on the results from this assessment, 32% of participants from District 2 believe leadership is unlikely to do so.

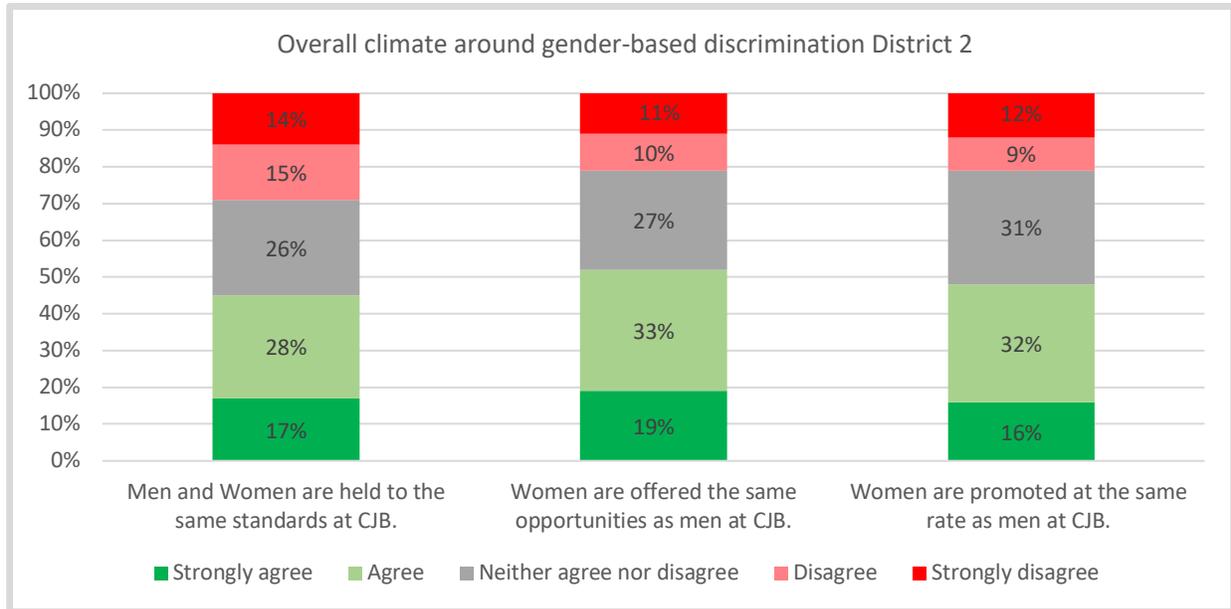

Sexual Harassment

Nine percent (16) of survey participants reported that they had either observed or witnessed sexual harassment in District 2’s workplace. Thirty-two percent of participants did not believe that appointed officials are held accountable when allegations of sexual harassment are raised. Twenty-three percent did not believe that leadership takes appropriate action on reports of sexual harassment. Twenty-two percent did not feel that CJB leadership takes complaints of sexual harassment seriously, and 13% said gender-based jokes are tolerated at District 2.

Gender-based Discrimination

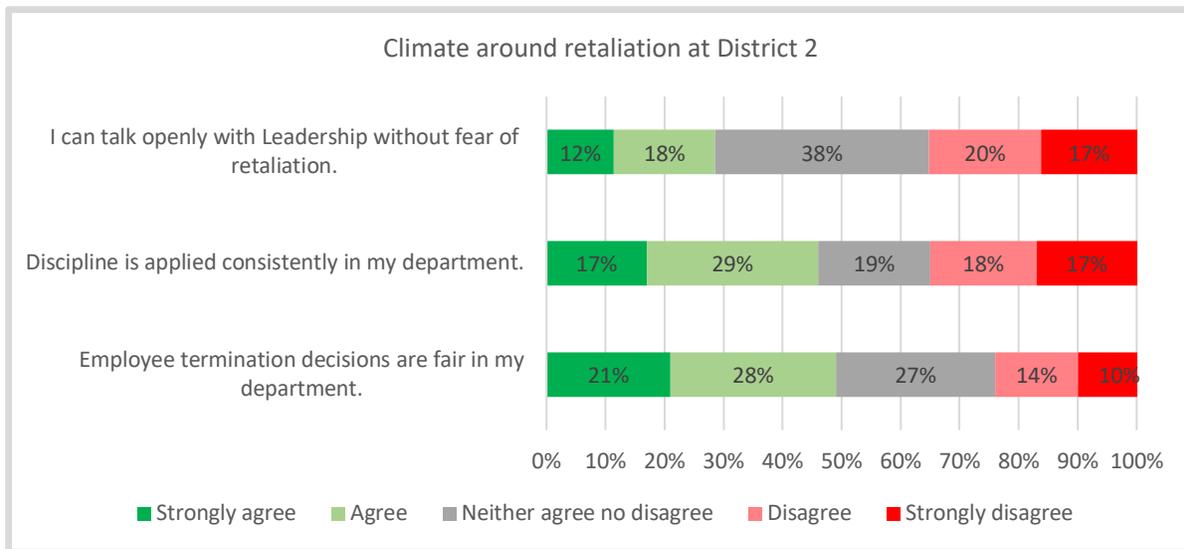

Seventeen percent (32) of survey participants said they either experienced or observed gender-based discrimination at District 2 within the past five years. Overall, the belief that gender-based discrimination is a problem at District 2 is more prevalent than reported experiences— personal or observed. Twenty-nine percent of participants believe that women versus men are not held to the same standards at the CJB; 21% of participants believe that women are not offered the same opportunities as men at the CJB; and 21% of participants believe that women are not promoted at the same rate as men at the CJB.

More generally, 40% of survey participants from District 2 did not agree that all employees are treated equally at District 2.

Retaliation

Twenty-two percent (40) of survey participants from District 2 reported they either witnessed or observed retaliation at District 2 within the past 5 years. At District 2, many participants did not feel they could go to leadership with concerns without retaliation. A quarter or more of participants did not trust leadership to make fair disciplinary or employee termination decisions. More participants (37%) did not feel they could talk openly with leadership without fear of retaliation than those who do (30%). Thirty-five percent of participants did not have faith that discipline is applied consistently in their department. Twenty-four percent of survey participants did not agree that employee termination decisions are fair in their department.

Retaliation was the biggest issue reported by voluntary interviews from District 2, with seven (7) out of ten (10) voluntary witnesses reporting concerns of retaliation. Quotes from the interviews highlight this issue:

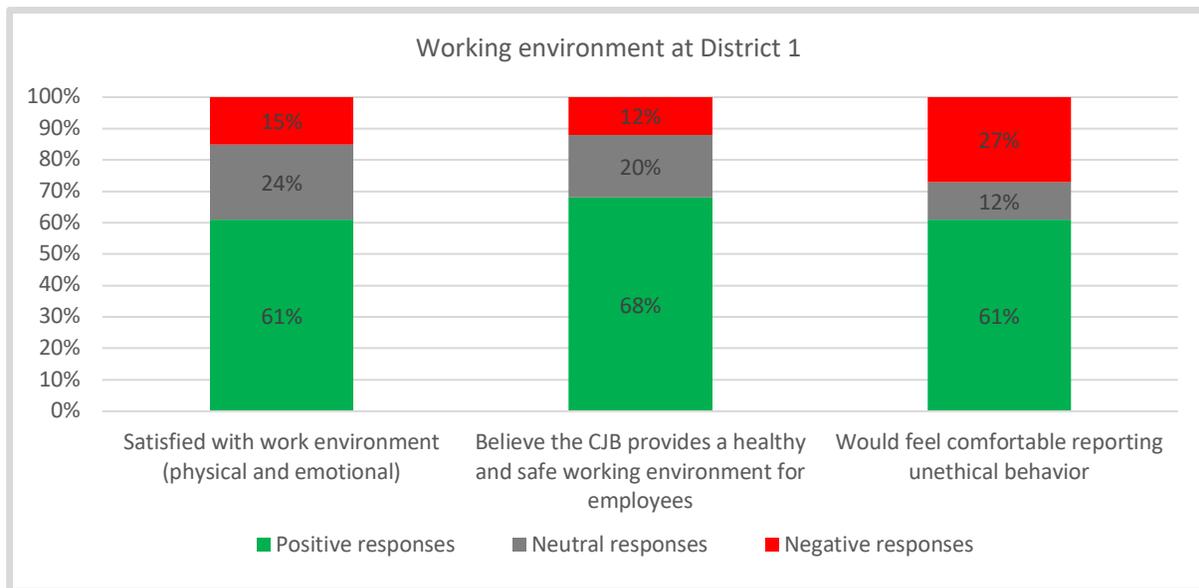

- “I was offered opportunity to meet with HR and [redacted] regarding my supervisor’s behavior but refused for fear of retaliation. My supervisor then gave me the lowest performance rating I have ever received in [number redacted] years with Judicial and was put on a performance plan.”
- “People are unable to speak up without consequences, even if you are found to be right and justified you are still given questionable treatment.”

Given the data presented in the “Reporting Misconduct” section above, a majority of those who experienced sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, and/or retaliation in District 2’s workplace chose not to report it. Out of this number, 52% indicated they did not report the mistreatment because they were afraid of retaliation.

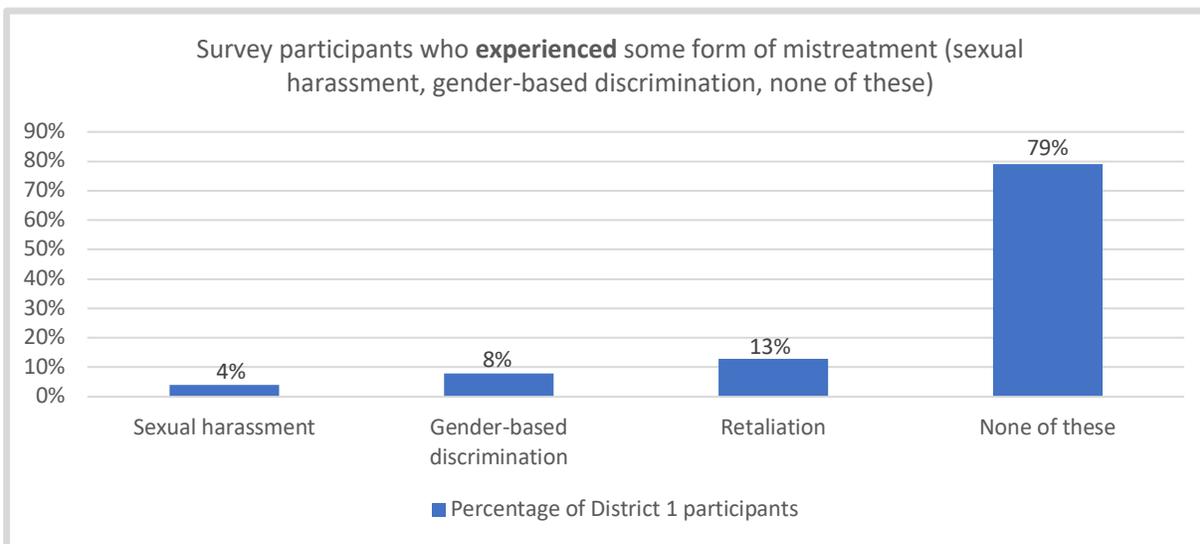

3. District 1 – Gilpin, Jefferson

Out of three-hundred and forty-three (343) District 1 employees who took the survey, two-hundred and twelve (212) participated, at a rate of 62%. Eighty-nine percent (188) identified themselves as employees of the Colorado Judicial Branch, while 11% (24) identified as appointed officials. Sixty-nine percent (145) of participants at District 1 identified as female and 22% (46) identified as male.

Job satisfaction at District 1 was more positive than many other Districts, with 70% (93) of those who responded to the question saying they were either “Satisfied” or “Very satisfied” with their job at the CJB. Sixty-six percent (139) said they would be “Very likely” or “Likely” to recommend the CJB to others as a good place to work. Twenty percent (43) of participants from District 1 experienced one or more forms of mistreatment, and 22% (46) witnessed one or more forms of mistreatment

The survey prompted participants to qualify the timeframe in which mistreatment occurred within three time periods: 2019 to present, between 2016 and 2018, and prior to 2016. Out of the experiences of mistreatment reported by participants, 55% reported mistreatment from 2019-present, 47% reported mistreatment 2018 and 2016, and 21% reported mistreatment prior to 2016.

I feel we sometimes get a clear message that no one really wants to hear about it or deal with the conflict if it's not that important enough to them," and "The initial incident was reported and then the retaliation was clearly supported."

Eighty percent of participants who reported the mistreatment they observed were dissatisfied with the response/outcome they received.

Fifty-five percent of total participants said they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by an appointed official. Sexual Harassment

Six percent (13) of survey participants reported that they either observed or witnessed sexual harassment in District 1’s workplace. Survey results were mixed on the environment of sexual harassment at District 1, and only 25% of participants believe that appointed officials are held accountable when allegations of sexual harassment are raised. Gender-based Discrimination

Ten percent (22) of survey participants said they had either experienced or observed gender-based discrimination at District 1 within the past five years. They were also unsure if leadership is fair about employee termination decisions. Eighteen percent of survey participants did not feel they can talk openly with leadership without fear of retaliation. Twenty-nine percent of participants did not have faith that discipline is applied consistently in their department. Fifteen percent of survey participants did not agree that employee termination decisions are fair in their department.

Six (6) of the ten (10) voluntary interviews from District 1 reported concerns about retaliation while working there.

Given the data presented in the “Reporting Misconduct” section above, a majority of those who experienced sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, and/or retaliation in District 1’s workplace chose not to report it. Out of this number, 61% indicated they chose not to report the mistreatment because they were afraid of retaliation.

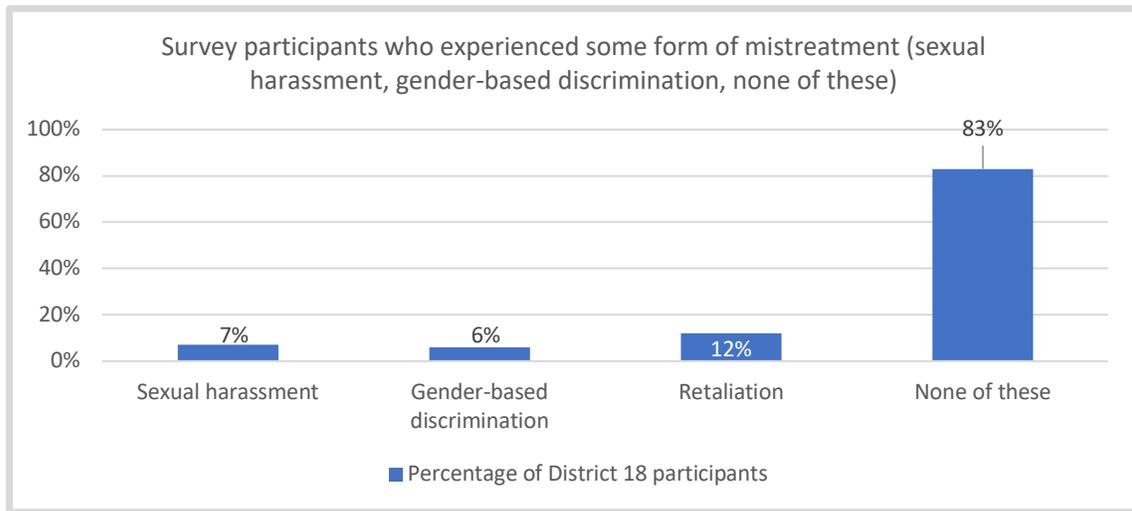

4. District 18 – Arapahoe, Douglas, Elbert, Lincoln

Out of four-hundred and fifty-four (454) District 18 employees who took the survey, two-hundred and seventy-one (271) participated, at a rate of 60%. Ninety-one percent (246) identified as employees of the Colorado Judicial Branch, while 9% (25) identified as appointed officials. Seventeen percent (47) of participants from District 2 experienced one or more the forms of mistreatment and 24% (66) have witnessed one or more forms of mistreatment in the workplace.

The survey prompted participants to qualify the timeframe in which mistreatment occurred within three time periods: 2019 to present, between 2016 and 2018, and prior to 2016. Out of the experiences of mistreatment reported by participants, 71% reported mistreatment from 2019-present, 51% reported mistreatment 2018 and 2016, and 6% reported mistreatment prior to 2016.

Reporting Misconduct

Thirty-five percent of participants who experienced mistreatment at District 18 reported it. The 65% of participants who did not report provided the following reasons for that decision:

- I knew it wouldn't do any good. (70%)
- I was afraid of retaliation. (58%)
- It wasn't that serious. (15%)
- I didn't know who to go to. (6%)

Other reasons for not reporting the mistreatment included, "I convinced myself that it was my perspective," "I would have been laughed at. It would not have been seen as retaliation," "Afraid of being fired," "Higher person in charge and if you're not a favorite you are looked upon as a trouble-maker or whiner," and "The retaliation came from upper management, reporting it would have made it worse."

Out of those who did report, 83% were not satisfied with the response/outcome they received.

Out of those who observed mistreatment, 76% chose not to report it. Reasons provided for not reporting included:

- I knew it wouldn't do any good (56%).

Among those who reported the mistreatment they observed, satisfaction with the response/outcome they received was even, with 41% of participants dissatisfied and 41% satisfied with the response.

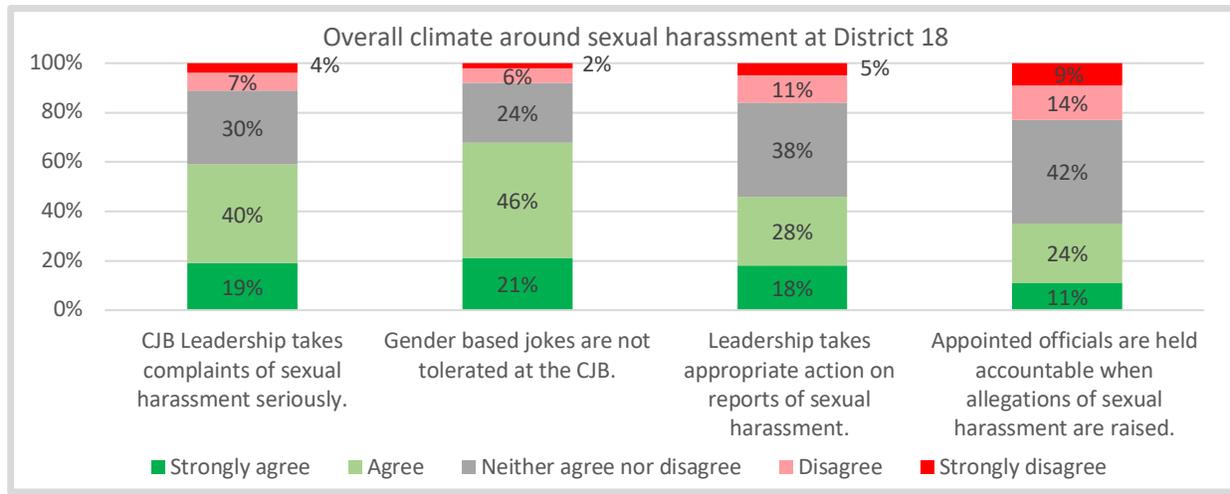

Sixty-eight percent of participating employees said they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by an appointed official. For the 9% who said they would not feel safe doing so, the top reasons provided were "Nothing would be done about it" (72%), "I would be afraid of retaliation at work" (56%), "I would be afraid it would ruin my career prospects" (44%), and "I would be afraid of losing my job" (44%).

The numbers among participants who are appointed officials were slightly better, with 72% reporting they would feel safe reporting sexual misconduct by another appointed official, and 4% reporting they would not.

When asked to rate the likelihood that CJB leadership will act on the results from this assessment, 22% of participants from District 18 believe leadership is unlikely to do so.

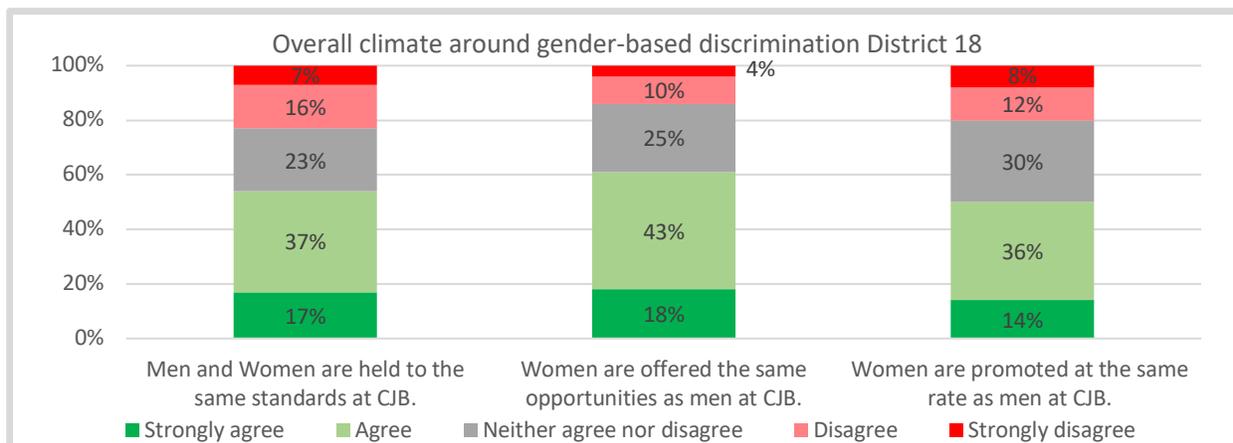

Sexual Harassment

Fourteen percent (37) of survey participants reported that they had either observed or witnessed sexual harassment in District 18's workplace. Survey results were mixed on the environment of sexual harassment at District 18. Twenty-three percent of participants did not believe that appointed officials are held accountable when allegations of sexual harassment are raised and 16% did not believe that leadership takes appropriate action on reports of sexual harassment. However, 59% feel that CJB leadership takes complaints of sexual harassment seriously, and 67% said gender-based jokes are not tolerated.

Gender-based Discrimination

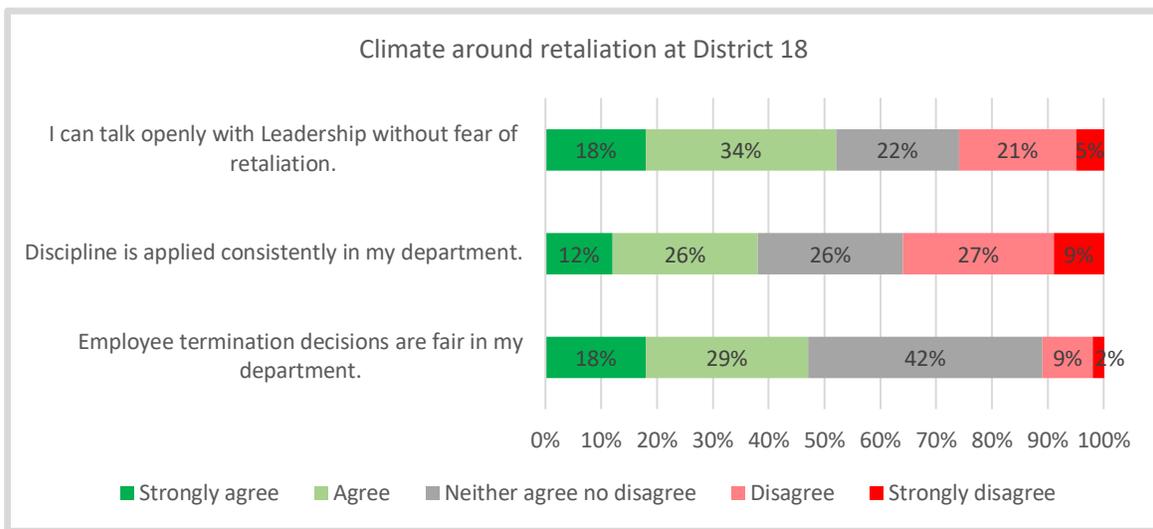

Eleven percent (29) of survey participants from District 18 said they either experienced or observed gender-based discrimination at District 18 within the past five years. Overall, the belief that gender-based discrimination is a problem at District 18 was more prevalent than reported experiences— personal or observed. Twenty-three percent of participants believe that women and men are not held to the same standards at the CJB; 14% of participants believe that women are not offered the same opportunities as men at the CJB; and 20% of participants believe that women are not promoted at the same rate as men at the CJB.

More generally, 30% of survey participants from District 18 did not agree that all employees are treated equally at the CJB.

Retaliation

Twenty percent (54) of survey participants from District 18 reported they either witnessed or observed retaliation at District 18 within the past 5 years. At District 18, more than a quarter of participants did not feel they could go to leadership with concerns without retaliation. Additionally, they did not believe that discipline is applied consistently in their department. Twenty-six percent did not feel they could talk openly with leadership without fear of retaliation. Thirty-six percent of participants did not have faith that discipline is applied consistently in their department. Eleven percent of survey participants did not agree that employee termination decisions are fair in their department.

Given the data presented in the “Reporting Misconduct” section above, a majority of those who experienced sexual harassment, gender-based discrimination, and/or retaliation in District 18’s workplace chose not to report it. Out of this number, 58% indicated they chose not to report the mistreatment because they were afraid of retaliation.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Anne R. McCord, SPHR, SHRM-SCP, PI, AWI-CH
Elizabeth R. Rita, Esq.

In the last part of this report, we set forth our recommendations for the Judicial Branch to address the problems identified in our assessment, leverage its strengths, and rebrand itself moving forward. These recommendations are based upon our work assessing the Judicial workplace; meeting with employees, judicial officers, and other stakeholders; and the results of our comprehensive workplace survey. Our research on best practices in judicial workplaces around the country informs these recommendations, including the comprehensive work being done on the federal bench. We also bring our experience assessing cultures and investigating misconduct in workplaces in Colorado and around the nation.

The Colorado Judicial Branch has already begun to act in some of these areas. Our recommendations are in alignment with much of what has already begun. Our Supreme Court has recognized an opportunity to join the growing number of judicial institutions around the country who are critically examining their policies and practices, considering their own allegations of misconduct.

There is a special risk for harassment occurring in workplaces like the Judicial Branch. There are significant disparities of power between appointed officials and employees. Many judges supervise staff and run their individual courtrooms without any background in management or legal compliance. Some employees in rural Districts work in relative isolation. Many employees fear retaliation and are confused about their reporting avenues. All these factors can increase the likelihood of harassment in a workplace. The EEOC's 2016 Select Task Force Report identified these and other factors as contributing to higher incidents of harassment in a workplace.⁵⁶ We heard about all these areas while meeting with employees in the Branch.

Our work in the Colorado Judicial Branch revealed several primary weaknesses in the workplace:

- The absence of shared cultural values, to which everyone is held accountable, as the driver for decisions;
- Insufficient avenues for confidential and safe reporting;
- Broadly stated fears of retaliation, and concerns that nothing is done in response to complaints of misconduct;
- A need for more transparency and accountability; and
- Insufficient (and insufficiently modern) training on workplace conduct issues.

⁵⁶ See Select Task Force on the Study of Harassment in the Workplace, available online at: https://www.eeoc.gov/eeoc/task_force/harassment/upload/report.pdf.

We propose recommended action to address these weaknesses. Our recommendations focus on the employee experience, accountability and transparency, and best practices in the modern workplace. These recommendations are specifically tailored to the Colorado Judicial Branch, while also reflecting state-of-the-art approaches to creating an environment where employees and judicial officers can do their best work for their communities and the State of Colorado. These five areas are interwoven in some ways but are set forth separately to emphasize the importance of each one.

These recommendations begin at the most important part: redefining the importance of culture in the Judicial workplace. Strong policies, procedures, and training are important but without a solid culture, they are simply a window dressing. The data we have gathered in this project overwhelmingly suggests that focusing on creating a shared set of cultural values – emphasizing respect, collegiality, and inclusion – is essential for the Judicial Branch.

Our Five Areas of Focus Are:

1. Recommended STRUCTURAL changes that we believe will help provide the resources and expertise the Colorado Judiciary will need as it moves forward in this endeavor, including the creation of the Office of People and Culture. This recommendation touches on many areas of life within the Judicial workplace.
2. Next, we outline the importance of institutionalizing a commitment to DIVERSITY, EQUITY, AND INCLUSION as a tangible demonstration of Judicial’s commitment to a CULTURE where respectful, inclusive, and supportive behaviors are encouraged and rewarded.
3. Third, we recommend specific mechanisms that will allow the Judicial Branch to maximize employee’s access to SAFE REPORTING of issues that arise in the Judicial workplace.
4. Fourth, we discuss the importance of creating mechanisms for more ACCOUNTABILITY for leadership, particularly judicial officers, as a core tenant of the Colorado Judicial Branch’s culture.
5. Finally, we include recommendations aimed toward prompt SUPPORT and RESOURCES for Districts needing immediate attention.

One foundational recommendation drives all others. It is that the Colorado Judicial Branch must transform its workplace through building a strong culture that manifests in every Judicial District and administrative department. This evolution will drive everything else that must be done. For this to be successful, investments of time, money, and resources must take place. The first recommendation is the creation of a new Division: The Office of People and Culture. This organization will build and own the foundational culture that will support all other recommended actions.

Recommended Structural Changes

Office of People and Culture

Our first recommendation is that the Judicial Branch create an Office of People and Culture (the “OPC”). This Division will house a small team responsible for creating the structures and programs necessary to produce impactful changes in the culture. This OPC will own many pieces of the new approach we are recommending:

We believe that a commitment to a healthy culture begins with committing resources to provide the necessary expertise and services to do so. The essential first step is hiring or appointing a Director of People and Culture (the “DPC” or “Director of OPC”) to lead this effort. This person will head up the OPC. This Director should be experienced, respected, and independent. They need to have deep expertise on the building blocks of organizational culture and DEI, with the ability to engage all stakeholders around the fundamentals of a respectful, inclusive, and collegial workplace. This person will be, in effect, the ambassador of Judicial Culture across the organization.

The DPC may require the help of an administrator, and as described below, we recommend that the OPC also house an impartial Ombudsperson. In future years, as funding and needs dictate, a deputy director position may be required to meet the workload of the Division.

The Office of People and Culture will not replace or duplicate Human Resources, which will continue to provide operational HR support, talent acquisition, compensation, benefits, and employee relations services to the Branch. Instead, OPC will work in tandem with HR, and will take on the task of building and leading culture initiatives in five areas:

- Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion

The DPC will be responsible for providing tools, programs, and resources to support DEI strategies across the Branch. We will say more about the importance of DEI below.

- Creation and support of an Ombudsperson and other Safe Reporting mechanisms

We recommend that the Director of OPC hire an impartial Ombudsperson to provide a safe reporting venue for employees and judicial officers. The Ombudsperson should be empowered to provide a confidential space for reporting; ideas, and advice; information about policies and procedures; resources for informal resolution including mediation and restorative justice; and referrals for formal investigations within Judicial and by the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“CCJD”), where necessary. This person should retain sufficient autonomy in their interactions with employees, staff, and judges to maintain credibility and independence in the eyes of all stakeholders.

- Culture Development across the Branch

The Director of OPC should begin their tenure with a comprehensive listening tour of the Branch. Those Districts identified as needing immediate attention should come first, but every District should be part of this tour. The “Why?” behind this effort is to get a comprehensive understanding of the challenges and strengths that exist, to build collegial relationships with stakeholders, and to re-brand the people experience.

Alongside this fieldwork, the DPC should design a program for Town Halls, Summits, and Listening Sessions particularly geared toward the development of a shared institutional culture upon which to base all other initiatives. This collaborative development of a set of shared values should ask the fundamental question, “What are the Judicial Branch’s non-negotiable values? What should drive the employee experience, the relationship between judicial officers and their staff, and the resolution of conflict?”

Another important preliminary effort should be the creation of an intensive development program for the court executives in all twenty-two Judicial Districts. These individuals should be tasked with acting as the conduits of culture in their respective locations. In our outreach to this group of employees, we found they are underutilized and eager to help as instrumental parts of the culture development across the Branch.

- Training

The Director of OPC should be responsible for all training that drives and reinforces the culture for the Judicial Branch. This includes next generation training programs around Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion; Respectful Workplace; Anti-Bullying; Bystander Awareness and Assertiveness; Management Training for employees and judicial officers; Leadership Development; Managing Conflict; and Communication. These trainings should be geared towards employees and judicial officers, as equally important constituencies in the Judicial workplace.

This does not mean that OPC should be tasked with providing all this training. The Judicial Branch has distinct groups that already focus exclusively on training for employees and for judicial officers, and much of this is effective. However, there is no one organization that evaluates training system-wide or assesses it for priorities and maximum effectiveness. We do not recommend dismantling effective training that is already being used. However, the Director of OPC should take on assessing the training resources that exist, determining in collaboration with their peers what works, and figuring out what needs to be changed, added, enhanced, or discontinued.

The last part of training we believe is imperative is the creation of a training program for judicial officers, specifically focused on enhancing their skills as managers of their organizations. Leadership training is important, but without the fundamentals of people management, it gilds a lily that may be languishing in a fallow garden. This training should leverage the management training Judicial already uses for employee managers. Ideally this training should be required but at the least, it should be highly recommended. Records of training should be made public so they can be considered as part of a judge’s performance scoring for retention. The Director of OPC should own and help weigh in on the components of this training.

There should be required training on an annual basis for all employees and all judicial officers.

- Mentoring

Mentorship programs are a low-cost resource that can and should be leveraged in a workplace as rich in experience as the Judicial workplace. Mentorship is directly tied to employee satisfaction and retention. The Director of OPC should identify where this is already happening across the Branch and determine if larger more formalized program would be beneficial to the organization.

Next Generation Policy

The Judicial Branch should create a Next Generation Policy. This set of written policies should reflect a commitment to maintaining a workplace that encourages mutual respect, professionalism, and collegiality across ranks and divisions within the Branch. The citizens of Colorado expect judges and judicial leaders to behave in a manner befitting the honor and privilege of their roles. Disrespectful behavior and harassment, even when not unlawful or directed at someone because of a protected class, diminishes the dignity and stature of the Branch and can lead to unlawful harassment.

We recommend that the Colorado Judicial Branch adopt a formal Respectful Workplace Policy, as an adjunct to the work the SC/COA has already done in amending the Code of Judicial Conduct. The SC/COA has already determined that judges must abide by the values of civil, professional, and respectful treatment. We advise that the Branch's policies be amended to support these expectations for employees, judicial officers, and staff.

In June of 2021, the Colorado SC/COA amended its Code of Judicial Conduct in a manner designed to restore public confidence in the institution of the Colorado judiciary. These Amendments revised Code of Judicial conduct Rule 1.2, which mandates that judges behave in a manner to promote public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary. The comment to this rule now specifies that this requirement includes avoiding harassment and other inappropriate workplace behavior. Moreover, the rules reflecting the obligations of impartiality, competence, and bias were also amended. Rule 2.3, which speaks to the prohibition of acting with bias, prejudice, and harassment, now explicitly prohibits retaliation against employees (including former employees), attorneys and members of the public. Moreover, revisions to the rule governing a judge's supervisory duties now states that a judge should practice civility, patience, respect, dignity, and courtesy with employees and their staff; should not engage in any harassment and should not retaliate against staff who report misconduct. Finally, the revisions make clear that judges should report misconduct of other judges and lawyers. "Public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary is promoted when a judge takes appropriate action based upon reliable evidence of misconduct."

We recommend that the Judicial Branch embrace these new requirements and codify them in a Respectful Workplace Policy applicable to all personnel in the Branch. There are many good examples of Respectful Workplace Policies available, but at its heart the policy should emphasize that the expectation goes higher than just legal compliance. The goal should be fostering behavior that creates great culture and intercepting problem behavior before it becomes unlawful behavior. Policies should prohibit illegal conduct, but the standard for behavior should be set higher.

The newly revamped policy should explicitly address anti-retaliation and bystander reporting. Retaliation should explicitly be made a violation of the Judicial Branch's policies and judicial officers and all leaders should be required (and not simply encouraged) to report misconduct by others. Leaders in the Branch should be the most visible bystanders creating and maintaining the integrity of the Judicial workplace culture.

Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion

As indicated above, the new OPC will house the Judicial Branch's programs for diversity, equity, and inclusion. However, this is an important enough focus of our recommendations that we wanted to devote specific attention to it.

At this juncture of our nation's and state's history, it is critical for the Judicial Branch to prioritize DEI as an institutional value. There are a multitude of studies, sociological and economic research, and news stories offering insights into why this is so critical. We cannot overstate enough the importance of fostering and supporting a diverse, equitable and inclusive workplace. Research shows the wisdom of prioritizing such a focus, in terms of improved productivity, outcomes, employee retention, and attracting and keeping top talent.

According to a cross-country study in the Harvard Business Review, organizations with better diversity ratings were more innovative and profitable, averaging "19% points higher innovation revenues."⁵⁷ In terms of employee well-being, a 2015 study from the Journal of Applied Social Psychology, which utilized a sample of 4,597 health sector employees, found that "diversity practices are associated with a trusting climate that, in turn, is positively related to employee engagement." The research article also notes that the organization's focus on diversity practices positively correlated with not only minority group engagement, but engagement "across all employees" as well as improved employee well-being.⁵⁸

As a first step, the Director of OPC should conduct a readiness evaluation of the workplace to determine a baseline understanding of DEI, obstacles and gap analysis, and foundational data that will be used to craft a DEI strategy that is specifically tailored to the Judicial Branch. An outside consultant can help put this strategy into effect but without this first step, it is an attempt to build the right structure in an information vacuum. This would lessen the likelihood of a successful impact.

Once the strategy is in place and appropriate resources are obtained, the Director of OPC should institutionalize the priority of DEI in all aspects of the people experience from recruiting and hiring, onboarding, promotion and pay, resolution of conflict, education and training and monitoring metrics for improvement milestones over time. Evaluating success in tangible terms should be part of this strategy.

Safe Reporting

We touch on this, above, in discussing the Office of People and Culture. One theme we heard repeatedly from employees we met with is that they do not feel safe bringing forward concerns, particularly about judicial officers. This needs to be rectified by a robust system of safe reporting options.

The ombudsperson will be a principal component of the Safe Reporting System. As outlined above, employees and judicial officers will be empowered to seek out advice, resources, and support for workplace issues through this confidential reporting option. This person will provide mediation and informal resolution support as well as act as an impartial sounding-board for individuals who need someone to hear them. It will be important that this person is trained in identifying circumstances that may require further action, such as formal investigations or referrals to the CCJD.

An additional component of the Safe Reporting system should include an anonymous complaint management system managed by a third party. These systems allow for anonymous reports with the benefit of allowing communication with an anonymous reporter. This makes gathering information for investigations more effective in these circumstances. These systems also provide information on tracking, patterns, and themes. These tools can help an organization identify problem patterns in complaint types, locations, or individual personnel requiring intervention. The bottom line is that in today's workplace, employees expect that they will have the ability to bring forward complaints without identifying themselves. Many times, if this is not available, they resort to social media or lawsuits to inspire action.

Finally, in providing numerous ways of bringing forward concerns – formal investigation, informal resolution via the ombudsperson and mediation, anonymous complaints – the Judicial Branch will resolve one of the loudest criticisms we heard from employees and staff: distrust in the reporting structures in place.

Accountability and Transparency

Two themes discussed in the media as well as discovered in our interviews and from survey respondents are that most people who experienced misconduct did not report it because they felt it would not do any good. There is a deep concern that nothing will change, nothing will be done, and wrongdoing will be concealed.

To provide confidence that appointed officials and leadership at the Branch are held to the highest ethical and behavioral standards, an appropriate degree of transparency and accountability is imperative.

360 Reviews on an Annual Basis for Chief Judges

Most chief judges who participated in our assessment and investigations, and who we heard about from employees, are hardworking and dedicated individuals who go above and beyond in terms of the extra work they do for the Judicial Branch. That said, their position is uniquely powerful within their Judicial District, and we heard about instances where that power was abused. There is no real check and balance on this power except for the retention process, which historically has not taken information from staff and employees working for the Chief into its evaluations.

To correct this and provide more data upon which to assess the judicial performance of these important leaders in the Branch, we recommend that an annual 360 review be completed for each chief judge. To get a balanced perspective, we recommend that the following stakeholders are given an opportunity to provide feedback: staff and employees in the District, judicial officers in the District, peers in the chief judge community, leaders at SCAO including the State Court Administrator, the Director of HR, the Director of OPC, and the Chief Justice of the SC/COA.

These reviews should be examined by the Chief Justice of the SC/COA together with a panel of reviewers selected for an impartial assessment of the information to ensure that problem areas are identified and addressed.

Biannual Judicial District Surveys

In addition to the 360 Reviews, we recommend that the Judicial District staff and judicial officers are surveyed biannually, using the same questions each time to determine progress or decline in identified culture measurements. If surveys reveal problem areas, the Judicial Branch should consider annual surveys for those Districts and public identification of struggling Districts. These surveys should likewise be reviewed by the Chief Justice and a panel of assessors to identify and correct problem areas.

More Inclusive Data Considered and Made Public in Judicial Performance Evaluations

We recommend that the Colorado Commission on Judicial Performance (“CCJP”) consider its own mechanisms for gathering information about judicial officers’ interactions with their employees and staff. This source of information has been underrepresented in terms of relevance to performance by a judicial officer. We believe it needs to be a key component.

This could be accomplished with surveys, interviews with staff, exit interviews with departing personnel, or other methods. There could be some combination of the CCJP using its own data gathering and leveraging data compiled by the Branch.

We recommend that the CCJP consider the annual 360 reviews, the District surveys, and judicial training records described above in its reporting on each judicial officer. These metrics could be included (in some form) in the public disclosures made to provide a more holistic assessment of performance upon which voters can make their retention decisions.

Formalized Criterion for the Commission on Judicial Discipline Regarding Public Proceedings

There should be a set of agreed-upon criterion for escalating matters of formal judicial discipline to public proceedings. Presently, discretion about whether discipline proceedings will be private or public rests in the Commissioners and the Executive Director of the CCJD with no written guidance for its exercise. This discretion should be informed by written guidance, with a focus on escalating credible reports of harassment or misconduct based upon a protected class to public proceedings.

Immediate Support and Resources

To make meaningful change in the Colorado Judicial Branch, a staged approach may be required across the Branch. For this reason, we recommend focusing first on those Districts where employee satisfaction is lower and where more misconduct is experienced and witnessed.

The CJB should immediately solicit feedback from employees and appointed officials through focus groups and listening sessions to design a plan to address the issues that are most pressing. This will not be a “one size fits all” solution and will require a tailored approach for each District. As highlighted above, there may be opportunities to learn from Districts with higher employee satisfaction and less misconduct and apply that learning to the lower performing Districts.

Once a plan is established, each District should be held accountable to a strategy with milestones and metrics. A committee or workgroup should be created and empowered to follow through on the plan. The survey conducted can be easily replicated to measure the success of the efforts and focus on accountability for those in leadership positions.

These Districts may also be the right place to first introduce the Ombuds and an anonymous complaint line as well. By phasing these resources into the CJB, the Director of OPC^[1] can iron out procedural and policy hiccups before rolling out the final product to the rest of the organization.

With this as a starting point, the OPC can then partner with Human Resources and each individual Branch to develop a longer-term strategy to implement the recommendations made in the previous sections.

^[1] If a director is not immediately hired, the CJB may consider giving more resources to Human Resources to launch this effort or engage a third-party consultant.

COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE

May 18, 2021

Chief Justice Brian Boatright
Colorado Supreme Court
2 E. 14th Avenue
Denver, CO 80203
Via E-Mail and U.S. Mail

Dear Chief Justice Boatright,

Thank you for your letter dated April 26, 2021. The Commission appreciates your public and private statements of commitment to providing information to the Commission. As much as we appreciate those reassurances, the Commissioners are looking forward to receiving the information previously requested.

Your April 26th letter raises a number of concerns relating to the Commission's February 23rd request for information. We will address each in turn. However, we first want to emphasize that the Judicial Department has an affirmative duty of disclosure to the Commission. This duty is akin to the duty of a prosecutor in a criminal case or a party in a civil case to make affirmative disclosure of files and information without being asked. While the Commission has asked questions and we will discuss those requests further in this letter, addressing these questions is not intended in anyway to relieve your office of fulfilling those duties of affirmative disclosure. Our questions can never comprehensively and adequately address the issues as we simply do not know what we do not know and we do not know what your office and the Judicial Department know until you tell us.

Consistent with the discussion in our original February letter, the Commission has a unique constitutional role in Colorado. Under Article VI, § 23 of the Colorado Constitution and Rule of Judicial Discipline 4(a), the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline has exclusive jurisdiction to evaluate allegations of judicial misconduct or judicial disabilities. The Commission is authorized to initiate a complaint either through its consideration of a request for evaluation of judicial conduct submitted by an outside party or by taking action sua sponte, as provided in RJD 12 and RJD 13(f). Please be aware that each of the Commission's requests for information is based on a concern for which the Commission needs to perform an evaluation in order to fulfill its charge. Our requests for disclosure from your office are an early step in this effort.

Consistent with the discussion in our original February letter, the Judicial Department has express obligations to disclose information and materials to the Commission. These are found in CJC Canon Rule 2.15(A), CJC Canon Rule 2.15(C), RJD 5 as well as the current Memorandum of Understanding between our entities and CJD 08-06. CJC Canon Rule 2.16(A) also directs that a "judge shall cooperate and be candid and honest with judicial and lawyer disciplinary agencies."

The Commission is further authorized to obtain records and testimony by subpoena under RJD 4. Of course, the Commission has rarely ever had to invoke that authority because of the level of cooperation provided to the Commission in conducting its evaluations.

These authorities unequivocally display an intent to create an affirmative duty of disclosure. This interpretation makes sense because the Commission usually knows very little beyond what is disclosed to it. Therefore, we want to emphasize again that, while the Commission has asked for specific information and will discuss your requests for clarification, these discussions do not abrogate these obligations of proactive information sharing without waiting to be asked.

Your letter next addresses the independent investigation entity you are creating. You note that the creation of the investigation entity has not moved as swiftly as you had hoped. We can sympathize with your concern that things do not always move as quickly as one would like.

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] As noted above, the Commission has exclusive jurisdiction under the Colorado Constitution to evaluate and address potential judicial misconduct. While the Commission appreciates the potential assistance that may result from the investigating entity, the Commission must undertake its charge. Ultimately, the Commission remains responsible to fulfill its constitutional charge regardless of the evolution of the new investigatory entity.

The specific questions you asked about our requests for information are addressed below:

As your letter asks generally for a better understanding of our original requests and more public reporting allows us to supplement those requests, we will now review and supplement those original requests.

The requests above are based on the limited information that the Commission has been able to learn from publicly reported information. Our preference, however, is to hear directly from your office and the Judicial Department about their knowledge and views on these topics rather than await press reports. At this stage, the Commission asks only for your office and the Judicial Department to share the basic information available to you so the Commission can decide on a course forward. We ask you again to please convert your assurances of disclosure and cooperation into concrete action.

Finally, the Commission would like a better understanding of the investigating entity you are creating. The February 16, 2021 SCAO press release explained that this new entity's purpose is to "independently examine allegations of sexual harassment and gender discrimination within the Judicial Branch, and of claims that a training services contract was awarded improperly to a senior administrator." We have heard that the request for proposal document has been issued but have not seen the document and do not know if a document exists that defines the scope of the independent investigation or the respective role of the independent investigator. The Commission would appreciate a better understanding of your plans. We would also like to understand the authority on which the new entity is based, who will give it direction, what investigative authority it will have, and how it will work with or relate to the Commission.

The Commission has some concerns that your April 26th letter suggests your office and the Judicial Department view the plan to create the new entity as a substitute for the Commission's role or as a basis for delaying the work of the Commission. The Commission disagrees with these views, if they are held. The Commission is also concerned about the interplay of the confidentiality requirements under Article VI, § 23(3)(g) of the Colorado Constitution, the work of the new entity, and the work of the Commission. Will all of the work of the new entity be public? Will some be confidential? What is the basis of authority for making those decisions? What instructions are being given to the new entity regarding cooperation and disclosure with the Commission and, what is the basis of authority for those instructions? What authority will the Commission have to communicate and cooperate with the new entity and, again, what is the basis of that authority?

Thank you for your time. The Commission will appreciate responsive material within three weeks as well as description of a plan for providing future materials.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "Christopher Gregory", with a long, sweeping underline that extends to the right.

SUPREME COURT OF COLORADO OFFICE OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE

Dear Mr. Gregory,

I am in receipt of your letter dated May 18. Based on the tone and substance, I'm concerned that the duty of individual judicial officers to report known violations of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct ("Code") to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline Commission ("Commission") under Rule 2.15(A) has been misconstrued as encompassing the duty to report either unsubstantiated allegations of judicial misconduct leveled indirectly by any third-party long after the fact or disputed legal claims that the Judicial Department is actively defending against. We therefore need to start with the same basic understanding, which is that the former does not encompass the latter because "knowledge" under Rule 2.15(A) is limited to "actual knowledge."

That said, I of course recognize and take very seriously the affirmative obligation of individual judicial officers, myself included, to report known violations of the Code to the Commission, as well as for the Judicial Department to do so in accordance with the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding ("MOU") between it and the Commission dated February 5, 2010. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

As the executive head of the Judicial Branch, I directed the Judicial Department to work with members of the legislative and executive branches to retain an independent investigator to conduct a thorough investigation of the allegations in "the memo." Should I or the Department obtain actual knowledge of any Code violation that requires reporting under Rule 2.15(A) or the MOU, either independently or through the investigation, we will promptly comply with our reporting obligations.

Finally, you requested a copy of the Request for Proposals to retain the independent investigator that was issued by the Judicial Department, which is attached. As you can see, the independent investigation will not substitute for the Commission's constitutional role, nor will it result in the creation of a free-standing investigative "entity." Rather, the Department is contracting for a discrete investigation of the allegations in "the memo," many of which are unrelated to alleged misconduct by individual judicial officers and instead relate to alleged misconduct by employees who are not judicial officers and may implicate broader cultural and systemic concerns for the Department as an employer. Clearly, the Commission's role does not encompass such allegations. The investigations will also look into the hiring process for State Court Administrator that occurred in 2017 and the contracting process for the Department's leadership contract. I will keep you updated on the progress of the investigations to the extent that they concern misconduct by judicial officers.

The Commission undoubtedly serves an important function in safeguarding the integrity of the Judicial Department, and I extend my sincerest thanks to you and your fellow Commissioners for their public service.

Regards,

Brian D. Boatright

COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE

July 23, 2021

Chief Justice Brian Boatright
Colorado Supreme Court
2 E. 14th Avenue
Denver, CO 80203

Dear Chief Justice Boatright,

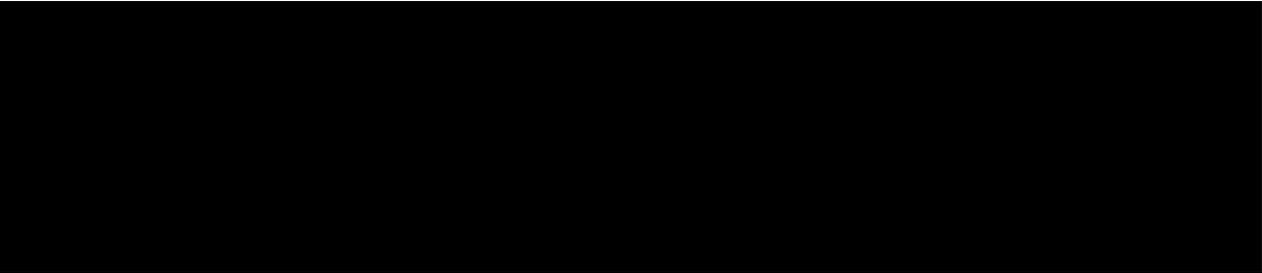

Thank you for your letter dated June 11, 2021. The Commission is temporarily without a chair. As a result, I am writing to you on behalf of the Commission as the vice chair to follow up on our prior correspondence.

In your June 11th letter you express concern about the apparent differences in views regarding duties of disclosure of information to the Commission. As our prior correspondence indicates, the Commission has shared that concern for some months now. The Commission understands your views that an individual judge's duty of disclosure under Rule 2.15(A) of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (the "Code") is limited to the "actual knowledge" of that judicial officer. However, this discussion is only incidentally responsive to the Commission's pending requests.

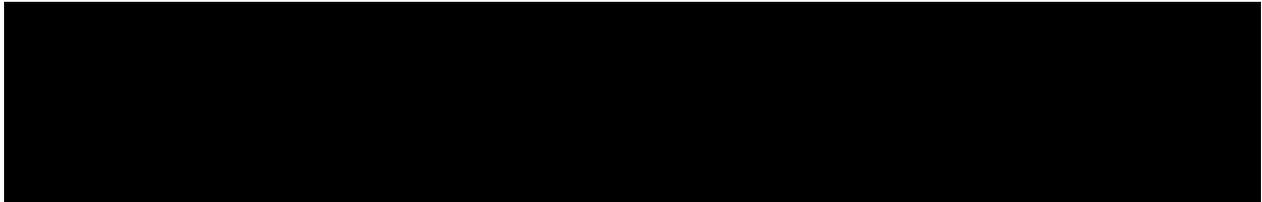

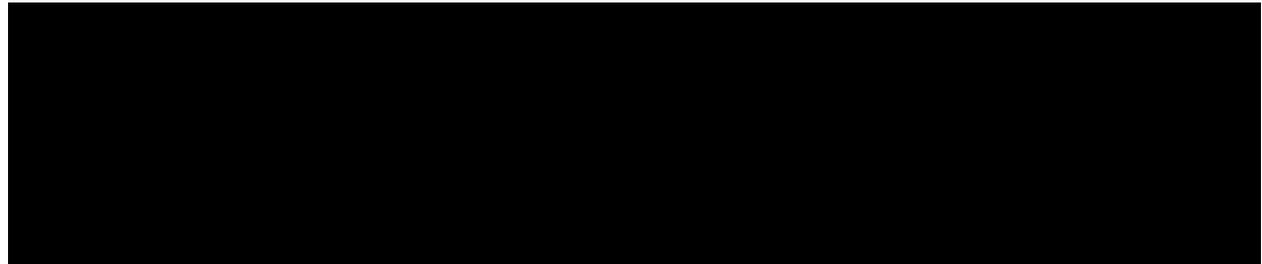

The Commission has reached out to you as the judicial officer that leads the Colorado Judicial Department (the "Department"), the ultimate decision-maker for the Department in these matters. Since February, the Commission has asked you to cooperate with, and provide information to, the Commission in fulfillment of obligations under Rule 2.16, CJD 08-06, the Memorandum of Understanding between our entities, your public statements undertaking personal commitments of cooperation, as well as the rule you addressed, Rule 2.15(A). Each authority addresses a different aspect of the Commission's pending requests for information/disclosure and have been discussed in Mr. Gregory's prior letters to you.

The Commission does not agree with the suggestion in your June 11th letter that your office and the Department are relieved of disclosure and cooperation obligations if information is outside the "actual knowledge" of an individual judicial officer. The Commission understands that if you make a report solely under Rule 2.15(A), you will limit your report to your personal, actual knowledge. However, the Commission maintains its requests for disclosure and cooperation under the additional authorities cited. These are in addition to Rule 2.15(A), are broader in scope, and do not contain such a limitation.

The Commission renews its prior requests to you for disclosure and active cooperation in the Commission's fulfillment of its constitutional obligations.

In the response provided through Mr. Vasconcellos, the Commission was invited to confer with our counsel to pursue our pending requests further with you. Given the progress to date, we understand the value of involving counsel. However, the need to involve counsel creates logistical challenges for the Commission. As you are aware, the Commission does not have its own counsel and does not have the dedicated resources to secure the specialized personnel needed to fill that role. As you are also likely aware, the Commission's usual source of loaned personnel, the OARC, is not able to provide OARC personnel on this set of matters—recall that the OARC announced on March 15, 2021 that OARC itself is using outside counsel for their own work on these issues. Our understanding is that the Department budgets only a modest amount, approximately $1,000 annually, for the Commission to engage outside personnel. Thus, the Commission is placed in a difficult position because it does not currently have the identified resources, direct or indirect, to engage the personnel now needed to proceed with its information gathering efforts. The Commission is attempting to explore options but will appreciate any insights you can offer on meeting these resource needs.

Chief Justice Boatright, the decisions made by your predecessors are fixtures of history at this point. However, you now chart the course of interactions with the Commission for the Department and your staff. During this pause for the Commission to try and resolve the resource challenges presented, the Commission implores you to reconsider the overall approach to the Commission pursued to date this year. The Commission appreciates your statements of support for our work as well as your prior statements of commitment to transparency and cooperation with the Commission's work. Actual implementation of those statements will, in the long run, best serve the interests of our respective institutions as well as the interests of the People of Colorado.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'D. Prince', with a stylized flourish at the end.

Top judges ignored colleague's drinking

At least three judges — Colorado's Supreme Court chief justice and a now-retired appellate court judge among them — years ago knew of a Denver juvenile court judge's drinking problems but never reported them, then maintained that silence while a court-house manager who had sought their help in confronting the judge faced firing instead, The Denver Gazette has learned.

A second judicial discipline case, that of 17th Judicial District Judge Robert Kiesnowski Jr. who resigned last year, has key connections with Colorado Supreme Court Chief Justice Brian Boatright, according to documents and interviews.

Despite promises by Boatright to state legislators in 2021 that he would monitor all complaints of judicial misconduct personally and ensure they're handled promptly, the state's discipline commission said the Kiesnowski case took months to reach it and then languished for another two years before action was taken.

In that case, Kiesnowski, whose courtroom was in Adams and Broomfield counties, agreed to resign after admitting to a campaign of harassment and retaliation that lasted for years against a court clerk who had begun complaining to her courthouse superiors about his conduct as early as 2016.

Kiesnowski had accused his courtroom clerk, Emily Betz, of talking behind his back about an extra-marital affair he was having with another courthouse employee who was Betz's supervisor and who eventually became the judge's wife, according to public discipline records.

Kiesnowski embarked on a protracted campaign to harass Betz, including efforts to prevent her from speaking to anyone while working her courthouse job for him, public discipline records show.

Although Betz's superiors took her concerns to the upper levels of the Judicial Department, they never made it to the discipline commission, people familiar with those events said.

When the harassment didn't stop — Kiesnowski's paramour was not transferred to a different judicial district as personnel rules required — Betz filed her own complaint with human resources within the Judicial Department's State Court Administrator's Office in May 2021, documents reviewed by The Denver remains open.

But Woods' use of alcohol, which multiple sources confirm is at the core of his discipline case, wasn't new to anyone except commission investigators, and several judges, including Supreme Court Chief Justice Brian Boatright, were aware of it for years, The Denver Gazette has learned.

Woods did not respond to telephone messages from The Denver Gazette.

The discipline commission, the state's constitutional authority for investigating and sanctioning judicial misconduct, only recently learned that Boatright and other judges knew about Woods' drinking and did not report it nor the subsequent alleged retaliation against the courthouse manager. That happened in January when the commission investigated a complaint filed last summer, people familiar with the inquiry confirmed. It was last summer's complaint that led to Woods' resignation last month.

Since 1966, the Colorado Constitution has recognized that a judge's problems with alcohol, called "intemperance," are reason enough to remove the judge from the bench. The state's judicial discipline rules define intemperance as including the abuse of alcohol. And the state's Code of Judicial Conduct prohibits retaliation for reporting any alleged misconduct.

The commission handles all violations of the code of conduct and recommends discipline for any infractions, which could include a judge being removed from the bench. That can only happen with the Supreme Court's approval or by a special tribunal if a conflict of interest exists. The legislature also has constitutional authority to impeach judges and justices, though that has never happened.

The commission has disciplined judges for problematic alcohol consumption outside of the courtroom, including at public events such as conferences or other semi-official gatherings.

The current complaint against Woods came from courthouse employees concerned about Woods' drinking who were reticent, for some time, to come forward because they feared the same retaliation the courthouse manager had faced earlier, people familiar with the inquiry confirmed to The Denver Gazette.

Several high-ranking Denver juvenile court employees in 2019 planned to confront Woods about his drinking and their concerns it was impacting his work as a judge, similar to an intervention session held with a colleague or family member suffering from addiction, The Denver Gazette has learned.

To that end, the employees asked for support or advice from at least three judges — Boatright, now-retired Court of Appeals Judge Karen Ashby, and Denver Juvenile Court Judge Laurie Clark — according to several people with knowledge of the events.

At least two — Ashby and Boatright — offered their support to the employees, sources confirmed, though it's unclear whether either agreed to participate in any intervention plan.

Additionally, commission investigators were told that Clark had been approached multiple times by the courthouse manager, but that stopped when it appeared no help was forthcoming, sources said.

Additionally, investigators learned that Clark had allegedly expressed her own concerns with the court manager about Woods' alcohol use in discussions about a class the judges co-taught at a law school, sources confirmed.

Despite ethics rules compelling judges to tell the discipline commission about any troublesome conduct of their colleagues or to take other appropriate action, none reported Woods' drinking, according to several sources who asked not to be identified because they feared repercussions or were not authorized to discuss the matter publicly.

Then, when Woods learned of the court manager's efforts to confront him, he instead pursued disciplinary measures against the manager specifically because discussions about his personal conduct and alcohol use were had with others, including his judicial colleagues, according to interviews and documents reviewed by The Denver Gazette.

That discipline included an admonishment against the manager for having said Woods was disengaged and frequently absent from court, according to documents and interviews.

The manager was told by a superior that Woods had lost confidence in the manager and was likely to fire them, according to people familiar with that conversation and documents reviewed by The Denver Gazette.

Though the judges who were notified of Woods' alcohol use were also aware of the alleged retaliatory discipline he pursued, none of them reported it to the commission, though two of the judges — Ashby and Boatright — agreed to provide the manager with a favorable job reference going forward, people familiar with those discussions said.

Clark told The Denver Gazette that she was unaware of Wood's drinking on the job and does not know the focus of the discipline commission's inquiry.

"I want to be clear, no employee ever came to me regarding Judge Woods use of alcohol related to court business," she wrote in an email. "I never had a concern regarding any alcohol use by Judge Woods at the courthouse or while we co-taught at the law school."

Regarding the manager's discipline, Clark said she knew little about it.

"I was aware of the firing but had no information regarding the purpose of that firing," Clark wrote in an email to The Denver Gazette. "I have never been privy to the basis of that firing."

Ashby told The Denver Gazette she wasn't aware of any concerns that Woods' drinking had impacted his performance on the bench and that employees only expressed a general concern to her of his lack of leadership and the poor performance of the juvenile court.

"There were no specific allegations that he was drinking on the job, that he was drunk on the bench or at the courthouse," Ashby said. "Had there been, I would have the responsibility to report that kind of thing."

As an at-will employee of the juvenile court's presiding judge, the manager chose to resign rather than be fired in June 2019, leaving behind a career that spanned more than two decades and relinquishing nearly all the retirement benefits that came from it, according to people with knowledge of that outcome.

The Judicial Department also required the manager to sign a non-disclosure agreement, which would not be possible today following legislation last year banning the practice in state government.

Several high-ranking positions within a judicial district — Denver's juvenile court is viewed as wholly separate from the overarching Second Judicial District in which it sits — are hired at the discretion of the presiding or chief judge. Because they are at-will employees, they can be terminated at any time and without reason.

None of the colleagues who assisted the manager in planning the intervention with Woods, nor the judges whose advice they sought, came to the manager's assistance when the manager was suspended and faced termination, sources confirmed.

Ashby was the only one of the judges to remain in touch with the manager and offer additional support — but still did not report any of Woods' conduct or Gazette show.

However, the discipline commission said in public documents that her complaint was not to them until August 2021 — roughly four months later, an assertion SCAO denies.

In February 2021 — three months before Betz filed her complaint to the SCAO, which answers to the chief justice — Boatright told a joint gathering of both houses of Colorado's General Assembly that he would personally monitor all allegations of judicial misconduct across the state.

Betz's complaint would have been one of them.

Boatright made the announcement just two weeks after newspaper reports exposed a multi-million-dollar contract that had been given to a high-ranking Judicial Department employee who faced firing. It was allegedly to silence the employee's threats of a tell-all sex-discrimination lawsuit exposing years of undisclosed judicial misconduct. The allegations were laid out in a two-page memo the Judicial Department kept secret until the newspaper stories appeared.

"The branch takes allegations of misconduct by judges and staff extremely seriously," Boatright told the legislators on Feb. 18, 2021, in response to the newspaper stories.

Then, referring to the memo, he told the General Assembly: "We need to know if human resources investigated any of these allegations, and if they did, what action was taken. And if they didn't ... we need to know why."

Named chief justice just seven weeks earlier, Boatright called for a special investigation into the memo and its allegations of covered-up or soft discipline against judges.

"Until the investigation is completed and any recommendations are implemented, I am to be made aware of any new allegations of misconduct and kept apprised of the progress of any investigation on a weekly basis," he said.

Two days before his General Assembly speech, Boatright issued a statement that said he had made a department-wide order that he get the weekly updates "to ensure each (complaint) is fully investigated and acted on as appropriate without delay."

Boatright told The Denver Gazette he has maintained that vigilance.

the retaliation to the discipline commission, according to interviews.

Ashby told The Denver Gazette that she was unaware of the reasons for the court manager's discipline, did not ask why, but did say the manager was "in my experience a very good employee. I didn't like the fact that it happened."

Many of the manager's colleagues at the time feared for their jobs if they said anything or approached the manager, several people with knowledge of their thinking told The Denver Gazette.

The Woods' inquiry has again put Chief Justice Boatright in the spotlight of scrutiny. He was named to the Colorado Supreme Court in 2011 and became its chief justice in January 2021.

In just the past several months, The Denver Gazette has learned Boatright is at the center of at least two additional matters before the commission. They include recent allegations that a judicial misconduct complaint that led to the resignation of 17th Judicial District Judge Robert Kiesnowski Jr. was slow-walked to the commission — claims the Supreme Court quickly forced the commission to remove from the public record — at a time when Boatright had assured legislators he was personally tracking all misconduct complaints to ensure they were handled promptly.

Also before the commission is an inquiry into the Supreme Court's public denial in February 2021 of allegations that former Chief Justice Nathan "Ben" Coats had approved a quid-pro-quo contract to silence claims that judicial misconduct was being covered up for years. That denial was delivered by Boatright although it was signed as coming from the Supreme Court's seven justices.

Coats was later censured by the judicial discipline commission for his role in that scandal. In November 2022, former 10th Judicial District Chief Judge Dennis Maes filed a formal complaint — known as a "request for evaluation" — with the discipline commission about the Supreme Court's public denial because judges are precluded from expressing public opinions on matters that might come before them. Maes' complaint remains under investigation.

Importantly, Boatright has grappled with the discipline commission the past few years over when a judge is required under the Code of Judicial Conduct to report the misconduct of others, which Boatright has said only applies to a judge's "actual" first-hand knowledge of any misconduct rather than through someone else, such as what occurred with Woods, no matter how credible they might be.

In an emailed statement to The Denver Gazette through a spokesman, Boatright said he could not comment about discipline matters or the issues involving Woods.

"As you know, matters pending before the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline are confidential pursuant to the Colorado Constitution. As a result, I am unable to comment directly on the questions you've posed," the statement read. "That said, the Judicial Department fully cooperates with every investigation by the Commission."

He added that he has recused himself from every judicial disciplinary case brought to the Supreme Court whenever he had information gleaned while he has been chief judge.

"After I committed publicly to ensuring all complaints are appropriately routed to the Commission on Judicial Discipline, I have recused on every disciplinary matter before the Supreme Court when I have learned information in my capacity as chief justice," he said in an email statement.

The independent investigations into the memo were not made public until June 2022 — a year after Betz had filed her complaint to SCAO.

In the months following Boatright's speech, the Supreme Court and the discipline commission tangled over several issues involving their investigation into the memo scandal. As a result, Betz's complaint languished for two years.

Finally, in March 2023, Kiesnowski agreed to resign in July that year, but for reasons that would remain secret from the public.

Just before he was to retire, however, the discipline commission found Kiesnowski had helped a family member during an unrelated criminal investigation, another violation of the rules of judicial conduct that prohibit sitting judges from working as attorneys.

It was over that misconduct the commission in October 2023 publicly asked the Supreme Court to admonish Kiesnowski. But in doing so, the commission also revealed the details behind the earlier private sanction behind his resignation. Those details implied the earliest allegations of misconduct against Kiesnowski from 2016 had been covered up.

The discipline commission's recommendation also revealed that the chief judge and court administrator in the 17th Judicial District where Kiesnowski worked were aware of his extramarital relationship but did not transfer his girlfriend as was required nor reported the infraction to the commission, according to a copy of the document obtained by The Denver Gazette at the time the document was made public.

The commission also revealed that the 17th district's court administrator had actually written SCAO officials in 2018 about the judge's personal relationship and raised concerns about suspected violations of judicial conduct rules and potential criminal misconduct. That letter, the commission said, was never forwarded to them.

Lastly, the commission noted in its public recommendation for discipline how Betz's complaint employee, fed up and indignant over Woods' conduct, reported him last summer.

But courthouse employees remained reticent to cooperate with any investigation, still fearful for their jobs, people familiar with their thinking said. That changed last December at a retirement reception for another district court judge, where Woods' conduct again came into question, sources said.

Notably, when the Supreme Court suspended Woods in December pending the discipline commission's investigation, Boatright did not participate in that decision, according to a copy of the court's order.

The court did not give a reason for Boatright's recusal and it is not required that he provide one.

Commission investigators soon learned of the courthouse manager who lost their job in 2019 and interviewed them in January, revealing the details of the three judges' knowledge about Woods' drinking and the alleged retaliation, people familiar with the inquiry said.

The Judicial Department's personnel rules take a hardline stance against retaliation, calling it a fireable offense. However, department insiders say there is a serious argument that those personnel rules don't specifically apply to judges.

The nature of the Woods inquiry has not been made public, but The Denver Gazette has learned the complaint surrounds only his use of alcohol and has nothing to do with the cases he presided over or any of the juveniles who appeared in his court. It's unclear if Woods was ever believed to be in court under the influence of alcohol.

Concerns over Woods' drinking started to become evident during an October 2018 awards dinner held in Denver by the Colorado Judicial Institute where several judges' performance was to be honored, sources told The Denver Gazette. A number of judges from across the state attended — it's unclear if Boatright or Ashby did — and commented about Woods' drinking, the sources said.

At the CJJ event, judges and staff from Denver's juvenile courts, including Woods, sat at one table; judges and staff from Denver's district court sat nearby. Other judges sat with their staffs at other tables.

COLORADO JUDICIAL BRANCH
4th Judicial District Judge David Prince

At one point, someone had a discussion with Woods over his ability to drive home from the event, several people said.

Juvenile Court Judge Clark, who attended the event, had already been approached several times previously by at least one courthouse employee to discuss Woods' alcohol use, several people said.

Clark told The Denver Gazette that had she known about Woods' excessive drinking at any time, "I would have reported it, as I am required to do so."

Concerns about Woods drinking came to a head again in April 2019 during a Colorado mountain resort conference on juvenile justice, according to several people who attended that event.

It was there the manager and at least two other high-ranking Denver juvenile court employees approached Ashby and asked for her help about confronting Woods, several people said. Offering her support, Ashby told them she would also reach out to Boatright to inform him of their efforts.

Ashby later confirmed to the two employees that she had spoken to Boatright — he was referred to as "Brian" in their communications — and that they had his approval and support, several sources confirmed.

Ashby told The Denver Gazette she only spoke to Boatright generally about the concerns regarding Woods' judicial performance, but not his drinking.

"If there were concerns about his drinking they were never concerns that it impacted his performance or (that he) was drinking on the job," Ashby said. "They were (employee) concerns he was not a good leader for the (juvenile) court. I didn't discuss alcohol (with Boatright), I discussed just the leadership."

Ashby said she couldn't recall if Boatright took any action about Woods following their conversation.

Within weeks, Woods placed the manager on administrative leave pending discipline, specifically noting it was because the manager had spoken to others about his alcohol use.

Clark is the interim presiding judge of Denver's juvenile court following Woods' resignation. Ashby was the presiding judge of that court until she was appointed to the Court of Appeals in 2013. She retired in May 2019.

Boatright was a member of the Supreme Court at the time of the mountain conference, but not its chief justice. He was previously a district court judge in Jefferson County who was noted for his expertise in juvenile and family law.

It's unclear whether any of the judges had spoken with Woods about his use of alcohol at the time.

'Actual' knowledge vs. second-hand

Boatright has tangled with the discipline commission over the requirement that a judge report alleged misconduct of a colleague. The sticking point was whether the judge has the information through first-hand knowledge or through a second-hand source.

The Code of Judicial Conduct is an array of rules judges are required to follow. They span a variety of topics that include conflicts of interest, personal conduct, and issues related to their work on the bench.

A key and often-discussed mandate (Rule 2.15) deals with a judge's obligation to report any misconduct, whether actual or alleged.

It says: "A judge, having knowledge that another judge has committed a violation of this code that raises a substantial question regarding the judge's honesty, trustworthiness or fitness as a judge in other respects shall inform the appropriate authority."

CASE

in 2021 took months to reach them, implying that Boatright would have known about it and, despite his promise to legislators for swift action, it languished nonetheless.

Boatright would not comment about any matters before the commission and said he has properly recused himself from any discipline cases brought to the Supreme Court when necessary.

State Court Administrator Steven Vasconcellos told The Denver Gazette the matter was actually shared with the commission on July 1, 2021, and the commission's executive director at the time asked for the SCAO to gather additional information, which it did. The entire matter was then handed over in August, Vasconcellos said.

"Your understanding of the timing is incorrect," Vasconcellos wrote The Denver Gazette. "The Commission has not communicated any concerns to me about the timing of our referral in this matter."

Within days of the commission making its recommendation public, the Supreme Court ordered it to remove it from the commission's website and, more specifically, to delete from any resubmission it would make the four paragraphs that described the delay for Betz's complaint to make it to the discipline commission, as well as any reference that Kiesnowski's misconduct wasn't reported to the commission years earlier.

Boatright recused himself from participating in that Supreme Court order, records show.

The commission asked the court to reconsider its order to remove references to Kiesnowski's private discipline, arguing it was an unprecedented — and likely unconstitutional — censure of the commission's public recommendations for judicial discipline, records show.

The commission did not, however, ask the court to reconsider its order to remove its allegations of a cover-up, records show.

The court agreed and Kiesnowski's previous discipline remained on the record, according to the court's order. The cover-up and slow-walk allegations, which the court called "irrelevant" and "unproven assertions," however, remained deleted, records show.

Boatright did not participate in that decision, either.

That “appropriate authority” in Colorado is defined as the Commission on Judicial Discipline.

The rule goes on: “A judge who receives information indicating a substantial likelihood that another judge has committed a violation of this code shall take appropriate action.”

What “appropriate action” actually means is not defined, but it extends to virtually any potential violation of the code of conduct. It’s the commission’s function to determine whether a violation actually occurred.

The rule was at the heart of a back-and-forth exchange between the discipline commission and Boatright as the alleged contract-for-silence scandal unfolded in 2021.

The commission repeatedly admonished the Supreme Court for not being forthcoming with information it said it needed to determine whether a deeper investigation into the scandal was necessary. The Denver Gazette has reported previously.

Despite Boatright’s public assurances of transparency and cooperation with investigations into the misconduct allegations, the letters between him and the commission portrayed a broader showdown between two constitutionally created entities, each pressing for control of what it deemed to be its mandate.

Specifically at issue was the commission’s charge to investigate any form of judicial misconduct, no matter whether the Judicial Department’s personnel office in SCAO had already deemed it to be inconsequential, and the Supreme Court’s view that judges need only report the misbehavior of another judge if they witnessed it firsthand.

Much of the commission’s annoyance appeared rooted in concerns it was learning the details of the contract-memo scandal through press reports and not from the judiciary itself. The Denver Gazette reported.

Rather than answer the commission’s questions about what it was reading in the newspaper, Boatright — and by extension the Judicial Department — appeared to delay, asking the commission for more specifics or that it provide a “better understanding” of what it wanted.

For its part, the commission said it merely needed the court to report what it knew.

Boatright wrote the commission in June 2021 — just a month after an Adams County court clerk, Emily Betz, filed her complaint about Judge Kiesnowski — that the panel seemed to misunderstand when a judge is required to report allegations of misconduct by another judge. The commission’s 10-member board includes 4 judges who are appointed by the chief justice.

Judges need only report if they actually witness the conduct, Boatright wrote.

“I’m concerned that the duty of individual judicial officers to report known violations of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (to the commission) ... has been misconstrued as encompassing the duty to report either unsubstantiated allegations of judicial misconduct leveled indirectly by a third-party long after the fact,” Boatright wrote.

“We need to start with the same basic understanding

... because ‘knowledge’ ... is limited to ‘actual knowledge,’” he wrote, adding that “I of course recognize and take very seriously” the obligation “to report known violations” to the commission and would “promptly comply” if he had “actual knowledge” of them.

The commission replied that Boatright was wrong.

“The Commission does not agree with the suggestion ... that your office and the department are relieved of disclosure and cooperation obligations if information is outside the ‘actual knowledge’ of an individual judicial officer,” El Paso County District Judge David Prince, then the acting-chairman of the commission, wrote Boatright in July 2021. “The Commission renews its prior requests to you for disclosure and active cooperation in the Commission’s fulfillment of its constitutional obligations.”

Prince left the commission in July 2023 after six years when Boatright, as chief justice, did not reappoint him to a second term.

Two weeks after the commission learned of Boatright’s knowledge in the Woods’ matter last month, it removed Christopher Gregory as its executive director. He had been a vocal critic of the department’s response to the scandal since it began when he was the commission’s chairman.

The Watergate scandal clearly shows that covering up governmental wrongdoings is oftentimes more egregious than the scandal itself. A two-bit burglary eventually led to the disgraceful resignation of the most powerful person in the world, President

Richard Nixon.

The Gazette news staff uncovered the now infamous pay-for-silence scandal that had its roots in the Colorado Supreme Court beginning in 2019. Then-Chief Justice Nathan Coats offered a $2.5 million contract to Mindy Masias, state court administrator chief of staff, at a time she was facing dismissal over financial irregularities. Masias allegedly threatened to go public concerning numerous allegations of judicial and official misconduct that had gone unreported if she were not awarded the contract. The contract was never consummated and Coats would subsequently become the first Colorado Supreme Court justice to be disciplined by the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (CCJD).

That's when the dominoes began — and continue — to fall, resulting in numerous missteps by the present Supreme Court under the leadership of Chief Justice Brian Boatright. The missteps threaten the very safeguards which were enacted to convince the electorate to adopt the present merit selection system of Colorado judges also known as the Missouri Plan. One of the safeguards was the establishment of the CCJD.

The commission is comprised of 10 citizen members. Four of the members are judges appointed by the chief justice of the Colorado Supreme Court; two are lawyers who are appointed by the governor, and four citizens who are neither lawyers nor judges also appointed by the governor. It has the responsibility to investigate allegations of judicial misconduct and suggest disciplinary action to the Colorado Supreme Court. The Colorado Constitution requires any allegation of judicial misconduct to be referred to the CCJD.

Throughout the investigation into the scandal, there have been numerous occasions when the Colorado Supreme Court has ignored the constitutional requirement and thereby compromised the integrity of the CCJD.

The CCJD vigorously and with a great deal of courage and integrity challenged the behavior of the Supreme Court during its investigation of the scandal, including testifying before a legislative body which was charged to look into potential judicial reform as a result of the Supreme Court's interference. In July 2023, the CCJD experienced a significant change in its membership and diligence in discharging its responsibilities.

Gov. Jared Polis and Chief Justice Boatright appointed six members to the commission, which now comprised the majority. Although Judge David Prince, a member of the commission and outspoken critic of the Supreme Court, was eligible for reappointment, Boatright refused to reappoint him and instead replaced him with a judge who had been critical of the CCJD.

I filed a Request for Evaluation of the current members of the Colorado Supreme Court who might have been on the bench at the time of the Masias contract and its aftermath. An RFE is the method for bringing allegations of judicial misconduct before the CCJD. The RFE was filed on Nov. 15, 2022. The CCJD confirmed receipt of my request on Nov. 28 of that year.

On or about Feb. 27, 2023, I gave permission to the CCJD to forward my RFE to the Colorado Supreme Court and disclose my identity. This action indicated my allegations were sufficient to be processed as a complaint under the rules.

The appropriate rule provides that written notice to the subject judge(s) shall be provided, "as soon as practicable after the members of the commission have concluded that the allegations are sufficient to be processed as a complaint."

Along the way, but prior to July 1, 2023, Jessica Yates, executive director of the Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel (OARC) chose to inform Judge Prince that previous testimony he had given "may have been in violation" of professional conduct that is expected to be followed by all attorneys. OARC is charged with ensuring that "Colorado providers of legal services are competent, diligent, communicative, honest and in compliance with the Colorado Rules of Professional Conduct." The OARC, incidentally, serves at the pleasure of the Colorado Supreme Court.

The CCJD retained David Kaplan, former Colorado public defender, to respond to the perceived threat by Yates and adamantly denied that any commission members would make false statements. Yates extended her accusations to include Christopher Gregory, the then-executive director of the CCJD "and all attorney/judge members of the commission in a potential violation ... if they assisted in the alleged violations." Kaplan described Yates' allegation as having a "terrible chilling effect" on anyone asked to testify before the legislature. Kaplan responded to Yates on or about June 29, 2023, just days before the massive commission membership turnover on the CCJD.

The CCJD lacked the diligence required in processing my RFE although, on numerous occasions, I inquired about the status of the investigation. It appeared the "as soon as practicable" requirement had somehow taken on a different meaning.

On this past Jan. 5, some 13 months after I filed the RFE, I demanded that action be taken on the RFE.

Executive Director Gregory advised me on Jan. 8 the RFE had been sent to Chief Justice Boatright on Dec. 14, 2023, and he was requested to respond to the allegations on or before Jan. 15, 2024. Boatright complied with the request.

On Jan. 19, four days after the Boatright response, the CCJD announced that Gregory was placed "on leave and is unavailable to engage in Commission on Judicial Discipline business."

I have since been advised that all matters shall remain confidential unless and until the Commission files a recommendation with the Supreme Court.

Not to be lost in the litany of concerns caused by the failings of the Boatright court and its cronies is the circumstances surrounding Sen. Pete Lee of Colorado Springs, who chaired a 2022 interim special legislative committee looking into judicial reform as a result of the scandal. Lee resigned after he was faced with unfounded allegations of voter fraud in part because of records submitted by the OARC, as reported by The Gazette.

Recall that the OARC is the entity that threatened the lawyer members of the CCJD, threatened to withhold funding from the CCJD and aided in the efforts to stall the work of the CCJD. Felony charges were dismissed against Lee shortly after he left the committee.

The thrust of this narrative is to expose the damage caused by the Colorado Supreme to the integrity and independence of the CCJD, which is charged with the responsibility to ensure the judicial branch of government is free from taint and committed to transparency.

The Colorado Supreme Court has failed to abide by its own set of rules and procedures by interfering with the process designed to address judicial misconduct by protecting its own when convenient, by allowing the OARC to intimidate commission members without consequence, by sanctioning the transmission of unfounded allegations against a member of a separate branch of government, and by arguably retaliating against a judge member of the CCJD who had the courage to call the integrity of the behavior of the highest court into question by refusing to reappoint him to the commission.

It is for the reader to draw their own conclusions whether the delay involved in handling the RFE was a result of the Yates reprimand of the lawyer commissioners or the influx of a majority of new commissioners who may or may not have had questions about moving forward with the RFE after determining it merited a response from Chief Justice Boatright.

It is for the reader to draw their own conclusion as to what prompted the CCJD to relieve Executive Director Gregory of his duties within days after Boatright filed his response.

Suffice to say, the scandal exposed the tremendous influence the Supreme Court exerts over the CCJD to the extent the court can dictate their desired results.

The only way to avoid the mess that has ensued since the uncovering of the pay-for-silence scandal is to remove the Colorado Supreme Court from any involvement with the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline.

RECOMMENDATION FOR JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE—COLO. RJD 37(A)

The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission” or “CCJD”), upon consideration of the accompanying Record of Proceedings, recommends that this Court publicly censure Respondent Robert W. Kiesnowski and enter a judgment for costs in the amount of $4,966.95 according to Colo. RJD 36(e),(g).¹ The Commission submits its Recommendation according to Colo. RJD 37(a). Exceptions to this Recommendation may be filed according to Colo. RJD 38.

As grounds for its Recommendation, the Commission adopts the findings of fact and conclusions of law included in the Report of the Special Masters, issued September 22, 2023, and the Special Master's Award of Costs, issued October 3, 2023. Both of the Special Masters' orders are included in the Record of Proceedings. The Special Masters' factual findings, as adopted by the Commission, are subject to review for clear error and verification of support through substantial evidence in the record. Matter of Booras, 2019 CO 16, ¶ 18.

This judicial disciplinary proceeding follows former Adams County District Court Judge Kiesnowski having been privately censured with an agreement to retire from office in CCJD Case No. 21-121. Judge Kiesnowski's Stipulation for Private Censure, filed with the Commission on March 14, 2023, is included in the Record of Proceedings in the present case as Exhibit 17 (admitted during the Formal Disciplinary Hearing held on September 6, 2023).

¹ Commissioner and Adams County Court Judge Mariana Vielma has recused herself throughout the Commission's proceedings below.

The Commission has received written authorization from Judge Kiesnowski's former judicial assistant, Emily Betz, to publicly disclose her identity. Ms. Betz was the victim of Judge Kiesnowski's admitted misconduct in CCJD Case No. 21-121. Given that Judge Kiesnowski's prior private discipline will become public upon filing of this Recommendation and the Record of Proceedings according to Colo. RJD 37(c), the Commission is compelled to provide an explanation for the delays involved in Judge Kiesnowski's discipline in CCJD Case No. 21-121.

Ms. Betz first contacted the 17th Judicial District Court Executive in 2016 to report her concerns about Judge Kiesnowski's judicial conduct and harassment towards her. At around the same time, former Court Executive Ben Stough and former 17th Judicial District Court Chief Judge Patrick Murphy became aware that Judge Kiesnowski had begun a relationship with his now wife, Maya, who also worked in the District as one of Ms. Betz's supervisors. Contrary to the Judicial Department's Personnel Rules and CJD 08-06, Judge Kiesnowski and Maya Kiesnowski (Korbe) were allowed to continue working together in the same judicial district. These circumstances were not reported to the Commission. Later, on July 3, 2018, Stough sent a letter to then-State Court Administrator's Office (SCAO) Human Resources Director Eric Brown detailing concerns about nepotism/retaliation involving Maya Kiesnowski and the underlying harassment of Ms. Betz. Stough's letter expressly referenced suspected violations of the Colorado

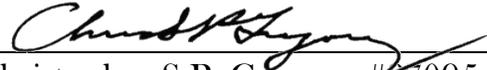

Code of Judicial Conduct (the Code) and the criminal offense of Official Misconduct, § 18-8-404, C.R.S. Stough's letter and the updated allegations of judicial misconduct were again not reported to the Commission. Finally, on May 19, 2021, Ms. Betz filed a complaint directly with the SCAO HR Division alleging the circumstances involved in CCJD Case No. 21-121. Ms. Betz's complaint, however, was not forwarded to the Commission until on or about August 26, 2021.

At that time, the Commission received its litigation support (provision of investigators and Special Counsel) through this Court's Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel (OARC). When the Commission requested litigation support for CCJD Case No. 21-121, OARC initially refused to comply with its obligations to provide such support under C.R.C.P. 227 (2021). After OARC eventually provided the requested litigation support, it withdrew as Special Counsel for the Commission in this and all other pending cases on June 10, 2022 (following enactment of SB22-201).

As explained in footnote 2 of the Stipulation for Private Censure, the non-disclosure of Ms. Betz's reporting to administrators within the Judicial Department and Mr. Stough's July 3, 2018 letter resulted in the limitations period under Colo. RJD 4(a)(1) expiring.

STIPULATION FOR PRIVATE CENSURE

INTRODUCTION

This case is currently in formal proceedings with a disciplinary hearing on the merits scheduled for March 27-30, 2023. Pursuant to this stipulation, the parties have agreed to resolve this case as follows. The Commission will dismiss the formal proceedings against Judge Kiesnowski. In exchange, Judge Kiesnowski will announce his retirement from the bench on March 14, 2023 to become effective July 1, 2023. Judge Kiesnowski also agrees to this private censure in which he admits to several violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct as detailed below.

SUMMARY OF PRINCIPAL ALLEGATIONS

Judge Kiesnowski harassed and retaliated against his judicial assistant, Emily Betz, based on his belief that Ms. Betz (1) reported his judicial misconduct to other judges and court staff, and (2) campaigned against his retention via Facebook posts.

STIPULATED FACTS

1. Between 2011 and 2016, Emily Betz worked for Judge Kiesnowski as the only judicial assistant in Judge Kiesnowski's division.
2. Prior to being assigned to Judge Kiesnowski's division, Ms. Betz had worked for the Colorado Judicial Department for approximately 4 years.
3. In the Spring of 2016, Ms. Betz noticed a changed dynamic between Judge Kiesnowski and one of Ms. Betz's supervisors, Maya Korbe. Specifically, Ms. Korbe began spending an increasing amount of time in Judge Kiesnowski's courtroom and in his chambers.
4. The increased presence of a supervisor in Judge Kiesnowski's courtroom and division created apprehension that Ms. Betz was being scrutinized for her work performance. Simultaneously, suspicions began developing around the courthouse that Judge Kiesnowski and Ms. Korbe (who were both separately married at the time) were having an affair.¹
5. The suspicions of an affair were reinforced by other Judicial employees and law enforcement sharing stories of seeing Ms. Korbe in Judge Kiesnowski's car, Ms. Korbe ducking down in the car when Judicial employees passed, Judge Kiesnowski and Ms.

¹ Ms. Korbe later obtained a divorce from her husband on July 21, 2016. Judge Kiesnowski's divorce became final on April 20, 2018. Ms. Korbe and Judge Kiesnowski would later marry each other.

Korbe arriving to work together, and Judge Kiesnowski's vehicle being parked overnight at Ms. Korbe's apartment.

6. During the summer of 2016, Judge Kiesnowski became increasingly frustrated about the rumors related to the alleged affair. Specifically, he came to believe that Ms. Betz was gossiping about the alleged affair to other judges and court staff and thereby contributing to the spread of rumors.
7. In August of 2016, Judge Kiesnowski and Ms. Korbe met with then-Chief Judge Patrick Murphy to provide notice of their romantic relationship, as required by Chief Justice Directive 08-06, Attachment F (2013). But Chief Judge Murphy did not require either Judge Kiesnowski's or Ms. Korbe's resignation or transfer to another jurisdiction, as required by CJD 08-06.² Neither did Ms. Korbe or Judge Kiesnowski voluntarily resign or transfer to another jurisdiction as is required by CJD 08-06.
8. On September 1, 2016, Judge Kiesnowski contacted Ben Stough (Ms. Betz's direct supervisor). Because of Judge Kiesnowski's belief that Ms. Betz was gossiping about him, he provided to Mr. Stough a document titled "Restated Terms and Conditions of Emily Betz's Employment as Judge Kiesnowski's Division Clerk."
9. Via the Terms and Conditions document, Judge Kiesnowski sought to alter the terms and conditions of Judicial Assistant 1's employment. In relevant part, the document stated:

² In his 2018 report to SCAO's HR Division, Mr. Stough describes the decision not to require Ms. Korbe's resignation or reassignment as occurring due to assurances made by Judge Kiesnowski and Ms. Korbe: "Based on assurances that their workplace conduct would remain professional, no immediate action was taken." Chief Judge Murphy retired July 15, 2019. Consequently, the Commission has no jurisdiction to address the violations of the Code arising from his failure to enforce CJD 08-06's prohibitions against a judge and employee involved in a relationship working in the same judicial district. Colo. RJD 4(a)(1).

“Restated Terms and Conditions of [Judicial Assistant 1’s]
Employment as Judge Kiesnowski’s Division Clerk:”

Below are, in part, the restated terms and conditions of [Judicial Assistant 1’s] Employment as Judge Kiesnowski’s division clerk. Violation of any of these restated terms and conditions of employment shall, pursuant to the State’s Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

Nothing contained herein shall be construed as an employment contract or any contract right to continued employment.

At all times, [Judicial Assistant 1] shall abide by the following:

(1) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use the State’s internet system for any purpose other than to discharge and perform her functions as division clerk. Under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] use the State’s internet system for personal purposes, whether for herself or any other person, and regardless of whether she is caught up with all of work duties and functions. Under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] “surf” the internet while court is in session and shall not otherwise use the State’s internet system unless expressly authorized and directed to do so by Judge Kiesnowski. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State’s Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(2) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use the State’s electronic mail (“email”) system for any purpose other than to discharge and perform her functions as division clerk. Under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] use email for personal purposes, whether for herself or any other person. [Judicial Assistant 1] understands and agrees that any email she sends or receives is subject to being accessed and audited by administration at any time and without prior notice. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State’s Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(3) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use the State’s instant messaging system (“IM”) for any purpose other than to discharge and perform her functions as division clerk. Under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] use the State’s IM system for personal purposes, whether for herself or any other person. By way of example and not limitation, [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use the State’s IM system to even invite a co-worker to lunch or to respond to any non-business purpose IM that has been sent to her. [Judicial

Assistant 1] understands and agrees that any IM she sends or receives is subject to being accessed and audited by administration at any time and without prior notice. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(4) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not gossip about, or disparage in any way, any judicial officer or courthouse employee by any means or in any manner. By way of example and not limitation, should [Judicial Assistant 1] make, utter, or post any disparaging comment or remark about any judicial officer or courthouse employee while at work or on her personal time on social media, whether explicit or implicit, she shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, be subject to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(5) [Judicial Assistant 1] expressly understands and agrees that the workday begins at 8:00 a.m. and ends at 5:00 p.m. Therefore, [Judicial Assistant 1] shall be at her desk no later than 8:00 a.m. each workday and shall, with the exception of authorized breaks and lunch, not leave work until 5:00 p.m. Leaving work, even five minutes early without Judge Kiesnowski's approval, is unacceptable. Further, [Judicial Assistant 1] expressly understands and agrees that all leave requests shall first be authorized by Judge Kiesnowski and ultimately be approved by Ben Stough or his successor or his designee. Under no circumstances, without the express written approval of Judge Kiesnowski or Ben Stough or his successor or designee, shall [Judicial Assistant 1] submit leave requests to Maya Korbe. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(6) In the event that [Judicial Assistant 1] has completed or is otherwise "caught up" with all of her Division G duties and/or any task assigned to her by any judicial officer and/or supervisory personnel, she may not visit with or observe court in any other division or otherwise "socialize" with courthouse personnel without the express, written approval of Judge Kiesnowski. Any such requests shall first be submitted to Judge Kiesnowski by email for his approval, which request shall be approved or denied by Judge Kiesnowski in his sole and absolute discretion. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(7) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall, at all times, maintain a professional demeanor and treat all judicial officers, including Judge Kiesnowski, and courthouse personnel with courtesy, decency, and respect, and shall, like other courthouse employees, attend to her personal affairs on her own time, not the State's time. Further, under no circumstances without the express approval of Judge Kiesnowski, shall [Judicial Assistant 1] refer to Judge Kiesnowski as "Bob." Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(8) With the exception of authorized breaks and lunch, [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use or monitor her personal cell phone during the workday. In those instances, where [Judicial Assistant 1] is permitted to use and/or monitor her personal cell phone, under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] gossip about, or disparage in any way, any judicial officer or courthouse employee by any means or in any manner. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

10. Ben Stough rejected Judge Kiesnowski's attempt to force Ms. Betz into the above restated contract. Recognizing that Judge Kiezanowski's and Ms. Betz's working relationship was too frayed to continue, Mr. Stough (with Chief Judge Murphy's approval) transferred Ms. Betz to the court's judicial assistant (CJA) pool. Although Ms. Betz maintained her title, pay, duty location, and other working conditions, inclusion in the CJA pool was effectively a demotion from being an assigned division judicial assistant (i.e. it resulted in a loss of status and stability). For example, during Ms. Betz's time in the CJA pool, she was reassigned three times within six months. Ms. Betz claims that she learned that Judge Kiesnowski attempted to influence/encourage other criminal judges to refuse having her in their divisions. Ms. Betz further alleges that Mr. Stough told her that she was ultimately assigned to domestic relations divisions for her own protection.

11. Sometime in late 2016 or early 2017, Ms. Betz applied to work as a judicial assistant for newly appointed District Court Judge Tomee Crespin. Judge Kiesnowski continued to retaliate against Ms. Betz by contacting Judge Crespin and encouraging her not to hire Ms. Betz. According to now former Judge Crespin, Judge Kiesnowski told her not to hire Ms. Betz because she was not loyal, she could not be trusted, and she would talk about the judge she works with.
12. Judge Crespin hired Ms. Betz despite Judge Kiesnowski's communications to her. Judge Crespin confirmed that, while working for her, Ms. Betz did her job competently and professionally. Judge Crespin described Ms. Betz's job performance as "excellent" and "above average." Judge Crespin said that, although Ms. Betz never gossiped to her about Judge Kiesnowski, she recalls Ms. Betz repeatedly stating that Judge Kiesnowski glared at her or otherwise made her feel uncomfortable during encounters on the same floor of the courthouse.
13. Judge Kiesnowski was up for a retention election in 2020. Prior to the election, Judge Kiesnowski discovered social media/Facebook posts encouraging voters not to retain him. The social media posts were presented through a username "Silky Pete" and included the following selected postings:
 - a. "Please forgive me for bringing this up but it is not political, it is what is best for our children. Trust me that Judge Kiesnowski should NOT be retained. He has a long history of lenient sentences on child molesters";
 - b. "Please don't forget. Even Samuel L. Jackson is on board! VOTE JUDGE KIESNOWSKI OUT OF OFFICE";
 - c. "VOTE OUT JUDGE KIESNOWSKI SPREAD THE WORD";

- d. “I need everyone to trust me on this one. He has to go. Let everyone you know in Adams and Broomfield County vote him out. WHAT IF I TOLD YOU TO VOTE JUDGE KIESNOWSKI OUT OF OFFICE”;
 - e. “Be sure to tell your friends in Adams and Broomfield to vote Kiesnowski off the bench this November”; and
 - f. “VOTE OUT JUDGE KIESNOWSKI TELL YOUR FRIENDS.”
14. Without verification, Judge Kiesnowski blamed Ms. Betz for the social media posts and sent several text messages to Judge Crespin, which included Judge Kiesnowski forwarding a Facebook post from his then-serving division clerk. Judge Kiesnowski called Judge Crespin later that same night to accuse Ms. Betz of authoring the Facebook posts and demanding that Judge Crespin take action against Ms. Betz to stop further posts.
15. The investigation of the present case confirmed that the Facebook posts quoted above were authored by an Adams County Sheriff’s Office Deputy without connection to Ms. Betz.
16. The People initiated formal proceedings by filing a Statement of Charges. Through his Answer, Judge Kiesnowski disputed various factual allegations that are beyond the scope of this Stipulation. The parties acknowledge that Judge Kiesnowski’s admissions to both a factual basis and to his violations of the Code are limited to the admissions expressly stated in this Stipulation.

STIPULATED RULE VIOLATIONS

Count 1

Canon Rule 1.1

A Judge Shall Comply with the Law

17. Paragraphs 1-16 are incorporated herein.
18. Canon Rule 1.1 states, in relevant part: “A judge shall comply with the law, including the Code of Judicial Conduct.”
19. Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 1.1 when he engaged in the conduct described herein in violation of Canon Rules 1.2, 2.3, 2.8, 2.12(C), 2.16(B), and 4.2.
20. Judge Kiesnowski further violated Canon Rule 1.1 through his prolonged non-compliance with CJD 08-06, Attachment F (2013), which provided in relevant parts:

Where employees and/or judicial officers are married to each other, living together, or otherwise engaged in a romantic and/or sexual relationship, they shall not hold a position in which:

One party is a justice, judge or magistrate working within the same court or judicial district of the other party who is employed as a classified or contract employee in that court or judicial district.

Count 2

Canon Rule 1.2

A Judge Shall Promote Confidence in the Judiciary

21. Paragraphs 1-16 are incorporated herein.
22. Canon Rule 1.2 states:
- A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

23. Comment 1 to the rule makes clear that it applies “to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge.”
24. A judge’s obligation to act with integrity does not end when he leaves the courthouse. See e.g. Section 2 of Preamble to Rules of Judicial Conduct; Rule 1.2 Comments.
25. The Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (“the Code”) further defines “integrity” as “probity, fairness, honesty, uprightness, and soundness of character.” The Code recognizes “impropriety” to include: “conduct that violates the law, court rules, or provisions of this Code, and conduct that undermines a judge's independence, integrity, or impartiality.
26. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 1.2 because he engaged in conduct that was actually improper and which created the appearance of impropriety.

Count 3
Canon Rule 2.3
Bias, Prejudice, Harassment

27. Paragraphs 1-16 are incorporated herein.
28. Canon Rule 2.3 provides, in relevant parts:

Colorado Supreme Court 2 East 14th Avenue Denver, CO 80203	DATE FILED: October 25, 2023
Original Proceeding in Discipline Commission on Judicial Discipline 23-104
In the Matter of Complainant: The People of the State of Colorado, and Respondent: Robert Kiesnowski, a former judge of the Adams County District Court.	Supreme Court Case No: 2023SA171
ORDER OF COURT

The Court is in receipt of the Recommendation for Judicial Discipline—
Colo. RJD 37(A) filed on October 19, 2023.

The Recommendation includes as an attachment a Stipulation for Private Censure entered into between the Commission on Judicial Discipline and Judge Robert Kiesnowski in an earlier matter, CCJD Case No. 21-121. That Stipulated Private Censure was entered pursuant to Colorado Rule of Judicial Discipline 35(h), which provides that “[a] stipulated private disposition shall remain confidential, subject to Rule 6.5(g).” RJD 6.5(g) permits the Commission or a judge to file a motion asserting that allegations of misconduct “have become generally known to the public” and should be disclosed. The facts surrounding the Stipulated Private Censure are not generally known to the public and no motion has been filed pursuant to the rule, so their disclosure is therefore not authorized by RJD 6.5(g).

The Recommendation notes that RJD 37(c) provides that the “recommendation for sanctions and the record of proceedings shall become public upon the filing of the recommendation with the Supreme Court.” The Recommendation assumes that this provision means that the earlier agreed-to Stipulation of Private Censure will become public because the Special Masters considered that prior disciplinary history in recommending a sanction as permitted by RJD 6.5(f). However, given that RJD 35(h) requires a stipulated private disposition to remain confidential, with no exception for public disclosure other than that provided in RJD 6.5(g), the Stipulation of Private Censure must be redacted from the record of proceedings. Similarly, references to the details of the facts underlying the Stipulation of Private Censure contained in the hearing transcript or any of the exhibits or other materials included in the record of proceedings must be redacted. The fact that RJD 6.5(f) permits “the Commission and special masters [to] consider the record of any discipline previously imposed” does not mean that the confidentiality requirement of RJD 35(h) may be circumvented by attaching the Stipulated Private Censure or references to it to the record of proceedings in this subsequent case.

Additionally, the Recommendation includes, at paragraphs 4 through 7, assertions related to the earlier matter that are neither part of the record in this case nor relevant to any issue the Court must decide in this proceeding. These statements shall be redacted from the Recommendation submitted to the court before the Recommendation and the record of proceedings are made public pursuant to RJD 37(c).

Accordingly, the Recommendation for Judicial Discipline and attached record of proceedings are stricken. The Commission on Judicial Discipline is ordered to submit forthwith a revised Recommendation and a record of proceedings that excludes or redacts the confidential materials and extra-record statements as set forth in this Order.

DECLARATION OF SPECIAL COUNSEL JEFFREY M. WALSH

Comes now Jeffrey M. Walsh to make the following declaration:

1. I am Special Counsel to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline.
2. In my role as Special Counsel, I prosecuted the allegations of ethical misconduct against former Judge Robert Kiesnowski in the above captioned case.

3. I deposed Judge Kiesnowski on August 28, 2023 in relation to this case.

Attorney Craig Truman acted as Judge Kiesnowski's counsel at the deposition and at the formal disciplinary hearing which took place on September 6, 2023.

4. During the deposition, I advised Judge Kiesnowski that I intended to introduce into evidence at his upcoming disciplinary hearing his prior private censure as being relevant to whatever discipline may be imposed in this case. I further advised Judge Kiesnowski that if his prior private censure is admitted into the record, and if there is ultimately a recommendation for public discipline, then his prior private censure would become part of the public record. See [TR (8/28/23), pp. 176.5-177:5] (attached as Exhibit A).

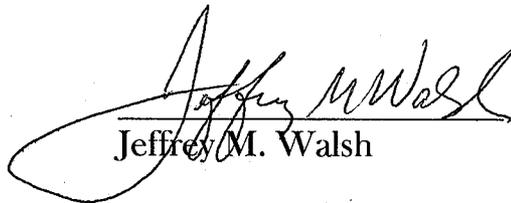

5. At some point after the deposition - I can't remember the exact date - I spoke on the phone to Judge Kiesnowski's counsel, Craig Truman, about this issue. As a professional courtesy, I wanted to advise Mr. Truman of my continued intent to introduce Judge Kiesnowski's prior private censure into the record in this case, which could in turn lead to the private censure becoming part of the public record in the event of a recommendation to the Supreme Court for public discipline. I explained to Mr. Truman that I wanted him to be aware of my intent so that he could request a protective order if he deemed it appropriate. During this phone conversation, I also directed Mr. Truman to Colo. RJD 32 and the part of that rule that requires the special masters to provide a report to the Commission on Judge Kiesnowski's prior disciplinary history. I stated that I believed the disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32 permitted Judge Kiesnowski's prior private censure to be admitted into evidence at the formal disciplinary hearing. After reviewing Colo. RJD 32, Mr. Truman stated that he agreed with my position that the prior private censure would be admissible to the record in this case and that he felt it would be futile to file a request for a protective order.

6. At the formal disciplinary hearing in this matter, I introduced into evidence Judge Kiesnowski's prior private censure as Exhibit 17. Neither Mr. Truman nor Judge Kiesnowski objected to the admission of Exhibit 17, so the special masters admitted the exhibit into the evidentiary record.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the law of Colorado that the foregoing is true and correct.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER THIS COURT'S ORDER TO REDACT FROM THE RECORD ALL INFORMATION RELATED TO FORMER JUDGE KIESNOWSKI'S PRIOR DISCIPLINARY HISTORY

Introduction

This Court issued its October 25, 2023 “Order of Court” (a) striking the Commission’s Recommendation for Judicial Discipline and the Record of Proceedings and (b) ordering the Commission to refile after redacting all information related to Judge Kiesnowski’s prior history of judicial misconduct. This Court reasoned that redaction was required because Judge Kiesnowski’s prior disciplinary matter resulted in a private censure per Rule 35(h) of the Colorado’s Rules of Judicial Discipline (“Colo. RJD”), which requires that private censures “shall remain confidential” unless the matter is “generally known” to the public (i.e., an exception not present here).

The Commission respectfully requests reconsideration because the Order of the Court is inconsistent with Colo. RJD 32 and 33 and the Colorado Constitution. Rule 32 requires the Special Masters to provide a report of any prior disciplinary action by the Commission against Judge Kiesnowski, without distinguishing between public or private discipline. The Special Masters performed their required function. In turn, Rule 33 requires the Commission to include the Special Masters’ report as part of the formal record of proceedings, which also occurred here. The record became public upon filing with this Court pursuant to the Colorado Constitution and Colo. RJD 6.5(a) and 37(c). Put simply, the Special Masters and the Commission had no choice but to include Judge Kiesnowski's disciplinary history in their analysis and as part of the public record.

The confidentiality requirements of Colo. RJD 35(h) do not conflict with the disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32. The two rules exist in harmony such that a private censure shall remain confidential per Rule 35(h) as long as the misconduct in that case is the only matter at issue. If, however, the judge commits a new ethical breach serious enough to warrant the filing of a public discipline recommendation under Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(g) and Colo. RJD 37(c), the prior disciplinary matter ceases to be confidential as it becomes a necessary and inextricable part of the new case per the disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32.

For the reasons discussed below, the Commission respectfully asks this Court to reconsider its Order of October 25, 2023.

Argument

- I. The filing of Judge Kiesnowski's prior disciplinary history, which was considered by the Special Masters and admitted into evidence at the disciplinary hearing, is required by Colo. RJD 32 and 33.

Colo. RJD 32 states, in relevant part:

At the conclusion of the hearing in formal proceedings, the special masters shall issue and file with the executive director a report which shall include written findings of fact regarding the evidence in support of and in defense to the allegations in the complaint, a report of any prior disciplinary action by the Commission against the Judge, and its recommendations to the Commission . . . The executive director shall certify the special masters' report as part of the record of proceedings to be filed with the Supreme Court in accordance with Rule 37. (Emphasis added).

Here, the Special Masters complied with Rule 32. Judge Kiesnowski's prior stipulation for private censure was admitted as evidence without objection by Judge Kiesnowski at the formal disciplinary proceeding. [Tr. (9/6/23), p. 119:4-16; Exhibit 17]. The Special Masters used that evidence to provide the required report¹ of Judge Kiesnowski's prior private discipline in their final Report of the Special Masters. [R., pp. 73, 82-85].

Colo. RJD 33, for its part, provides:

The record of proceedings shall consist of the report of the special masters together with pleadings, motions, verbatim electronic or written transcripts of proceedings, affidavits, exhibits, findings of fact and conclusions of law, legal briefs, and any other documentation designated by the Commission for the Supreme Court's consideration. (Emphasis added).

The Commission followed the requirements of Rule 33 by filing a record of proceedings that includes the various documents listed in the Rule, including a copy of the Special Masters' Report, which discusses Judge Kiesnowski's prior disciplinary history and which includes Judge Kiesnowski's previous stipulation for private censure (Exhibit 17).

II. Per Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(g) and Colo. RJD 6.5(a) and 37(c), the record of proceedings - which must contain the Special Masters' Report on Judge Kiesnowski's prior discipline -- became public upon its filing with the Colorado Supreme Court.

A. Colorado's Constitution and the Rules of Judicial Discipline require public disclosure of the record here.

Under the Colorado Constitution, the records of judicial disciplinary proceedings are confidential until the filing of the Commission's recommendation with this Court. See Colo. Const. Art. VI, §23(3)(g) ("Prior to the filing of a recommendation to the supreme court by the commission against any justice or judge, all papers filed with and proceedings before the commission on judicial discipline or masters appointed by the supreme court, pursuant to this subsection (3), shall be confidential[.]") (Emphasis added). Likewise, Rules 6.5(a) and 37(c) recognize that the entire record of proceedings, along with the Commission's recommendation for discipline, become public upon filing with this Court. Rule 6.5(a) reads in relevant part as follows:

The proceedings of the Commission and special masters, including all papers, investigative notes and reports, pleadings, and other written or electronic records, shall be confidential unless and until the Commission files a recommendation with the Supreme Court under Rule 37. The recommendation and the record of proceedings shall thereupon become public, subject to the limitations provided in Rule 37. (Emphasis added).

Rule 37(c) states in relevant part that “[t]he Commission's recommendation for sanctions and the record of proceedings shall become public upon filing the recommendation with the Supreme Court.”

Here, Judge Kiesnowski’s prior disciplinary action, while previously private, became a part of the record in his disciplinary proceedings without any objection from him. Since it was part of the record, it necessarily became public when the recommendation and record were filed. Rule 37 provides no relevant exception here. Specifically, Rule 37 does not require that a private censure subsequently made part of the record of a formal disciplinary proceeding remain confidential.²

B. Judge Kiesnowski’s prior discipline is a necessary factor to consider when determining the appropriate discipline and therefore cannot be removed from the record of proceedings.

Notwithstanding any other confidentiality protections under the Rules, Colo. RJD 6.5(f) authorizes the Special Masters to consider “[t]he record of any discipline previously imposed on the Judge by the Commission or the Supreme Court” in ² It should also be noted that Colo. RJD 6.5(d) provides a separate and independent basis for the Commission to make public a judge’s prior, private disciplinary history when it is necessary “in the interest of justice” or to “fulfill the Commission’s constitutional mandate.” The Commission’s constitutional mandate, per Colo. RJD 1(b) is to “maintain public confidence in the judiciary” and to “preserve the integrity of the judicial process.” The Commission’s position is that, in this case, Judge Kiesnowski’s disciplinary history must be part of the public record in order to perform and protect its constitutional mandate.

“investigating a complaint, determining a disposition under Rule 35, or in recommending a sanction under Rule 36[.]” (Emphasis added). This rule does not distinguish between public or private discipline. Here, the Special Masters expressly and properly considered the nationally recognized list of factors in Matter of Deming, 736 P.2d 639, 659 (Wash. 1987), which includes a judge’s disciplinary history, in determining the appropriate discipline for Judge Kiesnowski.³ They noted that Judge Kiesnowski’s prior private discipline was relevant to his second disciplinary case because it showed a persistent abuse of the prestige and power of judicial office. [R., pp. 83-85] (Special Masters Report applying Deming factors). Thus, the Special Masters’ detailed report on Judge Kiesnowski’s prior private discipline based on the Deming factors was consistent with Rule 6.5(f) and the disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32. Similarly, the Commission performed its required function by considering the Special Masters’ Report and Judge Kiesnowski’s disciplinary history when making its recommendation under Colo. RJD 37(c).

³ Deming requires consideration of “whether there have been prior complaints about [the subject] judge.” Id. The following is a non-exhaustive sampling of cases that have adopted the Deming factors to evaluate the appropriateness of sanctions in judicial discipline cases: Mississippi Comm’n on Jud. Performance v. Skinner, 119 So. 3d 294, 306 (Miss. 2013); In re Sharp, 480 S.W.3d 829, 839 (Tex. Spec. Ct. Rev. 2013); Arkansas Judicial Discipline and Disability Comm’n v. Proctor, 360 S.W.3d 61, 95-96 (2010); In re Coffee’s Case, 159 N.H. 156, 172 (2008); In re Singletary, 967 A.2d 1094, 1102 (Pa. Ct. Jud. Disc. 2008); In re Disciplinary Action Against McGuire, 2004 N.D. 71, ¶¶ 33-34; In re Moore, 464 Mich. 98, 118 (2001); In re Jett, 180 Ariz. 103, 108 (1994); In re Chaisson, 549 So.2d 259, 266 (La. 1989).

Other courts have reached the same conclusion that a judge's prior private discipline becomes public when he or she commits a new ethical violation that justifies public discipline. See In re Cerbone, 812 N.E.2d 932 (N.Y. 2004) (examining details of 5 prior otherwise confidential informal disciplinary responses as basis for disciplinary commission's recommendation for public discipline and removal); In re Canaday, 2023 WL 6937262, 4, 2023-00735, 6-7 (La. 10/1/23) (applying Deming factors with consideration of prior private disciplinary history).

Our own precedent also establishes the relevance and making public of prior disciplinary history, even when the prior discipline was private. Earlier this year, the Commission and former Judge Lance Timbreza entered into a stipulation for public censure, which contained, as part of the record, disclosure of Judge Timbreza's previously private discipline. People v. Timbreza, 2023 CO ¶ 9. This Court disqualified itself from that case, and per Colo. RJD 41(b), it appointed a special tribunal of seven judges from the Court of Appeals. Timbreza, ¶ 1. In that case, neither Judge Timbreza nor any of the seven appointed Court of Appeals judges objected to Judge Timbreza's prior private discipline being part of the record, being a relevant factor in the disciplinary decision, or necessarily being made public upon filing of the Commission's Recommendation and the underlying stipulations/record of proceedings.

Here, the Special Masters performed a permitted function by considering Judge Kiesnowski's prior disciplinary history. As discussed above, Rule 32 required the Special Masters to include a report of the Judge's prior discipline in their final report. By operation of law, the record became public upon filing. For this Court to order the Commission to excise from the record all references to Judge Kiesnowski's prior discipline - that is, to erase a critical piece of information considered by the Special Masters - would result in this Court receiving an incomplete and inaccurate record of the formal disciplinary proceeding. This is inconsistent with the Rules of Judicial Discipline and well-settled precedent (both in Colorado and nationally).

III. Colo. RJD 35(h) does not support this Court's redaction order.

Rule 35(h) does not support the redaction ordered by this Court. The Rules of Judicial Discipline must be construed in accordance with the rules of statutory interpretation. See People v. G.S., 2018 CO 31, ¶ 32 (holding that the standard principles of statutory construction apply to the interpretation of court rules). Ultimately, the Rules must be construed so that they are consistent with their related overall constitutional and statutory context. See, e.g., Campaign Integrity Watchdog LLC v. Colorado Republican Party Indep. Expenditure Comm., 2017 COA 32, ¶ 10. "When the statutory language is clear, the Supreme Court applies the plain and ordinary meaning of the provision[s] and gives consistent, harmonious, and sensible effect to each part of the statute.” People v. Moore, 2021 CO 26, ¶ 25 (emphasis added).

The disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32 and the confidentiality requirement of Rule 35(h) exist in harmony. Per Rule 35(h), a private disposition shall remain confidential if the underlying ethical breach is the only matter at issue. But if the judge commits a subsequent breach of the ethical rules, the fact of the prior discipline then becomes a necessary and inextricable part of the new case, per the disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32. Thus, the prior discipline can no longer be confidential by virtue of the new ethical breach and the Commission’s filing of a recommendation with this Court. Were this Court to hold otherwise would be to render the disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32 illogical and meaningless. See Educhildren LLC v. Cnty. of Douglas Bd. of Equalization, 2023 CO 29, ¶ 27 (we must “avoid constructions that would yield illogical or absurd results”).⁴

IV. Nothing in Colo. RJD 6.5 permits this Court, without good cause, to order redaction of portions of the public record of proceedings, including the Special Masters’ Report.

The Rules of Judicial Discipline do not anywhere permit the redaction of a judge’s prior disciplinary history, thereby preventing this Court from performing its obligations to consider it pursuant to the disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32. The closest the Rules come to authorizing the suppression of information in the record is via a protective order for confidential material pursuant to Rule 6.5(a). Yet the requirements for a protective order cannot be met here.

⁴ Notably, all of the circumstances and exceptions described in Colo. RJD 6.5(g) relate to judicial disciplinary proceedings occurring prior to or without the filing of the Commission’s public recommendation and record of proceedings according to Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(g).

Colo. RJD 6.5(a) states, in relevant part:

The Supreme Court may enter a protective order requiring that certain portions of the record remain confidential upon a showing of good cause by the Commission, special counsel, special masters, or the Judge.

Thus, Rule 6.5(a) requires two things before this Court could enter a protective order. First, Judge Kiesnowski must request one, which he has not. Second, the judge must show “good cause” which he cannot do.

As a threshold matter, Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(g) and the Rules - namely, Colo. RJD 6.5(a), 32, 33, and 37(c) read together - dictate that Judge Kiesnowski’s prior discipline must be made public, as discussed above. Thus, the Colorado Constitution and the Rules themselves undermine any purported claim of “good cause” here.

Moreover, sound public policy also undermines any purported claim of “good cause” for three reasons. First, as the final arbiter of any judicial discipline case, this Court must have access to and consider a complete record, including a judge’s prior disciplinary history, before deciding upon the appropriate outcome of a case.⁵ This is precisely why Rule 32 dictates that the special masters report shall contain a report on the offending judge’s disciplinary history. To excise a judge’s disciplinary history would be directly analogous to a judge in a criminal matter refusing to permit the prosecutor to introduce at sentencing any evidence of the defendant’s prior criminal history, even though the law mandates that the judge consider, via the presentence report, a defendant’s criminal history as part of the sentencing decision. See § 16-11-102, C.R.S. (requiring a report on the defendant’s prior criminal history).

Second, when a judge’s misbehavior is serious enough to warrant public discipline, the public – to whom the judiciary is ultimately answerable – should be told why. Not just a partial explanation based on the present case, but a full explanation of all factors that influenced the disciplinary decision, including the judge’s disciplinary history. Judicial discipline, importantly, is not just about correcting, punishing, and/or removing misbehaving judges. It is also about “maintaining public confidence in the judiciary,” without which the judiciary is ultimately powerless. See Colo. RJD 1(b) (the Commission’s constitutional mandate is to “maintain public confidence in the judiciary”). Public confidence in the judiciary cannot be maintained if, when a judge’s misbehavior is serious enough to warrant public discipline, vital information about the judge's misbehavior and his or her history of misbehavior are not known. See Bridges v. California, 314 U.S. 252, 270-271 (1941) (“The assumption that respect for the judiciary can be won by shielding judges from published criticism wrongly appraises the character of American public opinion. . . . [A]n enforced silence, however limited, solely in the name of preserving the dignity of the bench, would probably engender resentment, suspicion, and contempt much more than it would enhance respect.”).

Third, the release of previously confidential disciplinary matters when a judge commits subsequent ethical violations serious enough to warrant public discipline achieves the important goal of deterrence. If private discipline always remains confidential, save for the unusual circumstance of public knowledge contemplated by Rule 6.5(g), the final arbiter of discipline (i.e., this Court) cannot perform its duty to consider the judge's disciplinary history in deciding the case. Suppressing a subject judge's prior disciplinary history only creates expectations that no matter how serious a future ethical breach may be, the judge's prior misconduct (if only privately disciplined) will not be considered in the ultimate sanction imposed. This will undermine the Commission's and this Court's abilities to apply appropriate discipline (whether private or public).⁶

⁶ It should be noted the public policy justifications that support confidentiality in the adjudicatory phase of a disciplinary case can no longer be relied upon here as “good cause”

V. Judge Kiesnowski waived his right to confidentiality (1) by choosing not to object to the admission of his disciplinary history into the record here, and (2) by committing new ethical breaches serious enough to warrant public discipline.

A. Judge Kiesnowski waived confidentiality by choosing not to object to his disciplinary history being admitted into evidence.

Waiver “is the intentional relinquishment of a known right or privilege.” People v. Rediger, 2018 CO 32, ¶ 32. Here, Judge Kiesnowski’s prior private censure was admitted into evidence at the formal disciplinary hearing without his objection. As noted in Special Counsel Jeff Walsh’s accompanying declaration, during the deposition of Judge Kiesnowski in this matter, Special Counsel, as a professional courtesy, disclosed to the Judge and his counsel that Special Counsel intended to introduce into evidence at the disciplinary hearing a copy of Judge Kiesnowski’s prior private censure pursuant to Rule 32. Special Counsel advised Judge Kiesnowski and his counsel that, if the private censure were admitted into evidence at the hearing, the formerly private censure would become part of the public record if the hearing resulted in a recommendation for public discipline. A few days after the hearing, Special Counsel again conferred with Judge Kiesnowski’s counsel about this issue and to maintain confidentiality because the adjudication of this case is complete, the Special Masters have issued their report, and the Commission has filed its recommendation with this Court. See Landmark Commc’ns, Inc. v. Virginia, 435 U.S. 829, 835, 842-846 (invalidating on First Amendment grounds criminalization of the unauthorized third-party release of confidential/non-public judicial disciplinary information; applying a balancing test through inventory of public policy considerations that favor interests in public disclosure over a judge’s right to confidentiality).

specifically advised opposing counsel about the judge's right to file a protective order if he deemed it appropriate. After reviewing the disciplinary history mandate of Rule 32, opposing counsel agreed that Rule 32 permitted the admission of the prior private censure into the record and stated that he felt that filing a request for a protective order would be futile.

B. Judge Kiesnowski waived confidentiality by committing new ethical breaches serious enough to warrant a formal disciplinary hearing in this matter, the record of which must contain a report on the Judge's prior disciplinary history.

The Rules of Judicial Discipline - read in their entirety, construed harmoniously with each of their separate parts, and given sensible effect - are clear. If a subject judge commits new ethical violations serious enough to warrant a formal disciplinary proceeding that results in the filing of a recommendation for public sanctions and a record of proceedings, the subject judge loses the benefit of any agreement for confidentiality which previously attached to his or her prior informal discipline. It is important to recognize that the confidentiality recognized through Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(g) and applied through the Rules of Judicial Discipline depends exclusively upon whether or not a judicial disciplinary proceeding results in the public filing of a recommendation or stipulated recommendation under Rule 37. A previously private informal disposition necessarily becomes public when it becomes material to the subject judge's subsequent violation(s) of the Code, which, in turn, result in the filing of a public recommendation for discipline according to Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(g), Colo. RJD 6.5(a), 32, and 37(c),(e).

Conclusion

The Commission respectfully requests that this Court: (1) vacate its Order, (2) accept the Commission's previous filings as public records under Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(g), (3) provide deadlines for Judge Kiesnowski to file exceptions under Colo. RJD 38, and (4) issue a disciplinary opinion in this case, as required by Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(f) and Colo. RJD 40.

Colorado Supreme Court 2 East 14th Avenue Denver, CO 80203	DATE FILED: November 21, 2023
Original Proceeding in Discipline Commission on Judicial Discipline 23-104
In the Matter of Complainant: The People of the State of Colorado, and Respondent: Robert Kiesnowski, a former judge of the Adams County District Court.	Supreme Court Case No: 2023SA171
ORDER OF COURT

The Commission on Judicial Discipline filed a Recommendation for Judicial Discipline in this matter on October 19, 2023. On review of the Recommendation and accompanying materials, the Court concluded that certain information should have been excluded or redacted from the filing to comply with the Rules of Judicial Discipline. Accordingly, on October 25, 2023, the court issued an order striking the Recommendation and accompanying materials and directing the Commission to submit forthwith a revised Recommendation that omitted confidential information from the record of proceedings and certain irrelevant and unproven allegations from the Recommendation.

On November 11, 2023, the Commission filed a Motion to Reconsider this Court's Order to Redact from the Record All Information Related to Former Judge

Kiesnowski's Prior Disciplinary History. The Motion for Reconsideration argues that the Rules of Judicial Discipline permit disclosure of the details of Judge Kiesnowski's previous stipulated private censure. It separately notes that Judge Kiesnowski waived his right to confidentiality as to his earlier Stipulated Private Censure when he did not object to including it in the record of proceedings in this matter. The Court need not resolve any dispute regarding interpretation of the Rules of Judicial Discipline, as Judge Kiesnowski has not disputed the issue of waiver. Based on Judge Kiesnowski's waiver, the Court allows the Commission to include the Stipulation of Private Censure in the record of proceedings along with references to the facts underlying that Stipulation. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the Motion to Reconsider IN PART.

As to the irrelevant and unproven assertions made in paragraphs 4 through 7 (pages 3-4) of the Commission's October 19 Recommendation for Judicial Discipline, 2023, the Motion for Reconsideration offered no argument or basis for reconsideration. The Court's Order dated October 25 therefore stands with respect to those assertions.

Accordingly, the Commission on Judicial Discipline is ORDERED to submit forthwith a revised Recommendation that omits the assertions in paragraphs 4 through 7. When the revised Recommendation and the record of proceedings are submitted consistent with this Order, the Court shall make them public pursuant to RJD 37(c).

Pursuant to R.J.D. 38, Judge Kiesnowski may file any exceptions to the Recommendation within 21 days after service of notice of its filing.

BY THE COURT, EN BANC, NOVEMBER 21, 2023
CHIEF JUSTICE BOATRIGHT DOES NOT PARTICIPATE

recommends that this Court publicly censure Respondent Robert W. Kiesnowski and enter a judgment for costs in the amount of $4,966.95 according to Colo. RJD 36(e),(g).¹ The Commission submits its Recommendation according to Colo. RJD 37(a). Exceptions to this Recommendation may be filed according to Colo. RJD 38.

As grounds for its Recommendation, the Commission adopts the findings of fact and conclusions of law included in the Report of the Special Masters, issued September 22, 2023, and the Special Master's Award of Costs, issued October 3, 2023. Both of the Special Masters' orders are included in the Record of Proceedings. The Special Masters' factual findings, as adopted by the Commission, are subject to review for clear error and verification of support through substantial evidence in the record. Matter of Booras, 2019 CO 16, ¶ 18.

This judicial disciplinary proceeding follows former Adams County District Court Judge Kiesnowski having been privately censured with an agreement to retire from office in CCJD Case No. 21-121. Judge Kiesnowski's Stipulation for Private Censure, filed with the Commission on March 14, 2023, is included in the Record of Proceedings in the present case as Exhibit 17 (admitted during the Formal Disciplinary Hearing held on September 6, 2023).

STATEMENT OF CHARGES

This Statement of Charges is filed pursuant to Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (Colo. RJD) 4, 16(b)(4), and 18 and it is alleged as follows:

I. Background and Jurisdiction

1. Robert W. Kiesnowski (“Respondent”) was appointed as a Judge of the Adams County District Court in 2011.

2. Respondent is subject to the jurisdiction of the Colorado Supreme Court and the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission” or “CCJD”) in these judicial discipline proceedings.
3. The Commission has determined that probable cause exists to commence formal proceedings under Colo. RJD 16(b)(4).

II. Factual Allegations

4. On June 1, 2023, Judge Kiesnowski’s brother-in-law was in the hospital recovering from stab wounds he received during a conflict with his girlfriend a few days prior. On this same date, an investigator with the 13th Judicial District Attorney’s Office (“the investigator”) requested to interview the brother-in-law. This interview request was made through Judge Kiesnowski’s wife, who indicated that her brother was too tired at the time to participate in an interview. Later that same day, Judge Kiesnowski called the investigator and disclosed that he is a 17th Judicial District Court Judge. He then disclosed to the investigator that he had spoken to his brother-in-law about the incident under investigation. Judge Kiesnowski relayed to the investigator detailed facts about what the brother-in-law reported remembering from the incident.
5. The next day, on June 2, 2023, Judge Kiesnowski’s brother-in-law was still in the hospital, and the investigator came to again request to interview him. However, the brother-in-law did not want to consent to an interview without first seeking advice from Judge Kiesnowski. Therefore, the investigator and the brother-in-law called Judge Kiesnowski. During this call, Judge Kiesnowski indicated he wanted to be present for the interview and stated that he could be at the hospital in approximately 40 minutes.

6. Judge Kiesnowski soon arrived at the hospital. He consulted privately with his brother-in-law, after which the brother-in-law consented to a formal interview, which was video and audio recorded. Before the interrogation began, however, Judge Kiesnowski told the investigator that he would be acting as his brother-in-law's counsel during the interrogation and that his brother-in-law needed to "wait for me to tell him to answer" after each question.
7. After the interrogation began, Judge Kiesnowski disparaged the credibility of the alleged victim. He said, "Historically, she's a total disaster. Jesus. Okay. Okay. And we're going to give you a list of employees who can corroborate her behavior." He went on to say, "[My brother-in-law] is a hard-working guy, okay. And so she's savvy, she knows if, for example, she is labelled a crime victim, she gets to stay [in the country]."¹ Later, he said things, such as:
 - a) "I've seen it. Yeah, [the alleged victim] sent me a video. I saw her with her phone hit [the brother-in-law] in the face."
 - b) "She has made statements that she will self-inflict injury, and say that he did it."
 - c) "She repeatedly accuses [him] of having multiple affairs." The was said to corroborate the brother-in-law's claim that the alleged victim was "bananas."
 - d) Judge Kiesnowski at one point re-characterized his brother-in-law's statements and said, "You feel you're being set up by her."
8. Throughout the interrogation, Judge Kiesnowski actively counseled his brother-in-law. At one point, he told his brother-in-law to "get back to what he remembers." At another point, he told his brother-in-law, “You’re answer is you do not recall . . . Don’t answer the question.” Later, when the investigator confronted the brother-in-law with the alleged victim’s claims of assault and strangulation, Judge Kiesnowski stopped the interview to consult with his brother-in-law privately. After this consultation, Judge Kiesnowski directed his brother-in-law not to answer any more questions and ended the interrogation.

9. After the interrogation, the investigator asked Judge Kiesnowski’s brother-in-law to sign a medical release so that law enforcement could access the brother-in-law’s medical records related to his injuries. Judge Kiesnowski then signed the release for his brother-in-law on the line labeled “Signature of Authorized Personal Representative.” He also stated that he was signing the release in his “official” capacity as counsel for his brother-in-law and noted his bar registration number on the release.

III. Charges

Charge 1

Canon Rule 1.1

A Judge Shall Comply with the Law

10. Paragraphs 1-9 are incorporated herein.
11. Canon Rule 1.1 states, in relevant part: “A judge shall comply with the law, including the Code of Judicial Conduct.”
12. Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 1.1 when he engaged in the conduct described below in violation of Canon Rules 1.2, 1.3, and 3.10.

Charge 2

Canon Rule 1.2

A Judge Shall Promote Confidence in the Judiciary

13. Paragraphs 1-9 are incorporated herein.

14. Canon Rule 1.2 states:

A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

15. The Code recognizes “impropriety” to include: “conduct that violates the law, court rules, or provisions of this Code.” See Canon Rule 1.2, Comment 5.

16. Through his conduct as described above, Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 1.2 by violating Canon Rule 1.3 and 3.10 (described below) and thereby engaging in actual impropriety.

Count 3
Canon Rule 1.3
Abuse of the Prestige of Judicial Office

17. Paragraphs 1-9 are incorporated herein.

18. Canon Rule 1.3 says, in relevant part:

A judge shall not abuse the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal or economic interests of the judge or others.

19. “A judge who, without being subpoenaed, testifies as a character witness abuses the prestige of judicial office to advance the interests of another.” See Canon Rule 3.3, Comment 1 (prohibiting judges from testifying as a character witness and indicating that to do so violates Rule 1.3).

20. During the interrogation, Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 1.3 by identifying himself to the investigator as a judge and then vouching for the credibility of his brother-in-law while also disparaging the credibility of the alleged victim.

Count 4
Canon Rule 3.10
Practice of Law

21. Paragraphs 1-9 are incorporated herein.
22. Canon Rule 3.10 says, in relevant part:

A judge shall not practice law except as permitted by law or this Code. . . .The judge may, without compensation, give legal advice to and draft or review documents for a member of the judge's family, but is prohibited from serving as the family member's lawyer in any forum.

23. Here, Judge Kiesnowski did more than simply give free legal advice to a member of his family. Instead, he actively engaged in a criminal interrogation and conducted himself as his brother-in-law's attorney when he directed the brother-in-law on how to answer questions and whether to answer questions. He explicitly told the investigator he was acting as counsel, and he signed a medical release for his brother-in-law as his counsel. By doing so, Judge Kiesnowski improperly engaged in the practice of law and thereby violated Canon Rule 3.10.

WHEREFORE, Complainant requests that the Commission recommend that, for his misconduct, appropriate disciplinary sanctions be imposed upon Judge Kiesnowski by the Colorado Supreme Court under Colo. RJD 36; that the Commission assess costs, attorney's fees and expenses of this proceeding against Respondent pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(g), and that the Commission recommend any such other relief as it deems appropriate pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(h).

ANSWER TO THE STATEMENT OF CHARGES FILED JUNE 30, 2023

Robert W. Kiesnowski, A Former Judge of the Adams County District Court, files this answer to the Statement of Charges as follows:

I. BACKGROUND AND JURISDICTION

1. Robert W. Kiesnowski, the Respondent, admits that he was appointed as a District Judge of the Adams County District Court in 2011. Respondent Kiesnowski retired effective on June 12, 2023.

2. Respondent Kiesnowski admits he is subject to the Colorado Supreme Court and the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline jurisdictions.

3. Respondent Kiesnowski is without sufficient information and belief regarding the finding of probable cause.

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

4. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that he met with the Chief Investigator from the 13th Judicial District Attorney's Office on June 1, 2023. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that meeting involved the district attorney's chief investigator's request to interview Respondent Kiesnowski's brother-in-law. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that he telephoned the chief investigator and disclosed that he was presently a District Court Judge in the 17th Judicial District. Respondent Kiesnowski made this disclosure in an effort to be fully transparent. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that in the discussion with the chief investigator, he revealed that he had spoken to his brother-in-law about the on-going investigation and conveyed factual information.

5. On June 2, 2023, the brother-in-law remained in the hospital and was visited by the chief investigator unannounced. The brother-in-law sought advice from Respondent Kiesnowski before submitting to an interrogation. Respondent Kiesnowski requested to be present at any interview and agreed to meet with the chief investigator shortly thereafter to participate in the criminal interrogation.

6. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that he arrived at the hospital and consulted privately with his brother-in-law. After the consultation, the brother-in-law consented to a formal interview. Respondent Kiesnowski had researched Canon Rule 3.10 and determined that he was authorized to provide legal advice to his brother-in-law as a member of his family. Respondent Kiesnowski after brief review of Canon Rule 3.10 researched both Blacks Law and Heritage dictionary to determine whether the advice was prohibited because of serving as his brother-in-law's lawyer in any "forum". Respondent Kiesnowski, based on the short research, determined that an interview with the police was not representation in any "forum". Respondent Kiesnowski even told the chief investigator of his research and decision in another effort of transparency. After determining to go forward, Respondent Kiesnowski admits he told the chief investigator that he would be acting as his brother-in-law's counsel during the police interrogation and then requested his brother-in-law to wait for instructions after each police question.

7. Respondent Kiesnowski admits paragraph 7.

8. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that he provided advice to his brother-in-law's responses to the police interrogation.

9. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that he signed the medical release in the manner set forth in paragraph 9.

III. CHARGES

Charge 1

Canon Rule 1.1

A Judge Shall Comply with the Law

TRIAL BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT ROBERT W. KIESNOWSKI, A FORMER JUDGE OF THE ADAMS COUNTY DISTRICT COURT

This is a case that involves very little factual dispute. Respondent Kiesnowski in the last month of his judicial tenure, was placed in an untenable situation. His brother-in-law, Jesse Lee Vaughn, was involved in a domestic violence situation on Thursday, June 1, 2023. Mr. Vaughn was stabbed in the upper thigh and lower leg. Mr. Vaughn was then taken to the local Fort Morgan hospital and then emergently to Saint Anthony's Hospital in Lakewood, Colorado, a class 1 trauma center.

What unfolded was a dilemma for Former Judge Kiesnowski. His testimony will show how he tried to determine the best way to advise his brother-in-law within the confines of Canon 3.10. Former Judge Kiesnowski will explain how he tried to facilitate cooperating with law enforcement by providing a statement while advising his brother-in-law Vaughn about very serious criminal charges. Former Judge Kiesnowski will testify about he tried to determine the definitions of "forum" and "testimony" as applied to the Canons of Judicial Conduct.

Former Judge Kiesnowski's dilemma is of first impression in Colorado. Former Judge Kiesnowski struggled as he tried to make the best possible decision without violating the Canons. It is the Respondent's position that Former Judge Kiesnowski did not violate the Canons of Judicial Conduct.

Respondent requests that the Special Masters find that Former Judge Kiesnowski did not violate:

THE PEOPLES' PRE-HEARING BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF REQUEST FOR PUBLIC DISCIPLINE

INTRODUCTION

This case is about the persistent abuse of the status of judicial office. Judge Robert Kiesnowski was privately disciplined in March of 2023 for years of harassment, intimidation and retaliation against a judicial assistant because he believed she had gossiped about his extramarital affair with another judicial department employee who was his subordinate. See Exhibit A. A condition of Judge Kiesnowski's private censure was that he resign as a judge, effectively July 1, 2023. Yet despite being disciplined in March for abusing his status as a judge, Kiesnowski - while still a judge - again abused his status as a judge just three months later when his brother-in-law was facing felony assault charges. Kiesnowski intervened (a) to act as his brother-in-law's counsel during an interrogation, and (b) to lobby the DA's investigator not to file charges, claiming repeatedly that the complaining witness is essentially a crazy liar. The misconduct here - i.e. the abuse of the prestige of judicial office - is persistent and serious. Thus, public censure is appropriate and justified.

SUMMARY OF THE FACTS

On June 1, 2023, Judge Kiesnowski's brother-in-law was in the hospital recovering from stab wounds he received during a conflict with his wife a few days prior. On this same date, an investigator with the 13th Judicial District Attorney's Office (i.e. Investigator Jeff Huston) requested to interview the brother-in-law. This interview request was made through Judge Kiesnowski's wife, who indicated that her brother was too tired at the time to participate in an interview. Later that same day, Judge Kiesnowski called Investigator Huston on two separate occasions. During the first phone call, Kiesnowski disclosed that he is a 17th Judicial District Court Judge, and he relayed detailed facts about what his brother-in-law reported remembering from the incident. During the second phone call, he again disclosed his identity as “Judge Kiesnowski” and asked Investigator Huston about getting his brother-in-law’s dog out of the brother-in-law’s house, which was the scene of the crime.

The next day, on June 2, 2023, Judge Kiesnowski’s brother-in-law was still in the hospital, and Investigator Huston came again to request to interview him. However, the brother-in-law did not want to consent to an interview without first seeking advice from Judge Kiesnowski. Therefore, Investigator Huston and the brother-in-law called Judge Kiesnowski. During this call, Judge Kiesnowski indicated he wanted to be present for the interview and stated that he could be at the hospital in approximately 40 minutes.

Before leaving his home to go to the hospital, Judge Kiesnowski reviewed the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct to determine if Rule 3.10 (barring the practice of law) permitted him to represent his brother-in-law. Judge Kiesnowski concluded that the Rule did in fact permit him to act as his brother-in-law’s counsel, so he drove to the hospital to do exactly that.

Judge Kiesnowski soon arrived at the hospital. He consulted privately with his brother-in-law, after which the brother-in-law consented to a formal interview, which was video and audio recorded. As discussed more fully below, Judge Kiesnowski proactively represented his brother-in-law as his counsel during the interrogation. At the end of the interrogation, Judge Kiesnowski signed a medical release for his brother-in-law, noting that he was acting as his brother-in-law’s legal representative, and he provided his Colorado Bar number beside his signature.

ARGUMENT

As a threshold matter, it is important to note that in the arguments below, the People often rely on persuasive authority from other jurisdictions that have interpreted Code provisions which are identical to the Code provision at issue here. This is necessary because the body of judicial discipline cases in any one state, such as Colorado, is typically small. Moreover, it is appropriate, and indeed recommended, because Colorado’s Code of Judicial Conduct mimics the 2007 ABA Model Code of Judicial Conduct. When a statutory scheme is patterned after a model code, judges should draw upon available persuasive authority from other jurisdictions that have interpreted the model code. See e.g. Georg v. Metro Fixtures Contractors, Inc., 178 P.3d 1209, 1212 (Colo. 2008) (“When a Colorado statute is patterned after a model code, we may draw upon available persuasive authority in reaching our decision.”); West v. Roberts, 143 P.3d 1037, 1041 (Colo. 2006) (same); Szaloczi v. John R. Behrmann Revocable Tr., 90 P.3d 835, 838–39 (Colo. 2004) (same).

I. Judge Kiesnowski’s active representation of his brother-in-law in a criminal interrogation violated Rule 3.10’s prohibition against “serving as a family member’s lawyer in any forum.”

Canon Rule 3.10 reads as follows:

A judge shall not practice law except as permitted by law or this Code. A judge may act pro se but should not defend himself or herself when sued in an official capacity. The judge may, without compensation, give legal advice to and draft or review documents for a member of the judge’s family, but is prohibited from serving as the family member’s lawyer in any forum.

Here, Judge Kiesnowski undisputedly acted as his brother-in-law’s attorney. Judge Kiesnowski admitted, during the recorded interrogation, that he was acting as counsel. He also admitted to this fact in his deposition. Moreover, his conduct during the interrogation supports these admissions. For example, Judge Kiesnowski stated that his brother-in-law would need to “wait for me to tell him to answer” after each question. On one occasion, he told his brother-in-law how to answer a question when he said, “You’re answer is you do not recall.” Judge Kiesnowski stopped the interrogation at one point to confer privately with his brother-in-law. He asserted his brother-in-law’s Fourth Amendment rights when he refused to agree to a consensual search of the brother-in-law’s phone, instead insisting that a warrant be obtained. Ultimately, he invoked his brother-in-law’s Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination when he stopped the interrogation when the brother-in-law was confronted with allegations that he had strangled his wife and assaulted her son.

Despite the above, Judge Kiesnowski claims he did not violate Rule 3.10 because his representation of his brother-in-law did not take place in a formal adjudicatory setting, such as a court room. More specifically, Judge Kiesnowski claims that the word “forum” in the prohibition against representing a family member “in any forum” limits the prohibited practice of law only to settings contemplated by the definition of “forum” in Black’s Law Dictionary. Black’s Law Dictionary defines “forum” as follows:

- (1) A public place, especially one devoted to assembly or debate;
- (2) A court or other judicial body; a place of jurisdiction. See Exhibit B.

Judge Kiesnowski argues that, since the hospital room in which the interrogation here took place is not a public place devoted to assembly or debate, or a court or other judicial body, his practice of law in this setting was permitted by Rule 3.10.

But Judge Kiesnowski's arguments fail for the following two reasons:

First, the rules of statutory construction dictate an interpretation of the rule that is plainly opposite from Kiesnowski's interpretation.¹ A court's primary purpose in construing a statute or rule is "to ascertain and give effect to the legislature's intent." Linnebur v. People, 2020 CO 79M, ¶ 9. Courts accept the intent of the drafters of a uniform act, such as the Model Code of Judicial Conduct, as the legislature's intent when it adopts that uniform act. Giguere v. SJS Family Enterprises, Ltd., 155 P.3d 462 (Colo. App. 2006). To ascertain the legislature's intent, "we look first to the language of the statute, giving its words and phrases their plain and ordinary meanings." Id. "If the plain language of the statute demonstrates a clear legislative intent, we look no further in conducting our analysis." Id. If, and only if, "the language is ambiguous - that is, if it is reasonably susceptible of multiple interpretations - then we may consider other aids to statutory construction. Id.

Here, the language of the rule, read as a whole, yields only one reasonable interpretation, which is this. Rule 3.10 prohibits judges from practicing law, unless it is explicitly permitted by law. The most obvious exception permitted by law is the rule that part-time judges may still practice law. C.R. S. 13-6-204(2). Rule 3.10 does, however, permit judges to give free and informal advice to family members, such as by drafting or editing documents in a behind-the-scenes manner.² But the drafters of the rule intentionally limited

¹ People v. G.S., 2018 CO 31, ¶ 32 holds that the standard principles of statutory construction apply to the interpretation of court rules.

² The New York Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics Opinion No. 92-118 (attached as Exhibit C), interpreting the previous version of Rule 3.10, is very similar in language and intent to the current rule. The Committee held that a judge may give "informal, a judge’s permissible advice to informal, private settings by explicitly stating that a judge may never act as a family member’s lawyer “in any forum.” See Rule 3.10 (emphasis added). The operative word here is “any,” not “forum.” In other words, a judge may not act as counsel to a family member in “any” forum, whether that forum is public or private. Thus, the word “any” here essentially turns “forum” into a synonym for the word “setting.”

Any other interpretation – such as Kiesnowski’s – yields an illogical and absurd result. For example, Judge Kiesnowski’s interpretation of Rule 3.10 – i.e. prohibiting the representation of family member’s only in places of public assembly or in a court of jurisdiction – would bar him from acting as a family member’s counsel in a formal “forum,” such as a court. But it would permit him to act as a family member’s counsel in a private arbitration held, for example, in a conference room at a hotel. This exceedingly narrow interpretation of Rule 3.10 is illogical, and it yields the absurd result that a judge may act as a litigator for his family in arbitration but not in court. See Educhildren LLC v. Cnty. of Douglas Bd. of Equalization, 2023 CO 29, ¶ 27 (We must “avoid constructions that would yield illogical or absurd results.”). Judge Kiesnowski’s interpretation also ignores the effect of the word “any” preceding the word “forum.” See Ceja v. Lemire, 154 P.3d 1064, 1066 (Colo. 2007) (“If courts can give effect to the ordinary meaning of words used by the legislature, the statute should be construed as written, giving full effect to the words chosen, as it is presumed that the General Assembly meant what it clearly said.”).³ Here, the only way to give full effect to the word “any” preceding “forum” is to interpret “any forum” to mean that a judge may not act as a lawyer for a family member in any setting, whether public or private.

Given the above, the plain and ordinary language of Rule 3.10 yields just one reasonable interpretation of the rule. There is no ambiguity, so resorting to other levels and rules of statutory interpretation is not necessary or permissible. As such, Judge Kiesnowski’s reliance on the definition of the word “forum” in Black’s Law Dictionary is not permitted.

The second reason Judge Kiesnowski’s interpretation of Rule 3.10 fails is because it flies in the face of persuasive authority that has considered and rejected the exact same argument that Kiesnowski makes here and with respect to the exact same model rule. In Arizona’s Judicial Ethics Advisory Opinion No. 2010-06 (attached as Exhibit D), the Advisory Committee held that a judge could not represent his spouse in negotiations with an insurance company related to an injury the spouse sustained in a car accident. The Committee held that “had the drafters of the canon and [Rule 3.10] intended that ‘forum’ be restricted to a courthouse context, they would have so stated, and the Reporters’ Notes would have had no need to engage in the discussion of ‘informal setting’ and the other matters set out therein. The rule would have been a bright line one.” This opinion is well-reasoned and thorough. It discusses the previous version of Rule 3.10 and how it changed to the current version, and it discusses as well how the primary concern animating Rule 3.10 was that judges who seek to formally act as counsel for a family member might appear to have an unfair advantage by virtue of their judicial status. Given this rationale for the rule, it is not surprising thus that Judge Kiesnowski's conduct here (as discussed more fully below) raises serious concerns about abuse of his judicial status.

In sum, the plain meaning of Rule 3.10 prohibits exactly what happened here. Judge Kiesnowski did not merely offer free, informal legal advice to a family member in a behind-the-scenes manner. Instead, he formally acted as his brother-in-law's legal counsel during a recorded interrogation of the brother-in-law, who was a suspect in a felony assault case. As such, this tribunal should find that clear and convincing evidence exists that Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 3.10.

- II. Judge Kiesnowski abused the prestige of judicial office and thereby violated Canon Rule 1.3 when he tried to influence whether criminal charges were filed against his brother-in-law by speaking to the DA's investigator about the brother-in-law's good character and repeatedly attacking the credibility of the complaining witness.

Canon Rule 1.3 reads as follows:

A judge shall not abuse the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal or economic interests of the judge or others, or allow others to do so.

Comment 1 to the rule provides a concrete example of how a judge may improperly use the prestige of office, i.e. by alluding to his or her judicial status to gain favorable treatment for himself or herself or others in encounters with traffic officers.

Case law from around the country is replete with analogous examples of judges who have been disciplined for improperly using their status to try to influence a legal matter. For example, a judge in Arizona was publicly disciplined for trying to help his niece by calling a psychologist who had been appointed to evaluate the niece's child custody dispute in New York. The judge, while repeatedly referencing his judicial experience, tried to influence the psychologist's custody recommendation. See Exhibit E. A judge in Texas was publicly disciplined for trying to help his electrician in a dispute with a general contractor who owed the electrician money. Though there was not yet litigation between the parties, the judge called the general contractor on behalf of the electrician, identified himself as a judge, and said, "It would be best for him to pay the electrician to avoid the cost associated with going to court." See Exhibit F. Another judge in Texas was publicly disciplined for calling a juvenile detention facility, identifying himself as a judge, and trying to get his friend's daughter, who had been arrested for shoplifting, released early so she need to spend the night incarcerated. In re Sharp, 480 S.W.3d 829 (Tex. 2013). A judge in New Mexico was publicly disciplined when the judge's stepson was arrested for failure to pay child support, and the judge called the presiding judge in the child support action to vouch for his stepson's character. Specifically, the judge said his stepson was not a flight risk and was deserving of a bond reduction. In re Naranjo, 303 P.3d 849 (N.M. 2013). Finally, a judge in Mississippi was publicly disciplined merely for attending a meeting between a bondsman (who was the judge's friend) and the local sheriff at which the bondsman tried to convince the sheriff to lift a suspension on his bonding license. Though the judge said he was simply there for "moral support," he was disciplined because his presence was an overt act designed to advance the private interests of the bondsman. Mississippi Com'n on Judicial Performance v. Thompson, 169 So.3d 857 (Miss. 2015).

Here, Judge Kiesnowski's conduct is closely analogous to the sort of conduct discussed above which has been publicly disciplined around the country because it was deemed to misuse the prestige of judicial office.

First, Judge Kiesnowski made it clear to Investigator Huston that he was a judge. In his first recorded call with Investigator Huston on June 1, 2023, he identified himself as a District Court judge in the 17th Judicial District. In his second recorded call with Investigator Huston later that same day, he said, "This is Judge Kiesnowski," when Investigator Huston answered the phone. In neither of these calls was it relevant for Kiesnowski to identify himself as a judge, which creates a reasonable inference that Kiesnowski wanted Investigator Huston to be aware of his status as a judge.

Second, with Kiesnowski's status as a judge well established, Kiesnowski then tried to advance the personal interests of his brother-in-law throughout the brother-in-law's interrogation. Judge Kiesnowski vouched for the brother-in-law's good character when he said, "He's a hard-working guy." Then Judge Kiesnowski effectively called the alleged victim a liar when he made the following statements:

- "She is savvy and knows if she is labelled a crime victim, she gets to stay [in the country]."⁴
- "She is a total disaster, and we're going to give you a list of people who can corroborate."

⁴ It appears the alleged victim in the case is not in the country legally.

- “[My brother-in-law] has videos. She has hit him and split his lip. He has a video.”
- “I’ve seen it . . . I saw her with her phone hit him in the face.”
- “She repeatedly accuses him of having multiple affairs.”
- “She has made statements that she will self-inflict injury and say that he did it.”
- “Please know how erratic her behavior is.”

Importantly, it is significant here that Judge Kiesnowski made the above comments to Investigator Jeff Huston, who is the lead investigator for the 13th Judicial District Attorney’s Office, which office would be making the decision about whether or not to charge Judge Kiesnowski’s brother-in-law with a crime. Under these circumstances, the evidence is strong that Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 1.3 by abusing the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal interests of his brother-in-law.

Despite the above, Judge Kiesnowski maintains that he did not violate Rule 1.3 because, in making the above statements, he was not “testifying” as a character witness. He makes this argument because Comment 1 to Canon Rule 3.3 (which bars a judge from voluntarily testifying as a character witness) states that “A judge who, without being subpoenaed, testifies as a character witness abuses the prestige of judicial office” in violation of Rule 1.3. Judge Kiesnowski argues that to “testify” as a character witness, a judge must be under oath, and since he was not under oath during his brother-in-law’s interrogation, he did not “testify” as a character witness.

But Judge Kiesnowski’s argument here fails for two reasons.

First, the argument is fundamentally misleading because the People do not need to prove a violation of Rule 3.3 (barring character witness testimony) in order to prove a violation of Rule 1.3 (abuse of the prestige of office). Rule 1.3, on its face, says nothing about a judge testifying as a character witness. And, as the cases discussed above indicate, a judge can easily abuse the prestige of office to advance the interests of another without formally testifying as a character witness.

The Annotation to Rule 3.3 of the Model Code of Judicial Conduct explains the purpose of Comment 1 to the rule. See Exhibit G. Comment 1, upon which Judge Kiesnowski relies, exists only to highlight the rationale for Rule 3.3. The rationale for Rule 3.3 (barring judges from testifying as a character witness) is that, if a judge testifies as a character witness without being subpoenaed, he or she abuses the prestige of judicial office. Thus, a violation of Rule 3.3 (by testifying as a character witness) is just one of many possible ways of violating Rule 1.3 (abusing the prestige of judicial office). It is not the only way, as suggested by Kiesnowski's argument.

Second, even if the People did have to prove that Judge Kiesnowski violated Rule 3.3 (by acting as a character witness) in order to prove that he violated Rule 1.3 (by abusing the status of his judicial office), Kiesnowski's argument that one can only violate Rule 3.3 by giving "testimony" under oath is simply incorrect. Again, the commentary to Rule 3.3 of the Model Code is illuminating. It discusses how the current version of the rule was changed from the prior version such that a judge shall not offer character testimony in adjudicatory proceedings (i.e. the prior rule) and now shall also not "otherwise vouch for the character of a person in a legal proceeding.” See Exhibit H (full text of Rule 3.3). The commentary to the rule explicitly states that the new prohibition against “otherwise vouching for the character of a person in a legal proceeding” was added “in recognition of the fact that under oath is not the only mode in which judges might abuse the prestige of office when the character of a person is at issue in a legal proceeding.” See Exhibit G (emphasis added). Thus, Kiesnowski’s argument that sworn testimony is necessary to violate Rule 3.3 is plainly contradicted by the commentary to the model rule. And the commentary to the model rule makes it clear that the sort of character-based statements offered by Kiesnowski in the formal, recorded interrogation of his brother-in-law are exactly the sort of character-based statements prohibited by Rule 3.3, and which, if made, also violate Rule 1.3.

In sum, regardless of whether Judge Kiesnowski’s character assassination of his brother-in-law’s accuser violates the formal requirements of Rule 3.3 (barring character testimony), the point here is that the commentary to Rule 3.3 is highly persuasive authority that the sort of character-based comments Judge Kiesnowski made here are exactly the sort of comments that a judge should avoid making because they abuse the prestige of judicial office and, thus, violate Rule 1.3.

For the foregoing reasons, this tribunal should find by clear and convincing evidence that Judge Kiesnowski violated Rule 1.3 because his above referenced comments to the DA’s investigator abused the prestige of judicial office to advance the interests of Kiesnowski’s brother-in-law. Alternatively, this tribunal should find that Judge Kiesnowski’s character-based comments were either exactly, or highly analogous to, the sort of character-based statements prohibited by Rule 3.3. As such, even though the comments were not made under oath, by making them, Judge Kiesnowski violated Rule 1.3 pursuant to Comment 1 of Rule 3.3.

- III. Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 1.2 by creating an appearance of impropriety (a) when he acted as counsel for his brother-in-law during a criminal interrogation, and (b) when he tried to influence whether charges were filed against the brother-in-law by speaking to the DA's investigator about the brother-in-law's good character and repeatedly attacking the credibility of the complaining witness.

Canon Rule 1.2 reads as follows:

A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

Comment 1 to the Rules states: "Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by improper conduct and conduct that creates the appearance of impropriety. This principle applies to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge." (emphasis added).

Comment 2 to the rule states: "A judge should expect to be the subject of public scrutiny that might be viewed as burdensome if applied to other citizens." The point is twofold -- that judges are held to a higher standard of conduct than the ordinary person, and this principle applies to both their professional and their personal lives.

Here, Judge Kiesnowski's conduct violated Canon Rule 1.2 in three different ways.

First, his conduct compromised, or at the very least, appeared to compromise, the independence and impartiality of the judiciary.⁵ Judge Kiesnowski inserted himself into a high-stakes criminal interrogation of his brother-in-law, who was a suspect in a felony assault case. He played a major role in the interrogation, actively conducting himself as legal counsel to his brother-in-law. And he embarked upon a mission to assassinate the character of his brother-in-law's accuser in an attempt to influence the DA investigator's charging decision. This was the opposite of judicial independence and impartiality. Thus, it violated Canon Rule 1.2.

Second, Rule 1.2 dictates that "actual impropriety" violates the rule. Comment 5 to the rule states: "Actual improprieties include violations of law, court rules or provisions of this Code." Thus, if this tribunal finds that Judge Kiesnowski violated either Canon Rule 1.3 or 3.10 (discussed above), it must necessarily find that he committed actual impropriety and thereby violated Rule 1.2.

Finally, Judge Kiesnowski violated Rule 1.2 because his conduct created an "appearance of impropriety." Comment 5 to the rule states: "The test for appearance of impropriety is whether the conduct would create in reasonable minds a perception that the judge violated this Code or engaged in other conduct that reflects adversely on the judge's honesty, impartiality, temperament, or fitness to serve as a judge." The "appearance of impropriety" standard is an objective one. See e.g. Inquiry Concerning a Judge, 822 P.2d 1333 (Alaska 1991) (test is whether a judge fails "to use reasonable care to prevent objectively reasonable person from believing an impropriety was afoot”; [t]he objectively reasonable person is not a well-trained lawyer or a highly sophisticated observer of public affairs. Neither is this person a cynic skeptical of the government and the courts. Moreover, an objectively reasonable person is not necessarily one who is informed of every conceivably relevant fact. He or she is the average person encountered in society.”)

Here, Judge Kiesnowski’s conduct would create in the mind of an ordinary and reasonably objective citizen the “perception” that Judge Kiesnowski was not independent or impartial (i.e. the very touchstones of being an acceptable judge). His insertion of himself into such a serious case and in such a major way, not only would raise eyebrows, it actually did, which is why a complaint was filed. Moreover, his attempt to influence the charging decision by assassinating the alleged victim’s character to the DA’s lead investigator would cause an ordinary and reasonable person to “perceive” that the judge was not independent or impartial. As such, Judge Kiesnowski’s conduct created an appearance of impropriety and thereby violated Rule 1.2.

Despite the above, Judge Kiesnowski claims that he did not violate Rule 1.2 because his comments bolstering his brother-in-law’s character and attacking the accuser’s were not intended to either influence the charging decision or to diminish the credibility of the alleged victim. Judge Kiesnowski’s deposition testimony on this point was that he was merely “offering information” to Investigator Huston, without any intent attached.

But Kiesnowski’s argument here fails for two reasons.

First, because the standard for determining the appearance of impropriety is objective, a judge's own perception of his or her motivation behind challenged conduct is irrelevant to the analysis. See e.g. People for Ethical Treatment of Animals v. Bobby Berosini, Ltd., 894 P.2d 337 (Nev. 1995) overruled in part on other grounds by Towbin Dodge, LLC v. Dist. Ct., 112 P.3d 1063 (2005) (judge's subjective impartiality irrelevant); In re Case of Snow, 674 A.2d 573 (N.H. 1996) ("There is no intent requirement in these Canons. In fact, it is practically impossible to impose a mens rea element on the 'appearance of impropriety' standard."); In re Larsen, 616 A.2d 529 (Pa. 1992) (judge's conduct warranted "disciplinary action despite the absence of an improper motive because the conduct by itself raised an appearance of impropriety, which could undermine public confidence in our judiciary.").

Second, it is simply disingenuous for Judge Kiesnowski to claim that his comments bolstering his brother-in-law's character and attacking the accuser's were not intended to either influence the charging decision or to diminish the credibility of the alleged victim. Judge Kiesnowski has been a lawyer for over thirty years. He's been a judge for nearly 13 years. He estimates that he has presided over approximately 100 criminal trials. It is not believable that he was simply "offering information" without any intent attached when he said to the DA's lead investigator things about the alleged victim, such as: "She is savvy and knows if she is labelled a crime victim, she gets to stay [in the country]." Or: "She has made statements that she will self-inflict injury and say that he did it."

For the foregoing reasons, this tribunal should reject Judge Kiesnowski's arguments in defense of his conduct and find by clear and convincing evidence that he violated Rule 1.2.

IV. Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 1.1 by virtue of violating Canon Rules 1.2, 1.3, and 3.10.

Can Rule 1.1 reads as follows:

A judge shall comply with the law, including the Code of Judicial Conduct.

Here, as discussed above, Judge Kiesnowski violated several provisions of the Code. By doing so, he necessarily also violated Rule 1.1. Therefore, this tribunal should find by clear and convincing evidence that Judge Kiesnowski violated Rule 1.1.

RECOMMENDED DISCIPLINE

When evaluating the appropriateness of judicial disciplinary sanctions in general, jurisdictions nationally apply the following list of factors recognized in Matter of Deming, 736 P.2d 639, 659 (Wash. 1987):

(a) whether the misconduct is an isolated instance or evidences a pattern of conduct;

Judge Kiesnowski's misconduct is not isolated. It is instead a pattern. A review of his private censure (Exhibit A) reveals that for years he abused his status to harass, intimidate and retaliate against a judicial assistant who he believed gossiped about his extramarital affair with a subordinate judicial department employee. After being disciplined for this misconduct and being forced to resign, he nevertheless, while still on the bench and before the effective date of his resignation, engaged in the misconduct that is the subject of this case.

(b) the nature, extent and frequency of occurrence of the acts of misconduct;

As noted above, Judge Kiesnowski's misconduct, i.e. the general abuse of the status of judicial office, has been a pattern for years.

(c) whether the misconduct occurred in or out of the courtroom;

Judge Kiesnowski's prior and current misconduct did not occur in the courtroom.

(d) whether the misconduct occurred in the judge's official capacity or in his private life;

Judge Kiesnowski's prior misconduct as detailed in his private censure (Exhibit A) occurred in his official capacity as a judge. The current misconduct occurred in his private capacity.

(e) whether the judge has acknowledged or recognized that the acts occurred;

Judge Kiesnowski acknowledged his prior misconduct by agreeing to a private censure, which required his resignation. He has not, however, acknowledged any misconduct in the present case, which is a formal hearing on the merits is scheduled.

(f) whether the judge has evidenced an effort to change or modify his conduct;

Judge Kiesnowski has not evidenced any effort to change or modify his pattern of abusing the status of judicial office, as shown by the fact that just three months after being disciplined and being forced to resign, he engaged in the same general form of misconduct, i.e. abuse of the prestige of judicial office.

(g) the length of service on the bench;

Judge Kiesnowski served as a District Court Judge for approximately 12.5 years, i.e. from 2011 to June of 2023.

(h) whether there have been prior complaints about this judge;

There have been prior complaints. See Exhibit A.

(i) the effect the misconduct has upon the integrity of and respect for the judiciary;

Judge Kiesnowski's prior and current misconduct is exactly the sort of behavior that erodes public confidence in the judiciary. The narrative is essentially this: a person in power abuses his status/power to harass, intimidate, and retaliate against his perceived enemies (i.e. the prior misconduct). Or he uses his status/power/influence to try to benefit those close to him, like family members (i.e. the current misconduct). This sort of narrative is extremely damaging to the public's perception of the integrity of the judiciary.

(j) the extent to which the judge exploited his position to satisfy his personal desires.

In Judge Kiesnowski's prior disciplinary case, he exploited his position as a judge to retaliate against a subordinate who he believed had gossiped about his own misconduct. He tried to make this individual's work life intolerable. He effectively got her demoted. And he even tried to get her fired once she was reassigned to be a different judge's judicial assistant. All of this was to exact a personal vendetta against a person with less power and influence who Judge Kiesnowski perceived had wronged him. In the present case, Judge Kiesnowski exploited his position to try to benefit his brother-in-law.

In sum, as the above factors indicate, the misconduct here is serious and persistent. It warrants public censure. Anything less disserves the public interest in accountability for misconduct like this. That, in turn, diminishes the public's confidence in the judiciary, the protection of which is the entire purpose of the judicial discipline process.

CONCLUSION

Judging is not merely a “job.” It is the privilege of dealing with society’s most precious asset – justice. That is why judges are held to a higher standard of conduct than the ordinary person. And it is why the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct applies equally to the judge’s professional and personal life. Here, the present misconduct occurred in Judge Kiesnowski’s private life. But that is no excuse. His behavior, combined with his prior disciplinary history, demonstrates a pattern of misconduct, and he should have known better.

This tribunal should find that Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, and 3.10, and it should recommend that the judge be publicly censured.

STIPULATION FOR PRIVATE CENSURE

INTRODUCTION

This case is currently in formal proceedings with a disciplinary hearing on the merits scheduled for March 27-30, 2023. Pursuant to this stipulation, the parties have agreed to resolve this case as follows. The Commission will dismiss the formal proceedings against Judge Kiesnowski. In exchange, Judge Kiesnowski will announce his retirement from the bench on March 14, 2023 to become effective July 1, 2023. Judge Kiesnowski also agrees to this private censure in which he admits to several violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct as detailed below.

SUMMARY OF PRINCIPAL ALLEGATIONS

Judge Kiesnowski harassed and retaliated against his judicial assistant, Emily Betz, based on his belief that Ms. Betz (1) reported his judicial misconduct to other judges and court staff, and (2) campaigned against his retention via Facebook posts.

STIPULATED FACTS

1. Between 2011 and 2016, Emily Betz worked for Judge Kiesnowski as the only judicial assistant in Judge Kiesnowski's division.
2. Prior to being assigned to Judge Kiesnowski's division, Ms. Betz had worked for the Colorado Judicial Department for approximately 4 years.
3. In the Spring of 2016, Ms. Betz noticed a changed dynamic between Judge Kiesnowski and one of Ms. Betz's supervisors, Maya Korbe. Specifically, Ms. Korbe began spending an increasing amount of time in Judge Kiesnowski's courtroom and in his chambers.
4. The increased presence of a supervisor in Judge Kiesnowski's courtroom and division created apprehension that Ms. Betz was being scrutinized for her work performance. Simultaneously, suspicions began developing around the courthouse that Judge Kiesnowski and Ms. Korbe (who were both separately married at the time) were having an affair.¹
5. The suspicions of an affair were reinforced by other Judicial employees and law enforcement sharing stories of seeing Ms. Korbe in Judge Kiesnowski's car, Ms. Korbe ducking down in the car when Judicial employees passed, Judge Kiesnowski and Ms.

¹ Ms. Korbe later obtained a divorce from her husband on July 21, 2016. Judge Kiesnowski's divorce became final on April 20, 2018. Ms. Korbe and Judge Kiesnowski would later marry each other.

Korbe arriving to work together, and Judge Kiesnowski's vehicle being parked overnight at Ms. Korbe's apartment.

6. During the summer of 2016, Judge Kiesnowski became increasingly frustrated about the rumors related to the alleged affair. Specifically, he came to believe that Ms. Betz was gossiping about the alleged affair to other judges and court staff and thereby contributing to the spread of rumors.
7. In August of 2016, Judge Kiesnowski and Ms. Korbe met with then-Chief Judge Patrick Murphy to provide notice of their romantic relationship, as required by Chief Justice Directive 08-06, Attachment F (2013). But Chief Judge Murphy did not require either Judge Kiesnowski's or Ms. Korbe's resignation or transfer to another jurisdiction, as required by CJD 08-06.² Neither did Ms. Korbe or Judge Kiesnowski voluntarily resign or transfer to another jurisdiction as is required by CJD 08-06.
8. On September 1, 2016, Judge Kiesnowski contacted Ben Stough (Ms. Betz's direct supervisor). Because of Judge Kiesnowski's belief that Ms. Betz was gossiping about him, he provided to Mr. Stough a document titled "Restated Terms and Conditions of Emily Betz's Employment as Judge Kiesnowski's Division Clerk."
9. Via the Terms and Conditions document, Judge Kiesnowski sought to alter the terms and conditions of Judicial Assistant 1's employment. In relevant part, the document stated:

² In his 2018 report to SCAO's HR Division, Mr. Stough describes the decision not to require Ms. Korbe's resignation or reassignment as occurring due to assurances made by Judge Kiesnowski and Ms. Korbe: "Based on assurances that their workplace conduct would remain professional, no immediate action was taken." Chief Judge Murphy retired July 15, 2019. Consequently, the Commission has no jurisdiction to address the violations of the Code arising from his failure to enforce CJD 08-06's prohibitions against a judge and employee involved in a relationship working in the same judicial district. Colo. RJD 4(a)(1).

“Restated Terms and Conditions of [Judicial Assistant 1’s]
Employment as Judge Kiesnowski’s Division Clerk:”

Below are, in part, the restated terms and conditions of [Judicial Assistant 1’s] Employment as Judge Kiesnowski’s division clerk. Violation of any of these restated terms and conditions of employment shall, pursuant to the State’s Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

Nothing contained herein shall be construed as an employment contract or any contract right to continued employment.

At all times, [Judicial Assistant 1] shall abide by the following:

(1) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use the State’s internet system for any purpose other than to discharge and perform her functions as division clerk. Under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] use the State’s internet system for personal purposes, whether for herself or any other person, and regardless of whether she is caught up with all of work duties and functions. Under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] “surf” the internet while court is in session and shall not otherwise use the State’s internet system unless expressly authorized and directed to do so by Judge Kiesnowski. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State’s Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(2) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use the State’s electronic mail (“email”) system for any purpose other than to discharge and perform her functions as division clerk. Under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] use the State’s IM system for personal purposes, whether for herself or any other person. By way of example and not limitation, [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use the State’s IM system to even invite a co-worker to lunch or to respond to any non-business purpose IM that has been sent to her. [Judicial

Assistant 1] understands and agrees that any IM she sends or receives is subject to being accessed and audited by administration at any time and without prior notice. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(4) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not gossip about, or disparage in any way, any judicial officer or courthouse employee by any means or in any manner. (5) [Judicial Assistant 1] expressly understands and agrees that the workday begins at 8:00 a.m. and ends at 5:00 p.m. Therefore, [Judicial Assistant 1] shall be at her desk no later than 8:00 a.m. each workday and shall, with the exception of authorized breaks and lunch, not leave work until 5:00 p.m. Leaving work, even five minutes early without Judge Kiesnowski's approval, is unacceptable. Further, [Judicial Assistant 1] expressly understands and agrees that all leave requests shall first be authorized by Judge Kiesnowski and ultimately be approved by Ben Stough or his successor or his designee. Under no circumstances, without the express written approval of Judge Kiesnowski or Ben Stough or his successor or designee, shall [Judicial Assistant 1] submit leave requests to Maya Korbe. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(6) In the event that [Judicial Assistant 1] has completed or is otherwise "caught up" with all of her Division G duties and/or any task assigned to her by any judicial officer and/or supervisory personnel, she may not visit with or observe court in any other division or otherwise "socialize" with courthouse personnel without the express, written approval of Judge Kiesnowski. Any such requests shall first be submitted to Judge Kiesnowski by email for his approval, which request shall be approved or denied by Judge Kiesnowski in his sole and absolute discretion. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(7) [Judicial Assistant 1] shall, at all times, maintain a professional demeanor and treat all judicial officers, including Judge Kiesnowski, and courthouse personnel with courtesy, decency, and respect, and shall, like other courthouse employees, attend to her personal affairs on her own time, not the State's time. Further, under no circumstances without the express approval of Judge Kiesnowski, shall [Judicial Assistant 1] refer to Judge Kiesnowski as "Bob." Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

(8) With the exception of authorized breaks and lunch, [Judicial Assistant 1] shall not use or monitor her personal cell phone during the workday. In those instances, where [Judicial Assistant 1] is permitted to use and/or monitor her personal cell phone, under no circumstances shall [Judicial Assistant 1] gossip about, or disparage in any way, any judicial officer or courthouse employee by any means or in any manner. Failure to abide by any provision of this paragraph shall, pursuant to the State's Personnel Rules, subject [Judicial Assistant 1] to disciplinary action, including, but not limited to, reassignment and/or termination.

10. Ben Stough rejected Judge Kiesnowski's attempt to force Ms. Betz into the above restated contract. Recognizing that Judge Kiezanowski's and Ms. Betz's working relationship was too frayed to continue, Mr. Stough (with Chief Judge Murphy's approval) transferred Ms. Betz to the court's judicial assistant (CJA) pool. Although Ms. Betz maintained her title, pay, duty location, and other working conditions, inclusion in the CJA pool was effectively a demotion from being an assigned division judicial assistant (i.e. it resulted in a loss of status and stability). For example, during Ms. Betz's time in the CJA pool, she was reassigned three times within six months. Ms. Betz claims that she learned that Judge Kiesnowski attempted to influence/encourage other criminal judges to refuse having her in their divisions. Ms. Betz further alleges that Mr. Stough told her that she was ultimately assigned to domestic relations divisions for her own protection.

11. Sometime in late 2016 or early 2017, Ms. Betz applied to work as a judicial assistant for newly appointed District Court Judge Tomee Crespin. Judge Kiesnowski continued to retaliate against Ms. Betz by contacting Judge Crespin and encouraging her not to hire Ms. Betz. According to now former Judge Crespin, Judge Kiesnowski told her not to hire Ms. Betz because she was not loyal, she could not be trusted, and she would talk about the judge she works with.
12. Judge Crespin hired Ms. Betz despite Judge Kiesnowski's communications to her. Judge Crespin confirmed that, while working for her, Ms. Betz did her job competently and professionally. Judge Crespin described Ms. Betz's job performance as "excellent" and "above average." Judge Crespin said that, although Ms. Betz never gossiped to her about Judge Kiesnowski, she recalls Ms. Betz repeatedly stating that Judge Kiesnowski glared at her or otherwise made her feel uncomfortable during encounters on the same floor of the courthouse.
13. Judge Kiesnowski was up for a retention election in 2020. Prior to the election, Judge Kiesnowski discovered social media/Facebook posts encouraging voters not to retain him. The social media posts were presented through a username "Silky Pete" and included the following selected postings:
 - a. "Please forgive me for bringing this up but it is not political, it is what is best for our children. Trust me that Judge Kiesnowski should NOT be retained. He has a long history of lenient sentences on child molesters";
 - b. "Please don't forget. Even Samuel L. Jackson is on board! VOTE JUDGE KIESNOWSKI OUT OF OFFICE";
 - c. "VOTE OUT JUDGE KIESNOWSKI SPREAD THE WORD";

- d. “I need everyone to trust me on this one. He has to go. Let everyone you know in Adams and Broomfield County vote him out. WHAT IF I TOLD YOU TO VOTE JUDGE KIESNOWSKI OUT OF OFFICE”;
 - e. “Be sure to tell your friends in Adams and Broomfield to vote Kiesnowski off the bench this November”; and
 - f. “VOTE OUT JUDGE KIESNOWSKI TELL YOUR FRIENDS.”
14. Without verification, Judge Kiesnowski blamed Ms. Betz for the social media posts and sent several text messages to Judge Crespin, which included Judge Kiesnowski forwarding a Facebook post from his then-serving division clerk. Judge Kiesnowski called Judge Crespin later that same night to accuse Ms. Betz of authoring the Facebook posts and demanding that Judge Crespin take action against Ms. Betz to stop further posts.
15. The investigation of the present case confirmed that the Facebook posts quoted above were authored by an Adams County Sheriff’s Office Deputy without connection to Ms. Betz.
16. The People initiated formal proceedings by filing a Statement of Charges. Through his Answer, Judge Kiesnowski disputed various factual allegations that are beyond the scope of this Stipulation. The parties acknowledge that Judge Kiesnowski’s admissions to both a factual basis and to his violations of the Code are limited to the admissions expressly stated in this Stipulation.

25. The Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (“the Code”) further defines “integrity” as “probity, fairness, honesty, uprightness, and soundness of character.” The Code recognizes “impropriety” to include: “conduct that violates the law, court rules, or provisions of this Code, and conduct that undermines a judge's independence, integrity, or impartiality.

Judge Kiesnowski further agrees that he will not act as a presenter/mentor in leadership, mentoring, or training programs conducted through the Colorado Judicial Department and/or the State Court Administrator's Office;

New York Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics
Opinion 92-118

November 19, 1992

NOTE: Although Opinion 92-118 remains in effect, Opinion 91-05 (cited herein) was overruled to the extent it suggests that a judge may provide informal, uncompensated legal advice to a friend who is not a member of the judge's family (see 22 NYCRR 100.4[G]).

(G) Practice of Law. A full-time judge shall not practice law. Notwithstanding this prohibition, a judge may act pro se and may, without compensation, give legal advice to a member of the judge's family.

Digest: A full-time judge may not represent his or her daughter at a real estate closing.

Rules: Canon 5(F) of the Code of Judicial Conduct.

Opinion:

A full-time judge asks if the judge may represent his or her daughter, as an attorney, in her purchase of a co-op apartment, without a fee.

As Canon 5(F) of the Code of Judicial Conduct states that "a judge should not practice law," the inquiring judge may not represent his or her daughter, even though the judge is not charging a legal fee. The judge, however, may offer informal, uncompensated legal advice when there exists no attorney-client relationship. [See letter 91-05].

ADVISORY OPINION 10-06
(December 21, 2010)

Representation of Spouse in Negotiations with Insurance Company

Issue

May a judge represent a spouse in negotiations with an insurance company?

Answer: No.

Facts

A judge's spouse was injured in an automobile accident, and the judge, a former personal injury attorney, would like to represent the spouse in negotiations with the insurance company.

Discussion

Canon 4G of the 1993 Code of Judicial Conduct allowed a judge to "give legal advice to and draft or review documents for a member of the judge's family." This limited exception to the canon prohibiting the practice of law was further restricted by the following language in the second paragraph of the related commentary:

The code allows a judge to give legal advice to and draft legal documents for members of the judge's family, so long as the judge receives no compensation. A judge must not, however, act as an advocate or negotiator for a member of the judge's family in a legal matter (emphasis added).

Clearly, under the old code a judge could not act as an advocate or negotiator for a family member. The language in Rule 3.10, the corresponding section of the 2009 code, is less explicit:

A judge may represent himself or herself and may, without compensation, give legal advice to and draft or review documents for a member of the judge's family, but is prohibited from serving as a family member's lawyer in any forum.

The words "advocate or negotiator" no longer appear in the rule or its related comment and the term "forum" is not defined.

In re Fleischman, 188 Ariz. 106, 933 P.2d 563 (1997), speaks definitively to this issue. The case involved a sitting judge serving as an advisor and negotiator for a third party (a non-family member) in a contractual matter. The court stated as follows:

We find the respondent's effort and work for AEI constitute acts that are customarily performed from day to day in the ordinary practice of members of the legal profession. That they also may be performed in part or in whole by non-lawyers from time to time does not exclude them from the practice of law.

We therefore conclude that respondent did engage in the practice of law in violation of both Article 6, Section 28 of the Arizona Constitution and Canon 4G of the Arizona Code of Judicial Conduct. Respondent's arguments to the contrary are entirely without merit.

Fleischman, 188 Ariz. at 111, 933 P.2d at 568.

Under the Fleischman standard, representing an individual in negotiations with an insurance carrier would constitute the practice of law. The question then becomes whether the language "in any forum" in Rule 3.1 of the 2009 code limits the reach of the prohibition against representing a family member as articulated in Canon 4G in the 1993 code. "Forum" is not defined in the relevant provisions. See also Ariz. Code Jud. Conduct, Scope. The definitions of "forum" vary and some include a court or place where disputes are heard.

The Reporters' Notes to the 2009 code provide that the rule is essentially identical to Canon 4G and was merely moved to the black letter portion of the rule. The concern of the ABA Commission remained unchanged.

The Commission believed that the primary concern animating Rule 3.10 was that judges who undertake formally to represent another individual in a forum might appear to have an advantage by virtue of their judicial status.

Geyh and Hodes. Reporters' Notes to the Model Code of Judicial Conduct. ABA, 2009, 74.

The Reporters' Notes do indicate that a judge may represent a family member in a more informal setting and cites neighborhood association disputes, purely private and minor commercial matters as examples of allowed conduct. Id. at 75.

Had the drafters of the canon and rule intended that "forum" be restricted to a courthouse context, they would have so stated, and the Reporters' Notes would have had no need to engage in the discussion of "informal setting" and the other matters set out therein. The rule would have been a bright line one.

Conclusion

The committee believes that settlement negotiations in a personal injury matter are not sufficiently informal and minor to avoid the danger "of the judge abusing the prestige of office" and an exception to the general prohibition. Id. A judge may not represent a family member in negotiations with an insurance carrier.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL CONDUCT

Disposition of Complaint 12-263

Complainant: John Catapano
Judge: Robert Gottsfield

ORDER

The complainant alleged that a superior court judge tried to bully a psychologist on behalf of a family member involved in a custody dispute in another state.

After reviewing the complaint and the judge's response as well as speaking with the psychologist, the Commission finds that Judge Gottsfield violated the Code of Judicial Conduct. Specifically, the judge sent an email and initiated a telephone conversation with the psychologist, both of which were intended to influence the outcome of his family member's custody dispute. In the course of both communications, Judge Gottsfield repeatedly referenced his judicial experience, giving at least the appearance of abusing the prestige of his judicial office, which is a violation of Rules 1.2 and 1.3 of the Code.

Accordingly, Judge Robert Gottsfield is hereby reprimanded for his conduct as described above and pursuant to Commission Rule 17(a). The record of this case, consisting of the complaints, the judge's response, and this order, shall be made public as required by Rule 9(a).

Dated: December 4, 2012.

FOR THE COMMISSION

Commission Chair

Copies of this order were mailed to the complainant and the judges on December 4, 2012.

This order may not be used as a basis for disqualification of a judge.

BEFORE THE STATE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL CONDUCT

CJC No. 14-0823-JP

PUBLIC REPRIMAND
AND ORDER OF ADDITIONAL EDUCATION

HONORABLE ESEQUIEL (“CHEQUE”) DE LA PAZ
JUSTICE OF THE PEACE, PRECINCT 4
KINGSVILLE, KLEBERG COUNTY, TEXAS

During its meeting on October 15-16, 2014, the State Commission on Judicial Conduct concluded a review of allegations against the Honorable Esequiel (“Cheque”) De La Paz, Justice of the Peace for Precinct 4, Kingsville, Kleberg County, Texas. Judge De La Paz was advised by letter of the Commission’s concerns and provided written responses. After considering the evidence before it, the Commission entered the following Findings and Conclusion:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. At all times relevant hereto, the Honorable Esequiel (“Cheque”) De La Paz, was Justice of the Peace for Precinct 4, Kingsville, Kleberg County, Texas.
2. In March of 2014, Judge De La Paz met privately with an electrician who informed the judge that he had not been paid by the contractor for electrical work performed at a building site.
3. After meeting with the electrician, Judge De La Paz met with a Kingsville building inspector to determine if the electrician’s work had been completed and whether the building inspector had issued a “green tag” at the building site, which would have permitted the contractor to turn on the electricity at the property.
4. Shortly thereafter, on or about April 3, 2014, Judge De La Paz telephoned the home of the contractor. In a conversation with the contractor’s teenage son, Judge De La Paz identified himself and advised the son that his father owed money to the electrician; his father needed to pay the electrician; the judge was trying to save his father “court fees;” and the father needed to call the court about the “balance that was being claimed” by the electrician.

5. Shortly thereafter, the contractor called Judge De La Paz to discuss the electrician's claims.
6. During this call, Judge De La Paz advised the contractor that it would be "best for [him] to pay the electrician to avoid the costs associated with going to court" and insisted that the contractor should pay the electrician.
7. In addition, Judge De La Paz informed the contractor that he had already spoken to the city's building inspector and had learned that a green tag had been issued to the contractor. The judge also advised the contractor that the building inspector might need to be summoned to court to testify if the electrician filed a lawsuit against him.
8. At the time of the above-described events, there was no case pending in Judge De La Paz's court relating to the dispute between the contractor and the electrician.
9. On or about May 15, 2014, the electrician filed a lawsuit against the contractor in Judge De La Paz's court claiming that the contractor had breached the parties' contract.
10. The contractor retained an attorney and subsequently filed a counterclaim, in which he alleged that the electrician had breached the parties' contract by failing to satisfactorily perform his job. In particular, the counterclaim alleged that the contractor had been required to retain the services of another electrician to correct the defective work and to complete the job as contemplated by the parties' contract.
11. The contractor also filed a "Motion to Recuse Judge," based on Judge De La Paz's previous communications with the parties in the case, as well as with the city's building inspector. In the motion, the contractor alleged that Judge De La Paz's conduct had caused him to have "personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts in this case" and to develop a bias in the case in favor of the electrician.
12. Judge De La Paz agreed to recuse himself and transferred the case to another justice of the peace in the county, who held a trial on July 29, 2014.
13. Following trial, the other justice of the peace concluded that the electrician had not satisfactorily performed his work in accordance with the parties' contract, and that the contractor had incurred additional expenses in correcting the defective work performed by the electrician.
14. The other justice of the peace issued a judgment in favor of the contractor on his counterclaim, and further ordered the electrician to pay the contractor's attorney's fees.

RELEVANT STANDARDS

1. Canon 2A of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct provides, in relevant part: "A judge shall comply with the law ..."
2. Canon 2B of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct provides, in relevant part: "A judge shall not lend the prestige of judicial office to advance the private interests of the judge or others; nor shall a judge convey or permit others to convey the impression that they are in a special position to influence the judge."
3. Canon 3B(2) of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct states, in relevant part, that: "A judge should be faithful to the law and shall maintain professional competence in it."

CONCLUSION

The Commission concludes based on the facts and evidence before it that Judge De La Paz failed to comply with the law and demonstrated a lack of professional competence in the law by intervening in a private dispute between the contractor and the electrician when no case was pending in his court. Further, Judge De La Paz exceeded his authority when he conducted an independent investigation into the merits of the electrician's claims by meeting with a witness and the parties to the dispute. As a result of his independent investigation, Judge De La Paz obtained information from an extra judicial source and used that information to form an opinion that the contractor was indebted to the electrician. In all of his actions on behalf of the electrician, Judge De La Paz lent the prestige of his judicial office to advance the electrician's private interests and gave the impression that the electrician was in a special position to influence the judge. By attempting to assist the electrician in recovering payment from the contractor, Judge De La Paz abandoned his judicial role as a neutral and independent arbiter of the facts, which necessitated his recusal from the case once the matter was filed in his court. In light of the above, the Commission concludes that Judge De La Paz engaged in willful and persistent violations of Canons 2A, 2B and 3B(2) of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct. In reaching this decision, the Commission considered as an aggravating factor the fact that it had recently issued a public sanction against Judge De La Paz for substantially similar conduct.

In condemnation of the conduct described above that violated Canons 2A, 2B, and 3B(2) of the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct, it is the Commission's decision to issue a PUBLIC REPRIMAND AND ORDER OF ADDITIONAL EDUCATION to Judge Esequiel ("Cheque") De La Paz, Justice of the Peace, Precinct 4, Kingsville, Kleberg County, Texas.

Pursuant to this Order, Judge De La Paz must obtain two (2) hours of instruction with a mentor judge, in addition to his required judicial education in Fiscal Year 2015. In particular, the Commission desires that Judge De La Paz receive this additional instruction in the area of (1) the limits of a judge's authority to intervene in or mediate disputes that are not pending in his court; (2) avoiding the use of the prestige of judicial office to advance the private interests of the judge or others; and (3) maintaining impartiality by avoiding independent investigations into the merits of matters that may come before the court.

Judge De La Paz shall complete the additional two (2) hours of instruction described above within sixty (60) days from the date of written notification from the Commission of the assignment of a mentor. Upon receipt of such notice, it is Judge De La Paz's responsibility to contact the assigned mentor and schedule the additional education.

Upon the completion of the two (2) hours of instruction described above, Judge De La Paz shall sign and return the Respondent Judge Survey indicating compliance with this Order. Failure to complete, or report the completion of, the required additional education in a timely manner may result in further Commission action.

Pursuant to the authority contained in Article V, §1-a(8) of the Texas Constitution, it is ordered that the actions described above be made the subject of a PUBLIC REPRIMAND AND ORDER OF ADDITIONAL EDUCATION by the Commission.

The Commission has taken this action in a continuing effort to protect the public confidence in the judicial system and to assist the state's judiciary in its efforts to embody the principles and values set forth in the Texas Constitution and the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct.

Issued this the 19th day of December, 2014.

This is in accord with an advisory opinion of The United States Committee on Code of Conduct, which stated that judges may appear at a hearing regarding zoning or rezoning of the judge’s property or for the imposition of assessments for improvements. RULE 3.3 TESTIFYING AS A CHARACTER WITNESS

A judge shall not testify as a character witness in a judicial, administrative, or other adjudicatory proceeding or otherwise vouch for the character of a person in a legal proceeding, except when duly summoned.

COMMENT

[1] A judge who, without being subpoenaed, testifies as a character witness abuses the prestige of judicial office to advance the interests of another. See Rule 1.3. Except in unusual circumstances where the demands of justice require, a judge should discourage a party from requiring the judge to testify as a character witness.

1990 CODE COMPARISON

Rule 3.3 originates from the last sentence of Canon 2B and the Comment is the last sentence of the Commentary to Canon 2B. Rule 3.3 substituted the phrase “except when duly summoned” for “testify voluntarily,” and added the phrase “otherwise vouch for the character of a person in a legal proceeding.” New language, specifying that the Rule applies in all forms of “adjudicatory proceedings,” was also added as a reminder that Rule 3.3 is not limited to civil or criminal trials in courts, but applies whenever testimony is taken on a formal record. Charles G. Geyh & W. William Hodes, Reporters’ Notes to the Model Code of Judicial Conduct 60–61 (2009).

ANNOTATION

Rule 3.3 is clear in prohibiting a judge from testifying as a character witness, unless duly summoned. The commentary explains the rationale behind this prohibition. A judge who testifies as a character witness without being subpoenaed abuses the prestige of office to advance the interests of another in violation of Rule 1.3. A judge must actively discourage a party from requiring the judge to testify as a character witness, except in the unusual circumstances when the demands of justice require such testimony. Rule 3.3 also provides that a judge shall not “vouch for the character of a person in a legal proceeding.” This language was added to the Code in 2007 in recognition of the fact that under oath is not the only mode in which judges might abuse the prestige of office when the character of a person is at issue in a legal proceeding. Charles G. Geyh & W. William Hodes, Reporters' Notes to the Model Code of Judicial Conduct 60–61 (2009).

The 1972 Code drafters learned of numerous instances where judges were called upon to exploit the dignity and prestige of their office when asked to testify as character witnesses. In fact, some judges sought protection from the demands of being asked to testify as character witnesses. E. Wayne Thode, Reporter's Notes to Code of Judicial Conduct 49 (1972). As a result, the 1972 Code imposed a ban against judges voluntarily testifying as character witnesses. The Commentary to the 1972 Code, however, stated that the Canon “does not afford [the judge] a privilege against testifying in response to an official summons.” 1972 Code of Judicial Conduct, Canon 2, Commentary, Paragraph 2.

Unfortunately, by the time of the 1990 Code review, it was clear that the “official summons” exception could be misused to circumvent the rule. The comment language discouraging a judge from testifying as a character witness “except in unusual circumstances” was added in response to the problem of avoiding the ban through the “friendly subpoena.” Lisa Milord, The Development of the ABA Judicial Code 14 (1992). Although it has always been understood that judges should not encourage a party to issue a sham subpoena for what is in fact voluntary testimony, the comment to Rule 3.3 suggests that judges should actively discourage parties from seeking their testimony as character witnesses. Charles G. Geyh & W. William Hodes, Reporters' Notes to the Model Code of Judicial Conduct 61 (2009).

The case law and state judicial ethics opinions have followed the approach that it is improper for a judge to testify as a character witness unless necessitated by the demands of justice. See, e.g., In re Abel, 632 So. 2d 600 (Fla. 1994) (improper for judge to testify as character witness in any proceeding, except in response to official witness subpoena); In re Fogan, 646 So. 2d 191 (Fla. 1994) (rejecting argument that judge's letter to sentencing judge was not “testifying” because it was not under oath or affirmation; court noted that Canon prohibiting judge from being a character witness was broad enough to include written statements voluntarily submitted with the understanding that such statements may be used by a court); Hatcher v. McBride, 650 S.E.2d 104 (W. Va. 2006) (a judge who is requested to testify as a witness shall discourage the party from requiring him or her to testify; however, the judge may testify when properly summoned upon approval of the trial court and with such limitations as may be imposed by the trial court); Ky. Jud. Ethics Op. JE-104 (2004) (in the absence of a formal request from the Governor, a judge may not communicate with the Governor's office regarding a pardon, and in the absence of a formal request from the parole board, may not communicate with the board regarding a parole proceeding);

JOINT PROPOSED CASE MANAGEMENT ORDER

A virtual appearance occurred on July 25, 2023 with the special masters to address case management deadlines and the setting of a formal hearing. Present at this appearance was Craig Truman as Respondent’s counsel, Jeff Walsh as Special Counsel for the People, and Christopher Gregory, Executive Director of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline.

The procedural posture of the case is as follows. The Statement of Charges was filed on June 30, 2023. The Answer to such was filed on July 20, 2023, which triggered the “at issue” date pursuant to Colo. RJD 20. Pursuant to Colo. RJD 20, the disciplinary hearing must be held within 91 days of the “at issue” date (i.e. by October 19, 2023). At the status hearing on July 25, the parties agreed that two days were sufficient to conduct the hearing and that the dates of September 5-6, 2023 were acceptable dates for the hearing. Accordingly, the hearing in this matter was scheduled for September 5-6, 2023. However, on August 14, counsel for the parties notified the special masters via email that, after consultation, they believe the hearing will only take one day and should be scheduled only for Wednesday, September 6, 2023 to accommodate witness scheduling issues. Given this, the hearing is now formally scheduled for 9 a.m. on Wednesday, September 6, 2023. Mr. Gregory has arranged for a court reporter for the hearing. He has also reserved Room 2C in the Ralph L. Carr Judicial Center as the location for the hearing.

Colo. RJD 21.5 will govern discovery in this matter, and its limits will apply to all matters in this case unless “good cause” is shown to justify deviation pursuant to Colo. RJD 21.5(d).

To maintain the confidentiality of these proceedings pursuant to Colo. RJD 6.5(a), all pleading, motions, briefs, and other filings in the case shall be filed by emailing the filing to Christopher Gregory at _____ (with all parties and this Panel copied) and/or by saving documents directly into the shared folder created for this case. Mr. Gregory will date-stamp the filing and verify that the document has been filed into the Commission’s secure/shared electronic folder. The file sharing system should automatically email an alert that the filing has been uploaded. Any problems or questions about the electronic file system should be directed to Mr. Gregory’s attention.

The following deadlines shall apply:

1. Hearing date: September 6, 2023 at 9 a.m.
2. Exchange exhibits: on or before September 1, 2023
3. Exchange witness lists: on or before September 1, 2023
4. Close of discovery, if any: on or before September 1, 2023
5. File pre-hearing briefs on merits of charges: on or before September 1, 2023

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL MASTERS

I. INTRODUCTION

In this original proceeding in discipline, the Special Masters find and conclude that the People have proved, by clear and convincing evidence, that Robert W. Kiesnowski, a Former Judge of the Adams County District Court (herein after Respondent), as charged by the People, violated four Canons of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct; namely, Canon Rule 1.1., Canon Rule 1.2, a Judge Shall Promote Confidence in the Judiciary; Canon Rule 1.3, Abuse of the Prestige of Judicial Office and Canon Rule 3.10, Practice of Law.

After reviewing the evidence and considering the range of sanctions available under Colorado Rule of Judicial Discipline, 3, the Special Masters unanimously recommend that Respondent be subject to public censure.

II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Respondent was appointed as a District Judge of the Adams County District Court in 2011. On May 31, 2023, Respondent's brother-in-law was hospitalized due to stab wounds he received during a conflict with his girlfriend. On June 1, 2023, an investigator with the 13th Judicial District Attorney's Office ("the investigator") requested to interview the brother-in-law. This interview request was made through Respondent's wife who indicated her brother was in too much pain to participate in an interview. Later that same day, Respondent called the investigator, disclosing he was a 17th Judicial District Court Judge. The Special Masters find this disclosure was appropriate, and there was no particular emphasis placed on the fact he was a district court judge. Respondent further disclosed to the investigator he had spoken to his brother-in-law about the incident under investigation. He relayed to the investigator the information of what the brother-in-law reported remembering from the incident. The investigator informed Respondent that he would let Respondent know if he was going to the hospital to interview the brother-in-law.

The next day, June 2, 2023, Respondent's brother-in-law was still in the hospital. The investigator came to the hospital again to request to interview him. The investigator did not, however, call Respondent to let Respondent know he was going to the hospital to visit the brother-in-law. During the initial contact between the investigator and the brother-in-law, the brother-in-law indicated he did not want to consent to an interview without first seeking advice from Respondent.

Respondent advised the investigator he wanted to be present for the interview and stated that he could be at the hospital in approximately 40 minutes. Before leaving his home to go to the hospital, Respondent reviewed the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct to determine if Rule 3.10 (barring the practice of law) permitted him to represent his brother-in-law. Respondent concluded that the Rule did in fact permit him to act as his brother-in-law's counsel, so he drove to the hospital to act as his brother-in-law's legal counsel.

Respondent arrived at the hospital as he indicated to the investigator. He spoke to his brother-in-law prior to the interview by the investigator. Respondent advised his brother-in-law of his rights, after which the brother-in-law consented to a formal interview, which was video and audio recorded. Respondent proactively represented his brother-in-law as his counsel during the interrogation. Additionally, Respondent inserted his own opinions to the investigator regarding the situation between the brother-in-law and the victim. At the end of the interview, Respondent signed a medical release for his brother-in-law, noting that he was acting as his brother-in-law's legal representative, and he provided his Colorado Bar number beside his signature.

The Commission filed the Statement of Charges on June 30, 2023. The Answer was filed July 20, 2023. The Supreme Court appointed Judge Julie C. Hoskins, Judge Timothy O'Shea and Judge Kandace C. Gerdes to serve as Special Masters for this action. The Special Masters convened a one day hearing on September 6, 2023. Jeffrey M. Walsh represented the Commission. Respondent appeared with his attorney Craig L. Truman. The parties stipulated to the admission into evidence Exhibits 1 through 17. The Commission presented testimony from investigator Jeff Huston. The Respondent presented testimony from himself. The Special Masters took the matter under advisement and now present this written report to the Executive Director of the Commission, pursuant to Rules 26 and 32, Colo. RJD, and Article VI, Section 23(3)(e), Colo. Const.

III. STANDARD OF PROOF

The standard of proof in formal disciplinary hearings is clear and convincing evidence. Colo. RJD 31. Colorado Civil Jury Instruction 3.2 provides that "a fact or proposition has been proved by 'clear and convincing evidence' if, after considering all the evidence, [the fact finders] find it to be highly probable and [the fact finders] have no serious or substantial doubt." The Special Masters find the Commission has met its burden of proving the allegations against Respondent, Robert W. Kiesnowki, a Former Judge of the Adams County District Court.

IV. FACTUAL FINDINGS

1. Violation of Canon Rule 3.10 which states in relevant part:

A judge shall not practice law except as permitted by law or this Code...The judge may, without compensation, give legal advice to and draft or review documents for a member of the judge’s family, but is prohibited from serving as the family member’s lawyer in any forum.

During the time period of May 31, 2023, through June 5, 2023, the date of the last email exchange between Respondent and the investigator, Respondent, a district court judge, acted as his brother-in-law’s attorney. Respondent stated explicitly during the recorded interview between Respondent’s brother-in-law and the investigator, Exhibit 12 page 1, line 26 of the written transcript, that Respondent was acting as counsel for his brother-in-law. Additionally, Respondent actively acted as counsel when he told his brother-in-law he would need to “wait for me to tell him to answer” after each question. On one occasion, Respondent told his brother-in-law how to answer a question when he said, “Your answer is you do not recall.” Respondent stopped the interview at one point to confer privately with his brother-in-law. He asserted his brother-in-law’s Fourth Amendment rights when Respondent refused to agree to a consensual search of the brother-in-law’s phone, instead insisting that a warrant be obtained. Ultimately, he invoked his brother-in-law’s Fifth Amendment right against self- incrimination when he stopped the interrogation when the brother-in-law was confronted with allegations that he had strangled his wife and assaulted her son.

Despite the undisputed evidence, Respondent claims he did not violate Rule 3.10 because his representation of his brother-in-law did not take place in a formal adjudicatory setting, such as a court room. More specifically, Respondent claims that the word “forum” in the prohibition against representing a family member “in any forum” limits the prohibited practice of law only to settings contemplated by the definition of “forum” in Black’s Law Dictionary. Black’s Law Dictionary defines “forum” as follows:

- (1) A public place, especially one devoted to assembly or debate;
- (2) A court or other judicial body; a place of jurisdiction.

Respondent argues that, since the hospital room in which the interrogation here took place is not a public place devoted to assembly or debate, or a court or other judicial body, his practice of law in this setting was permitted by Rule 3.10.

The Special Masters find Respondent’s arguments fail for the following reasons:

The rules of statutory construction dictate an interpretation of the rule that is plainly opposite from Respondent’s interpretation. People v. G.S., 2018 CO 31, ¶ 32 holds that the standard principles of statutory construction apply to the interpretation of court rules. A court’s primary purpose in construing a statute or rule is “to ascertain and give effect to the legislature’s intent.” Linnebur v. People, 2020 CO 79M, ¶ 9. Courts accept the intent of the drafters of a uniform act, such as the Model Code of Judicial Conduct, as the legislature’s intent when it adopts that uniform act. Giguere v. SJS Family Enterprises, Ltd., 155 P.3d 462 (Colo. App. 2006). To ascertain the legislature’s intent, “we look first to the language of the statute, giving its words and phrases their plain and ordinary meanings.” Id. “If the plain language of the statute demonstrates a clear legislative intent, we look no further in conducting our analysis.” Id. If, and only if, “the language is ambiguous – that is, if it is reasonably susceptible of multiple interpretations – then we may consider other aids to statutory construction. Id.

Here, the language of the rule, read as a whole, yields only one reasonable interpretation, which is this: Rule 3.10 prohibits judges from practicing law unless it is explicitly permitted by law. A widely recognized exception as “permitted by law” is the rule that part-time judges may still practice law. C.R. S. 13-6-204(2). Rule 3.10 does, however, permit judges to give free and informal advice to family members, such as by drafting or editing documents in a behind-the-scenes manner. But the drafters of the rule intentionally limited a judge's permissible advice to informal, private settings by explicitly stating that a judge may never act as a family member's lawyer "in any forum." See Rule 3.10 (emphasis added). The operative word here is "any," not "forum." In other words, a judge may not act as counsel to a family member in "any" forum, whether that forum is public or private. Thus, the word "any" here essentially turns "forum" into a synonym for the word "setting." Respondent specifically advised the investigator he was acting as counsel for his brother-in-law, during a formal, recorded interview between a District Attorney Investigator and Respondent's brother-in-law, which is a violation of the rule. Respondent's interpretation also ignores the effect of the word "any" preceding the word "forum." See Ceja v. Lemire, 154 P.3d 1064, 1066 (Colo. 2007) ("If courts can give effect to the ordinary meaning of words used by the legislature, the statute should be construed as written, giving full effect to the words chosen, as it is presumed.") Here, the only way to give full effect to the word "any" preceding "forum" is to interpret "any forum" to mean that a judge may not act as a lawyer for a family member in any setting, whether public or private.

Given the above, the plain and ordinary language of Rule 3.10 requires just one reasonable interpretation of the rule. There is no ambiguity, so considering other rules of statutory interpretation is not permissible. As such, Respondent's reliance on the definition of the word "forum" in Black's Law Dictionary is not appropriate or permitted.

Additionally, Respondent's interpretation of Rule 3.10 fails because it is directly contradicted by persuasive authority that has considered and rejected this same argument. In Arizona's Judicial Ethics Advisory Opinion No. 2010-06 the Advisory Committee held a judge could not represent his spouse in negotiations with an insurance company related to an injury the spouse sustained in a car accident. The Committee held that "had the drafters of the canon and [Rule 3.10] intended that 'forum' be restricted to a courthouse context, they would have so stated, and the Reporters' Notes would have had no need to engage in the discussion of 'informal setting' and the other matters set therein. The rule would have been a bright line one." The Special Masters note Arizona Rule 3.1 mirrors Colorado's Rule 3.10. The Special Masters find the opinion to be well reasoned and applicable to the facts here.

To conclude, the plain meaning of Rule 3.10 prohibits exactly what happened here. Respondent did not merely offer free, informal legal advice to a family member in a behind-the-scenes manner. Instead, he formally acted as his brother-in-law's legal counsel during a recorded interview of the brother-in-law, and represented to the investigator that he was doing the same, and Respondent believed he had the authority to do so. As such, the Special Masters find by clear and convincing evidence that Respondent violated Canon Rule 3.10.

2. Violation of Canon Rule 1.3 which reads as follows:

A judge shall not abuse the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal or economic interests of the judge or others, or allow others to do so.

Respondent abused the prestige of his judicial office and thereby violated Canon Rule 1.3 when he spoke to the DA's investigator about his brother-in-law's good character and attacked the credibility of the complaining witness through the brother-in-law's reports as well as Respondent's own opinion as to the character of the complaining witness.

Respondent made it clear to the investigator he was a district court judge. In his first recorded call with Investigator Huston on June 1, 2023, he identified himself as a District Court judge in the 17th Judicial District. As stated above, the Special Masters find no issue with his identification as a judge in this first phone call. The tone and tenor of that call supports his being transparent and merely providing information and context in that first call. The Respondent in that call does not emphasize the fact or appear to use the fact to cause the investigator to take or not to take any action. In his second recorded call with the investigator later that same day, he said, “This is Judge Kiesnowski,” when the investigator answered the phone. In that second recorded call, it was not relevant for Respondent to identify himself as a judge, which creates a reasonable inference that Respondent wanted to remind the investigator of his status as a judge. Additionally, the investigator testified that as a sign of respect to Respondent, he departed from his usual style of investigation by questioning in a deferential manner, even giving cues about questions of a more incriminating nature.

With Respondent’s status as a judge well established, the Special Masters find by clear and convincing evidence that Respondent then tried to advance the personal interests of his brother-in-law throughout the brother-in-law’s interrogation. Respondent vouched for the brother-in-law’s good character when he said, “He’s a hard-working guy.” Exhibit 12, pg 4 line 20. Respondent effectively called the alleged victim a liar when he made the following statements:

- “She’s – historically she’s a total loose cannon.” Ex 12, Pg. 4 line 6 which appears to be Respondent’s own impression, not, as Respondent argues, simply conveying information his brother-in-law reported.
- “And we’re going to give you a list of his employes who can corroborate her behavior” Ex. 12 pg 4 lines 10 – 12. Here, Respondent is inserting himself into the investigation and promising his own follow up to provide damning information about the complaining witness to the investigator.
- “so, she’s very savvy. She knows, if, for example, if she is labeled a crime victim, she gets to stay [in the country].” Ex. 12, pg. 4 lines 20 -21.
- “She hit him and split his lip. He has video.” Ex 12 pg 6 line 6.
- “I’ve seen it . . . I saw her with her phone hit him in the face.”
- “She repeatedly accuses him of having multiple affairs.” Ex. 12 pg 9, lines 8 – 10.
- “She has made statements that she will self-inflict injury and say that he did it.” Ex 12 pg 22 lines 5 – 7.

It is significant here that Respondent made the above comments to the investigator, who is the lead investigator for the 13th Judicial District Attorney’s Office, which office would be making the decision about whether or not to charge Respondent’s brother-in-law with a crime.

Despite the above, Respondent maintains that he did not violate Rule 1.3 because, in making the above statements, he was not “testifying” as a character witness. He makes this argument because Comment 1 to Canon Rule 3.3 (which bars a judge from voluntarily testifying as a character witness) states that “A judge who, without being subpoenaed, testifies as a character witness abuses the prestige of judicial office” in violation of Rule 1.3. Respondent argues that to “testify” as a character witness, a judge must be under oath, and since he was not under oath during his brother-in-law’s interrogation, he did not “testify” as a character witness.

This argument misses the mark. The allegation is that Respondent abused the prestige of his judicial office to advance the personal interests of his brother-in-law. The Special Masters find that he has. The factual allegations made by Respondent, as well as his tone and tenor while making derogatory statements regarding the complaining witness, could be for no other reason than to persuade the investigator of her lack of credibility.

Respondent also alleges through his testimony that he was merely acting as a conduit of information provided by his brother-in-law so that the investigator would have a better understanding of the situation. However, that argument fails. Certainly, some statements and opinions were stated as information provided by Respondent’s brother-in-law. However, at times Respondent provided his own observations and opinions, and corroborated his brother-in-law’s experience when Respondent indicated he has seen videos of the same.

3. Violation of Canon Rule 1.2 which reads as follows:

A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

First, Comment 1 to the Rules states: “Public confidence in the judiciary is eroded by improper conduct and conduct that creates the appearance of impropriety. This principle applies to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge.” (emphasis added). Comment 2 to the rule states: “A judge should expect to be the subject of public scrutiny that might be viewed as burdensome if applied to other citizens.” The point is twofold -- that judges are held to a higher standard of conduct than the ordinary person, and this principle applies to both their professional and their personal lives.

Respondent’s conduct appeared to attempt to compromise the independence and impartiality of the judiciary. Respondent inserted himself into a criminal interrogation of his brother-in-law, who was a suspect in a felony assault case. He played a major role in the interrogation, actively conducting himself as legal counsel to his brother-in-law. And, as found by the Special Masters above, he attempted to persuade the investigator of the bad character of his brother-in-law’s accuser and the good character of his brother-in-law, in an attempt to influence the investigator’s charging decision. This was the opposite of judicial independence and impartiality. Thus, it violated Canon Rule 1.2.

Second, Rule 1.2 dictates that “actual impropriety” violates the rule. Comment 5 to the rule states: “Actual improprieties include violations of law, court rules or provisions of this Code.” The Special Masters have found Respondent violated Canon Rule 1.3 and 3.10 as stated above and therefore necessarily find that he committed actual impropriety in violation of Rule 1.2.

In addition, Respondent violated Rule 1.2 because his conduct created an “appearance of impropriety.” Comment 5 to the rule states: “The test for appearance of impropriety is whether the conduct would create in reasonable minds a perception that the judge violated this Code or engaged in other conduct that reflects adversely on the judge’s honesty, impartiality, temperament, or fitness to serve as a judge.” The “appearance of impropriety” standard is an objective one. See e.g. Inquiry Concerning a Judge, 822 P.2d 1333 (Alaska 1991) (test is whether a judge fails “to use reasonable care to prevent objectively reasonable persons from believing an impropriety was afoot”; [t]he objectively reasonable person is not a well-trained lawyer or a highly sophisticated observer of public affairs. Neither is this person a cynic skeptical of the government and the courts. Moreover, an objectively reasonable person is not necessarily one who is informed of every conceivably relevant fact. He or she is the average person encountered in society.”)

Here, Respondent’s conduct would create in the mind of an ordinary and reasonably objective citizen the perception that Respondent was not independent or impartial (i.e. the very touchstones of being an acceptable judge). His insertion of himself into a serious case and in such a major way, not only would raise eyebrows, it actually did, which is why a complaint was filed. Moreover, his attempt to influence the charging decision by assassinating the alleged victim’s character to the DA’s lead investigator would cause an ordinary and reasonable person to perceive that the judge was not independent or impartial. As such, Respondent’s conduct created an appearance of impropriety and thereby violated Rule 1.2.

Despite the above, Respondent claims that he did not violate Rule 1.2 because his comments bolstering his brother-in-law’s character and attacking the accuser’s were not intended to either influence the charging decision or to diminish the credibility of the alleged victim.

Respondent’s argument here fails for two reasons.

First, because the standard for determining the appearance of impropriety is objective, a judge’s own perception of his or her motivation behind challenged conduct is irrelevant to the analysis. See e.g. People for Ethical Treatment of Animals v. Bobby Berosini, Ltd., 894 P.2d 337 (Nev. 1995) overruled in part on other grounds by Towbin Dodge, LLC v. Dist. Ct., 112 P.3d 1063 (2005) (judge’s subjective impartiality irrelevant); In re Case of Snow, 674 A.2d 573 (N.H. 1996) (“There is no intent requirement in these Canons. In fact, it is practically impossible to impose a mens rea element on the ‘appearance of impropriety’ standard.”); In re Larsen, 616 A.2d 529 (Pa. 1992) (judge’s conduct warranted “disciplinary action despite the absence of an improper motive because the conduct by itself raised an appearance of impropriety, which could undermine public confidence in our judiciary.”).

Second, it is simply not credible for Respondent to claim that his comments bolstering his brother-in-law's character and attacking the accuser's were not intended to either influence the charging decision or to diminish the credibility of the alleged victim. Respondent has been a lawyer for over thirty years. He was a district court judge for nearly 13 years. He estimates that he has presided over approximately 100 criminal trials. It is not believable that he was simply "offering information" without any intent attached when he said to the investigator things about the alleged victim, such as: "She is savvy and knows if she is labelled a crime victim, she gets to stay [in the country]," or: "She has made statements that she will self-inflict injury and say that he did it."

The Special Masters reject Respondent's arguments and find by clear and convincing evidence Respondent violated Rule 1.2.

4. Judge Kiesnowski violated Canon Rule 1.1 by virtue of violating Canon Rules 1.2, 1.3, and 3.10.

Can Rule 1.1 reads as follows:

A judge shall comply with the law, including the Code of Judicial Conduct.

As found by clear and convincing evidence, Respondent violated Canon Rules 1.2, 1.3 and 3.10. By doing so, he necessarily also violated Rule 1.1. Therefore, the Special Masters find by clear and convincing evidence that Respondent violated Rule 1.1.

RECOMMENDED DISCIPLINE

Judging is not merely a "job." It is the privilege of presiding over society's most precious asset - justice. That is why judges are held to a higher standard of conduct than the ordinary person. And it is why the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct applies equally to the judge's professional and personal life. The misconduct here is serious and persistent. The present misconduct occurred in Respondent's private life. But that is no excuse. His behavior in the instant matter, combined with his prior disciplinary history, demonstrates a pattern of misconduct. Respondent's demeanor, manner and at times dismissive and indignant attitude while testifying about the prior disciplinary matter, reveals he knew better. Respondent during these proceedings has shown no remorse. He has shown no acknowledgement of his violation of the canons. His complete disavowal of any wrongdoing in the private censure, to which he stipulated to the underlying, supporting facts, is offensive to the Special Masters.

When evaluating the appropriateness of judicial disciplinary sanctions in general, the Special Masters reviewed the following list of factors recognized in Matter of Deming, 736 P.2d 639, 659 (Wash. 1987):

(a) whether the misconduct is an isolated instance or evidences a pattern of conduct;

Respondent's misconduct is not isolated. It is instead a pattern. A review of his private censure provided at hearing, but not attached herein reveals that for years he abused his status to harass, intimidate and retaliate against judicial personnel who were subordinate to him. After being disciplined for this misconduct and being forced to resign, he nevertheless, while still on the bench, and within months of his private censure, and before the effective date of his resignation, engaged in the misconduct that is the subject of this case.

(b) the nature, extent and frequency of occurrence of the acts of misconduct;

As noted above, Respondent's misconduct, i.e. the general abuse of the status of judicial office, has been a pattern for years.

(c) whether the misconduct occurred in or out of the courtroom;

Respondent's prior and current misconduct did not occur in the courtroom.

(d) whether the misconduct occurred in the judge's official capacity or in his private life;

Respondent's prior misconduct as detailed in his private censure occurred in his official capacity as a judge. The current misconduct occurred in his private capacity.

(e) whether the judge has acknowledged or recognized that the acts occurred;

During the hearing held September 6, 2023, Respondent adamantly refused to acknowledge any wrongdoing in his prior matter. Furthermore, he disavowed the stipulated prior misconduct which served as the basis for his private censure and ultimate resignation. He has further failed to acknowledge any misconduct in the present case. The closest he has come to admitting any misconduct in the present case is an allowance that he can see how someone might view his actions not maintaining impartiality and independence in the judiciary.

(f) whether the judge has evidenced an effort to change or modify his conduct;

Respondent has not evidenced any effort to change or modify his pattern of abusing the status of judicial office, as shown by the fact that just three months after being disciplined and being forced to resign, he engaged in the same general form of misconduct, i.e. abuse of the prestige of judicial office. Further, he doubled down on his denials of the of the private case, despite the enormous harm he caused over a significant period of time.

(g) the length of service on the bench;

Respondent served as a District Court Judge for approximately 12.5 years, i.e. from 2011 to June of 2023.

(h) whether there have been prior complaints about this judge;

There have been prior complaints as outlined in his prior judicial discipline proceeding which resulted in the sanction of his resignation.

(i) the effect the misconduct has upon the integrity of and respect for the judiciary;

Respondent's prior and current misconduct is exactly the sort of behavior that erodes public confidence in the judiciary. The narrative is essentially this: a person in power abuses his status/power to harass, intimidate, and retaliate against his perceived enemies (i.e. the prior misconduct). Or he uses his status/power/influence to try to benefit those close to him, like family members (i.e. the current misconduct). This sort of narrative is extremely damaging to the public's perception of the integrity of the judiciary.

(j) the extent to which the judge exploited his position to satisfy his personal desires.

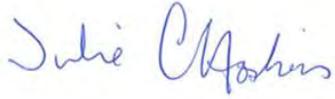

In Respondent's prior disciplinary case, he exploited his position as a judge to retaliate against a subordinate. He tried to make this individual's work life intolerable. He effectively got the employee demoted. And he even tried to get the employee fired once this employee was reassigned to be a different judge's staff. All of this was to exact a personal vendetta against a person with less power and influence who Respondent perceived had wronged him. As stated by his counsel during closings, Respondent did some bad things, and he did some terrible things in the prior matter. Again, the Special Masters noting the facts referred to are facts Respondent himself refuses to acknowledge. In the present case, Respondent exploited his position to try to benefit his brother-in-law.

Respondent presents to the Special Masters mitigation for his behavior in that during the time and place this took place he felt he had no choice based on the hysterics of his mother-in-law and his wife's insistence he help her brother. He argues his position was untenable. The Special Masters do not find his argument to be persuasive as a defense or as a point of mitigation. The factors outlined in Matter of Deming, simply do not support a different outcome in this matter.

As this is a second disciplinary action, and given Respondent is retired at this point, the only appropriate sanction here is public censure. There is no other more severe sanction available, or it is likely the Special Masters would recommend the same.

NOTICE OF EXCEPTIONS

Robert W. Kiesnowski, a Former Judge of the Adams County District Court (17th Judicial District) sets forth the Notice of Exceptions to the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (CCJD) and their amended recommendation for judicial discipline.

In support of these exceptions, Former Judge Kiesnowski states the following:

I. Background

This is a petition with very few factual disputes. Respondent Kiesnowski sets forth these exceptions because he believes that the recommendation of the Special Masters did not fully take into consideration, Respondent Kiesnowski's predicament and attempts to do a balancing act between what he believed was the appropriate short-term transparent representation of his brother-in-law, Mr. Vaughn and his judicial employment.

II. Factual Allegations

Respondent Kiesnowski petitions the Court to consider these additions and corrections to the CCJD's allegations.

1. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that he met with Chief Investigator of the 13th Judicial District Attorney's Office, Mr. Huston. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that he telephoned Chief Investigator Huston and early in that conversation, disclosed that he was a present District Court Judge in the 17th Judicial District. Respondent Kiesnowski testified that he made this disclosure in an effort to be fully transparent so as not to blindsides Investigator Huston if he later learned that information. Respondent Kiesnowski admitted in the telephone conversation with Chief Inv. Huston that he had spoken to his brother-in-law Vaughn about the ongoing investigation. Respondent Kiesnowski advised Chief Inv. Huston that he had garnered factual information from Mr. Vaughn which would be helpful to Chief Inv. Huston's investigation. The investigator promised that he would contact Respondent Kiesnowski before he went to interview Mr. Vaughn who was still hospitalized with serious stab wounds. Mr. Vaughn was first in intensive care at St. Anthony's Central and later, in a general surgical.

2. Respondent Kiesnowski had been alerted by his brother-in-law Vaughn that Chief Inv. Huston was at St. Anthony Central to interview him. Respondent Kiesnowski believed he had an agreement with Chief Inv. Huston that Chief Inv. Huston would not attempt to interview Mr. Vaughn at St. Anthony's without advising Respondent Kiesnowski. He had been alerted by Mr. Vaughn that Chief Inv. Huston was at St. Anthony's to interview him without regard to his promise. Respondent Kiesnowski raced to the hospital, consulted with Mr. Vaughn and consented to a formal interview by Chief Inv. Huston. In the hurry scurry, Respondent Kiesnowski recognized that he has a potential difficulty with Canon Rule 3.10. As Respondent Kiesnowski was at home, he made the quick decisions to review Canon Rule 3.10 and used the only available research tools he had available. The research tools, not only the Canon, but also the definitions from Black's Law and Heritage Dictionary. He reviewed those sources to determine whether his actions helping Mr. Vaughn were prohibited because he would be serving as Mr. Vaughn's lawyer in any "forum". After hurried review, Respondent Kiesnowski determined that an interview with the police investigators was not representation in any "forum". After arrival at St. Anthony's Central, Respondent Kiesnowski even told Chief Inv. Huston of his struggle to research whether his representation in a police interrogation was any "forum". With that brief misunderstanding, Respondent Kiesnowski agreed to a formal interview in order to help Chief Inv. Huston and to be fully transparent. Respondent Kiesnowski told Chief Inv. Huston he would be acting as his brother-in-law's counsel and requested Mr. Vaughn wait for instructions after each police question. After the interrogation and in a cordial atmosphere, Chief Inv. Huston walking down the hall in the surgical recovery wing of St. Anthony's Central told Respondent Kiesnowski that he forgot to have Mr. Vaughn sign a medical release. To make things easier for Chief Inv. Huston, Respondent Kiesnowski signed the medical release. Respondent Kiesnowski was under the belief that signing the medical release was a convenience for the investigator and not representation in any "forum".

3. In an effort to complete his transparent focus with the Chief Inv., Respondent Kiesnowski added to Mr. Vaughn's statement in an effort to be helpful. Respondent Kiesnowski knew that his brother-in-law Vaughn had been in intensive care recently, was in extreme pain, under treatment with opiates and not thinking very clearly. Respondent Kiesnowski was trying to help Chief Inv. Huston with as much information as possible and trusted the information would be vetted by Chief Inv. Huston and other officers of the Ft. Morgan law enforcement establishment. Respondent Kiesnowski denies that he ever intended to slander or attack the credibility of Mr. Vaughn's wife complainant in the initial domestic violence allegation and also the stabber of Mr. Vaughn requiring his extensive hospital stay. Respondent Kiesnowski believed that he was just giving assistance and that other law enforcement authorities would track down, vet the information and to determine its substantive credibility.

4. Respondent Kiesnowski admits that if he had more time to research his position regarding the violation of Canon allegations, he certainly would have taken advantage of it. In the time Chief Inv. Huston disregarded the previous agreement and unannounced appearance at the hospital looking to ambush Mr. Vaughn. Respondent Kiesnowski scrambled the best he could to get the best information in the shortest time under pressure, Respondent Kiesnowski did the best he could under this difficult situation.

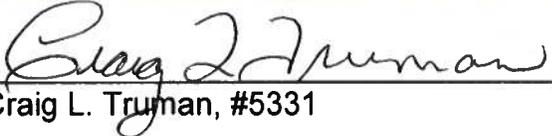

5. Respondent Kiesnowski believed that his representation of his brother-in-law Vaughn was not serving as a lawyer in any forum. Further, Respondent Kiesnowski believes that after checking the definition of testimony, he believed that he and Mr. Vaughn were not giving testimony in a police interrogation. Respondent Kiesnowski steadfastly believes he was not vouching for the credibility of his brother-in-law or commenting on the credibility of the alleged victim in violation of Canon Rule 3.3. Respondent Kiesnowski expected all the information given to Chief Inv. Huston would be verified for truthfulness. Respondent Kiesnowski believed that his information to supplement Mr. Vaughn's inaccuracies or memory lapses would be of assistance to Chief Inv. Huston and was certainly not testimony in any court of law or oath.

WHEREFORE, Respondent Robert W. Kiesnowski, a Former Judge of the Adams County District Court, requests this Court to take into account his situation as it occurred to him and credit his attempts to find an answer under pressure in a very short period of time. Respondent Kiesnowski wants the Court to know that while he may have made mistakes given the circumstance, he did so in good faith, trying to do the best he could in the shortest period of time under pressure.

Standard of Review

Challenges to the Special Masters' findings of fact are evaluated under the clearly erroneous standard of review. Matter of Booras, 2019 CO 16, ¶ 18. Challenges to the Special Masters' legal conclusions are reviewed de novo. Id.

Argument

I. Canon Rule 3.10 (Practice of Law).

Kiesnowski does not dispute that he practiced law in this case. The only dispute below was about the meaning of the word “forum” in the text of Rule 3.10 and whether it bars the practice of law only in public forums, such a court room (which Kiesnowski argued), or whether it instead bars the practice of law in any setting, whether public or private (which the People argued). The Special Masters agreed with the People.

Here, it is not clear from Kiesnowski's exceptions if he is challenging the Special Masters' legal ruling on this matter, which would be subject to de novo review. Presumably he is not, however, because he offers no argument and no legal authority to support a claim that the Special Masters erred as a matter of law.

It appears instead that Kiesnowski is merely arguing that the Special Masters erred factually when they rejected his proffered mitigation that in the “hurry scurry” circumstances of this case, “he did his best” in a “difficult situation.” See Exceptions, ¶¶ 2 & 4. This argument fails, however. To be clear, Kiesnowski is not arguing that the Special Masters failed to consider this mitigation. In fact, Kiesnowski offered this same mitigation at the formal hearing, and the Special Masters explicitly rejected it as either a defense or as mitigation when they wrote the following in their report:

Respondent presents to the Special Masters mitigation for his behavior in that during the time and place this took place he felt he had no choice based on the hysterics of his mother-in-law and his wife's insistence he help her brother. He argues his position was untenable. The Special Masters do not find his argument to be persuasive as a defense or as a point of mitigation. The factors outlined in Matter of Deming simply do not support a different outcome in this matter. [Report of the Special Masters, p. 15].

Kiesnowski offers no evidence to support his argument that the Special Masters “clearly erred” when they rejected his mitigation to a violation of Rule 3.10. Moreover, his proffered mitigation makes little sense. He acts as if the criminal interrogation of his brother-in-law was unavoidable and that he, Kiesnowski, had to act to help his family member in this pseudo “crisis.” But this purported crisis was no crisis at all. Kiesnowski is a very experienced lawyer and judge. He knew perfectly well that he could have directed his brother-in-law to refuse to be interrogated, which Kiesnowski admitted at the formal hearing. See Transcript, pp. 136-138. This would have eliminated this purported “crisis” completely. It would have avoided the “hurry scurry.” And it would have provided Kiesnowski plenty of time to research appropriately whether he could in fact engage in the practice of law by representing someone in a criminal interrogation without violating Canon Rule 3.10.

Put simply, the Special Masters rejected Kiesnowski's proffered mitigation for good reason. This court should do the same as well.

II. Canon Rule 1.3 (Abuse of the Prestige of Judicial Office).

Kiesnowski makes two arguments in exception to the Special Masters' finding that he violated Canon Rule 1.3.

First, he challenges the Special Masters' factual finding that he used his status as a judge to advance the interests of his brother-in-law by bolstering the brother-in-law's character while simultaneously attacking the character of the brother-in-law's accuser. Yet Kiesnowski provides no argument or evidentiary support of any kind to establish that the Special Masters' finding here was "clearly erroneous." See Booras, ¶ 18 (factual findings may only be reversed if clearly erroneous). All Kiesnowski does is reiterate the same argument he made below - namely, that the comments he made about the brother-in-law and his accuser were merely to help the investigator by offering information, which he expected the investigator to later verify. But the Special Masters explicitly rejected this argument when they wrote in their report the following:

The factual allegations made by Respondent, as well as his tone and tenor while making derogatory statements regarding the complaining witness, could be for no other reason than to persuade the investigator of her lack of credibility. Respondent also alleges through his testimony that he was merely acting as a conduit of information provided by his brother-in-law so that the investigator would have a better understanding of the situation. However, that argument fails. Certainly, some statements and opinions were stated as information provided by Respondent's brother-in-law. However, at times Respondent provided his own observations and opinions, and corroborated his brother-in-law's experience when Respondent indicated he has seen videos of the same. [Report of the Special Masters, p. 9].

Second, Kiesnowski argues that he did not violate Rule 1.3 (abuse of the prestige of office) because he did not violate Rule 3.3 (testifying as a character witness), as if the two rules are the same. But this argument is a red herring. Kiesnowski was not charged with a violation of Rule 3.3, so his argument is irrelevant. Moreover, the Commission need not prove a violation of Rule 3.3 in order to prove a violation of Rule 1.3. Again, the Special Masters considered and rejected this argument on page 9 of their report, and Kiesnowski offers no argument of legal support of any kind to reverse that ruling. See also CCJD Record of Proceedings, SC Pre-Hearing Brief, pp. 30-32 for a more robust discussion of why this argument should be rejected.

For the above reasons, this court should reject Kiesnowski's exception to the Special Masters' report finding that he violated Canon Rule 1.3.

III. Canon Rule 1.2 (Independence, Integrity, and Impartiality; Avoiding Impropriety and the Appearance of Impropriety).

Kiesnowski does not contest any legal or factual findings made by the Special Masters' conclusion that he violated Canon Rule 1.2 by engaging in conduct that created an appearance of impropriety.

Conclusion

Other than reiterating arguments he made below, Kiesnowski's exceptions to the Special Masters' report offer no real argument, and certainly no evidentiary support, for this court to find that the Special Masters erred in any of their legal rulings or clearly erred in any of their factual findings. Therefore, this court should reject Kiesnowski's exceptions and accept the recommendation from the Commission to publicly censure Kiesnowski for his multiple and repeated violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION ON PARTIES' STIPULATION TO DISMISS DISABILITY PROCEEDING

At issue before the Special Master is the Parties' Stipulation to Dismiss the Disability Proceeding. Having reviewed the appended Stipulation [Exhibit A], the Special Master enters the following report and recommendation:

This disability proceeding was initiated by Respondent's Verified Motion Pursuant to the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline Rule 33.5(c), filed in CCJD case numbers 21-138 and 22-112 on August 4, 2022. Respondent asserted that medical and mental health conditions prevented him from assisting in his defense in the pending disciplinary matters. Per Colo. RJD 33.5(c),

Respondent's Motion automatically stayed the disciplinary proceedings against him, and the Supreme Court appointed this Special Master to "consider all relevant factors and/or stipulations of the parties, conduct a hearing if necessary, and report to the Colorado Supreme Court concerning the alleged disability of the Honorable John E. Scipione."

On October 25, 2022, this Special Master entered an Order re: Legal Standard, defining the legal standard to be applied in determining whether Respondent is able to assist in his defense in the disciplinary proceedings. Following that order, a court-appointed cardiologist and two court-appointed mental health experts conducted independent medical examinations of Respondent.¹ Applying the legal standard, the three IME experts concluded that Respondent was able to assist in his defense. The expert reports are part of the record.

Following receipt of the expert reports, on December 2, 2022, the Parties submitted a Stipulation to Dismiss the Disability Proceeding. By that stipulation, Respondent acknowledges that, under the legal standard as determined by this Special Master, he cannot meet his burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that he is unable to assist in his defense. Respondent made a record that he disagrees with the legal standard applied in this proceeding, and in the Stipulation, Respondent included a reservation of his right to challenge the legal standard adopted by this Special Master for this disability proceeding on appeal. The Commission likewise reserved its right to request payment of its fees and costs for this disability proceeding in the disciplinary matter, as may be allowed by Colo. RJD 36(g).

¹ The cardiologist did not physically examine Respondent, but conducted a review of Respondent's medical records and issued an expert report.

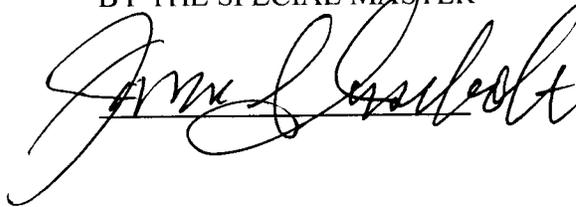

On December 2, 2022, this Special Master vacated the evidentiary hearing set for December 6-8, 2022, finding that based on the Parties' Stipulation, no hearing was necessary.

The Special Master recommends, pursuant to Colo. RJD 33.5(c)(2), that the Supreme Court accept the Stipulation to Dismiss the Disability Proceeding and resume the disciplinary proceedings against Respondent.

Pursuant to Colo. RJD 33.5(i), this recommendation of the Special Master and any orders of the Supreme Court shall be public.

EXHIBIT A—STIPULATION FOR RESOLUTION OF FORMAL PROCEEDINGS

The members of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission”), upon agreement of Complainant and Judge John E. Scipione, file

the following recommended stipulation for resolution of formal proceedings according to Colo. RJD 37(e):

SUMMARY AND STIPULATED FACTS

Judge Scipione is an 18th Judicial District Court Judge, having been appointed to his office effective September 19, 2018. After serving as a magistrate in the 18th Judicial District from 2012-2017, Judge Scipione served as an Arapahoe County Court Judge effective May 31, 2017. Judge Scipione is subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission and of this Court.

The Commission's jurisdiction is limited to recommending discipline based upon Judge Scipione's conduct as a judge and as a candidate for judicial office. CO ST CJC Application; see also CO ST CJC Rule 4.1.

Judge Scipione, on at least three occasions, used his position as a judicial officer to seek intimate relationships with Judicial Department employees or court personnel. While serving as a magistrate, Judge Scipione engaged in an approximately 1-year extra-marital personal relationship with his judicial assistant (Judicial Assistant 1). Judge Scipione did not report this relationship to his supervising Chief Judge or the Judicial Department's Human Resources Division, as required by the Judicial Department's personnel rules.¹ As relevant to the

Commission's jurisdiction to impose discipline in this matter, Judge Scipione did not disclose the existence of this relationship when he applied to become a county court judge in 2017 and when he applied to become a district court judge in 2018.²

In 2021, the Commission notified Judge Scipione of allegations of judicial misconduct made by a more recent judicial assistant (Judicial Assistant 2) and an employment relationship. Specifically, Attachment F prohibited circumstances where:

One party is a justice, judge or magistrate working within the same court or judicial district of the other party who is employed as a classified or contract employee in that court or judicial district.

Attachment F further explained that:

Failure to comply with this policy may result in cancellation of a contract, corrective and/or disciplinary action, including termination, or a referral to the Commission on Judicial Discipline.

² The standard judicial application form asks:

46. Is there any circumstance or event in your personal or professional life which, if brought to the attention of the Commission, might tend to affect adversely your qualifications to serve on the court for which you have applied? If so, please explain.

The standard form further requires the applicant to certify its accuracy, completeness, and compliance with the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. With awareness of his unreported relationship, Judge Scipione responded on both his applications: "No."

unpaid intern/law clerk (Law Clerk 1). These allegations related to claims of sexual harassment, including that Judge Scipione referred to the Judicial Assistant 2 using a derogatory term, openly discussed his involvement in an alternative “lifestyle” of consensual non-monogamy and asked the intern/law clerk to assist him in using the Tinder dating application. In its investigation, the Commission learned that Judge Scipione pursued a personal relationship with a former law clerk (Law Clerk 2). Judge Scipione failed to disclose the personal relationship with Judicial Assistant 1 and his conduct with Law Clerk 2 in these disciplinary proceedings. Judge Scipione represented that former staff and others would affirm that he never engaged in similar misconduct in the workplace, without disclosing that he had done so in the past.

Separately, Judge Scipione contacted another judge and that judge’s probate clerk in a different jurisdiction to seek favorable treatment in probate proceedings involving Judge Scipione’s father’s estate.

Following a request from the Commission, this Court issued an order on August 4, 2022 that temporarily suspended Judge Scipione from his judicial duties with pay according to Colo. RJD 34(a). The disciplinary proceedings were stayed for approximately six months pending resolution of disability proceedings initiated by Judge Scipione under Colo. RJD 33.5(c).

COLORADO CODE OF JUDICIAL CONDUCT

Canon Rule 1.1

2. Canon Rule 1.1 provides, in relevant part:

Judge Scipione also inappropriately referred to his judicial assistant in derogatory terms.

13. Judge Scipione admits to knowingly engaging in conduct that violates Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, and 2.9 by initiating ex parte communications with another

14. Judge Scipione admits to knowingly engaging in conduct that violates Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 2.3, 2.16, and 4.1(A)(11) by failing to disclose, on his judicial applications, an unreported intimate personal relationship with Judicial Assistant 1 while serving as a 18th Judicial District Court Magistrate. He also did not disclose this prior relationship during the course of the disciplinary proceedings.

Based on the foregoing, the Commission and the Respondent agree and recommend that:

- a. Judge Scipione shall resign from judicial office immediately upon filing of this Stipulation;
- b. Judge Scipione shall receive a written public censure from the Supreme Court according to Colo. RJD 36(e) for violations of Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.16, 2.3, 2.8, 2.9, and 4.1, above;
- c. While the stipulated resignation and admissions to judicial misconduct shall be effective immediately, the parties further agree that other sanctions, including requests for an award of attorney's fees and costs and the Colorado Judicial Department's recoupment of certain salary and benefits paid shall remain open for further determination, with both sides given the opportunity to brief the issue to the Special Masters; and

- d. Judge Scipione shall, apart from being able to address the remaining sanctions contemplated through Colo. RJD 36(g) and (h) with a final determination by this Court, waive his rights to a hearing in formal proceedings and review by this Court as provided according to Colo. RJD 37(e) and Colo. RJD 40.

The Parties further acknowledge that this stipulated partial resolution, the sanctions imposed by the Colorado Supreme Court, and the prospective record of proceedings as defined by Colo. RJD 33 shall become public upon their respective filings.

Stipulated and agreed this 19th day of January, 2023.

The Parties have reached a partial agreement to resolve this matter. The Parties' agreement is attached as "Exhibit A—Stipulation for Resolution of Formal Proceedings." The stipulation resolves the merits of the alleged rule violations with recognition that Respondent Judge John E. Scipione will resign immediately and be publicly censured for his violations of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. The stipulation does not resolve other sanctions sought by the People under Colo. RJD 36(g) and (h). Both Parties will argue the issue of other sanctions under Colo. Because the expectation is that the record in this matter, as defined by Colo. RJD 33, will be supplemented with the special masters' report and the Commission's final recommendations, the Commission requests that this Court take no action at this time apart from: 1) acknowledging receipt of the present filing; 2) acknowledging Respondent's immediate resignation; and 3) recognizing that this notice and accompanying stipulation is a matter of public record upon filing, according to Colo. RJD 37(e).¹

In the Matter of John E. Scipione, a Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court.	Supreme Court Case No: 2022SA236 & 2022SA14
ORDER OF COURT

On January 19, 2023, the Commission filed a “Notice of Colo. RJD 37(e) Stipulation and Partial Recommendation for Sanctions” with the Court, along with “Exhibit A – Stipulation for Resolution of Formal Proceedings.” That filing indicated that the parties had reached a partial agreement to resolve this matter.

The Parties’ Stipulation purported to resolve the merits of the alleged rule violations with the recognition that Respondent Judge John E. Scipione would resign immediately and be publicly censured for his violations of the Code of Judicial Conduct. The Stipulation did not resolve other sanctions sought by the People under Colo. RJD 36(g) and (h). The Commission’s Notice indicated that the parties would argue the remaining issues in briefing before the Special Masters, who would issue a report to the Commission under Colo. RJD 32. The Notice further indicated that upon conclusion of those further proceedings, the Commission would file with the court a completed record of proceedings under Colo. RJD 33 along with the Commission's final recommendations under Colo. RJD 37. In light of these unresolved issues regarding other sanctions sought by the Commission, the Commission requested that the Court take no action at that time apart from acknowledging receipt of the Commission's Notice, Respondent's immediate resignation, and the fact that the Commission's Notice and accompanying stipulation was a matter of public record.

On January 20, 2023, consistent with the Commission's request, the Court issued an Order acknowledging receipt of the Commission's Notice and Stipulation; acknowledging the Respondent's immediate resignation; and stating that the Notice and Stipulation are a matter of public record.

Since that date, the Court has received nothing further from the Commission. Because this matter has remained pending for over a year, the Court ORDERS the Special Masters to provide the Court with a status report on this matter on or before February 26, 2024.

2. Filed concurrently with this motion, the Commission today files its formal recommendation for discipline with this court, which should obviate the need for a status update from the special masters. As a result, the Commission requests this court to vacate its order to the special masters to provide a status update.
3. The timeline of this case has been as follows:
 - a. January 19, 2023: the parties entered into a stipulation for public discipline, which also required Scipione to resign as a judge.

 - c. August 24, 2023: the special masters issued their recommendation and report to the Commission.
 - d. February 26, 2024: the Commission files with this court its recommendation for discipline.

COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE

DATE FILED: February 26, 2024 10:09 AM

October 28, 2021

No. 21-138
Confidential

Hon. John Scipione
District Judge
Arapahoe County Justice Center
7525 South Potomac Street
Centennial, CO 80112

Dear Judge Scipione:

Chief Judge Amico received information from several staff members of the 18th Judicial District about your conduct with a law student intern. She reported these concerns to the Commission, pursuant to Canon Rule 2.15. In addition, we received information that you may have attempted to influence the actions of a Denver Probate Judge who was presiding over your father's estate. The Commission determined that there were sufficient allegations to be considered as a complaint, under Colo. RJD 13.

At their October 22nd meeting, the members of the Commission reviewed a preliminary investigation report from staff of Attorney Regulation who provide investigative support for the Commission. As is our usual procedure, the case was assigned to one of the members who analyzed it in detail and summarized it for the other members.

The Commission reached no conclusions about the allegations, except to determine that they were sufficiently serious to require your response and the Commission's further investigation. The Commission members will consider the allegations in accordance with Colo. RJD 16. We emphasize that the Commission needs your views in order to form an objective view about whether your conduct may have violated any of the Canons and, if so, what type of disposition or sanction would be warranted. Accordingly, pursuant to Colo. RJD 14(a) we are notifying you of these allegations and are requesting your response.

Initially, the Canon Rules that may be implicated in this situation include Canon Rule 1.2 which requires a judge to promote confidence in the judiciary and avoid the appearance of impropriety; Canon Rule 2.3 which, along with Chief Justice Directive 08-06, Attachment A, prohibits conduct that results in harassment of staff; and Canon Rule 2.8 requiring a judge to be patient, dignified and courteous to staff. And an attempt to use your judicial position to influence a decision in your family's probate case could present conduct issues under Canon Rule 1.3, which prohibits using the prestige of judicial officer for personal benefit; or under Canon Rule 2.9 which prohibits ex parte communications.

As explained in more detail below, it is alleged that your conduct with your law student intern, [REDACTED], created an adverse and uncomfortable work environment.

Ms. [REDACTED] began her clerkship with you in June 2021, after completing her [REDACTED] year of law school. While having lunch with you on her first day at work, you allegedly stated that it was nice to have someone friendly and nice in the office, because your [REDACTED], [REDACTED], was a "bitch." At the time, Ms. [REDACTED] didn't think much about it.

However, as the weeks passed, she started to feel uncomfortable around you. On several occasions, after your CJA left for the day, you would call her into your office and talk about family or other non-work issues. In her second or third week on the job, when she wore her hair in a high ponytail, you said that high pony tails were your weakness. On another day, she wore a dress exposing her arms which led to your comment that "your guns are out" and asked if she was a fitness model. She felt your statements were flirtatious.

She got acquainted with a janitor named [REDACTED]. She told investigators that he was an older man and they would chat about Bonsai trees and his kids. But when you saw her talking with him, you remarked that "[REDACTED] got a crush on you -- trying to make me jealous?" Initially, she thought you were joking but she felt uncomfortable when on another day you saw her talking with [REDACTED] and said it was making you jealous.

On a Friday, you told her that your wife and you were having friends sleepover at your house while your kids were out of town. On Monday, when she asked about the weekend, you stated that the neighbors were probably not happy because the guests were walking around in the nude.

Toward the end of June, you showed her the black ring you were wearing on your right hand and explained that if a man wore a black ring on his left hand, it meant that he was asexual and you didn't want anyone to perceive that as your sexual status. You then commented that you lived a very different lifestyle. She laughed but you then said "Do you know what I'm saying?" You then closed the door and began telling her the details of what you called your "swinger lifestyle." You explained some problems in your marriage and your wife's efforts to try the swinger lifestyle. You explained that you and your wife go to a swinger ranch/club where some people participate and others just watch and walk around nude.

You asked Ms. [REDACTED] to help you download the "Tinder" application which apparently is used to meet and engage in brief sexual encounters. You wanted her to help you describe yourself on this app. She became uncomfortable and tried leave. You then told her that he knew he could trust her with this information and that if she told anyone about this, it would be "really bad" for you.

She reported this incident to a friend and another law student the next day, and later reported it to [REDACTED]

A few days later, she was talking with Ms. [REDACTED] at work and was determined not to share this information with her. However, Ms. [REDACTED] told her that other clerks had heard rumors that you had an affair with a former clerk and that you were a "swinger." Ms. [REDACTED] then felt comfortable disclosing the description you provided about your lifestyle.

Ms. [REDACTED] encouraged her to report what you had told her. Ms. [REDACTED] was reluctant to do so because of potential repercussions regarding her internship, law school, and attempts to get future jobs. Ms. [REDACTED] suggested that she talk with retired Judge John Wheeler, for whom [REDACTED] had served as a CJA, because she knew Ms. [REDACTED] could trust him. So, Ms. [REDACTED] took it on herself to discuss it with Judge Wheeler who advised her to report your conduct.

Later that week, Ms. [REDACTED] was alone in the courtroom with you. You told her that your friend's wife was going to Florida to see her boyfriend. When this appeared to confuse her, you explained that they were "in the lifestyle. You know the lifestyle?" You then described it as an "open relationship thing." Ms. [REDACTED] later told Ms. [REDACTED] about the conversation.

When Ms. [REDACTED] told you that she needed to end her internship in July -- earlier than planned, you reacted angrily and asked her to stay until September. She felt intimidated and agreed to stay a few more days. You later called her into your office, thanked her for doing really great work for you, and told her she was "not just a pretty face."

Ms. [REDACTED] asked to transfer to the CJA position for Magistrate Amanda Bradley. This allegedly upset you and you commented that the magistrate didn't know what she was doing and was always getting reversed. After Magistrate Bradley decided to hire her, Ms. [REDACTED] relayed to Magistrate Bradley what Ms. [REDACTED] had shared with her. The magistrate then told Ms. [REDACTED] that she had an obligation to report all this. Ms. [REDACTED] also shared this same information with CJA [REDACTED] who reported it to her judge, District Judge Eric White, who also concluded that it must be reported. Judge White had also heard the rumor that you had an affair with a prior clerk.

It was apparent to the investigators and the Commission members that these incidents had an adverse emotional impact on the staff who were interviewed.

Magistrate Bradley, Judge White, Ms. [REDACTED] and Ms. [REDACTED] got together on a call to discuss the situation and decided to bring it to the attention of Chief Judge Amico. On September 1st, Magistrate Bradley, former Judge Wheeler, and Judge White met with the Chief Judge and Deputy Court Executive, Jenni Turnidge. Chief Judge Amico then reported the allegations about your conduct to the Commission. We are told that there are staff members who are concerned that your new CJA may have similar experiences involving inappropriate conversations with you.

Chief Judge Amico subsequently was contacted by a Denver Probate Judge whose staff reported that you had asked a favor of the Probate Court in expediting approval of an emergency motion for your appointment as a co-personal representative in your father's estate and the issuance of Letters Testamentary. This involves The Estate of Robert A. Scipione, Case No. 2021PR356. We will be seeking more information about this allegation, but the Commission is concerned that it may involve violations of Canon Rules 1.3 and/or 2.9.

We would appreciate your cooperation in providing us a written response to these allegations well in advance of the Commission's next regular meeting, scheduled for December 17th, so that we can do whatever further investigation may be warranted and, if necessary, arrange for our investigators to interview you. You may send your response by regular mail to our office address or by email to me.

Our proceedings are confidential, in accordance with the guidelines in Colo. RJD 6.5.

Sincerely,

Re: No. 21-138

Dear Commission Members:

I represent Judge John E. Scipione in this matter. Judge Scipione's response to the Commission's inquiry follows.

Personal and Professional Background

Judge Scipione obtained his undergraduate degree from the State University of New York at Binghamton and his law degree from the University of Colorado. He was in the private practice of law from 1995 to 2012, when he became a District Court Magistrate. He served in that role until 2017, when he was appointed to the Arapahoe County Court bench. He was appointed to the District Court bench for the 18th Judicial District in September 2018. In 2020, the Eighteenth Judicial District Commission on Judicial Performance unanimously agreed (with one member absent) that Judge Scipione meets all performance standards.

Judge Scipione has been married to Dr. Kymberly J. Scipione, PsyD, EdD, LPC for 22 years. The Scipiones have five children, ages 12 through 29. Dr. Scipione is a Colorado licensed professional counselor, clinical psychologist and AASECT certified sex therapist in private practice specializing in individual therapy with adult women and couples. Dr. Scipione received her PsyD in 2021 and her EdD degree in 2014. Dr. Scipione's doctoral research and dissertation was in consensual non-monogamy relationships between married heterosexual couples. This educational undertaking was extensive and took place over five years. Judge Scipione supported his wife's academic endeavors and assisted with the editing process before she published.

Overview of Allegations

The primary focus of the inquiry is on the internship of [REDACTED]. Ms. [REDACTED]'s internship in Judge Scipione's division lasted approximately six weeks (when accounting for her four-day work week and scheduled time off) beginning in June 2021. Her allegations comprise minutes in her six-week internship and minutes out of Judge Scipione's nine years on the bench.

Judge Scipione takes full responsibility for any inappropriate comment or statement made to Ms. [REDACTED]. Nothing here should be perceived as an attack on her. Rather, the Commission must understand and consider the context of Judge Scipione's discussions with Ms. [REDACTED] and any comments made to her. For much of Ms. [REDACTED]'s six-week internship, Judge Scipione was either out of his division or in his office writing. As discussed below, Judge Scipione and his family endured multiple family crises beginning at the time Ms. [REDACTED] started her internship. The information provided is not a defense to any inappropriate statement made by Judge Scipione. It is provided for the Commission's consideration that during the time in question the Judge was under enormous stress.

- On June 2, 2021, Judge Scipione's young son had oral surgery which resulted in his hospitalization because of breathing issues following his surgery.

During this time, Judge Scipione's spouse was in a comprehensive Internal Family Systems training program related to her practice. As such, Judge Scipione was the primary parent for the couple's children.

- In mid-June 2021, Judge Scipione's father became critically ill. Because his sister lived in Maine, Judge Scipione was essential to his father's care. His father's illness meant early morning and after work trips to provide care and assistance. His work schedule was erratic, and he was often gone from the courthouse. On June 21, 2021, the Judge's father was hospitalized at St. Joseph's Hospital. The Judge spent the next forty days driving back and forth to five different hospitals and rehabilitation facilities caring for his father. His father was in and out of rehabilitation and hospitals due to pneumonia and other complications, including a hip fracture from a fall during rehabilitation. His father died on July 30, 2021. Judge Scipione was out of his office much of the months of June and July caring for his father. The Judge was also off work from August 1 through August 16, 2021, following his father's death.
- On June 25, 2021, his spouse had surgery to repair issues from a November 2019 surgery.
- On July 19, 2021, two of the Judge's children were injured in a serious car accident. Both were transported to the hospital with head trauma and other injuries. Both children were in physical therapy two or three days a week following the accident and treatment continues for their injuries.
- On August 6, 2021, the Judge's spouse graduated with her second doctorate.

- From August 7, 2021 until the present time, the Judge and his sister, who traveled to Denver from Maine, were attempting to prepare and sell their deceased father's home and other matters related to settling the estate.
- On September 16, 2021, the Judge's oldest son became ill and was taken to the ER and released.
- On September 17, 2021, his son was admitted to St. Joseph's Hospital with severe COVID. His son remained hospitalized until November 5, 2021. His son was in the ICU on a ventilator for 36 days. The Judge drove to and from the hospital daily to be with his son. On November 5th, he was released to rehabilitation and the Judge returned to work.

Responses to Allegations

Judge Scipione responds to the allegations in the order in which they are addressed in the Commission's letter.

1. Reference to ██████████ as a "bitch."

At no time did the Judge refer to Ms. ██████████ in such a manner. On Ms. ██████████ first day, the Judge took her to lunch. At lunch, he told her that ██████████ was quiet, did not engage in any meaningful conversation, and could come across as cold. The Judge wanted Ms. ██████████ to feel welcome and not take it personally if Ms. ██████████ was unfriendly. The Judge expressed that he was happy to have Ms. ██████████ onboard for the summer.

In January 2021, Judge Scipione was asked by Chief Judge Amico if he would agree to transfer to a civil division docket from his criminal docket. The Judge agreed. However, much to his disappointment, his clerk of 4.5 years, Madison Eutsler, did not want to transfer to a civil division. In addition, the Judge would lose his court reporter, Cathy Troyanek, with the transfer. The Judge, Madison, and Cathy enjoyed a close and collegial work environment and were all sad to be breaking up.

With the impending transfer to a civil division, the Judge found himself having to hire a new CJA in the middle of the COVID crisis. Judge Wheeler had just retired and Ms. ██████████, his former CJA, was looking for a new division. She was an experienced clerk and familiar with the civil docket. Ms. ██████████ had nowhere to go so the Judge agreed to interview her given her civil background. Following the initial interview, he decided not to offer her the position. He found Ms. ██████████ to be sullen and a poor communicator. She also told the Judge that she had been working from home for nine months and had no interest in returning to the courthouse in person, but would do so if she had to. Judge Scipione was concerned as he was new to the civil division and wanted his clerk present while he learned the new docket. He was also concerned that Ms. ██████ may become resentful for having to return to work in person. She assured him she would be fine and do what she needed to do.

The Judge consulted with the administrative department of the 18th Judicial District and was told that there was no one else available who was looking to transfer or who had civil experience. The options were - interview Ms. ██████ again and see if things might work with her or wait until such time that there were viable outside applicants available to interview.

The Judge conducted a second interview of Ms. ██████ and, despite his concern, had little choice but to offer her the position. Ms. ██████'s personality was diametrically opposite of his personality and his former clerk's personality. Nonetheless, he promised himself and the administrative department that he would make the best of the situation and give Ms. ██████ a chance and hope that they could make things work.

Judge Scipione inherited a difficult docket in the middle of a pandemic, had a new clerk who he found difficult to work with, and no law clerk. He was desperate for help as he had a large trial looming and, by that time, had written over a thousand pages of decisions. He interviewed Ms. ██████ as a potential intern and found her smart and personable. Ms. ██████ started her internship the first part of June 2021. The Judge is confident that he told Ms. ██████ that Ms. ██████ was not a good communicator. As previously discussed, at the same time Ms. ██████ started, Judge Scipione's father was critically ill, which required him to provide daily care for him. By the middle of June 2021, the Judge's father was hospitalized, two of his children were injured in an automobile accident, and his spouse was headed into a second surgery.

2. Discussions about "family" and "non-work issues" and alleged comments about Ms. ██████'s physical appearance.

First, the allegation about calling Ms. ██████ into his office and closing the door is false. It never happened. Witness interviews with former law clerks and CJAs confirm that the Judge virtually never closed his office door. The witnesses will testify that the only time they ever saw the Judge close his office door was when another judge was in his office or on the rare occasion when he discussed a personnel issue. His habit was that his office door was always open.

Ms. ██████ frequently left work early and always earlier than the Judge or Ms. ██████ during the summer. The Judge rarely spoke to either Ms. ██████ or Ms. ██████ during the regular workday. He was either running back and forth to various medical appointments, sitting in his office writing, or in court. There was no idle chit chat during the day. As was the Judge's custom and routine with his previous law clerks and

Ms. ██████████, the Judge conducted “check-ins” at the end of the day (usually between 4:30-5:00 p.m.) to discuss work assignments and answer any questions from staff. Closing the door was not necessary and did not occur.

Over the course of last summer, when the Judge was at the courthouse, he would sit down with Ms. ██████████ in his office - on opposite sides of his desk with the door open. In addition to discussions about various legal assignments and cases, Ms. ██████████ initiated conversations with the Judge about law school, friends, her family and other mundane matters. In addition, throughout the summer, Ms. ██████████ routinely thanked the Judge and shared how lucky she was to have the summer internship, how meaningful and interesting the assignments were, and how much she was learning. She also shared how jealous her fellow summer interns were of her experience relative to the types of assignments they were receiving.

In reciprocal conversation, the Judge talked about his five children, his wife, his ill father, and the work that the court was doing. On more than one occasion, Ms. ██████████ asked about Dr. Scipione’s work as a psychologist/therapist and commented about her pictures and those of his children in his office. Again, it is critical that the Commission understand the timing of Ms. ██████████ internship. Much of the time, the Judge was not present because he was addressing one of the multiple crises taking place in his personal and family life.

Regarding the “high ponytail” comment: On a particular occasion, Ms. ██████████ wore her hair in a “high ponytail.” The Judge commented that he liked that hairstyle and particularly liked it when his wife wore her hair that way. He also remembers commenting that it looked like how the singer, Ariana Grande, wore her hair. In response, Ms. ██████████ smiled and said, “Thank You!” That was the end of the conversation. It was a harmless comment and compliment with no indication from Ms. ██████████ that it was off-putting or offensive in any way.

Regarding the “guns-out” comment: On a particular occasion, Ms. ██████████ wore a sleeveless shirt to work. She regularly commented about her gym routine, having to get to the gym after work, and lifting weights. Acknowledging her fitness routine, the Judge commented that the “guns were out” or “gun-show” referring to her arms. In response, Ms. ██████████ flexed both arms, and said “Thank You!” That was the end of the conversation. Again, it was a harmless comment and compliment with no indication from Ms. ██████████ that it was off-putting or offensive in any way.

Judge Scipione never made comments to Ms. ██████████ or any other intern or law clerk that could be considered “flirtatious” within the courthouse or work environment. Multiple witness interviews dating back to Judge Scipione’s early days on the bench confirm that he never made any off-color, sexually flirtatious, or any demeaning comments about women or anyone.

To the contrary, a courtroom full of prior clerks, law clerks, and others will confirm that Judge Scipione never engaged in the type of conduct alleged by Ms. ██████████.

3. A custodian named “Tan.”

Ms. ██████████ turned a friendly, teasing banter about a custodian making frequent trips into the court offices into a sexual innuendo. It is a ridiculous and childish allegation. “Tan” has been Judge Scipione’s courtroom and office janitor for years. The Judge loves “Tan” and chats with him whenever he has the opportunity. “Tan” did make more frequent trips into the courtroom and office when Ms. ██████████ was present. In response, the Judge commented on one occasion that “You better watch out. Tan has a crush on you.” Nothing else. She laughed in response. Any comment was made in a joking or humorous manner and certainly not with the sexual overtone portrayed by Ms. ██████████.

4. The black ring.

It is true that Judge Scipione did have a conversation about his wearing a black ring. However, the conversation with Ms. ██████████ occurred much differently than she describes. In one of many “check-in” conversations at the end of the day where both work and non-work matters were discussed, Ms. ██████████ asked the Judge about the black ring he wore on his right hand. Initially, the Judge responded in a vague manner without detail and told her that it related to his personal life, his spouse and “the lifestyle.” She responded with, “Well, now you have me curious. I’m always interested in learning about other lifestyles.” She asked him questions and he responded. The conversation lasted about 15 minutes.

While the Judge is not in the habit of talking about his ring, he’s had similar conversations with anyone who asks him about it. It should also be noted that the black ring is always discussed in the context of Dr. Scipione’s work, dissertation, and their research as a couple into the subject. Not only did Ms. ██████████ never appear uncomfortable, but she also stated she was “intrigued” and thanked the Judge for sharing. At the end of the conversation, which corresponded with the end of the workday, the Judge reminded Ms. ██████████ that their conversation was not for public dissemination and should remain private. At no time did the Judge imply that Ms. ██████████ needed to keep a secret because it would be “really bad” if anyone found out. Plain and simple, it was no one’s business and it would not have come up if not asked. In retrospect, the Judge regrets his truthful response to her questions.

Contrary to Ms. ██████████’s allegations, the Judge never engaged in a conversation that included details about his sex life with his wife or with other people. In the context of discussing the “lifestyle” and answering Ms. ██████████’s questions, the Judge defined terms, specifically said that the word “swinger” can be considered pejorative, and the term did not reflect what the “lifestyle” is about. He mentioned that there were “lifestyle” friendly clubs in the Denver metro area and that he and his wife had many good friends they met in the “lifestyle” that have nothing to do with sex. Most importantly, he described Dr. Scipione’s research and work on the subject and how important it was related to educating mental health professionals about this growing sect of the LGBTQ+ community of which Dr. Scipione and the Judge are a part.

Given the high level of stress and everything that was going on with the Judge at the time as described above, Dr. Scipione suggested that he make a dating profile on an app such as “Tinder” for a distraction. The Judge shared this information with Ms. [REDACTED]. At no time did the Judge ask for assistance downloading the app or making a profile. In fact, the Judge shared that he had even been “unliked” on Tinder so maybe it was the wrong place to be. Ms. [REDACTED] smiled and laughed. In hindsight, the Judge regrets what might appear as “oversharing” about his personal life. The allegation that he “could trust her with the information” is false. He barely knew Ms. [REDACTED]. She was in his division for a period of a few weeks and much of the time he was attending to his father or his family crises. As stated previously, the total time he spent in conversations with Ms. [REDACTED], especially related to non-work-related matters, amounted to minutes.

5. Ms. [REDACTED]’s departure.

It was understood when the Judge hired Ms. [REDACTED], that her internship would last from the first week in June until the middle of August when classes resumed. About ten days before the end of July, Ms. [REDACTED] announced that her last day would be July 30th because she had other academic projects she needed to attend to. While surprised and taken off guard, the Judge indicated that he understood, but that it would “suck” because there was so much work to do and no help to do it. Notwithstanding the announcement, the Judge’s first reaction was to tell Ms. [REDACTED] and Ms. [REDACTED] to figure out a day they could all go out for a farewell lunch. Ms. [REDACTED] was happy to celebrate her last day and picked a local sushi restaurant. They all decided that Friday, July 30th would be the best day. And they all went. Sadly, less than an hour after returning from lunch, the Judge’s father died. He left the office and never saw or heard from Ms. [REDACTED] again.

On two occasions, Ms. [REDACTED] had lunch with Judge Scipione...her first day and her last day. This has been Judge Scipione’s practice during his time as a Magistrate and Judge. If he was angry with her for her early departure, why would he take her to lunch or, for that matter, if she was intimidated or threatened by him, why would she agree to lunch?

At no time did Judge Scipione ever “beg” her to stay and certainly not until the middle of September when he knew from the beginning that she had to start school again in mid-August. Although Judge Scipione desperately needed her help, he understood that she was unpaid, and it was her choice. He never questioned her decision, never spoke angrily towards her or any staff ever, never “intimidated” her, and most importantly never talked about her “pretty face.” To the contrary, the Judge, even up to Ms. ██████'s last day, thanked her for all of her hard work, commented about how much she accomplished, and told her that she would be successful as an attorney given her intellectual acumen. She stated how incredibly grateful she was for the opportunity and what an amazing summer it had been.

Ms. ██████'s internship came at a very stressful and difficult time in Judge Scipione's life. Never in his years on the bench had he experienced the personal anguish and struggle of his father's lingering illness and ultimate death, the injuries to two of his children, and the near death of another child from COVID. Frankly, Ms. ██████ departure was not that important to him at the time.

6. The call to the Denver probate clerk.

The Commission is "concerned" about a call Judge Scipione made to the clerk's office at the Denver Probate Court. The Judge was not asking for any "favor" or special treatment. Rather, because the appointment of co-personal representatives was delaying the administration of his father's estate, he asked that the court expedite the issuing of letters testamentary and the appointment of co-personal representatives.

Judge Scipione has known the Denver Probate Judge for twenty-five years. He did not believe at the time that he was asking for a "favor." Rather, because his sister and he were serving as co-personal representatives of their father's estate, he viewed the appointment as a ministerial act. There was no dispute, his sister was extending her stay in Colorado to assist him with the administration of the estate, and he was not asking the court for anything other than to review the matter expeditiously. Later, on August 21, 2021, the Judge filed an Emergency Motion for Forthwith Informal Appointment of Co-Personal Representatives and Issuance of Letters Testamentary. [Attached as Exhibit 1.] The motion details the urgent issues that the Judge and his sister were facing regarding the administration of the estate.

In retrospect, Judge Scipione recognizes that he should not have used his title in the message left for the probate court. He also appreciates the fact that the court's clerk may have perceived his call as a request for special treatment and attention. It was a mistake that will not be repeated.

Conclusion

The truth of this matter is addressed on page 3 of the Commission's letter. Ms. ██████'s spreading of "rumors" about Judge Scipione. She certainly knows that the Judge was not happy with her and that they did not work well together. Ms. ██████ is the driving force behind Ms. ██████'s allegations. This is evident from her conduct encouraging Ms. ██████'s complaint, involving other judges and magistrates in orchestrating the complaint instead of taking the matter to the administrative department, human resources, or even the Chief Judge, and her transfer to a different division. Most significantly, Ms. [REDACTED] a long-time judicial employee, purposefully avoided advising Ms. [REDACTED] about reporting any concerns to human resources through the administrative department or going to the administrative department herself. It should be noted that Judge Scipione's Division 204 is steps away from the Court Executive (Shaun Clark), Deputy Court Executive (Jenni Turnidge) and the Administrative Office Manager (Carol Rigato).

In its letter, the Commission repeatedly mentions the "rumors" about Judge Scipione's "lifestyle" spreading around the courthouse. However inappropriate and unfortunate, that seems to be a common occurrence in the judicial branch. Certainly, some of the rumors and innuendos may be driven by the fact that it is common knowledge that Judge Scipione's spouse did her dissertation on the research topic of non-monogamous relationships in marriages. The Judge has never shied from discussing his spouse's professional practice and training when asked.

The motives of [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] are not relevant. Judge Scipione understands the importance of his demeanor on and off the bench. In his many years on the bench, he has never intentionally done anything to demean or impugn the integrity of his position or the judiciary.

Judge Scipione did not violate any Judicial Canons or Chief Justice Directives. He takes full responsibility for his conduct and is profoundly sorry if [REDACTED] found any comment or conversation uncomfortable or inappropriate. The Commission can be assured that the Judge has learned from this experience and understands the importance of always maintaining appropriate boundaries.

Sincerely,

EMERGENCY MOTION FOR FORTHWITH INFORMAL APPOINTMENT OF CO-PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES AND ISSUANCE OF LETTERS TESTAMENTARY

The Applicants for co-personal representatives, John E. Scipione and Ellen S. Scipione, as interested persons pursuant to § 15-10-201(27), C.R.S., hereby moves this Honorable Court for the forthwith appointment of Applicants as co-personal representatives and issuance of letters testamentary. And for support states as follows:

1. The Decedent, Robert A. Scipione passed away on July 30, 2021. He named his surviving children, John E. Scipione and Ellen S. Scipione as co-personal representatives in his will to manage his estate upon his death.

2. On August 10, 2021, the Applicant John E. Scipione filed the Application for Informal Probate of Will and Informal Appointment of Personal Representative (“Application”) with a Proposed Order for Informal Probate of Will and Informal Appointment of Personal Representatives. The Decedent's original Will was filed with the Application. In addition, Acceptance of Appointments were also filed for John E. Scipione and Ellen S. Scipione as co-personal representatives. Proposed Letters Testamentary (x4) were also filed so that proof of the Personal Representative's authority to act pursuant to § 15-12-701, et. seq., C.R.S. could be issued. All documents were filed in person at the Denver Probate Court and accepted as complete for filing.

3. On August 17, 2021, the Court issued an Order Re: Informal Testate indicating that the Applicants' file was incomplete: Applicant was directed to file an addendum to the Application for Informal Probate of Will and Informal Appointment of Personal Representative to include the Trust listed under Article 1.5 of the Will in section 8 of the application as well as the Irrevocable Power of Attorney from Ellen Scipione, the proposed co-personal representative. Both documents, including a Trust Certification were filed on August 20, 2021.

4. Since this matter has been pending and the applicants have been waiting for the Order of Informal Appointment and Letters Testamentary to be issued, the Decedent's estate has been substantially and negatively impacted. To date, Decedent's bank accounts have been frozen. As a result, all the automatic withdrawals for the Decedent's HOA dues, taxes, insurance, credit card and car payments, have been rejected for payment by the bank. Applicant is now receiving notices of delinquency, default, and threats of repossession of Decedent's vehicle. Without the Order of Informal Appointment and Letters Testamentary, the co-personal representatives are crippled and unable to handle the financial affairs of Decedent's estate as contemplated by his Will and Trust.

5. In addition to the negative impact to Decedent's estate, the financial and emotional consequences to co-personal representatives have been particularly burdensome and overwhelming. Specifically, co-representative, Ellen Scipione, Decedent's daughter, lives in Corinth, ME. She has been away from home for several weeks, is unable to return to work, and is now forced to live in a hotel until the financial affairs of the estate are concluded. Further, as a disabled veteran, she is unable to receive her regularly scheduled therapy for PTSD through the VA Hospital. As a co-personal representative, the banks will not take any action to transfer or open an estate account unless she is present in person. As stated above, no actions can be taken without the necessary orders and letters from the Court to authorize co-representatives to act on behalf of Decedent's estate.

For all of the reasons outlined herein, the Applicants respectfully request that the Court / Probate Registrar issue the Order for Informal Probate of Will and Informal Appointment of Personal Representative with Letters Testamentary (x4) forthwith given the emergent circumstances.

Respectfully Submitted this 25th day of August 2021.

STATEMENT OF CHARGES

THIS STATEMENT OF CHARGES is filed pursuant to the authority of Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (“Colo. RJD”) Rules 4, 16(b)(4)¹ and 18, and it is alleged as follows:

I. BACKGROUND AND JURISDICTION

1. Respondent John E. Scipione (“Respondent”) was appointed as a Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court in 2018. He was serving in that capacity at all times pertinent to this Statement of Charges.

2. Respondent is subject to the jurisdiction of the Colorado Supreme Court and the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the “Commission”) in these disciplinary proceedings.

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

A. SEXUAL HARASSMENT

3. In early June 2021, Ms. [REDACTED] had completed her second year of law school at [REDACTED], and began a judicial law clerk internship with Respondent.

4. On her first day, Respondent was friendly and chatty with [REDACTED]. [REDACTED], and took her out to lunch.

5. The two briefly discussed Respondent’s [REDACTED] [REDACTED] [REDACTED] [REDACTED], who was not in the office that day.

6. Respondent stated it was so nice to finally have someone friendly and nice in the office because his [REDACTED], “was a bitch.”

7. Ms. [REDACTED]’s work schedule was usually 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., while Ms. [REDACTED] generally left at 4:30 p.m.

8. After Ms. [REDACTED] left for the day, Respondent would often call Ms. [REDACTED] into his office, or stand at her doorway, and they would “chit chat”—sometimes about family or other non-work issues.

¹ On December 17, 2021, the Commission on Judicial Discipline determined there was probable cause to proceed with formal charges against Respondent John E. Scipione.

9. Although Ms. [REDACTED] usually wanted to leave at 5:00, she stayed later because Respondent was a judge and she didn't want to tell him that she needed or wanted to go home.

10. During Ms. [REDACTED]'s second or third week working for Respondent, Respondent began making comments that made her uncomfortable.

11. One day, Ms. [REDACTED] wore her hair in a high ponytail and Respondent said, "I gotta warn you high ponytails are my weakness. What are you Ariana Grande?"

12. Ms. [REDACTED] stated she thought the ponytail comment was odd, but "laughed it off."

13. Another day, Ms. [REDACTED] was wearing a dress that showed her arms and Respondent commented, "Your guns are out" and asked if she was a fitness model.

14. Ms. [REDACTED] noted that Respondent asked the question using a flirtatious voice, but again, Ms. [REDACTED] tried to "laugh it off."

15. Ms. [REDACTED] developed a friendship with a janitor at the courthouse named Tan.

16. When Respondent saw Ms. [REDACTED] talking with Tan, he said to her, "Oh Tan's got a crush on you – trying to make me jealous!"

17. Ms. [REDACTED] felt uncomfortable when Respondent again commented about Tan making him jealous on another day when Ms. [REDACTED] was talking with the janitor.

18. Ms. [REDACTED] also reported that the Judge made uncomfortable comments to her during this time period.

19. In mid-June, Ms. [REDACTED] was talking with Respondent on a Friday when Respondent told her he and his wife were having friends sleep over at their house, his kids were out of town and his wife was buying new sheets.

20. The following Monday morning Ms. [REDACTED] asked Respondent about his party.

21. Respondent stated that his neighbors were probably not happy about the party because his guests were walking around nude outside in his yard.

22. Ms. [REDACTED] thought his statement was weird and didn't ask any more questions.

23. On or about June 17, 2021, Respondent called Ms. [REDACTED] into his office to talk.

24. Respondent was wearing a black ring and asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she knew what it meant.

25. Ms. [REDACTED] said she didn't know.

26. Respondent told her that a black ring on someone's left hand meant that the person is asexual.

27. He said he moved his black ring to his right hand so people wouldn't think he was asexual.

28. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED], "I live a very different lifestyle, do you know what I'm saying?"

29. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] to close his door.

30. Ms. [REDACTED] closed the door.

31. Ms. [REDACTED]'s heart began pounding and she started sweating.

32. Respondent then began telling Ms. [REDACTED] the details of his lifestyle, which he referred to as the "swinger lifestyle."

33. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] about problems in his marriage.

34. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] how his wife had pushed him to try the swinger lifestyle.

35. He told her he and his wife go to a swinger ranch/club in Colorado.

36. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that at the ranch, some people,

- a) “participate in sex;”
- b) some “hit it and quit it;”
- c) “others just watch, but it is all very respectful;” and
- d) “Women run the show and people walk around completely nude.”

37. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] the club/ranch cost for women to get in is $25; for men $300; for couples $100.

38. Respondent said he and his wife went with other couples on swinger vacations; his wife was encouraging him to put himself out there; and Colorado is number one in the nation for the swinger lifestyle.

39. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] his wife told him to download the Tinder application (an “app” commonly used to meet and engage with others in brief sexual encounters).

40. Respondent asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she could help him set up his Tinder account because he didn’t know much about it, and didn’t know what to say about himself on his Tinder profile.

41. Ms. [REDACTED] was extremely nervous.

42. Ms. [REDACTED] then changed the subject to try to start talking about her family in Arkansas.

43. Toward the end of the conversation Mr. [REDACTED] indicated she needed to leave.

44. Before Ms. [REDACTED] left, Respondent told her he knew he could trust her with this information—and he hadn’t even told his best friend about his lifestyle.

45. He told Ms. [REDACTED], “If you tell anyone this, it would be really bad for me.”

46. Once she was in her car, Ms. [REDACTED] tried to call her best friend from high school to tell her what had just happened with Respondent, but had to leave a voicemail for her friend.

47. Ms. [REDACTED] also told a fellow law student what had occurred that day, and later told her law school mentor what Judge Scipione said to her while his door was closed.

48. Ms. [REDACTED] avoided Respondent for the next week.

49. Later that week, Ms. [REDACTED] was alone in the courtroom with Respondent.

50. They began chatting and Respondent said his friend's wife was going to Florida to see her boyfriend.

51. Respondent saw that Ms. [REDACTED] was confused and said, "They're in the lifestyle. You know the lifestyle?"

52. Ms. [REDACTED] indicated she didn't know.

53. Respondent went on to tell Ms. [REDACTED] about the swinger lifestyle, which he described as "the open relationship thing."

54. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] about a swinger ranch where,

- a) some people like to go on vacations for open relationships;
- b) some people like to watch; and
- c) some people "hit it and quit it."

55. Ms. [REDACTED] changed the subject and left the courtroom.

56. Ms. [REDACTED] then told Ms. [REDACTED] what had just occurred in the courtroom.

57. Because of the closed door conversation regarding his swinger lifestyle, Ms. [REDACTED] was no longer comfortable working for Respondent.

62. Ms. ██████ asked administration for a transfer.

63. When Ms. ██████ learned that Magistrate Amanda Bradley needed a CJA, Ms. ██████ immediately applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley's division.

64. When she told Respondent that she had applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley, Respondent became angry and told her, "You won't learn anything from Magistrate Bradley anyway. She doesn't know what she's doing. She's always getting reversed."

65. Magistrate Bradley interviewed and hired Ms. ██████.

ANSWER TO STATEMENT OF CHARGES

Respondent, John E. Scipione, by and through his undersigned counsel, John S. Gleason and Burns, Figa & Will, P.C., hereby submits his Answer to The People of the State of Colorado’s Statement of Charges.

I. BACKGROUND AND JURISDICTION

1. Respondent John E. Scipione (“Respondent”) was appointed as a Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court in 2018. He was serving in that capacity at all times pertinent to this Statement of Charges.

RESPONSE: Admitted

2. Respondent is subject to the jurisdiction of the Colorado Supreme Court and the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the “Commission”) in these disciplinary proceedings.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

A. SEXUAL HARASSMENT

3. In early June 2021, Ms. [REDACTED] had completed her second year of law school at [REDACTED], and began a judicial law clerk internship with Respondent.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

4. On her first day, Respondent was friendly and chatty with Ms. [REDACTED] and took her out to lunch.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

5. The two briefly discussed Respondent’s [REDACTED] [REDACTED] who was not in the office that day.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

6. Respondent stated it was so nice to finally have someone friendly and nice in the office because his [REDACTED], “was a bitch.”

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent was unsure how his CJA, Ms. [REDACTED], would treat Ms. [REDACTED] and wanted to make sure that she felt welcome. Respondent described her as non-talkative, sullen, moody, and relatively unfriendly. Respondent never used “bitch” to describe Ms. [REDACTED] or any other CJA to Ms. [REDACTED].

7. Ms. [REDACTED]’s work schedule was usually 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., while Ms. [REDACTED] generally left at 4:30 p.m.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Ms. [REDACTED]’s work schedule, which was set up before she started her summer internship, was Monday-Thursday from 8:30 am to 5:30 pm by her design.

8. After Ms. [REDACTED] left for the day, Respondent would often call Ms. [REDACTED] into his office, or stand at her doorway, and they would “chit chat” sometimes about family or other non-work issues.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. As was customary, Respondent had a habit and routine of checking in with his staff, particularly law clerks, at the end of the day to discuss pending projects, answer questions, and engage in general reciprocal conversations about non-work-related matters such as family, friends, and weekend plans, etc.

9. Although Ms. ██████ usually wanted to leave at 5:00, she stayed later because Respondent was a judge and she didn't want to tell him that she needed or wanted to go home.

RESPONSE: Denied. See Paragraph 7. As stated above, Ms. ██████ work schedule was Monday to Thursday from 8:30 am to 5:30 pm. She did not stay later. Although she was scheduled to work until 5:30 pm, she always told Respondent when she wanted to, or needed to, leave early to see friends, go to the gym to work out, or visit with her brother by video chat every Wednesday afternoon, since he was in prison.

10. During Ms. ██████'s second or third week working for Respondent, Respondent began making comments that made her uncomfortable.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent denies ever making any comments that he knowingly knew made Ms. ██████ uncomfortable. Respondent is without information sufficient to form a belief that any of his comments ever made Ms. ██████ uncomfortable since she never said so. To the contrary, Ms. ██████ regularly engaged in friendly conversation and banter, unsolicited by Respondent, asked questions about Respondent's wife, Dr. Kymberly Scipione, and made comments about Dr. Kymberly and his children's pictures which adorned Respondent's office.

11. One day, Ms. ██████ wore her hair in a high ponytail and Respondent said, "I gotta warn you high ponytails are my weakness. What are you, Ariana Grande?"

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. On a particular day that Ms. ██████ wore her hair in a high ponytail, Respondent stated that he liked that hairstyle, that he liked when his wife wore her hair in a high ponytail and that she looked like the singer Ariana Grande. In response, Ms. ██████ smiled, said "Thank You!" and swirled her ponytail around.

12. Ms. ██████ stated she thought the ponytail comment was odd, but "laughed it off."

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to form a belief as to what Ms. ██████ was thinking other than what she said in response, which was "Thank You."

13. Another day, Ms. ██████ was wearing a dress that showed her arms and Respondent commented, "Your guns are out" and asked if she was a fitness model.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Ms. ██████ repeatedly told Respondent about her workout routine and lifting weights. On a particular day, Respondent commented that "the guns were out” referring to her arms. In response, Ms. ██████ flexed her arms in a bodybuilding pose and said, “Thank You!” Respondent denies that he ever asked Ms. ██████ if she was a fitness model.

14. Ms. ██████ noted that Respondent asked the question using a flirtatious voice, but again, Ms. ██████ tried to “laugh it off.”

RESPONSE: Denied. At no point in time did Respondent ever use a “flirtatious” voice and never asked if Ms. ██████ was a fitness model. Respondent is also without information sufficient to even know what is meant by a flirtatious voice.

15. Ms. ██████ developed a friendship with a janitor at the courthouse named Tan.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny whether Ms. ██████ ever developed a friendship with Tan, the custodial engineer, who worked at the courthouse. Respondent has known Tan for years and he often visits his court staff, particularly female CJAs, when he gets to work and before his shift. As was his custom, he liked to talk, bring small gifts and treats, and chat with anyone who was around, including Ms. ██████.

16. When Respondent saw Ms. ██████ talking with Tan, he said to her, “Oh Tan’s got a crush on you - trying to make me jealous!”

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. After several days in a row of Tan coming by to visit Ms. ██████, Respondent teased Ms. ██████ and said, “Better watch out, Tan’s got a crush on you.” Both Respondent and Ms. ██████ laughed. Respondent denies ever saying to Ms. ██████, or anyone that talking to Tan made him jealous.

17. Ms. ██████ felt uncomfortable when Respondent again commented about Tan making him jealous on another day when Ms. ██████ was talking with the janitor.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny that Ms. ██████ felt uncomfortable when Respondent made a comment about Tan on one occasion, as she never told Respondent that such comment, or any other comment, ever made her uncomfortable during the entire 8-week summer internship.

18. Ms. ██████ also reported that the Judge made uncomfortable comments to her during this time period.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny that Ms. ██████ ever reported that Respondent made comments that made her uncomfortable during this time period, to the extent that “this time period” is during the 8-week summer internship of Ms. ██████. Further, between January 2021 and June 2021, Respondent spent every working day alone with Ms. ██████ who not only never stated she felt uncomfortable with Respondent, but barely managed more than a hello or goodbye to Respondent from her first day working with Respondent as a CJA.

19. In mid-June, Ms. [REDACTED] was talking with Respondent on a Friday when Respondent told her he and his wife were having friends sleep over at their house, his kids were out of town and his wife was buying new sheets.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. On Friday, June 11, 2021, Respondent was telling [REDACTED] that he and his wife were hosting a soft launch BBQ and a pool party for their new food truck business at their home on Saturday, June 12, 2021, and expecting about 50 people, including out-of-town guests. Respondent stated that they were excited for the launch, their kids were out of town, and were excited to have their friends over. They were working frantically to get their house ready for their guests. [REDACTED] responded how exciting that was and that she could not wait to hear all about it on Monday.

20. The following Monday morning Ms. [REDACTED] asked Respondent about his party.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

21. Respondent stated that his neighbors were probably not happy about the party because his guests were walking around nude outside in his yard.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. In response to [REDACTED] [REDACTED] asking about how the party went over the weekend, Respondent joked that his neighbors probably were not thrilled as the party went late, people were loud and running around half naked since it was a pool party. Respondent denies saying that his guests were walking around nude outside in his yard.

22. Ms. [REDACTED] thought his statement was weird and didn't ask any more questions.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny whether [REDACTED] thought "his statement" was weird and didn't ask any more questions. Unknown what "his statement" refers to. [REDACTED] said, "Sounds like you guys had a great time" and laughed when the Respondent told her about the neighbors.

23. On or about June 17, 2021, Respondent called Ms. [REDACTED] into his office to talk.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny that on or about June 17, 2021 Respondent called Ms. [REDACTED] into his office to talk as it was his habit and routine to check in with staff, including his law clerks, and Ms. [REDACTED] at the end of the day about pending assignments, answer questions, and make small talk.

24. Respondent was wearing a black ring and asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she knew what it meant.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. On a particular day, in mid-June, while Ms. [REDACTED] was in Respondent's office before leaving for the day, she said she was curious about the black ring that Respondent wore on this right hand. At first, Respondent hesitated and stated, without detail, that the black ring on his right hand was a "lifestyle" ring, but did not elaborate. Ms. R [REDACTED] then stated, "Now you have me curious." I'm interested in all types of lifestyles. "You have to tell me." In response to her questions, Respondent explained, in matter-of-fact fashion, what the "lifestyle" was, including, but not limited to, alternative relationships, consensual non-monogamy, polyamory, and what some people call "swingers." Respondent said he hated the word "swinger", didn't use the word, and that "swinger" was considered to be an archaic and pejorative term of limited significance.

All of Respondent's statements about the "lifestyle" were explained to Ms. [REDACTED] in an informative, educational, and non-sexual manner, all within the context of Dr. Kymberly Scipione's (Respondent's spouse) recently published doctoral dissertation titled "A Qualitative Exploration of Consensual Non-Monogamy Relationships between Married Heterosexual Couples." In previous discussions, Respondent and Ms. [REDACTED] discussed Dr. Scipione's academic research and work as a clinical psychologist and AASECT certified sex therapist. Ms. [REDACTED] was interested and asked several follow-up questions about Dr. Scipione's clinical practice.

25. Ms. [REDACTED] said she didn't know.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. [REDACTED] asked Respondent what the black ring on his right hand signified. See Paragraph 24.

26. Respondent told her that a black ring on someone's left hand meant that the person is asexual.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that he learned from his spouse's research that a black ring on someone's middle finger signified that the person was asexual.

27. He said he moved his black ring to his right hand so people wouldn't think he was asexual.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent stated that he moved his ring from his middle finger to right ring finger when he discovered the different meanings.

28. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED], "I live a very different lifestyle, do you know what I'm saying?"

RESPONSE: Denied. In response to Ms. [REDACTED]'s question about his black ring, Respondent stated that it was a "lifestyle" ring. When Ms. [REDACTED] prompted Respondent for more information and stated that she was interested in all lifestyles, Respondent explained what the term included and was not limited to "swinger." See Paragraph 24.

29. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] to close his door.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent did not tell Ms. [REDACTED] to close his door. Respondent never closed the door to his office with Ms. [REDACTED] or any other clerk or intern in his office.

30. Ms. [REDACTED] closed the door.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. R [REDACTED] did not close Respondent's door.

31. Ms. [REDACTED]'s heart began pounding and she started sweating.

RESPONSE: Denied. At no time did Ms. [REDACTED] ever show any signs of discomfort, including sweating. To the contrary, not only did Ms. [REDACTED] initiate the "black ring" conversation with Respondent, but she stated she was curious and asked a number of questions, including questions about Dr. Scipione's research.

32. Respondent then began telling Ms. [REDACTED] the details of his lifestyle, which he referred to as the "swinger lifestyle."

RESPONSE: Denied. In response to Ms. [REDACTED] asking Respondent about his black ring, and telling Respondent she was curious about and interested in learning about all different lifestyles, Respondent explained what "lifestyle" included. At no time did Respondent refer to the details of his lifestyle as the "swinger lifestyle". At no time has Respondent ever described himself as a "swinger" and explained why the term "swinger" is archaic and can be pejorative in nature. See Paragraph 24.

33. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] about problems in his marriage.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never told Ms. [REDACTED], or any other person, that he had problems, or was having problems, in his marriage. To the contrary, Respondent proudly displayed many pictures of his wife in his office, spoke of her in the most complimentary and admiring terms, and told everyone, including Ms. [REDACTED], how lucky he was and how proud of Dr. Scipione he was, particularly relative to her extraordinary academic achievements and research.

34. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] how his wife had pushed him to try the swinger lifestyle.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never told Ms. [REDACTED]n, or any other person, that his wife pushed him to try the swinger lifestyle. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that over the course of five years of academic research, he and Dr. Scipione had explored different aspects of the lifestyle.

35. He told her he and his wife go to a swinger ranch/club in Colorado.

RESPONSE: Admitted. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that he and Dr. Scipione are members of an adult-only lifestyle club in Colorado called the Scarlet Ranch (“The Ranch”) where they have met many close friends.

36. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that at the ranch, some people,
- a) “participate in sex;”
 - b) some “hit it and quit it;”
 - c) “others just watch, but it is all very respectful;” and
 - d) “Women run the show and people walk around completely nude.”

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] about the Ranch and what a welcoming, and respectful environment it is, especially for women, where people can go to express themselves freely without judgment. Respondent explained that people go to the Ranch for many different reasons – to dance, to have dinner and drinks with friends, theme parties, and just to enjoy the atmosphere. Any sexual activities that occur within the private confines of the Ranch are at the discretion of consenting adults and is not the focus of the club.

37. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] the club/ranch cost for women to get in is $25; for men $300; for couples $100.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Respondent explained how membership works at the Ranch, including the screening process of new members. Respondent explained there are annual membership and nightly fees.

38. Respondent said he and his wife went with other couples on swinger vacations; his wife was encouraging him to put himself out there; and Colorado is number one in the nation for the swinger lifestyle.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that he and his wife enjoyed going to lifestyle friendly vacation resorts, including in Mexico. Respondent explained to Ms. [REDACTED] that his wife was encouraging him to “put himself out there” as a welcome distraction to all of the trauma and stress Respondent was experiencing at that time due to his father’s hospitalizations, his children’s car accidents, and Respondent’s recent medical trauma, including the removal of his kidney in the summer of 2020. Additionally, Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that Colorado had one of the largest lifestyle communities in the United States.

39. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] his wife told him to download the Tinder application (an “app” commonly used to meet and engage with others in brief sexual encounters).

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. As a stress relief and attempt to deal with all the recent trauma Respondent was dealing with, Dr. Scipione encouraged Respondent to download different dating apps, including Tinder, as a distraction and entertainment for them both.¹

40. Respondent asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she could help him set up his Tinder account because he didn't know much about it, and didn't know what to say about himself on his Tinder profile.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent and Dr. Scipione created dating profiles as a couple. Respondent never asked Ms. [REDACTED] to help him set up his Tinder account or asked her to assist with creating a profile.

41. Ms. [REDACTED] was extremely nervous.

RESPONSE: Denied. At no time did Ms. [REDACTED] ever appear nervous in any way. Respondent and Ms. [REDACTED] had a short, casual, and light-hearted conversation where Ms. [REDACTED] smiled, laughed, and asked questions. Respondent never saw Ms. [REDACTED] appear nervous or uncomfortable.

42. Ms. [REDACTED] then changed the subject to try to start talking about her family in Arkansas.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. [REDACTED] never changed the conversation. The conversation ended shortly after it began and Ms. [REDACTED] left for the day.

43. Toward the end of the conversation Mr. [REDACTED] indicated she needed to leave.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. [REDACTED] never indicated that she needed to leave. The conversation, as referenced, occurred at the end of the day and Ms. [REDACTED] left at her normally scheduled time.

44. Before Ms. [REDACTED] left, Respondent told her he knew he could trust her with this information-and he hadn't even told his best friend about his lifestyle.

RESPONSE: Denied. Before Ms. [REDACTED] left, Respondent asked her to keep their conversation between them as it was private and nobody's business. Respondent never told her that he knew he could trust her with this information (he had known her for about 2 weeks at this point) or that even his best friend didn't know about his lifestyle. Respondent's best friend has always known about the lifestyle.

¹ Dr. Scipione had advised Respondent about the "The Big Tinder Project" which studied the 13 Motives to use Tinder. The most commonly cited reason is using Tinder as an entertainment tool when wanting to pass time and for distraction. See Elizabeth Dorrance Hall, Ph.D., "Why People Use Tinder", Psychology Today, February 13, 2018.

45. He told Ms. [REDACTED], “If you tell anyone this, it would be really bad for me.”

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never told Ms. [REDACTED] that “if you tell anyone this, it would be really bad for me.” Respondent asked her to keep their conversation private as it was nobody’s business.

46. Once she was in her car, Ms. [REDACTED] tried to call her best friend from high school to tell her what had just happened with Respondent, but had to leave a voicemail for her friend.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to know what Ms. [REDACTED] did when she was in her car or whether she called anyone. At no time did Ms. [REDACTED] ever report to Respondent that she was uncomfortable with the short one-time conversation she had with Respondent about the lifestyle.

47. Ms. [REDACTED] also told a fellow law student what had occurred that day, and later told her law school mentor what Judge Scipione said to her while his door was closed.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to know who Ms. [REDACTED] told about the conversation that occurred in his office with the door opened.

48. Ms. [REDACTED] avoided Respondent for the next week.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. [REDACTED] never avoided Respondent in the following week or weeks thereafter. In fact, Ms. [REDACTED] continued to work her normal schedule and speak with Respondent regularly for the next 6 weeks until she ended her internship on July 30, 2021 – two weeks before her scheduled end date.

49. Later that week, Ms. [REDACTED] was alone in the courtroom with Respondent.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent was always in the courtroom alone with [REDACTED], including, but not limited to, every working day between January 2021 when she started and August 2021 when she transferred to another division. Respondent is unclear what week in particular is referenced.

50. They began chatting and Respondent said his friend’s wife was going to Florida to see her boyfriend.

RESPONSE: Denied. After a hearing, Respondent told [REDACTED] that he was receiving text messages and pictures from his friends who were vacationing in Florida with another couple. Pictures included his friends, and the couple they were staying with, including the boyfriend of his friend's wife. Respondent explained that his friends were in an open-marriage. Respondent never mentioned anything about the "lifestyle".

51. Respondent saw that Ms. [REDACTED] was confused and said, "They're in the lifestyle. You know the lifestyle?"

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent stated to [REDACTED] that his friends had an open marriage. He never said they were in the "lifestyle".

52. Ms. [REDACTED] indicated she didn't know.

RESPONSE: Denied. In response to Respondent stating that his friends were in an open marriage, Ms. [REDACTED] stated, "Well, I know I could never do that." That was the end of the conversation.

53. Respondent went on to tell Ms. [REDACTED] about the swinger lifestyle, which he described as "the open relationship thing."

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never spoke with [REDACTED] about the lifestyle. He told Ms. [REDACTED] that his friends were in an open marriage.

54. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] about a swinger ranch where,

- a) some people like to go on vacations for open relationships;
- b) some people like to watch; and
- c) some people "hit it and quit it."

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never spoke with [REDACTED] about the Ranch on any occasion. Ms. [REDACTED] rarely spoke to Respondent about anything during her 8 months as his CJA.

55. Ms. [REDACTED] changed the subject and left the courtroom.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never spoke with [REDACTED] about the Ranch, or the lifestyle. Respondent and Ms. [REDACTED] both left the courtroom at the same time because they were done with their hearings and conversation.

56. Ms. B [REDACTED] then told Ms. [REDACTED] what had just occurred in the courtroom.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without any information to know what Ms. [REDACTED] told Ms. [REDACTED] about what had occurred in the courtroom.

57. Because of the closed door conversation regarding his swinger lifestyle, Ms. ██████ was no longer comfortable working for Respondent.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. ██████ never advised Respondent that she was no longer comfortable working for Respondent. In fact, Ms. ██████ n worked with Respondent for the next 6 weeks until July 30, 2021 – just two weeks before her summer internship was scheduled to end.

58. Ms. ██████ informed Respondent that she needed to end her internship in July-earlier than planned.

RESPONSE: Denied. Sometime between July 21-23, 2021, Ms. ██████ informed Respondent that she needed to end her internship 2 weeks early or by July 30, 2021 as she had other academic and job prospect related activities the first part of August before classes resumed the middle of August.

59. Respondent became angry and said he was counting on Ms. ██████ to stay until at least September.

RESPONSE: Denied. When Ms. ██████ advised Respondent that she would be leaving July 30, 2021 (or two weeks earlier than planned), Respondent was surprised and said that “would suck” given all the work that was pending and how much work she had completed over the summer. Respondent never became angry with Ms. ██████ and never said he was counting on her to stay until at least September when everyone knew that the internship would always end when classes resumed in mid-August.

60. Ms. ██████ felt intimidated and agreed to work a couple more days.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. ██████ never gave any indication at any point in time that she was intimidated by Respondent. Further, she announced on or about July 21-23, 2021 that her last day would be July 30, 2021 or two weeks earlier than originally planned. In response, Respondent announced that they would all (including Ms. ██████) go out to lunch in honor of her last day. Ms. ██████ was excited and all three (██████, ██████ and Respondent) picked July 30, 2021 for their office lunch. Ms. ██████ picked a sushi restaurant and they all went to lunch. An hour after returning from lunch, Respondent’s father passed away. Respondent never heard from or saw Ms. ██████ again.

61. During her last two days, Respondent called Ms. ██████ into his office and said she’d done some really great work for him, and then said, “See, ██████ - you ‘re not just a pretty face.”

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. During Ms. ██████’s last scheduled days, Respondent spoke with her in his office and told her that she had done great work over the summer, did great legal research and writing, and was going to be a very successful attorney. Ms. ██████ told Respondent what an amazing experience she had, how grateful she was for the opportunity, and how much she had learned. Respondent never made any comment in any form that included “You’re not just another pretty face.”

62. Ms. ██████ asked administration for a transfer.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to know whether ██████ ever asked administration for a transfer.

63. When Ms. ██████ learned that Magistrate Amanda Bradley needed a CJA, Ms. ██████ immediately applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley’s division.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to know when Ms. ██████ applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley’s division.

64. When she told Respondent that she had applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley, Respondent became angry and told her, “You won’t learn anything from Magistrate Bradley anyway. She doesn’t know what she’s doing. She’s always getting reversed.”

RESPONSE: On or about July 30th, Ms. ██████ last day, Ms. ██████ announced to Respondent, out of the blue, that she was going to apply for a position with Magistrate Bradley. Confused and taken off guard, Respondent asked why and thought it odd that she wanted to transfer from district court to a Magistrate division. Ms. ██████ stated that she thought it was time for her to start learning something new and was particularly interested in probate. Respondent never told ██████ that she would never learn anything from Magistrate Bradley, that she doesn’t know what she’s doing, or that she was always getting reversed. Respondent suggested to ██████ that she investigate the division before making the change since she admitted that she knew nothing about the position or about Magistrate Bradley. Further, on August 9th (while Respondent was on bereavement leave following his father’s death on July 30), the following text exchange occurred between Ms. ██████ and Respondent:

██████: Hi Judge, I intended to talk to you but I wasn’t sure when would be a good time and I believe admin beat me to it. As you already know I had a meeting with Mag. Bradley and she selected me for the transfer opportunity. I will be working with admin to assist on the training plan and I will be available for any questions that your new clerk may have. The division is now in good shape and I feel good handing it over.

Respondent: Yup...just saw the announcement...lol. Thanks for reaching out. I appreciate all your hard work and assistance since taking over the division in January. I learned a lot from you and I know you’ll be an incredible addition to Mag. Bradley’s division. She is very lucky! We’ll talk in person soon.

██████: Thank you Judge!...

65. Magistrate Bradley interviewed and hired Ms. [REDACTED].

RESPONSE: Admitted.

CASE MANAGEMENT ORDER

A virtual appearance occurred on March 10, 2022 with the three special masters to address case management deadlines. Present at this appearance was John Gleason as Respondent’s Counsel, Erin Robson Kristofco on behalf of the People, and Christopher Gregory from the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. A verbatim recording was electronically made using the FTR in Courtroom 3A of the 8th Judicial District.

Procedurally, on January 20, 2022, the Notice and the Statement of Charges were filed. The Response was filed on February 9, 2022. The matter is formally at issue before this body. The parties have already met in accordance with Rule 21.5(b) and the parties agree to Rule 21.5(c) disclosures by March 31, 2022.

Also at this virtual proceeding, Mr. Gleason explained he has obligations in the month of May which include non-refundable travel out of country. Parties agreed to set matter for a two day hearing on June 7th and June 8th, 2022 beginning at 9am. Mr. Gregory will assist in finding a location for this hearing at the Carr Center 1300 Broadway, Denver, Colorado. The special masters find there is good cause to set this matter to these dates pursuant to Rule 20 given the delay is minimal and provides an opportunity for parties to be adequately prepared for hearing.

Parties are on notice the special masters may need to set a status conference in April prior to Mr. Gleason leaving the country to address a deadline for trial briefs (if necessary), deadline to exchange/file exhibit and witness lists prior to the hearing, and whether a court reporter will be provided or digital recording will need to be utilized. If parties agree and file a stipulation to address these matters by March 31, 2022, a status conference on this issue may not be necessary.

(and Commission Case
No. 21-138)

EXHIBIT A—STIPULATION FOR PUBLIC CENSURE

Special Counsel, on behalf of the People of the State of Colorado, and Judge John E. Scipione stipulate as follows:

I. SUMMARY OF PRINCIPLE ALLEGATIONS AND STIPULATED MATERIAL FACTS

1. Respondent John E. Scipione (“Respondent”) was appointed as a Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court in 2018. He was serving in that capacity at all times pertinent to this stipulation.

CCJC Rule 2.3 (A Judge Shall Not by Words or Actions Engage in Harassment Based on Sex or Gender); and CCJC Rule 2.8 (A Judge Shall be Patient, Dignified and Courteous)

2. In early June 2021, Ms. [REDACTED] had completed her first year of law school at University of Denver Sturm College of Law, and began a judicial law clerk internship with Respondent.

3. During Ms. [REDACTED]’s second or third week working for Respondent, Respondent began making comments that made her uncomfortable. One day, Ms. [REDACTED] wore her hair in a high ponytail and Respondent said, “I gotta warn you high ponytails are my weakness. What are you Ariana Grande?”

4. Ms. [REDACTED] stated she thought the ponytail comment was odd, but “laughed it off.”

5. Ms. [REDACTED] had previously told Respondent she worked out frequently and typically went to the gym after leaving work. On a different day, Ms. [REDACTED] was wearing a dress that showed her arms and Respondent commented, “Your guns are out” and asked if she was a fitness model. Again, Ms. [REDACTED] tried to “laugh it off.”

6. Ms. [REDACTED] developed a friendship with a janitor at the courthouse named Tan. When Respondent saw Ms. [REDACTED] talking with Tan, he said to her, “Oh Tan’s got a crush on you – trying to make me jealous!” Respondent intended his comment as a joke as he, too, was friends with Tan.

7. Ms. [REDACTED] (Respondent’s CJA) also reported that the Judge made uncomfortable comments to her during this time period.

8. In mid-June, Ms. [REDACTED] was talking with Respondent on a Friday when Respondent told her he and his wife were hosting an opening/pool party for their food truck business and were having many friends over including some out of town guests who would spend the night at their house.

9. The following Monday morning Ms. [REDACTED] asked Respondent about his party. Respondent stated that his neighbors were probably not happy with him because his friends didn't want to keep their clothes on. Ms. [REDACTED] thought his statement was not appropriate for the work environment and didn't ask any more questions.

10. On or about June 17, 2021, Respondent and Ms. [REDACTED] talked while in Respondent's office. Respondent was seated behind his desk throughout the conversation which lasted approximately fifteen minutes.

11. Respondent was wearing a black ring and Ms. [REDACTED] commented on his ring. Respondent asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she knew what it meant. Ms. [REDACTED] said she didn't know. Respondent told her that a black ring on someone's right hand meant that the person lived an alternative lifestyle.

12. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED], "I live a very different lifestyle, do you know what I'm saying?" Respondent then asked Ms. [REDACTED] to close his door. Ms. [REDACTED] closed the door. Respondent then began telling Ms. [REDACTED] the details of his alternative sexual lifestyle, which he referred to as the polyamory lifestyle. Respondent explained that his lifestyle was not a monogamous lifestyle that his wife and he had chosen.

13. Respondent told her he and his wife go to an alternative sexual lifestyle club in Colorado where similar couples interact in a non-monogamous setting conducive to their lifestyle.

14. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that at the ranch, some people,

- a) "participate in sex;"
- b) some "hit it and quit it;"
- c) "others just watch, but it is all very respectful;" and
- d) "Women run the show and people walk around completely nude."

15. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] the alternative sexual lifestyle club cost for women to get in is $25; for men $300; for couples $100.

16. Respondent said he and his wife went with other couples on vacations to engage in his alternative sexual lifestyle.

17. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] his wife told him to download the Tinder application.

18. Ms. [REDACTED] then changed the subject and discussed her family in Arkansas. Toward the end of the conversation Ms. [REDACTED] indicated she needed to leave and she did so.

19. Before Ms. [REDACTED] left, Respondent told her he knew he could trust her with this information—and he hadn't even told his best friend about his lifestyle. He told Ms. [REDACTED], "If you tell anyone this, it would be really bad for me." Ms. [REDACTED] avoided Respondent for the remainder of her internship.

20. Later that week, Ms. [REDACTED] was alone in the courtroom with Respondent. They began chatting and Respondent said his friend's wife was going out of state to see her boyfriend. Respondent saw that Ms. [REDACTED] was confused and said, "They're in the lifestyle. You know the lifestyle?"

21. Ms. [REDACTED] indicated she didn't know. Respondent went on to tell Ms. [REDACTED] about his alternative sexual lifestyle, which he described as "the open relationship thing."

22. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] about the alternative sexual lifestyle,

- a) some people like to go on vacations for open relationships;
- b) some people like to watch; and
- c) some people "hit it and quit it."

23. Ms. [REDACTED] changed the subject and left the courtroom.

24. Ms. [REDACTED] then told Ms. [REDACTED] what had just occurred in the courtroom.

25. Because of the closed door conversation regarding his alternative sexual lifestyle, Ms. [REDACTED] was no longer comfortable working for Respondent.

26. During her last two days, Respondent called Ms. [REDACTED] into his office and said she'd done some really great work for him, and then said, "See, [REDACTED] – you're not just a pretty face."

27. Ms. [REDACTED] asked administration for a transfer.

28. When Ms. [REDACTED] learned that Magistrate Amanda Bradley needed a CJA, Ms. [REDACTED] immediately applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley's division.

29. Magistrate Bradley interviewed and hired Ms. [REDACTED] as her CJA.

Recommendation for sanction of public censure:

The following judicial discipline cases indicate a public censure is the proper sanction in this case.

In re the Honorable Michael Morgan, Washington Commission on Judicial Conduct, NO. CJC No. 5680, December 5, 2008, (Public censure where judge violated the Code of Judicial Conduct by engaging in impatient, undignified and discourteous behavior towards court personnel, former court personnel and employees of the City, and by making comments that were, or reasonably could be perceived as, disparaging, threatening or otherwise unbecoming a judicial officer).

B12-5167, B13-5219, and B13-5220, April 11, 2013, (Public reprimand for judge who made a comment in court about sexual relationship between lawyers appearing in his court, and later an abrasive statement made to a court employee).

In the Matter of Howard Gerber, Justice of the Clarkstown Town Court, State of New York Commission on Judicial Conduct, June 17, 2020, (Public admonition for judge's disparaging remarks to probation department, and inappropriate sexual remark to two attorneys in his courtroom).

In Re Honorable Daniel F. Kathren, Judge of the Benton County District Court, CJC No. 8895-F-181, Washington Commission on Judicial Conduct, December 7, Honorable William P. Rainey, District Judge Arkansas, Re: Case # 01-133, September 21, 2001, (Public censure where judge made sexually derogatory remarks on the record to two female defendants in his courtroom).

Based upon the facts and circumstances described above, Special Counsel and the Judge propose that the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline adopt this stipulated resolution of a public censure, and file this stipulated resolution with the Supreme Court as its recommendation under RJD 37(e).

FORTHWITH MOTION TO VACATE HEARING SCHEDULED ON JUNE 7-8, 2022

Respondent, John E. Scipione, through his counsel, John S. Gleason, submits this Forthwith Motion to Vacate Hearing Scheduled on June 7-8, 2022, as allowed by C.R.C.P. 7(b) and 121 § 1-15(11). In support, Judge Scipione states as follows:

1. Certification of Conferral Pursuant to C.R.C.P. 121 § 1-15(8). Undersigned counsel certifies that he attempted to confer with counsel for the People via email regarding this motion on May 20, 2022. Undersigned counsel is presently traveling out of the country with a significant time difference, making conferral by telephone difficult at best. As of the filing of this motion, no response has yet been received regarding the conferral and Respondent is unaware whether the People oppose the relief requested herein.

2. This matter remains scheduled for a two-day hearing on June 7 and June 8, 2022. Respondent submits this motion on a forthwith basis due to the time-sensitive nature of the requested relief.

3. The parties recently reached a stipulation to resolve this matter, which they submitted to the Commission on Judicial Discipline for approval on May 18, 2022.

4. However, Respondent just learned of new facts and circumstances on May 19, 2022, which will cause him to request that the proposed stipulation be withdrawn from the Commission's consideration.

5. The change of circumstances are substantive in nature and may significantly impact Judge Scipione's right to due process. Because of the confidentiality provisions of Commission matters pursuant to Colo. RJD 6.5(a), Judge Scipione is precluded from providing further information to this Panel. The change in circumstances will not be resolved for several weeks or longer. No resolution can be accomplished prior to the presently scheduled hearing set on June 7-8, 2022, however.

6. In addition, the parties no longer have sufficient time in which to prepare for a two-day hearing on this matter, which they reasonably believed would be unnecessary due to the proposed resolution by stipulation.

7. Respondent respectfully requests that the hearing scheduled on June 7-8, 2022 be vacated to afford the parties an opportunity to evaluate the new information and determine if alternate resolution might still be possible, or to incorporate the newly-obtained information into a hearing at a later date.

8. This request is not made for the purpose of delay or for any improper purposes. Neither party will be prejudiced by vacating the hearing.

WHEREFORE, Respondent, Judge Scipione, requests that the Court vacate the hearing presently set on June 7-8, 2022.

Respectfully submitted this 20th day of May, 2022.

OBJECTION TO RESPONDENT’S “FORTHWITH MOTION TO VACATE HEARING SCHEDULED ON JUNE 7-8, 2022”

On May 20, 2022, Respondent Judge John Scipione filed his “Forthwith Motion to Vacate Hearing Scheduled on June 7-8, 2022” with the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the “CCJD”). The C.R.C.P. 121 certification states that Respondent’s Counsel attempted to confer with Special Counsel. However, the certification fails to disclose to the Special Masters that Respondent’s counsel did confer with the undersigned and was advised that the CCJD objects to the motion to vacate and continue the hearing/trial scheduled in this matter for June 7-8, 2022. The grounds for the CCJD’s objections are, as follows:

1. On March 10, 2022, the parties agreed and the Special Masters set a two-day hearing in this case for June 7-8, 2022. The Case Management Order also issued on March 10, 2022 reflects that the Special Masters found good cause to extend the deadline for scheduling the hearing to accommodate the parties' preparations and need for a minor delay.

2. The Statement of Charges filed in this case includes allegations that Judge Scipione misused his judicial position to knowingly engage in sexual harassment through specific communications and interactions with his law clerk (M.R.) and judicial assistant (I.B.). These allegations also include descriptions of how such communications and interactions adversely impacted the law clerk and the judicial assistant's work and professional relationships. Judge Scipione is charged with violating Canon Rules 2.3 and 2.8 of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. In addition to alleging sexual harassment, the Statement of Charges asserts that Judge Scipione used his judicial position to seek preferential consideration of a Denver Probate Court case involving Judge Scipione's father's estate. For this alleged misconduct, Judge Scipione is charged with violating Canon Rule 1.3.
3. In his Answer, Judge Scipione denies specific communications occurred and how his admitted communications and interactions were interpreted by his law clerk and judicial assistant. Judge Scipione disputes that his communications were intended to include his law clerk or his judicial assistant in his admitted/alleged "swinger lifestyle."
4. The existence, substance, and nature of Judge Scipione's identified communications and interactions is the subject of the hearing/trial scheduled in this case for June 7-8, 2022. The CCJD expects that the Special Masters' determination of ultimate facts in this case will depend significantly upon findings of witness credibility, including Judge Scipione's own credibility.
5. On October 28, 2021, the CCJD notified Judge Scipione that the underlying circumstances would be treated as a complaint and requested a written response according to Colo. RJD 14(a).
6. In Respondent's request to continue the trial, he declines to state the grounds. However, Respondent has discussed the grounds with the CCJD. The CCJD disputes that confidentiality rules excuse Respondent from stating the actual grounds for the requested continuance. The CCJD also disputes that the developments referenced impact due process rights. The issue to which Respondent refers relates to facts flowing from Respondent's efforts to schedule a witness' testimony and the issues referenced are independent of the current proceeding and will likely take weeks and months to develop. Respondent's witness is available to testify at the hearing as scheduled. Respondent's request for a continuance appears to the CCJD to be presented primarily for purposes of delay and leverage in settlement negotiations.

7. In the current Motion, Respondent notes that a stipulation to settle this case has been entered between Special Counsel and Respondent. However, the Motion does not disclose that the CCJD opposes the stipulation entered. Respondent has stated that he wishes to hold the stipulation “in abeyance.” The CCJD’s position is that Respondent needs to clarify that he is either seeking to enforce the stipulation, so that the CCJD’s objections can be timely heard by the Supreme Court, or affirmatively abrogate the stipulation so that trial may proceed.
8. Instead of seeking a defined continuance (i.e. two weeks), Judge Scipione seeks an order from the Special Masters vacating the current hearing and postponing it indefinitely. This risks significant prejudice to public interests by delaying a determination of the facts and potential sanctions for an extended time. The Forthwith Motion also conflicts with expectations under Colo. RJD 20 that formal proceedings in judicial disciplinary matters occur expeditiously with the hearing occurring within 91 days of becoming at issue, absent demonstration of good cause.
9. C.R.C.P. 121 § 1-11 also requires a party seeking to continue a trial or hearing to demonstrate good cause. A court’s decision to grant or deny a continuance is reviewed for an abuse of discretion. “Continuances are granted only for good cause. The trial court must consider ‘the circumstances of the particular case, weighing the right of the party requesting the continuance to a fair hearing against the prejudice that may result from delay.’ Trial continuances ‘should be limited to circumstances in which unforeseen and exceptional circumstances require diligent attorneys to request an adjournment.’ Kallas v. Spinozzi, 2014 COA 164, ¶ 41 (internal citations omitted).

The circumstances described in this Objection do not satisfy standards for good cause. Accordingly, the CCJD respectfully requests that the Special Masters deny Respondent’s Forthwith Motion.

Respectfully submitted,

RESPONDENT’S MOTION TO STRIKE THE COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE’S UNAUTHORIZED OBJECTION TO RESPONDENT’S MOTION TO VACATE HEARING

Respondent, John E. Scipione, by and through his counsel, John S. Gleason, submits this Motion to Strike the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline’s Unauthorized Objection to Respondent’s Motion to Vacate Hearing. In support, Respondent states as follows:

1. Respondent’s counsel is presently traveling out of the country with a significant time difference and limited access to internet service, making communications difficult and untimely. Special counsel for the People was aware of Respondent’s counsel’s travel out of the country with his family and his limited availability prior to his departure.
2. This matter is currently scheduled for a two-day hearing on June 7-8, 2022.

3. Respondent filed a Forthwith Motion to Vacate Hearing on May 20, 2022.

4. Special counsel for the People filed an objection to such motion on May 23, 2022. Contemporaneously with this Motion to Strike, Respondent submits his Reply to the People's Objection to Respondent's Forthwith Motion to Vacate Hearing Scheduled on June 7-8, 2022.

5. The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline ("Commission") also filed an objection to Respondent's motion to vacate hearing on May 23, 2022. The Commission's filing is unauthorized by the Rules of Judicial Discipline and is unprecedented in defense counsel's over thirty-five of years of practice as counsel for the Commission or defense counsel in judicial discipline matters.

6. The Commission does not have authority to file an objection to a motion filed in a formal hearing as the Commission is not a party to the proceeding. It is clear from the Commission's objection to the motion to vacate that the Commission and/or its Director has now become an advocate for the prosecution. This position is unprecedented and an outrageous violation of Respondent's due process.

7. The Executive Director has the following authority under C.R.J.D. Rule 3(d): Executive director - The Commission shall appoint an executive director whose duties and responsibilities, subject to general oversight by the Commission, shall be to:

- (1) Establish and maintain a permanent office;
- (2) Respond to inquiries about the Commission or the Canons;
- (3) Process requests for evaluation of judicial conduct;
- (4) Conduct investigations;
- (5) Recommend dispositions;
- (6) Maintain Commission records;
- (7) Maintain statistics concerning the operation of the Commission and make them available to the Commission and to the Supreme Court;
- (8) Prepare the Commission's budget and administer its funds;
- (9) Employ the Commission's staff;
- (10) Prepare an annual report of the Commission's activities for presentation to the Commission, to the Supreme Court, and to the public;
- (11) Employ special counsel, investigators, or other experts as necessary to investigate and process matters before the Commission and before the Supreme Court; and
- (12) Perform such other duties as these Rules, the Commission, or the Supreme Court may require.

Nothing in this list gives the Executive Director the authority to seek or object to relief requested by the parties in formal proceedings. With one exception, the duties and responsibilities in this list are purely ministerial in nature. The power to "conduct investigations" is the exception, but this investigative power is limited to informal proceedings that necessarily pre-date formal proceedings. C.R.J.D. Rule 14. The Executive Director is exceeding his authority under the Rules of Judicial Discipline by acting as an advocate for the prosecution in a formal proceeding.

8. Respondent's position is that the Executive Director is interfering with the role of the presiding special master, who is "authorized to act on behalf of the special masters in resolving pre-hearing issues, including but not limited to discovery disputes; conducting pre-hearing conferences; and ruling on evidentiary, procedural, and legal issues that arise during hearings." C.R.J.D. Rule 18.5(a) (emphasis added). See also C.R.J.D. Rule 20 ("The special masters shall serve notice on all parties of the location and date of the hearing, which shall begin no later than 91 days after the at issue date, unless extended for good cause by order of the presiding special master.") (emphasis added). Respondent is also concerned that the presiding special master will give the Executive Director's arguments and positions greater weight than those of the parties of the case (the People and the Respondent Judge). The Commission's Objection to vacate the trial should be stricken based on its lack of standing and the impropriety of the Commission assuming the role of prosecutor or Special Counsel.

9. Respondent is also challenged to respond to the Commission's Objection, as the Executive Director seems to have taken contradictory positions regarding the disputed issues, or the Commission's positions continue to shift, or both. On one hand, the Executive Director acknowledges that the new allegations are materially linked to the matters at issue in this case and chastises special counsel for the failure to disclose the new investigation prior to execution of the parties' stipulation; on the other hand, the Commission denies that the material link between the new allegations and the present formal proceeding pose any threat to Respondent's fundamental due process right to try these matters together.

10. If anything, the Commission's improper insertion into this formal proceeding, in revealing significant detail regarding the confidential second investigation as well as advocating for the prosecution, has exponentially increased the concerns of violations of Respondent's due process. Respondent asserts a grave concern that the Special Masters are now tainted by their exposure to confidential information regarding a potential second disciplinary proceeding involving Respondent, as a result of the Commission's unauthorized Objection.

11. The Commission has no standing to file any pleading in this formal proceeding, and any advocacy on the part of the Commission is highly improper. Respondent, therefore, requests that the Commission's Objection be stricken.

WHEREFORE, Respondent, Judge Scipione, requests that the Special Master strike the Commission's pleading objecting to continuing the trial date as improperly filed.

Respectfully submitted this 24th day of May, 2022.

RESPONDENT'S REPLY TO THE PEOPLE'S OBJECTION TO RESPONDENT'S FORTHWITH MOTION TO VACATE HEARING SCHEDULED ON JUNE 7-8, 2022

Respondent, John E. Scipione, by and through his counsel, John S. Gleason, submits this Reply to the People's Objection to Respondent's Forthwith Motion to Vacate Hearing Scheduled on June 7-8, 2022, as allowed by C.R.C.P. 7(b) and 121 § 1-15(11). In support, Respondent states as follows:

1. Respondent's counsel is presently traveling out of the country with a significant time difference and limited access to internet service, making communications difficult and untimely. Special counsel for the People was aware of Respondent's counsel's travel out of the country with his family and his limited availability prior to his departure.

2. This matter is currently scheduled for a two-day hearing on June 7-8, 2022.

3. Respondent filed a Forthwith Motion to Vacate Hearing on May 20, 2022. Respondent incorporates his Forthwith Motion, as if the allegations stated therein were fully restated herein.

4. The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“Commission”) filed an objection to Respondent’s motion to vacate hearing on May 23, 2022. Contemporaneously with the filing of this Reply, Respondent also submits a Motion to Strike the Commission’s unauthorized filing in this proceeding.

5. Special counsel for the People filed an objection to the motion to vacate hearing on May 23, 2022. The People’s objection is inexplicable. The facts establish that it was exclusively the conduct of special counsel for the People that resulted in the Respondent withdrawing the Stipulation and the filing of the motion to vacate the hearing. The People would now like to benefit from the improper conduct of its counsel by compelling the Respondent to go to trial on June 7-8, 2022.

6. The People sent a draft stipulation to Respondent on May 10, 2022. During the next week, Respondent’s counsel and special counsel for the People were engaged in settlement discussions with multiple revisions to the stipulation.

7. Special counsel for the People provided their fifth supplemental disclosures on May 12, 2022 at 6:57 p.m., which included documents relating to witness [REDACTED]’s recent allegations. Counsel for the People, Ms. Kristofco, sent an email to Respondent’s counsel stating that the People planned to now call Ms. [REDACTED] in their case in chief and encouraged Respondent to sign the stipulation due to this new information provided by Ms. [REDACTED]. In other words, Ms. Kristofco urged Respondent’s counsel to enter into the stipulation to avoid the impact of Ms. [REDACTED]’s new allegations, knowing that the stipulation would not avoid Ms. [REDACTED]’s new allegations because, unbeknownst to the Respondent, they were the subject of a new complaint against the Respondent.

8. It is important to note that Respondent’s counsel’s paralegal spoke with Ms. [REDACTED] on December 10, 2021 and again on May 10, 2022 whereby Ms. [REDACTED] did not mention anything about her new allegations. Ms. [REDACTED] had nothing but supportive and glowing comments about Judge Scipione when asked a series of questions in December. She told the paralegal that she was willing to testify on Respondent’s behalf, although she would prefer not to because she is still working with courtrooms and judges in her position as attorney at SCAO. The new information provided in the fifth supplemental disclosures was unknown to Respondent or his counsel until special counsel for the People informed him of the new evidence and change of Ms. [REDACTED]’s position regarding the Respondent. Based on the statements made by special counsel for the People, Respondent’s counsel had absolutely no information or expectation that the Commission would authorize a new and separate investigation based on Ms. [REDACTED]’s changed position.

9. Respondent's counsel sent an email to special counsel for the People on May 17, 2022 inquiring about any other potential matters, stating: "I want to ensure that other than the COCR allegations of discrimination by [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] there is nothing else pending at CJD or OARC that is any way related to this matter". Her response was: "We don't know what is at CCJD and I cannot make any binding statements about what CCJD will do in the future. At this point in the proceedings I represent the People, not CCJD." Respondent's counsel sent a reply email stating "While you may represent the People we know where the direction is coming from". We now know based on statements by the Director of the Commission that special counsel for the People knew of the new investigation and failed to disclose it when specifically asked. Neither Respondent nor his counsel became aware of the new investigation until after the execution of the negotiated stipulation.

10. The parties finally reached a stipulation to resolve this matter, which they submitted to the Commission for approval on May 18, 2022. Respondent never would have agreed to this stipulation if he knew another formal investigation was authorized by the Commission regarding Ms. [REDACTED]. Notwithstanding special counsel for the People's knowledge of the new investigation and its materiality to the Stipulation, she failed or refused to disclose it to Respondent's counsel. The evidence is incontrovertible that special counsel for the People intentionally withheld the information despite a direct question. It is inconceivable that Respondent or his counsel would agree to a Stipulation on one matter with the knowledge that a second investigation on a separate but related matter was imminent.

11. The next day, on May 19, 2022 at 1:50 p.m., Christopher Gregory (the Executive Director of Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline) sent a letter to Respondent's counsel notifying him that a new complaint had been filed regarding [REDACTED] and required a response to such allegations by June 3, 2022. Due to the time difference, Respondent's counsel did not receive the notice until the morning of May 20, 2022. Respondent's counsel immediately sent an email to special counsel for the People asking if she concurred with withdrawing the stipulation and vacating the trial date.

12. At no time during the negotiation of the Stipulation was it ever revealed to the Respondent that the Commission had chosen to open an investigation on the recently provided [REDACTED] letter. In the email from Mr. Gregory objecting to the stipulation, he even states that an issue they have with the stipulation is the fact that the [REDACTED] complaint was not addressed in such stipulation. It was not addressed in the stipulation because it was NOT disclosed prior to the stipulation.

13. Respondent and his counsel cannot meet or meaningfully confer on the new investigation until after June 1, 2022. Respondent must have time to investigate the dramatic change of position taken by Ms. [REDACTED] and the facts alleged in her letter to the Commission. Counsel cannot prepare for trial and investigate new allegations, which are critical to testimony in the trial and the pending investigation prior to the scheduled trial. Continuances should be granted where a party needs additional time to complete discovery. Miller v. First National Bank of Englewood, 399 P.2d 99, 101 (Colo. 1965).

14. Respondent's counsel received an email from Mr. Gregory on May 23, 2022 stating "The Commission opposes the Stipulation in its current form because of substantive and procedural deficiencies. A significant objection is the Stipulation's failure to address its relation to the new complaint." Even the Commission objected to the stipulation because it didn't mention the new [REDACTED] complaint. Obviously, these two matters are materially related and must be addressed together. The rationale of cases allowing continuances usually is that "the trial court's legitimate concern for the prevention of delay in the trial of cases should not prejudice the substantial rights of parties by forcing them to go to trial without being able to fairly present their case." Gonzales v. Harris, 542 P.2d 842, 844 (Colo. 1975); see Lane v. Gooding, 166 P. 245 (Colo. 1917); Bithell v. Western Care Corp., 762 P.2d 708 (Colo. App. 1988).

15. The change of circumstances are substantive in nature and will significantly impact Judge Scipione's right to due process. The change in circumstances will not be resolved for several weeks or longer. No resolution can be accomplished prior to the presently scheduled hearing set on June 7-8, 2022. Continuances of scheduled trials should be limited to circumstances in which "unforeseen and exceptional circumstances" require diligent attorneys to request a continuance. Todd v. Bear Valley Village Apartments, 980 P.2d 973, 976 (Colo. 1999); Kallas v. Spinozzi, 342 P.3d 607, 614 (Colo. App. 2014).

16. It is critical that the Special Masters have a clear understanding that the Respondent did absolutely nothing to cause the issues requiring the vacating of the trial date. Rather, it was the conduct of special counsel for the People who intentionally failed to disclose material information in a clear effort to reach a Stipulation on the pending matter despite her knowledge of a new matter that would dramatically change the Respondent's trial strategy and ability to defend. Additionally, based on the statements of the Director of the Commission, there is every basis to believe that a second formal proceeding will follow the current one. Rather than join the matters for trial, the special counsel for the People and the Commission want to financially ruin the Respondent or force him to defend without counsel. An additional significant risk is that if the Special Masters determined that discipline is appropriate in the pending matter, the Respondent would then have to defend this aggravating factor in a second matter.

17. The decision to deny or grant a motion for continuance is within the sound discretion of the Court. See Cherry Creek Sch. Dist. No. 5 v. Voelker, 859 P.2d 805, 809 (Colo. 1993); Butler v. Farnar, 704 P.2d 853, 858 (Colo. 1985). "[A] motion to continue shall be granted only for good cause." C.R.C.P. 121(c) § 1-11. Good cause exists when there are unforeseen and exceptional circumstances requiring a continuance." Miller v. Brannon, 207 P.3d 923, 932 (Colo. App. 2009) (citing Todd v. Bear Valley Village Apts., 980 P.2d 973, 976 (Colo. 1999)).

18. In making the determination of whether to grant a continuance, the court should consider the circumstances of the particular case, weighing the right of the party requesting the continuance against the prejudice that may result from the delay. Butler, 740 P.2d at 858. Failure of a trial court to consider these factors is an abuse of discretion. Moody v. Larsen, 802 P.2d 1169, 1173 (Colo. App. 1990).

19. The Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure “shall be liberally construed...to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.” C.R.C.P. 1(a).

20. In addition, the parties no longer have sufficient time in which to prepare for a two-day hearing on this matter, which they reasonably believed would be unnecessary due to the proposed resolution by stipulation.

21. Respondent respectfully requests that the hearing scheduled on June 7-8, 2022 be vacated to afford the parties an opportunity to evaluate the new information and determine if an alternate resolution might still be possible, or to incorporate the newly-obtained information into a hearing at a later date. Continuances should be granted where a party needs to amend the pleadings. Eagle River Mobile Home Park, Ltd. v. District Court, 647 P.2d 660, 663-64 (Colo. 1982); see, Burrows v. Reed, 487 P.2d 576 (Colo. App. 1971) (not selected for official publication).

22. This request is not made for the purpose of delay or for any improper purposes. Neither party will be prejudiced by vacating the hearing. If the trial is not continued, Respondent will be significantly harmed by facing a trial and at the same time defending a second complaint, which may result in further discipline. This would result in a significant violation of even the most basic due process rights that Respondent is entitled to. The Stipulation Respondent agreed to was based on incomplete information and would have never been signed had he known that a second matter was under consideration by the Commission. Respondent is now confronted with the possibility that the Commission approves a flawed Stipulation and sends it to the Supreme Court for its consideration. At the same time, the Commission is insisting on a response to a second complaint, which very likely will result in a second formal complaint proceeding. This would result in Respondent having to address prior discipline based on the Stipulation when the conduct alleged was contemporaneous in time and substance to the stipulated discipline. This is untenable and an abuse of discretion.

23. The concepts of joinder and fundamental due process support the vacating of the looming trial date and a stay of that proceeding until either a disposition is reached, which accurately reflects the facts of both complaints, or the complaints are joined for trial. The Special Master has the authority to set a status conference following a reasonable time to allow the Respondent to investigate and respond to the new allegations. Furthermore, if a second formal proceeding is allowed, the extension of time would allow joinder of the matters for trial.

24. Accordingly, Respondent renews his request that the hearing be vacated to allow these two materially related cases to be resolved, or tried, together.

WHEREFORE, Respondent, Judge Scipione, requests that the Special Master vacate the hearing presently set on June 7-8, 2022, for the good cause described herein.

Respectfully submitted this 24th day of May, 2022.

COMPLAINANT’S MOTION FOR LEAVE TO AMEND STATEMENT OF CHARGES

COMES NOW Complainant, the People of the State of Colorado (the “People”), by and through undersigned Special Counsel for the Commission on Judicial Discipline (“CCJD”), and pursuant to C.R.C.P. 15(a), hereby submits the following Motion for Leave to Amend Statement of Charges and First Amended Statement of Charges (attached hereto as Attachment A). In support thereof, the People state as follows:

Conferral Pursuant to C.R.C.P. 121, Section 1-15(8)

Undersigned counsel conferred with Respondent's counsel via email on June 7 and 9, 2022, respectively. Respondent is opposed to the relief sought herein,

ARGUMENT

1. On October 28, 2021, the CCJD sent a letter (attached hereto as Exhibit 1) to Respondent regarding receipt of allegations sufficient to be considered as a complaint under Colorado Rule of Judicial Discipline 13. Therein, Respondent was notified that Canon Rules 1.2, 1.3, 2.3, 2.8, and 2.9 may be implicated and that an investigation would ensue.

2. Subsequent to an investigation, the People filed their Statement of Charges on or about January 20, 2022. For reasons unknown, Canon Rule 1.1¹, a rule of general applicability, and Canon Rules 1.2² and 2.9³, specifically referenced in the October 28, 2021 letter from CCJD, were not included therein.

3. C.R.C.P. 15(a) states as follows, with emphasis added:

A party may amend his pleading once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading is filed or, if the pleading is one to which no responsive pleading is permitted and the action has not been placed upon the trial calendar, he may so amend it at any time within 21 days after it is filed. Otherwise, a party may amend his pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires....

4. In this case, justice requires that the People be permitted to amend the Statement of Charges to add violations of Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, and 2.9.

5. Colorado courts have held that amendments at all times should be liberally allowed when they do not lead to surprise or injury. See Green v. Davis, 185 P 369 (Colo. 1919). Here, as noted above, Respondent received notice that

¹ Canon Rule 1.1 provides, in relevant part: "A judge shall comply with the law, including the Code of Judicial Conduct."

² Canon Rule 1.2 provides: "A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety."

³ Canon Rule 2.9 provides, in relevant part: "A judge shall not initiate, permit, or consider ex parte communications, or consider other communications made to the judge outside the presence of the parties or their lawyers, concerning a pending* or impending matter."

Canon Rules 1.2 and 2.9 were implicated back in October 2021. Exhibit 1. Moreover, Canon Rule 1.1 has general applicability and, as such, the addition of a charge related thereto does not lead to surprise or injury.

6. This matter is scheduled to go to hearing between August 22 – 25, 2022, thereby allowing Respondent sufficient time to file an Answer to the First Amended Statement of Charges (Attachment A).

7. Moreover, as the People are not amending any of the underlying factual allegations set forth in the Statement of Charges, allowing the People to add the aforementioned charges will not result in prejudice nor necessitate any further discovery or cause any further delay.

WHEREFORE, pursuant to the above, the People respectfully request the Special Masters grant leave to amend the Statement of Charges as set forth in Attachment A, and for such other and further relief as may be deemed just and proper.

DATED this 10th day of June, 2022.

FIRST AMENDED STATEMENT OF CHARGES

THIS FIRST AMENDED STATEMENT OF CHARGES is filed pursuant to the authority of Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (“Colo. RJD”) Rules 4, 16(b)(4)¹, and 18, and it is alleged as follows:

I. BACKGROUND AND JURISDICTION

1. John E. Scipione (“Respondent”) was appointed as a Judge of the

¹ On December 17, 2021, the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the “Commission”) determined there was probably cause to proceed with formal charges against Respondent Judge John E. Scipione.

Arapahoe County District Court in 2018. He was serving in that capacity at all times pertinent to this Statement of Charges.

2. Respondent is subject to the jurisdiction of the Colorado Supreme Court and the Commission in these disciplinary proceedings.

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

A. SEXUAL HARASSMENT

3. In early June 2021, [REDACTED] had completed her second year of law school at University of Denver Sturm College of Law and began a judicial law clerk internship with Respondent.

4. On her first day, Respondent was friendly and chatty with Ms. [REDACTED] and took her out to lunch.

5. The two briefly discussed Respondent's [REDACTED], who was not in the office that day.

6. Respondent stated it was so nice to finally have someone friendly and nice in the office because his [REDACTED], "was a bitch."

7. Ms. [REDACTED]'s work schedule was usually 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., while Ms. [REDACTED] generally left at 4:30 p.m.

8. After Ms. [REDACTED] left for the day, Respondent would often call Ms. [REDACTED] into his office or stand at her doorway, and they would "chit chat" – sometimes about family or other non-work issues.

9. Although Ms. [REDACTED] usually wanted to leave at 5:00, she stayed later because Respondent was a judge, and she did not want to tell him that she needed or wanted to go home.

10. During Ms. [REDACTED]'s second or third week working for Respondent, Respondent began making comments that made her uncomfortable.

11. One day, Ms. [REDACTED] wore her hair in a high ponytail and Respondent said, "I gotta warn you high ponytails are my weakness. What are you, Ariana Grande?"

12. Ms. [REDACTED] stated she thought the ponytail comment was odd, but "laughed it off."

13. Another day, Ms. [REDACTED] n was wearing a dress that showed her arms and Respondent commented “your guns are out” and asked if she was a fitness model.

14. Ms. [REDACTED] noted that Respondent asked the question using a flirtatious voice, but again, Ms. [REDACTED] tried to “laugh it off.”

15. Ms. [REDACTED] developed a friendship with a janitor at the courthouse named Tan.

16. When Respondent saw Ms. [REDACTED] talking with Tan, he said to her, “Oh Tan’s got a crush on you – trying to make me jealous!”

17. Ms. [REDACTED] felt uncomfortable when Respondent again commented about Tan making him jealous on another day when Ms. [REDACTED] was talking with the janitor.

18. Ms. [REDACTED] also reported that Respondent made uncomfortable comments to her during this time period.

19. In mid-June, Ms. [REDACTED] was talking with Respondent on a Friday when Respondent told her he and his wife were having friends sleep over at their house, his kids were out of town, and his wife was buying new sheets.

20. The following Monday morning Ms. [REDACTED] asked Respondent about his party.

21. Respondent stated that his neighbors were probably not happy about the party because his guests were walking around nude outside in his yard.

22. Ms. [REDACTED] thought his statement was weird and did not ask any more questions.

23. On or about June 17, 2021, Respondent called Ms. [REDACTED] into his office to talk.

24. Respondent was wearing a black ring and asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she knew what it meant.

25. Ms. [REDACTED] said she did not know.

26. Respondent told her that a black ring on someone’s left hand meant that the person is asexual.

27. Respondent said he moved his black ring to his right hand so people would not think he was asexual.

28. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED], "I live a very different lifestyle, do you know what I'm saying?"

29. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] to close his door.

30. Ms. [REDACTED] closed the door.

31. Ms. [REDACTED]'s heart began pounding and she started sweating.

32. Respondent then began telling Ms. [REDACTED] the details of his lifestyle, which he referred to as the "swinger lifestyle."

33. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] about problems in his marriage.

34. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] how his wife had pushed him to try the swinger lifestyle.

35. He told her he and his wife go to a swinger ranch/club in Colorado.

36. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that at the ranch, some people:

- a. "Participate in sex;"
- b. Some "hit it and quit it;"
- c. "Others just watch, but it is all very respectful;" and
- d. "Women run the show and people walk around completely nude."

37. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] the club/ranch cost for women to get in is $25; for men $300; for couples $100.

38. Respondent said he and his wife went with other couples on swinger vacations; his wife was encouraging him to put himself out there; and Colorado is number one in the nation for the swinger lifestyle.

39. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] his wife told him to download the Tinder application (an "app" commonly used to meet and engage with others in brief sexual encounters).

40. Respondent asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she could help him set up his Tinder account because he did not know much about it and did not know what to say about himself on his Tinder profile.

41. Ms. [REDACTED] was extremely nervous.

42. Ms. [REDACTED] then changed the subject to try to start talking about her family in Arkansas.

43. Toward the end of the conversation Mr. [REDACTED] indicated she needed to leave.

44. Before Ms. [REDACTED] left, Respondent told her he knew he could trust her with this information – and he had not even told his best friend about his lifestyle.

45. He told Ms. [REDACTED], “If you tell anyone this, it would be really bad for me.”

46. Once she was in her car, Ms. [REDACTED] tried to call her best friend from high school to tell her what had just happened with Respondent but had to leave a voicemail for her friend.

47. Ms. [REDACTED] also told a fellow law student what had occurred that day, and later told her law school mentor what Respondent said to her while his door was closed.

48. Ms. [REDACTED] avoided Respondent for the next week.

49. Later that week, Ms. [REDACTED] was alone in the courtroom with Respondent.

50. They began chatting and Respondent said his friend’s wife was going to Florida to see her boyfriend.

51. Respondent saw that Ms. [REDACTED] was confused and said: “They’re in the lifestyle. You know the lifestyle?”

52. Ms. [REDACTED] indicated she did not know.

53. Respondent went on to tell Ms. [REDACTED] about the swinger lifestyle, which he described as “the open relationship thing.”

54. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] about a swinger ranch where:

- a. Some people like to go on vacations for open relationships;
- b. Some people like to watch; and
- c. Some people “hit it and quit it.”

55. Ms. [REDACTED] changed the subject and left the courtroom.

COLORADO COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE

October 28, 2021

No. 21-138
Confidential

Hon. John Scipione
District Judge
Arapahoe County Justice Center
7525 South Potomac Street
Centennial, CO 80112

Dear Judge Scipione:

Chief Judge Amico received information from several staff members of the 18th Judicial District about your conduct with a law student intern. She reported these concerns to the Commission, pursuant to Canon Rule 2.15. In addition, we received information that you may have attempted to influence the actions of a Denver Probate Judge who was presiding over your father's estate. The Commission determined that there were sufficient allegations to be considered as a complaint, under Colo. RJD 13.

At their October 22nd meeting, the members of the Commission reviewed a preliminary investigation report from staff of Attorney Regulation who provide investigative support for the Commission. As is our usual procedure, the case was assigned to one of the members who analyzed it in detail and summarized it for the other members.

The Commission reached no conclusions about the allegations, except to determine that they were sufficiently serious to require your response and the Commission's further investigation. The Commission members will consider the allegations in accordance with Colo. RJD 16. We emphasize that the Commission needs your views in order to form an objective view about whether your conduct may have violated any of the Canons and, if so, what type of disposition or sanction would be warranted. Accordingly, pursuant to Colo. RJD 14(a) we are notifying you of these allegations and are requesting your response.

Initially, the Canon Rules that may be implicated in this situation include Canon Rule 1.2 which requires a judge to promote confidence in the judiciary and avoid the appearance of impropriety; Canon Rule 2.3 which, along with Chief Justice Directive 08-06, Attachment A, prohibits conduct that results in harassment of staff; and Canon Rule 2.8 requiring a judge to be patient, dignified and courteous to staff. And an attempt to use your judicial position to influence a decision in your family's probate case could present conduct issues under Canon Rule 1.3, which prohibits using the prestige of judicial officer for personal benefit; or under Canon Rule 2.9 which prohibits ex parte communications.

As explained in more detail below, it is alleged that your conduct with your law student intern, [REDACTED], created an adverse and uncomfortable work environment.

Ms. [REDACTED] began her clerkship with you in June 2021, after completing her [REDACTED] year of law school. While having lunch with you on her first day at work, you allegedly stated that it was nice to have someone friendly and nice in the office, because your [REDACTED], [REDACTED], was a "bitch." At the time, Ms. [REDACTED] didn't think much about it.

However, as the weeks passed, she started to feel uncomfortable around you. On several occasions, after your CJA left for the day, you would call her into your office and talk about family or other non-work issues. In her second or third week on the job, when she wore her hair in a high ponytail, you said that high pony tails were your weakness. On another day, she wore a dress exposing her arms which led to your comment that "your guns are out" and asked if she was a fitness model. She felt your statements were flirtatious.

She got acquainted with a janitor named [REDACTED]. She told investigators that he was an older man and they would chat about Bonsai trees and his kids. But when you saw her talking with him, you remarked that "[REDACTED] got a crush on you -- trying to make me jealous?" Initially, she thought you were joking but she felt uncomfortable when on another day you saw her talking with [REDACTED] and said it was making you jealous.

On a Friday, you told her that your wife and you were having friends sleepover at your house while your kids were out of town. On Monday, when she asked about the weekend, you stated that the neighbors were probably not happy because the guests were walking around in the nude.

Toward the end of June, you showed her the black ring you were wearing on your right hand and explained that if a man wore a black ring on his left hand, it meant that he was asexual and you didn't want anyone to perceive that as your sexual status. You then commented that you lived a very different lifestyle. She laughed but you then said "Do you know what I'm saying?" You then closed the door and began telling her the details of what you called your "swinger lifestyle." You explained some problems in your marriage and your wife's efforts to try the swinger lifestyle. You explained that you and your wife go to a swinger ranch/club where some people participate and others just watch and walk around nude.

You asked Ms. [REDACTED] to help you download the "Tinder" application which apparently is used to meet and engage in brief sexual encounters. You wanted her to help you describe yourself on this app. She became uncomfortable and tried leave. You then told her that he knew he could trust her with this information and that if she told anyone about this, it would be "really bad" for you.

She reported this incident to a friend and another law student the next day, and later reported it to [REDACTED]

A few days later, she was talking with Ms. [REDACTED] at work and was determined not to share this information with her. However, Ms. [REDACTED] told her that other clerks had heard rumors that you had an affair with a former clerk and that you were a "swinger." Ms. [REDACTED] then felt comfortable disclosing the description you provided about your lifestyle.

Ms. [REDACTED] encouraged her to report what you had told her. Ms. [REDACTED] was reluctant to do so because of potential repercussions regarding her internship, law school, and attempts to get future jobs. Ms. [REDACTED] suggested that she talk with retired Judge John Wheeler, for whom [REDACTED] had served as a CJA, because she knew Ms. [REDACTED] could trust him. So, Ms. [REDACTED] took it on herself to discuss it with Judge Wheeler who advised her to report your conduct.

Later that week, Ms. [REDACTED] was alone in the courtroom with you. You told her that your friend's wife was going to Florida to see her boyfriend. When this appeared to confuse her, you explained that they were "in the lifestyle. You know the lifestyle?" You then described it as an "open relationship thing." Ms. [REDACTED] later told Ms. [REDACTED] about the conversation.

When Ms. [REDACTED] told you that she needed to end her internship in July -- earlier than planned, you reacted angrily and asked her to stay until September. She felt intimidated and agreed to stay a few more days. You later called her into your office, thanked her for doing really great work for you, and told her she was "not just a pretty face."

Ms. [REDACTED] asked to transfer to the CJA position for Magistrate Amanda Bradley. This allegedly upset you and you commented that the magistrate didn't know what she was doing and was always getting reversed. After Magistrate Bradley decided to hire her, Ms. [REDACTED] relayed to Magistrate Bradley what Ms. [REDACTED] had shared with her. The magistrate then told Ms. [REDACTED] that she had an obligation to report all this. Ms. [REDACTED] also shared this same information with CJA [REDACTED] who reported it to her judge, District Judge Eric White, who also concluded that it must be reported. Judge White had also heard the rumor that you had an affair with a prior clerk.

It was apparent to the investigators and the Commission members that these incidents had an adverse emotional impact on the staff who were interviewed.

Magistrate Bradley, Judge White, Ms. [REDACTED] and Ms. [REDACTED] got together on a call to discuss the situation and decided to bring it to the attention of Chief Judge Amico. On September 1st, Magistrate Bradley, former Judge Wheeler, and Judge White met with the Chief Judge and Deputy Court Executive, Jenni Turnidge. Chief Judge Amico then reported the allegations about your conduct to the Commission. We are told that there are staff members who are concerned that your new CJA may have similar experiences involving inappropriate conversations with you.

Chief Judge Amico subsequently was contacted by a Denver Probate Judge whose staff reported that you had asked a favor of the Probate Court in expediting approval of an emergency motion for your appointment as a co-personal representative in your father's estate and the issuance of Letters Testamentary. This involves The Estate of Robert A. Scipione, Case No. 2021PR356. We will be seeking more information about this allegation, but the Commission is concerned that it may involve violations of Canon Rules 1.3 and/or 2.9.

We would appreciate your cooperation in providing us a written response to these allegations well in advance of the Commission's next regular meeting, scheduled for December 17th, so that we can do whatever further investigation may be warranted and, if necessary, arrange for our investigators to interview you. You may send your response by regular mail to our office address or by email to me.

Our proceedings are confidential, in accordance with the guidelines in Colo. RJD 6.5.

Sincerely,

William J. Campbell

ANSWER TO FIRST AMENDED STATEMENT OF CHARGES

Respondent, John E. Scipione, by and through his undersigned counsel, John S. Gleason and Burns, Figa & Will, P.C., hereby submits his Answer to The People of the State of Colorado’s First Amended Statement of Charges.

I. BACKGROUND AND JURISDICTION

1. John E. Scipione (“Respondent”) was appointed as a Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court in 2018. He was serving in that capacity at all times pertinent to this Statement of Charges.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

2. Respondent is subject to the jurisdiction of the Colorado Supreme Court and the Commission in these disciplinary proceedings.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

A. SEXUAL HARASSMENT

3. In early June 2021, [REDACTED] had completed her second year of law school at [REDACTED] and began a judicial law clerk internship with Respondent.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

4. On her first day, Respondent was friendly and chatty with Ms. [REDACTED] and took her out to lunch.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

5. The two briefly discussed Respondent's Court Judicial Assistant ("CJA"), [REDACTED] [REDACTED], who was not in the office that day.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

6. Respondent stated it was so nice to finally have someone friendly and nice in the office because his [REDACTED], "was a bitch."

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent was unsure how his CJA, Ms. [REDACTED], would treat Ms. [REDACTED] and wanted to make sure that she felt welcome. Respondent described her as non-talkative, sullen, moody, and relatively unfriendly. Respondent never used "bitch" to describe Ms. [REDACTED] or any other CJA to Ms. [REDACTED].

7. Ms. [REDACTED]'s work schedule was usually 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., while Ms. [REDACTED] generally left at 4:30 p.m.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Ms. [REDACTED] work schedule, which was set up before she started her summer internship, was Monday-Thursday from 8:30 am to 5:30 pm by her design.

8. After Ms. [REDACTED] left for the day, Respondent would often call Ms. [REDACTED] into his office or stand at her doorway, and they would "chit chat" – sometimes about family or other non-work issues.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. As was customary, Respondent had a habit and routine of checking in with his staff, particularly law clerks, at the end of the day to discuss pending projects, answer questions, and engage in general reciprocal conversations about non-work-related matters such as family, friends, and weekend plans, etc.

9. Although Ms. [REDACTED] usually wanted to leave at 5:00, she stayed later because Respondent was a judge, and she did not want to tell him that she needed or wanted to go home.

RESPONSE: Denied. See Paragraph 7. As stated above, Ms. [REDACTED]'s work schedule was Monday to Thursday from 8:30 am to 5:30 pm. She did not stay later. Although she was scheduled to work until 5:30 pm, she always told Respondent when she wanted to, or needed to, leave early to see friends, go to the gym to work out, or visit with her brother by video chat every Wednesday afternoon, since he was in prison.

10. During Ms. [REDACTED]'s second or third week working for Respondent, Respondent began making comments that made her uncomfortable.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent denies ever making any comments that he knowingly knew made Ms. [REDACTED] uncomfortable. Respondent is without information sufficient to form a belief that any of his comments ever made Ms. [REDACTED] uncomfortable since she never said so. To the contrary, Ms. [REDACTED] regularly engaged in friendly conversation and banter, unsolicited by Respondent, asked questions about Respondent's wife, Dr. Kymberly Scipione, and made comments about Dr. Kymberly and his children's pictures which adorned Respondent's office.

11. One day, Ms. [REDACTED] wore her hair in a high ponytail and Respondent said, "I gotta warn you high ponytails are my weakness. What are you, Ariana Grande?"

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. On a particular day that Ms. [REDACTED] wore her hair in a high ponytail, Respondent stated that he liked that hairstyle, that he liked when his wife wore her hair in a high ponytail and that she looked like the singer Ariana Grande. In response, Ms. [REDACTED] smiled, said "Thank You!" and swirled her ponytail around.

12. Ms. [REDACTED] stated she thought the ponytail comment was odd, but "laughed it off."

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to form a belief as to what Ms. [REDACTED] was thinking other than what she said in response, which was "Thank You."

13. Another day, Ms. [REDACTED] was wearing a dress that showed her arms and Respondent commented "your guns are out" and asked if she was a fitness model.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Ms. [REDACTED] repeatedly told Respondent about her workout routine and lifting weights. On a particular day, Respondent commented that "the guns were out" referring to her arms. In response, Ms. [REDACTED] flexed her arms in a bodybuilding pose and said, “Thank You!” Respondent denies that he ever asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she was a fitness model.

14. Ms. [REDACTED] noted that Respondent asked the question using a flirtatious voice, but again, Ms. [REDACTED] tried to “laugh it off.”

RESPONSE: Denied. At no point in time did Respondent ever use a “flirtatious” voice and never asked if Ms. [REDACTED] was a fitness model. Respondent is also without information sufficient to even know what is meant by a flirtatious voice.

15. Ms. [REDACTED] developed a friendship with a janitor at the courthouse named Tan.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny whether Ms. [REDACTED] ever developed a friendship with Tan, the custodial engineer, who worked at the courthouse. Respondent has known Tan for years and he often visits his court staff, particularly female CJAs, when he gets to work and before his shift. As was his custom, he liked to talk, bring small gifts and treats, and chat with anyone who was around, including Ms. [REDACTED].

16. When Respondent saw Ms. [REDACTED] talking with Tan, he said to her, “Oh Tan’s got a crush on you – trying to make me jealous!”

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. After several days in a row of Tan coming by to visit Ms. [REDACTED], Respondent teased Ms. [REDACTED] and said, “Better watch out, Tan’s got a crush on you.” Both Respondent and Ms. [REDACTED] laughed. Respondent denies ever saying to Ms. [REDACTED], or anyone that talking to Tan made him jealous.

17. Ms. [REDACTED] felt uncomfortable when Respondent again commented about Tan making him jealous on another day when Ms. [REDACTED] was talking with the janitor.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny that Ms. [REDACTED] felt uncomfortable when Respondent made a comment about Tan on one occasion, as she never told Respondent that such comment, or any other comment, ever made her uncomfortable during the entire 8-week summer internship.

18. Ms. [REDACTED] also reported that Respondent made uncomfortable comments to her during this time period.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny that Ms. [REDACTED] ever reported that Respondent made comments that made her uncomfortable during this time period, to the extent that “this time period” is during the 8-week summer internship of Ms. [REDACTED]. Further, between January 2021 and June 2021, Respondent spent every working day alone with Ms. [REDACTED] who not only never stated she felt uncomfortable with Respondent, but barely managed more than a hello or goodbye to Respondent from her first day working with Respondent as a CJA.

19. In mid-June, Ms. [REDACTED] was talking with Respondent on a Friday when Respondent told her he and his wife were having friends sleep over at their house, his kids were out of town, and his wife was buying new sheets.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. On Friday, June 11, 2021, Respondent was telling CJA [REDACTED] that he and his wife were hosting a soft launch BBQ and a pool party for their new food truck business at their home on Saturday, June 12, 2021, and expecting about 50 people, including out-of-town guests. Respondent stated that they were excited for the launch, their kids were out of town, and were excited to have their friends over. They were working frantically to get their house ready for their guests. [REDACTED] responded how exciting that was and that she could not wait to hear all about it on Monday.

20. The following Monday morning Ms. [REDACTED] asked Respondent about his party.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

21. Respondent stated that his neighbors were probably not happy about the party because his guests were walking around nude outside in his yard.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. In response to [REDACTED] asking about how the party went over the weekend, Respondent joked that his neighbors probably were not thrilled as the party went late, people were loud and running around half naked since it was a pool party. Respondent denies saying that his guests were walking around nude outside in his yard.

22. Ms. [REDACTED] thought his statement was weird and did not ask any more questions.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny whether [REDACTED] thought "his statement" was weird and didn't ask any more questions. Unknown what "his statement" refers to. [REDACTED] said, "Sounds like you guys had a great time" and laughed when the Respondent told her about the neighbors.

23. On or about June 17, 2021, Respondent called Ms. [REDACTED] into his office to talk.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to admit or deny that on or about June 17, 2021 Respondent called Ms. [REDACTED] into his office to talk as it was his habit and routine to check in with staff, including his law clerks, and Ms.

██████████ at the end of the day about pending assignments, answer questions, and make small talk.

24. Respondent was wearing a black ring and asked Ms. ██████████ if she knew what it meant.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. On a particular day, in mid-June, while Ms. ██████████ was in Respondent's office before leaving for the day, she said she was curious about the black ring that Respondent wore on this right hand. At first, Respondent hesitated and stated, without detail, that the black ring on his right hand was a "lifestyle" ring, but did not elaborate. Ms. ██████████ then stated, "Now you have me curious." I'm interested in all types of lifestyles. "You have to tell me." In response to her questions, Respondent explained, in matter-of-fact fashion, what the "lifestyle" was, including, but not limited to, alternative relationships, consensual non-monogamy, polyamory, and what some people call "swingers." Respondent said he hated the word "swinger", didn't use the word, and that "swinger" was considered to be an archaic and pejorative term of limited significance.

All of Respondent's statements about the "lifestyle" were explained to Ms. ██████████ in an informative, educational, and non-sexual manner, all within the context of Dr. Kymberly Scipione's (Respondent's spouse) recently published doctoral dissertation titled "A Qualitative Exploration of Consensual Non-Monogamy Relationships between Married Heterosexual Couples." In previous discussions, Respondent and Ms. ██████████ discussed Dr. Scipione's academic research and work as a clinical psychologist and AASECT certified sex therapist. Ms. ██████████ was interested and asked several follow-up questions about Dr. Scipione's clinical practice.

25. Ms. ██████████ said she did not know.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. ██████████ asked Respondent what the black ring on his right hand signified. See Paragraph 24.

26. Respondent told her that a black ring on someone's left hand meant that the person is asexual.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent told Ms. ██████████ that he learned from his spouse's research that a black ring on someone's middle finger signified that the person was asexual.

27. Respondent said he moved his black ring to his right hand so people would not think he was asexual.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent stated that he moved his ring from his middle finger to right ring finger when he discovered the different meanings.

28. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED], "I live a very different lifestyle, do you know what I'm saying?"

RESPONSE: Denied. In response to Ms. [REDACTED]'s question about his black ring, Respondent stated that it was a "lifestyle" ring. When Ms. [REDACTED] prompted Respondent for more information and stated that she was interested in all lifestyles, Respondent explained what the term included and was not limited to "swinger." See Paragraph 24.

29. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] to close his door.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent did not tell Ms. [REDACTED] to close his door. Respondent never closed the door to his office with Ms. [REDACTED] or any other clerk or intern in his office.

30. Ms. [REDACTED] closed the door.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. [REDACTED] did not close Respondent's door.

31. Ms. [REDACTED] heart began pounding and she started sweating.

RESPONSE: Denied. At no time did Ms. [REDACTED] ever show any signs of discomfort, including sweating. To the contrary, not only did Ms. [REDACTED] initiate the "black ring" conversation with Respondent, but she stated she was curious and asked a number of questions, including questions about Dr. Scipione's research.

32. Respondent then began telling Ms. [REDACTED] the details of his lifestyle, which he referred to as the "swinger lifestyle."

RESPONSE: Denied. In response to Ms. [REDACTED] asking Respondent about his black ring, and telling Respondent she was curious about and interested in learning about all different lifestyles, Respondent explained what "lifestyle" included. At no time did Respondent refer to the details of his lifestyle as the "swinger lifestyle". At no time has Respondent ever described himself as a "swinger" and explained why the term "swinger" is archaic and can be pejorative in nature. See Paragraph 24.

33. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] about problems in his marriage.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never told Ms. [REDACTED], or any other person, that he had problems, or was having problems, in his marriage. To the contrary, Respondent proudly displayed many pictures of his wife in his office, spoke of her in the most complimentary and admiring terms, and told everyone, including Ms. [REDACTED], how lucky he was and how proud of Dr. Scipione he was, particularly relative to her extraordinary academic achievements and research.

34. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] how his wife had pushed him to try the swinger lifestyle.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never told Ms. [REDACTED], or any other person, that his wife pushed him to try the swinger lifestyle. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that over the course of five years of academic research, he and Dr. Scipione had explored different aspects of the lifestyle.

35. He told her he and his wife go to a swinger ranch/club in Colorado.

RESPONSE: Admitted. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that he and Dr. Scipione are members of an adult-only lifestyle club in Colorado called the Scarlet Ranch (“The Ranch”) where they have met many close friends.

36. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that at the ranch, some people:

- a. “Participate in sex;”
- b. Some “hit it and quit it;”
- c. “Others just watch, but it is all very respectful;” and
- d. “Women run the show and people walk around completely nude.”

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] about the Ranch and what a welcoming, and respectful environment it is, especially for women, where people can go to express themselves freely without judgment. Respondent explained that people go to the Ranch for many different reasons – to dance, to have dinner and drinks with friends, theme parties, and just to enjoy the atmosphere. Any sexual activities that occur within the private confines of the Ranch are at the discretion of consenting adults and is not the focus of the club.

37. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] the club/ranch cost for women to get in is $25; for men $300; for couples $100.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Respondent explained how membership works at the Ranch, including the screening process of new members. Respondent explained there are annual membership and nightly fees.

38. Respondent said he and his wife went with other couples on swinger vacations; his wife was encouraging him to put himself out there; and Colorado is number one in the nation for the swinger lifestyle.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that he and his wife enjoyed going to lifestyle friendly vacation resorts, including in Mexico. Respondent explained to Ms. [REDACTED] that his wife was encouraging him to “put himself out there” as a welcome distraction to all of the trauma and stress Respondent was experiencing at that time due to his father's hospitalizations, his children's car accidents, and Respondent's recent medical trauma, including the removal of his kidney in the summer of 2020. Additionally, Respondent told Ms. [REDACTED] that Colorado had one of the largest lifestyle communities in the United States.

39. Respondent then told Ms. [REDACTED] his wife told him to download the Tinder application (an "app" commonly used to meet and engage with others in brief sexual encounters).

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. As a stress relief and attempt to deal with all the recent trauma Respondent was dealing with, Dr. Scipione encouraged Respondent to download different dating apps, including Tinder, as a distraction and entertainment for them both.¹

40. Respondent asked Ms. [REDACTED] if she could help him set up his Tinder account because he did not know much about it and did not know what to say about himself on his Tinder profile.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent and Dr. Scipione created dating profiles as a couple. Respondent never asked Ms. [REDACTED] to help him set up his Tinder account or asked her to assist with creating a profile.

41. Ms. [REDACTED] was extremely nervous.

RESPONSE: Denied. At no time did Ms. [REDACTED] ever appear nervous in any way. Respondent and Ms. [REDACTED] had a short, casual, and light-hearted conversation where Ms. [REDACTED] smiled, laughed, and asked questions. Respondent never saw Ms. [REDACTED] appear nervous or uncomfortable.

42. Ms. [REDACTED] then changed the subject to try to start talking about her family in Arkansas.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. [REDACTED] never changed the conversation. The conversation ended shortly after it began and Ms. [REDACTED] left for the day.

43. Toward the end of the conversation Mr. [REDACTED] indicated she needed to leave.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. [REDACTED] never indicated that she needed to leave. The conversation, as referenced, occurred at the end of the day and Ms. [REDACTED] left at her normally scheduled time.

¹ Dr. Scipione had advised Respondent about the "The Big Tinder Project" which studied the 13 Motives to use Tinder. The most commonly cited reason is using Tinder as an entertainment tool when wanting to pass time and for distraction. See Elizabeth Dorrance Hall, Ph.D., "Why People Use Tinder", Psychology Today, February 13, 2018.

44. Before Ms. ██████ left, Respondent told her he knew he could trust her with this information – and he had not even told his best friend about his lifestyle.

RESPONSE: Denied. Before Ms. ██████ left, Respondent asked her to keep their conversation between them as it was private and nobody’s business. Respondent never told her that he knew he could trust her with this information (he had known her for about 2 weeks at this point) or that even his best friend didn’t know about his lifestyle. Respondent’s best friend has always known about the lifestyle.

45. He told Ms. ██████, “If you tell anyone this, it would be really bad for me.”

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never told Ms. ██████ that “if you tell anyone this, it would be really bad for me.” Respondent asked her to keep their conversation private as it was nobody’s business.

46. Once she was in her car, Ms. ██████ tried to call her best friend from high school to tell her what had just happened with Respondent but had to leave a voicemail for her friend.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to know what Ms. ██████ did when she was in her car or whether she called anyone. At no time did Ms. ██████ ever report to Respondent that she was uncomfortable with the short one-time conversation she had with Respondent about the lifestyle.

47. Ms. ██████ also told a fellow law student what had occurred that day, and later told her law school mentor what Respondent said to her while his door was closed.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to know who Ms. ██████ told about the conversation that occurred in his office with the door opened.

48. Ms. ██████ Respondent for the next week.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. ██████ never avoided Respondent in the following week or weeks thereafter. In fact, Ms. ██████ continued to work her normal schedule and speak with Respondent regularly for the next 6 weeks until she ended her internship on July 30, 2021 – two weeks before her scheduled end date.

49. Later that week, Ms. ██████ was alone in the courtroom with Respondent.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent was always in the courtroom alone with ██████, including, but not limited to, every working day between January 2021 when she started and August 2021 when she transferred to another division. Respondent is unclear what week in particular is referenced.

50. They began chatting and Respondent said his friend's wife was going to Florida to see her boyfriend.

RESPONSE: Denied. After a hearing, Respondent told ██████████ that he was receiving text messages and pictures from his friends who were vacationing in Florida with another couple. Pictures included his friends, and the couple they were staying with, including the boyfriend of his friend's wife. Respondent explained that his friends were in an open-marriage. Respondent never mentioned anything about the "lifestyle".

51. Respondent saw that Ms. ██████████ was confused and said: "They're in the lifestyle. You know the lifestyle?"

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent stated to ██████████ that his friends had an open marriage. He never said they were in the "lifestyle".

52. Ms. ██████████ indicated she did not know.

RESPONSE: Denied. In response to Respondent stating that his friends were in an open marriage, Ms. ██████████ stated, "Well, I know I could never do that." That was the end of the conversation.

53. Respondent went on to tell Ms. ██████████ about the swinger lifestyle, which he described as "the open relationship thing."

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never spoke with CJA ██████████ about the lifestyle. He told Ms. ██████████ that his friends were in an open marriage.

54. Respondent then told Ms. ██████████ about a swinger ranch where:

- a. Some people like to go on vacations for open relationships;
- b. Some people like to watch; and
- c. Some people "hit it and quit it."

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never spoke with ██████████ about the Ranch on any occasion. Ms. ██████████ rarely spoke to Respondent about anything during her 8 months as his CJA.

55. ██████████ changed the subject and left the courtroom.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent never spoke with ██████████ about the Ranch, or the lifestyle. Respondent and Ms. ██████████ both left the courtroom at the same time because they were done with their hearings and conversation.

56. ██████████ then told Ms. ██████████ what had just occurred in the courtroom.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without any information to know what Ms. ██████ told Ms. ██████n about what had occurred in the courtroom.

57. Because of the closed door conversation regarding his swinger lifestyle, Ms. ██████ was no longer comfortable working for Respondent.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. ██████ never advised Respondent that she was no longer comfortable working for Respondent. In fact, Ms. ██████n worked with Respondent for the next 6 weeks until July 30, 2021 – just two weeks before her summer internship was scheduled to end.

58. Ms. ██████ informed Respondent that she needed to end her internship in July – earlier than planned.

RESPONSE: Denied. Sometime between July 21-23, 2021, Ms. ██████ informed Respondent that she needed to end her internship 2 weeks early or by July 30, 2021 as she had other academic and job prospect related activities the first part of August before classes resumed the middle of August.

59. Respondent became angry and said he was counting on Ms. ██████ to stay until at least September.

RESPONSE: Denied. When Ms. ██████ advised Respondent that she would be leaving July 30, 2021 (or two weeks earlier than planned), Respondent was surprised and said that “would suck” given all the work that was pending and how much work she had completed over the summer. Respondent never became angry with Ms. ██████ and never said he was counting on her to stay until at least September when everyone knew that the internship would always end when classes resumed in mid-August.

60. Ms. ██████ felt intimidated and agreed to work a couple more days.

RESPONSE: Denied. Ms. ██████ never gave any indication at any point in time that she was intimidated by Respondent. Further, she announced on or about July 21-23, 2021 that her last day would be July 30, 2021 or two weeks earlier than originally planned. In response, Respondent announced that they would all (including Ms. ██████) go out to lunch in honor of her last day. Ms. ██████ was excited and all three (██████████ and Respondent) picked July 30, 2021 for their office lunch. Ms. ██████ picked a sushi restaurant and they all went to lunch. An hour after returning from lunch, Respondent’s father passed away. Respondent never heard from or saw Ms. ██████ again.

61. During her last two days, Respondent called Ms. ██████ into his office and said she had done some really great work for him, and then said: “See, ██████ – you’re not just a pretty face.”

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. During Ms. ██████'s last scheduled days, Respondent spoke with her in his office and told her that she had done great work over the summer, did great legal research and writing, and was going to be a very successful attorney. Ms. ██████ told Respondent what an amazing experience she had, how grateful she was for the opportunity, and how much she had learned. Respondent never made any comment in any form that included "You're not just another pretty face."

62. Ms. ██████ asked administration for a transfer.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to know whether ██████ ever asked administration for a transfer.

63. When Ms. ██████ learned that Magistrate Amanda Bradley needed a CJA, Ms. ██████ immediately applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley's division.

RESPONSE: Denied. Respondent is without information sufficient to know when Ms. ██████ applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley's division.

64. When she told Respondent that she had applied to transfer to Magistrate Bradley, Respondent became angry and told her: "You won't learn anything from Magistrate Bradley anyway. She doesn't know what she's doing. She's always getting reversed."

RESPONSE: On or about July 30th, Ms. ██████'s last day, Ms. ██████ announced to Respondent, out of the blue, that she was going to apply for a position with Magistrate Bradley. Confused and taken off guard, Respondent asked why and thought it odd that she wanted to transfer from district court to a Magistrate division. Ms. ██████ stated that she thought it was time for her to start learning something new and was particularly interested in probate. Respondent never told ██████ that she would never learn anything from Magistrate Bradley, that she doesn't know what she's doing, or that she was always getting reversed. Respondent suggested to ██████ that she investigate the division before making the change since she admitted that she knew nothing about the position or about Magistrate Bradley. Further, on August 9th (while Respondent was on bereavement leave following his father's death on July 30), the following text exchange occurred between Ms. ██████ and Respondent:

██████: Hi Judge, I intended to talk to you but I wasn't sure when would be a good time and I believe admin beat me to it. As you already know I had a meeting with Mag. Bradley and she selected me for the transfer opportunity. I will be working with admin to assist on the training plan and I will be available for any questions that your new clerk may have. The division is now in good shape and I feel good handing it over.

Respondent: Yup...just saw the announcement...lol. Thanks for reaching out. I appreciate all your hard work and assistance since taking over the division in January. I learned a lot from you and I know you'll be an incredible addition to Mag. Bradley's division. She is very lucky! We'll talk in person soon.

██████: Thank you Judge!...

65. Magistrate Bradley interviewed and hired Ms. ██████ as her CJA.

RESPONSE: Admitted.

69. On approximately August 18, 2021, Respondent left a voicemail message for Judge Leith's clerk, stating that he was a judge and indicating he needed a prompt order from the court appointing him as personal representative so he could take care of his father's affairs.

RESPONSE: Admitted in part. Respondent called the Denver Probate Court from his office at the ACJC and left a message for the Probate Clerk identifying himself as Judge John Scipione. At the time the message was left, Respondent hoped that the clerk's office would take immediate administrative action and issue the letters testamentary so that he and his sister could act on behalf of his father's estate as personal representatives to handle his father's affairs.

70. On August 20, 2021, Respondent sent the following email to Judge Leith:

Hi Elizabeth-

I was hoping to get an order of appointment and letters testamentary issued forthwith but have not had much success going through the clerk's office. Scipione, respectfully requests that the Special Masters enter judgment in favor of Respondent and against Complainant on each of the claims for relief and for such other relief as they deem just and proper. Furthermore, the Respondent requests such relief as is contemplated by the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline.

Respectfully submitted this 1st day of July, 2022.

STATEMENT OF CHARGES

This Statement of Charges is filed pursuant to Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (Colo. RJD) 4, 16(b)(4), and 18 and it is alleged as follows:

I. BACKGROUND AND JURISDICTION

1. John E. Scipione (“Respondent”) was appointed as a Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court in 2018. Respondent continues to serve as an Arapahoe County District Court Judge and served in that capacity at all times relevant to this Statement of Charges.

2. Respondent is subject to the jurisdiction of the Colorado Supreme Court and the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission” or “CCJD”) in these judicial discipline proceedings.
3. The Commission has determined that probable cause exists to commence formal proceedings under Colo. RJD 16(b)(4).

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

1. K.O. began working as a law clerk for Respondent in May 2019. Like many lawyers, one of the reasons K.O. sought and accepted a clerkship with Respondent was to build a professional connection with a person of influence in the legal community. K.O. expected that, in exchange for good work, Respondent would provide ongoing mentorship, professional development advice, and serve as a reference for her future employment.
2. Respondent hired K.O., in part, due to K.O.’s prior experience as a law clerk for the Douglas County District Court and because she had experience in complex probate matters.
3. As part of her clerkship, K.O. worked with Respondent on the complex and high-profile probate case involving the estate of Denver Broncos owner Pat Bowlen (“the Bowlen Case”).
4. K.O. had a positive experience while employed as Respondent’s law clerk. K.O. perceived that she was respected and appreciated for her contributions to Respondent’s Division.
5. While working for Respondent, K.O.’s professional interactions with Respondent outside of the courtroom were limited to a few lunches that included Respondent’s court reporter and judicial assistant.
6. Part way through her term as a law clerk for Respondent, K.O.’s job title was reclassified from law clerk to legal research attorney. When this change took effect, K.O. no longer worked in Respondent’s chambers, though she continued to work in the Arapahoe County Justice Center.
7. When K.O. finished her term as a law clerk, she expected to maintain a professional mentoring relationship with Respondent and to rely upon Respondent as a professional reference.
8. K.O. and Respondent discussed K.O.’s intent and desire to continue a mentor-mentee relationship with Respondent. During her time as a legal research attorney, K.O. and Respondent maintained a professional relationship, and K.O. occasionally visited Respondent's chambers for this purpose.

9. In June of 2021, K.O. left her position as a legal research attorney and accepted a job as Assistant Legal Counsel with the Colorado Judicial Department.
10. Although the trial in the Bowlen Case was expected to occur during the Summer of 2021, it settled in late June 2021. By this time, K.O. had left the 18th Judicial District for her new job as assistant legal counsel.
11. Following the resolution of the Bowlen Case, Respondent contacted K.O. to tell her about the settlement because of the considerable amount of work K.O. did on the case. Respondent invited K.O. to meet for dinner to discuss the resolution of the Bowlen Case.
12. Prior to meeting, K.O. and Respondent had at least one phone call. During the call, K.O. and Respondent both conveyed that the purpose of their meeting was to discuss the Bowlen Case's unexpected settlement, as well as K.O.'s new job and career path. At no time during these calls did Respondent ever suggest to K.O. that he wished the meeting to be anything other than a professional one. Had Respondent told her that he viewed the meeting as a personal or intimate one, K.O. would not have agreed to attend.
13. Following their phone call, Respondent and K.O. exchanged text messages to finalize a time and a place to meet.
14. At no time prior to their meeting did Respondent suggest to K.O. that he wished to transform their professional relationship into an intimate one.
15. At no time in her professional relationship with Respondent has K.O. ever expressed an interest in, or conveyed receptiveness to, having an intimate relationship or other non-professional relationship with Respondent.
16. Respondent and K.O. met at Slattery's Pub and Grill in the Denver Tech Center the evening of August 4, 2021.
17. Respondent's conversation with K.O. started with discussion about the Bowlen matter, other cases K.O. had been involved in, and K.O.'s experience with her new job within the Judicial Department.
18. Respondent then changed the topic of conversation and began asking K.O. about her relationship status.
19. Respondent asked K.O, something along the lines of: "So, do you have a boyfriend? Girlfriend? We never really talked about this."

20. Respondent asking these personal questions made K.O. very uncomfortable. K.O. answered Respondent's initial question and then attempted to quickly redirect the conversation to a professional topic.
21. Respondent proceeded to tell K.O. that in his house everyone knew that his meeting with K.O. was a "date." Respondent did not ask K.O. whether she wished the meeting to be a date, nor seek any input from her as to his characterization of the meeting.
22. K.O. was extremely uncomfortable when Respondent said this. She displayed visible reluctance to discuss a personal relationship and again attempted to change the subject.
23. Respondent ignored K.O.'s attempts to divert the conversation and refused to drop the topic. Instead, Respondent told K.O. that his wife had given him permission to date K.O.
24. Respondent then informed K.O. that his wife was available by phone or FaceTime to respond to any concerns that K.O. might have with dating Respondent.
25. Respondent further told K.O. that he had online dating profiles and explained "the concept of consensual non-monogamy."
26. K.O. told Respondent repeatedly that she did not know what to say in response to his proposal, and Respondent became defensive.
27. K.O. perceived that Respondent badly misread the situation: Respondent did not appear to recognize that K.O. was offended because Respondent was using what he presented as a professional meeting and his role as a formerly trusted professional mentor to K.O. to pursue a personal relationship.
28. Due to her extreme discomfort and concern about the personal and sexual comments Respondent made to her, K.O. tried to quickly end the meeting with Respondent: she stopped eating her meal and requested the check.
29. Despite K.O.'s cues that she was uncomfortable with the subject of the conversation initiated by Respondent, Respondent did not relent and continued to share with K.O. very personal information about himself and his wife for the purpose of pursuing an intimate relationship with K.O.
30. At the conclusion of the dinner, Respondent told K.O. "don't disappear on me now." Respondent attempted to give K.O. a hug, and K.O. rebuffed his attempt at physical contact.

31. On August 9, 2021, Respondent followed up with a text message to K.O. that stated:

Hi! So with everything going on last week I didn't get a chance to tell you how much I enjoyed having dinner last week. I hope that I didn't leave you too overwhelmed with everything we talked about. When you are ready I'm anxious to hear your thoughts.

Side note... the big announcement went out today that [I.B.] will be joining Bradley. She didn't even tell me. 😊

32. K.O. did not respond to the text message.

33. Through a letter dated October 28, 2021, the Commission informed Respondent that allegations of inappropriate communications with his former judicial assistant and a law student intern would be treated as the complainants. Essentially, Respondent was alleged to have brought discussion of his "alternative lifestyle" into office conversations with his judicial assistant and legal intern. Respondent was further alleged to have repeatedly commented on the legal intern's physical appearance. Similar to the conversation Respondent had with K.O., he also allegedly talked with the legal intern about his use of the dating app Tinder. This letter forms the basis of another pending judicial discipline proceeding against Respondent: CCJD Case No. 21-138 and Colorado Supreme Court Case No. 2022SA14.

34. On November 16, 2021, Respondent sent K.O. a text message asking her to speak with his attorney's paralegal about her time as a law clerk. At that time, K.O. believed the paralegal was only conducting due diligence, not requesting that K.O. agree to testify on behalf of Respondent.

35. Copies of text messages between Respondent and K.O. from July 27, 2021 through November 16, 2021 are incorporated in these allegations through attached Exhibit A. Respondent has provided an additional text message image from August 4, 2021 that apparently shows K.O. replying to a text from Respondent with a heart emoji and an image of a Guinness bar sign. This additional message (without waiving potential challenges to its authenticity) is incorporated in these allegations through attached Exhibit B.

36. K.O. spoke by phone with the paralegal. The questions asked were limited to K.O.'s interactions with Respondent during the time she was actually employed as Respondent's law clerk.

37. When the paralegal asked if K.O. was willing to testify at a hearing on Respondent's behalf, K.O. explained that she "felt incredibly uncomfortable testifying as a character witness . . . , that [her] strong preference would be not to testify, but that [she] would comply with any court order or subpoena.”

38. K.O. believed Respondent’s request that she testify put her in an untenable position: K.O. worried that if she did not testify favorably for Respondent, because of Respondent’s position as a judge and influence within the broader legal community, Respondent could negatively impact K.O.’s reputation and future career. Yet, K.O. did not believe that she could give complete and truthful testimony without revealing Respondent’s harassing conduct.
39. A notice and statement of charges was filed in CCJD Case No. 21-138 on January 20, 2022. The Colorado Supreme Court, in turn, issued an order on January 27, 2022 appointing special masters to hear the case.
40. Respondent’s alleged conduct in Case No. 21-138 and alleged interactions with K.O. create an appearance that Respondent was using his professional position to attempt to recruit his current and former employees as intimate partners and to join his “alternative lifestyle.”
41. On May 10, 2022, the same paralegal whom K.O. previously spoke with called her back to inform her that Respondent’s attorney would subpoena her to testify on June 8, 2022.
42. Because of Respondent’s attempt to manipulate his and K.O.’s professional relationship into an intimate one as explained above, K.O. was understandably extremely uncomfortable testifying as a character witness for Respondent. On May 12, 2022, K.O. reported Respondent’s conduct to the Commission through a written statement at the direction of her supervisor, Terri Morrison.

III. CHARGES

Charge 1

Canon Rule 2.3

A Judge Shall Not Engage in Harassment Based on Sex or Gender

43. Paragraphs 1-42 are incorporated herein.
44. Canon Rule 2.3(B) states, in relevant part, that a judge shall not:
“[E]ngage in harassment, including but not limited to bias, prejudice, or harassment based upon race, sex, [or] gender...”
45. Additionally, Chief Justice Directive 08-06 delineates a zero-tolerance harassment policy for all Judicial employees, and states, in part:

Harassment, whether verbal, physical, or environmental, is unacceptable and will not be tolerated in the workplace itself or in other work-related settings such as business trips, conferences, or work-related social events.

46. By using a professional meeting arranged to discuss court-related business and mentoring as a guise for pursuing an intimate relationship with a former employee, Respondent violated Canon Rule 2.3 and Chief Justice Directive 08-06.
47. The inappropriateness of Respondent's conduct and Respondent's intent is further apparent as part of a larger pattern of similar conduct towards others, as presented in CCJD Case No. 21-138.
48. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 2.3(B), whether viewed as separate incidents or as a pattern of similar conduct.

Charge 2
Canon Rule 3.1
Extrajudicial Activities

49. Paragraphs 1-48 are incorporated herein.
50. Canon Rule 3.1 states, in relevant part: "when in engaging in extrajudicial activities, a judge shall not":
 - a. "(C) participate in activities that would appear to a reasonable person to undermine the judge's independence, integrity, or impartiality"; or
 - b. "(D) engage in conduct that would appear to a reasonable person to be coercive."

51. Moreover, the Preamble to the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct states, in relevant part:

"Judges should maintain the dignity of judicial office at all times, and avoid both impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in their professional and personal lives."

52. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 3.1 by engaging in extrajudicial behavior that undermined the judge's integrity and was reasonably perceived as coercive.

Charge 3
Canon Rule 1.2
A Judge Shall Promote Confidence in the Judiciary

53. Paragraphs 1-52 are incorporated herein.

54. Canon Rule 1.2 states:

A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

55. Comment 1 to the rule makes clear that it applies “to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge.” Comments 4 and 6 to the rule (as well as Canon 4 of the Code of Judicial Conduct) emphasize the expectation that a judge participate in activities that further ethical conduct, integrity, and professionalism in the legal profession and promote confidence in the judiciary.

56. A judge’s obligation to act with integrity does not end when he leaves the courthouse. See, e.g., Section 2 of Preamble to Rules of Judicial Conduct; Rule 1.2 Comments 1-3.

57. The Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (“the Code”) further defines “integrity” as “probity, fairness, honesty, uprightness, and soundness of character.” The Code recognizes “impropriety” to include: “conduct that violates the law, court rules, or provisions of this Code, and conduct that undermines a judge's independence, integrity, or impartiality.

58. Respondent’s conduct in inviting K.O. to a professional dinner as a ruse to proposition her to engage in an intimate relationship with him did not display integrity and created an appearance of impropriety and violated Canon Rule 1.2.

59. Similarly, with knowledge of his interactions with K.O. on August 4, 2021, Respondent further created an appearance of impropriety and violated Canon Rule 1.2 by seeking to have K.O. testify on his behalf in CCJD Case No. 21-138.

60. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 1.2 whether viewed as separate incidents or as a pattern of similar conduct.

Charge 4

Canon Rule 1.1

A Judge Shall Comply with the Law

61. Paragraphs 1-60 are incorporated herein.

62. Canon Rule 1.1 states, in relevant part: “A judge shall comply with the law, including the Code of Judicial Conduct.”

63. Respondent violated Canon Rule 1.1 when he engaged in the conduct described herein in violation of Canon Rules 1.2, 2.3, and 3.1.

64. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 1.1 whether viewed as separate incidents or as a pattern of similar conduct.

WHEREFORE, Complainant requests that the Commission recommend that, for his misconduct, appropriate disciplinary sanctions be imposed upon Judge John E. Scipione by the Colorado Supreme Court under Colo. RJD 36; that the Commission assess costs, attorney's fees and expenses of this proceeding against Respondent and that the Commission recommend any such other and further relief as it deems appropriate.

DATED this 21st day of July, 2022.

Respectfully submitted,

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL MASTERS

Pursuant to Colo. RJD 18(a), the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the CCJD), through its Special Counsel, has commenced formal proceedings against the Respondent by serving Respondent's Counsel with a Statement of Charges and a Notice of Formal Charges. These documents have been duly filed with the Commission's Executive Director.

Colo. RJD 18.5(a) provides:

After special counsel has served the statement of charges and notice of formal charges on the Judge and filed copies thereof with the executive director, the Commission shall request the Supreme Court to appoint three special masters to preside over formal proceedings who shall hear and take evidence concerning the charges and provide a report to the Commission in accordance with the Constitution and these Rules. The appointees may be retired justices or active or retired judges of courts of record, who have no conflicts of interest and who are able to serve diligently and impartially as special masters. Unless otherwise designated, the judge or justice first named in the Supreme Court's order shall be the presiding special master. The presiding special master is authorized to act on behalf of the special masters in resolving pre-hearing issues, including but not limited to discovery disputes; conducting pre-hearing conferences; and ruling on evidentiary, procedural, and legal issues that arise during hearings.

The proceedings of the CCJD and the Special Masters remain confidential, excepting matters that require the Supreme Court's attention prior to the CCJD filing recommendations and the CCJD's record of proceedings pursuant to Colorado Constitution Article VI, § 23(3)(g) and Colo. RJD 37(a). As an administrative matter, however, it is necessary for the Supreme Court (while maintaining confidentiality) to assign a case number to address the present motion according to Colo. RJD 18.5(a) and to allow the filing of other prospective pleadings.

The CCJD respectfully moves for this Court to appoint three special masters pursuant to Colo. RJD 18.5(a) and, while maintaining confidentiality under Colorado Constitution Article VI, § 23(3)(e)-(g), assign a case number for further proceedings.

This case, however, follows a currently pending case involving the Respondent Judge, Matter of Scipione, CCJD Case No. 21-138 and Colorado Supreme Court Case No. 22SA14. The CCJD does not oppose the possible joinder of the two cases according to C.R.C.P. 18 with a consolidated hearing according to C.R.C.P. 42(a). Joinder and consolidation, however, are properly matters for consideration by the appointed special masters. Accordingly, the CCJD moves for this Court to issue a more specific order appointing the same special masters already appointed in CCJD Case No. 21-138 to the present case.

3. In the interests of judicial economy and to avoid additional costs to the Respondent, the Respondent requests that both matters be consolidated into one action.

WHEREFORE, the Respondent requests that the Presiding Masters enter an order consolidating the two matters identified herein, and that they hear the consolidated cases in one trial.

REQUEST FOR TEMPORARY JUDICIAL SUSPENSION ACCORDING TO COLO. RJD 34(A)

Pursuant to Colo. RJD 34(a), the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the CCJD”), through its Executive Director, requests that the Colorado Supreme Court order the immediate paid suspension of Arapahoe District Court Judge John E. Scipione pending further proceedings according to Colo. RJD, Parts B and C. As grounds for this request, the CCJD states the following upon information and belief:

1. Judge Scipione was appointed to the Arapahoe County Court effective May 31, 2017 after having served as an 18th Judicial District Court Magistrate since 2012. Then, effective September 29, 2018, Judge Scipione was elevated to the 18th Judicial District Court.

2. Question 47 (formerly Question 46) of the Judicial Nominating Commission Application for Colorado State Court Judgeship (“Nominating Application”) asks:

Is there any circumstance or event in your personal or professional life which, if brought to the attention of the Commission, might tend to affect adversely your qualifications to serve on the court for which you have applied? If so, please explain.

3. On both his certified February 10, 2017 and August 2, 2018 Nominating Applications, Judge Scipione answered “No,” denying that any circumstances existed which adversely affected his qualifications to serve as a judge.

4. On September 1, 2021, the CCJD received multiple reports of judicial misconduct by Judge Scipione. These reports included allegations that Judge Scipione used his position as a judge to sexually harass court employees in his Division and to seek preferential treatment in a Denver Probate Court proceeding involving his father's estate.
5. Specifically, Judge Scipione's misconduct included discussing his "alternative lifestyle" or "swinger lifestyle" of extra-marital non-monogamous sexual relationships with a legal intern and judicial assistant. These alleged communications further included Judge Scipione making derogatory comments about his judicial assistant (Judicial Assistant 2), making comments to his law clerk/intern (Law Clerk 2) about her physical appearance, and discussing his "lifestyle" with both Judicial Assistant 2 and Law Clerk 2. Judge Scipione's alleged communications with Law Clerk 2 also included discussion of his and his wife's membership in a swinger ranch/club, the membership dues, and the rules/general activities of the ranch/club. Judge Scipione is alleged to have had a similar subsequent conversation with Judicial Assistant 2 while in his courtroom.

6. It deserves emphasis that Law Clerk 2 was working for Judge Scipione as a non-credit earning summer intern who did not receive pay or compensation through the Judicial Department.
7. The allegations of sexual harassment align with the term as defined by the Colorado Judicial System Personnel Rules (C.J.S.P.R.), specifically C.J.S.P.R. 20.B.2.b., and by Comments 3 and 4 to Canon Rule 2.3 of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Conduct (“the Code”).
8. Judge Scipione is also alleged to have requested Law Clerk 2’s assistance in setting up/using the Tinder dating application on his phone.
9. When Judicial Assistant 2 sought to transfer to a different judicial officer’s division, Judge Scipione is alleged to have made disparaging comments about the other judicial officer.
10. With regards to improper ex parte communications and seeking special treatment through communications with the Denver Probate Court, Judge Scipione is accused of leaving a voicemail message with Judge Elizabeth Leith’s division clerk identifying himself as a judge and asking for prompt issuance of an order appointing him as personal representative for his father’s estate. Judge Scipione, then, directly sent Judge Leith an e-mail (from his judicial account to her judicial account) asking for her to “help [him] out” in getting “an order of appointment and letters testamentary issued forthwith.”

11. The alleged circumstances raised in the initial reports of judicial misconduct occurred between June 2021 and August 2021.
12. The allegations against Judge Scipione raised general concerns that he violated general policies against sexual harassment under Canon Rule 2.3 of the Code and Chief Justice Directive 08-06¹ by using his position in attempts to recruit younger female subordinate employees assigned to his Division to participate in his “lifestyle.”
13. Through a letter dated October 28, 2021, the CCJD notified Judge Scipione that it would treat the allegations described in paragraphs 4-10 as a complaint according to Colo. RJD 14(a).
14. Judge Scipione, through his counsel, responded to the CCJD’s Colo. RJD 14(a) notice with a letter dated December 16, 2021. In this letter, Judge Scipione denied making derogatory comments about Judicial Assistant 2 while presenting a narrative that he had reluctantly hired Judicial Assistant 2 (who had previously worked in another recently retired judge’s division).

¹ The definition of “sexual harassment” in CJD 08-06, Attachment A is identical to the definition provided by C.J.S.P.R. 20.B.2.b.

15. Judge Scipione emphasized that he was under “stress” due to various illnesses and injuries suffered by members of his family, including his father’s contemporaneous death, during the Summer and Fall of 2021.
16. Judge Scipione further characterized his statements to Law Clerk 2 as “compliment[s]” and “friendly, teasing banter” without any sexual implications. While acknowledging that he had a conversation with Law Clerk 2 about Tinder, Judge Scipione denied having any closed-door conversations or requesting that Law Clerk 2 assist him with setting up or using the application.
17. Most significantly, Judge Scipione, through his counsel’s December 16, 2021 letter, expressly denied any history of inappropriate sexual communications or conduct towards subordinate female employees. As stated in the letter:

Judge Scipione never made comments to [Law Clerk 2] or any other intern or law clerk that could be considered “flirtatious” within the courthouse or work environment. Multiple witness interviews dating back to Judge Scipione’s early days on the bench confirm that he never made any off-color, sexually flirtatious, or any demeaning comments about women or anyone. To the contrary, a courtroom full of prior clerks, law clerks, and others will confirm that Judge Scipione never engaged in the type of conduct alleged by [Law Clerk 2].

18. At the same time as Judge Scipione was allegedly having improper communications and interactions with Law Clerk 2 and Judicial Assistant 2, he was communicating with his former law clerk and research attorney, Law Clerk 1. Allegedly, under the pretense of a meeting to discuss court-related developments that occurred after Law Clerk 1 left his Division and as part of continuing mentoring, Judge Scipione arranged to have dinner with Law Clerk 1 on August 4, 2021.
19. During that dinner, Judge Scipione is further alleged to have asked Law Clerk 1 about her relationship status. Judge Scipione then allegedly informed Law Clerk 1 that in his household everyone knew that their dinner was a “date.”
20. Judge Scipione is also alleged to have invited Law Clerk 1 to talk with his wife over FaceTime to confirm that his wife had given him permission to “date” Law Clerk 1 and to answer questions that Law Clerk 1 might have.
21. Law Clerk 1 denies doing anything to have encouraged or invited Judge Scipione’s unwanted advances.
22. After the CCJD sent its October 28, 2021 Colo. RJD 14(a) notification, Judge Scipione texted Law Clerk 1 to ask her to speak with his counsel’s paralegal to provide a character reference in response to the allegations pending against him. When the paralegal spoke with Law Clerk 1,

- questions were limited to Law Clerk 1's interactions with Judge Scipione during the time that she actually worked with Judge Scipione's Division (from May 2019-May 2021). When asked if she would testify at a future hearing, Law Clerk 1 expressed a reluctance but confirmed that she would comply with a court order or subpoena.
23. Through special counsel, formal proceedings were commenced in CCJD Case No. 21-138 on January 20, 2022, and this Court appointed special masters on January 27, 2022 through Case No. 22SA14.
24. On February 9, 2021, Judge Scipione filed an answer to the statement of charges in Case No. 21-138. In his answer, Judge Scipione denied allegations that he knew or should have been aware of Law Clerk 2 and Judicial Assistant 2's discomfort regarding communications about his "lifestyle." Likewise, Judge Scipione denied making Law Clerk 2 uncomfortable through conversation about his use of the Tinder application. While admitting the alleged communications with the Denver Probate Court, Judge Scipione denied that his conduct violated Canon Rule 1.3. Judge Scipione further denied violating any other provisions of the Code through his alleged conduct.
25. Judge Scipione maintained these same responses in his July 1, 2022, Answer to the Amended Statement of Charges in Case No. 21-138.

26. On May 10, 2022, the same paralegal contacted Law Clerk 1 again to inform her that Judge Scipione would subpoena her to testify at a hearing then-scheduled for June 7-8, 2022.
27. On May 12, 2022, Law Clerk 1 reported the circumstances of the August 4, 2021 dinner and Judge Scipione's communications/conduct to the CCJD.
28. Judge Scipione responded to a second Colo RJD 14(a) notice regarding Law Clerk 1's allegations through another letter from his counsel dated June 8, 2022. While denying that he had engaged in sexual harassment, Judge Scipione described his interactions with Law Clerk 1 as an unrequited interest. As stated in the June 8th letter:
- The simple truth is that Judge Scipione had an interest in [Law Clerk 1] that she did not share with him. Nothing more sinister. [Law Clerk 1] was not a stranger to Judge Scipione and he simply misread her feelings.
29. Judge Scipione, through counsel, further contended in the June 8th letter that a single heart emoji in a series of text messages with Law Clerk 1 had given Judge Scipione reasonable grounds to believe she was interested in the intimate relationship he sought.
30. Formal proceedings based upon Law Clerk 1's additional allegations were commenced in CCJD Case No. 22-112 on July 21, 2022. On July 22,

2022, this Court issued an order in Case No. 22SA236 expanding the appointments of the Special Masters in Case No. 21-138 to Case No. 22-112. Through agreement, the parties have consented to the consolidation of Case Nos. 21-138 and 22-112 for a two-day hearing scheduled the week of August 22, 2022.

31. Early in the investigation of Case No. 21-138, Judicial Assistant 2 explained that courthouse rumors existed that Judge Scipione had an intimate relationship with one of his prior judicial assistants. The investigation performed by the Colorado Supreme Court's Office of Attorney Regulation Counsel (OARC) in Case No. 21-138, however, did not obtain employment records verifying who else was previously employed in Judge Scipione's respective Divisions and did not interview those former employees.
32. On July 13, 2022, the CCJD received additional information about the courthouse rumors and directed its current special counsel (assigned through the Office of the Attorney General) to conduct further investigation. Through that investigation, the CCJD was able to locate Judge Scipione's judicial assistant (Judicial Assistant 1) who served with him while he was an 18th Judicial District Court Magistrate.

33. Judicial Assistant 1 verified that she had an approximately year and a half (2013-2014) sexual relationship with Judge Scipione after Judge Scipione initiated the relationship in the workplace and through similar circumstances as alleged in Case Nos. 21-138 and 22-122. Specifically, Judge Scipione allegedly used his position as a judicial officer and his workplace interactions to build a personal relationship with a younger female subordinate employee as a means for developing a further intimate, coercive relationship. Judge Scipione's alleged conduct is probative of a pattern of attempting to use his authority over subordinate employees and to convert what should be strictly professional relationships into personal and, potentially, sexual relationships.

34. Critically, Judge Scipione did not disclose his intimate relationship with Judicial Assistant 1 at the time and as required by then-effective CJD 08-06, Attachment F. The requirements of former CJD 08-06, Attachment F have now been incorporated into the current CJD 08-06, Attachment A and the current version of C.J.S.P.R. 20.G.2.²

² C.J.S.P.R. 20.G.2(1)(a) prohibits relationships between a supervisor and a direct subordinate, and (3) prohibits a judge from having a relationship with an individual employed in the same court or judicial district.

35. Moreover, Judge Scipione did not disclose his relationship with Judicial Assistant 1 and his failure to comply with former CJD 08-06, Attachment F in his repeated responses to then Nominating Application Question 46.
36. Judge Scipione's categorical denial of any prior inappropriate conduct with subordinate employees in his December 16, 2021 letter further raises material doubts as to Judge Scipione's veracity and cooperation with the CCJD in its disciplinary processes.
37. In addition, the chronology and context of Judicial Assistant 1 and Law Clerk 1's allegations conflict with Judge Scipione's denials. Specifically, Judge Scipione was not forthcoming with his intentions in initiating sexual conversations with subordinate employees. Moreover, the additional context provided by Judicial Assistant 1 makes it implausible Judge Scipione was unaware of the offense caused by his conduct or how such conduct violates the Code.
38. Put more plainly, Judge Scipione has not been candid about the existence of his past relationship with Judicial Assistant 1 and how that relationship impacts the merits of the allegations in Case Nos. 21-138 and 22-112.
39. Given the circumstances described above, it is likely that the allegations against Judge Scipione will be proven in both Case No. 21-138 and Case No. 22-112.

40. Without an order temporarily suspending Judge Scipione, it is also likely that the reputation of the Judiciary, the judicial process, and the judicial disciplinary process will suffer imminent and irreparable harm. Colo. RJD 1(b) (describing constitutional mandate of the CCJD, including protecting integrity of judicial process and public confidence in Judiciary). Allowing Judge Scipione to continue hearing cases despite his extended failure to disclose material information and while Case Nos. 21-138 and 22-112 remain pending will significantly diminish public confidence in the judicial process as well as individual litigants' confidence in the outcome of proceedings currently pending before Judge Scipione. Colo. RJD 34(a) (grounds for temporary suspension include judge's failure to cooperate with the CCJD).

41. In light of the CCJD's recent discovery of Judge Scipione's 2013-2014 prohibited relationship, it is likely that the hearing currently scheduled for the week of August 22nd will need to be continued to allow further investigation into Judge Scipione's relationships with his former employees, to allow amendment of the pleadings, and to provide an opportunity for Judge Scipione to answer. Accordingly, there is a heightened need for Judge Scipione's immediate suspension pending further proceedings.

42. While the judicial disciplinary proceedings against Judge Scipione remain pending in Case Nos. 21-138 and 22-112, Judge Scipione continues to supervise at least one younger female subordinate employee in his Division. Reasonable risks of imminent and irreparable harm exist through Judge Scipione's continuing supervision of younger female subordinate employees who are similarly situated as Judicial Assistant 1, Judicial Assistant 2, Law Clerk 1, and Law Clerk 2.

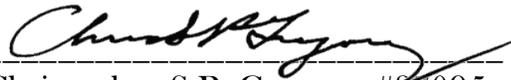

43. Based upon the circumstances described in this request, the CCJD expects to request further amendment of the Statement of Charges in CCJD Case No. 21-138. Because the most recent and previously undiscovered allegations relate to Judge Scipione's conduct as a magistrate, the CCJD anticipates referring the allegations to OARC with a request for the appointment of conflict-free special counsel pursuant to C.R.C.P. 242.4(e).

Based upon the foregoing, the CCJD respectfully requests that, pursuant to Colo. RJD 34(b), this Court: 1. Issue an order for Judge Scipione's temporary suspension, 2. Direct/authorize the CCJD to issue an order to Judge Scipione to show cause in writing, within 21 days, why the suspension should not continue pending the outcome of proceedings before the CCJD, and 3. Appoint a special master, or designate one of the existing special masters, to preside over the potential show cause hearing.

MOTION TO CONSOLIDATE CASES

On January 21, 2022, the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the CCJD), initiated Case No. 22SA14 by filing its Motion for Appointment of Special Masters in connection with CCJD case No. 21-138. Subsequently, separate and additional allegations arose causing the CCJD to initiate a second Case No. 22SA236 through the filing of another Motion for Appointment of Special Masters for CCJD Case No. 22-112. The CCJD filed Case No. 22SA236 on July 22, 2022. With both Case Nos. 21-138 and 22-112 assigned to the same group of Special Masters, Respondent filed an “Unopposed Motion to Consolidate Cases” in CCJD Case No. 21-138 on July 25, 2022. Most recently, the CCJD filed a “Request for Temporary Judicial Suspension According to Colo. RJD 34(A)” in Case No. 22SA14 with reference to both CCJD Case Nos. 21-138 and 22-112. This Court then issued a temporary suspension order in Case No. 22SA236. Additional motions in the respective cases are forthcoming, but there remains a need to avoid further confusion caused by multiple cases pending before this Court.

The CCJD respectfully moves this Court to consolidate Case Nos. 22SA14 and 22SA236 with prospective filings to occur exclusively through Case No. 22SA236. Pending resolution of this Motion, the CCJD will file relevant documents into Case No. 22SA236 only. The relief sought through this Motion is contemplated according to C.A.R. 27(a)(2)(D).

NOTICE OF CONSOLIDATION ORDER BELOW

On August 4, 2022, the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (the CCJD) filed its “Motion to Consolidate Cases” with this Court. The Motion references an “Unopposed Motion to Consolidate Cases” pending in the underlying CCJD Case Nos. 21-138 and 22-112. The CCJD notifies this Court that the Presiding Special Master issued a “Consolidation Order and Acknowledgment of Stay” earlier this afternoon. According to this Consolidation Order, the Special Masters granted the Unopposed Motion, directing that CCJD Case No. 21-138 (Supreme Court Case No. 22SA14) and CCJD Case No. 22-112 (Supreme Court Case No. 22SA236) “will formally be consolidated into one matter.” The CCJD provides this Notice to inform this Court’s consideration of its pending Motion.

DATED: July 22, 2022

Respectfully submitted,

In the Matter of John E. Scipione, a Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court.	Supreme Court Case No: 2022SA236 & 2022SA14
ORDER OF COURT

Upon consideration of the “Motion to Consolidate Cases” filed into case number 22SA14 requesting this Court consolidate case numbers 22SA14 and 22SA236,

IT IS ORDERED said Motion to Consolidate Cases is GRANTED. All future filings must be filed into case number 22SA236.

BY THE COURT, AUGUST 9, 2022.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION ON PARTIES' STIPULATION TO DISMISS DISABILITY PROCEEDING

At issue before the Special Master is the Parties' Stipulation to Dismiss the Disability Proceeding. Having reviewed the appended Stipulation [Exhibit A], the Special Master enters the following report and recommendation:

This disability proceeding was initiated by Respondent's Verified Motion Pursuant to the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline Rule 33.5(c), filed in CCJD case numbers 21-138 and 22-112 on August 4, 2022. Respondent asserted that medical and mental health conditions prevented him from assisting in his defense in the pending disciplinary matters. Per Colo. RJD 33.5(c),

Respondent's Motion automatically stayed the disciplinary proceedings against him, and the Supreme Court appointed this Special Master to "consider all relevant factors and/or stipulations of the parties, conduct a hearing if necessary, and report to the Colorado Supreme Court concerning the alleged disability of the Honorable John E. Scipione."

On October 25, 2022, this Special Master entered an Order re: Legal Standard, defining the legal standard to be applied in determining whether Respondent is able to assist in his defense in the disciplinary proceedings. Following that order, a court-appointed cardiologist and two court-appointed mental health experts conducted independent medical examinations of Respondent.¹ Applying the legal standard, the three IME experts concluded that Respondent was able to assist in his defense. The expert reports are part of the record.

Following receipt of the expert reports, on December 2, 2022, the Parties submitted a Stipulation to Dismiss the Disability Proceeding. By that stipulation, Respondent acknowledges that, under the legal standard as determined by this Special Master, he cannot meet his burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that he is unable to assist in his defense. Respondent made a record that he disagrees with the legal standard applied in this proceeding, and in the Stipulation, Respondent included a reservation of his right to challenge the legal standard adopted by this Special Master for this disability proceeding on appeal. The Commission likewise reserved its right to request payment of its fees and costs for this disability proceeding in the disciplinary matter, as may be allowed by Colo. RJD 36(g).

¹ The cardiologist did not physically examine Respondent, but conducted a review of Respondent's medical records and issued an expert report.

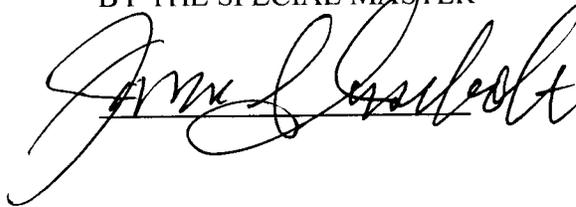

On December 2, 2022, this Special Master vacated the evidentiary hearing set for December 6-8, 2022, finding that based on the Parties' Stipulation, no hearing was necessary.

The Special Master recommends, pursuant to Colo. RJD 33.5(c)(2), that the Supreme Court accept the Stipulation to Dismiss the Disability Proceeding and resume the disciplinary proceedings against Respondent.

Pursuant to Colo. RJD 33.5(i), this recommendation of the Special Master and any orders of the Supreme Court shall be public.

ORDERED this 15th day of December, 2022.

In the Matter of John E. Scipione, a Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court.	Supreme Court Case No: 2022SA236 & 2022SA14
ORDER OF COURT

Upon consideration of the special master’s Report and Recommendation on Parties’ Stipulation to Dismiss Disability Proceeding dated December 15, 2022, the Court ADOPTS the special master’s recommendation and APPROVES the parties’ Stipulation to Dismiss Disability Proceeding.

Pursuant to Colo. RJD 33.5(c)(2), the Court finds, based on the special master’s Report and Recommendation and the parties’ Stipulation to Dismiss Disability Proceeding, that Judge Scipione can assist in his defense in the disciplinary proceeding. Accordingly, the Court ORDERS that “the disciplinary proceeding shall be resumed but [Judge Scipione] shall remain on lawyer and judicial inactive status, pending the results of the disciplinary proceeding.” Colo. RJD 33.5(c)(2). Pursuant to Colo. RJD 33.5(i), this Order and the special master’s Report and Recommendation shall be public.

AMENDED STATEMENT OF CHARGES

This Amended Statement of Charges is filed pursuant to Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (Colo. RJD) 4, 16(b)(4), and 18, and C.R.C.P. 15(a). The People allege as follows:

I. BACKGROUND AND JURISDICTION

1. On October 9, 2012, Respondent, Judge John Scipione, began work as an Arapahoe County and District Court magistrate in the 18th Judicial District.

2. In June of 2017, Respondent was sworn in as an Arapahoe County Court Judge.
3. On October 1, 2018, Respondent was sworn in as a District Court Judge of the Arapahoe County District Court.
4. Respondent is subject to the jurisdiction of the Colorado Supreme Court and the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission” or “CCJD”) in these judicial discipline proceedings for the time he served as a county and district court judge.
5. The Commission has determined that probable cause exists to commence formal proceedings under Colo. RJD 16(b)(4).

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

1. Respondent was employed as an Arapahoe County District Court magistrate from October 2012 through his appointment to the county court bench in Arapahoe County in 2017. From December of 2012 to July of 2014, Respondent employed a court judicial assistant (CJA 1).
2. In early 2013, Respondent began to pursue a personal relationship with CJA 1. Respondent took CJA 1 out to lunch or for drinks several times a week, and shared intimate details about his family and personal life. Respondent also made frequent comments about CJA 1’s appearance. Respondent’s comments escalated to touching CJA 1’s arms, shoulders, and back.
3. In the spring of 2013, Respondent asked CJA 1 to have drinks with him at a hotel bar. When it became late in the evening, CJA 1 informed Respondent that she needed to go home. Respondent offered to reserve a hotel room for them to continue drinking and talking. CJA 1 was uncomfortable with this suggestion and attempted to refuse. However, when Respondent continued to insist, CJA 1 gave in to his advances.
4. When they were in the hotel room, Respondent initiated sexual contact and ultimately sexual intercourse. Respondent’s sexual relationship with CJA 1 continued for approximately one year. CJA 1 believed that if she ended the relationship she could lose her job. In July of 2014 CJA 1 left employment with the 18th Judicial District.
5. Chief Justice Directive 08-06 prohibits a judicial officer, including magistrates, from holding a position in which they exercise supervisory authority over a person with whom they have a sexual relationship. Judicial officers and magistrates are required to immediately report any such relationship up their chain of command or to the State Court Administrator's Office's Human Resources Division.¹

6. Respondent never reported his relationship with CJA 1 to anyone at the 18th Judicial District.
7. In February of 2017, Respondent submitted an application for appointment as an Arapahoe County Court Judge. In that application Respondent was asked, "Is there any circumstance or event in your personal or professional life which, if brought to the attention of the Commission, might tend to affect adversely your qualifications to serve on the court for which you have applied?" Respondent answered, "No." He did not report the relationship with CJA 1 or his failure to comply with Chief Justice Directive 08-06 by disclosing that relationship as required. Respondent certified that "the information given in [his] application [was] correct and complete."
8. On August 2, 2018, Respondent submitted an application for appointment as a district court judge. In the application Respondent was again asked, "Is there any circumstance or event in your personal or professional life which, if brought to the attention of the Commission, might tend to affect adversely your qualifications to serve on the court for which you have applied?" Respondent answered, "No," failing to disclose the former relationship with CJA 1 and failing to report that he did not disclose that relationship as required by Chief Justice Directive 08-06. Respondent again certified that "the information given in [his] application [was] correct and complete."
9. Respondent was appointed as a District Court Judge in October of 2018.

"Personal relationships of a romantic and/or sexual nature between supervisors and their subordinates can create problems in the workplace including conflicts of interest, the appearance of favoritism or preferential treatment, and an increased potential for claims of harassment, coercion or retaliation."

The Directive expressly prohibits sexual relationships, including relationships where "[o]ne party is a justice, judge, or magistrate working within the same court or judicial district as a person who is employed as classified or contract employee in that court or judicial district."

10. In May of 2019, Law Clerk 1 began working as a law clerk for Respondent after he was appointed a District Court Judge. Like many lawyers, one of the reasons Law Clerk 1 sought and accepted a clerkship with Respondent was to build a professional connection with a person of influence in the legal community. Law Clerk 1 expected that, in exchange for good work, Respondent would provide ongoing mentorship, professional development advice, and serve as a reference for her future employment.
11. Respondent hired Law Clerk 1, in part, due to Law Clerk 1's prior experience as a law clerk for the Douglas County District Court and because she had experience in complex probate matters.
12. As part of her clerkship, Law Clerk 1 worked with Respondent on the complex and high-profile probate case involving the estate of Denver Broncos owner Pat Bowlen ("the Bowlen Case").
13. Law Clerk 1 had a positive experience while employed as Respondent's law clerk. Law Clerk 1 perceived that she was respected and appreciated for her contributions to Respondent's Division.
14. While working for Respondent, Law Clerk 1's professional interactions with Respondent outside of the courtroom were limited to a few lunches that included Respondent's court reporter and judicial assistant.
15. Part way through her term as a law clerk for Respondent, Law Clerk 1's job title was reclassified from law clerk to legal research attorney. When this change took effect, Law Clerk 1 no longer worked in Respondent's chambers, though she continued to work in the Arapahoe County Justice Center.
16. When Law Clerk 1 finished her term as a law clerk, she expected to maintain a professional mentoring relationship with Respondent and to rely upon Respondent as a professional reference.
17. Law Clerk 1 and Respondent discussed Law Clerk 1's intent and desire to continue a mentor-mentee relationship with Respondent. During her time as a legal research attorney, Law Clerk 1 and Respondent maintained a professional relationship, and Law Clerk 1 occasionally visited Respondent's chambers for this purpose.
18. In June of 2021, Law Clerk 1 left her position as a legal research attorney and accepted a job as Assistant Legal Counsel with the Colorado Judicial Department.
19. Although the trial in the Bowlen Case was expected to occur during the Summer of 2021, it settled in late June 2021. By this time, Law Clerk 1 had left the 18th Judicial District for her new job as assistant legal counsel.

20. Following the resolution of the Bowlen Case, Respondent contacted Law Clerk 1 to tell her about the settlement because of the considerable amount of work Law Clerk 1 did on the case. Respondent invited Law Clerk 1 to meet for dinner to discuss the resolution of the Bowlen Case.
21. Prior to meeting, Law Clerk 1 and Respondent had at least one phone call. During the call, Law Clerk 1 and Respondent both conveyed that the purpose of their meeting was to discuss the Bowlen Case's unexpected settlement, as well as Law Clerk 1's new job and career path. At no time during these calls did Respondent ever suggest to Law Clerk 1 that he wished the meeting to be anything other than a professional one. Had Respondent told her that he viewed the meeting as a personal or intimate one, Law Clerk 1 would not have agreed to attend.
22. Following their phone call, Respondent and Law Clerk 1 exchanged text messages to finalize a time and a place to meet.
23. At no time prior to their meeting did Respondent suggest to Law Clerk 1 that he wished to transform their professional relationship into an intimate one.
24. At no time in her professional relationship with Respondent did Law Clerk 1 ever express an interest in, or convey receptiveness to, having an intimate relationship or other non-professional relationship with Respondent.
25. Respondent and Law Clerk 1 met at Slattery's Pub and Grill in the Denver Tech Center the evening of August 4, 2021.
26. Respondent's conversation with Law Clerk 1 started with discussion about the Bowlen matter, other cases Law Clerk 1 had been involved in, and her experience with her new job within the Judicial Department.
27. Respondent then changed the topic of conversation and began asking Law Clerk 1 about her relationship status.
28. Respondent asked Law Clerk 1, something along the lines of: "So, do you have a boyfriend? Girlfriend? We never really talked about this."
29. Respondent asking these personal questions made Law Clerk 1 very uncomfortable. Law Clerk 1 answered Respondent's initial question and then attempted to quickly redirect the conversation to a professional topic.
30. Respondent proceeded to tell Law Clerk 1 that in his house everyone knew that his meeting with Law Clerk 1 was a "date." Respondent did not ask Law Clerk 1 whether she wished the meeting to be a date, nor seek any input from her as to his characterization of the meeting.

31. Law Clerk 1 was extremely uncomfortable when Respondent said this. She displayed visible reluctance to discuss a personal relationship and again attempted to change the subject.
32. Respondent ignored Law Clerk 1's attempts to divert the conversation and refused to drop the topic. Instead, Respondent told her that his wife had given him permission to date Law Clerk 1.
33. Respondent then informed Law Clerk 1 that his wife was available by phone or FaceTime to respond to any concerns that Law Clerk 1 might have with dating Respondent.
34. Respondent further told Law Clerk 1 that he had online dating profiles and explained "the concept of consensual non-monogamy."
35. Law Clerk 1 told Respondent repeatedly that she did not know what to say in response to his proposal, and Respondent became defensive.
36. Law Clerk 1 perceived that Respondent badly misread the situation: Respondent did not appear to recognize that Law Clerk 1 was offended because Respondent was using what he presented as a professional meeting and his role as a formerly trusted mentor to Law Clerk 1 to pursue a personal relationship.
37. Due to her extreme discomfort and concern about the personal and sexual comments Respondent made to her, Law Clerk 1 tried to quickly end the meeting with Respondent: she stopped eating her meal and requested the check.
38. Despite Law Clerk 1's cues that she was uncomfortable with the subject of the conversation initiated by Respondent, Respondent did not relent and continued to share with Law Clerk 1 very personal information about himself and his wife for the purpose of pursuing an intimate relationship with Law Clerk 1.
39. At the conclusion of the dinner, Respondent told Law Clerk 1 "don't disappear on me now." Respondent attempted to give Law Clerk 1 a hug, and Law Clerk 1 rebuffed his attempt at physical contact.
40. On August 9, 2021, Respondent followed up with a text message to Law Clerk 1 that stated:

Hi! So with everything going on last week I didn't get a chance to tell you how much I enjoyed having dinner last week. I hope that I didn't leave you too overwhelmed with everything we talked about. When you are ready I'm anxious to hear your thoughts.

Side note... the big announcement went out today that [Judicial Assistant 2.] will be joining Bradley. She didn't even tell me.

41. Law Clerk 1 did not respond to the text message.
42. Through a letter dated October 28, 2021, the Commission informed Respondent that allegations of inappropriate communications with his former judicial assistant and a law student intern would be treated as the complainants. Essentially, Respondent was alleged to have brought discussion of his "alternative lifestyle" into office conversations with his judicial assistant and legal intern. Respondent was further alleged to have repeatedly commented on the legal intern's physical appearance. Similar to the conversation Respondent had with Law Clerk 1, he also allegedly talked with the legal intern about his use of the dating app Tinder. This letter forms the basis of another pending judicial discipline proceeding against Respondent: CCJD Case No. 21-138 and Colorado Supreme Court Case No. 2022SA14.
43. On November 16, 2021, Respondent sent Law Clerk 1 a text message asking her to speak with his attorney's paralegal about her time as a law clerk. At that time, Law Clerk 1 believed the paralegal was only conducting due diligence, not requesting that Law Clerk 1 agree to testify on behalf of Respondent.
44. Copies of text messages between Respondent and Law Clerk 1 from July 27, 2021 through November 16, 2021 are incorporated in these allegations through attached Exhibit A. Respondent has provided an additional text message image from August 4, 2021 that apparently shows Law Clerk 1 replying to a text from Respondent with a heart emoji and an image of a Guinness bar sign. This additional message (without waiving potential challenges to its authenticity) is incorporated in these allegations through attached Exhibit B.
45. Law Clerk 1 spoke by phone with the paralegal. The questions asked were limited to Law Clerk 1's interactions with Respondent during the time she was actually employed as his law clerk.
46. When the paralegal asked if Law Clerk 1 was willing to testify at a hearing on Respondent's behalf, Law Clerk 1 explained that she "felt incredibly uncomfortable testifying as a character witness . . . , that [her] strong preference would be not to testify, but that [she] would comply with any court order or subpoena."

47. Law Clerk 1 believed Respondent's request that she testify put her in an untenable position: Law Clerk 1 worried that if she did not testify favorably for Respondent, because of Respondent's position as a judge and influence within the broader legal community, Respondent could negatively impact Law Clerk 1's reputation and future career. Yet, Law Clerk 1 did not believe that she could give complete and truthful testimony without revealing Respondent's conduct.
48. On December 16, 2021, Respondent, through counsel, submitted a response to the Commission's inquiry and investigation. In that letter, Respondent represented that "a courtroom full of prior clerks, law clerks, and others will confirm that [Respondent] never engaged in the type of conduct alleged"; namely, sexual harassment.
49. A notice and statement of charges was filed in CCJD Case No. 21-138 on January 20, 2022. The Colorado Supreme Court, in turn, issued an order on January 27, 2022 appointing special masters to hear the case.
50. Respondent's alleged conduct in Case No. 21-138 and alleged interactions with Law Clerk 1 create an appearance that Respondent was using his professional position to attempt to recruit his current and former employees as intimate partners and to join his "alternative lifestyle."
51. On May 10, 2022, the same paralegal whom Law Clerk 1 previously spoke with called her back to inform her that Respondent's attorney would subpoena her to testify on June 8, 2022.
52. Because of Respondent's attempt to manipulate his and Law Clerk 1's professional relationship into an intimate one as explained above, Law Clerk 1 was extremely uncomfortable testifying as a character witness for Respondent. On May 12, 2022, Law Clerk 1 reported Respondent's conduct to the Commission through a written statement at the direction of her supervisor, Terri Morrison.

III. CHARGES

Charge 1

Canon Rule 1.2

A Judge Shall Promote Confidence in the Judiciary

53. Paragraphs 1-53 are incorporated herein.
54. Canon Rule 1.2 states:

A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

55. Per Comment 1, Canon Rule 1.2 applies “to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge.” Comment 3 to the rule prohibits conduct that appears to compromise a judge’s integrity. A judge’s obligation to act with integrity does not end when he leaves the courthouse. See, e.g., Section 2 of Preamble to Rules of Judicial Conduct; Rule 1.2 Comments 1-3.
56. The Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (“the Code”) further defines “integrity” as “probity, fairness, honesty, uprightness, and soundness of character.” The Code recognizes “impropriety” to include: “conduct that violates the law, court rules, or provisions of this Code, and conduct that undermines a judge's independence, integrity, or impartiality.
57. By failing to disclose the sexual relationship with CJA 1, and his failure to abide by the personnel rules regarding that relationship, on his application to be a District Court Judge, Respondent failed to act with the integrity required by virtue of his position as a Judge.

Charge 2

Canon Rule 2.16

Cooperation with Disciplinary Authorities

58. Paragraphs 1-57 are incorporated herein.
59. Canon Rule 2.16(A) states that “[a] Judge shall cooperate and be candid and honest with judicial and lawyer disciplinary agencies.” Comment 1 to Canon Rule 2.16 notes that the rule is intended to ensure confidence in judges’ commitment to the integrity of the judicial system.
60. Respondent violated Canon Rule 2.16 by representing that the alleged incidents of sexual harassment charged in CCJD Case No. 21-138 and Colorado Supreme Court Case No. 2022SA14 were isolated incidents and that his prior judicial staff and others would report that he never engaged in any sort of similar conduct or sexual harassment.

Charge 3

Canon Rule 2.3

A Judge Shall Not Engage in Harassment Based on Sex or Gender

61. Paragraphs 1-60 are incorporated herein.
62. Canon Rule 2.3(B) states, in relevant part, that a judge shall not:

“[E]ngage in harassment, including but not limited to bias, prejudice, or harassment based upon race, sex, [or] gender...”

63. Additionally, Chief Justice Directive 08-06 delineates a zero-tolerance harassment policy for all Judicial employees, and states, in part:

Harassment, whether verbal, physical, or environmental, is unacceptable and will not be tolerated in the workplace itself or in other work-related settings such as business trips, conferences, or work-related social events.

64. By using a professional meeting arranged to discuss court-related business and mentoring as a guise for pursuing an intimate relationship with a former employee, Respondent violated Canon Rule 2.3 and Chief Justice Directive 08-06.

65. The inappropriateness of Respondent’s conduct and Respondent’s intent is further apparent as part of a larger pattern of similar conduct towards others, as presented in CCJD Case No. 21-138.

66. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 2.3(B), whether viewed as separate incidents or as a pattern of similar conduct.

Charge 4
Canon Rule 3.1
Extrajudicial Activities

67. Paragraphs 1-66 are incorporated herein.

68. Canon Rule 3.1 states, in relevant part: “when in engaging in extrajudicial activities, a judge shall not”:

- a. “(C) participate in activities that would appear to a reasonable person to undermine the judge’s independence, integrity, or impartiality”; or
- b. “(D) engage in conduct that would appear to a reasonable person to be coercive.”

69. Moreover, the Preamble to the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct states, in relevant part:

“Judges should maintain the dignity of judicial office at all times, and avoid both impropriety and the appearance of impropriety in their professional and personal lives.”

70. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 3.1 by engaging in extrajudicial behavior that undermined the judge’s integrity and was reasonably perceived as coercive.

Charge 5
Canon Rule 1.2
A Judge Shall Promote Confidence in the Judiciary

71. Paragraphs 1-70 are incorporated herein.

72. Canon Rule 1.2 states:

A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

73. Comment 1 to the rule makes clear that it applies “to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge.” Comments 4 and 6 to the rule (as well as Canon 4 of the Code of Judicial Conduct) emphasize the expectation that a judge participate in activities that further ethical conduct, integrity, and professionalism in the legal profession and promote confidence in the judiciary.

74. A judge’s obligation to act with integrity does not end when he leaves the courthouse. See, e.g., Section 2 of Preamble to Rules of Judicial Conduct; Rule 1.2 Comments 1-3.

75. The Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (“the Code”) further defines “integrity” as “probity, fairness, honesty, uprightness, and soundness of character.” The Code recognizes “impropriety” to include: “conduct that violates the law, court rules, or provisions of this Code, and conduct that undermines a judge's independence, integrity, or impartiality.

76. Respondent’s conduct in inviting Law Clerk 1 to a professional dinner as a ruse to proposition her to engage in an intimate relationship with him did not display integrity and created an appearance of impropriety and violated Canon Rule 1.2.

77. Similarly, with knowledge of his interactions with Law Clerk 1 on August 4, 2021, Respondent further created an appearance of impropriety and violated Canon Rule 1.2 by seeking to have Law Clerk 1 testify on his behalf in CCJD Case No. 21-138.

78. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 1.2 whether viewed as separate incidents or as a pattern of similar conduct.

Charge 6
Canon Rule 1.1
A Judge Shall Comply with the Law

79. Paragraphs 1-60 are incorporated herein.

80. Canon Rule 1.1 states, in relevant part: “A judge shall comply with the law, including the Code of Judicial Conduct.”

82. Through his conduct as described above, Respondent violated Canon Rule 1.1 whether viewed as separate incidents or as a pattern of similar conduct.

WHEREFORE, Complainant requests that the Commission recommend that, for his misconduct, appropriate disciplinary sanctions be imposed upon Judge John E. Scipione by the Colorado Supreme Court under Colo. RJD 36; that the Commission assess costs, attorney’s fees and expenses of this proceeding against Respondent and that the Commission recommend any such other and further relief as it deems appropriate.

RESPONDENT JUDGE JOHN E. SCIPIONE'S OPPOSITION TO AMENDED STATEMENT OF CHARGES

Respondent, Judge John E. Scipione, through his counsel, respectfully objects to the Amended Statement of Charges filed on or about December 22, 2022.

1. The original statement of charges in CCJD Case No. 21-138 was filed on January 20, 2022. The Supreme Court appointed Special Masters on January 27, 2022.

2. The allegations in the Amended Statement of Charges date to alleged conduct in 2012/2013. The CCJD and special counsel knew of the information which serves as the basis for the new allegations in July 2022. The CCJD and Special Counsel used the information in their August 2, 2022, Request for Temporary Judicial Suspension. The CCJD and Special Counsel delayed filing the Amended Statement of Charges until December 22, 2022.

3. Trial in the underlying matters is scheduled to begin in a little over a month, on February 6, 2023.

4. If the Special Masters allow the filing of the Amended Statement of Charges, counsel for Judge Scipione will need to conduct discovery, including the deposition of the former Judicial Assistant, to prepare for trial. Counsel for Judge Scipione will seek a continuance of the scheduled trial to conduct the discovery.

5. Grounds for denying a motion for leave to amend include undue delay, bad faith, dilatory motive, undue prejudice to the opposing party, and futility of amendment. Benton v. Adams, 56 P.3d 81, 86 (Colo. 2002); Polk v. District Court, 849 P.2d 23, 25-26 (Colo. 1993); Ajay Sports, Inc. v. Casazza, 1 P.3d 267, 273 (Colo. App. 2000). The court must assess the motion to amend in light of the totality of the circumstances, and must balance the amendment against the burdens which granting the amendment may impose on the other parties. Polk, 849 P.2d at 26.

6. Delay, standing alone, may justify denial of leave to amend. Riccatone v. Colorado Choice Health Plans, 315 P.3d 203, 211 (Colo. App. 2013). “Delay devalues judgments, creates anxiety in litigants and uncertainty for lawyers, results in loss or deterioration of evidence, and wastes court resources.” Benton, 56 P.3d at 85. If a party seeks leave to amend after substantial progress toward trial has occurred, or if granting leave to amend would significantly delay the progress of the case to trial, a trial court may deny leave to amend if it should have been sought earlier. Id. The moving party carries the burden of demonstrating a lack of knowledge, mistake, inadvertence, or other reason for not pleading a claim earlier. Riccatone, 315 P.3d at 211. The CCJD and special counsel offer no explanation for their delay.

7. Courts deny leave to amend based on prejudice where, as here, the proposed amendment raises new issues outside the scope of the original pleading which would require additional and unanticipated discovery long after the case was at issue. See, e.g., Polk, 849 P.2d at 26; Robertson v. Board of Educ., 570 P.2d 19, 23 (Colo. App. 1977); Apollo Tire, Inc. v. United Bank of Lakewood Nat'l Ass'n, 531 P.2d 976, 978 (Colo. App. 1974).

WHEREFORE, Judge Scipione respectfully requests that the Special Masters deny the CCJD and special counsel’s filing of the Amended Statement of Charges.

Respectfully submitted this 30th day of December, 2022.

ORDER REGARDING SECOND AMENDED STATEMENT OF CHARGES

The Special Masters grant the request and accept the Second Amended Statement of Charges. The new charges are based on information Judge Scipione was aware of and knew were being investigated by the People since July 2022, prior to the stay in this case. The People’s timing of filing the Second Amended Statement of Charges does not appear to be delayed given the matter was on a stay until December 16, 2022. This matter was heard in open Court on December 19, 2022 and the People indicated during the appearance that they were going to file a Second Amended Statement of Charges, which they filed seven days later. There is no undue delay in their action. There is also no prejudice in allowing the Second Amended Statement of Charges to stand as Judge Scipione has been aware of the investigation and potential allegations for over five months. The allegations will not delay the process of discovery. The Special Masters are adopting a liberal policy for the amendment to allow all pending issues to be resolved in one hearing considering judicial economy and the circumstances surrounding the new charges. Judge Scipione has adequate time to file an Answer by January 9, 2023 as was previously ordered in the December 20, 2022 case management order.

The Parties have reached a partial agreement to resolve this matter. The Parties' agreement is attached as "Exhibit A—Stipulation for Resolution of Formal Proceedings." The stipulation resolves the merits of the alleged rule violations with recognition that Respondent Judge John E. Scipione will resign immediately and be publicly censured for his violations of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. The stipulation does not resolve other sanctions sought by the People under Colo. RJD 36(g) and (h). Both Parties will argue the issue of other sanctions under Colo. RJD 36(g) and (h) in briefing before the Special Masters, who will issue a report to the Commission under Colo. RJD 32. Upon the conclusion of these further proceedings, the Commission will complete the record of proceedings in this matter pursuant to Colo. RJD 33 and file that record with this court along with the Commission's final recommendations under Colo. RJD 37.

Because the expectation is that the record in this matter, as defined by Colo. RJD 33, will be supplemented with the special masters' report and the Commission's final recommendations, the Commission requests that this Court take no action at this time apart from: 1) acknowledging receipt of the present filing; 2) acknowledging Respondent's immediate resignation; and 3) recognizing that this notice and accompanying stipulation is a matter of public record upon filing, according to Colo. RJD 37(e).¹

EXHIBIT A—STIPULATION FOR RESOLUTION OF FORMAL PROCEEDINGS

The members of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission”), upon agreement of Complainant and Judge John E. Scipione, file

the following recommended stipulation for resolution of formal proceedings according to Colo. RJD 37(e):

SUMMARY AND STIPULATED FACTS

Judge Scipione is an 18th Judicial District Court Judge, having been appointed to his office effective September 19, 2018. After serving as a magistrate in the 18th Judicial District from 2012-2017, Judge Scipione served as an Arapahoe County Court Judge effective May 31, 2017. Judge Scipione is subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission and of this Court.

The Commission's jurisdiction is limited to recommending discipline based upon Judge Scipione's conduct as a judge and as a candidate for judicial office. CO ST CJC Application; see also CO ST CJC Rule 4.1.

Judge Scipione, on at least three occasions, used his position as a judicial officer to seek intimate relationships with Judicial Department employees or court personnel. While serving as a magistrate, Judge Scipione engaged in an approximately 1-year extra-marital personal relationship with his judicial assistant (Judicial Assistant 1). Judge Scipione did not report this relationship to his supervising Chief Judge or the Judicial Department's Human Resources Division, as required by the Judicial Department's personnel rules.¹ As relevant to the

Commission's jurisdiction to impose discipline in this matter, Judge Scipione did not disclose the existence of this relationship when he applied to become a county court judge in 2017 and when he applied to become a district court judge in 2018.²

In 2021, the Commission notified Judge Scipione of allegations of judicial misconduct made by a more recent judicial assistant (Judicial Assistant 2) and an employment relationship. Specifically, Attachment F prohibited circumstances where:

One party is a justice, judge or magistrate working within the same court or judicial district of the other party who is employed as a classified or contract employee in that court or judicial district.

Attachment F further explained that:

Failure to comply with this policy may result in cancellation of a contract, corrective and/or disciplinary action, including termination, or a referral to the Commission on Judicial Discipline.

² The standard judicial application form asks:

46. Is there any circumstance or event in your personal or professional life which, if brought to the attention of the Commission, might tend to affect adversely your qualifications to serve on the court for which you have applied? If so, please explain.

The standard form further requires the applicant to certify its accuracy, completeness, and compliance with the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. With awareness of his unreported relationship, Judge Scipione responded on both his applications: "No."

unpaid intern/law clerk (Law Clerk 1). These allegations related to claims of sexual harassment, including that Judge Scipione referred to the Judicial Assistant 2 using a derogatory term, openly discussed his involvement in an alternative “lifestyle” of consensual non-monogamy and asked the intern/law clerk to assist him in using the Tinder dating application. In its investigation, the Commission learned that Judge Scipione pursued a personal relationship with a former law clerk (Law Clerk 2). Judge Scipione failed to disclose the personal relationship with Judicial Assistant 1 and his conduct with Law Clerk 2 in these disciplinary proceedings. Judge Scipione represented that former staff and others would affirm that he never engaged in similar misconduct in the workplace, without disclosing that he had done so in the past.

Separately, Judge Scipione contacted another judge and that judge’s probate clerk in a different jurisdiction to seek favorable treatment in probate proceedings involving Judge Scipione’s father’s estate.

Following a request from the Commission, this Court issued an order on August 4, 2022 that temporarily suspended Judge Scipione from his judicial duties with pay according to Colo. RJD 34(a). The disciplinary proceedings were stayed for approximately six months pending resolution of disability proceedings initiated by Judge Scipione under Colo. RJD 33.5(c).

- b. Judge Scipione shall receive a written public censure from the Supreme Court according to Colo. RJD 36(e) for violations of Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.16, 2.3, 2.8, 2.9, and 4.1, above;
- c. While the stipulated resignation and admissions to judicial misconduct shall be effective immediately, the parties further agree that other sanctions, including requests for an award of attorney's fees and costs and the Colorado Judicial Department's recoupment of certain salary and benefits paid shall remain open for further determination, with both sides given the opportunity to brief the issue to the Special Masters; and

- d. Judge Scipione shall, apart from being able to address the remaining sanctions contemplated through Colo. RJD 36(g) and (h) with a final determination by this Court, waive his rights to a hearing in formal proceedings and review by this Court as provided according to Colo. RJD 37(e) and Colo. RJD 40.

The Parties further acknowledge that this stipulated partial resolution, the sanctions imposed by the Colorado Supreme Court, and the prospective record of proceedings as defined by Colo. RJD 33 shall become public upon their respective filings.

THE PEOPLE’S NOTICE OF SUPPLEMENTAL AUTHORITY ON THE LEGAL FEES ISSUE

This panel is currently considering (1) whether to assess against Judge Scipione the Commission’s “reasonable attorney fees” pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(g), and (2) whether the phrase “reasonable attorney fees” requires a prevailing market rate or instead some lower “cost-plus” rate based upon special counsel’s salary as a government lawyer.

The Commission, through special counsel’s briefing, has cited binding authority from the Colorado Court of Appeals which requires that “reasonable attorney fees” means a prevailing market rate. But no Colorado appellate court has explicitly addressed this issue in the precise context of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline.

Recently, however, a special tribunal of seven Colorado Court of Appeals judges, appointed in lieu of the Supreme Court due to a conflict, upheld an award of attorney fees against a disciplined judge at a prevailing market rate. Matter of Timbreza, 2023 CO 16. In Timbreza, the case was resolved via stipulation in which the parties agreed the judge would pay $17,500 in fees based on 50 hours of work at a rate of $350 per hour. Id. The parties further agreed that $350 per hour was a reasonable prevailing market rate. Id. Pursuant to Colo. RJD 40, the special tribunal was required to uphold the stipulation unless it was “not supported by the record of proceedings.” Here, the special tribunal upheld the stipulation on attorney fees, including the agreement that the $350 per hour prevailing market rate was reasonable.

While Timbreza is not binding on this panel, it is nevertheless persuasive authority that a prevailing market rate should apply in this case. Attached to this Notice are the Timbreza opinion as well as the stipulation on fees in that case.

CHIEF JUSTICE BOATRIGHT, JUSTICE MÁRQUEZ, JUSTICE HOOD, JUSTICE GABRIEL, JUSTICE HART, JUSTICE SAMOUR, and JUSTICE
BERKENKOTTER did not participate.

¶ 1 Former Judge Lance P. Timbreza, you appear before the Special Tribunal of the Colorado Supreme Court (“the Special Tribunal”) for imposition of discipline based on violations of the duties of your office as a Judge of the Mesa County District Court. The Special Tribunal was convened because the Supreme Court had to recuse itself in this matter under Rule 41(b) of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (“RJD”).

¶ 2 The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission”) recommends approval of the Stipulation for Resolution of Formal Proceedings (“the First Stipulation”), which you and the Commission executed pursuant to RJD 37(e), and a second Stipulation for Resolution of Fees and Costs (“the Second Stipulation”), which you and the Commission executed pursuant to RJD 37(c), 38, and 40. (We refer to the First Stipulation and the Second Stipulation jointly as the Stipulations.)

¶ 3 Before the entry of the First Stipulation, you resigned your position as a judge. As part of the First Stipulation, you also stipulated to the entry of a public censure. You and the Commission further agreed that the issue of whether any additional sanctions should be imposed against you would be resolved at a future date. These remaining issues were addressed in the Second Stipulation.

¶ 4 Consistent with the Stipulations, the Commission recommends that the Special Tribunal issue a public censure and order you to pay $20,658.00 in attorney fees and costs to the State of Colorado, through the Commission. The Special Tribunal adopts these recommendations.

I. Stipulated and Disputed Facts

¶ 5 In the First Stipulation, you and the Commission agreed to the following facts:

1. In June 2022, [former] Judge Timbreza attended a Colorado Bar Association hosted conference at a condominium complex in the mountains. On the first night of the conference, eight of the attendees (including [former] Judge Timbreza and Attorney 1, who met for the first time earlier that evening) gathered in the lobby of the hotel for an informal social gathering. Most members of the group were drinking alcohol. Several witnesses reported that [former] Judge Timbreza became visibly intoxicated around midnight. During the gathering, [former] Judge Timbreza (a gay male) privately made repeated sexual propositions to Attorney 1 (also a gay male), which included requests that they leave the gathering together to go to Attorney 1's condo/hotel room by themselves. (The Commission felt that the sexual orientation of [former] Judge Timbreza and Attorney 1 is not relevant to the propriety of the conduct in this case or to the issue of sanctions. [Former] Judge Timbreza's and Attorney 1's sexual orientation is referenced here for context, at the request of Judge Timbreza.) [Former] Judge Timbreza used his cell phone to show Attorney 1 at least one pornographic image. However, [former] Judge Timbreza maintains that he merely showed Attorney 1 a single still photograph of a naked gay porn actor from an adult website. [Former] Judge Timbreza believed he had Attorney 1's permission to show the picture. Attorney 1 maintains that he did not give such permission and did not welcome these propositions. Several witnesses reported that Attorney 1 appeared comfortable with [former] Judge Timbreza initially. But as [former] Judge Timbreza became more intoxicated, Attorney 1 appeared uncomfortable and tense while talking to [former] Judge Timbreza. Some witnesses also reported that both looked at one of the men's cell phone for a couple of minutes and both appeared to be sitting very close together.

2. Attorney 1 is a younger and less experienced lawyer than [former] Judge Timbreza. Given this, Attorney 1 was nervous about [former] Judge Timbreza's overtures. These feelings were compounded by the fact that Attorney 1 and [former] Judge Timbreza share much in common in both their background and interests. Attorney 1 made best efforts to politely decline [former] Judge Timbreza's overtures instead of forcefully rejecting them. Ultimately, at the end of the evening, [former] Judge Timbreza and Attorney 1 went to Attorney 1's hotel room. On the way to the hotel room, [former] Judge Timbreza kissed Attorney 1. Though Attorney 1 did not want this kiss, Attorney 1 did not physically stop [former] Judge Timbreza or tell him no either.
3. Ultimately, [former] Judge Timbreza entered Attorney 1's hotel room. Attorney 1 did not physically try to stop [former] Judge Timbreza from entering and did not expressly tell him no.

¶ 6 You and the Commission note the following disputed facts:

What happened next is unclear. Attorney 1 has been emotional when discussing this case and has been unwilling or unable to disclose what happened in the hotel room. [Former] Judge Timbreza claims that he laid in bed with Attorney 1 and fell asleep for approximately four hours before leaving early the next morning. There are other disputed facts. But as part of the compromise of this stipulation, the parties have agreed not to detail all those disputed facts in [the First S]tipulation.

¶ 7 In the First Stipulation, you and the Commission also agreed to the following facts:

[Former] Judge Timbreza maintains that at all times throughout the evening he believed that his propositions to Attorney 1 were welcome. [Former] Judge Timbreza recognizes now that his perception of the evening's events, on the one hand, and Attorney 1's perception of the evening's events, on the other, stand in contrast to one another. [Former] Judge Timbreza acknowledges that due to his alcohol consumption on the night in question, his judgment and his ability to objectively perceive events were compromised. In light of the investigation in this case, he sees now that his propositions were not welcome and that his conduct was inappropriate.

II. Stipulated Rule Violations

¶ 8 In the First Stipulation, you and the Commission agreed that you violated the following rules:

Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct Canon Rule 1.1

1. Canon Rule 1.1 provides, in relevant part: "A judge shall comply with the law, including the Code of Judicial Conduct."
2. As described below, former Judge Timbreza admits his non-compliance with Canon Rule 1.2, Canon Rule 1.3, and Canon Rule 2.3, which establishes that he has violated Canon Rule 1.1.

Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct Canon Rule 1.2

3. Canon Rule 1.2 provides: "A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety."

4. Former Judge Timbreza acknowledges that his admitted conduct was improper and created an appearance of impropriety in violation of Canon Rule 1.2.

Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct Canon Rule 1.3

5. Canon Rule 1.3 states: "A judge shall not abuse the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal or economic interests of the judge or others, or allow others to do so."
6. Former Judge Timbreza admits that by making sexual propositions, as described above, to Attorney 1, he abused the prestige of his judicial office to advance his personal interests and thereby violated Canon Rule 1.3.

Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct Canon Rule 2.3

7. Canon Rule 2.3(B) states, in relevant part: "A judge shall not . . . engage in harassment, including but not limited to bias, prejudice, or harassment based upon race, sex, [or] gender"
8. Additionally, Chief Justice Directive ("CJD") 08-06 defines sexual harassment to include "unwanted sexual advances or propositions; unwelcome touching; . . . repeated sexual comments; . . . [and] the display in the workplace of sexually suggestive objects or pictures."

9. CJD 08-06 further states, in part: “The Colorado Judicial Department will not tolerate, condone or allow harassment . . . in the workplace or during any work-related activity”
10. Former Judge Timbreza acknowledges that his admitted conduct was improper and violated Canon Rule 2.3 and CJD 08-06.

III. Prior Disciplinary History

¶ 9 In the First Stipulation, you and the Commission agreed that you have the following prior disciplinary history:

As detailed in Matter of Timbreza, 2019 CO 98, [former] Judge Timbreza previously received a public censure and 28-day unpaid suspension for driving while impaired by alcohol and resulting consequences. In that case, “according to witnesses and the arresting officer’s report, [former] Judge Timbreza consumed several glasses of wine at a vineyard and, after leaving the vineyard, drank more wine at a poolside party.” Id. Upon leaving the poolside party, [former] Judge Timbreza crashed his vehicle into roadside trees and bushes to avoid a collision with another vehicle. Id. He subsequently refused to take a blood alcohol test. According to one of his colleagues, [former] Judge Timbreza ignored advice not to drive home from the poolside party. Id.

[Former] Judge Timbreza’s judicial disciplinary history further includes a private censure for delay in the performance of his judicial duties.

IV. Stipulated Resolution of Formal Proceedings

¶ 10 RJD 37(e), titled “Stipulated Resolution of Formal Proceedings,” allows the Commission to file a “stipulated resolution” as a recommendation to the Special Tribunal in a disciplinary proceeding. In filing such a stipulation, the Commission has authority to recommend, among other possible sanctions, that the Special Tribunal “censure the Judge publicly . . . by written order.” RJD 36(e); accord Colo. Const. art. VI, § 23(3)(f). The Commission also has authority to recommend that the Special Tribunal “[a]ssess costs and fees incurred by the Commission.” RJD 36(g).

¶ 11 Under RJD 40, after considering the evidence and the law, the Special Tribunal is required to issue a decision concerning the Commission’s recommendations. If the Commission recommends adoption of a stipulated resolution, “the [Special Tribunal] shall order it to become effective and issue any sanction provided in the stipulated resolution, unless the [Special Tribunal] determines that its terms do not comply with Rule 37(e) or are not supported by the record of proceedings.” RJD 40.

¶ 12 By the Stipulations, former Judge Lance P. Timbreza waived his right to a hearing in formal proceedings and review by the Special Tribunal and agrees with the Commission’s recommendations that he be publicly censured and ordered to pay $20,658.00 in attorney fees and costs to the State of Colorado, through the Commission. (Pursuant to RJD 6.5(a) and RJD 37(e), the Stipulations, the Commission's recommendations, and the record of proceedings became public when the Commission filed its recommendations with the Special Tribunal.)

¶ 13 Upon consideration of the law, the evidence, the record of proceedings, the Stipulations, and the Commission's recommendations, and being sufficiently advised in the premises, the Special Tribunal concludes that the terms of the Stipulations comply with RJD 37(e) and are supported by the record of proceedings. Therefore, the Special Tribunal orders the Stipulations to become effective and issues the agreed-upon sanctions.

¶ 14 The Special Tribunal hereby publicly censures you, former Judge Lance P. Timbreza, for violating Code of Judicial Conduct Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, and 2.3, as well as CJD 08-06. The Special Tribunal also orders you to pay $20,658.00 in attorney fees and costs to the State of Colorado, through the Commission.

STIPULATION FOR RESOLUTION OF FEES AND COSTS

INTRODUCTION

On January 6, 2023, the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline (“the Commission”) and former Judge Lance P. Timbreza entered into a formal stipulation related to the merits of this disciplinary proceeding. In that stipulation, the parties agreed that the issues of fees, costs, and salary recoupment pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(g) and (h) would be litigated before the special masters at a future hearing. The need for that future hearing is now moot because the parties have reached the following stipulation on fees, costs, and salary recoupment.

STIPULATION

The parties agree that Respondent will pay the sum of $20,658.00 for fees and costs as follows: fees of $17,500.00 (50 hours at $350.00 per hour) and costs of $3,158.00. Respondent agrees to pay directly to expert Natasha Powers her invoice of $1200.00 for her appearance at the deposition taken by the Commission. Regarding the fees calculation, the parties have agreed that 50 hours of work performed by the Commission’s current special counsel will be assessed against Respondent. The parties further stipulate that $350/hour is an appropriate prevailing market rate based on special counsel’s experience. Thus, the parties stipulate that the $17,500.00 in fees here (i.e. 50 hours at $350.00 per hour) is a “reasonable” lodestar sum pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(g), and Respondent hereby waives his right to argue to the Special Masters and/or the Special Tribunal that a downward departure should apply.

In exchange for the above stipulations, the Commission agrees not to seek reimbursement for all other time expended by the Commission's current special counsel or by the Commission's prior special counsel appointed through the Attorney General's Office, including time billed by investigators and paralegals.

The Commission also agrees it will not seek salary recoupment against Respondent, pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(h), for the time Respondent was on temporary paid suspension until he resigned on September 12, 2022.

Respondent hereby waives his right to a hearing in formal proceedings and review by the Special Tribunal, as provided according to Colo. RJD 37(e), 38, and 40. Pursuant to this stipulation, 20 days after the Special Tribunal approves the stipulation, Respondent shall mail a check in the amount of $20,658.00 made payable to the State of Colorado (with reference to CCJD Case No. 22-125) to the following address:

Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline
1300 Broadway, Suite 210
Denver, CO 80203

If Respondent fails to pay within this time, a judgment shall enter against Lance Timbreza in the amount of $20,658.00 payable to the State of Colorado.

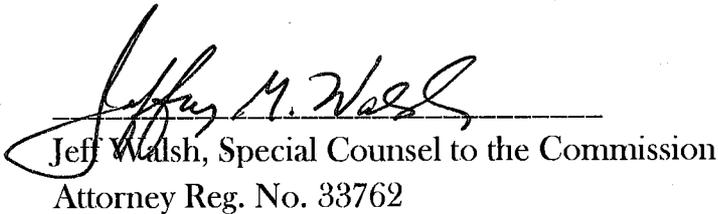

This stipulation shall effectively merge with the stipulation on the merits dated January 6, 2023 and shall become part of the public censure in this case as provided through Colo. RJD 37(e).

Stipulated and agreed this 31st day of March, 2023.

RESPONDENT'S OBJECTION TO THE PEOPLE'S NOTICE OF SUPPLEMENTAL AUTHORITY ON THE LEGAL FEES ISSUE

Respondent, John E. Scipione, by and through his undersigned counsel, John S. Gleason and Jane B. Cox of Burns, Figa & Will, P.C., hereby submits the following Objection to the People's Notice of Supplemental Authority on the Legal Fees Issue and states as follows:

1. On January 19, 2023, the parties submitted a Stipulation for Resolution of Formal Proceedings, which resolved the sanction to be imposed in this matter, and left open the unresolved requests for additional punitive financial sanctions against Respondent. Thereafter, the Special Masters established a briefing schedule for the Commission's separate requests for disgorgement of salary and benefits and for assessment of attorney's fees and costs. Following some unopposed modifications to the briefing schedule, the Commission submitted its Reply Briefs on March 31, 2023.

2. On April 26, 2023, without conferral or advance courtesy notice to Respondent, the Commission filed The People's Notice of Supplemental Authority on the Legal Fees Issue. The Commission already enjoyed the advantage of the ability to submit Reply Briefs in this matter and the Special Masters gave no previous instruction that any further briefing would be allowed. Without any leave from the Special Masters, the Commission submitted its Notice nearly four weeks after the briefing schedule closed.

3. Respondent strenuously objects to the mischaracterized Notice of Supplemental Authority on the Legal Fees Issue. The Stipulation from a separate judicial discipline proceeding submitted to the Special Masters is not "authority" in this case, nor is it even persuasive. In Judicial Discipline Case Number 22-125, the Respondent Judge entered into a Stipulation as to the sanction of attorney's fees. Such Stipulations have never been regarded as persuasive in the attorney regulation system, as the hallmark of negotiated resolutions is compromise. There is no other precedent for the Special Masters to consider beyond the substantially similar attorney discipline system, and the Special Masters should look to the logic and reasoning behind the decades of decisions within that well-established system for guidance on this matter.

4. Additionally, the Stipulation from case number 22-125 describes the negotiated attorney's fees to be paid by that Respondent Judge, including the following:

In exchange for the above stipulations, the Commission agrees not to seek reimbursement for all other time expended by the Commission's current special counsel or by the Commission's prior special counsel appointed through the Attorney General's Office, including time billed by investigators and paralegals.

The Commission also agrees it will not seek salary recoupment against Respondent, pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(h), for the time Respondent was on temporary paid suspension until he resigned on September 12, 2022.

However, upon inquiry from counsel in this matter, the Commission refused to provide information critical to drawing any comparison to this case, such as how much of current Special Counsel's time was discounted, how much of prior Special Counsel (appointed by the Attorney General's Office) was discounted, and how much of the Judge's paid salary the Commission agreed would not be sought in recoupment.

5. The Commission relies on the confidentiality provisions of the Rules of Judicial Discipline to deny Respondent access to information that is key for the Special Masters to determine how analogous the cases are, and thus how much weight, if any, should be afforded to the negotiated resolution of a similar issue in a different case. Respondent notes that he sought administrative records such as billing records and other information specific to this case through a CORA request, to aid in his analysis for attempted settlement negotiations and preparation of his Answer Briefs of these disputed issues. The Commission similarly refused to provide information regarding Respondent's own disciplinary matter, asserting that it is not subject to CORA or any other means of records request. This is yet another example of the serious due process concerns Respondent has endured by the Commission's actions throughout this and the related disability proceeding.

6. Respondent can attest that his experience in negotiating any stipulations with the Commission, through various Special Counsel, has been marked by threats and intimidation tactics. His attempts to negotiate resolution of the financial sanctions in this matter have been no exception, including a condition by the Commission that Respondent agree that this case be allowed to be used to establish the precedent of awards of attorney's fees and disgorgement of salary that did not previously exist. Respondent has every reason to believe that the former Judge in case number 22-125 experienced the same threats and pressure, leading to the so-called precedential Stipulation submitted on April 26, 2023 to the Special Masters.

7. A judge's decision to enter into a stipulation in an entirely separate judicial discipline matter does not establish precedent binding on the Special Masters here. Conclusions of law, as determined by the Courts, establish precedent. The Commission's belated and unauthorized efforts to submit the Stipulation underscore its acknowledgement that there is no precedent for its requests for attorney's fees and for disgorgement of salary and benefits. The Notice provided by the Commission does not constitute "authority" nor is it persuasive. For these reasons, Respondent objects to the filing itself and to the mischaracterized substance of the Commission's Notice filed April 26, 2023.

WHEREFORE, Respondent, John E. Scipione, respectfully objects to The People's Notice of Supplemental Authority on the Legal Fees Issue and requests that the Special Masters decline to consider the Notice in their determinations as to the pending issue of the request for a punitive award of attorney's fees and costs against Respondent.

Respectfully submitted this 28th day of April, 2023.

THE PEOPLE’S REQUEST TO SUPPLEMENT THE RECORD

The People hereby request to supplement the record in this case and have conferred with opposing counsel, John Gleason, about this request pursuant to Colo. R. Civ. P. 121. Mr. Gleason objects to this request on behalf of Judge Scipione.

The People recently received the attached letter from the Office of the State Court Administrator indicating that another financial settlement has been reached with a complaining witness related to Judge Scipione’s misconduct. The Commission believes that this $45,000 settlement with one complaining witness, along with the $85,000 settlement with another, highlights the severity of Judge Scipione's misconduct and the damage that this misconduct has done (a) to the integrity and reputation of the judiciary, and (b) to his judicial district specifically. Given this, the People believe the record of this settlement further supports the Peoples' request for fees and costs as being "appropriate and equitable in the circumstances" pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(g).

For the foregoing reasons, the People respectfully request that the attached letter be included in the factual record in this case.

RESPONDENT'S OBJECTION TO THE PEOPLE'S REQUEST TO SUPPLEMENT THE RECORD

Respondent, John E. Scipione, by and through his undersigned counsel, John S. Gleason and Jane B. Cox of Burns, Figa & Will, P.C., hereby submits the following Objection to the People's (second) Request to Supplement the Record and states as follows:

1. On January 19, 2023, the parties submitted a Stipulation for Resolution of Formal Proceedings, which resolved the sanction to be imposed in this matter, and left open the unresolved requests for additional punitive financial sanctions against Respondent. Thereafter, the Special Masters established a briefing schedule for the Commission's separate requests for disgorgement of salary and benefits, and for assessment of attorney's fees and costs. Following some unopposed modifications to the briefing schedule, the Commission submitted its Reply Briefs on March 31, 2023.

2. On April 26, 2023, without conferral or advance courtesy notice to Respondent, the Commission filed The People's Notice of Supplemental Authority on the Legal Fees Issue. The Commission already enjoyed the advantage of the ability to submit Reply Briefs in this matter, and the Special Masters gave no previous instruction that any further briefing would be allowed. Without any leave from the Special Masters, the Commission submitted its Notice nearly four weeks after the briefing schedule closed.

3. On June 22, 2023, Special Counsel for the Commission conferred with counsel for Respondent regarding its intent to again request to supplement the record in this matter, regardless of the fact that the briefing schedule closed nearly three months previously. For the reasons described herein, Respondent again objects to the supplementation.

4. The Commission's current second request to supplement the proceeding in this matter arises from the Office of the State Court Administrator's notification to the Commission that the Judicial Department, on behalf of the 18th Judicial District, recently settled an EEOC claim with a complaining witness related to Respondent's conduct in this disciplinary proceeding.

5. As with the first such settlement reached by the Judicial Department, Respondent had no notice of the EEOC claim. He had no opportunity to produce evidence or testimony regarding the (unadjudicated) merits of the claims or the veracity of the witnesses' allegations. He had no opportunity to participate in the mediation during which the settlement was purportedly reached.

6. There is no information available to the Special Masters regarding how or why the Judicial Department determined that a financial settlement was in its best interests, or how the amount of the settlement was calculated. The Commission implies additional "guilt" on Respondent's part based on the fact of the settlement itself, with no objective evidence to support that inference.

7. Put simply, it is not appropriate for Respondent to be punished for decisions made by the Judicial Department, without any ability for Respondent to participate or defend himself, and in which the Judicial Department did not have the benefit of the factual evidence developed during the disciplinary matter, such as the deposition testimony of the complaining witnesses.

8. The stipulated facts of this matter remain unchanged. Those are the facts in evidence upon which the Special Masters should rely in making any determinations regarding the outstanding unprecedented financial sanctions sought against Respondent.

WHEREFORE, Respondent, John E. Scipione, respectfully objects to The People's Request to Supplement the Record and requests that the Special Masters decline to consider the Request in their determinations as to the pending issues of the requests for punitive disgorgement and the punitive award of attorney's fees and costs against Respondent.

Respectfully submitted this 5th day of July, 2023.

THE PEOPLE’S REPLY TO JUDGE SCIPIONE’S OBJECTION TO SUPPLEMENTING THE RECORD

The People recently requested to supplement the record in this case to include evidence of a second financial settlement the Judicial Department entered into with one of the complaining witnesses here based on Judge Scipione’s misconduct.

Judge Scipione makes two objections. First, he asserts that since the briefing is closed, this panel should reject the People’s request to supplement. Second, he asserts that, since he did not participate in the litigation that led to that settlement, no adverse inference should be drawn against him based on the fact of the settlement.

Both of these arguments fail.

First, that the briefing in this matter is closed does not bar the admission of additional, relevant evidence. The Colorado Constitution and the Rules of Judicial Discipline both explicitly contemplate the possibility of supplementing the factual record. See Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23 (f) (“the Supreme Court . . . in its discretion may permit the introduction of additional evidence.”); Colo. RJD 39 (same). Moreover, it is well accepted generally that a trial court may “exercise its discretion to permit a party who has rested to reopen a case for the purpose of presenting further evidence.” Justi v. RHO Condominium Ass’n, 277 P.3d 847, 849 (Colo. App. 2011); Rocky Mountain Animal Defense v. Colo. Div. of Wildlife, 100 P.3d 508, 519 (Colo. App. 2004). Here, the evidence of the additional, second settlement related to Judge Scipione’s misconduct was not available to the Commission when briefing closed. Thus, the Commission could not have presented this information sooner. But now that the Commission has learned of the settlement, and given its relevance as stated in the People’s motion to supplement, this additional evidenced should be admitted into the record.

Second, it is in fact reasonable to draw an adverse inference against Judge Scipione based on the fact of a second legal settlement with a second complaining witness against him. Here, it is not only reasonable to assume that the Judicial Department is a rational actor, but that it is in fact a highly sophisticated rational actor, especially in matters related to the law. It is the Judicial Department after all. Therefore, if it decided, as it did, that the merits of the litigation against it were such that the Department needed to settle the case for a large sum of money, then it is reasonable to assume that Judge Scipione’s conduct, which led to the litigation in the first place, was indeed highly problematic. Put simply, it is not reasonable to assume, as Judge Scipione suggests, that the Judicial Department merely settled the cases here without a thorough investigation and due consideration of the merits of the claims against him.

For the foregoing reasons, the evidence of the second settlement should be admitted into the factual record in this case, and this panel should draw an adverse inference against Judge Scipione based on that settlement.

ORDER REGARDING RJD 36(H) SANCTIONS, ATTORNEY’S FEES, AND COSTS

THIS MATTER comes before the Special Masters on Special Counsel’s Brief in Support of Sanctions Pursuant to Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline 36(h), filed February 10, 2023. Respondent filed his Answer on February 25, 2023. Special Counsel filed their Reply on March 31, 2023. The Special Masters have reviewed the Brief, Answer, Reply, and the case file.¹ Being otherwise fully informed in the premises, the Special Masters find, and order, as follows:

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

This matter was initiated on January 20, 2022 when a Notice and Statement of Charges was served on Commission Case 21-138 (Supreme Court Case 22SA14). The Special Masters were appointed on January 27, 2022. Respondent’s Answer was filed February 9, 2022, and the Special Masters held an initial Case Management Conference and issued a Case Management Order on March 10, 2022. An additional Stipulated Case Management Order was approved on April 4, 2022. The matter was originally set for a two-day hearing on June 7 and 8, 2022, after the Special Masters found good cause for a slight delay outside the timeframes based on previously scheduled international travel of Respondent's counsel. Respondent filed a Motion to continue that hearing on May 20, 2022, which was initially opposed but then agreed to allow new allegations to be investigated. A continued hearing was set for August 23-24, 2022. A Motion to Amend Statement of Charges in 21-138 was filed on June 10, 2022, and the amendment was granted over objection of Respondent on June 20, 2022. On July 21, 2022, a Notice and Statement of Charges was served on Commission Case 22-112 (Supreme Court Case 22SA236). The Special Masters were appointed on July 22, 2022, and an Unopposed Motion to Consolidate the case was filed on July 25, 2022.

There was a Request for Temporary Judicial Suspension filed on August 2, 2022, which was granted by Order of the Supreme Court on August 3, 2022. Respondent filed a Verified Motion Raising Disability on August 4, 2022, and Respondent was temporarily suspended from his judicial duties with pay, pursuant to Colo. R. of Jud. Discipline (RJD) Rule 34(a). An Order Staying Proceedings issued on August 5, 2022, and Respondent was transferred to disability inactive status by Order of the Supreme Court on August 9, 2022. The Honorable James Casebolt was appointed as Special Master of the disability proceeding. On August 8, 2022, the Special Masters granted the unopposed consolidation, acknowledged the stay for the disability proceedings, and vacated the disciplinary hearing scheduled for August 23-24, 2022.

By Order dated December 15, 2022, Special Master Casebolt recommended the Supreme Court accept the parties' Stipulation to Dismiss the Disability Proceeding and resume the disciplinary proceedings against Respondent. The Supreme Court adopted the recommendation on December 16, 2022, and maintained Respondent on inactive status. These Special Masters then held a status conference on December 19, 2022 to resume the disciplinary proceedings, and set a deadline for Respondent's Answer to the Statement of Charges in Commission case 22-112 of January 9, 2023. A three-day hearing was scheduled for February 6-8, 2023, on the consolidated allegations.

The People filed a Second Amended Statement of the Charges on December 22, 2022, which was allowed over Respondent's objection by Order of the Special Masters on January 4, 2023. Respondent filed his Answer January 9, 2023. On January 19, 2023, the parties filed a Notice of Colo. RJD 37(e) Stipulation and Partial Recommendations for Sanctions, which agreed to Respondent's immediate resignation and public censure for violations of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct. Respondent stipulated that he knowingly engaged in conduct that violated

Canons 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.3, 2.8, 2.9, 2.16, and 4.1(A)(11). The parties agreed that other requested sanctions, including requests for an award of attorney's fees and costs and recoupment of certain salary and benefits paid, would remain open for determination by the Special Masters pursuant to Colo. RJD 36(g) and (h).

The specific issues before these Special Masters are a request for sanctions in the form of repayment of salary and benefits in an unspecified amount and a request for attorney's fees and costs in the amount of $120,719.50.

II. ARGUMENTS ALLEGED BY THE COMMISSION

The Commission recommends Judge Scipione be required to repay all his salary and state-paid benefits he received while on suspension. The Special Masters note the Commission never states the specific amount of salary and benefits being sought. The Commission makes several fact-based arguments in support of their recommendation which primarily center on Judge Scipione's disability proceedings.

First, the Commission states the timing and the circumstances surrounding Judge Scipione's disability claim are highly suspicious given he was still a presiding judge during the initial proceeding and had just finished presiding over a trial the day before the amended charges were entered. One day after amended charges were entered, Judge Scipione alleged he had a disability affecting his ability to proceed with the disciplinary proceedings. As a result, the proceedings were paused while another review was conducted into Judge Scipione's ability to undergo the disciplinary proceeding. The Commission argues Judge Scipione initiated the disability claim to needlessly delay the disciplinary proceedings, resulting in Judge Scipione being paid his salary and benefits for the additional six-month delay caused by the disability claim and generating additional attorney's fees and costs. Thus, the Commission asserts the disability claim was meritless and designed to delay the disciplinary proceedings.

Second, the Commission states the legal arguments made by Judge Scipione in support of his disability claim also suggest the claim was meritless. The Commission argues Judge Scipione's legal interpretation of the meaning of "disability" was so permissive that it was simply unreasonable. Specifically, Judge Scipione argued that “disability” was to include any mental or physical condition that adversely affects a judge’s ability to assist in his defense.

Third, considering the meritless disability claim, the Commission argues policy concerns dictate Judge Scipione should be punished, his conduct should be sanctioned to deter others from engaging in similar conduct, and the state’s treasury should be restored. The Commission states requiring Judge Scipione to repay all his salary and state-paid benefits received while on suspension is the only full and adequate remedy to eliminate the misconduct. In support of this argument, the Commission states that paid leave is appropriate for a judge who is suspended temporarily based on allegations of misconduct because the suspended judge should be presumed innocent. Further, the Commission claims RJD Rule 20 provides for a speedy resolution of allegations of misconduct and the catchall provision in RJD Rule 36(h) allows for salary recoupment when a judge needlessly delays their resignation, the disciplinary proceeding, or otherwise abuses the paid suspension rule. The Commission concludes that Judge Scipione’s meritless claim of disability was an abuse of the paid suspension rule and unnecessarily delayed the proceedings. Because Judge Scipione received salary and benefits during the period of the unnecessary delay, he should be required to pay back an amount equal to the value of his salary and benefits.

The Respondent disagrees with the assertions of the Commission and opposes the request to repay salary and benefits as well as attorney’s fees and costs.

III. STIPULATED FACTS

On January 19, 2023, Judge Scipione entered Stipulated Admissions to Judicial Misconduct in which Judge Scipione made the following admissions:

[1] Judge Scipione admits to knowingly engaging in conduct that violated Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 2.3, and 2.8 through his communications with and about Law Clerk 1 and Judicial Assistant 2. These communications included discussion of Judge Scipione’s sexual preferences and habits outside the workplace. Judge Scipione also inappropriately referred to his judicial assistant in derogatory terms.

[2] Judge Scipione admits to knowingly engaging in conduct that violates Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, and 2.9 by initiating ex parte communications with another district court judge and that judge's probate clerk in a different jurisdiction to expedite a probate matter involving Judge Scipione's father's estate.

[3] Judge Scipione admits to knowingly engaging in conduct that violates Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 2.3, 2.16, and 4.1(A)(11) by failing to disclose, on his judicial applications, an unreported intimate personal relationship with Judicial Assistant 1 while serving as a 18th Judicial District Court Magistrate. He also did not disclose this prior relationship during the disciplinary proceedings.

The Special Masters received the admissions but did not hear any evidence. Thus, the January 19, 2023 stipulated admissions are the only facts the Special Masters consider. The Special Masters note the violated Canons 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.3, 2.8, 2.9, 2.16, and 4.1(A)(11) are included verbatim in Respondent's stipulated admissions and include violations of avoiding any impropriety or appearance of impropriety, abusing the prestige of judicial office, engaging in harassment including sexual harassment, violating the requirement for judges to be dignified and courteous with others, initiating impermissible ex parte communication, and knowingly making false or misleading statements.

IV. LEGAL STANDARD

The Commission relies on the Colorado Constitution and Rules of Judicial Discipline to support their argument that the Colorado Supreme Court is permitted to sanction the misconduct and require Judge Scipione to repay the salary and benefits he received while on suspension. The Commission cites to Colorado Constitution Art. 6 § 23(3)(f) which states:

“Following receipt of a recommendation from the commission, the supreme court shall review the record of the proceedings on the law and facts and in its discretion may permit the introduction of additional evidence and shall order removal, retirement, suspension, censure, reprimand, or discipline, as it finds just and proper, or wholly reject the recommendation.”

Additionally, the Commission cites to RJD Rule 36(h):

“After considering the record of proceedings and the report of the special masters, in accordance with Article VI, Section 23(3)(e) of the Constitution, the Commission...shall recommend that the Supreme Court dismiss the charges or order one or more of the following sanctions...[The Supreme Court may] impose any other sanction or combination of sanctions, including dispositions under Rule 35, that the Court determines will curtail or eliminate the Judge's misconduct.”

Finally, the Commission argues RJD 34(a), which states the Commission may request the Colorado Supreme Court to “order temporary suspension of a judge, with pay, pending the resolution of preliminary or formal proceedings,” is not in conflict with their request for sanctions as the Supreme Court, pursuant to its plenary authority, can recoup the salary and benefits if the Court finds Judge Scipione abused the paid suspension rule.

The Special Masters rely on the Colorado Supreme Court’s analysis in In the Matter of Laurie A. Booras, 2019 CO 16. In Booras, the Colorado Supreme Court observed that RJD Rule 36 provides the possible sanctions for a judge’s misconduct are: (a) removal; (b) retirement; (c) suspension; (d) disability proceedings; (e) public reprimand or censure; (f) diversion or deferred discipline; (g) costs and fees; or (h) any other discipline that will curtail or eliminate the judge’s misconduct. Id. at ¶41. The Commission relies on (h), any other discipline that will curtail or eliminate the judge’s misconduct, to argue that Judge Scipione should be required to repay the value of his salary and benefits during the unnecessary delay of the discipline case.

In Booras, our Supreme Court, turned to the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct to consider the appropriate sanction for judicial misconduct:

“Although the black letter of the Rules is binding and enforceable, it is not contemplated that every transgression will result in the imposition of discipline. Whether discipline should be imposed should be determined through a reasonable and reasoned application of the Rules, and should depend upon factors such as the seriousness of the transgression, the facts and circumstances that existed at the time of the transgression, the extent of any pattern of improper activity, whether there have been previous violations, and the effect of the improper activity upon the judicial system or others.” Colo. Code of Judicial Conduct, Scope ¶ 6.

The Court imposed sanctions on Judge Booras because she used inappropriate racial epithets and revealed confidential information of the Court of Appeals about a division vote. Booras at ¶ 8.

Further, the Court found her misconduct impacted her ability to work with her colleagues and sit on any case involving ethnic minorities. Id. at ¶ 44. The Court found the violations of Rules 1.2, 3.1, and 3.5 of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct were serious enough to warrant the acceptance of Judge Borrás's resignation as a judge of the court of appeals, the imposition of public censure, and an order that Judge Booras be required to pay the Commission's costs in the proceeding. Id. at ¶ 45.

V. ANALYSIS

A) SANCTIONS

The Commission requests Judge Scipione pay an amount equivalent to his salary and benefits for period of delay caused by the disability proceedings. RJD 34(a) allows a judicial officer to be suspended with pay pending the resolution of the proceedings. Pay does not cease until a judicial officer is formally removed from their office under Colorado Constitution Article VI Section 23(3)(f). The catchall provision for sanctions under RJD 36(h) does not override the specific provisions authorizing suspension with pay under RJD 34(a) and Article VI Section 23(3)(f)'s mandate that salary ceases from the date of removal from office. Further, the Special Masters cannot make necessary findings to support the conclusion that the delay was unnecessary and that the claim of disability was essentially frivolous from the stipulations and the limited proceedings before the Special Masters. As mentioned, the Special Masters did not hear any evidence or make any findings. The proceeding before the Special Masters consisted entirely of case management and setting conferences. All disability proceedings were before a separate Disability Special Master. Any briefing on that issue was submitted to the Disability Special Master. The Special Masters have only the parties' stipulated factual allegations, representations and conclusions regarding the disability proceedings. Accordingly, the Special Masters do not further address this issue or make any recommendation.

B) ATTORNEY'S FEES AND COSTS

The Special Masters find it both appropriate and equitable pursuant to RJD 36(g) and Booras to award attorney's fees as requested by the Commission for the disciplinary portion of the proceedings. The Special Masters do not make a recommendation regarding attorney's fees for the disability proceedings for the same reasons we do not make a recommendation for sanctions for those proceedings.

Applying RJD 36(g), the Court in Booras established three main factors to determine whether the award of attorney's fees is appropriate. First, the Court looked at the seriousness of the transgressions and the circumstances existing at the time. Second, the Court looked at the extent of any pattern of improper activity and whether there were previous violations. Third, the Court looked at the effect of the violations on the judicial system or others. We proceed with the matter before us in the same manner.

First, the transgressions and circumstances as presented in the stipulated facts are serious. Judge Scipione is a judicial officer, appointed by the Governor and retained by the citizens of the 18th Jurisdiction. He had the benefit of having a law clerk work with him. Law clerks typically come to work for the Judicial Branch for an opportunity to work closely with a judicial officer, develop their understanding of the practice of law, and witness the demonstration of professionalism in the legal field. Frequently, judges become mentors for their law clerks and form lifetime professional relationships. Judge Scipione, while in his capacity as a judicial officer, decided to communicate his sexual preferences, an extremely personal matter, to the law clerk. A law clerk is a subordinate employee with far less power than a judge, who is a constitutional officer. This type of communication is a violation of personal boundaries by the one with all the power inflicted on a subordinate. A judicial officer is held to a high standard of professionalism and in maintaining appropriate interactions with all of those who are in our employ. In discussing sexual preferences with a law clerk, Judge Scipione abused his power as a judicial officer for his personal benefit. This abuse of the power dynamics between a judicial officer and a law clerk presented a grave risk of damaging the law clerk's perception of the judiciary and the judicial process. Further, Judge Scipione's derogatory reference about his judicial assistant, the employee who assists the Judge in nearly all judicial proceedings and processes, is disrespectful both to his judicial assistant and to the law clerk to whom he made the remark. Judge Scipione used his position as a judge in an attempt to expedite a personal probate matter pending before another judge. This is another abuse of the power of his office for his personal benefit. Finally, Judge Scipione had a consensual intimate relationship with a judicial assistant when he was a Magistrate but failed to honestly disclose this information during his application to become a judicial officer.

A Magistrate is also a judicial officer with professional obligations like that of a judge. An intimate relationship, even though consensual, with a judicial assistant is also an abuse of the power dynamics in the workplace. Although there is limited information from the stipulations about the circumstances existing at the time of these transgressions, the Special Masters nonetheless conclude they are all a serious nature.

Second, the judge's transgressions are repeated, and form a pattern of behavior. Judge Scipione's conduct formed a pattern of disregard for the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct, specifically Canon 1.1, Canon 1.2, Canon 1.3, Canon 2.3, Canon 2.8, Canon 2.9, Canon 2.16, and Canon 4.1(A)(11). Collectively there is a pattern that shows Judge Scipione abused his power for self-gain regardless of the barriers created by the Canons to prevent a judicial officer from doing so. Particularly Judge Scipione repeatedly violated Rule 1.2 when he acted in a pattern that did not promote public confidence in the independence, integrity, and the impartiality of the judiciary and failed to avoid impropriety. This was evidenced by each of the stipulated conduct he committed. Even within Rule 2.3 there was a pattern of improper activity, both in his behavior with the law clerk and with the way he spoke of Judicial Assistant 2. This violation is demonstrated in each of the choices he made which were independent of one another and decisions made over a long duration of time. Judge Scipione's behavior he engaged in with the law clerk is also a violation of Chief Justice Directive ("CJD") 08-06 which defines sexual harassment to include "unwanted sexual advances or propositions; unwelcome touching; ... repeated sexual comments; ... [and] the display in the workplace of sexually suggestive objects or pictures." All in all, the consensual intimate relationship with a judicial assistant, discourteous remark about a judicial assistant to a law clerk, discussion with a law clerk about his sexual preferences and habits and attempt to have another judge expedite a probate matter involving his father's estate are all things Judge Scipione did pursuing his own personal interests. Though the interests may differ, ranging from sexual or romantic to family business and whatever pleasure is taken from speaking ill of others, they are all very personal to him and were all pursued abusing his position as a judicial officer and occurred on multiple occasions over time.

Third, our consideration of the effect of the violations on the judicial system or others begins with the recognition that public trust is critical to the Judicial Branch. Judges make decisions that have a profound effect on the lives of people. The people's acceptance of the legitimacy of those decision depends on trusting that judicial officers are impartial and use their power in the public interest. Although the effect of Judge Scipione's conduct on public confidence in the judiciary is not quantified, it is negative and hardly negligible. And his conduct likely affected the law clerk and his judicial assistant and their impression of the judicial branch in general and judges in particular.

Although attorney fees are generally not recoverable, the exception is when they are specifically provided for by rule or statute. An award of reasonable attorney's fees and costs in this case is available pursuant to RJD 36(g). Because the Colorado Supreme Court has not distinguished attorney fees and costs from other possible sanctions, we have considered the relevant factors for sanctions generally in our analysis of whether attorney fees and costs should be imposed here. Although we are hindered in our analysis by the lack of detail provided in the stipulation, there is nonetheless sufficient information for us to make the above analysis. Similarly, we are hindered because the impact of the judge's conduct is not quantified, but we can nevertheless conclude that the impact is significant. For the reasons state above, we conclude that an award of attorney fees and costs would be appropriate.

The Commission has provided the necessary documentation to support the work invested in this process and it is appropriate and equitable for Judge Scipione to pay the attorney's fees and costs. Typically, when a statute providing for a fee award does not provide a specific definition of "reasonableness," the amount must be determined considering all the circumstances, based upon the time and effort reasonably expended by the prevailing party's attorney. Crow v. Penrose-St. Francis Healthcare Sys., 262 P.3d 991, 998 (Colo. App. 2011). "The party seeking attorney fees bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, entitlement to the award." Munoz v. Measner, 214 P.3d 510 (Colo. App. 2009).

Judge Scipione highlights that the Court in Booras only allowed for the payment of costs—not the payment of attorney's fees. The Special Masters note only costs were awarded in Booras because the Commission in Booras did not request attorney's fees and in Timbreza there was a stipulation to $20,658 in attorney's fees and costs. As mentioned, RJD 36(g) and our Supreme Court contemplate the award of attorney's fees based on the same considerations pertinent to other sanctions.

The Commission is seeking attorney's fees of $120,719.50. However, this includes $69,530 in attorney's fees for the disability portion of the proceedings which the Special Masters, for reasons previously explained, are not considering. With this amount removed from the analysis, that leaves $51,189.50 as the lodestar amount remaining for the disciplinary portion of the proceedings which is the focus of this analysis.

The Special Masters utilized the lodestar method in determining reasonable attorney's fees to be awarded. "The initial estimate of a reasonable attorney fee is reached by calculating the lodestar amount, which represents the number of hours reasonably expended multiplied by a reasonable hourly rate." Dubray v. Intertribal Bison Cooperative, 192 P.3d 604 (Colo. App. 2008). The lodestar method is presumptively reasonable. See Homeward Bound, Inc. v. Hissom Mem'l Ctr., 963 F.2d 1352, 1353 (10th Cir. 1992); Blanchard v. Bergeron, 489 U.S. 87, 85 (1989). Under the lodestar method, the Commission argues that Counsel Schulze is entitled to $375/hour, Counsel Padilla is entitled to $385/hour, and paralegal Reynard is entitled to $155/hour. The Commission argues these numbers are equitable under Balkind v. Telluride, which holds that salaried public attorneys are awarded fees based upon the prevailing market rate instead of a calculation focused solely on the attorney's current salary. 8 P.3d 581, 588 (Colo. App. 2000). The Commission seeks an award of $51,189.50 for attorney's fees for the disciplinary proceeding. Counsel for Judge Scipione argues the attorney fees should be assessed considering the actual salaries/hourly rates the Special Counsel earns. Counsel determines the salaries of the Commission's attorneys and paralegal by consulting with a website from a watchdog organization called "GovSalaries" which is a salary database for government employees. This website allows a user to put the name of a government employee into the site and will provide the annual salary of the government employee by each year of employment. Respondent asserts that an award of attorney's fees greater than the earnings of the attorneys and paralegal is disproportionately punitive. However, there is no guarantee that the website accurately captures the salaries of these individuals.

Once the lodestar amount is determined, the Special Masters are permitted to adjust that amount upwards or downwards. Balkind, 8 P.3d at 588. Balkind provides a multitude of factors that the Special Masters may consider when adjusting the loadstar amount. These include the nature of the litigation, the level of skill involved, the degree of attention given, the success or failure of the claims, the length of time necessary for effective representation, the existence or non-existence of a fee agreement, and awards ordered in similar cases.

The Special Masters accept the attorney and paralegal hours proposed by the Commission on the disciplinary proceedings as being reasonable upon review, specifically Paralegal Jennifer Reynard worked 103.80 hours on the disciplinary proceeding, Counsel Lucia Padilla worked 131.26 hours, and Counsel Leslie Schulze worked 136.51 hours. The salary the Commission has put forth is a reasonable hourly rate and, based on Balkind, the Special Masters do not find there is a basis to adjust the amount upwards or downwards. The nature of the litigation involved in this case and level of skill to handle the litigation is specialized and requires the attorneys and staff to dedicate attention to litigate their claims. The amount of time and hourly rate are reasonable. Thus, the Special Masters recommend the Commission be awarded $51,189.50 in attorney's fees.

Regarding costs, the request from the Commission is for $3,704.58 in costs which includes the portion of the case related to the disability proceedings. The disability proceedings were from August 4, 2022 through December 2, 2022. As previously explained, the Special Masters will not make recommendations on the disability portion but are willing to recommend costs related to the disciplinary proceedings. However, costs are not delineated in the information provided to the Special Masters. In their request, the Commission specifically states $270.73 in costs related to collecting medical records should be ordered as part of the disciplinary proceedings. There is no reasonable association between the medical related costs to the disciplinary action and when the Special Masters referred to the Exhibits provided, the amounts which support $3,704.58 were costs which did not have much explanation as to when they were incurred but rather when they were approved to be paid. These amounts in Exhibit 15 to the Commission's brief were paid between November 7, 2022 and November 29, 2022 which makes it unclear whether it was costs related to the disability proceedings. There was one cost paid in January 2023 but it was for Dr. Mack's examination which took place during the disability proceedings but was not paid until the disability proceedings had concluded. The date of payment does not conclusively indicate when the cost was incurred. The Special Masters find the Commission has not adequately provided a layout of the costs for the disciplinary portion of the proceedings specifically. Therefore, we do not recommend that costs be awarded to the Commission for the disciplinary portion of the proceedings.

VI. RECOMMENDATION

The Commission recommends Judge Scipione pay attorney's fees for the disciplinary proceedings as specified above.

At your request, I am writing to inform you that the Judicial Department, through the 18th Judicial District, has settled one of the claims filed with the EEOC or CCRD in connection with the conduct of former Judge John Scipione. The claim was settled for $85,000.00. The district paid the full amount and State Risk Management has agreed to pay half of the amount back to the 18th Judicial District. The other claimant's case is going to mediation later this month.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE'S RECOMMENDATION FOR PUBLIC DISCIPLINE AND AWARD OF FEES

Introduction and Procedural History

This is a judicial discipline case in which former Judge John Scipione admitted to knowingly violating eight rules of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (1) by abusing the prestige of his judicial office to seek, on at least three occasions, intimate relationships with lower-ranking or subordinate Judicial Department personnel, and (2) by abusing the prestige of his judicial office and engaging in ex parte communications with another judge, and that judge's clerk, to seek favorable treatment in a probate matter involving Scipione's father's estate. [Public Record, Stipulation dated 1/19/23, pp. 217-227]. As a result of Scipione's inappropriate attempts to seek intimate relationship with Judicial Department personnel, two sexual harassment lawsuits were filed against the 18th Judicial District, where Scipione was a judge. One case resulted in the 18th Judicial District paying a financial settlement of $85,000 and the other in the District paying a financial settlement of $45,000. [Public Record, pp. 254 & 275].

The litigation of this disciplinary case was both contentious and protracted. During the nearly one-year course of discovery and litigation (i.e. from October of 2021 to August of 2022), more evidence of Scipione's misconduct surfaced, which resulted in additional formal charges and, ultimately, Scipione's paid suspension from work. [Public Record, pp. 159-174, 178, 195-207]. Immediately after this court ordered Scipione's suspension in August of 2022, Scipione claimed disability under Colo. RJD 33.5, which halted the disciplinary proceedings against him indefinitely. [Private Record, pp. 1 - 4]. This claim of disability then created a second phase of litigation in which the parties litigated the merits of Scipione's alleged disability for four months between August of 2022 and December of 2022. [Private Record, pp. 8 - 130]. Ultimately, in December of 2022, Scipione stipulated that he could not prove he was disabled under Colo. RJD 33.5, which ended the disability phase of the litigation and restarted the disciplinary proceedings. [Private Record, pp. 128-130].

To finally resolve this case, in January of 2023, Scipione entered into a stipulation with the Commission which dictated that he would resign as a judge and that he will be publicly censured by this court for his misconduct. [Public Record, pp. 217-227]. The stipulation, however, provided for a panel of three special masters to decide the following issues: (1) whether Judge Scipione, per Colo. RJD 36(h), should be required to repay the salary and benefits he received while on suspension; (2) whether Scipione, per Colo. RJD 36(g), should be required to pay the Commission's legal fees for the disciplinary phase of the litigation, and at market rate; and (3) whether Scipione, per Colo. RJD 36(g), should be required to pay the Commission's legal fees for the disability phase of the litigation, and at market rate. [Id.].

After the parties briefed the above matters, the special masters made the following findings and recommendation. First, the special masters held that Scipione should not be required to repay his salary and benefits while on suspension, holding that the specificity of Colo. RJD 34(a) (requiring paid suspension) and Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(f) (requiring judge to be paid until formally removed) trumps the catch-all disciplinary authority provision of Colo. RJD 36(h), upon which the People relied in support of their claim. Second, the special masters held that, given the severity and repetitive nature of Scipione’s misconduct, he should be required to pay the Commission’s legal fees, at market rate, for the disciplinary phase of the litigation (totaling $51,189.50). Third, the special masters declined to rule on whether Scipione should be ordered to pay the Commission’s legal fees for the disability phase of litigation, holding that the record was not sufficiently complete to make findings on that issue. [Public Record, pp. 262-274].

The Commission’s Recommendation per Colo. RJD 37(a)

The Commission hereby recommends that this court adopt the stipulation for public censure, dated January 19, 2023, by which the parties agreed that Scipione will be publicly censured for violating Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.16, 2.3, 2.8, 2.9, and 4.1. The Commission also recommends that this court adopt the findings and recommendation of the special masters issued on August 24, 2023 – in particular, the finding that Scipione should pay the Commission’s $51,189.50 in legal fees for the disciplinary phase of the litigation, and at market rate, as required by well-accepted caselaw in this state.¹ See Balkind v. Telluride, 8 P.3d 581, 588 (Colo. App. 2000) (Salaried public attorneys are awarded fees based upon the prevailing market rate, not a calculation focused on the attorney’s salary.). The Commission does not here contest the special masters’ ruling regarding Scipione’s repayment of salary and benefits while he was suspended from work.

¹ This court must “uphold the special masters' findings of fact unless, after considering the record as a whole, [it] concludes that they are clearly erroneous or unsupported by substantial evidence.” Matter of Booras, 2019 CO 16, ¶ 18. Conclusions of law, on the other hand, are reviewed de novo. Id.

Moreover, the Commission now abandons its position that Scipione should be required to pay its legal fees for the disability phase of the litigation, but reserves the right to pursue such reimbursement in other cases, if appropriate.

The Record of Proceedings – One Public, One Private

Per Colo. RJD 6.5(a) and 37(c), the record of proceedings in this case must become public upon the filing of this recommendation with this court. However, a substantial portion of the record pertains to the disability phase of the litigation, and per Colo. RJD 33.5(i), all pleadings, briefs, and evidence related to the claim of disability must remain confidential. Given this, the Commission is filing two records with this court – one public, one private. To protect Scipione’s privacy rights, the Commission has conferred with Scipione’s counsel, and the parties have agreed what materials may be made part of the public record and what materials must remain private and filed under seal.

Conclusion

This is a serious case that involves a judge who, over the course of a decade, abused his status as a judge to seek inappropriate intimate relationships with judicial department employees and staff, some of them his direct subordinates. The harm he has caused to the public confidence in, and the integrity of, Colorado’s judiciary – though not easily quantifiable – is substantial. What is quantifiable, however, is the financial harm. Scipione’s conduct directly resulted in the payment of $130,000 in public funds to settle two sexual harassment lawsuits against him.

It is because of the severity of this misconduct that the Commission now recommends this court to order Scipione to pay the Commission's attorneys' fees from the disciplinary phase of the case. However, even though the Commission now abandons its request for fees in the disability phase of the case, it urges this court to nevertheless review the briefs filed by the People in support of fees in the disability phase. [Private Record, pp. 131, 143, 347, and 384]. This is because, ultimately, this court's decision on fees, per Colo. RJD 36(g), is an equitable one. Thus, it should consider not only the nature of the misconduct but the manner in which Scipione chose to litigate this case, including the merits of his various claims and defenses in both the disciplinary and disability phases of the case. The Commission is confident that, upon a full review of the record, this court will deem it appropriate to adopt the following recommendations: (1) that when judicial misconduct is as serious and prolonged as it is here, an award of fees is appropriate, (2) that when dubious litigation tactics are employed for strategic advantage, an award of fees is appropriate, and (3) that when fees are awarded, they should be charged at market rate, consistent with the precedent established in Balkind v. Telluride, 8 P.3d at 588, which held that salaried public attorneys are awarded fees based upon the prevailing market rate, not a calculation focused on the attorney's salary.

For the foregoing reasons, the Commission hereby requests this court to adopt the findings of fact and conclusions of law in the special masters' recommendation for discipline, dated August 24, 2023. The Commission also recommends that this court adopt the stipulation for public censure, dated January 19, 2023, by which the parties agreed that Scipione will be publicly censured for violating Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.16, 2.3, 2.8, 2.9, and 4.1.

COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE'S UPDATED RECOMMENDATION FOR PUBLIC DISCIPLINE AND AWARD OF FEES

Introduction and Procedural History

This is a judicial discipline case in which former Judge John Scipione admitted to knowingly violating eight rules of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (1) by abusing the prestige of his judicial office to seek, on at least three occasions, intimate relationships with lower-ranking or subordinate Judicial Department personnel, and (2) by abusing the prestige of his judicial office and engaging in ex parte communications with another judge, and that judge's clerk, to seek favorable treatment in a probate matter involving Scipione's father's estate. [Public Record, Stipulation dated 1/19/23, pp. 217-227]. As a result of Scipione's inappropriate attempts to seek intimate relationship with Judicial Department personnel, two sexual harassment lawsuits were filed against the 18th Judicial District, where Scipione was a judge. One case resulted in the 18th Judicial District paying a financial settlement of $85,000 and the other in the District paying a financial settlement of $45,000. [Public Record, pp. 254 & 275].

The litigation of this disciplinary case was both contentious and protracted. During the nearly one-year course of discovery and litigation (i.e. from October of 2021 to August of 2022), more evidence of Scipione's misconduct surfaced, which resulted in additional formal charges and, ultimately, Scipione's paid suspension from work. [Public Record, pp. 159-174, 178, 195-207]. Immediately after this court ordered Scipione's suspension in August of 2022, Scipione claimed disability under Colo. RJD 33.5, which halted the disciplinary proceedings against him indefinitely. [Private Record, pp. 1 - 4]. This claim of disability then created a second phase of litigation in which the parties litigated the merits of Scipione's alleged disability for four months between August of 2022 and December of 2022. [Private Record, pp. 8 - 130]. Ultimately, in December of 2022, Scipione stipulated that he could not prove he was disabled under Colo. RJD 33.5, which ended the disability phase of the litigation and restarted the disciplinary proceedings. [Private Record, pp. 128-130].

To finally resolve this case, in January of 2023, Scipione entered into a stipulation with the Commission which dictated that he would resign as a judge and that he will be publicly censured by this court for his misconduct. [Public Record, pp. 217-227]. The stipulation, however, provided for a panel of three special masters to decide the following issues: (1) whether Judge Scipione, per Colo. RJD 36(h), should be required to repay the salary and benefits he received while on suspension; (2) whether Scipione, per Colo. RJD 36(g), should be required to pay the Commission's legal fees for the disciplinary phase of the litigation, and at market rate; and (3) whether Scipione, per Colo. RJD 36(g), should be required to pay the Commission's legal fees for the disability phase of the litigation, and at market rate. [Id.].

After the parties briefed the above matters, the Special Masters made the following findings and recommendation. First, the Special Masters held that Scipione should not be required to repay his salary and benefits while on suspension, holding that the specificity of Colo. RJD 34(a) (requiring paid suspension) and Colo. Const. Art. VI, § 23(3)(f) (requiring judge to be paid until formally removed) trumps the catch-all disciplinary authority provision of Colo. RJD 36(h), upon which the People relied in support of their claim. Second, the Special Masters held that, given the severity and repetitive nature of Scipione’s misconduct, he should be required to pay the Commission’s legal fees, at market rate, for the disciplinary phase of the litigation (totaling $51,189.50). Third, the Special Masters declined to rule on whether Scipione should be ordered to pay the Commission’s legal fees for the disability phase of litigation, holding that the record was not sufficiently complete to make findings on that issue. [Public Record, pp. 262-274].

The Commission’s Recommendation per Colo. RJD 37(a)

The Commission hereby recommends that this court adopt the stipulation for public censure, dated January 19, 2023, by which the parties agreed that Scipione will be publicly censured for violating Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.16, 2.3, 2.8, 2.9, and 4.1. The Commission also recommends that this court adopt the findings and recommendation of the Special Masters issued on August 24, 2023 – in particular, the finding that Scipione should pay the Commission’s $51,189.50 in legal fees for the disciplinary phase of the litigation, and at market rate, as required by well-accepted caselaw in this state.¹ See Balkind v. Telluride, 8 P.3d 581, 588 (Colo. App. 2000) (Salaried public attorneys are awarded fees based upon the prevailing market rate, not a calculation focused on the attorney’s salary.). The Commission does not here contest the Special Masters’ ruling regarding Scipione’s repayment of salary and benefits while he was suspended from work.

¹ This court must “uphold the special masters' findings of fact unless, after considering the record as a whole, [it] concludes that they are clearly erroneous or unsupported by substantial evidence.” Matter of Booras, 2019 CO 16, ¶ 18. Conclusions of law, on the other hand, are reviewed de novo. Id.

Moreover, the Commission now abandons its position that Scipione should be required to pay its legal fees for the disability phase of the litigation, but reserves the right to pursue such reimbursement in other cases, if appropriate.

The Record of Proceedings – One Public, One Private

Per Colo. RJD 6.5(a) and 37(c), the record of proceedings in this case must become public upon the filing of this recommendation with this court. However, a substantial portion of the record pertains to the disability phase of the litigation, and per Colo. RJD 33.5(i), all pleadings, briefs, and evidence related to the claim of disability must remain confidential. Given this, the Commission is filing two records with this court – one public, one private. To protect Scipione’s privacy rights, the Commission has conferred with Scipione’s counsel, and the parties have agreed what materials may be made part of the public record and what materials must remain private and filed under seal.

Conclusion

This is a serious case that involves a judge who, over the course of a decade, abused his status as a judge to seek inappropriate intimate relationships with judicial department employees and staff, some of them his direct subordinates. The harm he has caused to the public confidence in, and the integrity of, Colorado’s judiciary – though not easily quantifiable – is substantial. What is quantifiable, however, is the financial harm. Scipione’s conduct directly resulted in the payment of $130,000 in public funds to settle two sexual harassment lawsuits against him.

It is because of the severity of this misconduct that the Commission now recommends this court to order Scipione to pay the Commission's attorneys' fees from the disciplinary phase of the case. However, even though the Commission now abandons its request for fees in the disability phase of the case, it urges this court to nevertheless review the briefs filed by the parties in the fee dispute in the disability phase. [Private Record, pp. 131, 143, 315, 326, 347, and 384]. This is because, ultimately, this court's decision on fees, per Colo. RJD 36(g), is an equitable one. Thus, it should consider the nature of the misconduct, including the merits of the various claims and defenses in both the disciplinary and disability phases of the case. The Commission is confident that, upon a full review of the record, this court will deem it appropriate to adopt the following recommendations: (1) that when judicial misconduct is as serious and prolonged as it is here, an award of fees is appropriate, and (2) that when fees are awarded, they should be charged at market rate, consistent with the precedent established in Balkind v. Telluride, 8 P.3d at 588, which held that salaried public attorneys are awarded fees based upon the prevailing market rate, not a calculation focused on the attorney's salary.

For the foregoing reasons, the Commission hereby requests this court to adopt the findings of fact and conclusions of law in the Special Masters' recommendation for discipline, dated August 24, 2023. The Commission also recommends that this court adopt the stipulation for public censure, dated January 19, 2023, by which the parties agreed that Scipione will be publicly censured for violating Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.16, 2.3, 2.8, 2.9, and 4.1.

STIPULATED DISPOSITION

The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline, having commenced disciplinary proceedings to consider allegations of misconduct by Respondent, hereby stipulates with Respondent to the following Findings of Fact, in lieu of the Court appointing three special masters to issue findings and conclusions following a hearing in formal proceedings pursuant to Colo. RJD 26 and 32:

1. Respondent has been serving as a 20 per cent part-time Baca County Judge.
2. On January 14, 2018, Respondent, in Case No. 2018T54, was charged with Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol in neighboring Prowers County. Upon her arrest, her preliminary blood alcohol content was 0.137. According to the Arrest Report, Respondent told the two arresting officers that she was a judge and asked if they could just take her home. Respondent asserts she did not make this statement.
3. On November 9, 2018, Respondent entered a plea of guilty to DUI and Careless Driving. She was fined $100 for Careless Driving. On the DUI charge, she received a deferred sentence of two years involving probation, community service, and abstention from alcohol. She served a driver's license revocation followed by a requirement for two years to operate only those vehicles equipped with an ignition interlock device that would monitor her blood alcohol content.

4. On August 17, 2019, Respondent was arrested in Kansas and charged with Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol. In noting the restriction on her driver's license, the arresting officer also charged her with failure to have an interlock device operating in her vehicle. Her preliminary blood alcohol test registered 0.164. The charges were filed in Greeley County Case No. 2019TR89.
5. In light of concerns about whether litigants might question Respondent's impartiality and fairness, having been charged with DUI, the Chief Judge in the 15th Judicial District ordered that no DUI or probation revocation cases would be assigned to her.
6. On May 7, 2020, with a senior judge from outside Prowers County presiding over the proceedings, Respondent admitted that her arrest in Kansas violated the terms of the Prowers County deferred sentence. The Judge then revoked her deferred sentence and entered a conviction for DUI. She was sentenced to 48 hours of public service, alcohol evaluation, probation, and payment of fines and fees of totaling $1924.50.
7. On June 8, 2020, Respondent pleaded guilty and was convicted under Kansas law of Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol Second Offense. On June 22, 2020, she was sentenced to twelve months of supervised probation; 90 days in jail, which was suspended upon serving 48 consecutive hours of confinement and 120 hours of house arrest; and ordered to pay fines and fees of $1,903.00.

Based on the foregoing Findings of Fact, the Commission and the Respondent agree that:

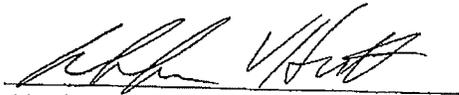

- a. Respondent shall serve a voluntary temporary suspension from her judicial duties, with pay, pursuant to Colo. RJD 34(c), from January 1, 2021 through January 31, 2021;
- b. Respondent shall retire from her judicial office as of February 1, 2021;
- c. The Commission, within 7 days after the filing of these Stipulated Findings of Fact, shall file with the Court, pursuant to Colo. RJD 37(a), a Recommendation to the Supreme Court that in addition to the suspension and retirement included in this stipulation that the Court publically censure Respondent; and
- d. Respondent shall within 10 days following the filing of the Recommendation submit her recommendation that the additional sanction should be a private reprimand, and the Commission may file a Reply within 5 days.
- e. The Court shall determine whether the additional sanction shall be that recommended by the Commission or by Respondent but impose no sanction less than proposed by Respondent nor greater than recommended by the Commission.

Respondent waives her rights to a hearing in formal proceedings and an appeal.

Done this 4th day of December, 2020.

RECOMMENDATION FOR SUSPENSION, PUBLIC CENSURE, AND RETIREMENT

Rather than incur further delay through a trial in formal proceedings, the parties have agreed to submit this matter to the Court in accordance with the Stipulated Disposition of December 4, 2020, to be followed by the Commission's Recommendation for public censure, Respondent's filing of Exceptions to the Recommendation, and a Reply by the Commission.

Accordingly, the Commission hereby Recommends that Respondent be publicly censured for driving under the influence of alcohol in Colorado in 2018 and in Kansas in 2019, and for asking the two arresting officers in the Colorado case to just take her home because of her status as a judge. Her convictions are in violation of Canon Rule 1.1, which requires a judge to comply with the law; and Canon Rule 1.2, which requires a judge to act at all times in a manner promotes confidence in the judiciary and avoids "impropriety and the appearance of impropriety." Her requests of the two officers are in violation of Canon Rule 1.3, which prohibits a judge from abusing the prestige of judicial office for the judge's personal interests.

In the Stipulated Disposition, Respondent asserts that she did not ask the officers to take her home. However, in Incident Report #180101 provided by the Prowers County Sheriff's Office, Officer Jason Freouf reported that: "Debra informed me she was a Baca County Judge" and "asked why I was trying to ruin her life and career." She told him again that she was a judge and asked if he "could just take her home." In the same report, Officer Colton Green said: "Debra also asked several times why we wanted to end her career and explained multiple times that she was a Judge in Baca County."

Precedent for the Court's issuance of a public censure is provided in Supreme Court Case No.19SA260 concerning Judge Lance Timbreza's conviction for driving while ability impaired. The Court censured the judge:

. . . for failing to maintain the high standards of judicial conduct required of a judge; for violating Canon Rule 1.1, which requires a judge to comply with the law; and for violating Canon Rule 1.2, which requires that a judge at all times shall act in a manner that promotes public confidence in the judiciary and avoids impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

The Commission has conferred with Respondent's counsel about the Commission's Recommendation. Counsel has notified the Commission that he intends to file Exceptions to the Recommendation, as provided in Colo. RJD 38. In the Stipulated Findings of Fact, the parties have agreed to a shortened timetable for Exceptions and any Reply filed by the Commission, in order to expedite the Supreme Court's disposition of this case before January 1, 2021.

In summary, it is the Recommendation of the Commission for the Court to order:

1. That Respondent be voluntarily SUSPENDED, with pay, pursuant to Colo. RJD 34(a) and (e), from her judicial duties from January 1, 2021 through January 31, 2021.
2. That Respondent be PUBLICLY CENSURED by the Court's written order, in accordance with Colo. RJD 36(e), for the following violations of the Canons:
 - a) Canon Rule 1.1: Failing to comply with the law by driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol in Prowers County, Colorado in 2018 and in Greeley County, Kansas in 2019.
 - b) Canon Rule 1.2: Failing to "act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary" and to "avoid the appearance of impropriety."
 - c) Canon Rule 1.3: Abusing the prestige of judicial office by identifying herself as a judge and asking the two arresting officers in the Prowers County case to just take her home.
3. And, as provided in Colo. RJD 36(b), that Respondent be RETIRED from judicial office, effective February 1, 2021.

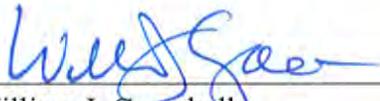

Respectfully submitted this 8th day of December 2020.

STATEMENT OF CHARGES

THIS STATEMENT OF CHARGES is filed by Complainant in Formal Proceedings pursuant to the authority of Rules 4(a)(1), 5(a)(1) &

(a)(4), 16(b)(4), and 18(a) of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline (herein, “Rules”), and it is alleged as follows:

I. BACKGROUND & JURISDICTION

1. Respondent Debra M. Gunkel (“Respondent”) is a Judge of the County Court of Baca County, serving in a twenty percent part-time position. Respondent was appointed to the bench in 2010 and was retained by the voters of Baca County in 2014 and 2018.

2. At all times pertinent to this Statement of Charges, Respondent was serving in her capacity as a Judge of the County Court of Baca County.

3. Respondent is subject to the jurisdiction of the Colorado Supreme Court and the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline.

4. Respondent’s conduct is governed by the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (“Code”).

II. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

A. Prowers County DUI Arrest

5. On the evening of January 14, 2018, deputies of the Prowers County Sheriff’s Office arrested Respondent after encountering her in her vehicle on the side of a county road in Prowers County outside Lamar, Colorado.

6. Respondent had appeared to be asleep and then confused in her vehicle, and the arresting deputy reported a smell of alcohol when he was speaking with her.

7. Respondent initially denied having consumed any alcohol, and then admitted to drinking “two beers.” When asked how large the beers were, she responded “a 12 pack.” Respondent failed a field sobriety examination administered by the responding deputies, and her blood alcohol content registered at .137 in a preliminary breath test administered in the field.

8. During Respondent’s interactions with the sheriff’s deputies called to the scene, she repeatedly stated that she was a county judge in Baca County, and she requested that they take her home. Both deputies reported that Respondent repeatedly asked them why they were trying to ruin her life and career.

9. Respondent was charged with one misdemeanor count of driving under the influence of alcohol in violation of C.R.S. § 42-4-1301(1)(a), as well as two traffic infractions for careless driving and failure to display proof of insurance.

10. On November 9, 2018, Respondent entered guilty pleas on the DUI and careless driving offenses, and the proof of insurance charge was voluntarily dismissed.

11. Respondent received a $100 fine for the careless driving infraction, and a deferred sentence of two years of probation, community service, and abstention from alcohol.

12. Respondent served a driver’s license revocation, followed by a two-year requirement to operate only vehicles equipped with an ignition interlock device that would monitor her blood alcohol content.

B. Greeley County (Kan.) DUI Arrest

13. Nine months after her sentencing on the Prowers County charges, on the evening of August 17, 2019, Respondent was arrested again on a DUI charge, this time in Greeley County, Kansas.

14. The arresting sheriff's deputy reported that he clocked Respondent driving 78 miles per hour in a 65 miles per hour zone of a state highway in Tribune, Kansas. The deputy indicated that Respondent did not immediately pull over when he signaled her to stop, and that while she continued to drive for another two miles, she swerved over both the white and yellow lines of her traveling lane.

15. The arresting deputy stated that Respondent spoke with slurred words and that there was a strong odor of consumed alcohol coming from Respondent. He indicated that on the passenger seat next to Respondent were two empty cans, and a third partially full can, of Wyldewood Cellar Wylde Kooler elderberry wine (a beverage with 7.1% alcohol by volume). He also observed that the car Respondent was driving was not equipped with an ignition interlock device.

16. Respondent registered a .167 blood alcohol content through a preliminary breath test administered in the field, and she was then arrested on charges of driving under the influence of alcohol, driving a vehicle without a required interlock device, transporting an open container of alcohol, and exceeding the maximum posted speed limit.

17. One month after her arrest, on September 16, 2019, the chief judge of the 15th Judicial District issued an Order of Reassignment directing that Respondent no longer be assigned to hear any alcohol-related driving offenses or any probation revocation complaints. The order also directed that Respondent no longer be assigned to review warrantless arrest affidavits, affidavits for arrest warrants, and search warrants completed in connection with such offenses.

C. Prowers County Sentencing

18. On May 7, 2020, before a senior judge from outside the 15th Judicial District sitting by designation in Prowers County, Respondent admitted that her arrest in Kansas violated the terms of her earlier deferred sentence in the Prowers County DUI case.

19. Upon that admission, Respondent's deferred sentence was revoked, and Respondent was sentenced to 48 hours community service, alcohol evaluations, probation, and payment of fines and costs of $1,924.50.

20. The Clerk of Court of the Prowers County Combined Courts transmitted a certified copy of the sentencing order in Respondent's first DUI case to the Commission on May 8, 2020.

D. Greeley County (Kan.) Sentencing

21. On June 8, 2020, Respondent pleaded guilty and was convicted in Greeley County District Court on a misdemeanor charge of driving under the influence of alcohol – second offense.

22. On June 22, 2020, Respondent was sentenced to 90 days in jail, 12 months of supervised probation, and payment of fines and costs of $1,903.00. Respondent's jail sentence was suspended upon completion of 48 consecutive hours in jail and 120 hours of electronically monitored house arrest.

23. The terms of Respondent's supervised probation subject her to random breath, blood, and urine testing, and prohibit her from consuming any alcoholic beverages or illegal controlled substances or being present in any place where such beverages or substances are sold, served, or consumed.

E. Proceedings Before the Commission

24. On December 4, 2020, Respondent entered a stipulation with the Commission whereby she agreed to serve a one-month suspension with pay from January 1, 2021, to January 31, 2021, and to retire from her judicial office as of February 1, 2021.

25. Pursuant to that stipulation, on December 8, 2020, the Commission filed a recommendation with the Colorado Supreme Court seeking entry of public censure against Respondent with an order imposing the stipulated sanction of one-month suspension with pay and retirement from judicial office.

26. On December 11, 2020, the Court entered an order rejecting the parties' Stipulated Disposition and indicating that the Court would reject any disposition that contemplates voluntary suspension with pay.

27. Thereupon, the Commission directed that Formal Proceedings be commenced against Respondent pursuant to CRJD Rule 18(a).

CHARGE I CCJC Rule 1.1(A) Failure to Comply with the Law

28. Paragraphs 1 through 27 are incorporated here as though set forth in full.

29. The Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct Rule 1.1(A) provides that at all times "A judge shall comply with the law." CCJC Rule 1.1(A). The Code further specifies that conduct which constitutes a violation of a criminal law, unless the violation is minor, constitutes a violation of the requirement that a judge must comply with the law. CCJC Rule 1.1(B)

30. Through her conduct as described above, particularly in her driving a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol in Prowers County in 2018 and in Greeley County (Kansas) in 2019, Respondent failed to comply with the applicable law of Colorado and Kansas.

31. Respondent's violations of the criminal laws of Colorado and Kansas were not minor in that in both instances, Respondent's operation of a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol resulted in careless driving and created a risk of accident and injury to others who might have been on the road at the time Respondent was driving.

32. Respondent's conduct violated CCJC Rule 1.1(A).

CHARGE II
CCJC Rule 1.2

Failure to Act in a Manner that Promotes Confidence in the Judiciary and Avoids the Appearance of Impropriety

33. Paragraphs 1 through 27 are incorporated here as though set forth in full.

34. The Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct Rule 1.2 provides that "A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety." CCJC Rule 1.2.

35. The Comments to Rule 1.2 establish that the Rule's requirements apply to both the professional and personal conduct of a judge and that "Impropriety occurs when the conduct compromises the ability of the judge to carry out judicial responsibilities with integrity, impartiality and competence. Actual improprieties include violations of law, court rules or provisions of this Code. The test for appearance of impropriety is whether the conduct would create in reasonable minds a perception that the judge violated this Code or engaged in other conduct that reflects adversely on the judge's honesty, impartiality, temperament, or fitness to serve as a judge.” CCJC Rule 1.2 cmts [1] & [5].

36. Through her conduct described above, both in her violations of law in both Colorado and Kansas, and her invocations of her status as a judge during her arrest in Colorado, Respondent acted in a manner that failed to promote confidence in the judiciary and failed to avoid impropriety in her personal conduct.

37. Respondent’s conduct violated CCJC Rule 1.2

CHARGE III
CCJC Rule 1.3

Failure to Avoid Abuse of the Prestige of Judicial Office

38. Paragraphs 1 through 27 are incorporated here as though set forth in full.

39. The Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct Rule 1.3 provides that “A judge shall not abuse the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal or economic interests of the judge or others, or allow others to do so.” CCJC Rule 1.3.

40. The Comments to Rule 1.3 establish that “It is improper for a judge to use or attempt to use his or her position to gain personal advantage or deferential treatment of any kind. For example, it would be improper for a judge to allude to his or her judicial status to gain favorable treatment in encounters with traffic officials.” CCJC Rule 1.3 cmt [1].

41. Through her conduct described above, particularly her repeated invocation during the Prowers County traffic stop in 2018 of her status as a judge and her request that the responding deputies take her home rather than booking her on a DUI charge, Respondent attempted to use her position as a county judge in a neighboring county to gain favorable treatment from the Prowers County Sheriff's Office.

42. Respondent's conduct violated CCJC Rule 1.3.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Complainant requests the following relief:

- (a) That the Supreme Court appoint three special masters, pursuant to Colo. Const. Article VI, section 23(e), to conduct Formal Proceedings in this matter;
- (b) That the Commission recommend to the Colorado Supreme Court, upon appropriate findings by the special masters, that appropriate sanctions including public censure and retirement from judicial office be imposed on Judge Debra M. Gunkel for her misconduct;
- (c) That the Court assess Respondent, pursuant to Rule 36(g), for costs and fees incurred by the Commission and the special masters in Formal Proceedings; and,
- (d) That the Commission recommend such other and further relief as it deems appropriate.

Mitigation Factors

RJD 18(a)(1) mandates that this Answer and Response include “mitigation factors” for the consideration of the Special Masters and the Court. Accordingly, Judge Gunkel provides the following information concerning such mitigation:

1. Judge Gunkel has been diagnosed with the diseases of alcoholism and depression as well as an anxiety disorder. Both of her DUI convictions are the direct result of these disorders.

2. Judge Gunkel was not diagnosed with Depression or with Alcohol Abuse Disorder at the time of her first DUI case. While she underwent a psychological evaluation following that conviction, she was not found to be suffering from either of those disorders at that time. The depression appeared during the time that she was on the deferred judgment for the first DUI and resulted in a relapse in drinking. That relapse occurred the week that she committed the second DUI offense in August of 2019.

3. It was in the weeks following that second offense that Judge Gunkel was diagnosed with Depression and began treatment for it. Since beginning to take medication for depression and anxiety and learning other coping mechanisms from her therapist her conditions have improved considerably and she has maintained complete abstinence from alcohol for 18 months. Judge Gunkel’s Depression, Alcohol Abuse and Anxiety disorders were all exacerbated at the time of her relapse in August of 2019 by her husband’s stage 4 cancer, his decision not to undertake additional chemotherapy, and his reactions to his illness.

4. There is medical evidence corroborating Judge Gunkel’s disorders as well as her sustained recovery and rehabilitation from them. Immediately upon recognizing her symptoms, and receiving the diagnoses of Depression Disorder, Anxiety Disorder and Alcohol Abuse Disorder, Judge Gunkel undertook both individual and group therapy, began taking prescribed medication and made lifestyle changes recommended by her treating physician and therapists that have resulted in recovery that has been sustained for 18 months.

5. Judge Gunkel's disorders have never interfered with her ability to perform her judicial duties. Except for the two DUI offenses, the disorders have not impacted her ability to abide by the Code of Judicial Conduct.

6. Judge Gunkel has no prior disciplinary record of any kind and her offenses had no dishonest, selfish or financial motive but were the direct result of her mental disorders. Monitoring of her continued treatment and recovery during her remaining tenure in office will insure that she does not reoffend and that the Commission on Judicial Discipline is promptly notified of any relapse.

Prayer for Relief

WHEREFORE, Judge Gunkel requests that:

1. That the Commission's recommendation of public censure and retirement be rejected;
2. That "Diversion or Deferred Discipline" pursuant to RJD 36(f) or "Other Discipline" pursuant to RJD 36(h) be deemed the proper consequence of her behavior;
3. That costs and fees not be imposed against her.

Respectfully submitted,

RECHT KORNFELD, P.C.

COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATION TO THE SUPREME COURT

Based on the Stipulated Disposition of May 11, 2021 between the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline and County Judge Debra M. Gunkel, which has been approved by her counsel and attached hereto, and in which Judge Gunkel has acknowledged her misconduct as described in the Stipulation; waived her right to a hearing in formal proceedings; agreed to accept a public censure; and agreed to retire from judicial office within three days following the filing the Stipulation with the Court;

The Commission hereby RECOMMENDS, pursuant to Colo. RJD 37(c), that the Colorado Supreme Court approve the Stipulation; and, in accordance with Colo. RJD 36(e), publicly censure Judge Gunkel for the following violations of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct:

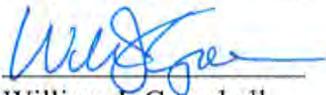

1. In being arrested and charged under the laws of Colorado in 2018 and Kansas in 2019 that prohibit driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol and being convicted of said offenses in both states in 2020, Judge Gunkel's conduct failed to comply with Canon Rule 1.1, which requires a judge to comply with the law, including traffic offenses that involve the use of alcohol or drugs.
2. Her arrest and convictions in Colorado and Kansas were contrary to the provisions of Canon Rule 1.2, which requires a judge to act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the judiciary and avoids impropriety or the appearance of impropriety.

3. In telling the arresting officers in each state that she was a judge and requesting the Colorado officers to “just take her home” and requesting the Kansas officers to ask her husband to “come get her,” her conduct was contrary to Canon Rule 1.3 which prohibits a judge from attempting to use the prestige of judicial office for a personal benefit.

The Commission further recommends that the Court approve Judge Gunkel’s retirement to be effective three days following the filing of the Stipulation with the Court; dismiss these formal proceedings that are scheduled for trial before the Special Masters on May 18 and 19, 2021; approve the Commission’s waiver of its fees and costs incurred in this matter; and approve the Judge’s waiver of an appeal and further proceedings.

DATED this 11th day of May, 2021.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT 2 East 14th Avenue Denver, Colorado 80203
Original Proceeding in Judicial Discipline, from the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline, No. 18-173
In re the matter of DEBRA GUNKEL, The People of the State of Colorado, COMPLAINANT, v. Debra Gunkel, a Judge of the County Court of Baca County, RESPONDENT.	^ COURT USE ONLY ^ Case No. 2020SA409
STIPULATED DISPOSITION

The Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline, having commenced disciplinary proceedings to consider allegations of misconduct by Respondent, hereby stipulates with Respondent Debra M. Gunkel to the following Findings of Fact, in order to resolve the issues in this matter prior to hearing in the formal proceedings commenced pursuant to Colo. RJD 26 and 32.

The parties agree to the following Findings of Fact:

1. Respondent has served as a 20 per cent part-time Baca County Judge.
2. On January 14, 2018, Respondent, in Case No. 2018T54, was charged with Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol in neighboring Prowers County. Upon her arrest, her preliminary blood alcohol content was 0.137. According to the Arrest Report, Respondent told the two arresting officers that she was a judge and asked if they could just take her home.

3. On November 9, 2018 Respondent entered a plea of guilty to DUI and Careless Driving. She was fined $100 for Careless Driving. On the DUI charge, she received a deferred sentence of two years involving probation, community service, and abstention from alcohol. She served a driver's license revocation followed by a requirement for two years to operate only those vehicles equipped with an ignition interlock device that would monitor her blood alcohol content.
4. On August 19, 2019, Respondent was arrested in Kansas and charged with Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol. In noting the restriction on her driver's license, the arresting officer also charged her with failure to have an interlock device operating in her vehicle. Her preliminary blood alcohol test registered 0.164. According to the sheriff's narrative supporting his arrest, Respondent stated that she was a judge and asked if her husband could come get her. The charges were filed in Greeley County Case No. 2019TR89.
5. In light of concerns about whether litigants might question Respondent's impartiality and fairness, having been charged with DUI, the Chief Judge in the 15th Judicial District ordered that no DUI or probation revocation cases would be assigned to her.
6. On May 7, 2020, with a senior judge from outside Prowers County presiding over the proceedings, Respondent admitted that her arrest in Kansas violated the terms of the Prowers County deferred sentence. The Judge then revoked her deferred sentence and entered a conviction for DUI. She was sentenced to 48 hours of public service, alcohol evaluation, probation, and payment of fines and fees totaling $1924.50.
7. On June 8, 2020, Respondent pleaded guilty and was convicted under Kansas law of Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol Second Offense. On June 22, 2020, she was sentenced to twelve months of supervised probation; 90 days in jail, which was suspended upon servicing 48 consecutive hours of confinement and 120 hours of house arrest; and ordered to pay fines and fees of $1903.00.

Based on the foregoing Findings of Fact, the Commission and Respondent agree that:

- A. Respondent shall retire from her judicial office no later than three days following the filing of this Stipulated Disposition with the Supreme Court;
- B. Respondent will not object to the Commission's filing of a recommendation to the Supreme Court that the Court publicly censure Respondent;
- C. Upon approval by the Supreme Court of this Stipulated Disposition, the Commission will dismiss its formal proceedings against Respondent, and will waive payment of fees and costs.
- D. Respondent waives any remaining right to a hearing in formal proceedings and an appeal.

Dated this 11th day of May, 2021.

AN ACT

HB 4009

Relating to a day to honor Minoru Yasui; and declaring an emergency.

Whereas 100 years ago, in 1916, Minoru Yasui was born in Hood River, Oregon, to Masuo and Shidzuyo Yasui, Japanese immigrants, making him a second generation Japanese American, or Nisei; and

Whereas in 1933, Minoru Yasui graduated salutatorian from Hood River High School, and in 1937 graduated Phi Beta Kappa from the University of Oregon and was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the United States Army; and

Whereas in 1939, Minoru Yasui became the first Japanese American graduate of the University of Oregon School of Law and the first Japanese American member of the Oregon State Bar; and

Whereas on March 28, 1942, Minoru Yasui violated a military curfew imposed under Executive Order 9066—the order that led to the incarceration of 120,000 Japanese Americans during World War II; and

Whereas Minoru Yasui deliberately challenged that curfew by walking the streets of Portland, Oregon, and then turned himself in to the Portland police so that he could test the constitutionality of such discriminatory regulations; and

Whereas Minoru Yasui lost his case in the United States District Court for the District of Oregon and spent nine months in solitary confinement in a six-foot-by-eight-foot cell in the Multnomah County Jail awaiting his appeal to the United States Supreme Court; and

Whereas the United States Supreme Court ruled against Minoru Yasui in regard to the military curfew, and he was released from jail only to be incarcerated in the Minidoka War Relocation Center in Idaho; and

Whereas after his release from Minidoka in 1944, Minoru Yasui settled in Denver, Colorado, where he practiced law and helped found and participated in many organizations, including the Urban League of Metropolitan Denver, the Latin American Research and Service Agency, Denver Native Americans United and various War on Poverty programs; and

Whereas Minoru Yasui was appointed to the Denver Commission on Community Relations, for which he served as vice-chair, chair and executive director, and as such was an active advocate for civil and human rights whose efforts cut across ethnic and religious lines and addressed the concerns of all minorities and marginalized people; and

Whereas Minoru Yasui was an active member of the Japanese American Citizens League (JACL) throughout his life, taking on leadership roles at both the local and national level, and was a founding member of the Mile High Chapter of JACL in Colorado and the Mid-Columbia Chapter of JACL in Hood River, Oregon; and

Whereas Minoru Yasui reopened his World War II Supreme Court case in 1983 under a writ of error coram nobis in the United States District Court for the District of Oregon; and

Whereas as chair of the JACL National Redress Committee, Minoru Yasui helped build and lead the movement seeking an official apology and reparations for the injustices perpetrated against Japanese Americans during World War II, actions that led to passage of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988 two years after his death; and

Whereas Minoru Yasui is buried in his beloved hometown of Hood River, Oregon, despite his many years based in Denver; and

Whereas President Barack Obama awarded Minoru Yasui the Presidential Medal of Freedom on November 24, 2015, for devoting his life “to fighting for basic human rights and the fair and equal treatment of every American”; and

Whereas when presenting the medal, President Obama said, “Min’s legacy has never been more important. It is a call to our national conscience, a reminder of our enduring obligation to be the land of the free and the home of the brave, an America worthy of his sacrifices”; now, therefore,

Be It Enacted by the People of the State of Oregon:

SECTION 1. March 28 of each year is designated as Minoru Yasui Day.

SECTION 2. This 2016 Act being necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety, an emergency is declared to exist, and this 2016 Act takes effect on its passage.

12 Our Inn of Court nominated Justice Gabriel this year, because, frankly, there's no one more deserving.
13 Justice Gabriel is a pillar of professionalism in Colorado. He doesn't just promote it. He really exhibits it 14 every day.
15

16 Justice Hart

17 He really models professionalism, which is why he's such a perfect recipient for this award. He really is 18 what the profession should be, both as a lawyer and then as a judge on the Court of Appeals and then as 19 a judge on the Colorado Supreme Court. He exemplifies professionalism.
20

21 Justice Marquez

22 Justice Gabriel cares very, very deeply about professionalism, and spends a great deal of speaking
23 engagement time, going around talking on the topic all the time. So, he constantly mentors younger 24 attorneys. He mentors law clerks and students. He mentors our less experienced attorneys at the Inn of 25 Court. Always, always talking about professionalism to ensure that people bring their best game to go
26 on, that they treat each other well in this profession, that they act with candor and respect in court, and 27 that we all work hard to promote and honor the rule of law.

Colorado Office of Judicial Performance Evaluation
Kent Wagner, Executive Director
Ralph L. Carr Judicial Center
1300 Broadway, Suite 220
Denver, CO 80203

Dear Executive Director Wagner:

§ 13-5.5-107(1)(a), C.R.S. requires the State and District Judicial Performance Commissions to evaluate each judge or justice for their integrity, including whether the judge or justice has engaged in any impropriety or appearances of impropriety. See also Colo. RGCJP 12(h), Form 1, pp. 1(a)-4-5; Colo. RGCJP 13(h), Form 2 (III)(a)(2)(c), p. 3; Colo. RGCJP 14(b). Canon Rule 1.1 of the Colorado Code of Judicial Conduct (the Code) requires that judges comply with the law, including their ethical duties under the Code itself. Actual impropriety means and “includes conduct that violates the law, court rules, or provisions of this Code, and conduct that undermines a judge's independence, integrity, or impartiality.” Colo. Code Jud. Conduct, Terminology. “The test for appearance of impropriety is whether the conduct would create in reasonable minds a perception that the judge violated this Code or engaged in other conduct that reflects adversely on the judge's honesty, impartiality, temperament, or fitness to serve as a judge.” Canon Rule 1.2, Comment 3.

Unfortunately, the Performance Commissions have a history of failing to scrutinize the integrity of evaluated judges based upon the judges’ compliance with the Code. See, e.g., Susan Greene, Judges, Judged: Voters Turn Out Two in Larimer, But Retain One the State Urged Them to Fire, DENVER POST, November 3, 2010 (retention recommendations made despite evidence of Canon Rule 1.2 violations by judges through pre-judicial non-disclosure of Brady material). In this context it is critically important for voters in the 2024 General Election to make informed choices about the judges subject to retention, particularly those judges who have been publicly identified as failing to perform their legally required financial reporting obligations as public officials.

On August 13, 2023, The Denver Gazette published an article detailing how one in six Colorado Judges had failed to file annual personal financial disclosure (PFD) statements required by § 24-6-202, C.R.S. and Canon Rules 1.1, 1.2, 2.5, and 3.15 of the Code.¹ As pointed out in the

(1) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (1.7) of this section, not later than the January 10 following his or her election, reelection, appointment, or retention in office, written disclosure, in such form as the secretary of state shall prescribe, stating the interests named in subsection (2) of this section shall be made to and filed with the secretary of state of Colorado by:

article, violation of § 24-6-202(7), C.R.S. through the non-filing of the required annual PFD statements is recognized as a misdemeanor criminal offense. David Migoya, One in Six Judges Lack Financial Disclosures: Little Enforcement Even as Misdemeanor Charge, DENVER GAZETTE, August 13, 2023. With regards to judges, in particular, the required annual PFD statements are important to inform litigants and the public of financial conflicts of interest that require judges' disqualification under Canon Rule 2.11. Additional press reporting described how the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline had opened 73 investigations based upon the August 13, 2023 article as well as records obtained from the Colorado Secretary of State's Office. David Migoya, 73 Colorado Judges Under Investigation for Not Filing Financial Disclosures, DENVER GAZETTE, January 12, 2024. The Performance Commissions may share information with and request information from the Discipline Commission according to § 13-5.3-105(1), (2), C.R.S. Notwithstanding the Discipline Commission's investigations, there has been significant public criticism of the Attorney General's Office and the Colorado Supreme Court for their failure to enforce the criminal penalties of § 24-6-202(7), C.R.S. within the statute of limitations. George Brauchler, Column: Colorado Judges Break the Law—And Are Above It, DENVER GAZETTE, August 18, 2023. Under § 13-5.5-107(1)(a), C.R.S., the Performance

(7) Any person . . . who willfully fails to make any filing required by this section is guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one thousand dollars nor more than five thousand dollars.

Canon Rule 1.1 provides, in relevant part:

(A) A judge shall comply with the law,* including the Code of Judicial Conduct.

(B) Conduct by a judge that violates a criminal law may, unless the violation is minor, constitute a violation of the requirement that a judge must comply with the law.

Canon Rule 1.2 provides:

A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence,* integrity,* and impartiality* of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.

Canon Rule 2.5(A) provides:

A judge shall perform judicial and administrative duties, competently and diligently.

Canon Rule 3.15 provides, in relevant parts:

(A) A judge shall publicly report the source and amount or value of:

(1) compensation received for extrajudicial activities as permitted by Rule 3.12;

(2) gifts and other things of value as permitted by Rule 3.13(C), unless the value of such items does not exceed the statutory amount specified in Title 24, Article 6 of the Colorado Revised Statutes; and

(3) reimbursement of expenses and waiver of fees or charges permitted by Rule 3.14(A).

(C) The public report required by paragraph (A)(1) shall be made at least annually. Public reports required by paragraph (A)(2) and (3) shall be made quarterly.

Commissions have a separate and independent duty to examine judges' failures to file their required annual PFD statements when verifying the judges' integrity under the Code.

As correlated with the judges who are subject to retention in 2024, the August 13, 2023 Gazette article lists the following judges as having failed to file at least their most then-recent 2023 PFD statements:

Pitkin County Court Judge Ashley Andrews
Gunnison County Court Judge Ashley Burgemeister
Bent County Court Judge Lance P. Clark
12th Judicial District Court Judge Kimberly Cortez-Rodriguez
15th Judicial District Court Chief Judge Michael Davidson
San Juan County Court Judge Anthony Edwards
Adams County Court Judge Martin Flaum
2nd Judicial District Court Judge Jay Grant
Mesa County Court Judge Michael Grattan, III
17th Judicial District Court Judge Sharon Holbrook
Adams County Court Judge Madoche Jean
Yuma County Court Judge Kristei Jones
Adams County Court Judge Leroy Kirby
Sedgwick County Court Judge Myka Landry
20th Judicial District Court Judge Dea Lindsey
18th Judicial District Court Judge Bonnie McLean
Adams County Court Judge Joshua Nowak
Denver County Court Judge Frances Simonet
Douglas County Court Judge Kelly Waidler

Of the Judges listed above, the following Judges were further reported as either never having filed their annual personal financial disclosure statements or as having repeatedly failed to do so:

Ashley Andrews
Lance Clark
Kimberly Cortez-Rodriguez
Michael J. Davidson
Jay Grant
Madoche Jean
Kristei Jones
Dea Lindsey
Bonnie McLean
Joshua Nowak
Kelly Waidler

One can assume that each of the listed judges' failures to file their required PFD statements arose from individualized circumstances. Nevertheless, the failure to file the PFD statements and non-compliance with the Code are factors that must be considered and addressed by the respective Performance Commissions as they determine whether each of the listed judges either does or does not meet performance expectations by demonstrating integrity through the avoidance of impropriety or even the appearance of impropriety. Colo. RGCJP 14(b).

Please accept this letter as a formal request for the respective Performance Commissions to publicly document consideration of the non-filing of required annual PFD statements in their evaluations and their required statutory findings with respect to each of the judges named in the August 13, 2023 Gazette article. The Performance Commissions should also verify whether the Discipline Commission opened investigations as to any of the other judges (beyond those listed in the August 13th article) included in this retention cycle for the subject judges' failures to file their annual PFD statements in years prior to 2023.

It is further appropriate under § 13-5.3-105, C.R.S. and § 13-5.5-107(1)(a), C.R.S for the Performance Commissions to verify the disciplinary histories (private or public) of all the judges and justices subject to retention elections in 2024. When considering such disciplinary histories, however, it should not matter whether the discipline occurred within the subject judge or justice's current review period or before. The Performance Commissions can make their own determinations as to whether issues arising through judicial disciplinary histories have been fully addressed by the subject judges or justices sufficient to verify their integrity under § 13-5.5-107(1)(a), C.R.S. Such an analysis will be particularly important if any of the judges identified as failing to submit annual PFD statements also have prior histories of judicial discipline.

Sincerely,

Anonymous

Public Comment Hearing for Colo. RJD 41

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 You may be seated. Thank you. All right, we are here on a rules hearing. I am going to hand the mantle
3 over to Justice Hood, as he's been leading the communications on this. So, Justice Hood.

5 Justice Hood

6 Thank you, Chief Justice Boatright, and thank you to those of you who are physically in attendance
7 today, and we welcome those of you who are in attendance remotely. We're streaming this. I should note
8 now that not only is this available live, but we also archive it for future viewing on our website. It's 9 under the oral arguments tab of our state judicial website. So, the proposed rule at issue today is Rule 41,
10 of the Colorado Rules of Judicial Discipline. It has to do with recusal of members of this Court when a 11 member of the Court or former member of the Court is at issue in some fashion, we posted the details of 12 that rule, the proposed rule, on the website. Justice Marquez has recused from this rulemaking
13 proceeding today, this hearing, I thought it would be useful at the outset to talk for a moment just about 14 the scope of the proceeding. I just want to make it abundantly clear that we're here to talk about just the 15 recusal rule. We're not talking about restructuring the entire judicial discipline process. What we're 16 doing today doesn't affect the broader legislative reforms that have been discussed in the media that 17 came through the work of the interim legislative committee at the General Assembly. And I would note,
18 for that matter, we've embraced those proposed reforms. This is one small segment. This Rule is just one
19 small segment of that broader set of reforms. And the language of the proposed rule tracks the ILCs
20 recommendation regarding recusal. In fact, we've extended it to make it more comprehensive in a couple
21 of ways. But we've done nothing to narrow it in any way, to exclude anything that would be the subject
22 of the proposed constitutional amendment through the work of the interim legislative committee. I
23 should note that the comment period for this was roughly November 7 to December 28. And, so, it's 24 been available for the better part of two months. Not only did we publish the proposed Rule on our 25 website, we also provided notice of the proposed rule through The Colorado Lawyer. So, we have 26 followed the steps that we ordinarily follow in publishing and making available for comments any 27 proposed rule. We also established a deadline of January 3 for people to offer to speak today, we have 28 three speakers to whom I'll refer in a moment. We ordinarily give speakers five minutes. Because we 29 have few speakers today, and we want to make sure they have ample opportunity to address us. We're 30 giving them 15 minutes a piece. And I would also note that in compliance with the Colorado Revised
31 Statute, 13-5.3-107, we have done several things. We've provided the Judicial Discipline Commission
32 with reasonable notice and opportunity to object, which they've done. And I'm sure that Mr. Gregory is 33 here to speak today, will elaborate his objection on behalf of the Judicial Discipline Commission, which 34 has been posted on the website. We posted the proposed rule, and we have conferred with the Judicial 35 Discipline Commission about our differences at length. We have also allowed for public comment, as I
36 noted, and we've invited members of the public to speak, as I noted, all of that complies with the

1 statutory mandate, as well. So, without further ado, I'll invite our speakers. We have Christopher
2 Gregory, who is the Director of the Colorado Judicial Discipline Commission. We have Chris Forsyth
3 with the Judicial Integrity Project. We have Brittany Kauffman, who is the Executive Director of the 4 Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal System. And, so, in that order, we'll have them
5 come and share their thoughts with us. Mr. Gregory.

7 Christopher Gregory

8 Good afternoon. I'm Christopher Gregory, Executive Director of the Colorado Commission on Judicial 9 Discipline. Thank you for the opportunity to address the Commission's response to the proposed rule.
10 The Commission submitted a written response, and I'm here to answer any questions that this Court may 11 have. Are there any questions?

12
13 Justice Hood

14 Not that spring to mind? Do you want to summarize your letter or make any additional comments
15 beyond those that you set forth in the letter?

16
17 Christopher Gregory

18 No, I think that the letter speaks for itself.

19
20 Justice Hood

21 All right, any questions from any members of the court?

22
23 Christopher Gregory

24 Thank you.

25
26 Justice Hood

27 Thank you. And then we have Chris Forsyth.

28
29 Chris Forsyth

30 Good afternoon. My name is Chris Forsyth. I'm an attorney who's practiced law in Colorado for 30
31 years. I'm also Executive Director of the Judicial Integrity Project. That's where we focus on improving
32 the justice system by focusing on changes in the law that increase transparency, enhance accountability, 33 and remove conflicts of interest.

34
35 The Supreme Court is an institution with which you have been entrusted. The people of Colorado
36 rightfully expect you to be the epitome of ethical behavior. They expect you to demand a rigorous 37 system for ensuring ethical behavior by judges, and that you will behave in a manner beyond reproach.
38 Your proposed Rule 41 and your actions regarding judicial discipline in general fall short of these 39 expectations. The initial question I'd like to address is something that has not been addressed. And that 40 question is, does the Supreme Court have the power to increase the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals

1 to determine disciplinary complaints? The answer to this question appears to be, no. In 1970 the 2 Colorado Supreme Court determined that the Supreme Court cannot adopt a rule that changes
3 jurisdiction of a court contrary to a statutory provision. The case is Bill Dreiling Motor Company v.
4 Court of Appeals, 468 P.2d 37. It involved a criminal procedural rule where the Supreme Court allowed
5 a writ of certiorari from County Court, where the County Court's judgment was based on an appeal of a
6 municipal court or police court order. The Supreme Court ruled its own rule was invalid. The Supreme 7 Court, quote, "cannot adopt a rule which changes jurisdiction of a court contrary to a provision of a
8 statute." In 1992, the Court of Appeals determined that the General Assembly's authority to determine 9 the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals is exclusive. That case is South Washington Associates v.
10 Flanagan, 859 P.2d 17. The Court of Appeals is a legislatively created court. Its jurisdiction is limited to 11 that found in Section 13-4-102 of the Colorado Revised Statutes. The statute does not provide for the 12 Court of Appeals to have jurisdiction over disciplinary matters. No one can increase the jurisdiction of 13 the Court of Appeals except the General Assembly. The Constitution, in Section 5 of Article VI, allows 14 the Supreme Court to temporarily assign any District, Juvenile, or Probate judge to duties in any court.
15 The section does not reference Court of Appeals judges. It does not reference disciplinary matters.
16 Furthermore, the Constitution specifically references what happens when a Supreme Court justice is the 17 subject of a disciplinary complaint. In paragraph H of Section 23 of Article VI, it states that "a justice or 18 judge who is a member of the commission or Supreme Court shall not participate in any proceedings
19 involving his own removal or retirement." The Constitution did not provide for removal of Justices of 20 the Supreme Court in any other situation when, obviously the drafters could have chosen to do so. Rule
21 41 is contrary to the state Constitution. The Court cannot amend the Constitution with a rule. Absent a 22 constitutional amendment, who presides over judicial discipline cases cannot be changed. Therefore, for 23 multiple reasons, the legal foundation for Rule 41 is questionable. Pursuant to case law, statutory 24 analysis, and constitutional analysis, it would appear the adoption of Rule 41 would be in excess of the 25 Supreme Court's jurisdiction.

26
27 In addition to the lack of legal authority to adopt such a rule, the rule would be colossally bad public
28 policy. Rule 41 was created in response to what's been referred to as the judicial scandal. The scandal
29 involved a State Court Administrator improperly using his power to contract with a former employee, 30 allegedly to keep the employee from disclosing unethical judicial behavior that was not disciplined. The 31 genesis of the scandal was the fact that alleged misconduct was hidden from public view. What must be 32 done to show you that hiding information about judges is more dangerous than disclosing it? The State
33 Court Administrator undisputedly behaved badly, yet your response to the scandal is to increase the 34 power of the State Court Administrator by allowing whoever is in that position to select who would 35 preside over a disciplinary matter where you might be the defendant. The State Court Administrator is 36 hired by you, reports to you, and obviously would feel conflicted about you being subject to discipline.
37 Inserting that conflict of interest into a rule or law is a bad idea. History shows that the administrator has 38 had difficulty making good decisions. Rule 41 would have the administrator appoint Court of Appeals
39 judges to a Special Tribunal to hear cases involving you. Court of Appeals judges work in this Building
40 with you, are assigned to cases directly by the Chief Justice, and work regularly with the State Court

1 Administrator. The Court of Appeals is not an independent court. The proposed Rule does not remove
2 conflicts of interest. Should the Court of Appeals be an independent court that is formed in the state
3 Constitution? Yes, but that is a discussion for another day.

5 Using the Rules of Judicial Discipline to limit or negate the prosecution of judicial misconduct is not
6 new. The fact that you make the Rules of Judicial Discipline, as opposed to the Judicial Discipline
7 Commission, is a conflict of interest, and it's a conflict of which your predecessors have taken
8 advantage. In 1984, the Colorado Supreme Court issued a rule that judges cannot be disciplined for 9 actions related to an appealable order. That rule has changed wording over the years, but the thought
10 process has remained the same. It's currently Rule 5(e). The rule is extensively used by the discipline
11 commission to dismiss complaints against judges. After the rule was initially adopted, the dismissal rate
12 of complaints against judges rose to 97% in 1993 and has remained at 97% ever since. According to the 13 National Center for State Courts, most states have dismissal rates in the 80% range. It's been 37 years
14 since a Colorado judge has been disciplined for actions related to a case in court. It's a preposterous
15 statistic, unbelievable. One would think we go to court sing supercalifragilistic, expialidocious, and 16 bound out on carousel horses. The point is, proposed Rule 41 is not the first time individuals sitting on 17 the Supreme Court have acted on a conflict of interest. Rule 41 is unlawful. It would be bad public 18 policy.

20 It is misdirection that is keeping the focus off of preventing the judicial scandal from happening again
21 and off of ensuring judicial ethics are rigorously enforced in general. Yet, you have the legislature
22 proposing basically identical changes in the law. House Conference Resolution 23-1001 contains the 23 same ridiculous scheme of having the State Court Administrator appoint Court of Appeals judges, as 24 Rule 41 does. After the Legislative Interim Committee on Judicial Discipline, the Legislature was 25 expected to propose some changes. The changes that have been proposed, however, are not quite what 26 was expected or suggested in the committee. At the end of the committee, the committee's members 27 clearly stated that there should be no criminal penalty for someone who reveals the contents of the 28 complaint before the discipline commission. After all, criminalizing speech is radical. It's un-American.
29 It's something Vladimir Putin uses in Russia to do all sorts of nasty things. Yet here we are in Colorado,
30 and speech is criminalized. You opened up this proceeding to public comment, but we must all
31 understand that some may be reluctant to testify about the Judicial Discipline Commission because of 32 the criminal penalty. The criminal penalty tainted the content of the Legislative Interim Committee, and 33 it hangs over this proceeding today. The Interim Committee stated on the record they would change it,
34 but House Bill 23-1019, would continue criminalized speech in Colorado. The question is, what did you
35 do after the interim committee's public hearings to influence the sponsors of the bill? Given the fact that 36 the Interim Committee publicly declared that the criminal penalty was not appropriate, but changed its 37 mind before introducing legislation leads one to believe that you were involved in ensuring the 38 committee changed its mind and criminalized speech remains the law in Colorado.

1 You are determining your legacy. The judicial scandal has brought you under great scrutiny. So far,
2 you've used your skills to ensure you kept control of investigations by paying for them. You've kept
3 evidence away from public view while criminal statute of limitations passed. You've shown that the 4 state Legislature and the judicial discipline commission are completely inept. You're helping yourselves.
5 The people of Colorado are your victims. We encourage you to withdraw Rule 41. We encourage you to 6 disclose all communication you've had with any member of the General Assembly over the past year
7 regarding the judicial discipline system. We encourage you to start working on measures that improve
8 the justice system, not measures that protect bad judges and justices. You could start with one good
9 admission in proposed Rule 41. It clearly shows that discipline information is crucial for knowing
10 whether a judge can be fair on any given case. You don't want a judge judging you if that judge has any 11 disciplinary history whatsoever, or if there's currently an investigation. At the same time, you're 12 pursuing legislation that would keep the disciplinary history of judges from the public, so much so that 13 some could face conviction of a crime if they expose discipline information. You want to be treated 14 differently than the people. Your actions are hypocritical and not worthy of the public trust. We 15 encourage you to support making the entire judicial discipline process public. You should treat people
16 the way you want to be treated. Judicial integrity is doing the right thing when no one is looking. When 17 people haven't been looking, you've been lobbying legislators for laws that benefit you personally, but 18 that don't benefit the administration of justice. We respectfully request that you change course. If there is 19 anything that should be criminalized, it should be the amount of contact the Judicial Branch has had with 20 the Legislature to influence the policies they propose.

21
22 Proposed Rule 41 should be withdrawn. You should encourage legislators to propose a completely 23 public judicial discipline process. Hiding information about judges is dangerous and provides the 24 impetus for extortion and blackmail. Judges should be held to the highest standards in Colorado instead
25 of the lowest standards. Judicial independence should not mean that judges are free to lie. In Colorado,
26 that is what judicial independence means. You are in a position where you can do so much good,
27 increasing transparency, enhancing accountability, and removing conflicts of interest, are good things
28 for which you should be remembered. Rule 41 does none of those things. I'm happy to answer any 29 questions you may have.

30

31 Justice Hood

32 I have a question. Mr. Forsyth, would you agree that there are instances when this Court would need to 33 recuse from a discipline proceeding?

34

35 Chris Forsyth

36 Absolutely, the Constitution addressed that.

37

38 Justice Hood

39 Okay, and so your argument to us is that there is no instance beyond the specific language in the 40 Constitution that would mandate our recusal.

1 Chris Forsyth

2 The Constitution states what it's supposed to say.

3

4 Justice Hood

5 So, for example, if a current or former member of the Court were a respondent in a judicial discipline
6 proceeding. Do you think that it would be appropriate for members of the Court who've been a colleague
7 to sit in judgment?

9 Chris Forsyth

10 Your question is, whether it's appropriate. Is it a policy that should change? Yes. The question is, what 11 does the Constitution provide for? The Constitution only provides for recusal when you are the member 12 being disciplined.

13

14 Justice Hood

15 So, your solution then would be for us to sit in judgment of one of our colleagues or former colleagues.

16

17 Chris Forsyth

18 No, the solution would be to go through the appropriate process and amend the Constitution to correct 19 the judicial discipline system.

20

21 Justice Hood

22 You're aware that that process can't take place until November of 2024, and that any constitutional 23 amendment that's adopted would not take effect in the ordinary course until January of 2025.

24

25 Chris Forsyth

26 That is correct, but haste is no reason to violate the Constitution.

27

28 Justice Hood

29 So, what is your solution in the interim?

30

31 Chris Forsyth

32 In the interim, you need to abide by the Constitution. And in the interim, you need to be more forthright 33 regarding the problems with judicial discipline, you need to request that the Legislature propose an 34 amendment that actually removes the conflicts of interest in the Constitution.

35

36 Justice Hood

37 You talked about what you termed a judicial scandal, and that phrase has been used in the press at times,
38 as well. I assume that you have read the Troyer Report and the ILG report.

39

40

1 Chris Forsyth

2 I have. Yes, I've looked through those.

3

4 Justice Hood

5 And, therefore, you're aware that with respect to allegations made against judicial officers, there was 6 only one of those allegations that was sustained, and that turned out to be something that had been 7 referred to the judicial discipline commission.

9 Chris Forsyth

10 I'm also aware that those investigations are highly suspect because the Judicial Branch took the lead and 11 paid for these investigations.

12

13 Justice Hood

14 Well, let's talk about that for a moment. There was a request for proposals that was done after we asked
15 both the state Legislature and the Governor's Office to form a committee to then look at those proposals
16 and select investigators. You're familiar with that, right?

17

18 Chris Forsyth

19 I'm very familiar with that.

20

21 Justice Hood

22 And you are also aware, I assume, that we had no say during that process over whom they would select 23 to conduct those investigations.

24

25 Chris Forsyth

26 Oh, I don't know that at all. I don't know. That the Judicial Branch has had a lot of contact with the 27 Legislature. The legislators have stated as such, so I don't know that at all.

28

29 Justice Hood

30 All right, I encourage you and any members of the public and the media to confer with those who were 31 actually on the committee to find out the answer to that question. I think that it will be clear that this 32 Court played no role in selecting those folks. That was the reason that we did it that way was so that 33 there wouldn't be questions about us selecting the folks who would be conducting that investigation.
34 And the money that was provided came out of the judicial budget, but it was not something that we 35 orchestrated. It was something that was done through the committee. In other words . . .

36

37 Chris Forsyth

38 Because it was done that way, when the investigators were testifying before the Legislative Branch, they 39 had to say, I can't tell you that, because that information is privileged, and the Judicial Branch owns that 40 privilege.

1 Justice Hood

2 I'm not going to get into a debate with you about the discovery process. That's been discussed at length
3 in other contexts. We provided 1,000s of documents, and that's of record. So let me ask you about your 4 assertion that the Chief Justice or members of this Court play a role in assigning cases to Court of 5 Appeals judges. I don't understand why you think that.

7 Chris Forsyth

8 Well, first of all, it's in the Constitution, so that's why I think that.

9

10 Justice Hood

11 Well, give us an example in recent history of this Court playing any role in assigning cases to judges on 12 the Court of Appeals.

13

14 Chris Forsyth

15 Well sir, you have to get the State Court Administrator pursuant to, I believe it's in the Constitution,
16 could be statute. Pursuant to one of them, you have to get the State Court Administrator and Chief
17 Justice to agree to the assignment of a retired judge to any particular case. The law specifically 18 implicates your involvement.

19

20 Justice Hood

21 So, your reference is just to the senior judge program. Is that right?

22

23 Chris Forsyth

24 No, not at all.

25

26 Justice Hood

27 And you're aware that when senior judges are assigned in the ordinary course, it's just to enter into a 28 contract and not to assign them to any particular case. We don't hand pick Court of Appeals judges to sit 29 on particular cases.

30

31 Chris Forsyth

32 I would differ. I would differ with that. I in particular, had a case back in probably around 2,000
33 involving the jurisdiction of Executive Branch Judges over workers compensation cases. In that case, the 34 chief judge assigned herself and not one, but two retired judges to hear that case. So, my experience has 35 not been consistent with your thought process.

36

37 Justice Hood

38 I'm not familiar with the experience that you had, so I can't speak to it. All I can tell you is that in the 39 ordinary course of business for this Court, we have nothing to do with the assignment of Court of 40 Appeals judges to particular cases. Let me talk to you more specifically about the process that is set

1 forth in the proposed rule. You're no doubt aware that it says that the State Court Administrator shall 2 randomly select members of the tribunal. Correct?

4 Chris Forsyth

5 Correct. There is no way to enforce randomly.
6

7 Justice Hood

8 But in saying that you're also aware, and I think you acknowledged it in your earlier remarks, that we are 9 simply using the language that the interim legislative committee used in their proposed constitutional 10 amendment.
11

12 Chris Forsyth

13 That's kind of difficult to ascertain, because there was so much communication going on between the 14 Judicial Branch, that's what we'd like to know who came up with what? Because the changes that have 15 come out of the Interim Committee aren't consistent with what the members of the Interim Committee
16 were saying at the end of the Interim Committee.
17

18 Justice Hood

19 You have no evidence that we put that language in the mouths of the interim legislative committee. Nor 20 do you have anything that would suggest that we have the ability to tell them what they should do.
21

22 Chris Forsyth

23 Do I have evidence of what you've done, well, of what you've alleged to do. I wasn't there when these 24 conversations were taking place. I know legislators have complained about, or not complained about,
25 but referenced communications, and you hold great sway.
26

27 Justice Hood

28 You're aware that there was a series of public hearings. Correct? Before the interim legislative 29 committee.
30

31 Chris Forsyth

32 Correct.
33

34 Justice Hood

35 And there were presentations made by many different stakeholders, including Chris Gregory from the 36 judicial discipline commission, other members of the judicial discipline commission. I believe you 37 testified. Didn't you?
38

39 Chris Forsyth

40 I did after begging to do so, yes.

1 Justice Hood

2 And, so, you were given an audience. And there were many documents that were submitted. Those were 3 posted on the legislative website. And through all of that, there's nothing you can point to that suggests
4 that we drafted the Rule that they ultimately adopted.

6 Chris Forsyth

7 Okay, number one, I didn't say you drafted them. You've been involved with them, and it's somewhat
8 alarming that you're finding the need to cross-examine me here on these questions, leading questions
9 trying to get me to confess to something. I know this. I know that the judicial interim committee spent 10 85 to 90% of its time listening to judges or former judges, or groups composed of judges. It spent very 11 little time listening to the public. Indeed, when people got up to give relevant testimony, bravely, you
12 know, letting free the possibility that they might be accused of a criminal violation for speaking out
13 against the discipline commission. And they did so. The interim committee cut them off at three minutes
14 and told them to go. No judge was ever stopped by the interim committee. The interim committee only 15 stopped individuals who were trying to testify.

16

17 Justice Hood

18 This was a legislative choice. Am I right?

19

20 Chris Forsyth

21 You're correct. It was the interim committee. But you're trying through your cross-examining of me.
22 You're saying the Legislature had to do this all on their own, and that you had no influence whatsoever.
23 When I would beg to differ on that.

24

25 Justice Hood

26 You talk about my cross examination of you, Mr. Forsyth. My concern is that in many instances, you
27 and other folks make statements about this process that are just untrue and unsupported by any record,
28 and then the media takes these things and they make it seem as though there is validity to what you're 29 saying in the absence of any evidence to support it. And, so, I just think that it's appropriate for us in this 30 context to probe some of the assertions that you've made.

31

32 Chris Forsyth

33 The assertions I have made, simply focus on Rule 41. I did as you instructed. I focused on Rule 41 and 34 the most it went out was that this proceeding is tainted due to the criminal penalty regarding judicial 35 discipline. I kept it very focused. So, I can't even begin to understand what you're saying I don't have 36 support for. Because my comments are scripted. They're all true. There's nothing misleading about them.
37 And I would ask you, if you really didn't have much involvement, show us. You're saying, oh, I can't 38 prove you had involvement. Well, show us that you didn't have involvement.

40

1 Justice Hood

2 How do you propose that we prove a negative?

4 Chris Forsyth

5 That goes both ways. But you can disclose your emails or communications with the legislators for the 6 past year. That's what I requested. So, your legislative liaison, Terry Scanlon, Rob McCallum, let's see
7 that communication. Let's see how this developed. That you proposed the identical language and Rule
8 before it's. Well, I guess it was on the Legislature's website, but your Rule came out before it was 9 introduced as legislation. I'm not certain when the Legislature posted it on their website with the Interim
10 Committee.

11

12 Justice Hood

13 Do you have anything else? Any other questions from the Court?

14

15 Chris Forsyth

16 No, I want to thank you for your time, and I encourage you to focus on improving the discipline system.
17 Thank you very much.

18

19 Justice Hood

20 Thank you, Mr. Forsyth, and I believe our final speaker is Ms. Brittany Kauffman. Ms Kauffman, thank 21 you for your patience, and congratulations on your elevation to Executive Director.

22

23 Brittany Kauffman

24 Thank you, Justice Hood. And may it please the Court. As previously noted, my name is Brittany
25 Kauffman, and I'm the CEO of IAALS, the Institute for the Advancement of the American Legal 26 System, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak with you all today about the proposed Rule. I will be
27 speaking about related recommendations from IAALS on judicial discipline and recusal, and narrowing
28 in on that focus that we have here today, and sharing some relevant experiences from around the country
29 that I thought would be helpful. So, just to provide a little bit of background to my comments, I wanted
30 to share two projects that we have undertaken at IAALS that I think are relevant to the proposed Rule.
31 So, the first is a project that we undertook in 2018. And leading up to March of 2018, we held a 32 convening at IAALS of experts from around the country, groups of commissioners, commission staff, 33 judges, lawyers, and scholars from all around the country. To talk about the functioning of judicial 34 conduct commissions around the country, to identify opportunities for improvement, and to develop a 35 set of best practices. And that group included a number of experts from around the country, and I will 36 circle back to this. So, I just wanted to share a few names. It included Cynthia Gray, who's the Director
37 of the Center for Judicial Ethics at the National Center for State Courts, as well as William Campbell, 38 former Executive Director of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Discipline. So, we also had some 39 folks from Colorado as part of that effort. And while we looked at best practices, we also recognize that 40 there are a variety of approaches around the country to the functionings and models of commissions. But

1 we sought to bring together some best practices, including touching briefly on recusal, which is why I
2 mention this report. So, coming out of that effort, we did have a set of report and recommendations,
3 drawing from wide-ranging comments as part of that convening, and also the research that we have done
4 at IAALS and in addition to identifying some best practices for commissions to put in place, we also 5 sought to highlight concrete ways to improve the trustworthiness of the Judiciary. And the 6 recommendations really build off the goal of our, today's judicial discipline system, and I see those goals
7 as protecting the public and the integrity of judicial proceedings, deterring future misconduct, and 8 promoting public confidence in the judicial system. So that was really at the heart of our work and our 9 recommendations in pulling together work from around the country.

10
11 And, then, I also mention a second project which is related. It's a project on recusal that we did even 12 earlier than our project on judicial discipline. Back in 2016, IAALS hosted a similar convening of 13 experts from around the country. Judges, lawyers, court administrators, scholars from around the 14 country to think about best practices with regard to recusal proceedings. And, so, I haven't shared those 15 reports into the record, but I do have copies, if you all would like to have those with me. So, we have 16 reports out from both of those efforts, and I think they may be relevant for your consideration of this 17 proposed rule.

18
19 Focusing in specifically on recusal and judicial discipline proceedings. IAALS recommends that states
20 adopt and enforce recusal provisions to protect impartiality and its appearance. We think that that's 21 critical, and that recusal rules should be rigorous. They should be understandable to the public and to 22 judges. They should be accessible and they should be clearly articulated. Those are some of the 23 parameters that we came up with in terms of the importance of written procedures and how to apply
24 them to our courts. It's important to communicate to the public that such recusal procedures are in place,
25 and that enhances transparency and public trust and confidence in our system. And that's true generally,
26 but it's also true when a matter comes before the court and the judicial discipline commission, and when
27 a conflict arises, it's important to have those previously created rules, recusal rules, to turn to, to show
28 that they're already in place and that can further support public trust and confidence in the court and the 29 rules that we rely upon. So, in terms of those recommendations, the proposed Rule 41 is in line with 30 those recommendations and helps to achieve an approach that is transparent, that has written procedures,
31 and the recusal rules would then be clear. And I also wanted to speak to relevant practices across the 32 country. So, as to those practices in most states, the Supreme Court is the final decision maker with 33 regard to a judicial officer, whether a judicial officer will be publicly disciplined, reviewing a 34 recommendation either of the judicial conduct commission or a commission's decision at the judge's 35 request. So, that's the common practice around the country.

36
37 The ABA Model Rules for Judicial Disciplin[ary] Enforcement do include a model rule for complaints
38 against a member of the highest court, and I think that's directly relevant to the proposed rule here today.
39 The commentary to that ABA rule recognizes and reinforces the importance of recusal. The commentary
40 notes that the highest court is a collegial body, granting it the authority to discipline its members would

1 create appearances of impropriety and conflicts of interest. And for that reason, the model rule creates,
2 similar to Rule 41, a process for designation of a special court with a number equal to the number of 3 justices on the court. So, the ABA itself has a model rule that would put in place such a rule.

5 And then I also encourage you to look to the conduct of other states as well, around the country. In at 6 least 13 states, judicial discipline provisions follow an approach where they create a substitute court,
7 similar to Rule 41 and those substitute courts are comprised of temporary justices to hear the case if a
8 Supreme Court justice is the respondent of a judicial discipline case. So, we have 13 other states that 9 have basically followed a general approach, like the ABA model rule, and have implemented such a rule 10 that would create this Special Tribunal.

11
12 And here, too, I want to point to the work of the National Center for State Courts. So, Cynthia Gray, last
13 summer, shared with the Legislative Interim Committee, a summary of the other 13 states, and provided
14 that to the committee and summarized all the different approaches of these 13 states that have followed
15 the model rule. And I'm just going to share a few highlights for you. So, when we look at those 13 states, 16 the provisions, of course, the language, the exact rule, is not the same across all those 13 states. They 17 kind of vary across the states, and that's true of judicial discipline commissions and their rules generally.
18 We see that variation. By just a few, a majority provide for such a substitute tribunal by rule. So, 7 of 19 those states provide it by rule. Less than half, five, provided it in the language of the Constitution itself.
20 And then depending upon the state, the substitute court is comprised of either appellate court judges,
21 trial court judges, or both, those are delineated in that language of creating those special tribunals.
22 Sometimes, it's by position, sometimes it's by seniority, and sometimes it's randomly selected. So, we do
23 have examples of states that choose those randomly. Either, I think there are examples of either a 24 Secretary of State or the court administrator or a random list that's created and kept within the court for 25 use during recusal. So, we have some examples you all can look to from other states who choose these 26 randomly. Proposed Rule 41 is generally consistent with other states in that it provides for the full 27 Supreme Court to recuse itself in this instance and replace it with that special tribunal. So, not just one
28 justice, but all of the justices would be replaced in those 13 states. And, then, I also wanted to note the 29 proposed Rule 41 goes further than other states in providing additional circumstances. And I think 30 previously you mentioned Justice, that it's a bit more comprehensive. So, it provides additional 31 circumstances upon which, beyond when just a complaint involves one of the judges but there would be 32 a recusal and the creation of this special tribunal.

33 34 Justice Samour

35 Ms Kaufman, good afternoon. Just so that I make sure I'm understanding you correctly, based on your 36 research and all the reading you've done on this, do you believe that the proposed Rule 41 measures up 37 with what other states have done and are doing, and do you believe it's an appropriate rule?
38
39
40

1 Brittany Kauffman

2 Yes, yes. That's an excellent question here. And in summary of my comment, so it is an example from,
3 you know, we have 13 states, so that's not the majority of states, but it really is 13 states that I think are 4 on the cutting edge, I guess, of putting in place recusal measures, I think that's a really positive effort,
5 and in line with the research that we have done and our recommendations. To have clear recusal
6 standards, and in line with the ABA recommendations, as well. So, I think it's important to have a rule
7 such as Rule 41. I think it's consistent with other states who have taken this extra step based on that 8 research and put in place those types of rules. In general, it's consistent across the board, in approach,
9 recognizing that there's not a lot of consistency in the exact language or type.

10

11 Justice Hart

12 So, excuse me, just to clarify, 13 states. You've mentioned the 13 states. We're the 14th one. So, the 13 other 36 states, do they not have specific recusal rules, or do they have other different kinds of recusal 14 rules?

15

16 Brittany Kauffman

17 So, I don't believe that they create a recusal where the entire court would be replaced with a Special
18 Tribunal. They may have a rule, and I haven't done the full 50-state survey on this, but where, of course,
19 the justices themselves who might be under a complaint, would recuse. But these are the states that 20 create a full new court, similar to the rule that you all have proposed.

21

22 Justice Hood

23 Ms Kauffman, you mentioned Cynthia Gray. She's with the National Center for State Courts. Is that 24 right?

25

26 Brittany Kauffman

27 Yes.

28

29 Justice Hood

30 She testified to the interim legislative committee, as you noted, is that right?

31

32 Brittany Kauffman

33 Yes.

34

35 Justice Hood

36 And she spoke at length about much of the same information that you shared with us today. Is that fair?

37

38

39

40

1 Brittany Kauffman

2 I don't know that she testified to this, but she did provide materials to the Interim Committee that I have 3 looked at as well in terms of that summary and provided those resources to the committee and they're 4 part of the website.

6 Justice Hood

7 Would you infer, and I don't ask you to speculate, but do you think it's a fair inference that the 8 Legislature based much of the language that they put forth in their proposed constitutional amendment
9 on the testimony of Ms. Gray?

10

11 Brittany Kauffman

12 I don't know that I can say or infer that, but I do hope that the legislative committee looked to all of the 13 testimony that was provided by the experts, including her and IAALS as well. I testified as well to form
14 the basis for those recommendations. We all provided a lot of research, and I hope they took that into 15 account and really based their work on that.

16

17 Justice Hood

18 And as you say, in any event, what you do know is that this Rule is very much in keeping with the rules 19 that are considered to be models around the country.

20

21 Brittany Kauffman

22 Yes. This rule would be in keeping with the model rule from the ABA, as well as the other 13 states that 23 have followed that approach.

24

25 Justice Hood

26 That were discussed with the interim legislative committee?

27

28 Brittany Kauffman

29 Yes, in the materials. Yes.

30

31 Justice Berkenkotter

32 And part of the point of that is to promote public confidence in the integrity of the Judiciary. Is that 33 correct?

34

35 Brittany Kauffman

36 Yes, that is, I believe the reason for such a recusal rule is that it's clear when there is a complaint that is 37 against one of the supreme court justices, there could be concerns by the public as well as the judges in 38 the court. 360-degrees really of public trust and confidence there. And I think having clear recusal
39 procedures helps to enhance public trust and confidence, and that really is the goal of the Court and the 40 judicial discipline commission, as well.

1 Justice Samour

2 Is there any aspect of the proposed Rule that causes you concern or gives you heartburn?

4 Brittany Kauffman

5 No, I don't think so. You know, it does provide a more comprehensive list than the other states in terms
6 of when recusal is appropriate, but when I look back at our work and our research, we have really 7 encouraged recusal rules to be comprehensive for the very purpose that they are about public trust and 8 confidence, and that erring on the side of comprehension is a good thing. So, it is more comprehensive,
9 but none of those circumstances that are listed here, cause me heartburn.

10

11 Justice Hood

12 Anything else?

13

14 Justice Samour

15 I just want to thank you. You know it's easy to come here and cast dispersions on the court and impugn
16 the dignity of the court based on speculation and conjecture. I appreciate you coming here and providing 17 comments that are based on research and knowledge as opposed to just speculation. So, thank you.

18

19 Justice Hood

20 Anyone else?

21

22 Justice Hart

23 Were you in fact, done, or did we interrupt you?

24

25 Brittany Kauffman

26 No, I was done. I was just going to say thank you for the opportunity to highlight IAALS's 27 recommendations and our research. I think that looking to the research and experiences of other states is 28 really important when developing these recommendations. I think that also goes to public trust and 29 confidence, to show that the work looks to other states, other examples, best practices, and model rules.
30 And so, I appreciate the opportunity to share that. That was the conclusion of my comments.

31

32 Chief Justice Boatright

33 Can I ask you one question? The 13, now, maybe 14 states that do it. The other states, they just leave the 34 supreme court intact, except for maybe the person that was being accused, and they act as the decision 35 maker? That's the alternative model.

36

37 Brittany Kauffman

38 That's my understanding.

39

40

1 Chief Justice Boatright

2 Okay, thank you.

3

4 Justice Hood

5 Thank you so much for your time and again congratulations on your promotion.

7 Brittany Kauffman

8 Thank you so much.

9

10 Justice Hood

11 Thank you for being here today. And so that concludes our list of speakers. We're finished our list of 12 speakers, so I'll turn it back over to the Chief to finish the hearing.

13

14 Chief Justice Boatright

15 All right, I want to thank everybody for their time and attention to this. The comments were appreciated, 16 and we will be in recess.

Legislative Record:

Appendix 27(a)

Nathan B. Coats, State of the Judiciary
Address, 2019 Colo. House Journal, pp. 68-74
(January 11, 2019);

1 The Speaker declared a quorum present and as is customary presented the 2 gavel to the President of the Senate to preside over the Joint Session.

4 President Garcia requested the Joint Committee, composed of Senators
5 Todd and Gardner, and Representatives Weissman, Gonzales-Gutierrez,
6 and Carver to escort the Chief Justice to the rostrum.

8 Chief Sergeant-at-Arms Jon Judson announced the arrival of the 9 Honorable Nathan B. Coats, Chief Justice of the State of Colorado.

10
11 The Joint Committee escorted the Chief Justice to the rostrum where he 12 addressed the Joint Session.

13
14
15 ADDRESS BY THE HONORABLE
16 Chief Justice Nathan B. Coats
17

18 Madam Speaker Becker, Senate President Garcia, distinguished members of the 19 Senate and House of Representatives:

20 My thanks for your generous invitation for a co-ordinate branch of the government to 21 address you in this chamber. This has become a very worthwhile and meaningful 22 tradition in the state, and I would like to express both the appreciation of the judicial 23 branch and my personal hope that the tradition continues long into the future.

24 Let me begin by introducing my fellow justices, who have also come to represent the 25 branch today. Although we make all important decisions en banc, or as a whole court,
26 with each justice having equal voting power, after the Chief Justice we measure
27 seniority by longevity on the court. In order of seniority, then, my colleagues are 28 Justice Monica Marquez; Justice Brian Boatright; Justice Will Hood; Justice Rich
29 Gabriel; and since we last appeared in this chamber for a State of the Judiciary
30 address, our newest members, Justice Melissa Hart; and Justice Carlos Samour.

31 I would also like to introduce the State Court Administrator, Chris Ryan, whom I have 32 asked to sit with the court today. And finally, I am pleased to introduce my wife, Dean
33 Emerita of the Sturm College of Law at DU, Mary Ricketson . . . and my daughter, 34 currently a deputy district attorney at my old office in Denver, Johanna Coats.

35 The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in this jurisdiction actually wears two very 36 distinctly different hats. Although the Chief has an important leadership role in the 37 organization and conduct of the business of the court, the position of Chief Justice can 38 best be described as "first among equals." The Chief has equal, but no more than 39 equal, voting power with the other members of the court. Unlike the United States
40 Supreme Court, where the Chief Justice is nominated by the President and confirmed
41 by the Senate into the specific slot of Chief, the Chief Justice of the Colorado Supreme 42 Court is selected by and serves at the pleasure of the court itself.

43 In addition, however, Article VI, section 5 of the state constitution also specifies that 44 the Chief Justice selected by a majority of the court "shall be the executive head of the 45 judicial system" of the state. It is in that latter capacity, as the chief executive officer
46 of the judicial branch of government, that I address you today.

47 In thanking you for the invitation to speak, I referred to us as coordinate branches of 48 government, and I would like to explain what I understand to be the coordinate nature 49 of our relationship. Although we are very expressly and purposefully organized in the 50 constitution as separate but co-equal branches of government, we are not only co-equal 51 branches, but in fact we share what might be described as a symbiotic, or cooperative,
52 relationship. In an important sense, each
53 depends on the other. The roles assigned to each of us, although different, are 54 necessarily cooperative, both being essential to the fulfillment of the core obligations 55 of government.

56 As limited by the constitution, the fundamental law from which each of our branches

1 derives its powers and authority, and apart from that portion of the legislative power
2 of government that you have willingly delegated to the executive, in the form of the 3 administration, this body is clearly the law giver with regard to matters concerning the 4 governance of the state generally. You indisputably set policy for the state, and enact 5 that policy into governing law, to be carried out and enforced by the executive branch.
6 The power of the judiciary, on the other hand, is largely limited, except for supervising 7 its own operations and the practice of law, to making judgments about the nature and 8 effect of policy choices already made by others. With regard to the laws enacted by 9 you, our role in the system is limited to determining what you meant in enacting those 10 laws, how you intended them to apply in individual cases, and that they do not conflict
11 with the constitution. Similarly, where you have left it to others to arrange their own
12 affairs, whether by contract, lease, will, or any other legally enforceable arrangement,
13 it is the role of the judiciary to determine what those parties intended. The core 14 function of the judiciary is therefore to provide appropriate forums, a fair process, and 15 neutral and impartial decision-makers, schooled at interpreting the law according to 16 well-established principles, which permit your constituents to resolve their grievances
17 and order their important affairs, with the force of law.

18 Included within your function – the legislative function of government – is, of course, 19 both the power and duty to raise and allocate the resources necessary for the 20 functioning of state government, regardless of the particular branch exercising
21 governmental power. Both the executive and judicial branches are dependent upon you 22 for the resources required for them to fulfill their constitutional obligations. It is 23 therefore both natural and proper for us to regularly report to you how we are fulfilling 24 those obligations and offer our professional assessment of the resources we need to 25 continue to do so.

26 Although I am now well into my 19th year serving as a justice on the supreme court,
27 and I have, for more than the last 40 years, been an advocate, close court-watcher, and 28 participant in the boards, committees, and other organs established by the supreme 29 court to assist with the conduct of its business and supervisory obligations, I measure
30 my responsibilities as Chief only in months. I am quite proud of the accomplishments
31 of the branch I now have the honor to lead, and with your indulgence, I would like to 32 give you a brief overview of what I am finding. As you might well imagine, over the 33 40 years I have served the judicial branch, it has grown along with the state whose 34 people it serves.

35 We now have 64 counties in the state, the last being Broomfield, which was created 36 just over 20 years ago. For about the last half-century, the counties of the state have 37 been organized into 22 judicial districts. The district courts are the trial courts of 38 general jurisdiction, meaning they can hear both civil and criminal cases of all kinds, 39 while the county courts are limited to deciding the 40 less serious criminal offenses, or misdemeanors, and certain civil cases with lesser 41 amounts in controversy. Each county and judicial district must have at least one judge, 42 but of course in light of growing populations and case filings, the vast majority have 43 many more. Counting some 40 magistrates, who are authorized to perform only limited 44 judicial tasks, along with the county and district court judges, the total number of 45 judicial officers in the state now approaches 400.

46 In 1969, this legislative body created an intermediate appellate court, the court of 47 appeals. At that time, the court of appeals was comprised of 7 judges, with limited 48 authority, to help deal with the burgeoning backlog of trial court judgments awaiting 49 appellate review. Since that time, you have continuously expanded the authority of the 50 court of appeals to include the review of all but very select kinds of cases – like cases 51 involving water rights – and to keep pace with ever increasing demand, you have 52 correspondingly increased the size of that court to 22 judges.

53 The ultimate legal authority with regard to matters of state law, however, rests with 54 the 7-member state supreme court. In one form or another, the supreme court has 55 authority over virtually every kind of legal dispute that can arise in state, over all 56 lower courts of the state, as well as over the practice of law in the state. While the

1 court of appeals has become the workhorse of appellate review in the state, now
2 resolving some 2,300 appeals a year, the Colorado Supreme Court, like the United 3 States Supreme Court, has become largely a court of discretionary review, which 4 means that for the most part we choose the cases we will decide based on how 5 important they are and how broadly our decision will impact other cases throughout 6 the state, rather than just correct errors in individual cases. While the Colorado
7 Supreme Court, like the United States Supreme Court in federal system, therefore fully 8 resolves, by published opinion, a lot fewer cases than the court of appeals, it 9 nevertheless has to evaluate in detail some 1,100 petitions for review each year, just 10 to pick the ones that will likely have the biggest impact.

11 In addition to the 1969 creation of the modern court of appeals, several other 12 initiatives, taking effect roughly around the same time, radically altered the nature of 13 the judiciary in this state and its relationship to the state legislature, and they did so 14 in ways that are critical to a complete understanding of the current state of the judicial 15 branch.

16 With regard to the method of selecting state judges, and therefore the very nature and 17 make-up of the judging profession in this state, an amendment to the state constitution 18 in 1966 created a kind of merit selection system, in which applications for judicial 19 openings are reviewed by independent commissions in each judicial district - or by a 20 separate statewide commission for openings on the appellate courts. The members of 21 the nominating commissions are chosen according to a constitutionally established
22 formula, to include both lawyers and non-lawyers and a balance of political party
23 affiliation. Each nominating commission is chaired by a justice of the supreme court,
24 who serves as a non-voting member. The ultimate selection of judges by the governor 25 is then limited to a short list of two or three qualified applicants, forwarded to him by 26 the appropriate commission.

27 While perhaps no system of selection involving human beings can be entirely
28 objective, and the selection process in this jurisdiction was clearly designed to account 29 for very diverse views in the community concerning the appropriate credentials for 30 being a judge, after chairing commissions all over the state for going on 20 years, that 31 have been responsible for sending names to the governor for some 75 judgeships, I can 32 truthfully say that I have never witnessed overtly partisan, or party, politics to be a 33 factor in any judicial selection. Since the adoption of our merit selection system, more 34 and more legal scholars, judges, and political figures throughout the country have 35 touted it, and more and more states have adopted some version of it.

36 In addition to the make-up of the judiciary of the state, the organization and funding 37 of the judicial branch also underwent a big change during roughly this same period.
38 In 1970, after years of debate, the general assembly pretty much assumed the role of 39 funding the state judicial system - apart from providing the courthouses themselves, 40 that is - and in particular, funding a centralized support mechanism to assist the 41 supreme court in administering that judicial system. In commenting on the value of 42 this system of state financing several years later, former Chief Justice Pringle was 43 quoted as saying, "State funding makes it possible to budget on a system wide basis, 44 makes it possible to shift personnel, as well as judges, on a temporary basis when 45 workloads require, permits economies of scale, facilitates the overall development of 46 a management information system, makes it possible to meet unusual emergencies, 47 and makes greater operational efficiency possible through control of resources and the 48 development of cost and caseload data that show meaningful comparisons among 49 courts and among different kinds of cases."

50 To satisfy the vast array of legal needs of the people of this state and the need to fairly 51 and appropriately hear and finally resolve their grievances, the branch now operates 52 410 courtrooms throughout the state. And while the responsibility for financing the 53 physical structures housing those courtrooms remains with the individual counties, for 54 nearly the last half-century it has therefore been the statutory responsibility of the state
55 to furnish those courtrooms and fund the judges and necessary supporting staff, now 56 accounting for some 3,800 full time equivalent positions, with a budget approaching

1 $600M.
2 I must pause here for a brief aside on this body's provision of funding for courthouses
3 themselves.
4 Although the individual counties remain responsible for providing courthouses for 5 their own county and district courts, since 2014 this body has also provided additional 6 funding to assist with construction and remodeling of court facilities in areas of the 7 state incapable of doing so by themselves. In that regard, allow me a word of thanks
8 to you and praise for the joint efforts of the judicial and county officials in the 12th
9 judicial district in bringing on line just this past September a much needed, modern 10 courthouse in Alamosa, now housing one county and four district court courtrooms.
11 Supplemental funds from the state were instrumental in finding a funding solution for 12 that facility. Similarly, assistance from the state through the underfunded facilities 13 fund is making possible a new courthouse to the replace the 1904 facility in 14 Walsenburg,
15 the dire condition of which my predecessor, Chief Justice Nancy Rice, described so 16 colorfully in this chamber several years ago.
17 Through efficiencies involving computer and other technological advances, as well as 18 the centralization of a host of administrative and support functions, we have managed 19 to free up judicial officers from many of the collateral, but time-consuming tasks, that 20 once diverted them from their core function: sitting in judgment of actual cases and 21 controversies. But at some point, the need for more well-trained, impartial judges 22 simply cannot be got around.
23 To assist you in the rational allocation of scarce resources among competing interests,
24 we have for more than 20 years now measured need much more precisely than older 25 methods of simply extrapolating from general metrics like population growth and 26 changes in overall case filings. By collecting data on the time actually spent on 27 different duties and different kinds of cases, we have been able to provide you with 28 figures – in the form of empirical, weighted caseload studies - more precisely 29 demonstrating demand, which you have relied on to increase the number of judges in 30 the state a number of times since then. In fact, since 2000, you have regularly credited 31 these calculations to increase the number of district court judges statewide. In the past,
32 we have generally not made any request until the demand was beyond dispute; and so 33 in 2001, for example, you agreed and approved an increase of 25 district court judges, 34 and again in 2007, another 32, to meet the burgeoning demand in each instance.
35 Using this same system of measurement, the branch is now prepared to represent to 36 you that we are currently operating with about 77% of the district court judges actually 37 needed in the state. I am happy to report that a bill has already been introduced in the 38 Senate to increase the number of district court judgeships by 15, precisely allocated 39 throughout the state according to greatest need, which would bring that 77% figure to 40 about 82% of actual demand. While not completely offsetting existing need, members 41 of both our branches who have looked at the demand consider this figure both realistic
42 and sufficient to prevent serious shortages in the immediate term. At this time, may 43 I offer my special thanks to Senators Lee and Gardner, and Representatives Herod and 44 Carver for sponsoring this much needed measure.
45 The need for more impartial decision-makers is being driven largely from two 46 directions: the first is the easily measured jump in felony case filings throughout the 47 state in recent years; the second is perhaps more subtle and has more to do with the 48 expanding role of the judicial branch, alongside the legislative and executive branches, 49 in addressing the broader societal problems giving rise to this increasing need for legal 50 services.
51 With regard to the first, for various reasons, which may be the subject of debate, 52 felony filings in this state in the last five years have climbed by more than 40%. Our 53 data indicate that this trend is statewide, not limited to filing practices in any particular 54 districts. Lest someone leap to the conclusion that this represents a problem for 55 criminal cases alone, it would be well to take stock of the impact this startling 56 explosion is having on the availability of judge time on every other aspect of our

1 judicial system. As the result of both constitutional and statutory provisions
2 designed to protect the rights of those charged with committing crimes, criminal cases
3 cannot be delayed for lack of available courtroom time, in the same way as almost all 4 other legal matters, unpleasant as that reality may seem. The immediate and 5 undesirable effect of this surge in criminal demand is therefore to starve virtually 6 every other aspect of the justice system of much needed resources and cause often 7 extremely harmful delay in the resolution of pressing, noncriminal legal problems. The 8 state is replete with examples of Chief Judges having to reassign their judges from 9 handling civil cases of various kinds to handling criminal cases; and in districts where 10 different case types are typically handled in a single court, judges are not infrequently
11 having to simply allocate more of their available courtroom time for their criminal 12 docket, making less available for pending civil cases. Not only are civil cases being 13 crowded off the docket, but in some places criminal matters are having to be handled
14 in a way that impacts logistical and security concerns. In Denver, for example, 15 criminal matters are regularly being handled in courtrooms that would otherwise be 16 devoted to civil matters, despite the fact that those courtrooms operate out of the City
17 and County Building, which lacks the logistical and security advantages for which the 18 new Lindsay-Flanigan criminal facility was specifically designed.

19 Few legal matters are more emotional and anxiety provoking than family law matters
20 involving the dissolution of marriages; decisions about the custody, parenting time,
21 and financial support of the children; and the division of marital property. Quite apart 22 from the breakup of marriages, however, the plight of abused or dependent and 23 neglected children is among the most urgent problems needing timely resolution by 24 the courts. And yet the delay resulting from a lack of available judge time greatly
25 elevates the anxiety level of adults and children alike in these situations, and prolongs 26 uncertainty concerning the permanency of child placement, reducing the likelihood of 27 satisfactory outcomes for many children.

28 But there are any number of examples of hardship suffered by very ordinary people 29 when they are unable to get a timely resolution of important legal matters affecting 30 their lives, relationships, property, or finances. Whether the matter needing legal 31 attention is large or small, delay caused by backlog can be terribly significant for the 32 people actually involved. Delay caused by backlog and a lack of available judicial 33 decision-makers adversely affects not only the contractual arrangements of large 34 commercial enterprises but of small businesses and consumers as well; not only 35 property disputes among large corporations involving, for example, valuable mineral 36 or water rights, but perhaps even more so among small farmers or homeowners 37 needing some degree of certainty concerning their financial arrangements; not only the 38 devolution of large estates of wealthy decedents but also pressing questions of 39 guardianship of the elderly or infirm and the distribution of even modest assets among 40 the survivors of non-wealthy decedents; and not only wrongful death actions and 41 substantial monetary claims for debilitating personal injuries but even common 42 insurance disputes over property damage or the medical costs of injuries that are 43 ordinary enough but nevertheless beyond the means of the damaged parties.

44 In addition to sheer volume, however, the need for more judges and specialized 45 support staff is also being driven by both the changing nature of the people typically 46 appearing in court and the 47 changing role of the judiciary in helping to solve the more fundamental societal 48 problems leading these people to court in the first place. Not so long ago, a debate
49 raged in the judicial community about the appropriateness of involving the courts too
50 directly in treatment and rehabilitation. At least in this state, I believe that time is 51 largely past.

52 The judicial department in general, and the district courts in particular, are 53 increasingly involved in innovative approaches to dealing with societal problems that 54 go beyond, and are often the cause of, criminal or other anti-social behavior –
55 problems like poverty, addiction, and mental illness. One specific example of an 56 approach that is particularly demanding of judge time is the ever-expanding use of

1 what has come to be referred as “problem-solving courts.” Problem-solving courts can 2 take many forms and be directed at a wide array of different social ills – like drug or 3 alcohol dependency courts – or specific classes of defendants – like veterans’ courts.
4 But the approach they share is close monitoring, with regular reappearances of 5 participating criminal defendants, by judicial officers themselves rather than only by 6 probation officers or treatment providers, with the objective of immediate step by step 7 increases of rewards and punishments, for compliance or non-compliance, with 8 judicial directives. The increasing demand for these kinds of courts reflects their 9 success with regard to rehabilitation and reducing recidivism, but in order to be 10 successful they require extensive courtroom supervision and place additional demands
11 on judge and staff time. While these approaches appear to be extremely beneficial for 12 the individuals involved and for society in general, and they are clearly much less 13 costly overall than simply imposing punitive sentences, their immediate impact on 14 judge-intensive supervision, and therefore the need for more judges, is great.
15 Even in more traditional courtroom proceedings, however, the increasing numbers of 16 folks appearing without legal assistance of any kind is taking a toll on judge time.
17 Each year, fully 75% of the parties appearing before judges in domestic relations cases
18 throughout the state are not represented by counsel. While judges cannot act as 19 lawyers for self-represented parties, basic fairness requires more lengthy explanations 20 about the proceedings and available options, greatly slowing down even what might 21 otherwise be the most perfunctory formalities. The judicial branch continues to work 22 on a number of initiatives with the practicing bar and the other two branches to 23 provide greater access to justice, including the use of Sherlocks, or Self-Represented
24 Litigant Coordinators, in courthouses all over the state, as a way of assisting pro se
25 litigants and saving valuable judge time.
26 Finally, let me briefly mention the expanding role of the probation department. In line
27 with these other initiatives, the probation department is being asked to supervise 28 higher and higher risk individuals, requiring greater and greater supervision for the 29 protection of the public. While actual numbers of supervisees may not have 30 dramatically increased, the staff-hours involved in providing this alternative to 31 incarceration are therefore steadily and predictably increasing. Colorado probation is 32 by far the largest single sentencing option in Colorado. The active probation 33 population in probation is more than 80,000 people. Our average daily population is 34 about 4 times the number of inmates in department of corrections custody, nearly 9
35 times the size of the parole population and over 20 times the size of community 36 corrections.
37 In this state, the probation function continues to reside within the supervision of the 38 judicial branch of government, and it has proven to be one of the most cost-effective 39 ways of supervising and rehabilitating many individuals convicted of crimes. For 40 adults, the annual cost per person is just over $1,500 compared to $6,000 for someone 41 on parole, nearly $9,000 in community corrections, and over $38,000 in prison.
42 As long as sentencing courts have available to them probation as an effective
43 alternative means of rehabilitation and reducing recidivism, rather than much more 44 costly and less effective incapacitation by incarceration, the community will benefit.
45 But because probation is a function of the judicial branch of government in this state, 46 funds cannot merely be shifted within the executive branch’s department of 47 corrections from one form of supervision to another, but must be separately
48 appropriated for the judicial branch.
49 Let me close by saying that if it were not already apparent, let me reemphasize how 50 pleased I have been with what I have discovered since taking on the responsibility for 51 overseeing the judicial system in this state, and just how proud I am of the department.
52 We have a highly skilled, impartial, and dedicated corps of judges in this state, intent
53 on providing, to the best of their ability, the kind of justice the people of this state
54 deserve. After working closely now for some time with the State Court Administrator 55 I have every confidence that he is equally intent upon ensuring that all those under his 56 supervision do all they can to assist the judges of this state in having sufficient time

1 and resources to perform their core function of acting as neutral decision-makers for 2 the benefit of the people of the state.

3 While the burden ultimately falls on you, as legislators, to wisely allocate the 4 resources of the state, I can assure you that under my watch, the judiciary will 5 continue to provide you with the most reliable and helpful data we can to assist with 6 that task.

7 Thank you once more for the opportunity to address you today.

Transcript of Hearing before the J. Budget Comm., Colo. Leg., December 13, 2019;

Colorado Legislature Joint Budget Committee—December 13, 2019: Presentation of the Colorado Judicial Department

1 Rep. Esgar

2 The Joint Budget Committee will come to order. Good morning, everyone. We are going to start off
3 today. We'd like to start off with a moment of silence in honor of our colleague, Representative Kimmi
4 Lewis. Her services are today, and we need to be here to continue doing the work of the State. And we
5 wish we could be there with her and her family and friends. But that is where our colleague,
6 Representative Ransom, is today, as well. She went kind of on her own accord, but also to represent us
7 as well. And we appreciate it. But we really wanted to just take a moment to acknowledge the loss to the 8 State of Colorado.

10 Thank you for that. We are going to get started today with the Office of the State Court Administrator,
11 the Judicial Branch, and our first presenter today is . . . where I'd like to welcome our Chief Justice,
12 Nathan Coats, to the table as well. And I believe you're bringing your State Court Administrator with 13 you as well. And I'm not going to attempt to butcher your last name, so I'll have you say it on the 14 microphone when you come up. So, please, welcome. And Chief Justice Coats, I will turn it over to you 15 to take us away.

16

17 Chief Justice Coats

18 Thank you, Madam Chair, appreciate it. I am Ben Coats, the Chief Justice, and this is Steven 19 Vasconcellos, the State Court Administrator. Although Steven is fairly new as the State Court
20 Administrator, he has had a lot of experience, especially in some of the areas that we're going to talk
21 about today. If you want to find out more than the major decision rule reasons why we chose something,
22 I'll probably turn it to Steven and have him explain how that works. Well, thank you very much for 23 having us. I appreciate the opportunity to address you. I addressed you last year, just a few months after 24 I'd become Chief Justice. Now, I'm feeling kind of like an old timer.

25

26 It seems like the year and slightly less than a half has been for me, a lot of putting out fires, both literally
27 and figuratively. You remember, right after I took over last year, we were having judges, chief judges,
28 even courthouses being evacuated because of fires. One, over in El Jebel, I think, was actually turned 29 into the emergency evacuation center. So, we had the literally there. We had one, actually this year, too.
30 The Chief Judge in Salida was out of his home, evacuated for some time. So, these are kind of some 31 things to deal with. But more recently, the fires have probably been more figuratively than literally.

32

33 Last year, you probably remember our large request, really, that we presented and you accepted in the 34 Legislature and gave us 15 new District Court judges, very important for us. We appreciated that very 35 much. All 15 have now been appointed, if not yet, taken office. Some will do that at the first of the year.
36 I just wanted to point out, though, in terms of change with regard to the Judiciary, particularly we're

1 really faced with almost a generational change. Those 15 are not the only new appointees during this last
2 year. In the slightly less than a year and a half that I've been Chief, I checked figures, and by our
3 calculations, 53 new judges have been appointed, 7 of those from the Court of Appeals. That's a third of 4 the Court of Appeals have turned over just in this short time period. You remember, you know, our 64
5 counties, in which we all have at least some judge representation, are organized into 22 Judicial 6 Districts. And they, of course, have District Court representation. I just wanted to point out, as well, in 7 that short time period, I have now appointed 7 new Chief Judges in the Districts. There's that much 8 turnover and change.

10 In addition, though, the complexion, really of the State Court Administrator's Office has changed
11 substantially, and that's partly what I want to talk about today. Basically, since I started the State Court
12 Administrator is gone. The Chief of Staff, who was the number two, is gone. The Director of Financial 13 Services is gone. The Controller is gone. The Director of Human Resources is gone and the Deputy 14 Director of Human Resources is gone. Just to mention some. So, it's a much different looking body. I'd 15 like to get to the questions you've asked. Given the time constraints, though, obviously we'll go
16 wherever you want to go, and I'll watch for you to interrupt and ask me questions. But I thought I would 17 try to organize this in a way so that we piece together things that seem related in terms of presentation,
18 rather than just going straight down the list of questions. But, obviously, I'm here to answer what you
19 have in mind. Let me start off, then, by saying, with regard to the [State] Court Administrator's Office, 20 you all ask a question.

21
22 And I thought I should clear the air by starting and addressing this about the events of the past Summer,
23 particularly with regard to news reports and the effect that that had on the Court Administrator leaving.
24 Basically, this is about, of course, an investigation and report that came out in The Post in July. The 25 investigation had to do with, largely with, a contract that we entered into with the former Chief of Staff,
26 who had left only a short time before from the Office. And, also, with regard to an anonymous letter that 27 made accusations of misconduct by specific members in the leadership in the Court Administrator's
28 Office. We say a few things about that. We gave, I think an overly lengthy, I shouldn't say overly, but 29 overly for what we'd like to do, but we thought it was important to give you a very lengthy written 30 explanation. But, just to emphasize some of the key points of that. What happened was during, and 31 sequentially I'll do this. During the investigation by The Post into some things they were concerned
32 about, they made requests of us of documents. And during our compliance to give them those 33 documents, things came to my attention as the Chief Justice that I determined I not only didn't know, but 34 had been kept from me. And as a result of that, we moved very quickly. Things with regard to this 35 particular contract, we moved very quickly. I consulted that day with our legal representative from the 36 Attorney General's Office, got my colleagues together. We deliberated for some hours that day and the 37 next day. And, basically, the effect, the upshot of that was we terminated. That we decided the contract
38 had to be terminated because the things that had come to my attention were things that, had I known
39 them at the time, would have caused me not to authorize that contract at all. In addition to that, however,
40 the Court decided that it no longer had confidence in the State Court Administrator as the result, and I'll

1 say generally, of a lack of candor with regard to bringing things to the Court's attention. And as a result,
2 we accepted the resignation of the State Court Administrator. The Post article ran, then immediately
3 after the State Court Administrator resigned. And that was the sequence.

5 Basically, I thought I would, if I could, just briefly talk about a little bit of a couple of things about the 6 contract. With regard to some of the other things about the circumstances of the Chief of Staff leaving,
7 which were also a big part of the article and reflected on the contract and some of the criticisms the 8 article suggested, I am for legal reasons instructed by the Attorney General that I really can't say very 9 much about that. And that's, hopefully, you understand that, or will understand that with regard to 10 protection of the public fisc, if nothing else here. But with regard to the contract, let me make clear a 11 couple of things. Although I can't talk about the reasons for the Chief of Staff's departure from the 12 Office, I can say she left voluntarily. She was an employee of the Department for some 23-years. Was 13 highly respected, particularly by the Chief Judges of the Districts. She, as the article even indicated, she 14 had been one of the finalists for position of the State Court Administrator only in the two years or so
15 before in the choosing of a new Court Administrator. And I can tell you. I personally saw over a dozen, I 16 think, letters from Chief Judges advocating that she become the State Court Administrator. So, that was 17 the situation with regard to her, personally.

19 With regard to the contract. There was suggestion in the article. First of all, it referred to it as a two and 20 a half million-dollar contract. I didn't understand it that way. It was not presented that way to me, but 21 rather as a $532,000 contract for a year with an option to extend. And I have no reason right now to 22 believe that's not the proper construction of that contract. But where I wanted to go though was the 23 suggestion was this, and other people have approached me, suggesting this was an unusually large 24 amount. But I need to remind you, we're a department of some 4,000 employees. For leadership training,
25 we had a contract for the previous 5 years, and even going back before that, that were for commensurate
26 amounts, actually more, in some years. Starting years for that kind of leadership training for all over the 27 State and all of the different levels of employees that we needed trained, including judges, I think our 28 records show that the contract's amount were as high as close to 700,000 at various times. So, consulting
29 with others, I don't believe this is an extraordinarily large amount for this kind of thing.

30
31 The unusual thing about this contract, had it continued, was that our previous contract expired, and our 32 question had been whether to extend it. And I went through the training, as did Mr. Vasconcellos right
33 near the end, in one of the last sessions. In part, to make determinations about the value of continuing 34 this kind of thing for the Department. And we came to the conclusion, then, with Mr. Ryan, that. I came 35 to the conclusion with Mr. Ryan that a much more targeted kind of training would be more effective.
36 And that was what we were aiming at. And that was, if you saw even in the newspaper article, I think it
37 referred to Mr. Ryan making the choice of the prior Chief of Staff to do this training, in large part 38 because it was very close to a sole-source contract. It was pinpoint training with regard to all of the 39 Judicial Districts. And the initial phase was to go through a lengthy process of setting up a relationship,
40 and, in effect, changing the paradigm of, or maybe I should say, relationship between the Court

1 Administrator and the Districts. So, that was what was at issue with regard to this contract. As I said,
2 from the discovery of things that were kept from me that made the contract not fulfillable, I thought, and
3 we thought as a Court and, also, clear that we would not have entered into it. We terminated that 4 contract, and that's where we are now. And maybe I can sort of leave that part there.

6 I wanted to go on and say just a little bit more. Part of your question was about, well, what has changed
7 as a result of this in the way we deal in the Department? And that goes to my point earlier about the way
8 in which, basically, the complexion of the Department has changed. A great number of things.
9 Ironically, we were in the process of making different organizational changes when this all occurred,
10 and they had to be truncated at that point, and we had to move in a different direction.

11
12 Nevertheless, we have vastly different personnel and leadership right at the moment. We have hired 13 some, in addition to the new Court Administrator. And, by the way, that was a rather very lengthy and 14 public process in which we brought in response from people in the Department, from not only in the 15 Court Administrator's Office, but all over. We wound up doing, I don't know if you saw even a thing
16 somewhat like the University of Colorado has done, in which we basically a finalist, held a, you know, a
17 sort of a town hall type of meeting. And publicized it throughout the State, over the internet. That type 18 of thing. So, we're following those kind of procedures, very open procedures, to make these 19 replacements of personnel. We're reviewing very many things that I think just it was time to do.

20
21 With regard to contracting procurement, we've identified places where we think we need to beef up our 22 resources provide more, probably internal auditing. Very many things in this regard. But I would say, it
23 is not that there was a breakdown in the system completely. Here. It was a question of lack of candor 24 and particular individuals knowing things and acting in a way that was not for the benefit of the 25 Department. And one faces that in organizations. It leads to great turmoil. It can be very harmful to the 26 continued operation of the of the Department. But, it is more a personnel problem than it is broadly an 27 organizational problem. I will just say when I said that about the Department, I think that it did cause
28 turmoil in the Department. But because of the way we have handled things over the Summer. Mr.
29 Vasconcellos, acting as the Interim State Court Administrator and I conferred daily many times and a 30 number of other people. And our primary objective was to ensure that none of the services were 31 interrupted that the Department provides. And I think we've done a very good job. They have done a 32 very good job in doing that. Maybe, I should end at that point.

33
34 But let me move on to a related point that you've asked about very specifically that also has to do with 35 reporting, and that is with regard to this question of suppression of cases that were reported also by The 36 Post. Actually, the Summer before, shortly after I became Chief. This really has a dual aspect to it, and 37 part of the story really had to do with cases he referred to as suppressed, largely in criminal cases, but 38 throughout the State. And by suppressed, meaning that they were, in effect, sealed from anybody other 39 than the parties. You know, hate to learn things in newspaper stories, but this was kind of new to all of 40 us. Nobody had really stopped to think about this. It was not an intentional matter, really. It largely had

1 to do with, again, largely criminal cases in which, and by the way, in one District in particular, where the
2 policy of the District Attorney had become to ask to suppress an entire case early on, for legitimate
3 reasons, dealing with search warrants that had not been executed, and various other things of this sort.
4 That early in an investigation, it was important to keep quiet. But what happens in those cases is the 5 defense may and in lots of cases, does not object to that either, because they would like to keep these 6 things sealed. The court is simply in the position of having nobody object, and so it grants an order, not
7 really sealed, but it's what we have designated suppressed. And, then, in the absence of some kind of a
8 suspense mechanism to bring this back to his attention, it just remains that way. So, that was the effect
9 of why we came up with, I don't know that we actually verified the post numbers, but 1,000s of cases.
10 We immediately, though, set to work as soon as we found out about this. Gathered the Chief Judges, had 11 conferences with them, disseminating the information then to their judges, and did reviews of all of 12 these things. And the numbers were vastly reduced then of cases that were suppressed in the primary 13 District, which was the 18th, actually. Where so many of these cases, because of the policy of the 14 prosecution, largely had been suppressed. Within days, they were able to review those down there. And I
15 don't have the figures right in front of me, but it was something like 19 remained suppressed for specific 16 reasons, and those would have to be reviewed by the court. Things that still shouldn't be made public
17 until investigations were complete, or various things of this nature. So, I think that we made a good faith
18 effort, and hopefully we've been able to keep control of that. I don't have exact figures. But those big 19 numbers have been taken care of.

21 But, more importantly, I wanted to communicate to you all, this hasn't finished yet, but we also started
22 in to a process, then. I sent a communication to the folks who run our Criminal Rules Committee, asking
23 them to delve into this problem, to see what other jurisdictions had done, to look at the ABA standards,
24 to consult with outside press-related counsel, who I know have appeared in the committee and probably 25 will in a public hearing once we get this. But my last report is that we are very close, what one can ever
26 predict with a committee process, but this has gone through a very serious process, subcommittee work,
27 revisions, back to the committee, and it will come before in what looks to be very close to a final form in 28 January. And we're hopeful that something will be presented to the Court, and we, with this kind of a
29 rule, will undoubtedly have a public hearing. The things I asked them to look at were, what kind of 30 limitations should we make on process to get this kind of a suppression done in the first place? What 31 should be required in a motion? What kind of notice should be given to other parties? What kind of a 32 hearing should be? What criteria? When should the courts have to? How long can they do this without 33 reviewing it? All of those kind of things to try to avoid just this situation that occurred.

34
35 The second part of that really is, I said it's sort of a two-part. The other part has to do with some 36 questions that you all ask about our version of CORA, of the Colorado Open Records Act, which we've 37 designated, PAIRRS (Public Access to Information and Records). It's the second part of our Rule. It, by 38 the way, just virtually mirrors CORA, as a result of a case decided by the Court of Appeals some years
39 ago. It appeared that, and we have not reviewed that, that Cora does not strictly apply to judicial records.
40 So, we passed a Rule the Supreme Court that mirrors CORA with regard to administrative records, as

1 opposed to court records. You made a request last year. The Legislature did. That we make some 2 changes so that we would make records, and with regard to sexual harassment, more available.
3 Particularly to the to the parties. And we've done that. We actually changed three different sets of rules,
4 really. We changed the Rules of Professional Conduct to make it clear that sexual harassment in the in
5 the context of legal representation, or anything involving that is a discipline-able offense. So, we made
6 that clear. We also changed the Rules of Attorney Regulation to make clear that these records,
7 allegations of sexual harassment will be available to the complainant and the respondent, which was the 8 request. And then, finally, we actually added the part to our PAIRR, our open records rule, to exactly
9 mirror, to precisely mirror, CORA. So, those are kind of the things we've done. I wanted to get to those 10 and clear the air about them right away, because they seem like things that you had particular interest in 11 the questions dealing with. But if I could move on.

12

13 Rep. Esgar

14 We do have a few questions.

15

16 Chief Justice Coats

17 Yes.

18

19 Rep. Esgar

20 So, Representative Hansen.

21

22 Rep. Hansen

23 Great. Thank you, Madam Chair. And Mr. Chief Justice, thank you for that thorough explanation. And, I
24 appreciated the thoroughness of the written write up. I just had a couple follow ups on this topic. One,
25 you had mentioned in the written responses about benchmarking or looking at other jurisdictions. And I
26 think you just mentioned something along those lines in your verbal testimony. Could you give us a little
27 bit more detail about maybe how we compare, or how that comparison is being brought into your review 28 process right now?

29

30 Rep. Esgar

31 Mr. Chief Justice.

32

33 Chief Justice Coats

34 Thank you, Representative Hansen, are you referring specifically, I presume, to our creation of a rule to 35 deal with this?

36

37 Rep. Esgar

38 Representative Hansen.

39

40

1 Rep. Hansen

2 Yeah, thank you, Madam Chair. And Mr. Chief Justice. I think. Sorry, I'll try to be more clear on my
3 question, thinking about, you know, the large numbers that accumulated. And you said, you described it
4 as almost like there was some inertia in the system. That it became a default in some instances, and,
5 therefore, the numbers started to add up pretty quickly. And I think I was trying to understand. As you're 6 doing this review and making some adjustments, are we benchmarking to other jurisdictions? How do
7 we compare to other states and other similar situations? And are there some standards, perhaps ABA or 8 other standards, that will help guide us here, as we rebalance the numbers?

9

10 Rep. Esgar

11 Mr. Chief Justice.

12

13 Chief Justice Coats

14 Yes, thank you. Well, I can't give you detail about other jurisdictions and how they work right at the 15 moment. That's the mandate to the Criminal Rules Committee. But I know from discussions with them,
16 that's a large part of what they have been doing. Is looking at other jurisdictions. There are ABA
17 standards that prescribe exactly how to deal with these kind of things. We have not, in the past, followed
18 the ABA standards strictly. For a number of reasons, not least being they on their face, require lengthy 19 notice, or, from our point of view, lengthy notice periods and opportunities for representation from 20 outside. That the decision had been made up to this point, I think although we hadn't had a rule
21 specifically posed to us, that those could interfere with the process. And it hadn't seemed like as urgent a
22 situation. Now with the situation posed to us, that's exactly the kind of thing we're looking at. I know
23 that. You know, our rules committee has looked at Arizona's and California's rule and the ABA
24 standards, and they're hammering out right now exactly which of those procedures they think will work
25 in Colorado and with our particular system. But I'm afraid I can't give you real specifics about which, 26 what other jurisdictions are doing.

27

28 Rep. Esgar

29 Representative Hansen.

30

31 Rep. Hansen

32 Thank you, Madam Chair, and I really appreciate that. And it sounds like it's in process. Would you be 33 able to share with us, kind of the timeline, and would you be able to come back to us when that process 34 kind of reaches a conclusion on this?

35

36 Chief Justice Coats

37 I'm sure we will, and would be delighted to do that. And again, not quite as bad as trying to predict an 38 appellate court and what they will do, but I wouldn't firmly say what the committee will do. But it has 39 been through a number of iterations, and the last I saw which should be considered. And matter of fact, I 40 think we've posted this on online, on our website, the proposal that will be considered should be

1 considered in January by the full committee. The way the process would work is, when the committee
2 votes to send up a rule, they've resolved what they believe is the appropriate rule, they will send it to the 3 full Court. We take it up, usually at the very next conference we have that week, and we will make a
4 decision. Sometimes, we would just make a decision to adopt the rule or not, or send it back for some
5 amendments. But, with this kind of a rule, almost always we would immediately schedule it for a public
6 hearing. And, especially with this kind of a rule, you know, there is no doubt members of the Fourth
7 Estate and their representatives would like to be present. Its that kind of a hearing, and that'll give the 8 Court a chance to hear their criticism of the final product, and then, typically, we will either send it back,
9 if there's some really controversial part to the committee to resolve that, or, very frequently, we'll just 10 make a decision based on the testimony that we've had in front of us. So, I am hopeful that within the 11 reasonably foreseeable future, we will make a decision about whether to have a rule and what kind of 12 rule.

13

14 Rep. Hansen

15 Thank you.

16

17 Rep. Esgar

18 Mr. Vice Chair.

19

20 Sen. Moreno

21 Thank you, Madam Chair. And Mr. Chief Justice, really appreciate the detailed response in the written 22 write up, and you taking us through it, the situation as well. It was very helpful and very much
23 appreciated. I zeroed in on one particular line in the written response, and that's the Department learned
24 that the amount of money spent on services provided to the Department is not a default benchmark for 25 future similar services. I just think that's particularly sage advice for all Departments. So, very much 26 appreciated.

27

28 Rep. Esgar

29 Mr. Chief Justice.

30

31 Chief Justice Coats

32 I can't take credit for writing that sentence myself, but it expresses the position I would have to admit,
33 without getting into specific amounts, my only limitation with regard to approving such a contract was 34 we can't spend more than we did on the prior contract. Obviously, as you point out, there are reasons to 35 go beyond that in deciding how to approve such a contract and how much to approve it for.

36

37 Rep. Esgar

38 Other questions? Senator Rankin.

39

40

1 Sen. Rankin

2 I assume you're under the state procurement rules that we updated a couple years ago. We heard from 3 Personnel the other day about it and it's in a rule now. Something called invitation to negotiate. It's kind
4 of a more flexible way to do what you're, the kind of thing you're trying to do. So, you might look at 5 that, at that rule. Which I think is fairly recent, it's called invitations to negotiate, and it's a sub-
6 paragraph of the procurement rules.

7

8 Rep. Esgar

9 Mr. Chief Justice.

10

11 Chief Justice Coats

12 And, maybe, Steven is better at this than I, but my understanding is we may not be bound precisely by 13 those procurement rules. But we attempt to, if we're not, to the extent we're not, we attempt to write our 14 Rules to accomplish the same thing and be along the same lines. But, I appreciate that question because 15 it raises something. A different request we have made, and that is in this process, it has come to our 16 attention on the Court that we have been rather skimpy in terms of our resources with regard to 17 reviewing the whole procurement process. You know, we're in a funny kind of situation, where the 18 administrative authority in the 22 districts is the Chief Judge. Especially, in areas like probation and 19 related things that they do. There's a perpetual contracting process, and we have discovered, in the 20 review this Summer, that probably we need to beef up our procurement review and assistance to the 21 Districts by a great amount. We've, actually, as you will see, one of our items we've requested, I believe
22 it's 6 FTE specifically in this area, so that we can strengthen our procurement standards and the advice
23 and the review that we give. What happens frequently because of our shortage of resources in this 24 regard, although we have, I think, serious expertise in the Court Administrator's Office. But you get 25 these requests for contracts that have to be done very quickly from the Districts, and if our limited
26 resources are so backed up, we can't get advice and review within the short time period. Then, they have 27 to rely on themselves. We're hoping to exactly delve into this area and really beef up.

28

29 Rep. Esgar

30 Senator Rankin.

31

32 Sen. Rankin

33 I just want to point out, because we completely updated the law for procurement rules, and in the two 34 years since then, there have been a lot of rules written by the Department. So, might be some clues in 35 there.

37 Chief Justice Coats

38 Thank you.

39

40

1 Rep. Esgar

2 Members. Any other questions? Before we move on, I just wanted to say, as a former journalist, thank
3 you for taking the time to answer these questions about public access. And I completely understand
4 when things do need to be held back for continuing cases. But I just want to encourage you to continue
5 to look in and make sure you're continually finding ways to communicate to the public some of these 6 issues that have come up. So, thanks for taking the time to answer those questions. Appreciate it very 7 much.

9 Chief Justice Coats

10 You're very welcome.

11

12 Rep. Esgar

13 So, Mr. Chief Justice, you answered a lot of the questions, kind of in the back. You answered some other
14 of these questions. But why don't we just kind of start walking through some of these so we don't miss
15 anything, and if you feel like you've already touched on them, we'll just move past them. We'll just start 16 from there. Mr. Chief Justice.

17

18 Chief Justice Coats

19 Yes, Madam Chair. So, would you like me to just move through these by number? May I suggest there's 20 some of them that jump back and forth, if it's helpful to you to go by number. But our primary requests,
21 important ones, deal with probably the magistrate request. And we've got a bundle of these questions
22 that go to that. I thought I would address maybe that first, then we could move on to the probation
23 request, which is big. What we've got time for, if that works. With regard to the magistrate request, let 24 me say some things about our decision, and then probably with regard to a lot of the specifics in the 25 questions. Like, how these would be used and how we make those calculations, Steven would be much
26 better at that. But with regard to the determination, I listened to your hearing with the analyst tonight,
27 and I detected there was some question about why we decided to go for magistrate increases,
28 particularly as opposed to County Court judges. And let me just say broadly, that was an important
29 discussion on our part. The reason we need more resources, I think, we think, can be justified in terms of 30 our weighted case load studies. Particularly with regard to the matters that County Courts deal with. The 31 real numbers were not as strong. And that always seems to be a factor, or it seemed to be last year when 32 we made a District Court request. And there were two things in particular that made us want to hold off
33 on a request for County Court judges, should that become necessary. And they were really, you increase
34 the jurisdictional amount for civil cases in County up to 25,000, I think about. But it only took effect this 35 year, and we have a very small sample to measure how much that increase, I think we're showing of the 36 year, 4 or 5% increase in cases in County Court. But we wanted to wait on that. The even bigger reason,
37 though, is last year's decision to move felony to misdemeanor designation for a lot of drug cases. And 38 that, we've had a lot of debate over and just decided it was too tenuous for us to project. There are too
39 many variables. It probably doesn't work for us to just say all of those cases that were felonies will now
40 be misdemeanors. There are a lot of variables in terms of how prosecutors will approach this. Maybe

1 even how law enforcement people will approach it. How many of these were the result of settlement
2 negotiations? Which would no longer be the case if there are only misdemeanors to start with. So,
3 enough said on that. But so, the reason we held off on the County Court was we really wanted to present
4 you a firmer picture of the need.

6 Magistrates, you know, and I think we indicated pretty much in our answers. But magistrates give a
7 great deal more flexibility. They can take care of a lot of the same problems. They can do, aside from 8 jury trials, you know, and a few other things. They can do, most of the things that trial court judges
9 could do, especially in terms of, I don't know, advisements, preliminary hearings, arraignments. There
10 are just very many things that we felt the County Court Judges could be relieved of. And, by the way,
11 you know, very many of the duties that County Court judges react to as taking away their time are things
12 that really have to do with felonies. But County Court judges are allowed to do them. So, in the 13 individual districts, Chief Judges may assign a great number of these duties to County Court, and that 14 takes up their time from actually hearing the cases that would be in front of them. So, those things can 15 be done by magistrates, very many. And that kind of flexibility, is really why. One of the reasons we did
16 it. The other though, is we were making a serious attempt to keep an increase in budget down, and we 17 were ordering our priorities. And I think in our answers, you can see we felt like there was a substantial 18 saving by going for magistrates rather than County Court judges,

19
20 Rep. Esgar

21 We do have a question. I'm sorry to interrupt you, Mr. Chief Justice, we have a question. And Senator
22 Zenzinger, if you hold one moment, those of you following in the book, he's answering the questions
23 that are on page 8, and we're really looking at the judicial request R-2. So, if you're following along, just 24 that way people know where we're at. So, Senator Zinzinger, please.

25
26 Sen. Zinzinger

27 Well, I just want to comment that I very much appreciate that approach. So, oftentimes, when we're 28 putting together legislation, we'll kind of estimate what we think the fiscal impact will be, and then we 29 just go ahead and meet whatever that high number was, and then that goes into the budget, and then that 30 becomes the new reality based on little to no actual evidence about whether that's truly what is needed in 31 order to meet the new legislation. So, I very much appreciate the fact that you're going to wait. Actually,
32 figure out what is needed. And, then, perhaps at some point we will see you for a supplemental request, 33 if needed. But, I very much appreciate that approach. So, just want to compliment your team for 34 thinking through that. And then, secondly, I did have questions about why a magistrate versus the 35 County judge, and so thank you for clarifying that that makes total sense, and I think that having that 36 kind of flexibility also increases efficiency. So, thank you.

37
38 Rep. Esgar

39 Mr. Chief Justice. Please continue.

40

1 Chief Justice Coats

2 Thank you, and maybe I will just. Would you like to add anything with regard to the magistrates, or use
3 of them, or allocation? Doing okay? Okay. I was trying to think of what other questions you asked with 4 regard to that. But, maybe, that's enough. You did ask some questions about where they would be 5 located, how we would do that. And actually, I may pitch that to Steven.

6

7 Rep. Esgar

8 Mr. Vas . . Please say it, so I don't say it wrong.

10 Steven Vasconcellos

11 Thank you, Madam Chair. Vasconcellos.

12

13 Rep. Esgar

14 Vasconcellos, Mr. Vasconcellos.

15

16 Steven Vasconcellos

17 Thank you, Madam Chair. In terms of where the magistrates will be allocated. Obviously, we have to 18 have some sense of where those needs are in order to request the resources. But one of the things we like 19 to do with staff and magistrates, judges are a different case because their location is baked into the 20 statute. But with staff and magistrates, we will request with specific locations in mind, but then based on 21 what we're actually funded for, which may or may not be what is requested, and any last minute changes
22 in the pattern of need, what's happened with filings between the time of the request and the allocation,
23 our organization likes to take one last look at that need and really make allocation recommendations to 24 the Chief Justice based on the freshest information of that need. So, the table that's included in our 25 answer on page 9 is where we're thinking. And these are all large locations, which means there's a 26 certain amount of stability to the filings. I don't anticipate that this will change radically, but we will 27 take one last look again, based on whether or not the General Assembly chooses to fund the request,
28 how much of it they fund, and any changes in need patterns. And that will guide our recommendations
29 to the Chief.

30

31 Rep. Esgar

32 Thank you for that, Mr. Vasconcellos., The only question I had on page 9, and I'm sure there's a good 33 reason I would just like to know what it is. I see Judicial District 10 and 20 not getting any allocation.
34 Can you just fill us in as to why those two are not included?

35

36 Steven Vasconcellos

37 Thank you, Madam Chair, you're referring to why Mesa County and Pueblo County are getting a half 38 FTE rather than a full FTE. And it has to do with their staffing level. They have needs. Those are both.
39 While those are not rural locations in our thought process of workload, they are urban locations. They 40 are smaller, and if we gave those locations a full FTE, we'd overstaff them.

1 Rep. Esgar
2 I'm sorry. I was looking at the probation staff table.

4 Steven Vasconcellos
5 Oh, I'm sorry. I apologize.

6
7 Rep. Esgar
8 My fault, my fault. So, we can come back to that, later. I had my tables confused. Senator Rankin.

10 Sen. Rankin
11 Well, actually I was asking, going to ask the question that you did answer. So how does that work? Do,
12 we have a half-time magistrate working, or do we share that with another county? How does the half 13 work?

14
15 Rep. Esgar
16 Mr. Vasconcellos.

17
18 Steven Vasconcellos
19 My apologies, Madam Chair. Madam Chair, Senator Rankin, over time, in sort of informal discussions
20 with Districts over the years. For judicial officer FTE magistrates in particular, it's hard to hire
21 somebody below halftime in many cases. And, so, we use that as a sort of a loose floor for allocating.
22 We have been pretty successful, and we will talk as we're putting these requests together. We have a lot
23 of contact with the potentially impacted districts. Is this a resource that you feel you can use? When I
24 first started many years ago, you know, sometimes our organization would try to request point one-five 25 or something like that. And Districts would respond to us and say, Thank you, but I can't really use that 26 small of a resource. And so, pardon me, we in our experience, half FTE is very impactful and very 27 useful. And you know you should be able to hire.

28
29 Rep. Esgar
30 Senator Rankin.

31
32 Sen. Rankin
33 That exactly leads to my next concern, which is more remote rural counties who might need a quarter 34 time person or something. How will they address the growing need for magistrates?

35
36 Rep. Esgar
37 Mr. Vasconcellos.

38
39
40

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Madam Chair, Senator Rankin. So, the way . . . the majority of Counties in Colorado are rural, and 3 statutorily, they are considered Class C and D judgeships. And they have a statutorily created
4 methodology for determining what level those judgeships would be. And, in my opinion, it's kind of a
5 nice system, because as caseloads rise. Say, in one of the counties of the 14th Judicial District, statute
6 provides a mechanism for the judge-level to rise automatically with the caseload. And we use the same
7 caseload modeling tools behind that to make those determinations. But let's say if the judgeship in Grand 8 County showed 10% additional need, statute provides an automatic mechanism for that to happen.

9

10 Rep. Esgar

11 Representative Hansen.

12

13 Rep. Hansen

14 Thank you, Madam Chair. And I was going to switch gears. So, I don't want to cut off anything else on 15 probation, on the magistrates.

16

17 Rep. Esgar

18 Is it something they've covered?

19

20 Rep. Hansen

21 Well, I was going to, we didn't cover it with much. It was back to page 2 on the felony caseload.

22

23 Rep. Esgar

24 Oh, we haven't gone there yet.

25

26 Rep. Hansen

27 So, desire to move on to that?

28

29 Rep. Esgar

30 Were you complete with your magistrate presentation, Mr. Chief Justice?

31

32 Chief Justice Coats

33 Yes, Madam Chair.

34

35 Rep. Esgar

36 I just want to make sure, if we're hopping around, I want to make sure we clear up everything that we're 37 doing. So, Representative Hansen take us to our next spot.

38

40

1 Rep. Hansen

2 Thank you. Appreciate it. Thank you, committee. On page 2, your response to page 2. And I found this 3 chart really fascinating. Obviously, the population of Colorado has not increased by 88% but, yet, we 4 have several categories here that have exploded in numbers of cases. And, I think what I'd love some 5 context on is kind of the driving factors behind this. It's clearly not in your control which cases are filed.
6 You have to deal with the pipeline that comes at you. But is there something that we might be able to 7 discern from conviction rates or the quality of these cases? And I think the crux of my question is, are 8 we are we getting a situation where the numbers have gone up, but there's perhaps a dilution in quality
9 of case because of that? And could we figure that out from the end result at the court?

10

11 Rep. Esgar

12 Mr. Chief Justice.

13

14 Chief Justice Coats

15 Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm not sure that I'm focusing exactly on your point. But let me just say, with 16 regard to the chart and our attempt here. Part of what we've done here, I think, is to just break down
17 cases to show just in pure numbers, what changes have been made. And I understand you're asking 18 about making some determinations about the why and wherefore of these. I'm not sure that we're able to 19 do that too much in the sense of causation, if that's where you're going and how we would prevent those 20 kind of things. If that is it.

21

22 Rep. Esgar

23 Representative Hansen.

24

25 Rep. Hansen

26 Yeah thank you, Madam Chair, and realize you, I mean, that is not in your purview. That this is 27 ultimately decisions being made by individual prosecutors and DA offices. I think I was just trying to 28 figure out, if given the information you would have, the end result of this pipeline. So, here we're seeing 29 the front edge of that. Here are the cases filed. I'm wondering if you might help us follow that through as 30 it moves through the process. Are we seeing an 88% increase in convictions, as well? Does this flow
31 through, or is there some underlying change in the quality of cases that are making it to the end of that 32 process?

33

34 Rep. Esgar

35 Mr. Chief Justice.

36

37 Chief Justice Coats

38 I see, thank you. Thank you, Madam Chair. Representative Hansen, I say, I apologize. I wasn't picking 39 up on work where you were going with that. The problem with that is, I don't know that I really can give 40 you data in terms of what percentage of these charged actually wind up as convictions. I guess the

1 presumption from us with this data that we've got is it would not very radically, as a result of the 2 different kind of crime. There would be no particular reason, I think, why a particular kind of crime
3 charged would not result in a conviction. Other than if you're if you're thinking about pleading down.
4 And that can happen, and those things will vary greatly. For instance, with the drug cases, as they as 5 they get categorized in smaller, smaller categories. But I'm, I'm afraid I really probably don't, am not 6 able to draw just from this material a conclusion there. Do we have other data, Steven?

7
8 Rep. Esgar

9 Mr. Vasconcellos.

10
11 Steven Vasconcellos

12 Thank you, Madam Chair. Representative Hansen, so I think part of the most direct. We don't have it put 13 together, as a matter of course. But given the court's role in adjudicating the cases, what we could do, if 14 this would be more helpful, is have staff put together some information, like for the most recent fiscal 15 year, on convictions, broadly. Number of cases that went to trial. Number of cases. Number of 16 convictions in the year. We could even give some information on the highest charge that was convicted.
17 Number of cases sentenced to DOC. I can have staff from our Office work with Mr. Allen to refine sort 18 of the portfolio of information you'd like to see, and whether we have it, and we'd be happy to put 19 something together and provide that information to Mr. Allen to share with the committee

20
21 Rep. Esgar

22 Representative. Hansen.

23
24 Rep. Hansen

25 Thank you, Madam Chair. I think that would be extremely illuminating, given this massive change in 26 the statistics on the filing side to help not only this committee figure out, okay, how do we handle this 27 from a budgetary standpoint and get the resources that are needed and align those correctly. But I think
28 as, also, for our colleagues in the General Assembly that are looking at criminal justice issues. I think
29 that would be very, very helpful, because, you know, I don't, again, don't want to prejudge anything
30 here, but this is a huge change. And it would be great to have that contextual information to understand.
31 You know, we can ask the DAs directly and get that information on their side. At the front end of this 32 pipeline. But I think it would be very helpful for the General Assembly to understand how that has 33 worked its way through the system. So, I appreciate that effort.

34
35 Rep. Esgar

36 Senator Rankin.

1 Sen. Rankin

2 As well as relating it to convictions. I mean, we always ask the question, what's really happening with 3 crime. I mean and that relates to arrest, I suppose. Does anybody try to relate caseload to crime rates and 4 actual arrest data?

5

6 Rep. Esgar

7 Mr. Chief Justice.

8

9 Chief Justice Coats

10 Well, there again, and I'll let Mr. Vasconcellos talk about data we've done. I would just say, with regard 11 to these kind of attempts, broadly, to look at why has crime gone up? Has it? What way has it gone up?
12 It is a slippery . . . I mean, we can, we can measure numbers of cases. We could come back and find 13 convictions. Because of the plea-bargaining process, the charging discretion, but, also, it's difficult to 14 separate out what the motive, what the motivation was for various crimes. And it sort of leads to 15 difficulty, I think, in us attaching one cause to an increase in crime. In one of the more famous opinions
16 by the United States Supreme Court, where they're discussing recidivism and particularly the problem of 17 drugs, drug crime. I think a lot of us associate and really can tell anecdotally that a lot of this probably 18 does have to do with a change in the culture and a drug problem. But, you know, in this opinion, I was 19 going to say, as I recall, the Justice says, well, drugs are serious crime because people who are on drugs
20 may commit crimes because they're not in control, because they're driven to it. That may be something.
21 Lots of other crimes, thefts, other kinds of property crimes, even assaults, may also be related to the drug
22 crime. But they are because the person needs to get the ability to purchase the drugs and get them. It
23 goes on to a third and says, and part of it may just be a culture, because those who are involved in a drug
24 culture are likely to be less respectful of the law and less concerned to follow it. I just use that as an 25 example that the question of attaching a cause to one of these things is difficult. But if you'll let Mr.
26 Vasconcellos speak again. I bet he can tell you what we could come up with.

27

28 Rep. Esgar

29 Absolutely, Mr. Vasconcellos.

30

31 Steven Vasconcellos

32 Thank you, Madam Chair. Senator Rankin, the only thing I would add to the Chief Justice's remarks is 33 that approximately a year or so ago, we contributed some data to an effort that the Division of Criminal
34 Justice was working on they think is more in line with their questioning, and they have, of course, more
35 of a pure research function that we don't. And, so, I haven't seen the outcome of that. I don't know if 36 that's still in process. But I do believe DCJ was working to try to understand more root causes in the vein 37 that you're asking.

38

39 Rep. Esgar

40 Senator Rankin.

1 Sen. Rankin

2 Just to comment, to be fair, we're this is not a question about your budget. We get a lot. We get a lot of 3 requests that say, if you do this, things will get better in the future. Everything from third grade reading
4 to intervention for two-year olds. And you know, our big question is, how will we know? Because
5 everybody promises, you know, all these other programs we hear about to reduce your caseload. So,
6 we're just looking for some opinion and guidance from you who see the big picture, I think. So, this is 7 not a budget question, so don't take it that way.

8

9 Rep. Esgar

10 Mr. Chief Justice, if there's other items you specifically wanted to point out in your write up.

11

12 Chief Justice Coats

13 Thank you, Madam Chair. Could I just move very quickly, and maybe even Mr. Vasconcellos, more 14 than I. That we could point out. Also, we think a very important request is our request for increase in 15 probation officers. This was partly a flow from last year, even. You gave us additional probation
16 officers, and the expectation was we would need even more. This is closely related to caseload and the 17 particular kinds of cases that we wind up having to have our probation officers supervise, as 18 distinguished from a private probation officer. And if it would be all right, Madam Chair, maybe 19 especially given the shortness of time, I'll just let Mr. Vasconcellos.

20

21 Rep. Esgar

22 Absolutely, Mr. Vasconcellos.

23

24 Steven Vasconcellos

25 Thank you, Madam Chair. So, given the criminal filing data that we looked at, it's probably no great 26 surprise that that's putting additional workload pressure on our probation departments statewide. And in 27 particular, the greatest area of growth for new incoming probation clients are high-risk clients, and those 28 are something that we keep under state supervision. That is not something we send to private 29 supervision, and really so not to oversimplify, but it's a straight caseload and workload challenge. With 30 felony criminal filings increasing by almost 50% in the last five years, downstream. Keep in mind,
31 again, I'm sure the committee knows. But as a quick reminder, probation is the largest supervising arm
32 in the criminal justice system. There are about 80,000 people on active supervision by probation in 33 Colorado at any given time. Far larger than the number of folks in DOC or in Comm Corr, etc. And so,
34 you know, such a strident increase in criminal filings has put pressure on our ability to adequately
35 supervise folks, and our request for 16 additional FTE is linked directly to that caseload increase.

36

37 Rep. Esgar

38 So, back to my question then. Page 9 at the table I was looking at. And just out of curiosity, is there not 39 a need in the 10th or the 20th Judicial District for more FTE, for probation staff?

40

1 Steven Vasconcellos

2 Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't have those numbers with me. I'm happy to provide those to Mr. Allen
3 to share with the committee. My suspicion is that I doubt seriously that there's zero need in those 4 jurisdictions. We usually in given the scarcity of resources, always in these conversations, we try to 5 prioritize our highest needs. And I suspect there are needs in those locations, but they didn't make the 6 cut. However, we can provide the committee with statewide what the needs are, District by District.

7

8 Rep. Esgar

9 That'd be helpful, just in case we do get questions from our colleagues as to why did you fund this and 10 my District didn't get any? You know? Okay, great. Any other questions on the probation staff request?
11 And I'm trying to be respectful of your time too, Mr. Chief Justice. Members, are there any questions 12 you have that aren't answered within the documents that they provided? Or further clarification on any
